French Verses, answerable to those times, carued in faire large Stones, vnder the engraiuing of those figures; are on the vpper part of the Frieze, these other French Verses.

En l'An Mil-Quatre Cents Huict,
Iean Duc de Berry Trespuissant,
En toutes vertus bien instruict,
Et Prince en France florissant,
Par humain cours lors cognissant,
Qu'il conuient toute creature,
Ainsi que Nature consent
Mourir, & tendre à pourriture;
Fist tailler icy la Sculpture,
Des trois Vifs aussi des trois Morts,
Et de ses derniers la facture,
En paya par iustes accords,
Pour monstrer que tout humaine corps,
Tant ayt biens, ou grande Cite,
Ne peut euiter les discords,
De la mortelle aduersitie.
Donc pour auoir fælicite,
Ayons de la Mort souuenir:
Afin qu'apres perplexite,
Puissions aux saincts Cieux paruenir.

The French Verses conuerted into English, line by line.

In th'yeare One thousand foure hundred eight,
Iohn, Duke of Berry, potently liuing,
Enstructed in all vertues, firme and strait,
A Prince in France right fairely flourishing,
By humaine course well vnderstanding
That euery creature (by iniunction,
As Nature hath giuen her consenting)
Must dye, and yeelde vnto corruption:
Here caused to be made this Monument,
Of three aliue, and of as many dead;
And as the three last doe their shape present,
So must Lifes paiment be accomplished.
To shew vs what all humaine bodies are Though storde with goods, Townes, greatest potency;
Yet cannot shun those discords that make square,
And waite vpon mortall aduersitie.
Then, that we may enioy Felicitie,
Let vs remember still; That we must dye,
So, after this fraile Lifes perplexitie;
Our Soules will to the holy Heauens flye.

In the voide places about these Verses, are the Armes of the said Duke of Berry, which are Seme de France sans nombre, à la bordure simple de Gueulles, like vnto those of Anion and Anion. Wherein there is a fault, because the Bordure ought to be Engrailed Gueulles, pour Brizure; as those be at the holy Chappell of Bourges, builded & founded by this Duke and his wife, who are buried within the Quire thereof.

The place of the Duke of Berry his buriall.

The Funerals being performed, diligent search was made for the Authors of this murder, and on the very same day the Prouost of Paris, William de Tignonville, made seizure on the person of Messire Aubert le Canny, suspected of this murder, in regard his wife, gouerned by the deceased Duke: but he was found innocent, and set at liberty.

liberty. So that to make an exact inquisition for the Authors thereof, the Gates of Paris were kept lockt vp fast; two onely excepted, S. Iames and S. Denys, with strong Guards, to see what they were that issued forth.

Tignouille had discouered, that at the same instant as the Duke was massacred, a Water-Bearer to the Duke of Bourgougne, had beene knowne among the eighteene, who had let fire on a House (neere to the place where the murderers were hid) & whose then hung for a Signe, the Image of our Lady, neere to the Gate Barbette. For the Assassinates (to saue themselues after the murder (from being discouered) had set the said House on fire, crying out aloud themselues, Fire, Fire; onely to amaze the people of Paris. But they were withdrawne directly to the Hostel d'Artois, next adioyning to that of Bourgongne; and in their flight, had throwne Calthrops (made of Iron) in the Streets, to hinder the people from following after them.

On Friday, the Princes and Lords went to the Hostel de S. Paul, where then the King was lodged, to consult with his Counsell about this murder. Tignouille demanded power of the King, to enter the houses of his Seruants, and the Hostels belonging to the Princes of his Bloud: which was granted to him, and with francke good will, King Lewes of Sicilie, and the Dukes of Berry and Bourbon, gaue him authority to goe and make search in theirs.

The Bourgongnon, bitten by the worme of conscience, fearing such a sound and seuere search: tooke Lewes King of Sicilie (chiefe of the Counsell, during the sickness of the King) aside into a corner of the Counsell Chamber, and Iohn, Duke of Berry, his Vnckle. To them he freely confessed, that by the instigation of the Diuell, he had caused the murder to be effected, wherof he repented himselfe. At which words the hearts of the two Princes, being ouercome with sorrow and passion: the Counsell was adiourned till the morrow, being Saturday in the morning, and at the Hostel de Neesle, called at this present De Neuers, appertaining to the said Monsieur Iohn of France, Duke of Ferry.

The Duke of Bourgongne voluntarily confessed the murder.

Nor did the Duke of Bourgongne faile to come thither, accompanied with Valeran of Luxemburg, Count of S. Paul, his Cousine: but the Duke of Berry sent him word that he should attend vntill such time as he was sent for. The Duke of Berry discouered to the Counsell, the confession of the Duke of Bourgongne, his Nephew; whereupon, the Duke of Bourbon caused it to passe by plurality of voices, that the person of the Bourgongnon should be kept safe. And to seize on his Body, the Count of S. Paul was called into the Counsell Chamber. When the Bourgongnon perceiued, that he was debarred from entrance thereinto; reuoluing in his minde, the abhomination of his execrable crime, the apprehensions of imprisonment, with pursuite of a violent death, he departed thence suddenly, without speaking any thing, & passing the Seine, went to his Hostel of Artois.

The Duke of Bourgongne his sudden flight.

Mounting on Horsebacke with sixe of his followers, he rode forth at the Gate of S. Denis, and neuer left galloping, till he came to Pont Saint Maixance, ouer the River of Oise, causing Plancks of Wood to be cast after him in the middest of the River, because he would preuent all pursuite. So, without looking behinde him, he stayed no where on the way, till he came to Bapaumes, where he slept the quarter of an houres space, going to take his repast in the Citie of Arras, & without soiourning there, went to lodge in the Isle of Flanders. His flight being discouered, he was speedily followed, by sixe and twentie Men of Armes belonging to the Duke of Orleans; who were enforced to turne backe againe at Pont Saint Maixance.

This vnfortunate murder, vnderstood by the Duchesse of Orleans, Madam Valentina of Millaine; she appeared in person at Paris the tenth day of December following, accompanied with her yongest Son Iohn, Count of Angoulesme, & with Madam Isabell of France, daughter to King Charles the sixt, Widdow to the King of England Richard second of the name, and first wife to Charles, Duke of Orleans, eldest Son to the deceased.

Madam Valentina of Millaine her comming to Paris.

Before her went King Lewes of Sicilie, the Dukes of Berry and of Bourbon, the Counts of Clermont, Iohn Sonne to the Duke of Bourbon, and of Vendosme, both of them of the House of Bourbon; D'Albret, Constable of France, and all the Lords of the Court, who conducted her to the Hostel of Saint Paul, where she, her and his Lady fell on their knees before the King, requiring Iustice for the death of his Brother. Which he promised to performe, and taking her vp from the ground, kissed her, being both drowned in teares with the iustice of their griefe. Vpon this assurance, the Duchesse went to lodge at the abiding of Orleans, neerest to that of Neesle: that is, where (at this present) are the Houses of Gueste, du Tillet and du Lac, ioyning to the Port of Bussy; containing backward the Court de Rouen, Le Rues de l'Efperon, and of Saint Andewe de Laas, where were the Stable and Offices appertaining to the dwelling of Orleans.

The situation of the Duke of Orleans his Hostel.

The Duchesse being in her mourning habits, returned againe to the Hostel of Saint Paul, still there requiring Iustice, and still the same being there promised her. And hauing fully restored to her, the Countie of Vertus, with other Lands and Seigneuries for her and her Children, which were held by her Husband; and deliuering to the King the Oath of Fidelitie: shee returned to her Castell of Blois, the ordenary dwelling for the Dukes of Orleans, vntill the time of King Lewes the twelfth.

The Bourgongnon summoned to yeelde himselfe in the Citie of Amiens, to make answer to the King of Sicilie, Lewes, and the Duke of Berry, deputed by the King and Counsell, concerning the death of the late Duke of Orleans, at the same place to acknowledge his offence. Thither he came, but suited with such company; as (without performing any thing) they returned backe to the Citie of Paris; whether the Bourgongnon as speedily followed them in Armes, although the King had expresly commanded him to the contrary.

The Duke of Bourgongne summoned to appeare at Amiens.

And being come to Paris, to his Hostel d'Artois; hee caused himselfe to be engirt with strong Pallisadoes; and Barriers of Wood, raising there a new square Tower, making therein an high Chamber, well furnished with murderers, where he meant to lodge, and keepe himselfe in securitie. This is the Tower which wee see behinde the Hostel of Bourgongne, at Logis de l'Abistrade. Hauing obtained Audience, hee made his defence, not by any Aduocate, that would prophane himselfe, by pleading a case so sinfull and deplorable: but a certaine man, called Iohn Petit, a Doctor in Diuinitie, and a Norman by Nation; whose vendible tongue, being altogether mercenary, was infected and worme-eaten with the poyson of Auarice, as we haue beheld too many in these times of ours, that easily are infected with the Oyle of Gold, the yellow colour thereof so highly pleasing them.

He maketh his answer by one called Doctor Petit, a bold and ignorant corrupted fellow.

This Doctor, corrupted with infernall and diabolicall Doctrine, excused the Bourgongnon, instead of accusing him, writhing the nose of the Sacred Scriptures, according to the manner of Heretiques, and expounding them answerable to his owne foolish and depraued iudgement. Declaring, that he ought to be commended for the murder, by him committed on the person of the late Duke of Orleans: not forgetting to alleadge many Histories out of the Holy Scriptures, drawne in constraiedly by the eares, and as badly vnderstood, yet stoutly vouched by this ignorant Doctor. Inducing from thence, that vpon good and iust cause, the Duke of Orleans was thus slaine, because he had bin the Motiue and Author, for charging the people with Taxations, Imposts and Subsidies; & that (in this respect onely) the Duke of Bourgongne deserued praise, sallarie and recompence. So that it was necessarily needfull, to implore (on his behalfe) the mercy and clemency of the King.

Diuels want no Orators to defend bad actions.

In briefe, he concluded his friuolous Oration, with this hellish Maxime: That it was lawfull for any Subiect, according to the Lawes Morall, Naturall and Diuine, to kill, or cause to kill a Tyrant, without waiting for the command of Iustice. And not onely Lawfull, but honorable and meritorious; especially, where the parties are so strong and powerfull, that Iustice cannot well be performed by the Soueraigne.

A Lesson neuer taught but in the Diuels Schoole.

Against which allegation, the Abbot of Saint Fiacres, of the Order of S. Benedict, in the name, and on the behalfe of Charles Duke of Orleans, his Mother and his Brethren, boldly defended the innocency of the late Duke Lewes: manifesting the impertinent insinuations of the Norman Doctor, and the wickednesse of the Bourgongnon, quite ouerthrowing the diuellish Maxime, for the murdring of Kings and Princes. Approuing withall, that the Bourgongnon, Author and procurer of this massacre, was a true Caine, against whom, the blood of his Brother cryed to heauen for vengeance, as it is said in the fourth Chapter of Genesis. Vox sanguinis Fratris tui clamat ad me de terrâ: The voyce of thy Brothers bloud cryeth vnto from the ground.

No man may presume vpon the life of his equall, much lesse vpon his better.

And that it was not permitted to the Bourgongnon, more then to any other particular man whatsoeuer: to attempt vpon the life of his equall; by farre greater reason then, not vpon one much greater, without the authoritie of Iustice to warrant him.

And therefore all the Doctors of the Church haue, and doe hold, that Moyses sinned against God, by killing the Aegyptian, in the second of Exodus; because he had no power or authoritie to doe it: notwithstanding the pretext and apparant excuse which he had, for sauing the life of his neighbour, against the iniurie of a stranger. In like manner, the Sauiour of the World iustly reproued S. Peter, in laying hand on his weapon, to defend him from death. It is the opinion of S. Augustine, seconded by all the rest of the Doctors, who interpreting the murder of the Prince of the Tribe of Simeon, named Zimbrie (in the Book of Numbers, the 25. Chapter) slain by Phinees, Son to Eleazar, who was the Son of Aaron the High-Priest; they do say, that Phinees had power to doe it, as being Son to the High-Priest, so affirmeth S. Thomas Aquinas. But addeth withall, that in the old & ancient Law, many things were then permitted: which in the Law of Grace (wherein now wee liue) haue bin forbidden.

The old Law abolished by the Law of Grace.

It is a case much to be lamented, that Princes are rather murdred & massacred by their owne Subiects, then by Strangers. The Readings of Suetonius, and of Cornelius Tacitus doe affirme the proofe thereof, in most part of the Roman Emperors. Quintus Curtius, in his sixt Booke of the life of Alexander the Great, saith. Latus à Deo fis hostibus munì, hos si submoueas; nihil ab externo metuas. The same Authour in his ninth Booke auoucheth Regum exitus si perpenderimus, & reputauerimus, plures à suis, quam ab hostibus interemptos reperiemus. Alexander the Great would not pardon Philotas, because very impudently he told him: That it was daily in the power of Princes to commit and act treason, but not in his power to punish for it. And it is the ordinary misfortune of Princes, that attentates and coniurations against their liues, cannot be credited, till after their death, so (very effectually) speaketh Suetonius, in the life of Domitian.

A bold saying of Philotas.

We haue seene these mis-haps, performed on the persons of our two latest Kings Henry the third, the best King that hath reigned in France for an hundred yeares space, kild in the midst of his Armie by a diuelliſh Monke: And Henry the Great, fourth of the name, miserably murdred in his chiefest Citie, euen in the armes of his familiars, by an incarnate diuell. There is not any pardon for him, that attempteth on the life of his Prince. Quis extendit manum suum in Christum Domini, & innocens erit? So saith the Royall Prophet in the first Booke of the Kings the 26. Chapter. Who can stretch forth his hand against the Lords annointed, and be guiltlesse? He spake of Saul, King of Israel, whom God had reproued for his wickednesse.

The hard fate of the two last Kings of France.

In the yeare foure hundred and thirteene, the Bishop of Paris, at the request of the Vniuersitie, sent to the Duke of Bourgongne, being then in the Citie of Arras, to vnderstand from himselfe, whether he did allow and auouch those Articles of M. Iohn Petit, which he had formerly proposed at his request, maintaining the murder by him committed on the person of his Cousine Germaine, Lewes Duke of Orleans. The Bourgongnon hauing returned his answer, that he did not auouch them, but in that which was no more then right and reason: the Bishop of Paris, and the Inquisitor of the Faith, sent the Proposition of the said M. Iohn Petit, to the Sorbon of Paris, according to the Decree in the Court of Parliament, to know whether it was good & warrātable, or no. Behold here the very words, sent by the Bishop to the Sorbonnists.

The Message to the Duke of Bourgongne, & his answer.

The Bishop of Paris his Letter to the Doctors of Sorbonne,

The French Missiue.

MAistres Reuerends, on vous fait à scauoir, & vous enuoye-on la Scedule contenant aucunes Assertions, auec leurs Reprobations: parquoy nous vous requerons sur peine de Droict, que vous donniez publiquement vostre deliberation par escrit. Si ceste Assertion de laquelle est venu notairement scandale, est erronnee & à condamner, ou non que nous puisions consequemment proceder, si comme ordre de Droict le requiert, à ce que vous ayez à vous assembler dans le Mercredy Vingtiesme iour de ce Mois de December.

The same in English.

REuerend Maisters, we giue you to know, and send you the Scedule, containing certaine Assertions, with their Reproofes. Wherefore we require you, vpon the penalty of Law, that you giue publiquely your deliberation in writing, whether this Assertion, whereof ariseth notorious scandale, be erroneous, and to be condemned, or no, to the end that we may consequently proceede, according as the order of Law requireth. Wherfore you are to assemble your selues, betweene this and Wednesday, the Twentieth of this Month of December.

The Proposition (as we haue formerly obserued) was this.

Quilibet Tyrannus potest, & debet licite, & meritorie occidi à quocumque suo Vassallo, & Subdito, & per quemcumque modum, maxime per insidias, & per adulationes, non stante quocumque iuramento, aut confœderatione factâ apud eum, non expectando Sententiam, aut Mandatum Iudicis cuiuscumque.

The damnable Proposition.

Any Tyrant may be, and ought to be, lawfully and meritoriously murdred, by his owne Vassaile and Subiect, in any sort or manner, whereby he can be intrapped: and especially by secret ambushes, and flatteries. Notwithstanding any Oath of Allegeance made to him, or of confederacie contracted with him. And this is to be done, without attending for any Sentence, or command from a Iudge whatsoeuer he be.

The Sorbonnists met together, to the number of fourescore Doctors, and of Bachelers in Diuinitie threescore and one. After the Masse of the Holy-Ghost, being sung according to the manner in such cases requisite and accustomed; the thirteenth day of September, in the yeare One thousand foure hundred and thirteene, they condemned this execrable Proposition by their Censure, whereof here follow-eth the Tenure.

The meeting of the Sorbonnists.

The Censure of the Sorbonnists vpon the Proposition.

HAc Assertio generaliter posita, & secundum acceptionem huius vocabuli, Tyrannus, est error in nostra fide, & doctrina bonorum morum, & est contra Præceptum Dei; Non Occides (Glossa) propriâ auctoritate. Et contra hoc quod dicit Dominus noster Matthæi Vicesimo Sexto: Omnes qui Gladium acceperint (Glossa intelligit propriâ auctoritate) Gladio peribunt.

Item hæc Assertio vergit in subuersionem totius Reipublicæ, & Vniuscuiusque Regis, aut Principis.

Item dat Viam, & Licentiam apperit ad pura alia mala, & ad fraudes, & ad violationem Fidei, & Iuramenti: & ad proditiones, & generaliter ad omnem inobedientiam subiecti ad Dominum suum, & ad omnem infidelitatem, & diffidentiam vnius ad alterum consequenter ad æternam damnationem.

Item dat Viam, & Licentiam apperit ad plura alia mala, & ad fraudes, & ad violationem Fidei, & Iuramenti: & ad proditiones, & generaliter ad omnem inobedientiam subiecti ad Dominum suum, & ad omnem infidelitatem, & diffidentiam vnius ad alterum consequenter ad æternam damnationem.

Item, ille qui affirmat talem errorem obstinate, & alios qui inde sequuntur, est Hæreticus, & tanquam Hæreticus debet puniri, etiam post suam mortem, vt notatur in Decretis Vicesimo Tertia, quæstione Quinta Decretorum.

Actum Parisius Anno Millesimo, Quadringentesimo Decimo Tertio, die Mercurij Decimo Tertio Decembris.

All these thus Englished.

Concerning the word, Tyrant.

THis Affirmatiue, thus put a generall Maxime, and according to the true signification of the word, Tyrant, is erronious in our Faith, and in the Doctrine of good manners. It is against the expresse Commandement of God: Thou shalt not kill: The Glosse saith, thine owne priuate authoritie. And it is against that, which our Lord saith in Saint Matthew the fixe and twentieth Chapter: All they that take the Sword (the Glosse vnderstandeth, of their owne priuate authoritie, and without the command of Iustice) shall perish by the Sword.

This Maxime tendeth to the subuersion and ruine of all Kingdomes and Common-weales, and of euery King and Prince.

It openeth the doore, and sheweth the way to all other euils; as to deceipts, breach of Faith, and the Oath of Fidelity sworne to his Prince: To Treasons, and (generally) to all disobedience of the Vassale and Subiect towards his Prince and Lord: To all infidelitie, perfidie and all distrust in one man to another. And by consequent, it leadeth men to eternall damnation.

Item, he that (out of obstinate mallice) maintaineth this diabolicall proposition, and others that depend thereon; is an Heretique, and (as an Heretique) ought to be punished, yea, euen after death: As it is auouched in the Bookes of the Decretales Twentie three, and first Question.

Resolued at Paris, in the yeare One thousand foure hundred and thirteene, on Wednesday, being the thirteenth day of December.

According to the Resolution of the Facultie of Sorbonne, this diuelliſh propoſition was condemned, as hereticall againſt the Faith. And further ordained, that the Pleading made by the ſaid Iohn Petit, ſhould be brought and burned before the Church of Paris. Alſo, that the bones of Iohn Petit, buried at Heſdin, ſhould be taken vp out of the ground, and burnt publiquely as an Heretique.

The Plea, Propoſition, and Petits bones burnt.

This was thus executed, both the Pleading and the Infernall Propoſition, publiquely burned by Order of Parliament, the nine and twentieth day of February, in the ſaid yeare foure hundred and thirteene; all the Cleargie being aſſembled at this execution, before the Church of Paris.

Nor was it without cauſe, that this Propoſition, toſſed and agitated In vtramque partem, euen as problematicall, to be put in effect as a maxime moſt aſſured, for the death of ſo great a Prince, ſuch as the Duke of Orleans was: ſhould be publiſhed for Hereticall, and they that propoſed and defended it, both puniſhable with materiall fire in this world, and in the other to come, with eternall and vnquenchable.

Concerning Petrus Waldonius a Merchãt of Lyons.

Petrus Waldonius, a rich Marchant of Lyons, was infected with the Hereſie of Vigilantius, condemned of the Church, as Saint Auguſtine writeth in his Booke of Hereſies, and Saint Hierome in his Epiſtle Ad Ripuarium, where they doe ſay. Sola Gallia monſtra non habuit, ſed viris ſemper fortiſſimis, & eloquentiſſimis abundauit. And purſuing the Hereſie of Vigilantius, addeth. Exortus eſt ſubito Vigilantius, ſed potius Dormitantius, Campo Calagurritanus (for he was a Natiue of Calahorra in Spaine) Qui immundo Spiritu contra Chriſti Spiritum, & Martyrum neget Sepulchra veneranda, damnandas dicat eſſe Vigilias, Continentiam, Hereſim, Pudicitiam, libidinis Seminarium, &c. So this Peter Waldon began to appeare in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand one hundred threeſcore and ten, and by the meanes of his wealth, drew vnto him a troupe or rabble of wretched, penurious and miſerable needy people, whom he gaue reliefe vnto, and expounded the Scriptures before them, according to his owne fancie; ſo ſaith Guido Carmelita, in his Tract of Hereſies.

The poore people of Lyons, Albigenſes, or Waldenſes.

Theſe Sectaries cauſed themſelues (at the beginning) to be called the Poore people of Lyons; afterward the Albigeois, or Albigenſes, becauſe they had made themſelues ſtrong with their opinionated Doctrine, in the Towne of Alby, ten Leagues from Toloſa, but more commonly were tearmed Waldenſes, by the name of their elected Prophet. At the firſt they went wandring from Towne to Towne, without hauing any lodging, or ſetled dwelling, carrying along with them a great traine of women, with whom they had indifferent aſſociation, without diſtinguiſhing degrees of conſanguinitie. They were charged to giue themſelues to the Diuell, followers of Sabaoths, and addicted to Sorceries, flights of Birds, Dreames and Sneezings. Among other opinions they held theſe

What the opinions of theſe Sectaries were.

1. Firſt, that the Pope was Antechriſt, and no more to be eſteemed then the meaneſt Prieſt.

That Prayers for the Dead are altogether vnprofitable.

That Purgatory was a Fable, inuented by the Prieſts; and ſo was Auricular Confeſſion.

That it was Idolatry to worſhip Images, and the Reliques of Saints; and ſo was Prayer to the Virgin Mary.

That Vigiles and Faſts were mens inuentions.

That to liue within the compaſſe of Continency and Single life, as Prieſts and Religious perſons did, was Hereſie.

That to make the vowe of Virginitie and Chaſtitie, was a Cloake for Religious men and women, whereby to couer their immodeſtie: and that, notwithſtanding their vowes, they might marrie.

They are further charged to hold.

That Kings and Magiſtrates, hauing committed any Sinne; were no longer Kings nor Magiſtrates, but euen as the meaneſt of the People, and priuate perſons: And that it was permitted, to maſſacre and kill them, without any figure or forme of Iuſtice.

Some doe doubt, that in theſe they are wronged.

But all Hereſies of ſuch dangerous and vnchriſtian qualitie, were condemned in the Laterane Councill, and in the Prouinciall, held at Paris, vnder King Lewes, eight of his name, Father of Saint Lewes. Likewiſe in the generall Counſell of Conſtans, held in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred and fifteene. At which Counſell preſided Pope Iohn, and preſent there the Emperour Sigiſmund; foure Patriarches; nine and twentie Cardinals; ſeauen and fortie Archbiſhops; two hundred threeſcore and ten Biſhops, fiue hundred threeſcore and foure Abbots and Doctors; among whom was the learned Maiſter Iohn Gerſon, Chancellour of the Vniuerſitie of Paris, Canon of the ſaid Church, and Curate of Saint Iohn en Greue, Ambaſſadour from King Charles the fift, as we haue ſaid in our former Booke; all Aſſiſtants to the ſaid Counſell of Conſtans, which is the ſixteenth Generall. There the Fathers condemned the Hereſies renewed in Bohemia, approuing and confirming the Decree and Cenſure of Sorbonne, againſt the Maxime of that idle-headed Doctor Iohn Petit; as it is recorded in the fifteenth Seſſion, whereof theſe are the very words.

The ſame in Engliſh.

THe Holy and Sacred Counſell, being willing to imploy all their care and diligence, to extirpate thoſe Errours and Hereſies, which bud and ſhoote vp in diuers parts of the world: are thus aſſembled and called togeather for the ſame effect. Being newly informed, of certaine propoſitions, contrary to Faith and good Manners, extreamely ſcandalous, and which tend to the ſubuerſion of all order, and the Eſtate of euery Common-wealth: haue bin very ſtrangely taught and publiſhed. Among which Propoſitions, this.

The generall voyce of the whole Councell.

The Holy Councell willingly oppoſing themſelues againſt this error, and wholly to plucke it vp by the roote. After their mature Conſultation thereof, and what might beſt bee done in this buſines; haue declared, decreed and defined: That ſuch Doctrine being erroneous in faith, and contrary to all good manners, is reproued and condemned as hereticall, ſcandalous, and ſhewing the way to miſchiefes, falſhoods, Treaſons and fractions of Faith. Moreouer they haue decreed, reſolued, and declared, that ſuch as with wilfull obſtinacie, and purpoſed deliberation doe hold and maintaine this Propoſition; are Heretiques, and ſo ought to bee puniſhed, according as it is concluded by the Holy Canons.

Iohn, the bad Duke of Bourgongne, more then halfe madded, becauſe in this Councell, his Ambaſſadour was put from his place and Seate, by him of Spaine (as heretofore wee haue related) and that by reſolution of the ſaid Councell, the murther of Mounſieur Lewes of France, Duke of Orleans, and the Propoſition by him maintained, had beene declared as hereticall. Moreouer, that vpon conſequence of the Cenſure iudicially and religiouſly deliuered by the Vniuerſity and Sacred faculty of Diuines at Paris, hee had beene areſted by the Court of Parliament at Paris, in the Yeare, One Thouſand, Foure Hundred and Fourteene, the Seauen and Twentieth day of December. It was ſent from the ſaid Councell of Conſtans, and publiſhed throughout all the Kingdomes of Chriſtendome; that hee was guilty of high-Treaſon, hauing iuſtly forfeited both body and goods. And the Propoſition of Iohn Paruis, or Iohn Petite, was as iuſtly condemned by the Biſhop of Paris.

Hereupon, Iohn, Duke of Bourgongne, ſent Iohn de Mount-Leon his Almoner to Paris, to raiſe and awaken his old acquaintances, partakers in the bloudy League, with Letters of credence from his Maiſter, to put all in trouble & cõfuſion, by diſtributing Muotons a la grand Laine, and Saluts, to Robbers and Boot-halers for them; as euermore it happeneth, when inciuill warres are raiſed and proſecuted by ſtrange enemies, that buy and purchaſe men at any price whatſoeuer. Saint Gregory of Tours hath well obſerued it, to bee put in practice by all Eſtates in the world, by Princes that would make themſelues Great with the goods of their neighbours. His paſſage is moſt remarkable to vs, that haue made too much proofe thereof within theſe hundred yeares laſt paſt, by diuers accidents. It is in the Eight Booke and Twenty Eighth Chapter of his Hiſtory of France, where hee ſetteth downe and figureth to the life thoſe miſchiefes, which haue happened to vs.

The wretched condition of this latter Age.

And yet notwithſtanding, the Diuell is ſo vnchained, that hee finds and meets with Soules in ſuch ſort corrupted with falſe Doctrine: as the maſſacring and murthering of Princes, are their onely delights. Oh the goodnes of God! in what an Age liue we: when the death of a Prince, is but equall with that of a Monke?

On behalfe of the ſaid Duke of Bourgongne, Iohn the wicked, there wanted no mercenary Pennes to imitate Heretiques, that is to ſay: To withſtand and wreſt the true ſenſe of Sacred Scriptures, to cloud and darken the Maximes of their factious and confuſed dealing.

The holy and Sacred Councell of Conſtans, excommunicated all the Dogmatiſts, Aſſaſſines, Complices, and Fauourers of his. And here you may behold their Iuſt Reſolution, ſent to the Vniuerſity of Paris, by Maiſter Iohn de Iarſon.

The liues and lands of Princes put to the Popes arbitrement.

In that which hath beene ſet downe, is moſt remarkable againſt the Doctrine of Romiſh men, as (through a blindfold obedience) doe appoint the Life and State of Princes and Common-wealths, to the Iudgement and Arbitrement of the Pope, againſt the determination of Generall Counſels, yea, and the wiſedome diuine, who by his owne mouth hath appointed Temporall Kingdomes, the States and Perſons of Secular Princes, with the power of his Church.

In this Councell of Conſtans, confirmed by Pope Martin the Fifth, the three Ante-Popes, Gregory the Twelfth, Benedict, the Thirteenth, and Iohn, the Three and Twentieth depoſed: by the Fathers of the ſaid Councell was elected Pope Martin, the Fifth of the name, who reſtored peace to the Church, which being troubled by the three Ante-Popes; France was in the ſame condition, through the Treacheries and Ambitions of the Bourgongnon, who hauing brought the Engliſh into France, hee was the onely motiue and cauſe of the ruine thereof, and the death of many great Lords of the Kingdome.

The notorious cruelties of the Duke of Bourgongne.

For the Bourgongnon making himſelfe Maiſter of Paris, and getting into his power the King and the Queene; by one named Cappeluche, the Hangman of Paris, hee performed the very ſtrangeſt cruelties, that euer could be imagined. For in one day he cauſed to bee brought before him, Sixteene Hundred Lords of note, among whom was Bernard, Count of Armaignac, Conſtable of France, Henry de Marle, Chancellour, the Biſhops of Conſtans, Bayeux, Eureux, Senlis and Xaintes; the Abbot of Saint Cornille de Compeigne, the Count de Grand-prè, and other Lords of the Iuſtice Councell and Requeſts; all inhumanely maſſacred before his owne eyes. Hauing ſworne peace with the Daulphine Charles, at Pouilly le Fort, neere to Melun, he promiſed to withdraw the Engliſh out of France. Which promiſe being not kept, but but perſiſting ſtill in his rebellions and treacheries: for a full expiation of ſo many miſchiefes, on Le Pont de Montereau, or Fault-Yonne, on Sunday, it being the Feaſt of September, in the Yeare One Thouſand, Foure Hundred and Nineteene, bee was kild and maſſacred before the Daulphine Charles, who reproached him with his perfidious dealings, with blowes of Axes, : euen as Twelue yeares before, hee had caused Lewes Duke of Orleans, to bee bloodily butchered, To verefie the Oracle pronounced by the mouth of him that is Truth it ſelfe: Qui gladio perimit, gladio peribit: For as Ouid ſaith.

The deſerued death of the Duke of Bourgongne.

——— Nec enim Lex æquior vlla.
Quam necis artifices arte perire ſua.

This John of Bourgongne, had eſpouſed Margaret, Daughter to Albert of Bauaria Siſter to William of Bauaria, Count of Henault, and of Holland, and of her he begot one onely Sonne, Philip, Second of the Name, Third Duke of Bourgongne, who to reuenge the death of his Father, raiſed the Engliſh againe to ruinate France. And having ſeized the Perſons of the King & Queene, then remaining at Troyes in Champaigne, he there managed the marriage of Madame Katherine of France, laſt Daughter to King Charles the Sixth, with the King of England, Henry, Fifth of the name, the very Capitall Enemy of France. A Marriage of Siniſter preſage, celebrated at Troyes, according to the Treaty of Marriage contracted and accorded the One and Twentieth day of May, One Thouſand, Foure Hundred and Twenty. By which Treaty, King Charles the Sixt being then ſicke in his ſenſes (by the Counſaile of the ſaid Duke of Bourgongne) inſtituted his future Sonne in Law, Henry the Fifth, King of France: diſinheriting vniuſtly Charles the Daulphine of France, lawfull Heyre of the Crowne, forcing and violating the fundamentall Law of the Kingdome. The which made this Treaty of Marriage, were as void of iudgement and reaſon, as the King, being corrupted with gifts and promiſes; by the Bourgongnon, as in our time wee haue almoſt ſeene the like, by the mediation and working of ſome vnnaturall Frenchmen, corrupted with forraigne-Countrey Gold. But in thoſe times then, as ours likewiſe: God (the continuall Conſeruer of this Monarchie) hath kept the Right to the lawfull Heyres thereof, and hath reeſtabliſhed them in their Patern Inheritance, to the ſhame and confuſion of their enemies.

Philip, Duke of Bourgongne reuenged his Fathers death.

Henry the Fift King of England, married Madam Katherine of France.

This Monſieur Lewes of France, Duke of Orleans, was the Inſtituter of the Order of the Porcupine, (and not Charles Duke of Orleans, his Eldeſt Sonne, as it is written by Paradine, and others that haue taken vpon them to warrant it) for ioy of the Birth and Baptizing of his Firſt Sonne Charles of Orleans, borne (according to Du Tillet in the Yeare One Thouſand, Three Hundred, Twenty and Three.

The Inſtitution of the Order of the Porcupine, by Monſieur Lewes of France, Duke of Orleans, in the yeare One Thouſand, Three Hundred Foure Score and Thirteene.

In Chron. Iuuenal des Vrſins.

THe Imprinted Chronicle of Meſſire Iuuenall des Vrſins, vnder the Yeare, One Thouſand Three Hundred, Foure Score, and Fourteene, noteth this Birth of the Firſt Sonne of Orleans, in theſe words. In the ſaid yeare, the Dutcheſſe of Orleans had a Sonne, named Charles. And at his Baptizing there was great Solemnity. Thus you ſee what hee ſaith in ſumme.

But I haue ſeene a ſmall Manuſcript French Chronicle, compoſed by an Herauld of Orleans, named, Hennotin de Cleriaux, a Natiue of Blois, who liued in the time of this Chriſtening, and whereat hee was preſent in his Coate of Office, and hee inſtructeth me in this manner.

The words of Hennotin de Cleriaulx, Herauld of Orleans.

For the Solemnity of the ſaid Baptiſme, Monſieut Lewes of France made a new Order of Knighthood, very excellent, and of great renowme, termed, The Order of the Porcupine: which hee had choſen for his Deuice, in fauour, and for the high hope which he had of his firſt Borne Sonne. For at that time, there were ſome hard meaſures betweene the Nephewe and Vncle of Bourgongne, Monſieur Philip gouerning the King and Queene at his owne pleaſure. A little after, hee ſetteth downe (particularly) the rancke and degree, the names of the Princes, Lords and Gentlemen, his faithfull Confederates; to whom the ſaid Duke of Orleans gaue his Order of the Porcupine, of whom I haue loſt the remembrance, and my Chronicle the ſight.

The Dukes of Orleans and of Bourgongne reconciled and made friends.

The ſame King of Armes of Orleans, reporteth, that in the Yeare of Grace, One Thouſand, Foure Hundred, and Seauen, on Sunday, it being the Twentieth day of September, the Lord of Berry cauſed the Dukes of Orleans and of Bourgongne, to meet together in his Hoſtel de Neeſle at Paris, to make a louing and kinde agreement betweene the ſaid Princes: which hee did, and in ſuch ſort, as the three Princes went and heard Maſſe together at the Auguſtines, where the ſaid Dukes of Orleans and of Bourgongne, receiued the Sacrament together, after then had ſollemnly ſworne mutuall loue and Brotherhood. For aſſurance whereof, at the ending of Dinner in the Hoſtel de Neeſle, the Duke of Bourgongne receiued the Order of the Porcupine, at the hands of the Duke of Orleans, who did put it about his necke, each kindly kiſſing the other, the Lord of Berry melting into teares of ioy, by beholding it.

In Chron. Iuuenal des Vrſins.

The very ſame is recorded in the Chronicle of Meſſire Iuuenall des Vrſites, vnder the ſaid Yeare, One Thouſand, Foure Hundred and Seauen, and vnder that of One Thouſand, Foure Hundred, and Nineteene, in theſe words. To the Duke of Orleans, a little before hee had cauſed him to bee ſlaine, in manner before related; the ſaid John of Bourgongne, made ſollemne Oath vpon the Sacred Body of our Lord, to bee his true and loyall Kinſman. And promiſed to bee his Brother in Armes, wore his Order, and gaue gracious behauiour, and they dined together.

The Habite of the Order.

This Order was compoſed of Fiue and Twenty Knights, comprehending himſelfe as chiefe Gouernour thereof. They wore long looſe Caſſocks of fine Scarlet Murrey, (which is violet) and ouer them Cloakes of watchet coloured veluet, lined (as the Mantelet and Chapperon) with Carnation Sattin. And thereupon the Collar of the Order, formed as a wreath of Chaines of Gold, at the end whereof hanging vpon the Breaſt a Porcupine, of pure Gold, vpon a riſing Hill of greene Graſſe and Flowers.

Concerning two kinds of Porcupines in Affrica & the Indies.

The Porcupine is called by the Latines Hyſtrix, and are two familiar kinds of them, that is to ſay, which are oftner ſeene (more then elſe-where) in Affrica, and in the Indies. Both of them are called Hogges or Swine, in regard of comming ſo neere to the reſemblance of that domeſticke Creature amongſt vs, inured to wallowing in the mire, particular by it ſelfe, and the other wild or Sauage, which is reckoned a wild Boare, the hunting whereof is pleaſant. And wee haue an ancient French Prouerb to this purpoſe: Au Cerf la biere, au Sanglier le Barbier. The Porcupine is a kind of Hedge-hogge as well as the Vrchin; for hee is wholly armed with ſtrong Scales, like vnto them of the Tortoiſe, and perceiuing hard purſuit made after him, ſhuts himſelfe vp faſt lockt vp, within his Scales, And the Porcupine is likewiſe reſembled to the Hedge hogge, both being armed with ſharpe pricking points: but thoſe of the Porcupine are much longer then the other. This Animall, ſeeing himſelfe narrowly preſſed with Dogges, ſtretcheth himſelfe forth, and bindeth his Skinne with ſuch might, that he darteth and letteth flye his prickles like Arrowes at their muzzles, which forceth them to giue ouer their hold, and follow him no further. As we learne of Pliny, in the Eight Booke and Thirty Fiue Chapter of his Naturall Hiſtory, and next to him, our French Lucretius, Du Bartas.

These beaſts hardly laid to, lay as hardily about them.

Marc. Paul. Venet. in lib. de Tartar. 1. Chap 33.

Marcus Paulus of Venice, in the First Booke, and Three and Thirtieth Chap. his Tartaria, writeth that in the Countrey of Seassem, there is found great store of Porcupines; but the hunting of them is extreamly dangerous, in regard that (as he saith) they wound with their sharpe piercing quilles, all men and hounds that come neere them. Sunt in Regione illa multi Sues Spinosi, qui quum capiuntur à venatoribus, suis sæpe Homines, & Canes lædunt. Nam Canes à Venatoribus in Porcos provocati, eos irritant, & commouent feras illas, vt simul concurrentes terga sua, quibus Spinæ innascuntur, vehementer commoueant, atque stimulos ipsos vehementia quadam excutiant, & in viciniores Homines, & Canes euibrent.

The Porcupines of Seassem in Tartaria.

The Viper & Vrchin alike in producing their young.

Moreouer, the Vrchin or Hedge-hogge is subiect to the same mischance, as is reported to bee common to the Viper, to bring forth her young ones so late as she can. In the same manner the Vrchin, feeling in her wombe the sharpe quilles of her younglings, forbeareth so long to produce them: that their keene points increasing by those long delayes, doe pierce through her entrailes and belly, that cause her death in recompence of her long delaying. And this was the reason why the Egyptians vsed this Creature, as a Symbole or Hieroglyphicke of Indiscretion: Procrastinationis damnum, deriued from the doctrine of the Hebrewes. To which the Prophet Hieremy threatned, that the wicked, hardened in their sinnes, should be punished in a strange fashion: that is to say, that they should not leaue any Line behind them, which might conserue the memory of them: And that their women trauelling with Child, should haue the same labour as the Vrchin or Porcupine. Omnibus Labores Ericij. Vidi impium exaltatum super Cedros Libani transiui, & ecce non erat. So saith the Royall Psalmist.

The reason why he tooke this deuice.

Monsieur Lewes of Orleans, tooke this Animall for the Deuice and Subiect of his Order, to make knowne thereby to Iohn of Bourgongne, his mortall enemie, that he would reuenge himselfe, for his brauadoes against him; and breake the wicked and bloody purposes, which Iohn of Bourgongne had conceiued and engendred, in the hollow pits of malediction and cruelty: whereinto himselfe would fall, and the House of Bourgongne perish to the third Generation; as it happened to Charles, the last Duke of Bourgongne, youngest Sonne to this Iohn the Cruell. And yet neuertheless, as all hatreds ought to bee mortall, and liue but for a time in euery Noble and Generous Soule: so after the death of the said Iohn of Bourgongne, who had for his Successor Philip the Second Duke of Bourgongne, they became Countrey friends together.

Heauy enemies made louing friends.

For in the Yeare, One Thousand, Foure Hundred, and Forty, Charles Duke of Orleans, (Eldest Sonne to Monsieur Lewes of France) deliuered out of England (where hee had remained euer since the Battell of Azingcourt, lost by the French, Anno, One Thousand, Foure Hundred and Fifteene) by the mediation of the said Philip of Bourgongne: these two Princes made a peace betweene themselues, vnited by Marriage of Mary of Cleues, Daughter to the Sister of the said Duke of Bourgongne, with the same Duke of Orleans, sollemnized in the Abbey of Saint Bertin, in the Towne of Saint Omer, on Saturday before Saint Andrewes day, in the Yeare, One Thousand, Foure Hundred, and Forty.

Particular deuises in honor of the Marriage.

Among which particular Iouiall delights to honour this Marriage, on the Sonday following, there was performed, a Masquerado, or Mummery of a Virgin richly parcelled, like to a Nymphe; leading in her right hand a Porcupine, darting vp into the Ayre his Quilles, or Arrowes, very artificially. In her left hand shee conducted a goodly white Swanne, hauing about her necke a rich Collar of the Order of the Golden-Fleece. These were particular deuises and Emblazons, concerning the Houses of Orleans, of Cleues, and of Bourgongne, the markes or notes of Alliances, of the two Houses of Orleans, and of Cleues: whereof are yet to bee seene (at this present in the Louure) rich Tapestries of high and vnualluable price, made of Gold and Silke, in the parted Armes of Orleans and of Cleues.

The Order of Bourgongne of the Golden-Fleece.

The manner of their Habits.

On the Tuesday after the Nuptialls, the Duke of Bourgongne began to celebrate the Feast of his Order, of the Golden-Fleece (whereof wee shall speake more at large in the Fourth Booke) with his Brethren Knights, who (with their Soueraigne) went to heare Euensong, wearing their Cloakes semed with Flames of Gold, the ...

...broydered with Fusils and Stones, which appeared to sparkle like fires, all embroidered most sumptuously, and their Chapperons with their round rich wreathes, as they were wont to be worne in elder times. According to their ranke and degree, they had their Chaires placed in the Quire; and directly ouer their heads, the Tables of their Armes and Emblazons.

The manner of their habits.

After the establishment of this Order, fiue Knights were deceased, whose places were likewise vacant, and without Escutchions. On Wednesday, which was the first day of Saint Andrew, the Knights went to heare Masse in as magnificent manner as the day before. At returne from Church, the Duke sate at the Table in the middest of the Knights, all wearing the Order of the Golden-Fleece, made of Fusils of Gold, and betweene euery two of them were the shapes of Flint stones, which (as we haue elsewhere said) were the Armes of the first Dukes of Bourgongnes, Sons and Descendants from great King Clouis, richly enammeled with fiery sparkles, and hanging vnderneath a Fliece of Gold, hanging directly on the breast. These Knights were placed at the Table, all on the one side, according as Monks vse to sit in their diuing Hall: and after Dinner was ended, they departed thence two and two together, as Monkes vse to doe, but they who were the ancientest Knights, went last, and the younger went formost.

The Armes of the first Dukes of Bourgongne.

On Thursday, they were summoned for entrance, and to hold their Chapter, to the end that they might proceed to the Election of new Knights in their places that were deceased. In this Chapter, they made choyce of Charles, Duke of Orleans, to be of their Order and Brotherhood, and to vnderstand from himselfe, whether hee would like of this election or no, they sent vnto him the Bishop of Tournay, and the Chancellour of Bourgongne, Maister Nicholas Raulin (he which caused to be builded the Hospitall of Beaune, the most magnificent in all Christendome, to whom the Duke of Orleans made answere, that most willingly he did embrace the Order, to honour his Brother in Law and Cousin the Duke of Bourgongne.

Charles Duke of Orleans chosen to the Order of the Golden-Fleece.

Hereupon, they entred the great Hall immediately, towhich place came the Duke with all his Brethren Knights, returning from their Chapter. The King of Armes named Toison d'Or, the Heraulds and Pursеuants marching before in Order: the King of Armes carrying on his left Arme, a Cloake & Chaperon of the said Order. Messire Hugh de Launoy, who was appointed to beare the word; approaching neere Monsieur the Duke of Orleans, spake to him in these, or the like words.

Golden-Fleece King of Armes.

Most Excellent Most puissant, and Most redoubted Lord, my Lord the Duke of Orleans; behold here in your presence my Lord the Duke of Bourgongne, & my Lords his Brethren the Order of the Golden Fliece, who haue aduised & concluded altogether in the Chapter in regard of the most high renowne, valiancie & wisedome remaining in your most noble person; to present you a Collar of the Order. Entreating you most humbly that you would be pleased to receiue and weare it; to the end, that the Brotherly loue which is betweene you and your most honoured Lord, may be the better maintained and preserued.

The Speech deliuered to the Duke of Orleans.

Then my Lord the Duke of Orleans made Answere, that hee would doe it very gladly. Whereuppon the Duke of Bourgongne (who had a Collar there ready of his Order) stept forward, and put it about the Necke of my Lord the Duke of Orleans, making these words. In the Name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the Holy-Ghost; after kissing him in signe of Brotherly affection.

In like manner, and at the same instant, did the Duke of Orleans as kindly require the Duke of Bourgongne, requesting, that hee would likewise bee pleased to receiue and weare his Order; whereto hee kindly condiscended: when instantly the Duke of Orleans, drew forth of his sleeue a Collar of his Order, and put about the Duke of Bourgongne his necke: conducting him afterward to the Chapter (when hee had first put on the Cloake and Chapperon, of the Order of the Golden-Fleece) to take the Oathes in such cases required, and to giue assurance, in the Election of foure other Knights, to fulfill the places of them that were dead.

A mutuall enterchange of Loue & Honour betweene the 2. Dukes.

This was kept secret amongst them, but yet notwithstanding within few dayes after it was so published; that they would needs send to the Dukes of Bretaigne and Alanson, each of them a Collar of the Order of the Golden-Fliece. And thither likewise wise was sent the King of Armes, Toison d'Or, to beare them to the said two Princ and to deliuer them Letters for that effect, sent from the Dukes of Orleans and Bur gongne, and the Knights of the said Order. The Dukes of Alanson and Bretaigne cepted the Collars very-thankfully, bestowing rich guifts on the King of Armes This is that which Paradine speaketh concerning this Marriage, and the whole Co tents of this Chapter, in his History of Bourgongne.

The History of the Dukedome of Millaine, acquired to the Crowne of France.

The ancient situation of the Lombards.

THe noble Romane Historian Cornelius Tacitus, and all they that haue especi remarked the Antiquity of the Romane Empire, doe agree with one consen That the Lombards were (in elder dayes) placed on the bounds and Confines Allemaigne or Germany, neere to Pannonia, and that vpon the declining of the E pire, (as we learne by Iohn the Deacon, and Sigebert) they passed into that part Italy (heretofore obserued by Cæsar, in the First Booke of his Memories of the Ga wars) which held a portion of the Gaules, acknowledged by the Appellation of lia Togata, & that the Germane People held Possession there in Title of a Kingdo which our King Charlemaigne abolished, by bringing Italy vnder his obey-sance.

Saint Ambrose Bishop of Millaine.

The chiefe or Capitall City of Lombardy is Millaine, honoured by that bri Beacon of the Church, Saint Ambrose, Bishop thereof, by whom it is called Meth num: in regard that the Gaules of Bourges, and of Autun, first founders thereof, in ing the foundation, did find there a wild Sow or Boare, halfe couered with S and the other halfe with Wooll. So saith the same S. Ambrose, agreeing with T Liuius, in the Fift Booke of his Romane History: whervpon said the Poet Claud

Ad moenia Gallus,
Condita lanigeræ Suis ostendentia pellem.

The peopling of Italy by the Gaules.

Her Foundation is recorded (after the opinion of Titus Liuius) vnder the Re of Tarquinius Priscus, at such time as one part of the Gaules, to the number of T Hundred Thousand, went to people Italy, vnder Conduct of their Leader Bel zus, one of the Nephewes to Ambigat, King of the Gaules, as we haue formerly serued. Ausonius placeth this City, in the number of them best worthy of no for the fertility of her grounds and Soyle.

Et Mediolani mira omnia copia rerum,
Innumera cultaque domus, facunda virorum
Ingenia, antiqui mores.

Procopius, in his second Booke of the Gothes warres, nameth it, next to Rome, the chiefest of Cities vnder the Westerne Empire: And wherein the Emperors pleased to make their soiourning, which made it to grow rich, and wonderfully potent.

Gouernors appointed for Millaine and Lombardie.

After the Conquest of Italie, and the Kingdome of Lombardie ruined, by the subiugall of Didier their last King, confined at Lyons, but some say at Mont-Didier in Picardie, in the yeare of Grace seauen hundred threescore and sixeteene: Charlemaigne established for Gouernour at Millaine, and the Iurisdiction of Lombardie, a Iudge and Seneschall or Steward. These Iudges and Seneschals were in (elder times) named Vice-Comites, Viscounts, and to the number of twelue vnder the Counts; who represented Gouernors, vnder the Lieutenants Generals of the great Prouinces, that were called Dukes. And those Vicounts had Lieutenants vnder them, whom they enabled Vicarios, Vicars, & by another name, common in Gascoigne, Languedock, and Prouence, Viguiers: as we haue said in the Tracts of the Officers of the Crown of France. Italie in generall, and the Prouinces in perticuler, bounding on Pharos, and the straites of Messina in Sicilie, were by Charlemaigne annexed to the Crowne of France, and rendred as Fiefes thereof, vntill the vnhappy partition made by the debonnaire. After him, the Berengars cantonned themselues in Italie, and there stiled themselues to be Kings.

The descent of the Berengars and their rule in Italie.

These Berengars were descended of Boson, made and created King of Prouence, by Ier King of France Charles the Bauld. So Berengarius, first of the name, commanded as Maister ouer Italie foure yeares: And Berengarius the second, seauen yeares. Hugh Duke of Bourgongne, Prince of the Bloud of France, sent him roundly thence, and Regented Italie ten yeares: Lotharius his Sonne, two yeares onely. This man hauing giuen his daughter Alix in marriage to Berengarius the third, possessed himselfe of Italie, against his Father in Law, & committed his wife Alix of Bourgongne to liue as a prisoner.

Against him went into Italie Otho of Saxonie, whom the Germaines sirnamed the Great; & who vanquished Berengarius in a ranged Battaile neere to Pauia, deliuered Alix out of prison, made her his wife, and brought her with him into Germanie. During the time of his absence, Berengarius bestirred himselfe to recouer his losse, and compelled Otho to passe againe into Italie the second time, in the yeare of Grace nine hundred fiftie and seauen; when he stiled himselfe not onely King of Germanie, but likewise Emperor of the Romans. A Title which should appertaine to none, but only to the Kings of France.

Pope Stephen the eight, a friend to Otho in his attempt.

Otho was fauoured in this his enterprise by Pope Stephen, eight of the name a Germaine by Nation, and his neere Kinseman, against the vnanimate consent of the people of Italie: as is written by Palmerius Florentinus in his Chronicle, vnder the yeare nine hundred fiftie fiue, by these words. Post Arnulphum (this Arnoule was the Bastard of Carloman, the Bastard Sonne of Lewes the Stammerer, Emperour and King of France, second of the name) Imperium confunditur, dolentibus Romanis, atque diuersis Italiæ Populis, quod A Francia in Germaniam translatum esset. Quamobrem à Romanis, Pontificeque insignibus sunt Trans-Alpini Imperatores, vsque ad primum Bonem; & in Italia quidem Berengarij Imperium per id temporis vsurparunt.

The last Emperour of the bloud of France

After the death of Lewes the Fourth, who was the last Emperour of the Bloud of France, Sonne to the Bastard Arnoule: Conrard Duke of Franconia, made vsurpation of Germanie (then being deceased without children Henry, sirnamed the Birdcher, Duke of Saxonie) continuing his wandrings, which were brought to end by his Sonne Otho, who (at a sudden) vsurped ouer Germanie, which had bin a fee to the Crowne of France euer since Great Clouis, who subdued it in the yeare hundred after the Battle of Tolbiac, as we haue before declared in the second Booke. This is that deliuered by Beatus Rhenanus, writing vpon Cornelius Tacitus, his Germania, in these words. Post ingentem illam cladem ad Tolbiacum Vicum Vbiorum (neere Cologne one the Rhine) acceptam, ita pressêre nos Franci, vt respirare non valuerit, donec nec exoletâ stirpe Veterum Francorum, auspiciis primum Othonis Saxonis Ducis, Conrardi Osto-Franci, atque Henrici Saxonis, mox magni illius Othonis, qui inter Imperatores Germanicos primum obtinet locum, in pristinam libertatem, nos ipsi vindicauimus.

Pope Stephen his Crowning Otho for Emperour.

Pope Stephen hauing (long before) caused Otho to come to Rome, he crowned him himselfe Emperour, so saith Palmerius. Otho à Romanis Ecclesiæ Patribus, Vrbisque Principibus euocatus, Romam proficiscitur, in quâ Vrbe amplissimis honoribus vsus, Coronam suscepit. Et fuit primus qui post translatum in Germaniam Imperium, Imperiales titulos rite susciperet; quod postea obseruatum est, vsque in præsens tempus.

This was consented vnto by the Romanes, because they had so sollemnly sworne vnder paine of eternall curse (Sub Anathemate Maranatha) to our Charlemaigne when hee was crowned Emperour by Pope Leo, Thirteenth of the Name, in the Yeare of Grace, Eight Hundred and One, incurring by their violated faiths, the fulminatory Censures, sent out by this Pope against the Romanes, and People of the West, who would not acknowledge any other for Emperours, but onely the Kings of France, to whom alone the Title of Emperour appertained by successiue right without either consent of the Romane people, or the Crowning of Popes, though necessary or requisite thereto, these being not of the essence of the Imperiall dignity, nor depending thereon. For, concerning the matter of Coronation, the Emperour Maximilian the first, spake very well to the Popes Legate, and to the States of the Empire, assembled at the Dyet, held at Constance in the Yeare, One Thousand, Fiue Hundred and Seauen. That it was but a Ceremony, to take and receiue the Imperiall Crowne at the Popes hand: In regard (quoth he) that the dignity and power of the Emperour, depended vpon none, but on the Estates of the Empire.

The words of Maximilian Emperour, to the Popes Legate at Constance.

And as for that which respecteth or concerneth consent of the Romane People which Palmerius would haue to bee an essentiall cause: they neuer had any such right or authority, either of voyces or suffrages, although he would arrogate it to their power. And therefore the Emperour Fredericke, First of the name, Sirnamed Barba Rossa, making his entrance into the City of Rome, brauely answered to the principall persons among them that came forth to meete him, and thought highly to content him, by saying in their Oration. That the Empire was come to the Almaignes or Germaines, by the concession of Popes, and consent of the Romane people: And consequently, that he was greatly beholding to them. But the Emperour presently replyed. Ego Romanum Imperium Maiorum meorum Francorum sanguine emptum, eisdem quibus accepi manibus, tueri conabor. Sic vanam Italorum contudit arrogantiam. That the right of the Empire was come to him by the Kings of France, his most noble Grand-fathers, and not by the Italians, whose arrogancie he made a mockery of. So saith Otho, Bishop of Frisinghen, and the Poet Ligurine, in the Life of this noble and famous Emperour.

The Emperour Frederick Barba-Rossa, his entrance into Rome.

Italy, then vnder Charlemaigne (which he wan with his blood) was gouerned by Counts and Vicounts. But the negligence of his Sonnes & Descendants gaue way and leysure to these Gouernours to impatronize themselues of their Gouernments and Benches of Iustice, and to become Lords domineering ouer their Countries Vicounties: the right of Baise le maine, only reserued to the Emperours, with some few small Rights for their Inuestiture.

The right of kissing the Hand.

Among these then were the Vicounts of Millaine, bearing the Sirname of Agnata (which is a small little Towne in the Estate of Millaine, from whence those Vicounts were issued and descended) who maintained themselues in the Possession of their Gouernment of Lombardy, very neere the continuance of Fiue Hundred years and vntill the time of Philip Maria, Brother to Valentina of Millaine, Dutchesse of Orleans, ouer whom the Sforzaes vsurped by power.

A Catalogue or briefe Chronicle of the Vicounts of Millaine.

Facius d'Angleria, Father to Heriprand.

1. THe First of these Vicounts of Millaine, obserued by the Historians of Italy was Heriprand, sonne to Facius of Angleria) who by his valiancy, made himselfe Lord of Lombardy and of Millaine in the Yeare of Grace, One Thousand, Twenty Three. Conrard, Second of the name, Emperour of Germany, passed into Italy, besieged him, to bring him to the tearmes of Duty and obedience. The contention, consisting on nothing else but homage, was to be determined by a le Duello or Combate, of a Duke of Bauaria, for the Emperour, against Heriprand: whom the Victory inclined by the death of his Contrary. And according to the ompact and couenants of this Combate, Conrard was compelled to leaue Heriand in quiet; who enioyed his vsurpation the space of Two and Twenty Yeares, nd left it to his Sonne and Successor,

2. Otho, called the Vicount, First of that name, who (in deuotion) made one in he Voyage beyond the Seas, for Conquest of the Holy Land, with Godfrey of Bone, the First King of Ierusalem. At the Seige whereof, this Otho fought in single uello with a Sarazen Admirall, named Voulx, who defied & challenged the Chriians to fight against him man to man. Otho slew him in the Field, & as a note of his ictory, had for despoyles his Armes, and his Salade or Helmet of pure Gold, on he Creast whereof was exalted (as a Trophee) a Serpent and Viper: Viuree en pal ouurant vn Enfant. To conserue the memory of this Combate to posterity: Otho oke for him, and those of his Descent and Linage, Vicounts of Millaine, D'Argent la Bysse ondé de Gueules, or speaking more grossely, L'Escu d'Argent à vn Serpent entortille de Bleu Celeste qui engloutit, vn Enfant de Coleur Rogue, ou Sang. According the testimony of Georgius Merula; of Paulus Iouius, in the liues these Vicounts of the Ciuill-Lawyer Alciate, a native of Millaine, in his Emlems, and in the Tract which he wrote of Duels, the Three and Fortieth Chapter. or, concerning that which is written by Petrarche, and Gabriel Symeony, in his vulr description of the Princes of Millaine; they are meere Chimeraes. Before this xploit was performed in the Holy Land; they of the House of Angleria; Portoit Argent à Sept Coronnes de Gueules.

Otho, the Vicount, a valiant Champion in the Holy-Land.

3. Next after this Otho the First, succeeded his Sonne Andrew, the Vicount, Father of Gauia, otherwise called Galtagne or Gualuin, against whom the Emperour Frederick the First, Sir-named Barbarossa, waged strong warre, & vpon this occasion.

Andrew the Vicount.

4. The Wife of this Emperor, being called Beatrix, the Countesse Palatine of Bourgon, was desirous to see the City of Millaine, & being entred thereinto, the Inhabitants tooke this Princesse, and to reuenge the quarell of the Vicounts against the mperours: did set her vpon a Mule backward, with her face turned towards the le, which they gaue her to hold in her hand instead of a Bridle, and in this manr, threw her forth of the City, with many iniurious scoffes and taunts. Barba-rossa illy offended at this Act of folly, soon after besieged the City of Millain, & so narwly pressed it with Famine; that the Inhabitants were constrained to yeeld, vpon rms of discretion. Yet notwithstanding in such sort, that they who would haue ir liues saued, should with their teeth, & without the help of any hand, draw a Fig t of the secret parts of a Mule: And the same was performed, by such as were lling to saue their liues. And hence grew the mocking by-word, when men were posed to scorne the Millanoises: they would shew them two Fingers ioyned toher Ouall-wise, saying: Ecco la Fico, Voyla la Figue.

The Emperours reuenge on the Millanoises.

Look on your Figge.

Millaine was razed downe to the ground, in the Yeare, One Thousand, One Hund, Threescore and Two, the Plough passing ouer it, and Salt sowed thereon, in ne of a malediction. Gaulain was led Prisoner into Germany, by Barba-Rossa, ere he was many dayes whipt and beaten with Roddes, miserably hurried from place to another, fed with scraps and morsels cast vnder the Table by Frederick his wife, being tyed in a Chaine like a Dogge, hee continued in this miserable iction the space of Eight Yeares, and vntill the Yeare, One Thousand, One Hund, Three Score and Tenne; when he found the meanes to depart thence, and eturne againe to Millaine, which he began to rebuild; and dyed there without y Heyres begotten of his body, in the yeare, One Thousand, One Hundred, Foure ore and Two.

The miserable condition of Gualuin.

After his death, the Millanoises expelled the Noble men out of their City, crying berty, Liberty, and gouerned themselues in forme of a Common-wealth, making yce of Senatours, among the principall Families of the People. And as chiefe amongst them, they elected successiuely Iohn, Martin, Philip and Napoleon, all named De la Tour: who (from Father to the Sonne) commanded in Millaine, euer e the Yeare Foure-score and Two, vntill the Yeare, One Thousand, Two Hun-

John de la Tour.

5. Vnder this John de la Tour, First Captaine Generall and Standard-Bearer of Millaines Common-wealth, began the Factions (which ruinated Italy) of the Guelphes, and the Gibellines, by deuision betweene two Brethren, Germaine Captaines of the Army of Fredericke Barbarossa, at the Siege of the City of Parma, vicped by the Pope, whose partakers were called Guelphes, that is to say in the Germane Language, Rauenous Wolues: And those on the Emperours side, were termed Gibellines, that is to say, Faithfull and good Friends.

The Factions of the Guelphs and Gibellines in Italy.

Vbertine of Angleria, and his Issue.

This Vbertine of Angleria, was Brother to Gauluin the afflicted. He left two Sons, namely Otho, Second of the name, made Archbishop of Millaine, by Pope Vrban his Cousin; and Andreoccio, Father to Thibault, the Vicount, who contending to re-enter Millaine, was ouercome neere to Angleria, by Napoleon, who caused his head to bee smitten off at Galarato. Thibault left two Sonnes, John and Mathew, called the Great, in regard of his huge corpulence and stature; whom the Archbishop Otho his Vncle left peaceably as Gouernour of Millaine, himselfe being retired to Clauaux in Bourgongne, where hee ended his dayes in a Monasticall Habit, in the Yeare
One Thousand, Two Hundred, Foure Score and Fifteene, in the Moneth of August, he being aged Foure Score and Seauen Yeares at his death.

Guy de la Tour Gouernour of Millaine.

6. Against this Mathew, rose vp Guy de la Tour, the Sonne of Napoleon, and possessed himselfe of the Gouernment of Millaine. Mathew made his recourse to the Emperour Henry the Seauenth; whose part hee vndertooke to maintaine, Guy de la Tour being a Guelphe. Henry came into Italy, and caused himselfe to bee crowned at Millaine, with the Crowne circled with Iron, in imitation of our Emperour Charlemaigne. Guy conspired and practised against the life of the Emperour Henry: but his designes were discouered by Mathew, who as his deserued recompence, was in-uested with the State of Millaine, being entituled, Vicar of the Empire, with the red Scarlet Cloake, Furred with Ermines, and the Vicars Bonnet of Scarlet, exalted Mortier-fashion, Furred likewise on both sides with Ermines, but bordered about and below with Cloth of Gold. This Inuestiture was made by the same Emperour Henry of Luxembourg, hee creating Millaine a Vicariate, and ordenary Chamber of the Empire, in the Yeare, One Thousand, Three Hundred and Twelue.

Mathew made Vicar of the Empire.

The Issue of Mathew.

This Mathew left Fiue Sonnes, to wit; Galeas, First of the name, Marke, Sirnamed Balacion, Luchin, John Arch-bishop of Millaine; and the Fift Sonne was Stephen.
Next to Mathew succeeded his Eldest.

Galeas Knight of the Starre.

7. Galeas, First of the name, nourished in France, in the Court of King Charles Bell, Fourth of the name, who made him Knight of the Order of the Starre. The Em-perour Lewes of Bauaria, Fift of the name, hauing taken the Crowne of Iron at Mil-laine; Marke Balacion accused before the Emperour his Eldest Brother Galeas, because hee had surcharged the Millanoises with Taxations & Subsidies, without lea-& permission of the Emperour his Soueraigne Lord. Being conuicted of this crime Lewes sent him Prisoner to the Castle of Modece, with his Children and his two Brothren John and Luchin. from whence within a while after they were deliuered. Ga-leas dyed of a burning Feauer, after the surprizall of Pistoyia, By Beatrix of Sardigna his Wife. Hee left two Sonnes, Azzo, otherwise called Actius, and Marke; who hauing attempted against the life of his Brother, was strangled with a Table-napki by his command.

He left Issue.

8. Azzo succeeded in the Vicariate of Millaine, wherein he was inuested by the Emperour Lewes of Bauaria, who (with the Inuestiture) gaue him the Title of Prince of the Empire, in the Yeare, One Thousand, Three Hundred, Twenty and One, paying the Summe of an Hundred Thousand Pounds, for the said Right of Inue-ture: hee had to Wife Katherine of Sauoy, and by her hee had no Children; so dichancing to dye at the Age of Eight and Thirty Yeares, in the Moneth of Aug
One Thousand, Three Hundred, and Twenty Eight.

9. Luchin and John the Arch-bishop gouerned the Estate of Millaine, the one the Spirituall, and the other the Temporall. Luchin had married Isabell of Fra in the Citie of Geneway, and being poysoned by her, died in the yeare One thousand three hundred fortie and sixe, in the Month of June.

10 By his death was aduanced John the Archbishop, who gouerned Myllaine alone, and without any Companion. He caused to returne from Flanders, his Nephewes Galeas and Barnabie, who withdrew themselues thither for warrant of safety, being accused about the death of their Vncle Luchin, whose wife was entertained by Galeas, according as her selfe had made knowne. John the Archbishop dyed of a lingring Feauer, in September One thousand three hundred fiftie and two, and by his last Will and Testament, he instituted (as his Heires) his three Nephewes, Mathew, Galeas, second of the name, and Barnabie, Sonnes to his yongest Brother Stephen the Vicount; but with this charge, that the Seigneuries of Millayne and Geneway should be Gouerned in common, and vnder one sole Potestate, established by them all three. And as for the other Cities and Townes, they should be parted and deuided in three Lots, by the Senators of Geneway and Millayne, among whom the parties did conclude, that the Lots should be drawne out of the Scrutinie, by Mathew, wherewith the Bretheren contented themselues, and should enioy their Lots in proper Heritage, which accordingly was executed. Mathew being dull, and of cowardly courage, dyed two yeares after the Archbishop his Vncle, being poysonned (according to common opinion) in a Supper, whereto his two Brothers had inuited him.

John the Archbishop or Gouernor of Millaine.

Concerning the three Sons of Stephen the Vicount.

11 Galeas, second of the name, and Barnabie, they deuided in twaine the Estate and Gouernement of Millaine, yea, and the Citie it selfe was parted betweene them, each of them building a Castell there for his dwelling. To Galeas fell the Lot of enioying Pauia and Geneweye; and to Barnabie fell by Lot the coasts of Bogna, Placentia, Laudz, and Baude in the Vallie of the Appenines, which had bin the Lot of Mathew their elder Brother. This Galeas the second, and Barnabie his Brother, were Inuested into the Estate of Millayne, by the Emperour Charles of Luxembourg fourth of the name, King of Bohemia; who gaue them the title of perpetuall Vicares of the holy Empire, paying the summe of threescore thousand Florins. Galeas the second, at his being in Flanders, fought in single Combat with a Gentleman, who bare for his deuise a Taper lighted at both the ends, & in the middest hung two Buckets of Water. It was held by the said Galeas, and his Successors, Dukes of Millayne, vntill the times of the Emperour Charles the fift. This Galeas died in the yeare One thousand three hundred threescore and eight, in the Moneth of July, leauing for his Successour his Sonne.

Galeas & Barnabie deuided the Gouernement betweene them.

12 John Galeas, third of the name, who espoused Madam Isabell of France, daughter to King John, and Sister to King Charles the fift, called the Wise: by whom he had three Children, to wit, John Maria, Phillip Maria, and Valentina of Millayne. By marriage of the said Madam Isabell of France, this John Galeas was made (by King John his Father in Law) Count of Vertus in Champaigne; and created by the Emperour Fredericke, third of the name, the first Duke of Millaine, and Vicar of the holy Empire, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred fourescore and sea-ten; paying to the said Fredericke the summe of an hu dred thousand Florins. Being aduertised, that his Vncle Barnabie conspired against him: he made himselfe Maister of Millaine, and of his enemie; whom he caused to dye in prison, and poisoned his Sonnes, remaining sole Lord of Millaigne, of Geneweye, and of their Iurisdictions.

John Galeas the first Duke of Millaine, and Vicar of the holy Empire.

He ioyned in marriage his daughter Valentina of Millayne, with Monsieur Lewes of France, the onely Brother to King Charles the sixt: she being sent into France, in the yeare One thousand three hundred fourescore and eight. In fauour of this marriage, he gaue to the said Valentina, the Counties of Ast in Piedmont, and that of Vertus in Champaine, foure thousand Florines of Gold, and foure thousand sixe hundred sixtie and seauen Markes of Siluer in Plate, Iemmes and Iewels. Moreouer, it was promised and stipulated by the same contract of marriage, that vpon the decease of the Sonnes of the said John Galeas, namely John and Phillip Maria, without heires masles, begotten of their bodies in lawfull matrimonie: that in this case, the said Valentina of Millayne, she and her Children should be Dukes of Millaine, with excluding the daughters of the said John and Phillip Maria. To this John Galeas,

Guy de la Tour Gouernour of Millaine

6. Againſt this Mathew, roſe vp Guy de la Tour, the Sonne of Napoleon, and poſſeſſed himſelfe of the Gouernment of Millaine. Mathew made his recourſe to the Emperour Henry the ſeauenth; whoſe part hee vndertooke to maintaine, Guy de la Tour being a Guelphe. Henry came into Italy, and cauſed himſelfe to bee crowned at Millaine, with the Crowne circled with Iron, in imitation of our Emperour Charlemaigne. Guy conſpired and practiſed againſt the life of the Emperour Henry: but his deſignes were diſcouered by Mathew, who as his deſerued recompence, was inueſted with the State of Millaine, being entituled, Vicar of the Empire, with the red Scarlet Cloake, Furred with Ermines, and the Vicars Bonnet of Scarlet, exalted Mortier-fathion, Ferred likewiſe on both ſides with Ermines, but bordered aboue and below with Cloth of Gold. This Inueſtiture was made by the ſame Emperour Henry of Luxemburg, hee creating Millaine a Vicariate, and ordenary Chamber of the Empire, in the Yeare, One Thouſand, Three Hundred and Twelue.

Mathew made Vicar of the Empire.

The Iſſue of Mathew.

This Mathew left Fiue Sonnes, to wit; Galeas, Firſt of the name, Marke, Sirnamed Baluaion, Luchin, John Arch-biſhop of Millaine; and the Fift Sonne was Stephen. Next to Mathew ſucceeded his Eldeſt.

Galeas Knight of the Starre

7. Galeas, Firſt of the name, nourriſhed in France, in the Court of King Charles le Bell, Fourth of the name, who made him Knight of the Order of the Starre. The Emperour Lewes of Bauaria, Fift of the name, hauing taken the Crowne of Iron at Millaine, Mark Galeas accuſed before the Emperour his Eldeſt Brother Galeas, becauſe hee had ſurcharged the Millaneſes with Taxations & Subſidies, without leaue & permiſſion of the Emperour his Soueraigne Lord. Being conuicted of this crime, Lewes ſent him Priſoner to the Caſtle of Modece, with his Children and his two Brethren John and Luchen, from whence within a while after they were deliuered. Galeas dyed of a burning Feauer, after the ſurprizall of Piſtoya, By Beatrix of Sardaignis his Wife. Hee left two Sonnes, Azzo, otherwiſe called Actius, and Marke; who hauing attempted againſt the life of his Brother, was ſtrangled with a Table-napkin, by his command.

8. Azzo ſucceeded in the Vicariate of Millaine, wherein he was inueſted by the Emperour Lewes of Bauaria; who (with the Inueſtiture) gaue him the Title of Prince of the Empire, in the Yeare, One Thouſand, Three Hundred, Twenty and One, paying the Summe of an Hundred Thouſand Pounds, for the ſaid Right of Inueſtiture: hee had to Wife Katherine of Sauoy, and by her hee had no Children; ſo that chancing to dye at the Age of Eight and Thirty Yeares, in the Moneth of Auguſt, One Thouſand, Three Hundred, and Twenty Eight.

9. Luchin and John the Arch-biſhop gouerned the Eſtate of Millaine, the one the Spirituall, and the other the Temporall. Luchin had married Iſabell of Peſce, in the Citie of Geneway, and being poyſoned by her, died in the yeare One thouſand three hundred fortie and ſixe, in the Month of Iune.

John the Archbiſhop or Gouernor of Millaine.

10 By his death was aduanced John the Archbiſhop, who gouerned Millaine alone, and without any Companion. He cauſed to returne from Flanders, his Nephewes Galeas and Barnabie, who withdrew themſelues thither for warrant of ſafety, being accuſed about the death of their Vncle Luchin, whoſe wife was entertained by Galeas, according as her ſelfe had made knowne. John the Archbiſhop dyed of a lingring Feauer, in September One thouſand three hundred fiftie and two, and by his laſt Will and Teſtament, he inſtituted (as his Heires) his three Nephewes, Mathew, Galeas, ſecond of the name, and Barnabie, Sonnes to his yongeſt Brother Stephen the Vicount; but with this charge, that the Seigneuries of Millayne and Geneway ſhould be Gouerned in common, and vnder one ſole Poteſtate, eſtabliſhed by them all three. And as for the other Cities and Townes, they ſhould be parted and deuided in three Lots, by the Senators of Geneway and Millayne, among whom the parties did conclude, that the Lots ſhould be drawne out of the Scrutinie, by Mathew, wherewith the Bretheren contented themſelues, and ſhould enioy their Lots in proper Heritage, which accordingly was executed. Mathew being dull, and of cowardly courage, dyed two yeares after the Archbiſhop his Vncle, being poyſonned (according to common opinion) in a Supper, whereto his two Brothers had inuited him.

Galeas & Barnabie deuided the Gouernement betweene them.

11 Galeas, ſecond of the name, and Barnabie, they deuided in twaine the Eſtate and Gouernement of Millaine, yea, and the Citie it ſelfe was parted betweene them, each of them building a Caſtell there for his dwelling. To Galeas fell the Lot of enioying Pauia and Geneuaye; and to Barnabie fell by Lot the coaſts of Bologna, Placentia, Laudz, and Baude in the Vallie of the Appenines, which had bin the Lot of Mathew their elder Brother. This Galeas the ſecond, and Barnabie his Brother, were Inueſted into the Eſtate of Millayne, by the Emperour Charles of Luxembourg fourth of the name, King of Bohemia; who gaue them the title of perpetuall Vicares of the holy Empire, paying the ſumme of threeſcore thouſand Florins. Galeas the ſecond, at his being in Flanders, fought in ſingle Combat with a Gentleman, who bare for his deuiſe a Taper lighted at both the ends, & in the middeſt hung two Buckets of Water. It was held by the ſaid Galeas, and his Succeſſors, Dukes of Millayne, vntill the times of the Emperour Charles the fift. This Galeas died in the yeare One thouſand three hundred threeſcore and eight, in the Moneth of May, leauing for his Succeſſour his Sonne.

John Galeas the firſt Duke of Millaine, and Vicar of the holy Empire.

12 John Galeas, third of the name, who eſpouſed Madam Iſabell of France, daughter to King John, and Siſter to King Charles the fift, called the wiſe: by whom he had three Children, to wit, John Maria, Phillip Maria, and Valentina of Millayne. By marriage of the ſaid Madam Iſabell of France, this John Galeas was made (by King John his Father in Law) Count of Vertus in Champaigne; and created by the Emperour Fredericke, third of the name, the firſt Duke of Millaine, and Vicar of the holy Empire, in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand three hundred foureſcore and ſeauen; paying to the ſaid Fredericke the ſumme of an hundred thouſand Florins. Being aduertiſed, that his Vncle Barnabie conſpired againſt him: he made himſelfe Maiſter of Millaine, and of his enemie; whom he cauſed to dye in priſon, and poiſoned his Sonnes, remaining ſole Lord of Millaigne, of Geneway, and of their Iuriſdictions.

The marriage of Monſieur Lewes of France with Valentina of Millaine.

He ioyned in marriage his daughter Valentina of Millayne, with Monſieur Lewes of France, the onely Brother to King Charles the ſixt: ſhe being ſent into France, in the yeare One thouſand three hundred foureſcore and eight. In fauour of this marriage, he gaue to the ſaid Valentina, the Counties of Aſt in Piedmont, and that of Vertus in Champaine, foure thouſand Florines of Gold, and foure thouſand ſixe hundred ſixtie and ſeauen Markes of Siluer in Plate, Iemmes and Iewels. Moreouer, it was promiſed and ſtipulated by the ſame contract of marriage, that vpon the deceaſe of the Sonnes of the ſaid John Galeas, namely John and Phillip Maria, without heires maſles, begotten of their bodies in lawfull matrimonie: that in this caſe, the ſaid Valentina of Millayne, ſhe and her Children ſhould be Dukes of Millaine, with excluding the daughters of the ſaid John and Phillip Maria. To this John Galeas, Count

Count of Vertus, and Duke of Millaine; and to his heires, King Charles, sixt of the name, gaue permission De porter de France (in the first quarter, which we call the right side) sans nombre, escartele de Milan. The Charters are dated the nine and twenteth day of Ianuarie, in the yeare One thousand three hundred fourescore and foureteene, as I finde recorded.

Concerning the Issue of Barnabie the Vicount.

The Lord of Argentre, writeth in his Historie of Bretaigne, that Barnabie the Vicount, imprisoned by his Nephew Galeas the third; left fiue masle children, Charles or Marke, Rodolphe, Lodowicke, Maffin and Carlo, and that the most part of his Children were poysoned, except Charles the eldest Son of Barnabie: who was made Lord of Parma, Cremona and Santa Donna; he married Beatrix, Sister to Iames and Bernard, Counts of Armagnac. That this Beatrix, being gone into France, to be succoured by her Brother Bernard against Iohn Galeas: she lay in there, and was deliuered of Bonne of Millaine, who was married to William, Lord of Montauban, and of Laubale in Bretaigne.

The issue of William of Montauban.

That of this marriage issued two Sonnes and a Daughter, to wit, Messire Iohn de Montauban, Admirall of France, called by Ferron, Iohn de Rohan; And Arthur, Archbishop of Lyons and of Bourdeaux, dying in October, Anno One thousand fiue hundred: these two Archbishopricks comming to Frances de Rohan, Sonne to the Lord de Gie, Marshall of France.

Mary of Montauban, wife to Iohn de Graville.

The Daughter was named Mary of Montauban, married to Messire Iohn de Graville, Father to Messire Lewes de Graville, Lord of Marcoussis, Admirall of France vnder Charles the eight and Lewes the twelfth: whereby it ensueth, that they of the House of Belfie, Lords of Marcoussis, Portent sur le tour de leurs Armes, celles de Graville, qui sont de sinoples à trois Fermaillets d'Or, party de Milan.

Ioan of Montauban (Sonne to William and this Bonna of Millaine) tooke to wife Anne de Kaersmais, and of this marriage issued their onely daughter, married to Lewes de Rohan, Lord of Guemene, yongest of the house of Rohan, who quartereth his Armes, which are De Gueulles à neuf Macles d'Or, and those of Millaine, according as the Princes of France, that are of the House of Orleans, in regard of his Wifes Grandmother. Of whom Argentre reporteth a Requeſt, presented to the Virgin Ioane of Orleans, to refeate her in the Dukedome of Millaine. A Requeſt brought forth of the Titles of Charters, belonging to the House of Guemene, which will serue for the clearing of this Genealogie, forgotten in the Historie of Italy.

La Pucelle Ieanne d'Orleans.

Supplication a la Pucelle Ieanne d'Orleans.

A Tres-haute, & Tres-deuote Pucelle Ieanne, enuoyee du Roy des Cieux pour la reparation, & l'extirpation des Anglois tyrannisans la France; Bonne Viscomte expose que son Ayeul Messire Barnabe de Viscomtes eut vn Frere (il y a faute mettant Frere pour Neueu) appelle Messire Galeas, lequel prit par trahison ledit Messire Barnabe, Lewis, & Raoul ses Fils, les fit mourir en prison, & pilla ses tresors, ou il y auoit Six Cents Mille Ducats (les Histoires d'Italie disent sept Chariots d'Argent massif en oeuure, & grand nombre de deniers monnoyez) Que dudit Barnabe demeurerent deux Enfants legitimes, scauoir est Messire Lancie, & Messire Maffin le puisne, decede sans Hoirs. Que dudit Charles issirent trois Enfants, scauoir Messire Ieanne, la Suppliante, & vne Fille qui mourut ieune, comme aussi ledit Messire Iean. Et partant dudit Messire Barnabe ladite Bonne estant seule Heritiere pour le tout, supplie la Pucelle de luy rendre son Heritage iniustement vsurpé par ledit Galeas.

A Petition to the Virgin Ioane of Orleans.

Most-Honored and most-Deuout Virgin Ioane, sent from the King of Heauen, for the repairing, and extirpating of the English, tyrannizing in France: Bonna, Viscontesse expresseth, that her Grandfather Barnabie of the Viconntes, had a Brother (here is a fault, setting downe Brother for Nephew) called Messire Galeas, who surprized (by treason) the said Messire Barnabie, Lewes and Raoul his Sonnes, causing them to dye in prison, and robbed his Treasures, where he had fixe hundred thousand Ducats (the Histories of Italie doe say, seuen Chariots of Siluer wrought in Plate, &c. and a great number of coyned monies.) That the said Barnabie left two legitimate Children, the one was Messire Charles the eldest, and Messire Maffin the yongest, deceasing without Heires. That of the said Charles issued three children, to wit; Messire Iohn; the Supplicantesse, and a Daughter that dyed yong, as also the said Messire John. And therefore of the said Messire Barnabie, Bonna being the sole Inheretrixe left off all: beseecheth the Virgin, to restore her heritage, vniustly vsurped by the said Galeas.

Isabel of Bauaria wife to King Charles the sixt.

He addeth moreouer, that this Bonna was nourished in the Court of Isabell of Bauaria, wife to Charles the sixt, to whom she appertained, in regard of her Aunt by the Fathers side, Madam Thadea the Vicountesse, Mother to the said Isabel. Who in this contemplation, marrying this Bonna to the Lord of Montauban, gaue him thirtie thousand Frances, to be leuyed on the Garners of Salt, and the Aydes of Chasteau Thierry.

Now this Iohn, called Galeas, third of the name, and first Duke of Millaine, dying in September, One thousand foure hundred and two; his eldest Sonne

John Maria the cruell Duke of Millaine.

13 John Maria, called the Cruell, succeeded him, and Reigned nine yeares. Hee tooke great delight in the nourishing of huge Mastiue Dogges, whom hee would cause to deuoure aliue as well such as hee hated, as them that were innocent. Wherefore, hee was slaine and massacred by the people, going to heare Masse in the Church of Saint Godard, the fifteenth day of May, in the yeare One thousand foure hundred and Eleauen. Iohn thus dying without Children, his Brother

Phillip Maria third Duke of Millaine.

14 Phillip Maria succeeded him, and had two Wiues. The first was Beatrix de Tenda; whom he commanded to be beheaded, being detected of Adulterie, committed with one of his Musitions. His second wife was daughter to Amades, Count of Sauoye, retreated to Ripaille, not hauing any issue by either of these Wiues: but dyed of a Fluxe in his Bellie, the twelfth day of August, One thousand foure hundred fortie and eight. Sixe yeares before, he had married his Bastard Blanch Maria to Frances Sforza; and in fauour of this Marriage, gaue Cremona, and the Territorie thereof, with the Castell of Petrenelle. He had this Bastard daughter by a Courtezane that he affected, Agnes de Mania; from which House came the Ciuile Lawyer Iason de Mania. By the death of this Phillip Maria, deceasing without Heires masle begotten in lawfull marriage: the Duchie of Millaine came to the House of Orleans, in regard of Valentina of Millaine, as was couenanted by the Marriage contract; yet notwithstanding there ensued some preiudice.

Blanch Maria married to Frances Sforza.

Frances Sforza the vsurper of Milain against the house of Orleans.

15 Frances Sforza, a simple Souldiour by fortune, Sonne to Sforza Attendula, a Shoomaker in a small Village called Cotignoles; possessed himselfe by vsurpation of the Estate of Millayne, the Forces whereof remained in his owne power. He maintained his vsurped authoritie against the House of Orleans, by the meanes of Lewes the eleauenth, to whom (being Daulphine, and absent from France) he gaue yearely a great pension. In acknowledgement whereof, Lewes being come to the Crowne; caused Galeas Maria, eldest Sonne of Frances Sforza, to marrie Bonna of Sauoye, yongest Sister to Charlote, the second Wife to Lewes the eleauenth. Frances dyed in the Moneth of March, One thousand foure hundred threescore and sixe.

The issue of Frances Sforza by his wife Blanch Maria.

By his Wife Blanch Maria, Bastard daughter to Phillip, he left sixe Sonnes and two daughters. The Sonnes were named Galeas, Iohn, Phillip, Ascanio, Cardinall, Lodowicke Sforza, and Octauius, all Sirnamed Maria. The two daughters were Hippolita Maria, wife of Alphonso, eldest Sonne to Ferdinando, Count de Medina del Campo, Bastard Sonne to Alphonso, King of Arragon, of Naples and of Sicilie, vsurped vpon the House of Aniou. The other was Elizabeth Maria, married to the Marquesse of Montferrat.

16 Galeas Maria, eldest Sonne to Frances Sforza, receiued tydings of his Fathers death in the Court of France, where he was educated by Lewes the eleauenth, his Father in Law; who gaue him a sufficient Companie, to enstaule him in the Duke-

Dukedome of Millaine. For which (euen as his Father before had done) hee refuſed the Inueſtiture of the Emperour Fredericke the third, who hoped (thereby) to draw a good Summe of money from him. The reaſon in this caſe yeelded by theſe two laſt Dukes, was, that they had conquered the Eſtate by force of their owne Armies; and not by any fauour or ſuccour, by them receiued from the Emperor Fredericke, to whom (by conſequent) they acknowledged not any duetie.

The wicked life of Galeas, and his death.

This Galeas Maria addicted himſelfe to all lubricitie and whoredomes, taking (by force and violence) the daughters and wiues of his Subiects, to appeaſe his inordinate luſt and incontinencie; whereby he won ſuch contempt and hatred, that vpon S. Stephens day in Chriſtmaſſe, Anno One thouſand foure hundred threeſcore and ſeauenteene; they murdred him in the Church of S. Stephen, by the meanes of Iohn Andrea Lampugnano, and three other Complices, euen in the middeſt of his kinred, friends, and before the peoples face.

The Iſſue of Galeas Maria.

He left by Bonna of Sauoye his Wife, two Sonnes and one daughter, named Blanch Maria, married to the Emperour Maximilian, and to whom ſhe was affianced, euen when her Father was ſlaine. On this marriage grew the ground and ſubiect of the Warres of France and of Caſtile, for the Dukedome of Millaine, vniuſtly vſurped, and worſe detained from the Crowne of France. The Sonnes were Iohn & Hermes, or Mercurie Maria.

Iohn Maria Duke in his minority, and thereby diuers inconueniences happening.

17 Iohn Maria, the firſt Duke of Millaine, ſucceeded in the ſaid Dukedome, being onely aged nine yeares; remaining in the Tutelage of his Mother, and of his Vnckles Lodowicke, Aſcanio and Octauian. The State affaires were ordered and managed, by one named Cico de Calabria, a man trained vp in the Houſe of Frances Sforza. But ſuch was his nature, as being vnable to endure ſo many Companions, and winning the fauour of Bonna of Sauoye: Lodowicke and Aſcanio (by this meanes) were baniſhed from the State of Millaine, the two other yonger Bretheren put to death, and the plots and deuiſes of all ſuch preuented, as could make any head againſt him.

The folly of great Ladies being emptied of modeſty.

With this Calabrian was admitted in gouerning the Eſtate, and diſpoſing of the Finances, a man of Ferrara, named Antonio Theſino: who had ſome priuate gouernement of his Miſtreſſe, caried before her, lodged neere to her Chamber, and carried her mounted behinde him thorow the Citie. This Lady gouerned her ſelfe with him moſt impudently, enriching her Minnion or Carpet-Squire with immenſe gifts; which this ill-aduiſed Ducheſſe beſtowed on him, both in the ſight and knowledge of her people.

The traine of enuy in villany.

The Calabrian likewiſe ſtood ſuſpected, to ſhare ſome part, in the fauours and greatnes of his Miſtreſſe, and he being couetous, deſiring to enioy her alone to himſelfe: found the meanes, to capitulate with Lodowicke Sforza, and Robert de S. Seuerino, who being promiſed mountaines and meruailes, he ſeekes to repeale them from baniſhment. No ſooner were they returned to Millaine, but within three daies after; they tooke the Calabrian, put him into a Tunne, and hauing dragde him moſt infamouſly through all the Cities Streets; they lockt him vp priſoner in the Caſtell of Pauia, where (within ſhort while after) they ſmote off his head. Theſino eſcaped ſecretly, being made wiſe by his fellowes example.

The Calabrian beheaded at Pauia.

Now concerning the Ducheſſe, about fiue or ſixe Moneths after their returne, Lodowicke and S. Seuerino tooke her two Sonnes from her, whom they ſent to Pauia, vnder good protection and ſufficient guard: cauſing her to renounce the Tutelage of her Children, and giue her voyce to Lodowicke, who was elected Guardian of his Nephewes, the yongeſt whereof dyed very ſoone after. Moreouer, they cauſed her to yeelde an account of the Dukedomes Treaſure, which was then eſteemed the very greateſt in Chriſtendome: commanding three Keyes to be made, for Lodowicke, S. Seuerino and the Ducheſſe; to wom (for honors ſake) they gaue one, but themſelues had the locking of it ſafe vp.

The Ducall Treaſure called in queſtion.

And as it is a matter impoſſible, that two great Lords (aduanced to one and the ſame dignitie) ſhould any long time agree and endure together: euen ſo Lodowicke, aſpiring to the Dukedome, ſupplanted S. Seuerino, who was conſtrained to take part with the Venetians. Thus Lodowicke, ſeeing himſelfe Gouernour alone, and furniſhed niſhed with Treaſure: got poſſeſſion of the Rocke or Cittadell of Millaine, which he fortefied with greater ſtrength then euer it had bin before: and ſtamped Money, bearing his owne Image on the one ſide, and that of Duke Iohn his Nephew on the other.

Blanch Maria married to the Emperor Maximillian.

He had married this Duke Iohn with Iſabel of Naples, daughter to Alphonſo, the vſurper of Naples and Sicilie, by whom he had a Sonne named Frances Sforza, and two daughters. Blanch Maria his Siſter, was married to the Emperour Maximilian, to whom ſhe brought in marriage, the ſumme of foure hundred thouſand Ducats in ready Coyne, and threeſcore thouſand for Iemmes and Iewels: the marriage being celebrated at Iſpourg, in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred, foureſcore and foureteene, not any childe iſſuing of this marriage. Alphonſo King of Naples threatned Lodowick to make warre vpon him, if he would not leaue the Dukedome of Millaine to his Sonne in Law.

Lodowicke his pollicie with King Charles the eight.

18 Lodowicke, to make his part preuaileable againſt the Neapolitane, compaſſed the meanes, to reconcile himſelfe againe with Robert of S. Seuerino: whoſe Sons he had ſent into France with the Count of Gaiaſſe, to King Charles the eight, making apparant remonſtrance to him; what right they had to the Kingdomes of Naples and Sicilie, the Conqueſt of them being very eaſie, binding himſelfe to prepare the way for him, and to aſſiſt in the voyage with men and money.

The death of Duke Iohn at Pania.

Hauing thus mannaged, and made ſure the ſupport of France; he poyſoned Duke Iohn his Nephew, with a gentle lingering poiſon, appointed to a certaine time. King Charles the eight, being gone into Italie, to feede vpon the viands of vanitie: by the way, viſited the poore ſickly Duke, lying on his death-bed. From Pauia he went to Placentia, where he receiued the newes in Letters, concerning the death of the Duke his kinſman deceaſing at the Age of ſixe and twentie yeares, leauing his Son fiue yeares old. Lodowicke taking leaue of King Charles, ranne in all poſſible haſte to Millaine, and there poſſeſſed himſelfe of the Dukedome.

Lodowicke the Moore, Duke of Millaine.

This Lodowicke Sirnamed the Moore, in regard of his blackiſh ſwarthie complexion, and who tooke the blacke Mulberrie Tree for his deuiſe, being in poſſeſſion of the Soueraigntie; obtained full confirmation therein by the Emperour Maximillian, firſt of the name, not onely for himſelfe, but his heires likewiſe, paying the ſumme of foure hundred thouſand Duckats, which he deriued from this Inueſtiture. He had taken to wife the daughter to the Duke of Ferrara, and by her had two Sons, Maximillian and Frances; who was the laſt Duke of Millaine, as we ſhall perceiue by the thred and courſe of this Hiſtorie.

Millaine taken by the French.

19 Lewes the twelfth, ſeeing himſelfe peaceably ſeated in his Kingdome; reſolued to get againe his Dukedome of Millaine, which appertained to him, in regard of his Grandmother Valentina, purpoſing to expell Lodowicke thence. Hereupon, and to effect what he intended, he cauſed a potent Armie to paſſe the Mountaines, conducted by the Lord D'Aubigny, Robert Stuart, an honorable Scot, Marſhall of France, called the good Father of Chiualrie, and Iohn Iacques de Triuulce, a Millaynois (afterward Marſhall of France) who at their firſt approach, tooke Noma and Rocque, laid Alexandria in the duſt; the ſpoyle whereof ſerued for recompence to the Souldiours. Pauia fearing to runne the ſame riot; yeelded it ſelfe freely to the Freneh: ſo that within the compaſſe of fifteene dayes, they conquered the Dukedome of Millaine. All this while was Lodowicke within the Citie, who growing diſtruſtfull of the people; got ſecretly thence with his two Sonnes, eſcaping by the Lake of Coma, and fled toward Maximillian, King of the Romaines, to deriue ſome ſuccour from him. By his departure, Millaine was taken by the French, the fourth day of September, in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred foureſcore and nineteene; the Caſtell ſtill holding out for Lodowicke the Moore.

King Lewes his entrance into Millaine.

Lewes the twelfth receiued tydings at Lyons, concerning the ſurprizal of Millaine; whether he went with all diligence, and made his entrance into it. The Captaine of the Rocquet or Cittadell, who could well haue held it two yeares ſpace at the leaſt, ſo ſtrongly it was furniſhed with all things neceſſary; did yet neuertheles yeeld it vnto the Kings hands, to haue the moitie of the goods & riches that were in it.

Lodowicke

Lodowicke, assisted by the forces of Maximillian, preuailed on so farre, that he got entrance into Millaine, by intelligence and reuolt of the Inhabitants; this was done the third day of Ianuarie, in the said yeare foure hundred foureſcore and nineteene, the French yet keeping still the Castell, which Lodowicke could not get by friendship nor force.

The yeare of Iubilie at Rome.

The Iubilie for the Seculer yeare One thousand fiue hundred, being open at Rome (the Eeuen of Christmasse, in the said yeare foure hundred and nineteene, on which day the Romaines begin their yeare) by Pope Alexander the sixt: great concourse of the people (of all Nations) flocked into Italie, namely of the French, whose deuotion was much troubled by the bad dealing of Lodowicke, who did set their liues at open sale, giuing a Ducate for euery head brought him: so that in all the Innes and Hosteries throughout Italie, vpon the high roade wayes conducting to Rome, French Pilgrimes throates were cut most cruelly. Which was no sooner discouered, but the French Armie, remaining in the parts about Millaine, made warre (without any pittie) on them of Millaine, and so fast as any of them could be taken; blood for blood serued to expiate and appease the ghosts of the French. And for example to the Hosteries and Innes, all crimson-tincturde with their blood: diuers were burned with their Maisters, Wiues, Maide-seruants and Men-seruants, without sparing so much as their Cats, which serued as no meane terror & affright to others.

The bloody cruelty of Lodowicke to the French, and their reuenge.

The first voyage of King Charles beyond the Alpes.

Now, that which gaue subiect to the Millaynoises (by their owne confession) to reuolt from Lewes the twelfth, was this extreame bad behauiour in the French. At the first voyage which King Charles the eight made beyond the Mountaines; the Italians (so speaketh our French Salust Phillip de Commines) adored the French, reputing them to be Saints, and saying, that they had not their like for goodnesse, Faith, mildenesse and discretion. But this good opinion of them lasted not long, for our French misgouerned Libertines, by their riots and robberies, declared the quite contrary: and gaue apparant subiect of being accused, for taking mens wiues perforce from them, and goods from the people, whersoeuer they could finde them by night or day.

The best proceedings are ouerthrowne by bad carriage

Concerning the women, it may be that they lied not, and for the rest, doubtlesse somwhat was done; for the French could not finde any thing too hot, or too heauie; a disease (neuerlesse) as common to the Italians, Germaines, Spaniards, and other Nations, as to the French. But this was it that confounded the Kings affaires, which otherwise had carried themselues formally: but being conducted without any order, and the French Souldiours transported with pilferies; this was the reason, of alienating the Italians from their former affection to the French, to the great griefe and discontentment of honest mindes, for the extraordinarie honour and renowne, which the French nation might haue won to themselues in this voyage.

The naturall disposition of the Italians.

And such bad behauiours, are meanes vtterly contrary for attaining to any great Conquest, in what part soeuer it is (but especially in Italie) and to keepe it long: because the Italians are the most iealous and couetous Nation, beyond all other in the world. Wherefore, whosoeuer would make himselfe a Potentate in Italie; he must hold it for an infallible Maxime, to be very modest and retent in all his actions; but especially towards women, and to lay no oppression vpon the people.

Diffidence is the mother of assurance.

The Italians are inconstant, and desire nothing more then change; they contemne the facilitie of the French, and hate the rigour of the Dutch, a Nation diuers wayes proud and tyrannicall, yet can better conserue their Conquests, then we: who of all our voyages to Piedmont, Millaine, Naples, and Sicilie, haue not reserued one inch of ground. Diffidence is the Mother of Assurance, and to make our owne best beginning, it behoueth vs first to conquer our selues.

Maxima cunctarum victoria, victa voluptas.

The Epitaph on the Tombe of great Scipio.

A graue Verse, well seruing for an Epitaph on the Tombe of Great Scipio the African: who abstained from all force and violence towards men and their goods. Moreouer, to containe the people subiected to dutie, by a moderated gouernment betweene mildenesse and power: is to stand vpon good guard night and day, and not to trust ought elsse, but in good behauiour towards the Italians, with whom to communicate, and be the least familiar, is the best and safest.

Now

King Lewes raiseth another Armie against Lodowicke.

Now the men of Millaine, being thus reduced vnder the obedience of Lord Lodowicke; the King was constrained once more, to bring an Armie into the Field, which he committed to the conduct of Mesſire Lewes de la Trimouille, Viscount of Thouars: who hauing made an agreement betweene the Lords of Aubign) & of Trimoille, all three ioyned together, and gaue such order and direction to the Armie, that Lodowicke standing in feare thereof, was enforced againe to forsake Millaine, with an hundred Horse onely, and so with-drew himselfe to Nouara, where was his Armie and Artillerie. As speedily was he followed by the French Armie, whereto a Bourgongnon Captain, named Des Tottieres, yeelded himselfe, being come forth of the said Towne of Nouara, wherein (at that time) for Lodowicke were foure thousand Swizzers, eight thousand Landſ-kenets, about sixe or seauen thousand Lombardes, and eight hundred Bourgongnons, who with the said Captaine Des Tottieres, ioyned themselues to the French Armie on the one side, and the foure thousand Swizzers, won by the Bailiffe of Dijon, on the other side.

The Armie of Lodewicke fleeth him in the Field

Lodowicke came forth into the Field, and presented Battaile to the French, which they accepted very willingly, & Lodowicks Armie comming to handy-blowes; they submitted to the French, without striking one stroake: because the Swizzers and Landſ-kenets being not paid their Wages, they would not by any meanes fight. Such misfortunes as this, doe often happen to Princes, that make vse of strangers seruice, who when neede requireth; will be sure to hold their hands, making three or foure demands for money, before the Battaile, when they well knew it is not to be had. Let a Prince therefore prouide his Armie of his owne Subiects, of whom he shall be better and more profitably serued: for strangers soules are meerely mercenary, and they affect not Princes, but in regard of the benefit they can deriue from them; They are for their seruice that will giue them most, and their loue is poized in the Ballance with their wages, but no otherwise. Lodowicke being thus betraied, disguised himselfe in the habit of a Gray-Frier, as hoping so to saue himselfe. But the Lord of Trimoutlle, causing a passage to be made betweene two Pikes crossed, for all them of the enemies Armie, departing with their liues and goods saued, one after another: Lodowicke being knowne, was taken, and sent prisoner to Chasteau de Pierre-Enciſe at Lyons, from whence he was (not long after) transported to the great Tower of Bourges, and there he finished his dayes.

A very worthy adu se giuen to Princes.

Lodowick taken & sent prisoner into France

The Towne of Nouara by this meanes yeelded it selfe to the King, who had for his part of the victory (won on the thursday before Palme-Sunday, in the same yeare foure score and nineteene) Lodowicke, and all his Artillery, with the Town of Nouara, very rich and mighty in goods.

Ascanio Sforza brother to Lodowicke.

The Cardinall Ascanio Sforza, left Gouernour at Millaine by his Brother, hauing heard the tydings of his surprizall: departed thence, accompanied with sixe hundred Horse, belonging to the richest Inhabitants, and some pieces of Artillerie, taking his way towards Bologna. On the way he was met by a Venetian Captaine, that came with his troupe to ioyne with the Armie Royall. This Captaine was named Simons Bransono, who crying out aloud France and Saint Marke; set vpon the Cardinals company, conducted by Count John, Brother to the Marquesse of Mantua, to whom he gaue charge, to pursue him fighting to Chasteau de Rivolles, where the Cardinall was as soone inuested by the Venetian, who had prisoner in his power Count John of Mantua, of whom he had a great ransome. With him was taken the Abbot of Sanzeles, foure of the Viscounts, Captaine Bardo, and an hundred thousand Ducates in ready money, with all the Iewels of the Cardinall Ascanio, who likewise was contented to yeelde, onely his life saued. He was deliuered into the hands of Stephen de Vers, Seneschall of Beaucaire, the Lord of Montoison, and the Iudge Mage of Prouence: who brought him safely to Chasteau de Pierre-Enciſe at Lyons, euen where before his Brother was imprisoned.

The Inhabitants of Millaine much daunted at the surprizall of their Duke, his Brother also, & the discomfiture of their Armie, by that of the Kings which had inuested them; sent their Deputies to the Cardinall George d'Amboiſe, who by the King was stablished Lieutenant generall ouer the Millainers; entreating him to take compassion of them, to saue their Citie from pillage, and to make his entrance into it, crauing moſt humbly pardon of him, for their offence committed, by admitting Lord Lodowicke into their Citie. The Cardinall made it manifeſt to them, by Maiſter Michael de Ris, Doctor of the Lawes, and Councellour in the Parliament of Bourgongne, that the enormitie of their rebellion was puniſhable with death: becauſe (without any ſubiect) they had withdrawne themſelues from obedience to their King and Soueraigne Lord, who had ſo mildely and mercifully dealt with them. And that the ſum of a Million of Pounds, which they payed yearely to Lodowicke in taxes and tallages, he had moderated it to the ſum of ſix hundred and two and twentie thouſand pounds: here is to be noated, that the Dukedome of Millaine valued yearely fifteene hundred thouſand Dukates) which gentle and milde vſage in the French; they had neuertheleſſe vtterly forgot.

The Dukdom of Millaines yearly valuation.

All which notwithſtanding, hee declared to them in the Kings name, that hee would ſpare the liues of the Inhabitants, and exempt their Citie from pillage, and all the people from death, which they had iuſtly deſerued, vpon condition: that they would yeelde and deliuer to him, the principall Authours of the rebellion, to be iuſtly puniſhed, and themſelues (for euer after) continue faithfull to the King, and to his Succeſſours the Kings of France, their Dukes and Soueraigne Lords. Moreouer, to defraye the charges of this laſt warre, the Citie of Millaine ſhould (for an honorable amends) pay three hundred thouſand Ducates; to wit, fiftie thouſand in the preſent Moneth of Aprill, One thouſand fiue hundred and fiftie thouſand the firſt day of May next following; and the other two hundred thouſand at the end of the ſame yeare, except the King would be pleaſed in clemencie, to prolong them a further time for the laſt paiment.

The Cardinall d'Amboiſe his entrance into Millaine.

Which being agreed vnto, the Cardinall d'Amboiſe entred into Millaine vpon Good-Friday, it being the ſeauenteenth day of Aprill: accompanied with Iohn Iacques de Triuulce (Marſhall of France in the time of King Frances) the Biſhop of Lucon, Chancellour of Millaine, the Lord of Neuf-Chaſtel, with other Lords and Captaines of the Armie. Hee went to lodge at the Hoſtell called La Cour-Vieille, the Pallace belonging to the firſt Viſcounts of Millaine, whether the three Eſtates thereof went in ſolemne proceſſion, bearing the Crucifixe and Banner of the Virgin Mary; after which followed all the Children of the Citie, Sonnes and Daughters, cloathed all in white, and in this manner the Cardinall welcommed them in the Court of his Pallace, ſitting aloft vpon a Theater, and round about him his French Lords and Captaines. For the Inhabitants, the man moſt famous among their Aduocates, named Maiſter Michael Touſe, made the Oration, deſiring grace and mercie on their behalfe. The Councellour de Ris returned a kinde and mercifull anſwere, more then the inconſtant people deſerued: which being concluded, all the yong Children (innocent in the guilt of their Fathers) paſſed two and two together before the French Lords, crying with loud voices, France, France, Mercie, Mercie.

The Cardinals mercie to the Citizens.

The Swizzers, being raiſed and prouoked thereto by Pope Iulius, had brought into Millaine Maximilian Sforza, Sonne to Lodowicke Sforza, who died in France, and which Maximillian (as we haue formerly ſaid) had bin ſaued in Germanie, by his Vnckle the Cardinall Aſcanio.

Lewes the twelfth retained as yet in his power, the Rocke or Cittadell of Millaine, the Caſtell of Cremona, and ſome other places. The Swizzers, who had enſtaulled in the Eſtate of Millaine the young Maximillian, and hee being taken into their protection; after they had vanquiſhed Lewes de la Trimouille, Lieutenant Generall for the King at Nouara, and conſtrained him to forſake Italie; they purſued the ſaid Lord de la Trimouille to Dijon in Bourgongne, to the number of fifteene thouſand, ſupported by the forces of Pope Iulius, and of the elected Emperour Maximillian (Sonne in Lawe to Charles, the laſt Duke of Bourgongne) and them of La Franche Comte, as alſo ſome Germaines, conducted by Huldrich, the Duke of wittemberg. There they beſiedged him in this weake and ill-fortefied Citie, before which (neuerleſſe) they remained ſixe weekes, at the end whereof, being required to ſhew the occaſions, why they thus bandied themſelues againſt the French, the Lord of Trimouille receiued this for anſwere.

Yong Maximillian Sforza eſtated in the dignity of Millaine.

anſwere. That ſince the time of King Lewes the eleuenth (with whom they had contracted and ſworne alliance) there remained due debt vnto them, foure hundred thouſand Crownes of their Penſion: whereof being ſatisfied, they would be louing friends to the Crown of France, and maintaine their cauſe to and againſt all Princes liuing or dying. To content them, they had aſſurance for their debt, and pay of ſome preſent money downe, but what ſum I know not.

The anſwere returned by the Swizzers.

Theſe men thus pacified, Lewes the twelfth diſpoſed himſelfe, to muſter his troups, and to haue them paſſe ouer the Alpes. He publiſhed for his Lieutenant generall in Italie, his Couſine Charles de Monpenſier, Duke of Bourbon, leuying in Germany betweene fifteene and ſixteene thouſand Landſ-kenets, determining to haue on foote (at Spring time following) the moſt potent Armie, that, in the memory of men, had euer bin ſeene in Italie. But ſudden death brake off his deſignes, and cut in twaine the thred of his life, the firſt day of Ianuary, about the mid-time of night, in the yeare of our Saluation, One thouſand fiue hundred and foureteene.

The great preparation made by King Lewes the twelth, but fore-ſtalled by his death.

A Prince, whoſe intire loue towards his Subiects, honored him with the memory of this Title, Father of the People, & who all his life time, had eaſed them of taxes and Subſidies. Being endued with magnanimous courage, he purpoſed to purſue the Conqueſts of Charles the eight in Italie; and (aboue all) to make firme the Dukedome of Millaine to the Crowne of France, which appertained thereto by ſucceſſiue and lawfull right.

After this Prince ſucceeded Frances of Engouleſme, his Son in law, husband to Madam Claudia of France; but not in regard of his wife; becauſe daughters are excluded from the Crown of France, according to the fundamentall Law of the Kingdome.

Women excluded from ſucceeding in the the Crown of France.

Succeſſor Imperij Francorum, Maſculus eſto.

But by his chiefe right and prerogatiue, & no otherwiſe, as being the prime Prince of the blood, moſt neereſt, & beſt able to ſucceede the deceaſed King, departing this life without any heire maſle.

At the beginning of his Reigne, Prince Charles of Auſtria, ſent as Ambaſſador to his Maieſtie, the Count of Naſſau; who (in the name of his Maiſter) performed faith and homage, for the Counties of Flanders, Artois, Charolois, and other Lands held and depending on the Crowne of France.

Which being thus done, the King iournied to Lyons, from whence he paſſed into Italie, to recouer his Dukedome of Millaine. The Swizzers being introduced, & won by the perſwaſions and boundleſſe promiſes of the Cardinall of Syon, would needs breake their faith engaged to the King; and were ouerthrowne at Marignano, on thurſday, being the foureteenth day of September, in the yeare One thouſand fiue hundred and fifteene, there lying in the field of Battaile, fifteene thouſand and fiue hundred of them ſlaine. The vanquiſhing of theſe bold warriors, procured the reddition of Millaine, of Pauia, and of Cremona. In the end, the Caſtell of Millaine was conſtrained to yeeld it ſelfe to the French, by the arteficiall cunning of Pedro de Nauarre, a great Ingener. He had this Sir-name, not as being a natiue of Nauarre, but by being in ſeruice of King Ferdinand of Arragon, he was taken in the Battaile at Rauenna, and led thence into France, where he was detained as a priſoner, vntill the time of King Frances the firſt, who hauing ſet him at full libertie; made good proofe of his valiancie in Italie and elſewhere, and ſerued very faithfully to the Crowne of France.

A great ouerthrow of the Swizzers at Marignano.

By this ſurprizing the Caſtell of Millaine, and the Duke Maximillian Sforza, led priſoner into France, where he finiſhed his life; King Francis the firſt remained ſome ſpace of time, a peaceable poſſeſſour of the Eſtate of Millaine. Where he left Gouernor and Lieutenant generall, Charles, Duke of Bourbon, Conſtable of France, who but badly entreated the Mother to King Frances the firſt, Madam Louiſa of Sauoye; looſing both honor and life in a ſtrange Countrey, to the coſt of France.

Charles Duke of Bourbon, Lieutenant generall and gouernour of Millaine.

We haue already obſerued the Genealogie of Monſieur Louis of France, Duke of Orleans, on the legitimate ſide: Let vs now take a view of that which deſcended (and endureth yet to this day) of his naturall Sonne Iohn, Count of Dunois.

The Chronicle of Iuuenal des Vrſins doth enſtruct vs, that after the murder of Monſieur

Monſieur Lewes of France, Duke of Orleans; his Children were taken from the hands and gouernement of their Mother, the Ducheſſe Valentina, of Millaine: Le Quatrieſme Iour de December audict An. 1408. mourut de chagrenez, & de Dueil, la Ducheſſe d'Orleans, Fille du Duc de Milan, & de la Fille du Roy Iean. Et eſtoit grande pitie, d'ouir auant ſa Mort, ſes regrets, & complaincts. Et pitoyement regrettoit ſes Enfants, & vn Baſtard nomme Iean, lequel elle veoit volontiers, en diſant qu'il luy auoit Eſté Enible, & Qu'il N'y Auoit a peine des Enfants, qui fuſt ſi bien Taille de Venger la mort de ſon Pere, Qu'il eſtoit. The fourth day of December, in the ſaid yeare 1408. ſhee died with anger and griefe, the Ducheſſe of Orleans, daughter to the Duke of Millaine, and ſi the daughter of King Iohn. And it was great pittie, to heare before her Death, her mournings and complaints. And pittifully ſhe mourned for her Children, and a Baſtard, named Iohn, whom ſhe willingly beheld, in ſaying, that he was enabled, and that he had hardly any of his Sonnes, that was ſo well ſhaped and formed, for the reuenge of his Fathers death, as he was.

Iohn the Baſtard of Dunois his admirable ſeruices.

This Propheticall kinde of ſpeech (as it were) was verified vnder King Charles, ſeauenth of the name, called the Victorious, and well ſerued: when this Iohn the Baſtard of Dunois, performed wonders againſt the Bourgongnons and Engliſhmen, to whom (all his life time) he was a capitall enemie, and a Butcher of them; reuenging the expence of his Fathers Blood, with ſluicing forth that of twelue thouſand Engliſh and Bourgongnons, in diuers encounters, and vnder his conduct, making a miſerable maſſacre of them.

And for the great ſeruices which hee had done to France, and which may remaine as a module, example and patterne, for all them concerned in his qualitie of Birth, to apply themſelues in well doing, and not to teare the bowels of their Mother France, by factions, reuolts and partialities: Hee was by full conſent of the generall Eſtates, held vnder Charles the ſeauenth, made The Legitimate Sonne of Orleans. And to his Armes, the Fiſet de Gueulles à Ganche (which is ſaid in deuiſe to deſigne Baſtardie) altered and changed into that d'Argent, en Bande de la main Ganche à la Droitte. And that his Heires and Deſcendants of them ſhould hold (for euer after) the ranck and title of French Princes, and goe immediately after the Princes of the Blood Royall, and before all the Princes iſſued and deſcended of the Soueraigne Houſe habituate in France.

Iohn of Dunois made the legitim ate Son of Orleans.

The Marriage of the Counte of Dunois to Iane Louuet.

This Iohn Count of Dunois and of Longue-Ville, eſpouſed Iane Louuet, the onely daughter to Meſſire Iohn Louuet, Preſident of Prouence, wonderfully wealthie: in reward he had gouerned the Reuennues of France, vnder the miſerable Reigne of Charles the ſixt, and had receiued his part of the Treaſures and Cheuances, gathered in many Monaſteries of the Kingdome, for Queene Iſabel of Bauaria, who made her Mittines of the Kings Treaſure, to fill the Boudgets of her owne Countrey, although France paied dearely for it. The faction of Phillip, Duke of Bourgongne, ſecond of the name, alwayes dammageable to France, diſmounted the ſaid Preſident of Prouence. And when the Preſident perceiued, that the Queene of Sicilie, Mother to the Queene of France, was not contented, that the Preſident ſhould gouerne the King and his Hoſtell: he departed from France, and tooke with him the Baſtard of Orleans, who had married his Daughter, and went ſo farre as to Auignion: So ſpeaketh the Chronicle of Iuuenall des Vrſins, vnder the yeare One thouſand foure hundred twentie foure. By contract of this marriage, the Preſident Louuet inſtituted his Heire, the ſaid Iohn the Baſtard of Orleans, whether he had children by the ſaid Iane his daughter, or whether ſhe died without iſſue, as it hapned ſhe did.

The ſecond marriage of the Baſtard of Orleans.

So that Iohn the Baſtard of Orleans eſpouſed in ſecond marriage, Mary de Harcour, daughter to William de Harcour, Count of Tancar-Ville, and to Ioane, the Vicounteſſe of Meaux.

For the great ſeruices that this Iohn had performed to his Bretheren, Charles, Duke of Orleans, remaining fiue and twentie yeares priſoner in England (and to Iohn, Count of Engoulesme, who continued there alſo priſoner eight and twentie yeares) the ſaid Charles, being returned into France, gaue the Countie of Dunois to the Baſtard his Brother, ſo that he was the firſt Count thereof. The Letters of this Donation are dated in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred thirtie nine, confirmed by other Letters from the ſame Duke of Orleans, in Anno One thouſand foure hundred fortie and one. King Charles the ſeauenth acknowledging the great and faithfull ſeruices, which this Iohn the Baſtard of Orleans had done for him: ouer and beſide his legitimation, hee gaue him faire Seigneuries, as thoſe of Parthenay, Vmans, Mermans, the Principalitie of Chaſtelaillon, and many other, throughout all the Prouinces of France: And this donation is dated in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred fiftie and eight.

The iſſue of Iohn and Mary, & of them that deſcended of them.

Of this Iohn, Count of Dunois, and Mary de Harcour, Counteſſe of Tancar-Ville: was borne a Sonne and a Daughter; Frances and Katharine, maried to the Count of Ruſſy.

Frances of Orleans, Count of Dunois and of Longue-Ville, firſt of the name, had to wife Agnes de Sauoye, ſiſter to Queene Charlote of Sauoye, ſecond wife to King Lewes the eleauenth, daughters to Lewes, Duke of Sauoye, and Anne of Cyprus. And of this marriage was borne three Sonnes, as namely Frances, Lewes, and Iohn, who was a Cardinall, Biſhop of Orleans, and Archbiſhop of Toloſa.

The Countie of Longue-Ville made a Dukedome & Peeredome.

Frances of Orleans, ſecond of the name, followed the part of King Lewes the twelfth, not being (as yet) Duke of Orleans, and ranne his fortune at the Battaile of Saint Aubin in Britaigne. In fauour of him, King Lewes the twelfth, being come to the Crowne; aduanced the Countie of Longue-Ville to be a Dukedome and Peeredome of France. The ſaid Duke Frances eſpouſed Frances of Alanſon, daughter to Rene, Duke of Alanſon, and to Margaret of Lorraine. And of this marriage iſſued

Renee, their onely daughter, who died an Infant, immediately after Duke Frances her Father: by the death of whom, the Dukedome of Longue-Ville, and the Earledome of Dunois, came to

The Dukdome of Longue-Ville commeth to Lewes of Orleans.

Lewes of Orleans, firſt of the name, who married Iane of Hochberg, Daughter to Phillip, Marqueſſe of Hochberg, and of Rothelin, Count of Neuf-Chaſtell (and of other great Seigneuries in Briſgaun, and in Bourgongne, where this Marqueſſe made his ordenarie abiding, and was high Marſhall) and of Mary of Sauoye. Theſe Marqueſſes of Hochberg, and thoſe of Baden, are iſſued of the ſame ſtocke, and the very ſame name and Armes. Rodolphe, Marqueſſe of Hochberg and of Rothelin, Count of Neuf-Chaſtell by the Lake, and Lord of Suſenbourg, had to wife Mary of Vienna: and of this marriage was borne Phillip, the laſt Marqueſſe of Hochberg and of Rothelin, who by Mary of Sauoye his wife, had but one onely daughter; Ioane of Hochberg, wife to the ſaid Lewes of Orleans. By death of this Phillip, the laſt heire Maſle of the Family of Hochberg, and of Rothelin: the Marqueſſe of Baden, named Chriſtopher, his Couſine farre enough off, in the yeare One thouſand fiue hundred and three, poſſeſſed himſelfe in the Marquiſates of Hochberg and Rothelin, as alſo the Seigneuries of Suſenbourg, and Badenuilliers. So that to the onely daughter of Phillip, there remained but the Countie of Neuf-Chaſtel, and the Seigneuries being in France.

By this marriage of Lewes of Orleans, and Iane of Hochberg, were borne three Sonnes and one daughter, to wit; Claudius, Lewes, Frances, And Phillip of Sauoye Count of Geneua.

Charlote, wife to Phillip of Sauoye, Count of Geneua, and of the Geneuayes: And of this Marriage is deſcended the Houſe of Nemoux, becauſe therein were borne

Iames of Sauoye, Duke of Nemoux, and Iane of Sauoye, ſecond wife to Nicholas de Lorraine Count of Vaudemont, Father to Queene Louiſa, wife to the King of France and Poland, Henry, third of the name, of famous memory.

Claudius was Duke of Longue-Ville, who deceaſed without any Heires.

Claudius of Lorraine Duke of Guiſe.

Lewes, ſecond of the name, tooke to wife Mary of Lorraine, daughter to Claudius of Lorraine, Duke of Guiſe, and in this marriage was borne their onely Sonne

Frances, third of the name, Duke of Longue-Ville, who dyed without linage.

Frances, Marqueſſe of Rothelin, third of the name, Sonne to Lewes, firſt of the name, and Iane Lady Marqueſſe of Hochberg; had to wife Iaquelina de Rohan, daughter to the Lord of Gnye, and of this Marriage was deſcended.

Leonardo; And

Frances of Orleans, married to Lewes of Bourbon, Prince of Conde; and in this marriage was borne Charles, Count of Soissons: Lewes, and Beniamin.

Duke of Longue Ville, and Count of Dunois.

Leonardo of Orleans, Duke of Longue-Ville, and Count of Dunois, by the Succession of Frances, third of the name, his Cousine Germaine, dying without any issue: tooke to wife Mary of Bourbon, daughter vnto Frances of Bourbon, Duke d'Estoute-Ville, and Count of Saint Paul, and of Adriana d'Estoute-Ville. Of this marriage were issued two Sonnes, foure daughters, Henry, Frances, Margaret, Katharine, Antoinetta, and Leonora.

Katherine de Gonzagua of Cleues

Henry, first of the name, espoused Katharine de Gonzagua of Cleues, daughter to Lodowicke de Gonzagua, Duke of Neuers, and of Retheil, and of this marriage is issued.

Henry, second of the name, of Orleans, Duke of Longue-Ville, d'Estoute-Ville, Count of Neuf-Chastell: who tooke to wife Louisa de Bourbon, daughter to Charles de Bourbon, Count of Soissons, and to Anne Countesse of Montasier.

Caumont and Fronsac a Dukedome & Peeredome newly made.

Frances of Orleans, Count of Saint Paul, Husband to the Inheritrixe of Caumont, and of Fronsac: newly erected into a Dukedome and Peeredome of France, for the said Frances of Orleans, and his Sonne.

In fauour of this Illustrious House of Longue-Ville, of the Armes and Sir-name of Orleans: our Monarches (from time to time) haue made their Declarations for their Rancke and Sedence, immediately after the Princes of the Bloud; the last whereof is by King Charles the ninth, the tenure whereof thus followeth.

The Declaration of King Charles the Ninth, for the Precedencie and Rancke, which ought to be held by the Princes of the House of Longue-Ville.

CHarles, by the Grace of God, King of France: To all present, and to come, Greeting. Our intention hath alwayes bin, in imitation and example of the deceassed Kings our Predecessours, to maintaine, cause to be kept and conserued to the Princes of our Bloud, and other Lords being in this our Kingdome; the Place, Rancke and Degree which to them belongeth. And although it is a matter to euery one sufficiently apparant, and knowne, that our most deare and best beloued Cousine the Duke of Longue Ville, is extracted and issued from the Illustrious Bloud of the House of Orleans, for such a one knowne and auouched, bearing the House and Sir-name of Orleans, and that by occasion of this rancke and degree, which hath bin by the Kings our Predecessours giuen and attributed to him and his, and which they haue to this day held, and therefore ought not any way to be called in doubt, or committed to controuersie; yet notwithstanding, to cease all disputes that may hereon ensue: we are willing to declare and make knowne our purpose and meaning.

For these causes, after we had taken the aduise of the Queene our most-Honorable Mother; of our most deare and louing Brethren, the Dukes of Anion, our Lieutenant Generall, representing our person throughout all our Kingdome, Countries, Lands and Seigneuries vnder our obedience; and of Alanson; and of our most-deare and beloued Cousine the Cardinall of Bourbon: wee haue said and declared, doe say and declare, that wee doe hold and repute our said Cousine Leonardo of Orleans, Duke of Longue-Ville, to be a Prince of our Bloud, and our intent and will is (as euermore it hath bin) that hee, his Sonnes and Successours, in the direct line, shall be held and acknowledged to be such, as we doe hold and acknowledge them to be, and so will haue them to be knowne, alwayes to be issued and descended of the said House of Orleans.

And in this Degree, as well about vs, as in all other places, where hee, his Sons and Successours shall be: to haue the prime place, next to the Princes of our Bloud, and shall enioye all other Honors, Authorities, Preheminences, Rights, Ranckes, and Prerogatiues, like, and in the same manner as his Predecessors haue done, according as reason requireth to haue it so. And that he our said Cousin, for his great and most commendable Seruices, hath very worthily deserued of this Crowne and State, although that this place and Ranke which by vs is confirmed to him by these Presents, should bee questioned by any dispute or altercation: willing, if any such should happen, to haue them ceased, and likewise all other contrary hinderances. For such is our pleasure, hauing for the much greater approbation and testimony of this our will; Signed these Presents with our owne hand, which wee will to bee sufficient to serue any where, or where need shall require. And to the end, that this may bee an Act firme and stable alwayes: Wee haue hereunto set our Seale.

Giuen at Dureſtall, in the Moneth of December, the Yeare of Grace, One Thousand, Fiue Hundred, Three Score and Eleauen.

Signed. Charles.

CHAP. XII.

L'Ordre de Bourbon dit de Chardon, & de nostre Dame.

THE Royall House of Bourbon, at this instant Reigning happily in France, took his beginning in the Person of Monsieur Robert of France, Count of Clermont in Beauuoisis, Sonne to the Great King Saint Lewes, Ninth of the Name.

Robert married the rich Heyre and Inheritrix of Bourbon, named Beatrix of Bourgongne, Daughter to Iohn of Bourgongne, second Sonne of Hugh, Fourth of the name, Duke of Bourgongne, and to Agnes de Bourbon, Daughter to Messire Archambauld de Bourbon, called the Young, Seauenth of the name.

Lewes of Clermont created the First Duke of Bourgongne.

Of this Marriage issued Lewes de Clermont, tearmed the Great, created the First Duke of Bourgongne, by King Philip de Valois, Sixt and Last of the name, in the Yeare One Thousand, Three Hundred, Twenty and Nine. By the meanes of this erection, hee quitted the Sirname of Clermont, and tooke that of Bourbon; which they of that Royall House (as well the youngest as eldest) haue to this day still retained.

The Armes of Bourbon.

Monsieur Robert of France, Porta Seme de France sans nombre au Baston de Gueules brochant sur le tout. Armes which Lewes the First Duke of Bourbon held, with the Sirname of the Seigneurie belonging to his mother, of which Seigneurie (neuertheless) hee forsooke the Armes of the Archambaulx, which were D'Or au Lyon Rampant de Gueules, à l'Orle seme de Coquilles d'Azur. Because, since the Voyages which the King Saint Lewes made beyond the Seas, the Crowne of France was so much famed famed & renowned throughout the whole world, that the Princes which afterward descended thereof, whom wee call Princes of the Blood, carried the plaine Armes of France, distinguished by Brizures. Contenting not themselues, to beare the colour and mettall, as formerly had done the Princes of the Bloud, of the Houses of Bourbon, Dreux and de Courtnay, who ioyning in Marriage with the rich Inheritrixes of them, tooke likewise their Armes and Sirnames.

Houses of Bourbo, Dreux and Courtnay.

Lewes, First Duke of Bourbon, and of that name, tooke to wife Mary, Sister to the Count of Henault, and had by her three Male Children (wee will passe the Daughters in silence, & the Sonnes also, because they minister no matter to our Discourse) Peter, First of the name, Second Duke of Bourbon, whose Line is long since quite extinct and perished in the Distaffe.

The House of Bourbon that as yet continueth.

Iames the Second Sonne, of the Sirname and Armes of Bourbon, was Count of Charolois, and Constable of France. Of this man the Royall Descent continueth euen to this day, and (God assisting) shall doe to infinite Ages, to hold the Scepter and Crowne of the noble Flower de Luce, which being founded on the Salique Law, called him to command, as the very neerest Prince issued of the Bloud Royall, from Lance to Lance, although hee stood in the Thousand degree off; yet by the right of Bloud, and perpetuall custome of the Kingdome, which the Ciuill Lawyer Baldus on the first Law De Senatoribus, at the Clode and elsewhere, aptly termeth Ius Contium Gallorum. By which right, the Illustrious House of Bourbon descended of the youngest from Saint Lewes, by infinite representation, came to the Crowne of France, in the Yeare, One Thousand, Fiue Hundred, Foure Score and Nine. After that that Stocke of the eldest Race from the said Saint Lewes (which had reigned Three Hundred and Nineteene yeares) was quite ended, and sincke in the Female Sexe.

Accordingly is it prophesied of the Princes of the House of France, that they shall endure for euer. Lilium Francorum erit tanquam lignum quod plantatum est secus decursus aquarum, quod fructum suum dabit in tempore suo, in the first Psalme. The Lilly of the French shall be like a Tree planted by the riuers of waters, that will bring forth her fruite in due season. As meaning, that this Flower de Luce, exalted vp to Heauen, shall neuer fayle in producing Leaues and Fruits, that is to say: Princes succeeding one after another, to sustaine the Scepter of the French. This is the goodly Golden branch foretold by Sibylla.

——— ——— Vno auulso non deficit alter
Aureus, & simili frondescit Virga metallo.

The Leaues of the Sacred Lilles of France, shall neuer want: Folium eius non defluet: So speaketh the Psalmist and Royall Prophet. Returne wee now to the eldest of Lewes the First Duke of Bourbon.

Peter, Second Duke of Bourbon, and Count of Clermont, tooke to Wife Isabell de Valois, and had by her two Sonnes and Seauen Daughters. The The youngest Sonne was Iames of Bourbon, Count de la March, who was slaine with Peter of Bourbon his Sonne at the encounter at Brignais, three miles from Lyons, in Anno, One Thousand, Three Hundred, Threescore and One, the Third Day of April. The Eldest Sonne

Lewes, Second of the name, Third Duke of Bourbon, and Count of Clermont, in Beaumont, of Forests and Beaujoulois, had to Wife Anne, Daughter to Beraud, Dauphin of Auuergne, called the Count Camus, and to Iane Countesse de Forests. And in this Marriage was borne Iohn, First of the name, Fourth Duke of Bourbon: who tooke to Wife the Daughter of Monsieur Iohn of France, Duke of Berry and of Auuergne.

Lewes the Second was (for his rare vertues) called The good Duke. Hauing beene seauen yeares in England with King Iohn, hee returned to his Dukedome of Bourbonnois, in the Yeare of Grace, One Thousand, Three Hundred, Three Score and Three, being then Aged Eight and Twenty Yeares. In the same Yeare, the first Day of Ianuary, the memorable time of giuing Newyeares-Gifts: hee called together the very chiefest Lords of his Lands, in the City of Moulins in Bourbonnois, and Instituted the Order of the Golden-Shield. These are the very tearmes of the Chro-

Chronicle, concerning this great Prince, made by a Picard, named Iohn d'Orronuille, called Cabaret, at the request of Charles Count of Clermont, eldest Sonne to Iohn Duke of Bourbon, and d'Auuergne, Count de Forrests, and Lord of Beau-ieu, the onely Sonne to Lewes the Second, of whom the Chronicle was made by the said Cabaret, on Tuesday, the Nine and Twentieth day of March, One Thousand, Foure Hundred, Twenty and Nine, after Easter.

The Chronicle of Iohn Cabaret of Orronuille.

In the Second Chapter are set downe these words. For the good hope that I haue in you, next vnder God (said the good Duke to his Barons) from this time forward, I will beare for my Deuice a Girdle, whereon shall bee written in ioyfull words, Esperance, or Hope.

The Dukes words to his Barons.

In the Third Chapter, the First Day of the Yeare, early in the Morning, arose the gentle Duke, to gather his Knights and Noblemen together, to go to the Church of our Lady at Moulins. But before the Duke departed from his Chamber, hee honselled them with Newyeares Gifts of a worthy Order by him deuised, which he called, The Golden-Shield. And in the Shield of Gold was a Bende of Pearles, whereon he had written: Allen.

The First Lords honoured with this Order of The Golden-Shield, were these following.

1. Messires Henry de Montagu, Lord de la Tour, Sonne to Messire Gilleselin.
2. Guichard Daulphine.
3. Griffon de Montagu.
4. Hugues de Chastellus.
5. The Eldest of Chastelmorant.
6. The Lord de Chastel de Montaign.
7. The Eldest de la Palisse.
8. Guillaume de Vichi, Lord de Baisseels.
9. Philippes des Serpens, or Desserpeins.
10. Lourdin de Saligny.
11. The Lord de Chontemerles.
12. Regnauld de Basserne.
13. The Lord of Champroux.
14. The Lord of Veausse.
15. The Lord of Blot.
16. Guillaume de la Motte.
17. Pierre de Fontenay, in the Countrey of Berry.

The Order of the Golden-Shield, and the first Knights thereof.

And many other, who receiued the said Order of the Golden-Shield, or rather Deuice. In the giuing whereof, the Duke said to the Knights, that hee desired, that all they which should receiue the Order hereafter, and they that now had receiued it: should bee all as Brethren, to liue and dye one with another, if need should so vrge it. To performe and accomplish all those good Actions, which all Knights of Honour, and Noble Gentlemen in duty ought to doe. To abstaine from Swearing, & blaspheming the name of God. Aboue all things else, hee enioyned and commanded them, to honour Ladies and Gentlewomen, not permitting or suffering, to beare them slandered or euill spoken of: because, next vnto God, from them commeth part of the honour which men doe receiue. So that to blame or abuse Ladies, who haue not any meanes for reuenging themselues, by reason of their Sexes frailty; is to loose all Honour; yea, and for a man to villanize and shame himselfe. That they should be no backbiters or ill speakers, one of another: because it is the foulest vice, wherewith a Nobleman can bee taxed. For a finall Conclusion, hee exhorted them all to keep Faith and Loyalty, to beare respect and honour each to other, as it becommeth Knights of Praise and Vertue.

A vice too common in all Ages.

Hee told them within a while after, that ouerthwart his Golden Shield, hee had caused a Bende to bee painted, containing in it this Bourbonnois, word or Motto, Allen; as if hee intended to say, Allons tous ensemble au seruice de Dieu, & soyons tous vnis en la defence de nos Pais, & la ou nous pourrons trouuir à conquerir Honneur par faict de Cheualerie. Let vs goe all together to the Seruice of God, and let vs all bee vnited in the defence of our Countrey, and there where we can finde meanes to conquer Honour by Acts of Cheualrie. And it was his will, that all his Knights should sweare (himselfe beginning first of all) to promise and keepe the Articles formerly set downe.

The meaning of the Motto in the Bende.

Which hauing performed on his part, on the Faith of a Prince, and Knight of Honour: All the other Knights fell on their knees before the Duke, and tooke the Oath betweene his hands. This being done, Messire Phillip des Serpents, a Knight Bourbonnois, and one of the most valiant in the Realme, deliuering the word for all all the rest; most humbly thanked the Duke that it had pleased him to honour them with his Order, offering him their Seruice, Goods and Liues, for which the Duke thanked them with a chearefull heart.

The Golden-Shield no Order, but a Deuice.

This Golden-Shield with the Bende d'Allen, was properly but a Deuice, and no Order: as wee see Princes and Great Lords to haue in Blazons and Deuices, ouer and beside their owne Armes and Orders of Knighthood. For the Duke of Bourbon had his Standards with the Golden-Shield, and with his Order of the Blew Belt, or Girdle, distinct and separate one from the other.

The Siege of Belle-Perche in Bourbonnois

At the Siege of Belle-Perche in Bourbonnois, surprized by the English, where the Dutchesse his Mother kept her whole Familie, it being her dwelling or abiding: the Duke of Bourbon, Author of this Discourse; Brought forth of his Armory, the Standard with the Golden-Shield, attended by Fifty compleat men of Armes, beside Fifty other with Crosse-bowes, and made a Sally vpon the English, killing (at the first affront) Two and Thirty Persons.

Now, concerning that of his Order of the Belt or Girdle of Hope, his Chronicle, in the Three Score and Eighteenth Chapter, speaking of the Siege at a City of Affrica in Barbary, which some tearmed Thunis, and others Algier, attempted by the said good Duke of Bourbon. At that time the Duke of Bourbon first of all, and then his Lords and Captaines, each man according to his place and rancke, ordered their Bands of Soldiers, & Crosse-bowes of Genewayes, wounding amongst the Sarazens, and running through the rankes, cut the cords of the Tents, and set fire on the Lodgings of straw. But the Duke of Bourbon continued with his Standard of the Golden Girdle, an houre and more in the middest of the Sarazens Tents. The rest of this Siege is very remarkable. Thus you see what was this Order of Hope.

The Duke of Bourbon at the Siege of Thunis.

The bounty of Alexander to his Souldiers. How our graue Elders preferred Hope, and what they vnderstood thereby.

Alexander the Great, at the age of Twenty yeares, vndertooke the Conquest of the Indians, and departing from Macedon, gaue all his goods, and whatsoeuer else hee enioyed to the Souldiers, which enrowled themselues to doe him Seruice, Reseruing nothing for himselfe but Hope onely, to make himselfe a Monarch of the Persians: which succeeded to him, according as formerly in his hope hee had proposed; howbeit, oftentimes wee see that expectations doe fall out quite contrary. Whereupon, it was not without great and good iudgement, that our graue wise Ancestors represented Hope in the Figure of a Woman, cloathed in Greene, Crowned with a Garland and Wreathe of Flowers, holding a Whippe in the one Hand, and in the other a fragrant Red Rose, as also a Crowe placed at her Feete: Thus meaning, that while wee liue in hope of to Morrow, and then the next Morrow, as times to come, vnderstood and implyed by the Crowes Language, not hauing capacity of any other word but Cras, Cras: Pascimus ventos (so saith holy Iob) Wee feede our selues with the windes. The better part of our Age flyeth away like a shadow or Dreame, passeth, withereth, and consumeth it selfe, like to the Rose and other Flowers: Death entrappeth and betrayeth vs, and dyeth his Whippe bloudred in the vanity of our Hopes.

The religious Hope & perswasion of the good Duke.

The good Duke had not planted his Hope in or on the world, but in God chiefly, as a vertuous Prince ought to do, and on those heauenly expectations, which such a Hope yeeldeth. The Diuine Wisedome instructeth vs, That the nature of a good Tree is to bring forth good Fruite. All this Royall House of Bourbon, issued of Saint Lewes, made it selfe famous for Deuotion, and namely, to the Lilly of the Valleyes, the Sacred Virgin, Mother to the Sonne of God, tearmed by a Title of Excellencie & Honour: Lilium Conuallium. In her this good Prince placed part of his Hope, and next to her, in the Apostle of the French, Saint Denis, the Areopagite; so speaketh his Chronicle, Chapter 96. and others following.

His workes of Piety and Deuotion

In honour of her, hee founded a Colledge (to perpetuity) of twelue Chanons, at Nostre Dame de Moulins. In that of Chartres, the most ancient of Christendome, (dedicated by the wise Druides, Priests and Soueraigne Iudges of the ancient Gaules, Virgini Pariturae, To the Virgin that should bring forth the Fruite of Life) Fiue Hundred Yeares before her Natiuity) a perpetuall Masse. In that at Paris another, and two Obits for the dead. At Nostre Dame d'Orcinall in Auuergne, where hee offered his Pennon, after his taking La Roche Sennadoir another. At Clugny, Tolosa, Poictiers, Tours,

Tours; at Mans, Chasteau-Chinon, and at Moulins others. Hee was the Bounder of Vichy, and Souuigny, where repose the Cinders of the good Duke, dying in his Towne of Mont-Lucon; after our Lady day in August, One Thousand, Foure Hundred, and Nineteene, hee being Aged Three Score and Thirteene Yeares.

The death & buriall-place of the Duke.

In remembrance then of the succour and hope hee reposed in the prayers of the Queene of Angels: hee tooke for his Warre-Crye, Nostre Dame, Nostre Dame, Bourbon, Bourbon, so saith his Chronicle. And vpon the same subiect, hee established in the honour of God, and of the blessed Virgin, his immaculate Mother: The Order of Knights of our Lady, otherwise called Of the Thistle.

The Dukes Marriage to the Daulphins Daughter of Auuergne.

This Institution was made in the Moneth of Ianuary, the Yeare of Grace, One Thousand, Three Hundred, Three Score and Ten; when he espoused Anne, Daughter to the Count Daulphine of Auuergne and of Forests Berauld, called the Camus, in the Towne of Arde, belonging to the Daulphine of Auuergne. But the first Solemnity was performed at Nostre Dame de Moulins, or (according to others) at Clermont, vpon Candlemasse day in the same Yeare, One Thousand, Three Hundred, Three Score and Ten.

The time when the Duke Instituted his Order of Knighthood.

The number of Knights.

He composed this Order to consist of Sixe and Twenty Knights, (hee and his Successors, Dukes of Bourbonnois, comprehended as Chiefes and Soueraignes of the said Order) without any detection of blame or reproch, renowned for Nobility and Valiancy. Dayly they vsed to weare the Belt or Girdle, being made of Watchet-coloured Velure, lined with Crimson Sattin, bordered with embroydery of Gold, and curiously wrought in the middest of the embroyderie, the word, Esperance. It was lockt and made fast with a Buckle and Thong of pure Gold, bearded & checquered with Greene enammeling, like to the head of a Thistle. The Knights of Bourbõnois were knowne by the Girdle, and distinguished from the French Knights of the Starre: Because, in those times then, and a long while after, the Orders of Bourgongne, of Orleans, and of Anion were not thought on, nor Instituted.

The Belt or Girdle of Knighthood.

By our cõmon account the Eight Day of December.

On sollemne Festiuall dayes, and namely that of the Order, it being the Day of the Conception of our Lady in December: whereon the Duke held this great Hospitality, with open Tables, free for all commers: Then were the Knights cloathed with Cassocks of Carnation Damaske, hauing wide large Sleeues, and girded with the Blew-Girdle, before described. The great Mantle or Cloake of Blew Blew Celestiall-coloured Dammaske, with broad welts of Gold embroydered on the deepe Collar, lined with Red Satin, and the Chapperon or Mantlet of Greene Veluet, whereon they did weare the Great Collar of the Order of pure Gold, the weight of Tenne Markes, fastened with a Buckle and a Tongue of Gold (behind) in the same manner as the Girdle. It was composed of whole Lozanges, and halfe a double Orle, enammeled with Greene, opened like Netting, and there filled with Flower de Luces of Gold, and the Motto or word, ESPERANCE, in Antique Capitall Letters, and in each of them a Lozange enammeled with Red. At the bottome of the Collar hung directly on the breast, an Ouall, the Circle enammeled with Greene and Red, wherein was the Image of the Virgin Mary, entoured with a Golden Sunne, Crowned with Twelue Siluer Starres, a Crescent of the same vnder her feete, enammeled with Purple and Skye-colour. And at the end of the Ouall, was the head of a Thistle, enammeled with Greene, but bearded with White.

The Great Collar of the Order.

The Bonnet of the Order.

The Hat or Bonnet for the Head, was made of Greene Veluet, at the point of the Band hung a faire Tassell of Crimson Silke and Threeds of Gold, the lining or turning vp was (after the Antique manner) of Crimson Silke, whereon was embroydered the Golden-Shield, with the deuised word Allen.

Such as are Maisters and Doctors, in the noble Science of Armes and Blazons, doe represent or figure the vertue Esperance, or Hope (which the Scripture calleth, Vltimam post Naufragium tabulam) with Synople, which is the colour Greene, and by the Stone called an Emerauld, dedicated (if wee will giue credit to Poets) to beautifull Venus, the Marke or Symbole of Loue, and of Generation: designed in Armory, by the Element of Water, and by Flowers, Hearbs, and Fruits, Emblazoned ordinarily with Synople, to the Mettals of the Sunne, or of the Moone. For Armes emblazoned otherwise, then naturally they beare, are false, and vncapable of exception for enquiry. The Collar Greene, destinated to the Amorous, was ancientlie called the Hearb-colour, as Martiall witnesseth.

The Emerauld dedicated to the Goddesse Venus.

Herbarum fueras indutus Basse, colores.

Martiall in Epig.

It was the Liuery of the said Duke of Bourbon, wherein hee tooke delight aboue all other, as wearing those Emeraulds in Rings. So that oftentimes dayly and ordenarily at good Feasts, He would weare a goodly greene Garland on his Head, his Chronicle telleth vs so. In like manner this Colour is the note of an open heart, of a free Courage, of Gladnesse, Courtesie, and of Gentility. Among all the Stones which Nature affordeth from her fruitfull wombe in the Riuers of the Westerne Indies; there is no one more fitting, or correspondent with the Eye-sight, then the Emerauld, which to make knowne his excellencie and vertue; tarnisheth, yea meerely breaketh of it selfe, being worne by an immodest woman. This is witnessed by Pliny, Theophrastus, Albertus Magnus, and all the other Naturalists. It awaketh and recollecteth the visuall Spirits, which the Diamond and White Colour dispersed and resolued: so are wee taught by the learned Captaine Xenophon, in the expedition of Cyrus. It was no wonder then if this Duke of Bourbon, obserued for the most gentle and courteous Prince, amongst all the rest of his time; made choyce of this Greene Colour for his Liuery, and whereof also were his Banner, Guidon, Pennon, yea and his Cornet.

Commendations attributed to the Greene Colour, but chiefly to the Emerauld, and the vertue thereof.

This Duke caused to bee builded and perfected the Chappell and Hostell of Bourbon, neere to the Louure, in the Citie of Paris. At the top of the principall Pauilion thereof, which looketh ouer the Riuer of Seine; is yet at this present to be seene, a little Corridor, or small Gallery, aduanced whollie without the worke. The Balesters and Supporters whereof are of carued Stone, shaped like Lozanges; enterlaced with Antique Capitall Letters, which collected by sense, doe forme the word Esperance; and this is the true fashion of the Great Collar of the Order of the Thistle. This Corridor is couered with lead, on the top whereof, are exalted the Armes of Bourbon, De France sans nombre au Baston de Gueules Brochant sur le tout. As is more plainly to bee seene in the Glasse-windowes of the Chappell of Bourbon, borne vp and supported by Angels. These Armes on the said Corridor, are couched couched on the right side, Et Tymbrees au Mezail Tarre de front, according as appertaineth to and high an puissant Prince.

The Hostell, and Chappell of Bourbon in Paris.

The Armes of Bourbon.

Ioyning to the principall body of this Hostel & Pauilion, is a very long Galery, in former times gilded, and enriched with exquisite Paintings: wherfore it was called The Golden Gallerie, wherein the Dukes of Bourbon vsed ordinarily to walke. At one of the ends vnderneath it, is the great Gate of the Court, belonging to this Hostell of Bourbon, which yet to this day is fastened with Battants, nailed with great Nayles of guilded Brasse.

The Duke of Bourbons Golden Gallery.

In the middest of those Battants, is to be seene the forme of that ordinary Girdle, which was worne by those Knights of the Order of the Thistle: to wit, a large embroydered Girdle, locking or made fast like vnto a Belt or Girthe, with a Buckle and Tongue, bearded and cheequered with Thistle-heads, and vpon both those Girdles in old fashioned Letters or Characters, was embossed the word Esperance.

The fashion of the ancient Girdle.

The Steeple likewise of the Chappell of Bourbon, is circled and entoured with gilded Lead, formed in the fashion of a Dukes Crowne with Fourers de Luces, cheequered with head of Thistles.

And the same ordinary Girdle of the Order of Bourbon, is yet apparantly to bee seene, in a Tapestrie belonging to the Louure, which long time since I haue seene hung vp on euery Corpus Christi day, and in winter, before the dore of the Kings great Chamber.

The ordinary Girdle of Bourbon.

It is made in Quarters, as wee vse to say in Armes Escartelees. Le Premier & Quatriesme Quartier sont partis de Bourbon, & de France. Le Deux & le Troisiesme de Rouge, chargez chacun de deux Lettres Capitales Cleschees à l'Antique P. & A. & de Tiges & Branches, Entrelassees de Chardons Verds, à la Teste Blanche. With Blew Girdles lined with red at the Hasps or Buckles, and the ends Cheequie, in the manner of Thistles, with the word Esperance.

The Armes described in the Arras.

These Letters P. and A. and the Armes of Bourbon diuided with France, Sans Brisure, do make knowne that this Tapestry was made in the time of Peter, Second of the name, Duke of Bourbon, and Lord of Beaujeu, and of his Wife Madame Anne of France, Eldest Daughter to King Lewes the Eleuenth. Of which Marriage issued the Lady Susanna de Bourbon, their only Daughter married to Charles, Second of the name, afterwards Duke of Bourbon and Constable of France, of which Marriage ensued no Children: and the Males of the Eleest Dukes, and of the Counts of Montpenser being failed; Les plaines Armes de Bourbon, The plaine Armes of Bourbon, came to the youngest Counts of Vendosme; and the Dutchies and Seigneuries of Bourbonnois, Forez, Beaujolois and others, reunited to the Crowne of France, by the Ciuill death of the said Charles, the last Duke of Bourbon.

The Antiquety of the Tapestry.

The Order of Bourbon, was sought for, and requested (in regard of honour) by Lords Strangers, who desired to receiue it at the hands of this good Duke Lewes, the most valiant and magnanimous Prince of his time. I will heere relate two or three examples, drawne from an infinite number of other.

The loue and respect made of the Order of Bourbon.

Bertrand de Guesclin, called Claiquin a Bretone, Constable of France vnder the Raigne of King Charles the Fift, tearmed the Wise, (at whose feete this Constable, in regard of the great Seruices hee performed for France, lyeth enterred with the Marshall of Sancerre) going to the Siege of Chastel-naud Randon in Gevaudan (where hee dyed) came to salute the good Duke of Bourbon, who gaue him a goodly drinking Cuppe of Gold, enammeled with his Armes: wherein the Duke entreated him that hee would drinke dayly for his sake. Hee gaue him also a Faire Golden Girdle, very rich, of his Order D'Esperance, which he did put about his necke. For which the Constable most humbly thanked him, and receiued it very ioyfully, this his Chronicle telleth vs.

Concerning the Constable of France, Bertrand de Guesclin.

At the Siege of Vertueil (a place held to bee impregnable, considering the seating thereof, being built vpon a most high Rocke, which made it free from all scaling, & brauely defended by a troope of Englishmen, of whom here was the last retreate in the Prouince of Poictou,) the Duke of Bourbon to become Maister thereof, and to vnvnneastle the English thence, was driuen to vndermine it: within which Mine, the Duke himselfe was the formost in Armes against the Squire of the Castle, whom hee heard to bee called aloud, Regnauld de Montferrand. Both of them meeting at handy-blowes with their Swords, fiue stroakes one after another, and some among them hearing the blowes, could not containe themselues, but cryed out, Bourbon, Bourbon, Nostre Dame, whereat the Squire, Regnauld de Montferrand became much amazed, and withdrawing himselfe backward, said. How is this Gentlemen? Is my Lord the Duke of Bourbon heere? Yes truely, answered the Borgne de Veausse, hee is here himselfe in person.

A Souldier that had but one eye being in the Mine

Hereupon replyed Regnauld de Montferrand, saying. I am bound to praise God, who hath this day afforded mee so great grace and honour, to meete heere in Armes with a Prince so valiant. And you Borgne de Veausse, tell him, that I desire hee would be so well pleased, as, in this honourable place where he is: That hee would make mee Knight with his owne hand, for I can neuer haue it giuen mee more Honorably. And for the Valour and honour I haue found in him, I am ready to yeelde him this place.

Heereon the Borgne conferred with the Duke of Bourbon, who well perceiuing that all these matters tended to his very great honour; made answer, that hee was well contented to doe it, prouided that Montferrand should bring him the keyes to the dore of the Mine. Whereto Montferrand condiscended, who gaue them to him, and the keyes being deliuered; Euen there the Duke himselfe made him Knight. And Montferrand requested of him, that at his departure, he would be pleased to giue him the Prisoners, that had been in the Skirmish, or dyed at Marueil. Wherewith the Duke of Bourbon was well pleased, and it was appointed that Montferrand should surrender vp the Castle the next morning. Moreour it was appointed, that the Knights and Squires which were there with the Duke of Bourbon, should (on the Morrow) performe actions of Armes in the Mine, with them of the Castle (one against another) which Messire Iohn de Laye, Marshall, kept, to the end, that each man might be pleased with fighting in the Mine.

Regnauld de Montferrand made Knight by the Duke of Bourbon in a Mine vnder the ground.

The names of the Knights which went thither for Bourbon.

The names of the Squires.

The Knights and Squires which were in Armes with them of the Castle, were the Lord of Partenay, the Lord Cousan, Messire Regnauld de Roye, Messire Iohn de Chastelmorant, the Borgne de Veausse, the Lord of Torsaye, Messire Guillaume de la Forrest, Messire Blain Loup, Marshall of Bourbonnois, Messire l'Hermite de la Faye, Messire Iohn de S. Friet, called the little Marshall, Messire Boucicault. And the Squires were, Michaille Lagalle, Perrin Dussell, Blitberis Loup, Tachon de Glenier, Guicchard le Brun, and others.

Nor could they performe any other Armes but with their Swords, because the dore and passage was but a foot and an halfe in squareneſſe; yet each man did well execute his duty, one after another, according to the straightnesse of the place, and darke obscurity of the night, when all the Companions returned to their Tents againe.

On the morrow morning the Duke of Bourbon sent one of his Marshals, Messire Iohn de Laye, to the Castle to Montferrand, Lieutenant to Bartholomew de Montprinat, who (as yet) was not minded to returne for England, to summon him to surrender the Castle, which hee did yeeld vp according as hee had promised, sallying forth with all his men armed, and very brauely mounted. And comming before the Duke of Bourbons Pauilion, where hee was well accompanied with Knights; Regnauld de Montferrand alighted, and kneeling before the Duke, said. My most redouted Lord, I doe giue you thankes most humbly, for the goodnesse and honour you haue done vnto me, in being made Knight by the hand of so high and valiant a Prince, as you are. It is an honour done to me, and to all my Linage for euer hereafter.

The Castle of Partenay surrendred into the Duke of Bourbons hand.

Immediately the Duke thus answered. Messire Regnauld, Knighthood is worthily bestowed vpon you, for you are a valiant man, and of good descent. Forthwith the Duke sent for a goodly Courser, which as readily was brought to him, and he bestowed him on Montferrand.

The bounty of the Duke to Montferrand.

After-

Afterward, He caused to be brought him, by Messire Guillaume de la Pierre, his Chamberlaine, a Great Golden Girdle, weighing tenne Markes of Siluer, which hee also gaue to him. For which, Messire Regnault de Montferrand returned most hearty thankes, accounting himselfe to be very highly honoured, and said before them all; That hee would neuer arme himselfe, or serue in any place against the Duke of Bourbon.

A third History concerning the same Duke of Bourbon, and his worthy proceedings in Sardaigna.

At returne from the Siege of Affrica in Barbary, neere to Thunis, the Duke and his Caualery went on shoare in Sardaignia, where there was a strong Castle, called Castlle or Castlery, held by the Sarazens, which victualled all the Kingdome of Thunis. At their arriuall, all the Shippes being in the Hauen, were taken, and (by degrees afterward) the low Towne belonging to the Port or Hauen: and on the morrow the Castle yeelded it selfe, which the Duke gaue in guard to the Genewayes. From thence the Duke went to doe as much at Languillastre, another well fortified place, where the Sarazens victualled themselues; and yet it was likewise giuen in charge to the Sarazens. Afterward, by a sodaine guske of winde, tempest, and rough storme, the Duke was transported thence with his Army, and carried into the Ile of Sicilie, to Messina, a City appertaining to a great Baron of the Countrey, named Messire Mainfroy, Lord of Clermont. There the Duke remained Eight dayes, to refresh his people, and prepare his Shippes in due and fitting order.

The Lord and authority of Mainfroy, Lord of Clermont, and his entertainment giuen to the Duke.

This Lord of Clermont (ouer & beside Messina) had power also ouer Trapes (Derpanum) distant three Leagues from Messina (Messana) and ouer Palermo, (Panormus, and more beside) then halfe the Ile of Sicily. Hee was much troubled with the Gout, and hardly could permit himselfe to be conueyed, for receiuing and welcomming the Duke, whom hee caused to be serued by his household attendants, and defrayed all the charges during eight dayes space, so long as hee continued there, with extraordinary great cheare for the Lord Duke himselfe, together with the Lord of Coucy, the Count d'Eu, and the Count Daulphine d'Auuergne. And when the Duke of Bourbon was to depart from Sicilie, the Lord of Clermont requested of him: That hee would be pleased to make him a Knight; For a more valiant Prince there could not be; whereupon, the Duke finding himselfe very highly beholding to him, made him Knight, for which kindnesse, the Lord of Clermont returned him infinite thankes.

The bounty of Lord Mainfroy.

At their parting, hee gaue the Duke two goodly Coursers, of the breeding of Clermont, neere to Palermo. To the Lord of Coucy one; to the Counte Daulphine one, and to the Count d'Eu an other. Also, to the Gallies & Shippes of the Genewayes, Wines, Biskets, Salted Flesh & other prouisions, commanding that nothing should bee deare, for furnishing their other vessells, & it was instantly done vpon his commande. When the Duke of Bourbon perceiued such acceptable Seruices, performed to him in so remote a Countrey: he tooke them very thankfully at the Lord of Clermonts hands. And at his departing, hee gaue him a Golden Girdle, with the Deuice of his Knighthood, of Esperance.

A Golden Girdle giuen to the Lord of Clermont.

I could not compasse the meanes, to get the Names and Qualities of the Knights of the Order of Bourbon, and the seuerall Chapters held of them: so much hath goodly and venerable Antiquity (in her wrincles of Age) bin contemned and despised, euen as it is at this present day (like to a woman out of date and service.

Laudamus veteres, sed nostris vtimur annis.

And yet notwithstanding it is a rare Treasure, which ought to be carefully sought for, by such as are true louers of that Science. Wherefore, wee will finish this Discourse, with the Genealogie of the Royall House of Bourbon, which hath serued vs for the Frontispice and Subiect of the same.

The Genealogie or Pedigree of the Royall House of Bourbon.

Of Monſieur Robert of France, and Beatrix of Bourgongne.

WE haue already ſaid, that of Monſieur Robert of France, Count of Clermont in Beauuoiſis, and of Beatrix of Bourgongne, there came three Sonnes and as many Daughters. The eldeſt Son was Lewes of Clermont, called the Great, Firſt Duke of Bourbon, Iohn of Clermont, Baron of Charolois in Bourgongne, and Lord of Saint Iuſt in Champaigne, who eſpouſed Ioane, Heyre to the Count of Sanſoins, & of this Marriage iſſued but one Daughter, Iane of Clermont, Wife to Iohn of Bologne, and likewiſe of Auuergne: And

Peter of Clermont, Great Arch-deacon of the Church of Paris. The Daughters were:

Blanche, Wife to Robert, the Great Count of Bologne, and of Auuergne.

Margaret, Wife to Iohn of Flanders, Count of Namur, Sonne to Guy, Count of Flanders: And Mary, who became a Nun, at Poiſſy.

Son, Brother Vncle & Father of Kings, and yet himſelfe no King.

Monſieur Robert of France, dyed the Seauenth day of February, One Thouſand, Three Hundred, and Seauenteene, & lyeth buried at the Iacobines of Paris.

The firſt Duke of Bourbon.

Lewes of Clermont, ſtearmed the Great, Firſt Duke of Bourbon, tooke to Wife Mary of Henault, Siſter to the Count of Henault, by whom he had three Sonnes, and as many Daughters.

The Eldeſt Sonne was

1. Peter, Firſt of the Name, Second Duke of Bourbon in Succeſſion.

2. Iames of Bourbon, Firſt Count of Charolois, and Count de la March, and of Penthieu, Conſtable of France, ſlaine at the Battell of Poictiers.

3. Philip of Bourbon, Lord of Beaujeu, deceaſing without any Children.

The Daughters were

1. Iane or Ioane of Bourbon, Wife to Iohn, the Eldeſt Sonne of Iohn, Count de Harcourt.

2. Mary, giuen in her firſt Marriage, to Monſieur Guy of Cyprus, the eldeſt Sonne to Hugh, King of Cyprus, and of Hieruſalem. In this Marriage was borne Hugh of Luſignan, Prince of Galilee. In Second Marriage ſhee was eſpouſed to Robert, Prince of Tarentum, in the Kingdome of Naples, who entituled himſelfe Emperour of Conſtantinople. In regard that Katherine of Valois, Empreſſe of Conſtantinople, Second Wife to Monſieur Philip of Sicily, Prince of Tarentum, and Father of the ſaid Robert, had giuen to the ſame Philip her Husband, the Right which belonged to her in the Empire of Greece, and whereof ſhee had not any enioying.

The laſt Daughter was

3. Beatrix, Wife to Philip, Eldeſt Sonne to the ſaid Monſieur Philip of Sicily, Prince of Tarentum, the youngeſt Sonne to the Second Charles King of Sicilie.

Lewes, Firſt Duke of Bourbon, dyed the Two and Twentieth day of Ianuary, in the Yeare, One Thouſand, Three Hundred, Forty and One; hee alſo lyeth buried at the Iacobines of Paris.

II. Peter, Firſt of the Name, Second Duke of Bourbon, tooke to Wife Iſabell of Valois, Daughter to Monſieur Charles of France, Count of Valois, Sonne, Brother, Vncle and Father to Kings of France, and yet himſelfe not being a King. In this Marriage hee had one only Sonne, the maine Subiect of this Diſcourſe; & Seauen Daughters, whereof the firſt was.

1. Ioane or Iane of Bourbon, endued with admirable beauty, Wife to King Charles, Fift of the Name; of him and of his Wife, the Portraicts (according to the life) are to bee ſeene on the Portall in the Conuent of the Celeſtines at Paris.

2. Blanch, Wife to the King of Caſtile, Dom Pedro the Cruell, who made his Wife a Priſoner, and kept Concubines in the liberty of his Conſcience. But death reuenged her wrongs, by meanes of the French, who expelled him out of his Kingdome, and enſtauled in his place Dom Henry, Second of the Name.

The Third Daughter was

3. Bonna, Wife to Amades, Count of Sauoye, Sirnamed the Green, in the Chronicle of our Duke Lewes the Second.

4. Katherine, Wife to Iohn, Count of Harcour.

5. Mary, Wife to Godfrey, Sonne to the Duke of Brabant.

6. Margaret, two ſeuerall times married. Firſt to Iohn, the Sonne of Henry, Lord of Suilly: Laſt to Arnauld Amanieu, Lord of Albret.

7 Another Mary, a profeſſed Nunne at Poiſſy.

This Peter the firſt, ſecond Duke of Bourbon, died in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand three hundred fiftie and ſixe, the nineteenth day of September, in the Battaile of Poictiers, loſt by King Iohn, againſt Edward of England, third of the name, and he likewiſe lieth buried at the Iacobines of Paris.

III. Lewes, ſecond of the name, third Duke of Bourbon ſtearmed the Good, Author of this diſcourſe, by Anne Daulphine his wife, had two Sons, and two Daughters. The Sonnes were Iohn, who was Duke after his Father: and Lewes, who died yong in the Hoſtell of Bourbon at Paris. Iohn Duke of Berry loued this man dearely, for hee was a goodly ſweet Youth, towardly, and of a cheareſull diſpoſition. In regard of this intimate affection towards him, the Duke of Berry departed from his Caſtell of Neſle, and paſſing the Riuer of Seine, entred into Bourbon, the Hoſtell of Duke Lewes, to comfort him, and when the Duke of Bourbon knew that the Duke of Berry was there: he well vnderſtood the cauſe of his comming, for then the ſickneſſe of his Sonne began to grow worſe and worſe. And yet although it did ſo, he could not forbeare ſeeing him, as he thought it an article of duetie in him, for the Duke of Berry was his great Vncle, and this viſitation of his, was in hope to free him from his ſickneſſe.

But when the Duke of Berry ſaw the Duke of Bourbon, his heart began to tremble, paſſion preuailing, and his eyes ſtreaming forth teares, that he was not able to vtter one word. Whereupon Duke Lewes of Bourbon, cauſing him to goe foremoſt, went vp with him into an vpper Chamber, where were many people, & then thus he ſpake to the Duke of Berry. My Lord, I thanke you for this louing viſitation, and your compaſſion on my Sonne Lewes, who is now gon to God. Well I know, that you are come hither to me, to ſhew me the certainty of your affection; a much meaner Lord had ſuffiſed in this caſe: But good Bloud neuer is vnmindefull of the naturall loue, which ought to be in one towards another. Wherfore I tell you my Lord, that this paſſible life, is lodged but as in a Inne or Hoſterie: but the life to come, firme, ſtable, & the dwelling houſe of the Immortall Soule, is the ready way of flying vp to God. For truely my Lord, in mine opinion, the end of liuing is very good, becauſe a man hath found thoughts intire reaſon, and his naturall vnderſtanding ſetled and certaine, for thoſe Offices appertaining to the life of man. And you know my Lord, that Nature, the Mother of all things, hath giuen to vs men habitations, wherein we may dwell together: but ſhe hath giuen vs no houſe for a perpetuall abiding. Wherefore my Lord, ſeeing God hath taken hence my Sonne; it was his pleaſure ſo to doe, for he did but lend him me, he hath made him fit for him, & bleſſed be his name therfore. No doubt he is in better caſe then all his kinred; but Fortune, who bringeth the loftie low, and exalteth the humble, tooke him away ſomewhat too ſoone.

The Duke of Berry's words deliuered by the Duke of Bourbon.

The Duke of Berry, and all the reſt, hearing theſe words deliuered by the Duke of Bourbon, could not abſtaine from teares. But the Duke of Berry going down the ſtairs, went with many noble Gentlemen in his company, to the Chamber where the dead Body lay (ready for carrying to the earth) whereto he did a ſeemely honour. And when Duke Lewes of Bourbon (who was in the Gallerie) beheld the Proceſſions parting from his Houſe, furniſhed with a world of lighted Torches, and the body of his Son lying on the Biere; his tender heart was ready to rift in twaine, and fatherly affection ſtreamed forth at his eyes. Immediately he entred into his Chappel, where he called for his Confeſſor M. Peter de Chantelle, a good Diuine, & other Chaplains, who performed the Office for the youth ſo lately departed; all the Knights & Officers of the Hoſtel, admiring at the conſtancie & patience of the Duke their Lord & Maſter.

The Daughters were

Beatrix of Bourbon, twiſe maried: Firſt to Iohn, the Duke of Luxembourg, King of Bohemia, & of Hungaria, or Polonia. And in ſecond Nuptials, to Eudes, Lord of Grancey.

The ſaid Lewes, the good Duke, dyed (as we haue already ſaid) at Mont-Luſon, and his Body enterred at Souuigny. Hee was once determined, to finiſh his dayes at the Celeſtines of Vichy, by him founded.

The death of the good Duke of Bourbon.

founded: if hee had returned in health from the Voyage of France, which hee vndertooke, comming to helpe his Nephewes the Sonnes of Orleans, against Iohn of Bourgongne, the murtherer of their Father. But he died on the way beginning his iourney.

IIII. Iohn of Bourbon, First of the name, Fourth Duke of Bourbon, tooke to Wife Mary de Berry, Daughter to Monsieur Iohn of France, Duke of Berry, and of Auuergne, Count of Poictou, and to Iane, Daughter to the Count of Armaignac. Of this Marriage there issued three Sonnes.

The First Sonne was.

1. Charles, First of the name, Duke of Bourbon.

2. Lewes, Count of Montpensier: And

3. Iohn of Bourbon, Bishop of Puy, (in Latine Aucium in Auuergne) and Abbot of Clugny.

The said Iohn, First of the name, was taken in the Battell at Azyngcourt, fought betweene Hesdin and Therouane, and lost by the French, the Fiue and Twentieth day of October, One Thousand, Foure Hundred and Fifteene. Hee was nineteene yeares prisoner at London in England, where he dyed in the yeare one thousand, foure hūdred, thirty foure.

Next succeeded his Sonne

V. Charles, First of the Name, Fift Duke of Bourbon, who won the Battell of Rauge in Anion, against the Duke of Clarence, slaine in the Field the Ninth Day of Aprill, One Thousand, Foure Hundred, & Twenty: And in the yeare, One Thousand, Foure Hundred, Twenty Sixe; the said Charles espoused Agnes de Bourgongne, daughter to Iohn the Bad, and Sister to the Duke of Bourgongne, Philip the Second. In this Marriage were borne Sixe Sonnes, & Fiue Daughters.

The Sonnes were

1. Iohn, Second of the name.

2. Lewes, dying young vnmarried, albeit betrothed to the Daughter of the King of Cyprus.

3. Peter, Lord of Beaujeu.

4. Charles, Cardinall of Bourbon, and Archbishop of Lyons.

5. Lewes, Bishop of Liege: And

6. Iames of Bourbon, dying young at Bruges.

The Daughters were

1. Iane of Bourbon, Wife to the Prince of Orenge.

2. Katherine, Wife to Adolph, Duke of Gueldres.

3. Margaret, Wife to Philip of Sauoye, Count de Breſſe, and de Baugie, afterward Duke of Sauoye, Father and Mother to Louisa of Sauoye, who was the Mother of King Frances the First.

4. Isabel, who was Wife to the last Charles, Duke of Bourgongne: And

5. Mary of Bourbon, who was twice married. First, to Iohn Duke of Calabria, Sonne to Rene, King of Sicilie, Duke of Anion; The Second time to Gaſton, who was Sonne to the Count of Foix.

Which Charles, First of the Name, was High Chamberlaine of France, and dyed in the Yeare, One Thousand, Foure Hundred, Fifty and Sixe.

After whom succeeded his Eldest Sonne.

VI. Iohn, Second of the Name, Sixt Duke of Bourbon. In his young yeares hee won the day at Fourmigny, against the Englisſh. He was three seuerall times married: First to Madam Ioane of France, daughter to King Charles the Seauenth, Sirnamed the Victorious. His Second Wife was Katherine of Armaignac, Daughter to Iames of Armaignac, Duke of Nemoux. And his Third Wife was Iane of Bourbon, daughter to Iohn of Bourbon, Count of Vendoſme.

The said Iohn the Second, Great Chamberlaine of France, dyed, without leauing any Heyres of his Body; so that his Succeſſor was his Third Brother, the Lord of Beaujeu.

VII. Peter, Second of the Name, Seauenth Duke of Bourbon, who tooke to Wife Madame Anne of France, Eldest Daughter to King Lewes the Eleuenth of the Name, Regent of France, vnder King Charles the Eight his Brother. In this Mariage was borne their only Daughter Suſanna of Bourbon, in whom ended the Ligne of the Males, being the eldest Dukes of Bourbon, and Counts of Montpenſier, of whom the Appennage was Clermont in Beauuoiſis, remaining in the houſe of the ſaid Dukes of Bourbon, vnto Peter the Second, of whom we ſpeake at this preſent.

VVE haue formerly ſeene and obſerued, that Iohn, first of the name, fourth Duke of Bourbon, and Count of Clermont, had by Mary of Berry his wife, three Sons, Charles, Lewes & Iohn, Bishop of Puy. The Duke of Berry being deceaſed without heires maſles, the Dukedome of Berry and of Poictou, returned to the Crown by the Law of Reuerſion. Mary of Berry his daughter, inherited the Countie of Montpenſier, which Duke Iohn of Bourbon gaue for an inheritance to his second Son.

1. Lewes of Bourbon, tearmed of Montpenſier, a title taken by his deſcent & linage. This Donation of the ſaid Countie of Montpenſier, was confirmed to this Lewes, by King Charles, ſeauenth of the name, One thouſand foure hundred twentie ſix. Il porta de Bourbon, comme ſon Pere, mais à la Bordure, de Gueulles pour Brizure: which are the proper Armes of the ancient houſe of Montpenſier. He had two wiues, the first of them was Ioane or Iane Daulphine, daughter to Berauld the yonger Daulphine of Auuergne; and of a Sister to Bertrand de la Tour, Count of Bologne and of Auuergne, but by her had not any iſſue.

In second marriage hee eſpouſed Gabriella de la Tour, by whom he had one only Son, Gilbert of Bourbon; but diuers daughters, among whom were

Gabriella de Bourbon, wife to Meſsire Lewes, Lord de la Trimouille: And Charlotta de Bourbon, wife to the Count de Bouchain, Wolfangus de Bourſelles.

II. Gilbert of Bourbon, second Count of Montpenſier that conducted the Auant-guard, of the puiſſant Armie of Charles the eight, for conquering his Kingdome of Naples, whereof hee was the first Vice-Roye.

Hetooke to wife Clare de Gonzagua, daughter to Fredericke, Marqueſſe of Montferrat, by whom he had three Sons and two daughters.

The Sonnes were

1. Lewes.

2. Charles. And

3. Frances of Bourbon, Duke of Chaſtelleraud, slain at the Battaile of Marignano, on the day of Holy-Roode in September, One thouſand fiue hundred and fifteene, fighting valiantly against the Swizzers, who thought to ſurprize King Frances the first, and his money.

The Daughters were

1. Louisa of Bourbon, who was twiſe martied. First to Andrew de Chauuigny, by whom ſhe had no iſſue. Her ſecond Husband was Lewes of Bourbon, Prince de la Roche-ſur-Yon, whoſe deſcent hereafter will be very remarkeable.

The other Daughter was

2. Renea of Bourbon, wife to Anthony of Lorraine, called the good Duke.

The Father of the foreſaid Children, Gilbert of Montpenſier, being not ſuccoured in due time by Charles the eight, with men and monie: was enforced (by the League of Pope Alexander the ſixt, the Venetians and Potentates of Italie) to forſake & leaue the Citie of Naples and Atella, to Ferdinand the second. Vpon condition, that he ſhold furniſh the Gallies, for conueighing him and his men into France. But falſifying his word, hee compelled him to ſtay in a moiſt ſeaſon at Baies (a peſtilent place) where he died, & was enterred at Pouzzoli. Where likewiſe (within ſome few years after) vpon the Sepulcher of his Father, died Lewes his eldeſt Sonne, in extremity of paſſion, ſighes & teares, and lieth buried by his Father: thus we are told by Guichardine.

So that by the death of Lewes the eldeſt Charles of Bourbon, the ſecond Sonne, was Count of Montpenſier, Conſtable of France, and Duke of Bourbon.

He eſpouſed Suſanna of Bourbon, the onely Daughter and ſole heire of Peter, ſecond of the name, laſt Duke of Bourbon; And in right of the ſaid Suſanna his wife he was Duke of Bourbon, but ſhee dyed without any Children.

Afterward, the ſaid Charles was moued againe to marriage, with Madam Louiſa of Sauoye, Mother to King Frances the first: who being refuſed (according to the naturall diſpoſition of her ſexe) ſplit all in pieces to compaſſe her will: Flectere ſi nequeo Superos, Acherōt a mouebo

All his goods being brought to compromiſe, & afterward ſentenced by decree; this poore Prince became deboſhed, & feeding on the promiſes of a Soueraigne power: tooke part with the coniured enemie of France, who to be rid of him: in meere charitie, ſent him before Rome, to finiſh both his honor and life by the ſhot of an Harquebuze, diſcharged by a follower of his owne, the

ſixt

sixt day of May, One thousand fiue hundred twentie seauen. His body was carried to Chasteau de Gaycte, where he had this Spanish Epitaph for al his recõpence.

Franzis me dio la Luce,
Spagna fuerca, y Ventura,
Roma me dio la Muerte,
Gaete la Sepoltura.

By this aduenture, the goods of the said Charles of Bourbon became confiscated, to serue (euen to this day) for assurance of Dowries to the Queenes of France. Before that time, the Princes of this royall House, speaking to the King, or in writing, said Monsieur, and couered themselues in his presence: But since then, they haue vsed the name of Sir, as well as others, and stand bare headed.

In this Charles, the last Duke of Bourbon, the Ligne failed of the eldest of Bourbon, in the Sir-name of Clermont in Beauuoisis, the Appennage of Monsieur Robert of France, Sonne to the King Saint Lewes. So that we must now needes reascend, and take the Ligne of Iames of Bourbon, Count de la March, second Son to Lewes of Clermont, called the Great, first Duke of Burbon, Sonne to the said Monsieur Robert of France.

The Third Branch of Bourbon, called Of Vendosme.

I*Ames* of Bourbon, second Son to Lewes the Great, first Duke of Bourbon; was Count de la March, of Ponthieu, and of Charolois, as also Constable of France. He had to wife Ione, or Ioane of Saint Paule, of the House, name and Armes of Luxembourg: by whom hee had three Sons, and two Daughters.

The Sonnes were

1. Peter.
2. Iohn. And
3. Iames of Bourbon, Lord of Preaux, and of Vebaine, who died at Rochell, kilde with the fall of a Plancher of the Chamber, where King Charles the seauenth held his Counsell, in the yeare One thousand foure hundred twentie two. This Iames left foure Sons; Lewes, slaine at the Battaile of Azincourt, one thousand foure hundred and fifteene: Peter, Iames and Charles of Bourbõ, who had not any issue.

The Daughters were

1. Katharine, wife to Bouchard, second of the name, Count of Vendosme. And
2. Isabel, Wife to Lewes, Viscount of Beaumont.

Iames of Bourbon before named, and Peter his eldest Sonne, were slaine on the skirmish day of Brignaies, three Leagues from Lyons, by the gathered troupes of French and English, Malecontents of the Countrey, who vnder the name of Tard-Venus, to the number of fifteene or sixeteene thousand, intended to forrage all ouer France, the third day of Aprill, in the yeare One thousand three hundred threescore and one.

So that the Succession fell to the Second Sonne.

II. Iohn of Bourbon, Count de la Marche, who espoused Katharine, Heire of the House of Vendosme. In which marriage was borne three Sonnes, and two Daughters, the first whereof was

1. Anne, that twise ioyned in marriage. First with Iohn de Berry, Count of Montpensier, Sonne to Monsieur Iohn of France, Duke of Berry: And in second marriage, with Lewes, Count Palatin of the Rhine, Duke in Bauaria.

The other Daughter was

2. Mary, wife to Messire Iohn de Beym Lord of Croix.

The Sonnes were

1. Iames.
2. Lewes. And
3. Iohn of Bourbon, Lord de l'Esclusc neere Dowaye, Carency, Busquoy and Duysant in Artois. Hee married Katharine of Artois, Daughter to Robert of Artois, third of the name, Count of Beaumont. By whom hee had foure Sonnes, and one Daughter.

The Sonnes were

1. Lewes of Bourbon, Lord of Esclusc, who deceased, not being married.
2. Peter, who espoused Madam Philip de Plaine, and by her had not any issue.
3. Iames. And
4. Phillip of Bourbon. The Daughter Mary of Bourbon, wife to Messire Iohn de Croy.
5. Phillip, last Sonne of Iohn, was Lord of Duysant, and married twise. First to Ioane de l'Alain, Daughter to Saulx de l'Alain, Lord of Roberset, and and by her he had a Son and a Daughter.

The Sonne was named

Anthony of Bourbon, husband to Iane de Habarch, of which marriage came Anthony of Bourbon, dying before hee was married.

The Daughter was

Ioane or Iane of Bourbon, wife to Messire Frances Roulin, Lord Beauchamp.

The other wife to the said Phillip of Bourbon, was Iane de Chauuigny, Lady of Saint Germain des Fossez sur Allier, hauing no issue

3. Iames the third Sonne, was Lord of Aubigny and of Rochefort, he tooke to wife Anthonnetta de la Tour, Widdow to the Lord of Monteil. Of this marriage issued Charles of Bourbon, Lord of Carency, & Iohn Lord of Aubigny, dying without children.

Charles of Bourbon tooke to wife Katharine d'Allegre, Daughter to Bertrand d'Allegre, Baron of Puy-agur.

Of this marriage came Bertrand, and Iohn of Bourbon, Father to Isabel of Bourbon, wife to Messire Frances d'Esturs, Lord de la Veu-Guyon, of whom came no linage.

Bertrand left not any issue. So that the descent of the said Iohn of Bourbon, last and third Son of Iohn of Bourbon, Count de la Marche, and of Katharine, Countesse of Vendosme, is ended in Daughters.

Let vs now returne to his eldest Son.

III. Iames of Bourbon, Count de la Marche (second Son of the name of this Branch) and of Castres; was the very goodliest Prince among them all of his time. Whereupon, he was earnestly desired in mariage by Ianella or Ianetta, second of the name, Queene of Naples: from whom hee seperated himselfe, by reason of her incontinent and dishonest life, not hauing any issue by her. In second marriage he espoused Madam Bertrix of Nauarre, Daughter to King Charles the Noble, third of the name, and by her hee had Daughters, one of them named Eleanor of Burbon, was married to Bernard of Armaignac, Count of Perdriac.

This King Iames, for so was hee named, deceasing without heires masle; the right of Primogeniture went to his yongest Brother

IIII. Lewes of Bourbon, Count of Vendosme, by the right of his Mother. Il porta de Bourbon au Bastion de Gueulles, charge de Vendosme, qui estoit de Gueulles à trois Lyons rampants d'Argent. He had two wiues, the first whereof was Ioane de Rotussy, Daughter to Rodolphe, Count of Montfort, and Anne de Montmorency, but by her he had no childe. The second was Iane, Daughter to Cuye, Count of Guare (there is a Guare in Normandie, and a Guare in Gascoignie, betweene Auch and Tolosa, the Capitall Citie whereof is Gimont, seated on the River of Gimona) and to Mary, daughter of Enguerran, Lord of Coucy. And by this second wife he had Lewes, second of the name, Count of Vendosme after his Father.

In the Church of Chartres, built (as it is) by the learned Bishop Fulbert, Chauncellar of France to King Robert the Deuout, Sonne of Hugh Capet, very fairely without: in the South-side of the body thereof, is to be seene the Chappell of Vendosme, called the Annuntiation of our Lady, becausc vpon the Altar, is the Image of the Annuntiation. Before which, against the wall, is the Statue raised in embossed worke of Stone, of the said Lewes of Bourbon, Count of Vendosme, first of the name, and Founder thereof, standing in a long Red Roabe and Chapperon, Furred about the neckc, as are the Presidents du Mortier in the Parliament of Paris: For so (in elder times) were habited the Princes and great Lords of France. By him is the figure of his Wife, cloathed after the Antique manner. In the Glasse window of the said Chappell, are the Portraitures of this Lewes, Count of Vendosme, and of his Wife, with their Sons and yonger Sons, with their Wiues and descendants; distinguished by their Armes each from other.

The Charter for the foundation of this Chappell, being in the Treasurie of the Church, beareth date the second day of Iune, One thousand foure hundred and thirteene. And therein is declared, that the Vigile of the Ascention, being the last day of the Moneth of May in the same yeare, when the discreete and venerable men of the Chapter and Colledge, belonging to the Church of Chartres, made their ordenary and accustomed Procession: the most Noble and potent Princes, the Lord

Lewes, Count of Vendosme, Lord of Espernon and Mondoubleau, meeting the said Procession without La Porte des Espars, alighted from his Horse, he and his followers, and holpe to conuey the Procession by the Churches of Saint Sernin, and Saint Forth, euen into the Cathedrall, where the same day he heard the whole diuine Seruice.

Our Lady of Chartres.

And on the morrow, early in the morning, being the Feast of the Ascention, at the ending of Mattines, the deuout Prince, to accomplish the vowe of his Pilgrimage, by him made to Nostre-Dame de Chartres; went starke naked to the said Church. And so soone as he came to Porte Royale, he fell on his knees before the Sacred Virgin, holding in his hand a great Waxe Candle, weighing fiftie pounds or there about. And hauing ended his Prayers, hee addressed his speeches to the Chapter of the Church, being come before him: desiring them, that they would giue praise and thankes to the most Sacred Virgin, the Soueraign Lady of Chartres, by whose especiall fauour and contemplation, hee had receiued many great graces and benefits, in deliuering him from his aduersaries and enemies, who had detained him prisoner nine or tenne moneths space, compelling him to forgoe his goods and riches. But on the day and Festiuall of the Annuntiation of the said Virgin, without any spot or blemish; Adoring and seruing her, in her Church of Chartres, where he deuoutly vowed himselfe to her, and implored her ayde and succour; contrarie to all hope or helpe in men, hee was deliuered, and his goods restored againe vnto him.

Whereupon he did both acknowledge and auouch freely, that he held his deliuerance onely by her, and was reestablished into his goods and meanes, by grace and fauour of that most Sacred Virgin. Wherefore, in eternall memory thereof, he declared before God, and our Lady of Chartres, that he both then did, and for euer would dedicate himselfe in person, A man Subiect and Vassaile to the glorious Virgin Mary, and also to her Church of Chartres.

Hereupon the Chapter made answere, that they commended him, and humbly thanked the glorious Virgin, for the exceeding great Graces shee had extended to him. And conducting the Prince before the Image of the Virgin, they then sung this Hymne, which the Prince told them (in a perticuler deuotion) he had alwayes ready in his minde. O quam glorifica luce coruscas, and namely to this Verse; Quem cunctus veneratus Orbis adorat. Which Prayer being sung by the Chapter, and the deuout Prince hauing finished his Meditations: hee offred the great Waxe Taper, which hee held in his hands, and an hundred other Tapers, held by the Knights, Esquires and Seruants of his House. And so departed the Chapter and the Prince.

The very same day, somewhat before high-Masse, the said Prince of Vendosme, hauing caused the Chapter to be assembled; he made vnto them a most ample relation, of the fauours and benefits he had receiued from the Virgin Mary; for which he would be thankfull according to his possibility, and leaue testimony thereof to future posteritie: which to effect answerably to his desire, most affectionately he entreated the same Chapter, that both in his life time, and afterward to perpetuitie: the morrow after the fiue Festiuals of the Virgin Mary, to wit, The Assumption, Natuitie, Conception, Purification and Annuntiation, they would performe most solemne Services, namely, A Masse, Procession, with Copes Organes, Loude Instruments & Singing, euen as it was done on the same dayes of the Feasts.

That there might be likewise good store of Lights about the Altar and the Hearse, and at High-Masse, to say a perticuler Prayer for him: Deus qui iustificas impium during his life time, and after his death, the Prayer said at the end of the Procession. And when the said Chapter should come by the Chappell of the Annuntiation, there to say and sing De profundis, with the Prayer Inclina Domine, and cast holy water vpon his Tombe, especially where his heart did lye.

For performing and celebrating these Seruices, hee promised, and thereto bound himselfe, to assesse and assigne to the said Church of Chartres, as a yearely paiment to perpetuitie, the sum of threescore & fiue pounds Tournois of Rent, in monies comming freely as a quit Rent, thirteen pounds Tournois at each of the said annual feasts.

Moreouer, he founded one solemne Masse yearely in the said Church, to be celebrated in honor of the Sacred Virgin, the last Saturday before Aduent, so long as he liued. And after his death, the said Masse should be changed into an Obit, and Seruice for the dead, the same day as the same Prince of Vendosme should decease. For the Foundation of this Masse and Obit; hee bound himselfe to pay yearely on the same day eight pounds. Which the Chapter accepted, seconding the deuotion of this great Prince; to be a true imitator of S. Lewes, and of the good Duke of Bourbon Lewes, Second of the name, his most famous Grandfathers.

Beside the said Foundations of Lewes, Duke of Bourbon, Count of Vendosme; his Successours haue continued fatherly deuotion towards the holy Virgin, honored perticularly in her Church of Chartres. Wherein the Counts and Lords of Vendosme, principall Parishioners and Diocessanes there: haue (for the spirituall direction of their Vendosinois Countrie) an Archdeacon, stiled of Vendosme.

V. Lewes of Bourbon, Count of Vendosme, Great Maister of France, espoused Ioane of Laual; and had by her one onely Sonne, named

The

The Order of Aniou, called of the Crescent or Halfe-Moone, Instituted in the Citie of Angiers, in the yeare One thousand foure hundred threescore and foure.

CHAP. XII.

L'Ordre D'Anjou Dit Du Croissant.

Oncerning the first Branch of Aniou, the vsuall or ordenary stile and title, which is giuen to the third Sonne of the most-Christian Kings, was begun by Monsieur Charles of France, the fift Sonne of King Lewes, Eight of the name, Sir-named of Mont-Pensier, Father to the good King Saint Lewes, and to Blanch of Castile, daughter to Alphonso, eight of the name, King of Castile, and Queene Eleanor, daughter to Henry the second, King of England.

Monsieur Charles of France, had for his portion or Appennage, the Counties of Anion, and of Maine, and in the right of Beatrix his wife by his first marriage, fourth daughter to Raimond, Count of Prouence, and to Beatrix, daughter to the Count of Sauoye, he was Count of Prouence. And by Pope Vrbane, Fourth of that name, he was inuested with the Kingdomes of Naples, and of Sicilie. Nor is this first Branch any otherwise the subiect of this discourse: but onely to serue as a preamble and direction, for speaking the better and more aptly, in the true vnderstanding of the auncient rights and prerogatiues of the Kingdomes of Naples and Sicilie, appertaining or belonging to the house of Aniou.

The first Duke of Anion and Count of Maine.

The second Branch whereof, deriued their stemme or originall and roote from Monsieur Lewes of France, second and onely Sonne to King Iohn, and Madam Bonna of Behemia (whom our auncient Chroniclers doe call Behaigne) daughter to the King of Behemia, and was made the first Duke of Aniou, and Count of Maine, Seigneuries which he had for his portion and inheritance. He bare the same Coate of Armes, as Charles of France did, Author of the first Branch of Aniou, which was de France L'Orle & Bordure de Gueulles, and the same are the Armes of the Branch of Valois, which did hold the Crowne of France, euer since Phillip de Valois, vnto King Henry, third of the name, of famous memorie.

Lewes the adopted Sonne to Iane the Queen of Naples & Sicille.

Monsieur Lewes of France, was adopted Sonne of Iane or Ioane, Queene of Naples and of Sicilie, and was inuested with the said Kingdomes in Auignion, in the Countie of Vensse, by Pope Clement, sixt of the name. Hee tooke to wife Mary, daughter to Charles de Blois, and to Iane of Bretaigne, called La Clope, that is to say, The Lame, or The Cripple (for in the old French Language, Clopin is tearmed Halting, Limping, or going Lamely, Inde Club-footed, as when one legge is shorter then the other.) By her he had a daughter, Yoland, first wife to Francis, first of the name, Duke of Bretaigne, and afterward two Sonnes. The yongest was Monsieur Charles of France, Prince of Tarentum. The said Lewes of France, King of Naples and of Sicilie, lieth at Bisegle, in the Kingdome of Naples, deceasing the twentieth day of September, in the yeare One thousand three hundred fourescore and foure, and after him succeeded his eldest Sonne.

Lewes of France King of Naples and Sicilie.

Lewes, second of the name, King of Naples and of Sicilie, who had to wife Yoland, daughter to Dom Iohn, King of Arragon, first of the name, and to Yoland de Bar, daughter to King Charles, called the Wise. Of this marriage issued three Sonnes, and one daughter, which was Mary of Sicilie, wife to our King Charles the seauenth, tearmed the Victorious. The said King Lewes the second, died in his Citie of Angiers, where he lieth enterred in the Cathedrall Church, in the yeare of Grace One thousand foure hundred and sixeteene: After whom succeeded his eldest Sonne

Lewes,

Lewes King of Sicilie.

Lewes, third of the name, King of Sicilie, who tooke to wife Mary, daughter to the Count of Sauoye, of whom hee left no issue: deceasing at Cosence in the Kingdome of Naples, One thousand foure hundred thirtie foure, and there succeeded him his second Brother

Iohn Duke of Calabria.

Rene, King of Sicilie and Duke of Anion, who had to wife in his first marriage Isabel, Ducheſſe of Lorraine and of Bar, and in this marriage was borne Iohn, Duke of Calabria, deceasing in the life time of his Father: leauing (neuertheleſſe) by Mary of Bourbon his wife, one Sonne and two Daughters, the yongeſt whereof was Margaret of Sicilie, married to Henry, King of England, Sixt of the name. And Yoland his eldeſt daughter, was wife to Rene of Lorraine, Count of Vaudemont, and Duke of Lorrain ſoon after. The Son was Nicholas, Marqueſſe du Pont, deceasing before he was maried.

In ſecond marriage King Rene eſpouſed Iane, daughter to the Count of Lanall, and Iſabell of Bretaigne; but by her he had no linage.

Coūt of Main and Mortaigne

Charles of Anion, laſt Sonne to King Lewes the ſecond, was Count of Maine and of Mortaigne: he tooke to wife Iſabel of Luxembourg, by whom he had a Sonne and a daughter. The Sonne was Charles, Count of Prouence, who died without any childe in his Fathers life time. The Daughter was Louiſa of Anion, wife vnto Iames of Armagnac, Duke of Nemours. So ended in daughters (falling to the Diſtaffe) this Second Branch of Anion.

King Lewes the eleauenth heire to Charls of Anion.

Charles, after the death of good King Rene his Brother (who had adopted him for his Sonne, and inſtituted him his ſole heire) tooke the Title of King of Sicilie. And ſeeing himſelfe deſtitute of Maſle iſſue; inſtituted as his heire vniuerſall, in the ſaid Kingdomes of Naples and Sicilie, as alſo the Countie of Prouence; King Lewes eleauenth of the name: who in regard of his Mother Mary of Anion (Sir-named of Sicilie) had right to the Kingdome of Arragon, and Counties of Cathalogna and Cerdaigna, of an hundred thouſand Florins of Gold, the Coyne of Arragon, aſſigned in Dowrie by Iohn, King of Arragon, to his Daughter Yoland of Arragon, wife to Lewes of Anion, ſecond of the name, King of Sicilie. Of which marriage was iſſued the ſaid Mary of Anion, Mother to King Lewes the eleauenth, as alſo appertained to the ſaid Lewes the eleauenth, on the behalfe of his Mother, the Seigneuries of Corſentania, Maghalon, Borgia, and many other, being in the Kingdomes of Arragon & Valentia, and Principalities of Cathalogna & Cerdargnia, aſſigned in Dowrie to Yoland de Bar, wife to the ſaid Iohn, King of Arragon. By the death of whom (without iſſue maſle) Martin his Brother had ſucceeded in the ſaid Kingdomes and Principalities: and ſo conſequently ſtood bound in the obligations, contracted by the late King his Brother, and his deedes and promiſes.

Yoland widdow to Iohn King of Arragon.

The donation of Yoland de Bar, Widdow to King Iohn of Arragon, made to the Queene of Sicilie, Mary of Anion, her Daughter, was dated in the Towne of Beaucaire the third day of May, One thouſand foure hundred thirtie two. Signed Yoland, Queene of Arragon, Donnareſſe, and Yoland, Queene of Hieruſalem & of Sicilie, Donatarie, and by the Notaries: in the preſence of Frances de Verly, Vice-Caſtillian, and Poteſtate Royall of Beaucaire.

The teſtification of the Queens Donation.

The Donation of the aboue named things, by the ſaid Yoland of Arragon, Queene of Ieruſalem and of Sicilie, made to her Daughter Mary of Anion, wife to King Charles the ſeauenth, and to their Sonne the Daulphine Lewes, eleaneth of the name: is receiued by Henry de Freſnoy, Notarie Apoſtolicall at Tours, paſſed in the Towne of Saulmur, in the Hoſtell of Stephen Bernard, otherwiſe called Moreau; Peter de Breze, Lord of Sairant, Knights: of Maiſter Gilles, Iudge of the Royaltie of Anion; Robert des Roches, Maiſter of the Kings Accounts; Iohn de la Poiſſonniere, Lieutenant to the Captaine of Angiers; And Alain Criceux, Preſident of the Accounts for the King of Sicilie, and dated the ſixteenth day of February, in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred thirtie and nine.

Monſieur Lewes of France, was inueſted in the Kingdomes of Hieruſalem, Naples and Sicilie, by Pope Clement the ſixt, and Buls giuen in Auignion, in the yeare One thouſand foure ſcore and two: vnder ſigned by the ſaid Pope, and by ſeauen Cardinalles. But it is neceſſarie to obſrue, as ſummarily as wee can deuiſe to doe, doe (becauſe the whole diſcourſe would riſe to a large volume) the ſubiect of the Armes, as alſo the Titles of the Kings of Hieruſalem, Naples and Sicilie, happening to the two Houſes of Aniou.

A brieſe Relation of the Armes and Titles belonging to the two Houſes of Aniou.

Neuſtria, now tearmed Normandie.

Raoul being come from Denmarke, vnder the declining of the ſecond Ligne of our Kings, and being made a Chriſtian of an Idolater, as formerly hee was; inueſted with Neuſtria, at this preſent called Normandie: was the Father to William, Father of Richard, Father of William and of Richard; who by a Concubine had three Sonnes, Richard, Raoull (that is Robert) and William.

Richard of Normandie, was Father to Tancred, who finding himſelfe charged with ſixe Maſle Children; encouraged them to runne the courſe of their fortune, with fraight and furniſhment of a Nauie. They ſailed into Italie, vnder conduct of their eldeſt Brother Guiſcardo of Normandie; who had for his Armes De Gueulles à la Bande Eſchiquetée d'Argent & d'Azur de Deux Traicts, the firſt Armes of Sicilie. This enterpriſe is counted vnder the yeare One thouſand foureſcore and eight; and yet neuertheleſſe, there is vncertainty of the yeares.

William with the Iron-Armie

Guiſcardo, or Robert, with his Bretheren Reger and William, called Fierabras, or Bras de Fer, for his valiancie, expelled the Sarrazins out of both the Sicilies: in the time of Pope Nicholas the ſecond, who created the ſaid Guiſcardo the firſt Duke of Apuglia, and Roger Duke of Sicilie, in the yeare One thouſand one hundred and one.

Rogero, Sonne to Roger, ſucceeded in the Dukedome of Apuglia, after the death of his Vncle Guiſcardo, and created him King of Sicilie, in the yeare One thouſand one hundred twentie nine, a moſt remarkeable date of this Inueſtiture.

The great ſeruices of Robert to the ſacred Seate.

But others are of opinion, that Robert before his death, performed great Seruices to the holy Seate, and that hee deliuered Pope Gregory, ſeauenth of the name, beſiedged in the Citie of Lyons (by Henry the Emperour of Germanie) and conducted the ſaid Pope in ſafetie to Salerno in Sicilie. That hee burned and ſacked the Citie of Rome, being reuolted againſt the Pope, and that in acknowledgement of ſo many famous Seruices receiued from this Robert: he infeoffed him in the Lands which he had conquered in Italie, as namely all Sicilie, Calabria and Campagnia of Rome; beſtowing on him the Title of a King, vnder certaine dues and debts, yearely payable to the Sacred Seate. And that after this Inueſtiture, the ſame Robert went to war vpon the Sarrazins in Greece, from whom he conquered Achaia, Durax, & part of Dalmatia. And that hauing receiued command from Pope Victor, the third (to: mented by the Emperor Henry) to come ſuccour him: he found that the ſaid Pope had bin poiſonned, and ſeeking to haue ſatisfaction in the caſe; he died of a burning Feauer, leauing behinde him two Sonnes.

His conqueſt of Achaia, Durax, and Dalmatia from the Sarrazins.

Boemond and Rogero. This Boemond being gone into Greece; his yonger Brother poſſeſſed himſelfe of the Succeſſion to his Father, which remained to him; in regard that Boemond affected rather to warre vpon the Sarrazins, and to follow Godfrey of Boulogne to the Conqueſt of Hieruſalem; then to returne backe againe into Sicilie.

The holy wars of Godfrey of Boulogne.

This Rogero had two Sonnes, William and Rogero, the eldeſt being dead in the Holy-Land: Rogero, without the conſent of Pope Innocent the ſecond, hauing ſtiled himſelfe King of Sicilie, was beſiedged by the Armie of the Church within Galuce, the Siedge being raiſed by William Duke of Calabria his Sonne. The Pope being taken priſoner, and conſtrained (for his deliuerance) to Crowne Rogero: he grew to agreement with him, onely to draw him to his ſeruice. It was this Rogero, that paſſed into Greece, to be a ſafe conduct to the King of France, Lewes, ſeauenth of the name, called the Pittifull, returning from the Holy-Land, ill entreated by the Emperor of Greece, Emanuel, who, in fauor of the Sarrazins, had wrought the death of a great number of the French, by mingling a poiſoned plaſter among the Meale which was sent to the Christian Armie. In reuenge of which detestable iniurie, Rogero proclaimed warre against him.

William succeeded after his Father Rogere.

After Rogero, succeeded his Sonne William, who made warre vpon Pope Alexander the third, and from whom he tooke many places, belonging to the demeanes of the Church: in regard that he would nor Crown him King, which he was compelled to doe within a while after.

The last King of Sicilie of the Norman race.

Next to him succeeded his Sonne, named William likewise, a valiant and courageous Prince, who warred very powerfully in fauour of the Church, vpon the Emperour of Germanie, Fredericke the first, and on him of Constantinople, conquering from him the Citie of Sidonia. He was called The good King William, and deceased without issue; being the last King of Sicilie, descending from the Stocke of the Dukes of Normandie. And by his death, the Kingdome of Sicilie returned to the Seate Apostolicall.

And yet notwithstanding, Tancred, a Bastard Sonne to William, Father of the last King, contemning the holy Seate, possessed himselfe of Sicilie. But to resist against him, Pope Celestine called the Emperour of Germanie, Henry the sixt, Sonne to the Emperour Fredericke Barba-Rossa, sworne enemie to the Popes of his time, and tooke out of the Monasterie of Saint Clare at Palermo in Sicilie, Constance, Sister to the last King William (albeit she was a professed Nunne, and aged fiftie yeares) yet he vn-nailed her, and gaue her as wife to the said Emperour Henry, sixt of the name, with the Inuestiture in the Kingdome of Sicilie. This Emperour being of the house of the Dukes of Suaba, Portort d'Argent à Trois Leopards de Sable, l'vne sur l'autre: and carried not them of Sicilie, borne by the Normans; howbeit, in right of Constance his wife, he was the fift King of the said Kingdome.

Of this marriage issued their onely Sonne, bearing the name of his Father Fredericke of Suaba, sixt King of Sicilie, who afterward was Emperour of Germanie, second of the name; a great enemie to the Popes, for the dispensation granted by them to his Mother Constance, in putting off her holy habite, forsaking Religion, and returning to the vanities of the world.

Yoland of Ierusalem married to Fredericke the second.

This Fredericke the second had three Wiues; Yoland of Ierusalem, in which marriage, some make to be borne Henry, King of Ierusalem, in regard of his Mother, and (soone after) elected Emperour of Germanie, seauenth of the name, whom the Germaine Chronicles auouch to be elected against his Father, causing him to be betraied, and to die in prison, hauing reigned eight yeares. But others doe hold, that in this marriage was borne Conrarde (which is the more certaine opinion) who was after the death of Fredericke his Father, King of Sicilie, and of Ierusalem.

Iohn de Brenne King of Ierusalem.

Now, marriage thus made with the said Yoland, it was couenanted by Iohn de Brenne, King of Ierusalem, on the behalfe, or with consent of Mary of Ierusalem his wife, Mother to this Yoland; that the said Fredericke the second, should haue with his wife the Kingdome of Ierusalem, with this condition, that so soone as possibly he could, he should Arme himselfe for the Conquest thereof, which should remaine to him and his Children, descendant Kings of Naples and Sicilie. And hence it came, that the Kings holding and pretending right to the Realmes of Naples and Ierusalem, stiled themselues likewise Kings of Ierusalem, and bare their Armes for Enquirie: D'Argent à la Croix Potence, Cantonnee de quatre Croisettes d'Or. And for our better vnderstanding the Genealogie of the Kings of Ierusalem; it is very necessary for vs, to begin in this manner.

How the Kings of Naples and Sicilie tooke the Kings of Ierusalem.

The Pedegree or Genealogie of the Kings of Ierusalem.

1. Godfrey of Boulegne (Sonne to Eustace of Boulogne) a French Prince, chosen chiefe in that most famous enterprise, for the recouery of Ierusalem: was the first Latine King of Ierusalem, hauing conquered it from the Sarazins the fifteenth day of July, in the yeare One thousand foure hundred and nineteene. He Reigned but one yeare, and had for Successour.

2. Baldwine

2. Bauldwine of Boulogne his Brother, Second King of Ierusalem; who raigned Eighteene yeares and then Succeeded after him

3. Bauldwine, Second of the name, Count of Rethell, or of Monts, who raigned Thirteene yeares leauing behind him but one Daughter

4. Margaret, married to Foulques Count of Aniou, in right of his Wife, he being the Fourth King of Ierusalem. And hauing raigned Eleuen yeares left the Kingdome to his Sonne

5. Bauldwine, Third of the name, who raigned Twenty yeares, and left the Kingdome to his Sonne

6. Amaury, whose Raigne continued eleuen yeares. Hee had for Sonne and Successor

Bauldwine, Sirnamed the Leaper.

7. Bauldwine, Fourth of the name, Sirnamed the Meazeled or Leaprous, because hee was a Lazar, and raigned but Three yeares, leauing the Kingdome of Ierusalem to his Nephew, the Sonne of his eldest Sister Sybilla.

8. Bauldwine, Fifth of the name, who raigned but Eight Monethes, and dyed at the Age of Two Yeares. And by his death, the Crowne of Ierusalem came to

9. Isabell, Sister to Bauldwine the Leaper, who had fiue Husbands.

The Noble & Royall House of Lusignan.

The Third whereof was Conrard, Marquesse of Montferrat, and in this Marriage was borne a Daughter named Mary. The Fourth Husband was Henry de Champagne, and the Fifth Amaury de Lusignan, in which Marriage were borne Hugh and Iohn. Of whom and of their Descendants, wee will speake (by Gods assistance) in the Tract of the Order of the Sword: Instituted by that ancient and Royall House of Lusignan.

Iohn de Brenne, espoused Mary of Montferrat, in the right of whom, hee entituled himselfe King of Ierusalem, and by her hee had two Daughters, to wit; Yoland, married to Henry the Second, the Subiect of this digression: And the other Daughter named Martha, was married to Bauldwine de Courtenay, tearmed of Auxerre, Fift and last Emperour of Constantinople of the Latine name: who tooke the Title and Armes of King of Ierusalem, according as did the Kings of Cyprus, Sirnamed of Lusignan.

Conrard, First of the Name King of Ierusalem.

After Fredericke Succeeded his Sonne Conrard, First of the name, King of Ierusalem, Naples, and Sicilie; who was poysoned by Mainfroy, Bastard Sonne to the said Frederick. He was likewise stifled or smothered by the same Mainfroy, in hatred and despight, that he had instituted the said Conrard his Sonne to be his sole Heyre.

Mainfroy vsurped Naples and Sicilie.

Against this Conrard arose Mainfroy, and possessed himselfe of the Kingdomes of Naples and of Sicilie: but in opposition of him, the Popes (according to their wonted manner) made their recourse to the house of France. Mainfroy was excommunicated for his vsurpation ouer the Fiefe of the Church: As it is written at the Chapter, Ad Apostolicæ de Re Iudic. and dying so, was cast forth vpon prophane ground, without any other Buriall.

Pope Vrbane inuested with the said Kingdomes of Naples and Sicilie, Monsieur Charles of France, Count of Anion and of Maine by Appennage, and in Right of his Wife Beatrix, Fourth Daughter to Raymond of Prouence, and Beatrix of Sauoye Count of Prouence.

Ierusalem, Naples, and Sicilie enfeoffed to the House of Aniou.

After the decease of this Pope Vrbane, Fourth of the Name, Pope Clement the Fourth his Successor, continued the appointment of his Predecessor: infeoffing the said Kingdomes of Ierusalem, Naples, and Sicilie, to the same Charles of Anion, Brother to the good King Saint Lewes, perpetually for him and his Successors, Heyres Females as well as Males, which should descend in the direct Ligne of Marriage. And through want or defect of them, hee willed and ordained, that the Children of France should Succeed in them, as appeareth by the Bull of the said Inuestiture giuen at Perugia, the Fourth of the Calends of March, and in the First Yeare of the Pontificality of the same Pope Clement. Of which Bull, mention is made by Iohannes Andreas in the nouell addition to the former alleadged Chapter, Ad Apostolicæ. Notwithstanding this Inuestiture made to Monsieur Charles of France, Count of Anion, there were some Prelates, who fauouring the part of Mainfroy, were degraded, ded and depriued of their Prelatures and Dignities, by the same Pope Clement: as it is obserued by the Speculatour at the Chapter de Accusationib. Deponitur autem quis.

Charles crowned King with his Queene in Rome.

Saint Lewes, by the aduise of his Counsell, gaue a puissant Armie to Monsieur Charles of Aniou, his Brother, who accompanied with Beatrix of Prouence his wife, went into Italie: where he was welcommed, and Crowned (with his wife) King of Ierusalem, and of both the Sicilies, the one beyond the Pharos of Messina, which is properly Sicilie, and the other on this side, being otherwise more vsually tearmed the Kingdome of Naples.

A matter well worthy the obseruation.

It appeareth to me, that there hath bin some fatalitie, or matter so appointed by destenie (if we may be allowed to speake so) depending on the Sonnes of France, and of the Sir-name of Aniou: to be called to rule and beare swaie in straage and remote Kingdomes. For this Monsieur Charles of France, Count of Anion, Brother to the said King Saint Lewes, was called to this Kingdome of Sicilie. And his Ligne being fallen to the Distaffe, another Monsieur Charles of France, first Duke of Anion, Brother to our King Charles the fift, was called to the same Kingdomes. And, in our time, Monsieur Henry of France, Duke of Aniou, Brother to King Charles the ninth, was called to the Kingdome of Poland. Here then we are truely giuen to vnderstand, that all their Conquests haue bin to little or none effect, and whereof France neuer receiued any aduantage or benefit, though it hath made profuse expence of her monies, and buried them in the appointments of warre farre enough off. Yet not through any lacke of valiancie, but rather of wise Councell, and prouident foresight for keeping our Conquests; wherein I hold it for an assured maxime, that the whole glorie and honour of a Prince doth consist. For, if in meane things

Non minor est Virtus, quàm quærere parta tueri:

By farre greater reason then, ought State affaires to be held in admiration. Distance of places, are no warrantable essoines or excuses, but by cowardise. Our neighbours (since those times) haue possessed the inheritances of the Lillies, and brought vnknown people vnder their obedience; while in deuisions, and nice points of honor (the imaginary subiect of our fights and Duelles:) we make our selues contemptible to Strange Nations. Serua Lilium.

The victory obtained by Charles at Beneuentum

Charles then, after the Inuestiture of his new Kingdome, marched against his enemie Mainfroy; whom he ouercame, and slew in a ranged Battaile neere to Beneuentum, in the Moneth of February, the yeare of Grace One thousand two hundred threescore and sixe. As wee learne by these riming Verses, formed according to the times then, reported in the Manuscript Chronicle of Simon de Montfort.

Carolus Athleta Christi, prout ante Cometa
Hæc præsignauit, Manfredum suppeditauit.
Plus Decies Centum quater iuxta Beneuentum
Victor prostrauit. Hic Ecclesiam releuauit.
Sunt anni Christi Victoria cum datur isti,
Mille Ducentenus Sexagenus quoque Senus,
Belli sit finis, Februi lux tertia finit.

Conradine vanquished by the French Armie, by the Charles of Aniou.

The same Pope Clement made the said Charles of Aniou, Lord of Tuscanie; And gaue him the titles of Vicare of the Empire, Gouernour of Rome, and chiefe Standard bearer of the Church.

This Victorie thus wonne against Mainfroy, was seconded with another: For, after the death of Mainfroy in the said Battaile, his wife and children clapt vp in prison, whereto Charles had confined them: Conradine, within some few yeares after (solliciter thereto by certaine of the Gibelines) went to Italie with an Armie of Germanie, supplied with the Italian Gibelines, where neere vnto Arezzo hee vanquished the French Armie. But in another Battaile, whereat Charles was himselfe in person, Conradine was foiled, neere to the Citie of Alba, and Lancia Fuscina, in the Field called (to this day) The Field of Lillies. In a disguised habite, seeking to shift for for himselfe, hee was taken, and conducted thence to Naples: Which Victorie happened in the yeare One thousand two hundred threescore and seauen.

About two yeares after, by the meanes of bad Councellours, Charles was procured, to soyle his hands in the Bloud of Conradine and his friends. Vpon this perswasion: Mors Conradini Vita Caroli. Whereupon, Charles caused Conradines head to be smitten off; as also Fredericke of Austria his Cousine, and many other great Lords, that tooke part with Conradine, this being done with detestable cruelty: but Henry Bother to Alphonso King of Castile, he was still detained prisoner.

The death of Conradine, his securitie of life to Charles.

By this Victory, King Charles of Anion saw himselfe (for some time) in peaceable possession of his Estates of Naples and Sicilie: but this repose became the cause of following warre. For the French gaue themselues to all kindes of insolencies and youthfull vanities, especially in the Ile of Sicilie, where they made it a matter of triumph, to corrupt the Chastity of Wiues and Maides, and namely such as were of the very best Houses, perswading themselues, that all this lubricity and dissolution, was lawfull in them, and without impunity.

Ease and Idlenes are the causes of all euils.

The Wife to the Physitian of King Mainfroy, hauing beene one of this abused number: her Husband being a man of courage well aduised, and a great Lord in Sicilie, could not digest such a foule offence; which a man of honour can hardly endure, without reuenging his wrong at what rate soeuer it bee. This Physition called himselfe Iohn de Prochida, a Native of the City of Salerne, in Sicilie, (sometimes renowned for a Schoole of Physicke, according as Montpellier in France) but originally of the Ile of Prochida, neere to Naples. Hee resolued with himselfe to root out the French from Sicilie, which he brought to effect.

Iohn of Prochida, Physition to King Mainfroy, an enemy to the French in Sicilie.

Hee compassed the meanes to set saile for Arragon, his Voyage being intended to the King Dom Pedro, Third of the Name, who had marryed Constance of Suaba, Daughter to King Mainfroy, ouercome and slaine in Battell. Hee solicited him to make preparation for the Conquest of Sicilie, where hee should bee fauoured and respected by all the Inhabitants, who could no longer support the Insolencies of the French. The King of Arragon had not the reines strong enough in his owne Hand, to vndertake such an enterprise out of his owne Countrey: For hee should need a powerfull Nauall Armie, and bottomlesse bagges of money, to fit and furnish such an expedition.

Dom Pedro the Third King of Arragon, sollicited for the Conquest of Sicilie.

Prochida disguised in the Habit of a begging Fryer, made his passe to Constantinople, where hee compassed to haue speech with the Emperour, Michael Paleologus, a Captaill Enemy to the French; hee perceiued (albeit very enuiously) the prosperous successe of King Charles of Anion, whose neere neighbourhood was nothing welcome to him. Of him he obtained fauourable respect, and money to discharge a potent Nauall Army, on the behalfe of Dom Pedro of Arragon. In briefe, Prochida went to Rome, and conferred with Pope Nicholas, Third of the Name, borne in the City of Rome, a deadly enemy to the French; who gaue him assurance to inuest the said King of Arragon in the Realme of Sicilie; whither the same Prochida still iourneyed like a Gray Fryer, and prepared all the affaires fitting to King Pedroes minde, and according to his owne purposed reuenge. These goings and comings were performed within the compasse of two yeares.

Michael Paleologus, Emperour of Constantinople, ta-uoureth Prochidaes effect.

But during these entercourses, Pope Nicholas dyed, after whom succeeded in the Pontificall dignity, Pope Martin, Fourth of the name, a great friend and fauourer of the French.

To sound the bottome of his Soule, King Pedro sent to his Holinesse Hugo de Mataplana, (borne in Cathalogna) as his Ambassadour, and in outward appearance (to cover his intended Voyage) to request the Canonization of Fryer Raymond of Pegnafort Inquisitor of Arragon and Cathalogna, against the Albigeois, Heretiques of his Prouinces. For hee dyed with great renowne of sanctity of life, and was Author of the Monasticall Order de la Merced, for the Redemption of Captiues, detained by the Moores of Affrica. The men of this Order went cloathed all in white, wearing on their breast a Crowne of Red Cloth, or of Siluer gilded ouer, with the Armes of Arragon: Au Chef de Gueules à la Croix partie d'Argent. They are to be seene at Paris, in the Chappell de Braque, before the Hostell de Guise.

Hugo de Mataplana, Ambassadour to Pope Martin the Fourth, from King Pedro.

Saint Augustine, Bishop of Hippo.

This Fleete departed from Tortosa in Spaine, to saile all along the Coast of Africa, and to take in fresh water at Bonna, heretofore called Hippo, or Hippona, famous by S. Augustine, that worthy Light in Gods Church, and Bishop thereof; and then to take Port in the Ile of Corsegua, in expectation of tydings from Sicilie, from whence King Charles was absent in Tuscany.

Bon iour, Bonn Comere.

Prochida got possession of the Shippes and Vessels belonging to King Charles, which were in the Ports of Messina and Palermo. And on the sollemne day of Easter, One Thousand, Two Hundred, Foure Score and Two, at fiue of the Clocke in the Euening (A good Day, A good Deeede) through all the Cities, Townes, Bourgades, and Villages of Sicilie: all the French had their throats cut, were massacred, and murdered, without distinction either of Age or Sexe. All the Women which were thought to bee conceiued with Childe by the French, had their wombes ript vp, and their fruite dashed against the walles; all the Streets ran with bloud through all Sicilie.

A bloudy Sicilian Euen-song to the French vpon Easter day, 1282.

At sound of the Bell to this Sicilian Euen-song, Dom Pedro King of Arragon landed in the Port of Palermo, where he was welcommed by the Sicilians, (with extraordinary reioycing) as their Prince, and they caused him to bee crowned King of Sicilie, in the said Citie of Palermo, the Tenth of May, in the same yeare, One Thousand, Two Hundred, Foure Score and Two.

Vpon receipt of these sad newes, King Charles (in all haste) made his recourse to the Holy Father Martin the Fourth; who detesting the perfidious dealing of Pedro of Arragon, and the Sicilians: excommunicated them, according to the forme practised by the Church. Pedro of Arragon contemned these Censures; but the Sicilians within some few yeares after, sent their Ambassadors to the Pope, to plead their excuse by the extraordinary insolencies of the French, and to require their absolution, albeit in a remarkable manner.

Pedro of Arragon and the Sicilians excommunicated.

For they being arriued at Rome, and presented to the Pope, fell on their knees at his feete, vling this Prayer to him, which appertaineth to none but God only. Agnus Dei, qui tollis peccata Mundi, miserere nobis. Lambe of God, which takest away the sinnes of the World, haue mercy vpon vs: repeating the same three seuerall times, and at the fourth, said; Da nobis pacem: Grant vs peace. Which the Pope did, remitting their offence; although the cruelty of the crime, deserued an exemplary punishment and correction.

Abhominable blasphemy.

Charles, to recouer Sicilie againe, went and besieged Messina; but to no purpose or effect. And Dom Pedro of Arragon, taking good order for this his new Conquest, left to gouerne in Sicilie, Queene Constance his Wife and his three Children. Hee established also a Councell of State in the Iland, wherein gouerned (by title of highest Iustice) Adamus Leontinus, John Procheda, Author of the Sicilian Euen-song, Willelmus Galferanus, a Cathelane, and Rogerus de Loria, his Admirall, to whose charge hee left a Fleete of Fiue and Twenty Gallies, in each whereof, was appointed two Captaines, one a Cathelane, and the other an Italian. The Soldiers all Cathelanes, the Marriners Italians and Cathelanes, the Gally Slaues all Italians; which being thus done, Dom Pedro of Arragon passed into Spaine.

The foure supreame Magistrates of Sicilie vnder the Queene and her Children.

Pope Martin, hauing excommunicated the Realmes of Arragon and Valentia, and the Counties of Catalogna and Cerdaignia, to Monsieur Charles of France, Count of Valois, youngest Sonne to the King of France, Philip the Hardie, Third of the name. For and against the thunder of this Excommunication, there were riming Verses of those times made, which flew through all the corners of Christendome. Concerning them of the Pope which touched his power, and passed vnder his name, these were they.

The Kingdomes of Arragon and Valencia excommunicated.

In Defence of the King of Arragon, against the Censures of the Pope; these went abroad vnder the Kings fauour and name.

Non me iustifico, sed forte reum te dico,
Sed pro Catholico me iudico Legis amico,
Cur ita pro modico me damnas illico, dico,

This Pedro of Arragon, to auoid the iust Armes of King Charles, which throughout all his Prouinces of Anion, of Maine, Prouence, and in Italy hee had leuyed, to make vp a potent Armie, bethought himselfe of a Warre-subtilty, disloyall and perfidious.

Stratagems of policy in War are reputed lawfull.

Dolus an virtus, quis in hoste requirat?

Hee caused it to bee made knowne to King Charles, that, to make spare of mens bloud, is the best beseeming part in Christian Princes, and expedient to decide the matter betweene them, either man to man, or an hundred to an hundred of their house and Court: the quarrell for the Kingdome of Sicilie, should remaine at the charge of him that proued the Victor, as the Prize and Trophe of the Victory; without (at any time after) the vanquished should retaine Armes, nor name of King of Sicilie, or pretend right so much as to an handfull of Land in all the Ile. Charles accepted this Combate, which was appointed before the City of Bourdeaux, then held vnder the homage of France, by the King of England, the Seauen and Twentieth Day of May, One Thousand, Two Hundred, Foure Score and Three.

A Combate intended for the Kingdome of Sicilie.

Pope Martin did all that possibly lay in him, to hinder and breake off this Combate, which was vtterly forbidden by the Church. And so much the rather, because the Kingdome of Sicilie depended vpon the Sacred Seate, by the Donation which was made thereof by King Charlemaigne. In which respect, neither could Pedro King of Arragon lawfully offer this combate at extremity of life, nor Charles accept it. Because the maine point of this difference, depended on the onely knowledge and allowance of the Pope, and the Kingdome ought to remaine in his power and prerogatiue, to giue it with open hand, to him whom the Pope should iudge best worthy of it.

A Prerogatiue of strange and large allowance.

Hereupon there was found out a Decretall of this Pope Martin the Fourth, sent to King Charles, and beginning with these words. Carolo Regi Siciliæ Illustri. His quas sinceræ charitatis zelus afficit, &c. Finishing with these that follow. Nulli tamen The words of the Popes Decretall. deroga turo in eiusdem Sedis priuilegio, vel indulto cuiuscunque tenoris, vel expressionis existant, quo ad id omnino viribus vacuantes. By this hee manifested to him, That all

Duells

The Popes vtter disallowance of Duelloes & Combates.

Duells and Combates are prohibited. That Sicilie depended vpon the holy Seate, and being so, the Duell for strife about this Iland, could neither bee challenged, nor accepted. That Combates were Diabolicall, and the Kings of Arragon had not any right in Sicilie, nor could the Kingdome bee put to compromise. Moreouer, that it was an infallible note of fayling in courage, to fight in single Combate; for hee denied all grace and pardon to such as fought after Duells, opposing himselfe plainly against the parties, proclaiming, that such people were Anathematized, Excommunicated, and meerly accursed to all eternity.

The reading of this Decretall is very remarkable, and therefore wee will speake more at large thereof; in the Chapter concerning Duels; as well to stop the mouths of some ill-instructed in Faith, who are not ashamed to write, that this Combate was authorized by the Pope, a thing vnbefitting a Christian High Priest, these are the very words: as also to make a true representation, concerning the vniust vsurpation of the Kingdome of Sicilie, done by this Pedro of Arragon, and his Successors against the Princes of France, to whom it was giuen by the Apostolicke Seate, with that of Naples, paying an Annuall Quit-rent of Eight Thousand Ounces of Gold, which make fourescore thousand Crowns of French money, with a white Hackney beside. This Quit-rent was paid before the Sacke or Surprisall of Rome, done by the Emperour Charles the Fifth, who drew from Pope Clement and his Cardinals Prisoners with him in the Castle of Saint Angelo, the abolishing of this yearely payment, and all the arrearages which were due, amounting so high, as Charles the Fifth was not able to pay. Moreouer, hee procured from the same Pope, that (alwayes afterward) both he & his Successors Kings of Naples, should not pay to the Popes for all debts and duties, yea, and yearely Quit-rents, any thing but the white Hackney only. Beside, he exacted from the said Pope Clement and Cardinalls (to set them at liberty) the summe of foure hundred thousand Duckats in Siluer, and all the fairest priuiledges, belonging to the Patrimony of Saint Peter.

Sicilie & Naples giuen by the Holy Sea to the Princes of France, and afterward recouered by Charles the Fift, Emperor.

Heereby wee may perceiue (as a matter most notorious) that the Kingdomes of Naples and of Sicilie, had beene vniustly vsurped from the House of France, lawfully inuested in them: becausé the Princes of France had conquered them from Infidels and other Nations, enemies to the holy Seate, as wee said in the beginning of this Tract. And yet notwithstanding, the learned Cardinall Cæsar Baronius, hauing some few yeares past made a Discourse, concerning the vsurpation of Sicilie by the Kings of Arragon, against the Seate Apostolicall: Dom Philip, Third of the name, at this present King of Spaine, caused the said Booke to bee burned, throughout all the Townes of Sicily, with prohibition, vnder paine of life, to all them of his Realmes, Countryes and Seigneuries vnder his obedience, to read or keepe them.

Pope Leo de Medicis, Eleauenth of the name.

In like manner, after the death of Pope Leo de Medicis, Eleauenth of the name, the same Cardinall Baronius, hauing had the voyces of many Cardinalls to preferre it to the Sacred Seate: the Cardinall d'Auila, principall Agent for Spaine at Rome, stirred vp all ancient acknowledgements, and hindred it to his vtmost power, as not allowing any vsurpation of the Kingdome of Sicilie.

Now notwithstanding this Decretall of Pope Martin, King Charles, who from Italy, was passed into France; fayled not to appeare at the Day before the City of Bourdeaux, with an hundred Knights, all of them very well prepared. Long time he attended there for his enemy, who appeared not, vntill fiue daies after, when he well vnderstood the retreat of Charles. For then it was when Pedro of Arragon, being come from Spayne in a disguised habite, came and presented himselfe in the Field for Battell, brauing his enemy, that he durst not looke him in the face. Hauing thus made his presentment like a Foxe, protesting in the absence of King Charles to Iohn de Greaille, Captan de Buch, Gouernour of Bourdeaux, and Seneshall of Guienne, for the King of England: that he would leaue his Armes for the Combate with him, as his wages and due, to wit his Helmet, Shield, Lance and Sword. And so returned in haste to Arragon, with two of his people, who accompanied him, in sted of an hundred men at Armes, according to the former agreement.

The manner of the Combate proposed by Pedro of Arragon.

Roger de Loria Admirall for Arragon.

During the Voyage of King Charles into France, the Admirall Rogero de Loria, a Calabrian, on the behalfe of Arragon, put a Fleete to the Sea, consisting of Fiue and Forty of fiue and forty Gallies, which hee vnmoored from Sicily, and rifled all the Coasts of Naples; continuing some space before it, to draw forth to fight the Prince of Salerne Charles, called the Cripple, only Sonne to the King. This young Prince ill conducted, and forgetting the command of his Father, who had charged him not to leaue the City, would needs with fixe and thirty Gallies, aduenture to pursue his Enemy, who was very expert and skilfull in Nauall affaires. Hee inuested the Prince, tooke him Prisoner with a great number of Princes and Lords, as also nine Gallies, which hee tooke with him to Messina: where the Prisoners, some had their heads smitten off, others kept in Prison, and slaine within a few dayes after. The Prince of Salerne was sent Prisoner into Cathalogna, where euery day he stood on the point of beheading.

The Cripple Prince of Salerno taken Prisoner.

King Charles leuyed an Army in Prouence, where hee heard the sad tydings of his Sonnes surprizall, in so fondly aduenturing at Naples, hee being ready to dye with conceit of greefe, as soone after hee did the Seauenth day of Ianuary, in the yeare of Grace One Thousand, Two Hundred, Foure Score and Foure, and lyeth buried in the Cathedrall Church of Naples. By reason of his death, the Gouernment of the Kingdome, and Children to the Prince of Salerne, detained prisoner; was giuen to Robert, Count of Artois, who very faithfully performed his charge.

The death of King Charles of Anion.

King Philip the Hardie prepared an Armie both by Sea and Land, intending to conquer the Kingdome of Arragon, and other Seigneuries beside, giuen by the Pope to Monsieur Charles of France, Count of Valois his Second Sonne. The Nauall Army was conducted by Enguerran de Bailleul, Lord of Coucy, First Admirall of France by title of Office.

The first Admirall of France.

The Land Armie was led by the King in person, accompanied with Philip le Bell, his Eldest Sonne, as also by John Cholet, Cardinall of Saint Cecilie (Legate to the Pope) Founder of the Colledge Des Cholets at Paris: by Raoule de Neesle Constable, and John de Harcour, Marshall of France, and likewise the greatest that were in the Kingdome.

From Narbonna the Land Armie marched directly to Perpignan, which appertained to Dom Iames of Arragon King of Maiorica, Brother to Dom Pedro, King of Arragon.

The Land and Nauall Armies prepared against Dom Pedro of Arragon.

And the Sea Forces Anchored at the Port des Roses d'Ampuries, & de Collioure: from whence they sailed with a full winde before the City of Geneway la Superba, which was surprized in the assault, the Inhabitants being put to the edge of the Sword, as excommunicated persons, for fauouring the part of Pedro of Arragon. At the taking whereof they had some prisoners, the principall of them being the Bastard of Roussillon.

From Perpignan the French Army passed Le Pertuch, descending thence to Ioncquiere; Higuieres was taken in the assault by Philip le Bell, Sonne to the King, and Gironna besiedged: the Towne and City very strongly Seated, so that they sustained the fury of the French with most valiant courage, during the space of two Moneths, and vntil the death of Dom Pedro of Arragon, when they yeelded themselues to the French: who much sooner had beene Maisters of them, but by the treason of the Bastard of Roussillon, prisoner with the French.

The proceedings of the French Army

The Vigill or Euening of mid-August, during the Siedge of Gironna, a Towne and Cathedrall City of Cathalogna; Dom Pedro of Arragon, being aduertised of a Conuoy of victuals and money to pay the wages of the French Army: put himselfe into an Ambuscado, with Fiue Hundred Horse, and Two Thousand Fantassins, to make sure thereof, so soone as they should descend from the Gallies of France, which made the Conuoy from Narbonna, to the Port des Roses, and from thence by Land to Gironna.

Soldiours on foote.

Raule de Neesle, Constable of France, Iohn de Harcour, Marshall, and the Count de la March, tooke Fiue Hundred French Horse, and by the breake of day, threw themselues on Pedro of Arragon, cut in pieces the most part of his Troopes; yea, and wounded him in such sort, that hee dyed within three dayes after at Villefranque, inthe Moneth of August, One Thousand, Two Hundred, Foure Score and Fiue.

for his Ranſome the Summe of Twenty Thouſand Markes, to Alphonſo King of Arragon; the Brother of whom (named Iames) publiſhed himſelfe King of Sicily, by the death of Pedro of Arragon their Father. After his deliuerance, Charles went into France, where hauing gathered an Army, conducted by Amarie of Narbonna (of whom is ſaid to deſcend the Vicounts of S. Girons, neere to S. Lize, a City of Cazarans in Comenges) hee returned into Italy, was Crowned King at Rome of both the Sicilies, by Pope Nicholas Fourth of the name, in the yeare, One Thouſand, Two Hundred, Foure Score and Nine. Hee tooke for Armes the ſaid Kingdomes of Naples and Sicilie, as alſo of Ieruſalem; Party de France ſans nombre au Lambeau de Gueules, and Iames terming himſelfe King of Sicilie, retained as his Armes thoſe of Arragon, which were, D Or à Quatre Paulx de Gueules Flanquees de celles de Mainfroy, le Baſtard, who bare D'Argent à deux Aigles de Sable, the Armes of Sicily, which they of Arragon haue euer ſince retained.

Iames ſtiling himſelfe King of Sicilie his Armes.

The Iſſue of Charles the Second, hauing nine Sonnes.

Charles the Second had Nine Sonnes, and Fiue Daughters, by Mary Daughter to Stephen King of Hungaria.

The Eldeſt Sonne was Charles, Sirnamed Martell, Crowned King of Hungary after the death of King Stephen his Grand-father, he dyed in the life time of his father and Mother.

The Second Sonne was Lewes of Sicilie, a Gray Fryer, Biſhop of Toloſa, deceaſing the Nineteenth day of Auguſt, in the yeare, One Thouſand, Two Hundred, Foure Score and Seauenteene. His Body lyeth buried at the Gray Fryers of Marſeilles, Canonized by the Pope Iohn the Two and Twentieth.

The Third Sonne was Robert Duke of Calabria, and King of Naples and Sicilie after his father.

Philip, Prince of Tarentum was the Fourth, Father to Charles Prince of Morea, ſlaine on the day at Montcatin: and to Philip of Tarentum, Husband to Beatrix of Bourbon, Daughter to Lewes the firſt Duke of Bourbon, and of this Marriage iſſued three Sonnes, Robert, Lewes and Philip, all three dying without Children.

The Fift Sonne was Iohn, Duke of Duras, Prince of Morea, dying young likewiſe.

The Sixt was Triſtram, borne in Cathalogna, during the impriſonment of his Father.

The Seauenth was Raymond Berengarius, Regent of the Vicariat.

The Eight, was Lewes, who was Duke of Duras: And the laſt was Peter of Sicilie, Sirnamed the Tempeſtuous, Duke of Grauina.

He had likewiſe nine Daughters.

The Daughters were, Margaret, Firſt Wife to Monſieur Charles of France, Count of Valois, who had in Marriage with her (as we haue already ſaid) the Counties of Anion, and of Maine. The Second was Blanche, Wife to Iames, King of Arragon. The Third Eleanor, Wife to Frederick, tearming himſelfe King of Sicily. The Fourth Mary, Wife to Iames, King of Maiorca. And the laſt was Beatrix of Sicily, Wife to Azzo, Marqueſſe d'Eſte, and Lord of Ferrara.

Charles Martell King of Hungaria.

Charles Martell, the Eldeſt Sonne, Crowned King of Hungary, had to Wife Clementia, Daughter to the Emperour Rodolphe, or Raoul, called the Red; and of her hee begot a Sonne and a Daughter; Clementia of Hungary, Wife to Lewes Hutin, Second of the name, King of France and of Nauarre.

Charles Robert Charobert.

The Sonne was Charles Robert, called by abbreuiation Charobert; who had three Sonnes, to wit, Lewes, King of Hungary, Andrew, King of Sicily by his Wife, the firſt Ioane, Queene of Sicilie; and the laſt was Stephen of Hungary. Theſe two latter named dyed, without hauing any Iſſue. The Eldeſt Stephen, Marquis of Brandenbourg.

Lewes, King of Hungary, left but a Daughter, Mary Queene of Hungary; Wife to Stephen, Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg, Sonne to the Emperour Charles, Fourth of the name, King of Bohemia, who was Emperour after his Father, and King of Bohemia, and of Hungary, by his Wife.

And thus this Branch came to the Houſe of France, holding the Crowne of Hungary (entred by the Wife) into the Houſe of Luxembourg, iſſued of Luſignan, and comming in like manner of France.

Robert, Third Sonne to Charles the Second, and the Cripple, held the Realme of Sicilie by Sentence of Pope Clement the Fift: who preferred to that Kingdome this this Robert Vncle to Charobert of Hungary, his Nephew, according to the contained of the Decretall, inſerted at the Clementines. He had to Wife Donna Conſtance of Arragon, Daughter to Dom Pedro, Fourth of the name, King of Arragon, and of Mary the Infanta of Nauarre, by whom he had one Sonne named Charles of Sicilie, who was Duke of Calabria, and who eſpouſed Mary of Valois, Daughter to Monſieur Charles of France, Count of Valois, by whom hee had no Iinage. By his Second Wife hee had three Daughters, and the ſaid Charles dyed Duke of Calabria, in the life time of King Robert his father.

Of Ioane, the firſt Queene of Sicily, and her foure Husbands.

The Eldeſt of the Daughters (the other are no way pertinent to this Diſcourſe) was Ioane Queene of Sicilie, Firſt of the name, who had foure Husbands. The firſt was Andrew of Hungaria, as we haue formerly ſaid, but him ſhe cauſed to be ſtrangled. The ſecond was Lewes of Tarentum, Sonne to Philip of Sicilie, Prince of Tarentum, Brother to the King of Sicilie, Robert.

This Lewes was (by his Wife) ſtiled King of Naples and of Sicilie, and among other benefits, him he had by her the Seigneurie and Vicounty of Keilhane in Prouence, which ſhe gaue in the yeare, One Thouſand, Three Hundred, Forty and Nine; ſold by him to the Lord of Darcigny, from whom alſo this Seigneurie paſſed to them of the houſe of Boliers. In her third Marriage ſhe eſpouſed Iames of Tarraſcon, Sonne to the King of Maiorca, whom ſhe called nothing but Duke of Calabria: And her fourth Husband was Otho, Duke of Brunſwicke. Yet by ſo many Husbands ſhe had not any Iſſue, ſhe being a Princeſſe, that, in regard of her vnchaſte and incontinent life; was depriued of the Kingdome, by Sentence of Pope Vrbane, Sixt of the Name, who inueſted therein Charles of Duras, Sonne to Lewes of Duras, Brother to King Robert. The ſaid King Charles of Duras, cauſed Ioane the firſt to be ſtrangled; according as ſhe had dealt with his Couſin, and her Husband Andrew of Hungary.

Her vnchaſte life deſtroied her of the Kingdome.

King Charles of Sicily, Third of the name, tooke to wife Margaret, Daughter to the Siſter of the before-named Ioane, Queene of Sicily, and by her hee had a Sonne named Ladiſlaus (whom we call Lancelot in French) of Sicily; and a Daughter, Ioane of Sicily. After the death of Charles the Third, his Sonne Pope Vrbane giueth the Kingdomes of Naples and Sicily to Ladiſlaus.

Ladiſlaus was by the ſame Pope Vrbane, inueſted with the Kingdomes of Naples and Sicilie. Hee had two Wiues, the firſt was Daughter to Mainfroy of Clermont in Sicilie, a Houſe deſcended from that of Neeſſle in France. His ſecond Wife was a Widdow, formerly Dutcheſſe of Tarentum, and by her he had no Children: So that dying without any Heyre by him begotten, Madame

The two Adoptiõs made by Queene Ioane the ſecond.

Ioane of Sicily his Siſter, was Queene of Naples and of Sicily, Second of the name. She had two Husbands, but no Iſſue by them. The firſt was Duke of Eſterlic, and the ſecond was Iames of Bourbon, Counte de la March, who all his life time was called King Iames. Queene Ioane ſeeing her ſelfe fruſtrated of Linage, did firſt adopt for her Sonne Alphonſo of Arragon, of whom being neither beloued, nor ſuccoured in her neceſſities: ſhe adopted afterward Rene, Duke of Anion.

Reaſons yeelded concerning the Adoptions and Marriages of the two Queenes.

But for our better obſeruing the particularities of theſe Adoptions, and ſundry Marriages of theſe two Queenes, both bearing the name of Ioane: wee are to vnderſtand, that the firſt was married by her Father, to Prince Andrew of Hungary, and vpon this Subiect. Charles, Second of the name, called the Cripple, being vpon the finiſhing of his daies, by his Will and Teſtament inſtituted (as his vniuerſall Heyre) in the Kingdomes of Naples, Sicily, and the Counties of Prouence, Forcalquier, and Lands adiacent, his third Sonne named Robert, excluding Charobert, Sonne to his eldeſt Sonne Charles Martell of Hungary, dead in the life time of his Father, as you haue heard before, and this Teſtamentarie diſpoſition was confirmed by Pope Clement the Fift. In the ſame Teſtament was contained a notable clauſe for Succeſſion in the Counties of Prouence, Forcalquier and the adiacent Lands, that after the death of Robert his third Sonne, his Male Children ſhould ſucced in the ſaid Kingdomes & Counties, The Order of Primogenoture alwayes to be kept. But if there ſhould be want of Heyres Males, and that the Kingdome muſt fall from the Lance to the diſtaffe; then he willed & ordained that his Daughters ſhould be called thereto, but neuer to the County of Prouence, frõ which he would haue his Daughters excluded, not only in the direct Ligne, but likewiſe in the Tranſuerſary Ligne; ſo that the Sons of of Brothers should excluded the Daughters, The Order of Primogeniture still preserued & kept, with expresse prohibition of all Detraction, or of Fourth Trebellianick addition. These are the very words of the Testament made by the said King Charles Second of the name, reported (word for word) by Messire Accurse Maynier, Third President in the Parliament of Tolosa, who, from his youngest yeares, followed the Seruice of the last Dukes of Aniou, Kings of Naples and Sicilie, and Counts of Prouence, and had beene Chiefe Iusticer of Prouence: in a Treatise made by him, and sent to King Frances the First, Of the Rights which the Kings of France haue to the Realmes of Naples, Sicilie, and Count de Prouence.

Charles the Second departed out of this life, in the yeare, One Thousand, Three Hundred and Twenty, and then succeeded his Sonne Robert: against whom arose Charobert of Hungary his Nephew, being disinherited by the Testament of his Grandfather, who married Ioane of Calabria, eldest Daughter to his Sonne Charles of Sicilie, Prince of Hungary. Andrew, youngest Sonne of Charobert, to paeifie the warre made on him by Lewes of Hungary, and the said Andrew, who in right of Primogeniture, and representation of their Father, maintained that the Kingdome of Naples appertained to them, and not to King Robert their Vncle, who dyed in the yeare, One Thousand, Three Hundred Thirty Eight. Ioane by force of Armes kept and defended Prouence, against the expresse clause, contained in the Testament of King Charles her Grandfather. Only through iealousie, shee caused her Husband to bee strangled, a most abhominable murder and Assassinate, which yet (in the end) cost her her owne life.

The clause in the will controuerted against by Warre.

Lewes of Hungary his reuenge for his brothers death.

For Lewes, King of Hungary, being aduertised of his Brothers death, made warre vpon Ioane of Sicile, his Cousin; but in such powerfull and cruell manner, as shee was enforced to forsake the Kingdome of Naples, and seeke for her owne safety in Prouence. During the absence of Lewes in Italy, the Hungars made diuers reuolts and commotions against him: whereby he was compelled to giue ouer his enterprise, and returne backe againe into Hungary. In this time of his absence, Queene Ioane made her repaire to Naples, and to bee deliuered from the Excommunication which the Pope thundred against her, for the murdering of her Husband, and to be elected of some arrerages in regard of the Kingdome of Naples, due to the Sacred Seate, vnder a feigned engagement, & a dissembled Summe of Forty Thousand Crownes shee acquainted to the holy Chaire the City of Auignion, wherein, the moity belonging to the Crowne of France, had beene giuen by the King Saint Lewes, to Monsieur Charles of France, Count of Aniou and of Prouence, his Brother.

Vnder-hand dealing betweene Queen Ioane and the Pope.

From hence it is, that the holy Seate holdeth the Patrimony and City of Auignon, so farre as to the Riuer of Rhosne, which the Prouincialls call the Roze. For the Riuer appertaineth intirely to the Crowne of France, and so it was adiudged to King Lewes the Eleauenth, by decree of Parliament at Tolosa, contradictorily giuen against the Pope then sitting, and the said Lewes the Eleauenth, in the Moneth of One Thousand Foure Hundred.

The Riuer of Rhosne belonging to the Crowne of France.

And concerning the County of Venisse, which containeth the Dioceses of Carpentras, Cauaillon, and Vaizon; it came to the holy Seate by Confiscation, made on the old Count of Tolosa, Raymond of Turaine, said to bee an Albigeois Heretique.

Charles of Duras marries Queen Ioane.

Ioane liued a very long time in peace, and vntill it chanced, that her repose was troubled by Charles of Duras, Sonne to Charles the Second, and Brother to Robert, Grandfather to the said Queene Ioane, who had nourished him from his young yeares, as her Nephew and Heyre to come.

But beholding himselfe now aged, and that his Aunt liued too long a time for his liking: hee trauelled towards Lewes King of Hungary, his Vncle, with whom he complotted reuenge for the murder, committed on the person of King Andrew. And to conceale his Armes, hee tooke grant and transport of those Rights, which he pretended to the Kingdomes of Naples and Sicilie, as also in the Countries of Prouence. So, being assisted with forces from Hungary, hee went and besieged his Aunt, whom he tooke prisoner: while she expected succour from the Prouincialls, too slow and tardy in their comming.

Ioane

Ioane, seeing her selfe a prisoner, and considering the harsh entertainment, and great ingratitude in Charles of Duras her Nephew, whom shee had nourished vp to renderly remembred her selfe, that (from Father to Sonne, & in the direct Ligne) she was descended of the House of France, and of the Stocke of Aniou.

Queene Ioane descended of the ancient Race of Aniou.

Wherevpon, by her Testament and Ordinance of her latest Will; shee instituted for her Heyre in the Realme of Naples, Sicilie, Counties of Prouence, and other Seigneuries, Lewes, First Duke of Aniou, Second Sonne to King Iohn, and Brother to King Charles the Fift, Sirnamed the Wise. She adopted (as her Sonne) the said Monsieur Lewes of France, Chiefe and head of the second Branch of Aniou. And he substituted his Sonne Lewes the Second, and after him his Male Children; The Order of Primogeniture still kept, with charge and condition: That the said Kingdomes and Counties should neuer part from the Crowne of France, but hold from Lance to Lance, without falling to the Distaffe. Which Testaments, Adoptions, and Substitutions, for that which concerned the Realmes of Naples and Sicilie, were approued and ratified by the Apostolicall Seat, effectuated in the person of the said Monsieur Lewes of France, Duke of Aniou, and Count du Maine, Crowned King of the said Realmes in the City of Auignion, by Pope Clement the Seauenth, according as it is written in the Chapter, Licet, de for. compet. Which Inuestiture was in the yeare, One Thousand, Three Hundred, and Foure Score: And Queene Ioane dyed, strangled in Prison, by the commande of her kinsman Charles of Duras.

Lewes of France originall of the second branch of Aniou.

Lewes crowned King of Naples and Sicily, in Auignon by the Pope.

Against whom the Duke of Aniou marched into Italy with a powerfull Armie, fitted both for Sea and Land, which shrewdly shooke Italy at the beginning. But through bad counsell, it yeelded and made more noyse, then benefite, so saith the President Maynier: by the sorry intelligence of King Lewes with the Lords of Italy, whom he made his enemies, by contemning and ill respecting them.

Charles of Duras, a wary and well aduised Prince, educated from his Infancie, answerably to the ayre of Italy, perceiuing the fault and lacke of good and wise Counsellours (whereof Lewes stood in greatest need) and the humour of the French, who were without wit and Conduct: concluded, to arme himselfe rather with good councell, then with strength and power. Hee planted Garrisons of Horse and Foote, in all Cities and Townes through the Kingdome of Naples, and burned all the Champaigne Countrey, Granges and Villages, which could serue his enemy but for Trophees of Straw and Bonfires.

The discreet prouidence of Charles of Duras.

By this meanes, King Lewes was compelled during the heates of Summer (which are so great in Italy as they can no way be endured) to keepe his Army in the Field. And the French, disordred in their eating & drinking, ouercharged their stomacks with the strong wines of Italy, which so warmed them, and with the violent season of the Summer; that they became filled with diuers diseases, and especially King Lewes, who dyed at Bisegle in the Kingdome of Naples, the Twentieth day of September, One Thousand, Three Hundred, Foure Score and Foure. And by his death the French Army grew scattered.

The death of King Lewes in the Realme of Naples.

By this prouident and wise Conduct in Warre, Charles of Duras subsisted for a time, and reconquered suddenly, that which Monsieur Lewes of France had won from him in the Kingdome of Naples. And hee seeing himselfe setled in a peacefull Conquest, hearing newes of the death of his Vncle Lewes King of Hungary: resolued to iourney thither, as hee did, and to possesse himselfe of that Kingdome, against the Daughter to the said Lewes, Inheritrixe thereto by the death of her Father.

Charles, at the beginning was so well entertained by the Lords of Hungary; that they Crowned him, scorning the Empire and Command of a Woman, according to the custome of Warlike Nations, who at all times haue contemned Gineratie. Mary, the onely Daughter to deceased Lewes King of Hungary, fearing least Charles of Duras her Cousin would put her to death, as formerly he had done Queene Ioane her Aunt; preuented him, and procured him to be poysoned (a kind of death ordinary to Princes there) in the yeare, One thousand, Foure Hundred, and Tenne: leauing a Sonne, named Ladislaus, that is Lancelot, and a Daughter, named Ioane, afterward called Ioanella, to distinguish the History, from

The proceedings of yong Lewes of Aniou.

Lewes of Anion, Sonne and Successor to Monsieur Lewes of France, being come to the yeares of reason, and fauoured by Pope Alexander the Fift: vndertooke to Conquer the Kingdome of Naples, which Ladislaus, Sirnamed of Sicilie, Sonne to Charles of Duras vsurped. He forced him to forsake the City of Naples, and all the ther he was retreated. This is the same Ladislaus, which engaged Nice (a dependance on the County of Prouence) to the Count of Sauoye Amades, Seauenth of the name, for a supply of Sixe Thousand men, which he receiued from Amades, against Lewes of Aniou.

The Marriage of King Lewes to Yolande of Arragon.

Lewes, Second King of Naples and of Sicilie, espoused Yoland, the onely Daughter to King Iohn of Arragon, by right of whom, it was indubitably, that the Kingdome of Arragon appertained to him: because the Kingdomes of Spayne are held by Women, in the defect of Heyres Males, and they are called to the Crownes of them. And yet notwithstanding, Martin of Arragon, Brother to the said deceased King Iohn, possessed himselfe of the Realmes and Siegneuries of his Brother, without giuing to his Neece the Dowry couenanted for her Marriage, as we haue already said before.

The Death of King Lewes the Second in Angiers.

Lewes the Second, deceased in the City of Angiers, in the yeare, One Thousand, Foure Hundred, and Sixteen, and lyeth buried in the Cathedrall Church there. By Yoland of Arragon his Wife, Daughter to the said King Iohn of Arragon, and Queene Yoland de Bar, Daughter to the Duke de Bar, and Madame Mary of France, Sister to Charles the Fift, King of France; he had the Children before remembred. This Lewes the Second (before he dyed) made his Testament, whereby he instituted his vniuersall Heyre, Monsieur Lewes of Sicilie his eldest Sonne, and his Heyres Males. And through defect of them, he substituted Rene his Second Sonne, & his Heyres Males, After whom hee substituted his last Sonne Charles, and his Heyres Males; and and their Male descendants of the name and Armes; Primogenitura ordine seruato, with the clause, Ex legitimo Matrimonio procreati; and their Daughters excluded in these Successions. By the Contract of Marriage of the said Lewes the Second, and Yoland of Arragon, which passed in the yeare, One Thousand, Three Hundred, Foure-Score and Ten, in the presence of Pope Clement the Seauenth: Afterwards ratified by the King of Arragon, Martin, Brother to the said King Iohn, the Twentieth day of the Moneth September, One Thousand, Foure Hundred, vnder-signed Iohn, Charles de S. Amand, and Bernard Caplana, and by the said King Lewes the Second, on Monday the Ninth of August before, in the same Yeare One Thousand, Foure-Hundred; Lewes the Second had these Titles. Lewes, by the Grace of God, King of Ierusalem and of Sicilie; Duke of Apuglia; Prince of Capua, Duke of Aniou; Count of Prouence, of Folcalquier, Maine, Piedmont and of Roussy.

The Heyres Males still to succeed, but Daughters excluded.

The Titles giuen to Lewes the Second.

Now in regard that the Children of the said King of Sicilie, Lewes the Second, were in their minority of yeares, and in France: Lancelot, Sonne to Charles of Duras, very easily possessed himselfe of the Kingdome of Sicilie, that is to say, of Naples, comprehended vnder the same name.) And yet not satisfied therewith, vndertooke the Voyage for Hungary, as well to reuenge the death of his Father Charles of Duras, as to conquer the Kingdome at the Swords point. As hee was proceeding in these affaires, he heard tydings, that Lewes of Aniou, Third of the Name, prepared for the Kingdome of Naples, to make himselfe Maister thereof. Lancelot, to compasse his owne intention, and to counter-check his aduersary: sold the Dukedomes of Duras, of Achaya, and of Dalmatia, whereby he raised a great summe of money, paying a very potent Armie therewith, and so made war vpon the Pope (who fauored, and tooke part with the House of Aniou) compelling him to flye Rome, which he pilled, and went to besiedge the City of Florence. But in pursuing the course of his prosperities, he dyed a very exemplary death, which may well serue as a cleare looking Glasse to Kings and Princes, for a President of diuine Iustice, on Princes lustfully addicted to whoredomes, to be punished (soone or late) with a miserable and tragicall end.

Lancelot

The tragicall relation of the wretched end of Lancelot.

Lancelot had a Physition, that had bin a follower of his Father, who hauing a Daughter of pleasing beautie; Lancelot grew earnestly amarous of her, and to enioy the floure of her fairest honor; hee made his meanes to the Physitian himselfe, to vse him as a Broker in so base a businesse. His Fatherly and honest excuses, had no power to quench the fierie heate of immodest loue in his lustfull Prince: but, in stead of milde and commendable answers, hee receiued nothing but rude threatnings and frowning countenances. The Physition, although hee vtterly abhorred this detestable desire in his Prince; yet (vpon a further intent) his labour slacked not to his Daughter, to haue her satisfie his deuillish appetite, yea, and commanded her not to delay it.

An impoisoned Ointment giuen by the Father to his Daughter.

Hereupon, he gaue her an Vnguent, whereof he made copious declaration to her, of many imaginarie vertues to consist therein; and at such time as the King would endure no longer deniall, but she must needes yeelde to loose her Virgin modestie: she should annoint her brest and bellie therewith, which would so settle his enflamed affection, to her onely; that he would not delight in other changes (as daily he was wont to doe) but solely keepe himselfe to her. The faire maide was obedient to her Father, and now you shall see the effect of the Vnguent. So soone as Lancelot was in the heate of his amorous embraces, triumphing in the rape and spoyle of her honour: the Vnguent (being a strong and violent poison) did instantly so fierily knit and combine their bodies together; that immediately they both dyed, being vtterly vncapable of any helpe or remedie. The Physition hauing beheld with his owne eyes, iust vengeance inflicted on the lustfull King, for thus wronging both his and his Daughters honor: being fully satisfied and well contented, desired to liue no longer, but dyed likewise by poysoning himselfe. Princes and great Lords, that (bearing your selues on the wings of your power and greatnesse) presume all ill courses to be lawfully allowed in you: noate well this example, not any way for you to imitate; but rather to moderate such frantique passions, and by quenching such irregular affections, with immortall glory to triumph ouer your selues.

The death of the Physitian after the King & his daughter.

Maxima cunctarum Victoria, victa Voluptas.

To conquer Lust in the greatest of all other victories.

This was the excellent Epitaph, engrauen on the Tombe of Scipio Affricanus, the mirrour of Continencie. If you would follow Dauid in the sinne of adultrie; imitate him in the long repentance, which he performed all his life time after. If you would liue with fame and renowne, pursue this generous act of Charles, eight of the name, King of France and of Sicilie. This great Prince, at the age of twentie yeares, attempted the Conquest of his Kingdome of Naples; and it returned to his honour, notwithstanding all the hinderances laboured by the Potentates of Italie, whom he trampled on at Fornoua. Ferron, about the ending of this Princes life, informeth vs, that returning to Naples, which felt the rigours of warre, and of a victorious Souldiour, insolent and cruell both to men and women, in being put to the edge of the Sword, or their (best fauour) to passe vpon ransome, and yet exposed to the violence of their chastitie, The greatest griefe that can happen to the vanquished.

A notable Historie deserting to be duly considered.

Among the rest in this sacked Citie, was taken an affianced Gentlewoman, of admirable beautie, who being falne into the hands of certaine Souldiours that would dishonor her: had no other meanes of helpe or refuge in this perplexitie, but onely teares, entreates and earnest imprecations, whereto the rude Souldiours lent but a deafe eare. At length (by good hap) she got free from them, and sought for safety in the Kings Tent, where falling prostrate before his feete, for a while, shee was secured by his Royall presence. But at length, the King aduisedly contemplating the rare beautie of the yong Gentlewoman, began to grow amorously passionate, and vrged on by loue (whom the Poets paint blinde, and starke naked, describing thereby, that he is robd of all modestie, feare or shame) resolued to enioy the issue of his lustfull desire. And as he went about the sinfull act, once more she threw her selfe at his feete, and casting her eyes (almost blinded with teares) round about his Tent; espied the picture of the Virgin Mary, with her sweete Sonne in her armes, hanging on the wall by his Beds side. She made feete of her knees, and thereon followed him him about his Chamber, humbly entreating him, to looke vpon it, and for her sake, a Mother, yet a chaste Virgin, to shield and saue her honour from violation. The King, suddenly looking vpon the Picture; lost all apprehension of his former frenzie, and found his royall iudgement so sollidly setled, that, not onely he became ashamed of his folly, in being hurried away with such wanton distemperature: but also deliuered the Virgin safely to her betrothed husband, hee being a prisoner in the Campe. He set them both at libertie, and gaue with the vertuous Gentlewoman (by way of Dowrie to her future Husband) the summe of fiue hundred Crownes of Gold; beside life and freedome, to all that concerned the Gentlewoman in parentage or affinitie. Intactam Virginem Sponso captiuo liberato reddidit, duc constituta de suo Quingentorum nummum Aureorum, liberatis vnà Sponsa omnibus proximis, & affinibus.

Ioanella, Sister to Ladislaus, that dyed without issue, was Queene of Naples and Sicilie, and seeing her selfe not likely to haue Children; carried with the same considerations, as Queene Ioane her Aunt was; adopted for her Sonne Monsieur Lewes of Sicilie, Duke of Anion, Count of Maine, and of Prouence. But he returned her answere, that without any adoption; he was Legitimate Successour to his Grandfather and Father, King of Sicilie, and of her, she being but an vsurpresse of his Paternall inheritance. And coupling effects with words, made warre in such sort vpon her: that she was enforced to implore the ayde of the King of Arragon, Alphonso, first of the name, who then made warre vpon the Genewayes in the Isle of Corse, with a mightie Nauall Armie.

The answere of Lewes of Sicily to Queen Ioanella.

This Ioanella or Ioane the second, being the Widdow of the Duke d'Esterlic, fell in loue (contrary to her honor and her qualitie of being a Queene) with a Neapolitan Knight, named Pandolfello Alope, reputed to be one of the goodliest Gentlemen in his time. Yet to conceale and palliate this dishoneſt kinde of life, she espoused in second marriage Iames of Bourbon, Count de la March, Prince of the Bloud, and the onely comely Gentleman in France. Iames getting intelligence of the secret loue, betweene his wife and the Neapolitane Pandolfello; caused him closely to be slaine; and tooke away the Gouernement from his wife, sharply reprouing her for her incontinencie, not offering any other violence to her. Within a while after, she recouered the Gouernement againe, and, to reuenge the death of her Adulterer, commanded the Count her Husband to prison: but he being thence deliuered, by the command of Pope Martin the Sixt, who sat then at Rome, returned backe into France, and there requited the kindnesse of his wife; whom Pope Martin proclaimed vncapable of reigning, inuesting in the Realmes of Naples and Sicilie Lewes of Anion, third of the name, who in his enterprize for Naples, was assisted by the Genewayes with thirteene Gallies, which were conducted by Baptista Fregosa.

The marriage of Ioane the second with Iames of Bourbon.

Ioanella seeing her selfe so pursued by Lewes of Anion; sent her Ambassadour Antonio Caraffa to Alphonso, King of Arragon, who at his first arriuall, refused to accept the offers of Ioanella: because he knew well enough, that this Lewes of Anion could pretend claime to the Realmes of Arragon, Valentia, and Principalitie of Cathalogna, in regard of Queene Yolland his Mother. Wherefore, he desired rather to make him his friend, then his enemie, fearing still the French, who had so many times enfranchised the *Pyrenean*s, and laid their hands on the Prouinces of Spaine. Hereupon, he aduertised him, concerning the intentions of Ioanella, making a plaine demonstration to him, that if he would grant and set ouer to him, the rights which he pretended to Arragon and elsewhere, by meanes of his Mother: he would lend him such assistance, as should make him Maister of the whole Estate of Naples. Which Lewes hauing refused, by the instigation of his Mother: Alphonso tooke Ioanella at her word, sent her a succour of eighteene Gallies, and foureteene Galliots, conducted by his Ambassadours Raymond de Perillos, Bernard de Centillas, and Dom Iuan de Moncada, who in the name of the King their Maister, receiued the Chasteaux Neuf, and de l'Oeuf at Naples, and tooke possession of the Dukdome of Calabria, the Title & Seigneurie of eldest Sons, and likeliest heires to the Kingdome of Naples.

The King of Arragon sendeth succour to Ioanella against Lewes of Anion.

But this constrained, and not naturall amitie, betweene this Adopted Sonne and putatiue Mother, was not of any long continuance, for the maske or vizzard being put put off: Alphonso of Arragon sought to despoile Ioanella of her gouernment, and tormented her in such sort, that she was besiedged in the Citie of Naples, and indangered to finish her dayes in prison, as her Aunt did. But for the succour sent her by Lewes of Anion, third of the name, which came very conueniently for her deliuerance, conducted by the braue Captaine Sforza, who was then at Beneuentum, compelling him of Arragon to leaue his prize behinde him, being enforced to make for Spaine.

Alphonso of Arragon dealeth murtherously with Ioanella.

Ioanella, in acknowledgement of this worthy Seruice of Lewes, caused him to come to the Citie of Auerzo, where as then she was, and reuoaked the Adoption of Alphonso, for the intollerable wrongs he had done her: Adopting as her Sonne and sole heire in the Kingdome of Naples and other Seigneuries, the said Lewes the third. Who deceased in the Realme of Naples at Cosenza, in the yeare One thousand foure hundred thirtie foure, and the said Ioanella immediately after.

Lewes adopted by Ioanella.

Rene of Sicilie, Brother and Successour to the said Lewes the third, deceasing without issue, was then (at the death of his Brother) prisoner at Dijon, being in the power of Philip the second, Duke of Bourgongne, as we shall declare more at large in the Tract of the Golden Fleece. This Rene had in first marriage espoused Isabell of Lorraine, Duchesse of Lorraine and of Bar, and by her he had Iohn, Duke of Calabria, deceasing in the life time of his Father, and leauing by his wife Mary of Bourbon, Nicholas, Marquesse du Pont (who dyed without Children while his Father liued) and two Daughters, the eldest whereof was named Yolland, married to the Count of Vaudemont, Rene of Lorraine, to whom shee brought the Duchies of Lorraine and Bar: And the other was wife to the King England Henry, Sixt of the name.

Successour to Lewes the third was Rene of Sicilie, then prisoner at Dijon.

Now, in the yeare One thousand foure hundred thirtie and eight, Pope Eugenius then sitting in the holy Seate: sent an Armie to Naples, conducted by a Patriarch, to expell the Arragonians out of the Kingdome. But the Patriarch ill acquitting him selfe in his charge, by bad intelligence which he had with the partakers of Alphonso of Arragon: the Pope commanded to seize his body, which as the Captaines of the Armie would haue done, the Patriarch being a Cardinall, was slaine.

Pope Eugenius sent an Armie to Naples, conducted by a Patriarch.

Rene compounding with the Duke of Bourgongne for his deliuerance, went to Florence, where he was Crowned King of Naples by Pope Eugenius. Hauing peaceably reigned in his Kingdome for some time. He lost the Citie of Naples by the treacherie of a Mason, who gaue aduise about a Gutter of the Citie, through which himselfe had diuers times passed, and whereby the Arragonians surprized the Citie of Naples, and afterward the Castels belonging thereto; So that Rene was enforced to forsake Italie, and returne backe againe into Prouence.

Rene crowned King of Naples by Pope Eugenius.

Alphonso of Arragon gaue the Kingdome of Naples to his Bastard Sonne Ferdinand, against whom Iohn, Duke of Calabria passed into Italie, prouing at the beginning very reasonably successefull. But refusing to marry, and take to wife Hippolita, daughter to Frances Duke of Millaine: the Duke tooke part with Ferdinand the Bastard, to whose Sonne named Alphonso, he married the said Hippolita his Daughter, and preuailed so well by money with Pope Pius the second, a mortall enemie to the French: that Ferdinand (albeit a Bastard and his Sonne) was inuested in the said Kingdome of Naples, to the preiudice of the House of Anion. The Ambassadors of France made opposition against this Inuestiture: yet notwithstanding all that they could doe, the Pope gaue not ouer pursuing the point.

Ferdinand the Bastard Sonne to Alphonso of Arragon.

The Arragonians and Cathalanians, reuolting against Iohn of Arragon their King; Iohn of Sicilie was sent to be inuested in Arragon and Cathalogna, and in this pursuite dyed at Barcellona, in the life time of King Rene his Father, as also did Nicholas his Sonne, his Grandfather still surviuing, who perceiuing that his heires masles, procreated and issued of his body were dead and gone: Adopted for his Sonne, heire and Successour his Nephew Charles, Sonne to Charles his Brother. In his life time, he caused his Nephew to be receiued as Count of Prouence, & Lord of all his other goods, whereof he made him to take homage during his life. To his two Daughters, the Duchesse Yolland, and Queene Margaret he gaue what he pleased; prohibiting Contention about the Coũtie of Prouence

Now, without regarding the Teſtament of the laſt Rene, King of Sicilie, Yolande his Daughter, and his Sonne Rene of Lorraine, would needes contend for the Countie of Prouence, againſt Charles their Couſine. Rene of Lorraine had bin nourished from his infancie in Prouence, in the Court of King Rene his Grandfather, which made him particularly affected of the Prouenceals. Whereupon raiſing vp his auncient acquaintance, he made commotion in Prouence againſt Charles, and numbring vp his men of Warre; paſſed to the ſaid Countie, in name of the Ducheſſe Yolande, who (after the deceaſe of her Father) ſtiled her ſelfe Queene of Ieruſalem and of Sicilie, Counteſſe of Prouence, Ducheſſe of Anion, Lorraine, Bar and other Seigneuries, and tooke the Armes of her Father (whom the Prouenceals called the Good King Rene) as they are emblazoned in his Chappell at Dijon, and which are yet to be ſeene (at this preſent) in the Celeſtines, and at Saint Clare of Auignion, founded by him, at Aixe in Prouence, at the great Roze of the Pallace which anſwereth vpon the great place, and in all the Churches and Monaſteries throughout Prouence.

The Prouenceals commotions appeaſed by King Lewes the eleauenth.

Theſe mutinies of the Prouenceals, in fauour of the Houſe of Lorraine, were qualified by the ſuccour of King Lewes, eleauenth of the name: ſo that King Charles of Sicilie enioyed peaceably (all the reſt of his life time) the Countie of Prouence. And by his Teſtament made at Marſeilles, in the Moneth of December, One thouſand foure hundred foureſcore and one, he Legacied (for ſundry worthy ſeruices receiued) to his Couſine Frances of Luxembourg, the Viſcountie of Martigues (in Latine Vicecomitatus Martici) with the appurtenances and dependances, high, meane and lower Iuſtice; yea, and named for his Heire vniuerſall the moſt Chriſtian King Lewes the eleauenth: to whom he ſubſtituted Charles Daulphine his Sonne, and after him willed, that the Countie of Prouence, and Lands adiacent, ſhould be annexed, and inſeperably reunited to the Crowne of France. In memorie of which reuniting, the Citie of Aix (the chiefeſt of Prouence) tooke for her Armes and Banner, which yet at this preſent is carried in all Proceſſions (as I haue ſeene in my time) the auncient Armes of Prouence: Qui ſont d'Arragon, au Chef de France ſans nombre.

The Teſtament of King Charles of Sicelie.

The poſſeſſion taken by King Lewes the eleauenth.

King Charles of Sicilie being deceaſed, King Lewes the eleauenth (his vniuerſall Heire) tooke reall poſſeſſion of the Counties of Prouence, Forcalquier, and the Lands adiacent: he receiued of the people of the ſaid Countie, as well in generall as particuler, Faith and Homage in the accuſtomed manner, by Meſsire Palamedes Forbin, Knight, Lord of Soliers, whom he delegated wholly and expreſly, to be his Gouernour and Lieutenant Generall in Prouence. Beſide the ſaid Countie, the Duchie of Bar, an auncient Fiefe to the Crowne of France, returned (by the death of the Ducheſſe Yolande, Daughter to King Rene of Sicilie) to King Lewes the eleauenth, and he reünited to the Crowne the ſaid Duchie of Bar, by decree of the Court of Parliament at Paris. Grounded vpon this, that Rene, Duke of Lorraine, Sonne to Yolande, was was not a naturalized Frenchman, and therefore could not hold any Seigneuries: but ſuch as were permitted to him in his Lands of the French, to be there held as heritages if they were not naturalized in Lorraine.

The ancient acquiſition of Sicilie, Naples and Italie to France.

By the death of Lewes the eleauenth, King Charles the eight his Sonne and Succeſſour, huuing aſſembled his eſtates Generall in the Citie of Tours, at his new comming: receiued Faith and Homage of the Prouenceals, by their Deputies ſent to the ſaid Eſtates, confirming their Priuiledges, and prouiding for vacant Offices. So that it appeareth plainely, that from the time of our King and Emperour of the French, Charlemaine; Sicilie, Naples and Italie, had bin acquired to the Crowne of France, poſſeſſed by diuers Branches, and Houſes of Princes iſſued thereof: Firſt, by the ſame Charlemaigne, Pepin his Sonne and his Succeſſours, from Father to Sonne, for the ſpace of an hundred and thirtie yeares: yea, euen to the very inuaſion, which was made for thoſe Seigneuries, by the Berengars, deſcended of the Lombardes, expelled out of Italie, by the ſaid Charlemaigne.

The firſt and ſecond branches of Anion.

Secondly by William, Sonne to Tancred, Duke of Normandie and his Succeſſours, Princes of the Houſe of France: vnto Conſtance, Sonne of William the fourth, laſt King of Sicilie, of this Branch of Normandie, for two hundred yeares wholly, and the Sons of Conſtance, vnto the Baſtard Mainfroy, about fortie yeares.

Thirdly, by the firſt Ligne of Anion, beginning at Monſieur Charles of France, Brother to Saint Lewes; vntill Iohn, ſonne to Charles, ſonne of Robert and Ioane, Daughter to Charles of Duras, Siſter to Lancelot. And by Lewes, firſt Duke of Anion, ſonne to King Iohn, ſecond Branch of Anion of the Houſe of France, euen vntill King Rene, ouer whom Alphonſo of Arragon vniuſtly vſurped the Kingdomes of Sicilie and Naples, whereof he ſeized his Baſtard (as wee haue already ſaid) againſt whoſe Succeſſours:

At what time Kings may beſt vndertake warre.

King Charles, eight of the name, vndertooke to recouer his Kingdomes of Naples and Sicilie, ſeeing himſelfe in the floure of his age (for he had compleated but twenty yeares) and France in quietneſſe; a moſt remarkeable conſideration, to vndergoe any great enterpriſe: but he ſhould haue had a bottomleſſe Bagge of Treaſures, as (in our time) King Henry the Great, of eternall memorie, had, and then is a King beſt enabled for warre.

The Prince of Salerne eſcaped from Alphonſo into France, and other friends with him.

Alphonſo at that time poſſeſſed (quietly enough) the ſaid Kingdomes; but Auarice, ordenarily attended on by Cruelty, cauſed commotions among the States of the Realme. Among them of Nobilitie, the Prince of Salerne, and the Sonnes to the Prince of Bizignan, eſcaped the Maſſacres of Alphonſo, and Ferdinand his Sonne, Duke of Calabria, who came into France with their friends, and faithfull confederates. Who hauing wonne the fauour and eare of the Lady of Beaujeu, Madam Anne of France, Siſter to the ſaid King Charles the eight (wife to Peter, Duke of Bourbon, and Lord of Beaujeu) of William Briſſonnet, then Intendant Generall for the Reuennues, afterward Biſhop of Saint Malo, and Cardinall, and of the Seneſchall of Beaucaire, Stephen Vers, then prime Preſident of the Accounts at Paris, who onely gouerned the King: they put into his head, to vndertake this Voyage, making the conqueſt of Naples ſo eaſie for him to compaſſe; that his Harbingers might meerely chalke him the way with their hands thither.

The Prophecies of Fryer Samanarold.

Whereto were added the offers and perſwaſions of Lodowicke Sforza, called the Moore; who had proiected, how to poſſeſſe himſelfe of the Dukedome of Millaine, as he did, againſt Iohn Galeas his Pupill: with the Predications and Propheſies of Fryer Iermmo Sauanarola of Ferrara, publiſhed throughout all Italie. That the French ſhould leaue their victorious Armes to Naples: That they ſhould conquer it without a ſtroake: And that at their returne, willing or nilling all the Potentates of Italie, the Noble King of France ſhould trample them vnder his feete.

The purpoſes of an ambitious woman.

But that which moſt of all aduantaged and furthered this buſineſſe, was the Lady of Beaujeu, who, by the abſence of the King her Brother, promiſed her ſelfe the Regency of the Kingdome: by meanes whereof, the Crownes Reuennues ſhould paſſe thorow her hands, wherewith ſhe would fill her owne Bouldges, to cut and ſhaue all the State affaires after her will.

Iames, King of Maiorica had bin deſpoyled of his Kingdome, by the King of Arragon gon his Couſine, and was enforced to flye for refuge into France, to the Court of King Iohn, and of Humbert Daulphine of Viennois his Brother in Law. To ſupply the charges neceſſarily required in warre, Iames ſold the Viſcountie of Montpellier to King Iohn, paying the price of Sixe hundred thouſand Florines of Gold, and within a while after, the Countie of Rouſſillion, at the ſame rate: prouided neuertheleſſe, that he repaying backe theſe ſummes; he, and his Succeſſours, Kings of Maiorca in the direct Ligne, and of his Stocke (but not any other) might reenter vpon the Countie of Rouſſillion, and Citie of Perpignan. Conditionally likewiſe, that the ſaid Iames, King of Maiorica (during his life time) ſhould haue and enioy the title and qualitie of Count of Rouſſillion, as indeede afterward he did.

Humbert Daulphine of Viennois.

Iames King of Maiorica.

And the ſaid Iames happening to dye without Children, as alſo the Prince Daulphine of Viennois, and Count of Valentinois and Diois, and his wife, Siſter to the ſaid Iames King of Maiorica, with two Sonnes which he had, the one ſlaine in the Iſle of Maiorica, where King Iames his Vnckle, and the Daulphine his Father had for three yeares ſpace maintained the warre; the other Sonne was drowned in the Riuer of Rhoſne: By conſent of the ſaid Humbert Daulphine, and of his wife, the ſaid Iames granted, gaue and tranſported all rights appertaining to him in the Kingdome of Maiorica, and the Lands of his Patrimonie in Arragon and Valentia, Cathalogna and Cerdaigna, to the ſaid Iohn, King of France, his Heires and Succeſſours in the Crowne of France.

The Daulphins two Sons, the one ſlaine, the other drowned.

Now Iohn, King of Arragon, ſecond of the name, in his firſt marriage had to wife Blanch, Queene of Nauarre, the Daughter to the King of Nauarre, Charles, third of the name, called the Noble, and by her he had Charles Prince of Nauarre, legitimate heire of Nauarre. And in ſecond marriage Iane, Daughter to Frederigo Henriques, Admirall of Caſtille, who to aduance his Sonne Ferdinando, ſecond of the name, King of Arragon (vſurper of the Realme of Arragon, againſt the Kings Iohn d'Albret, and Katharine his wife) ſuppoſed the crime of Fellonie againſt the ſaid King Iohn her Husband, by Prince Charles his Sonne in Law, impriſoned by King Iohn his Father, in L' Alla-Feria of Sarragoſſa.

Charles the lawfull Prince of Nauarre.

This impriſonment cauſed a generall reuolt of the people of Arragon and Cathalogna, who compelled Iohn of Arragon, to ſet his Sonne at libertie. But before his releaſe out of priſon, the Phyſition to Iane Henriques, his Stepmother, gaue him a Iulep, whereof he dyed (within a ſhort while after) in the Citie of Barcelions, on Wedneſday the three and twentieth of September, in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred threeſcore and one, being aged fortie yeares, three Moneths and foure and twentie dayes.

Prince Charles poyſoned by Iane his Stepmother.

To reuenge his death, the people roſe in Commotion, vnder conduct of the Count de Paillars, iſſued of the Houſe of Arragon, marched in ranged Battaile, beſiedged the Towne and Citie of Gironna; where then Iane Henriques reſided, with Ferdinando, Duke of Monblanck her Sonne.

Iohn of Arragon mediated by contract with King Lewes, eleauenth of the name, Father to Charles the eight, the free enioying the Countie of Rouſſillon, ſold to his great Grandfather, as we haue ſaid before. With promiſe, that for the ouer-plus of the ſaid ſaile, he ſhould giue and pay vnto him in ready money, the ſumme of Three hundred thouſand Crownes of Gold, in Coine of France: Hee ſhould aide him alſo with two thouſand fiue hundred Souldiours on Horſebacke, ſeauen hundred whereof ſhould be compleate Lances. Here you may reade the very words of the Bonds, which were made by the ſaid Iohn King of Arragon, to King Lewes the eleauenth.

The Countie of Rouſſillon obtained in King Lewes the eleauenths.

The Couenants and Contracts, which were paſſed ſubſtantially betweene the two Kings.

King Lewes the Eleauenth was not satisfied and contented with these Obligations, but would needs haue intire enioyment of the things which were obliged to him; so that the said Iohn, King of Arragon, sold, gaue, quitted and transported to the said King Lewes the eleauenth, & to his Successors Kings of France to perpetuitie, the said Countie of Roussillon, and that of Cerdaignia for euer, with all Iurisdiction & Souraigntie. And King Lewes the eleauenth was put in reall & actuall possession; & (for him) Messire Tanneguy du Castell was made Gouernor in the said Cosities of Roussillon & Cerdaignia. The Conducter of the French Army was Gaston, Count of Foix & Lord of Bearn. The Contract of this Engagement, Grant and Sale was dated the fiue and twentieth day of Iune, in An. One thousand foure hundred threescore & two, at the Archbishops Pallace of Sarragossa. Signed by the said King, and answered by Notaries and Witnesses, with their hands and Seales.

The Counties enioyed by the sonne after his Father.

And thus King Lewes the eleauenth enioyed those Seigneuries sold vnto him, and placed Gouernours in them: And after him King Charles the eight his Son, conformably to the Couenant made with Iohn of Arragon. After whom succeeded King Ferdinand, second of the name, who was his Sonne.

Two great dishonors done to France by the Lady of Beaujeu.

But Madam de Beaujeu, who then gouerned France, vnder the name of King Charles the eight her Brother, plaied two slippery parts at once, not much to be commended. One was, taking & tearing the Registers, belonging to the Court of Parliament at Paris, especially the Decree concerning the Reuniting to the Crowne of France, of the Duchie of Barrois, on Rene Duke of Lorraine, who was not Naturalized in France.

A businesse of great importance palled away ouerlightly.

The other was rendering to Ferdinand of Arragon, the Coine and Cloath for the Counties of Roussillion and Cerdaignia, without vntying the purse, charges repaied, or any agreement whatsoeuer. The Mediators of this Merchandise were the Generall Brissonnet, the Seneschall of Beaucaire, & two holy Fathers Gray Friers, Oliuer Maillard, & Iohn Mauleony. The two last named men, gouerned the Kings conscience, and the other disposed of the rest. Merchandise deliuered in exchange of a promise, made on the behalfe of Ferdinand of Arragon, not to hinder the King in his voyage of Italie; a shadow or smoake, an imaginarie exchange, & oath for an handfull of feathers cast vp in the open Aire, concerning the part of Ferdinand of Arragon.

The Articles agreed on in the Treatie.

The treatie of this Restitution, without repaiment of one penny, made in the yeare One thousand foure hundred fourescore & thirteene, the nineteenth day of Ianuary, betweene King Charles & Ferdinand & Isabell, Kings of Arragon and Castile, bare these contents. That the said Ferdinand & Isabel doe make perpetuall peace with the King, League offensiue and defensiue against euery Prince liuing and dying, without excepting any. And that the said Ferdinand and Isabell, shall not contract any alliance with the Kings of England, and the Archduke of Austria Ferdinand, Count of Flanders, & other Princes whatsoeuer they be; without the expresse consent & agreement of the King. There were named in the said Treatie, the Children of Ferdinand and Isabel, to wit, Dom Michele eldest Infant of Spaine, & Iohn, Prince of the Asturies; who with their Father & Mother sware this Treatie on the holy Euangelists laid vpon the Altar. And by the same Oath thus solemnely sworn, the said Ferdinand & Isabel, and likewise their Sons, renounced all such rights, as they could haue and pretend to the Kingdome of Naples, in any sort or manner whatsoeuer, which might ensue to them: they acquitted, gaue, granted and transported them to the said King Charles, and his Successors Kings of France, to al perpetuity. Conditionally, that the said King Charles without the Counsell of the Princes of his Bloud, & Officers of the Crowne, & contrary to all Remonstrances in the Court of Parliament at Paris, many times repeated and reiterated; acquitted and released the fiue hundred thousand Crownes of Gold, contained in the Bond of King Iohn of Arragon.

The two Sons of Iohn Ferdinand & Isabel.

Concerning Ecclesiasticall Benefices and liuings.

And hereupon it was further conuenanted, that the Ecclesiasticall persons, prouided of Benefices & Liuings in diuers places, giuen, granted & put ouer by the King, to the said Ferdinand of Arragon, held as well by Frenchmen, as Naturals of the Countrey, since the Kings of France had enioyed the Lands and Seigneuries sold: should peaceably hold and possesse their said Benefices.

Reentrie vpon Breach of former concluded couenants

But if it should so happen, that the King enioyed not freely the Kingdome of Naples, which appertained to him: in this case, the King and his Successours Kings of France, might reenter on the proprietie of Perpignan, and the Counties of Roussillon and Cerdaignia, and that within a Month after, the said Ferdinand and his Successors had bin thereto required by the King, and his Successours, being come to the Crown of France. And thorow defect of not performing this; the King, and his said Successours, Kings of France, might reenter on the proprieties of the said Seigneuries giuen and engaged: by force of Armes, without any other neede of summons, or forme of Iustice.

In the execution of this Treatie, the King decreed and deliuered his Letters Patents, in forme of Commission, to the Count of Montpensier, and to Lebo, Bishop of Alby, to giue possession of the Seigneuries (very vnaduisedly) released to Ferdinand of Arragon; notwithstanding the protestations of the Parliament of Paris, Conseruatour of the Maiestie of our Kings, and of their Sacred Patrimonie & demeanes (which cannot be alienated, but by Engagement and condition of perpetuall Redemption.) Thus were matters carried, by the Lady of Beaujeu, Brissonnet, and Des Vers, at the deare cost of France.

The borrowing of monies to supply vnaduised wants.

Now beginning to make spare, when all was spent to the bottome, the next recourse was to Borrowing; yet not of the people of France, whom the King would not oppresse: but of Strangers, and at the caution of the French Nobilitie. The Banck de Soly of Gennes furnished an hundred thousand Franckes, which cost foureteene thousand pounds Interest for foure Moneths. The Duchie of Sauoye lent his Iewels, which wee engaged for twelue thousand Ducates. As much did the Marquisate of Montferrat: And Lodowicke Sforza, vsurper on the State of Millaine, offred for the passage, fiue hundred men at Armes, waged with his money, and the lending of two hundred thousand Ducates.

The furnishment of the Armie appointed for the Land.

With such small meanes did King Charles (yet neuertheless) set on foote a goodly Armie for the Land, and another for the Sea. In that for Land-Seruice, there were sixeteene thousand Men of Armes, two Archers for one Lance: Sixe thousand Archers on foote, and sixe thousand Crosse-bowes: eight thousand Harquebusiers, and men that carried two handed Swords: twelue hundred pieces of Canon, as well of Iron as Braße: two hundred Canonniers: eleauen hundred men to cast Bals of Artillerie, and to make Coales, Cords and Cables: eight thousand Horses of Artillery: foure thousand Carters to driue them: six thousand two hundred Pionners; sixe hundred Maisters Carpenters, and three hundred Masons.

The Armie for Sea seruice.

The Naual or Sea Armie, consisted of eighteene Gallies, sixe Gallions, and nine great Ships. Lewes, Duke of Orleans, a yong and valiant Prince, was Lieutenant Generall of the Fleete. And the Lord Honoreo d'Vrse, the Maister of the Horse, prouided this Armie at the Port of Genewaye, a Common-wealth (at that time) subiect to the State of Millaine.

Attendants on the King in this Warlike expedition.

Such as followed the King in this expedition, were the Count of Angoulesme, Father to King Frances the first; Gilbert de Bourbon, Count of Montpensier; the Prince of Orenge; the Duke of Nemoux' Iohn de Foix (formerly Viscount of Narbonne) the Counts of Neuers, of Ligny, of Boulogne and of Bresse: The Lord Alain d'Albret, Father to the King of Nauarre, Iohn d'Albret; Lewes de la Trimouille, Viscount of Thouars: The Marshals de Gie, de Baudricourt and de Rieux: The Lords of Crussol, of Tournon, of Piennes, of Suilly, of Aubigny, of Guise, of Chandenier, of Maulem, of Prie, of Montezon, of Alegre, of Bonneuall, of Genouillac, of Chastillon, de la Pulice, de Fraunezeles, de Chaumont, de Vergy, de l'Hospitall, de Beaumont; the Bastards Mathew of Bourbon, and hee of Bourgongne, with many other Lords of noate.

The setting forward of the Armie.

In this braue furnishment, Charles departed from Vienna in Daulphine, to make for the Citie of Ast, belonging to the Duke of Orleans, the three and twentieth day of August, in the yeare One thousand foure hundred fourescore and thirteene, leauing for Regent in France Peter, Duke of Bourbon, his Brother in Law.

Charles had (before) made furrender of the Counties of Rousillion and Cerdaigne to Ferdinand of Arragon, who, in the doing thereof, had promised to the King, to giue no succour, aide or fauour any way, to the Kings of Naples and of Sicille his Cousines and Brother in Law, and so did he solemnely sweare vpon the Crosse and holy Euangelists in the Citie of Barcellona: An Oath immediately after violated by himselfe, when he saw that he was quietly seated in the surrendred Lands. For, perceiuing that it was fully couenanted, that the King should passe himselfe in person into Italie, for Conquering the Kingdome of Naples: he sent his Ambassadour Antonia Fonsequa, to protest, that he would aide (with his best meanes) the Kings of Naples, if so be the King would attempt vpon their Estate. He met with the the King at Velitres beyond Rome, to whom hee deliuered his Ambassage: whereto hee receiued not any answere; so much did the King hold in detestation, the perfidious disloyaltie of the Arragonian, without either Faith or Conscience.

King Charles his Royall entertainment in the Cities of Italy.

The King continuing on his way for Ast, was magnificently welcommed into the good Cities of Italie, as at Rauia, Placentia, Lucka, Pisa and Florence: Afterward at Viterbo, Viennа and at Rome, where he made his entrance into it like an Emperour (borne, and being the eldest Sonne of the Church) on the last day of the Moneth of December, in the same yeare One thousand foure hundred fourescore and thirteene, his whole Armie in Battaile arraye, and the Artillerie appointed about the Pallace of Saint Marke, where the King lodged. Pope Alexander the sixt (a natiue of Valentia in Arragon, and a partaker with Alphonso and Ferdinand) affrighted at such a Martiall entrance; locke vp himselfe in the Castell of Saint Angelo. But at the same time, a great part of the same Castell wall being miraculously falne to the ground; the Pope was glad to submit himselfe to the Kings kindnesse, by the meanes and mediation of Iohn de Foix, Duke of Nemoux (hee had that Dukedome of the King, in counter-change for the Viscountie of Narbonna) the Counts of Bresse, and de Ligny, as also the Marshall of Gie, and the Bishop of Angiers, Maister Iohn de Rely.

The Pope affrighted at the Kings entrance.

These two Princes being thus reconciled together, the Pope keeping Chappell at the High Altar of Saint Peter in Rome, the Twentieth day of Ianuary, in the said yeare the King was Crowned Emperour of the East, and of Constantinople by the Pope; he being assisted with Fiue and Twenty Cardinals, Thirty Arch-bishops, Forty Bishops, and an infinite number of Prelates. Then was made Cardinall Briçonnet of Saint Maslo, principall motiue of this Voyage, with the Seneshall of Beaucaire. And the same day the King handled the diseased of the Euill, who were instantly cured, the Italians admiring at such wonderfull power.

King Charles crowned Emperour of the East and of Constantinople by the Pope in Rome.

The power & authority of King Charles in Rome.

In the said City of Rome, where the King soiourned Eight and Twenty dayes, were great places appointed and prepared for Iustice, and there erected Iibbets, Strappadoes in the Kings name: some were beheaded, others hanged, some beaten, their eares cut off, and diuers drowned as Theeues and Malefactors; especially in the great Market place, called Campo Fiore. Whereby the Italians might vnderstand, that as the Most Christian King, Eldest Sonne of the Church, whereto the Noble Kings of France (his Predicessors) had giuen the Riches and Seigneuries which she possessed: hee had in Rome all power in those three kindes of Iustice, tearmed high, meane and middle Iustice, and all Right of Soueraignty; euen as in the City of Paris, and other Cities of France. Contrary to the opinion of such, as, forging an imaginary Donation of Constantine, granted to the Pope S. Syluester: make the Popes to be absolute Princes, and Soueraigne Lords of Rome.

From whence Charles being departed the Eight and Twentieth day of Ianuary, to shape his course directly for Naples: the Castels of Montfortin, & of Mont Saint Iohn, the very strongest places in the Neopolitane Estate, were ouercome by assault; yet Alphonso had lien seauen yeares before the last of these Castles, and could not surprize it by force; which the French performed in lesse then Eight dayes, entring thereinto by a Breach, cutting the throats of Nine Hundred Fifty and Fiue men of Armes, for hauing so audaciously refused to render the place, the King then being before it himselfe in Person.

Ferdinando & his Father get away out of Naples, and make for Sicille.

Ferdinand, Duke of Calabria, Sonne to Alphonso of Naples, was at Saint Germaines, a place well fortified with three good strong Castles, as being the Key for entring into the Kingdome of Naples: but hauing heard the newes, that Mont Saint Iohn was surprized, where hee hoped that the French Army would bee vtterly defeated; hee forsooke that Towne to retreate himselfe to Naples. And thence also hee departed with his Father, directing their course toward Sicily, for plainly they perceiued, that (perforce) they must giue way to the victorious Armes of King Charles, whom God euen guided by the hand, to conquer Italy.

Capua yeelded her Keyes to the King.

The King hauing brought Saint Germaines vnder his power, the men of Capua went and deliuered vp their City Keyes: whether hee went to lodge, and made his his entrance on the Eighteenth day of February. And the Twentieth day of the same Moneth, his Maiesty being lodged in the Towne of Auerza: the Deputies of Naples came and offered the Keyes of the Citie, and aduertised him withall, that Alphonso and his Sonne Ferdinand had quitted the place, being fled secretly by Sea into Sicily.

The Citie of Naples surrendred to King Charles.

Into the City of Naples the King made his entrance in pompe and magnificence; on Sunday, the Eight and Twentieth day of February. Afterward both by Land and Sea he caused the Cittadell to be assayled, and the two Castels Neuf and l'Oeuf. The Cittadell was taken in the assault, and the Spanyards, Italians and others which were within it, hauing burned the houses which stood round about it, got themselues into the Castell Neuf, where being pressed by a furious batterie, they yeelded vpon composition, to haue their liues and goods saued. Which place being taken, the whole Armie inuested the Castell de l'Oeuf, the batterie beginning on Wednesday the fourth day of March, and continued very violently vntill Thursday, the twelfth day of the same Moneth, when the resistants were then constrained to yeelde. So the King hauing conquered all the strong places of the Citie, he determined to make his entrance againe thereinto, as Emperour of the Romaines, King of France, of Naples, of Sicilie and of Ierusalem, on Tuesday the twelfth day of May, in the yeare One thousand foure hundred fourescore and foureteene.

The Cittadel, Castels and all the strong places won, & the Kings entrance

At this his entrance, he tooke the title of Charles Cæsar Augustus, being clothed in a great Cloake or Mantle of Scarlet, Furred with Ermines, the Imperiall Crowne on his head, the round Ball in his right hand, and a Scepter in the left, mounted on a Horse most richly harnessed. Ouer his head was carried a Canopie of rich Cloath of Gold, embrodered all ouer with Pearles, raised on sixteene Pillers or Staues, and supported by sixteene of the very worthiest Lords in all the Kingdome of Naples. About his person waited his Footemen, attired all in massie Cloath of Gold; the Preuost of the Hostell, and the Archers of his Guard. Before him went the Seneschall de Beaucaire, Gouernour of Gayetta (which was taken by force) representing the Constable of the Kingdome, and Monsieur Gilbert de Bourbon, Count of Montpensier, Vice-Roy and Lieutenant Generall of the Realme. After the King followed the Prince of Salerne, who was became French; with the great Lords of France, Kinsemen to the King: then the Knights of his Order, all of them wearing long Cloakes of Scarlet, like vnto that of the Kings, and according to the fashion of the auncient Romaine Senators, Assistants and Councellors to the King, as those that formerly had bin to the Emperours of Rome.

The fortune & order of the Maiesticall pompe.

The Officers of State, & others according to their rank & places.

At dinner & Supper this day, the great Seneschall or Steward of Naples, cloathed all in white, and mounted on a white Courser, serued in all the meates before the King: who that day (with his owne hand) made many Lords Knights, and other Gentlemen of the City of Naples. In which Kingdome hauing left for Gouernour and Viceroy, Gilbert of Bourbon, Count of Montpensier: hee resolued to returne for France, and departed from the said City of Naples the One and Twentieth day of the same Moneth of May.

The Seneschall or Steward of Naples.

But before hee had set downe this firme resolution, hee had a purpose for the Conquest of Constantinople, and for his better effecting the same, hee had constrained the Pope to deliuer into his hands Zizime, Brother to the Great Turke Baiazeth the Second: who standing in feare of the Christians; paid yearely to the Pope Forty Thousand Duckats, because hee should not see him at liberty. The Popes vrging necessity, of deliuering him to King Charles, and loosing so much yearely money, made him to poyson him; so that hee liued but fifteene dayes at the most. Moreouer, the same Pope (in all hast) gaue aduertisement to Baiazeth by a Bonaer of Geneua, concerning the precedent purpose of King Charles.

King Charles hasteneth for the conquest of Constantinople.

And the same Pope named Alexander the Sixt, an Arragonian by Nation, and (in that quality) partaker with the House of Arragon; practised a League against the King, of the Emperour, the Castilian, the Venetians, Florentines, Duke of Millaine, and other Potentates of Italy, who fearing the Conquests of the French, had no desire at all to deale with them. For notwithstanding all faire outward apparances, they hey hated the Dominion of the French; and in no better manner affected the Spaniards; but reputed them both proud and arrogant, not to be endured.

The fortunes of Duke Lewes of Orleans, Lieutenant of the Nauall Armie.

Since the beginning of the Kings passage on his Iourney, Duke Lewes of Orleans, his Lieutenant Generall in the Nauall Army, on the Sea had vanquished Fredericke of Arragon, Vncle to Ferdinand, whom Alphonso the Father (before hee forsooke the City of Naples) had caused to bee published abroad, yea, and proclaimed King of Naples and of Sicily. The same Duke of Orleans perceiuing, that Lodowicke Sforza had vniustly vsurped the Dukedome of Millaine against his Nephewes, whom hee had put to death by poyson, & that the said Duke was entred League with the Pope and other Potentates of Italy, to enclose the King at his returne; possessed himselfe of the City of Nouara in the Estate of Millaine, which (as indeed it was true) belonged to him, in regard of his Grandmother Valentina. On the contrary side, Lodowicke Sforza maintained himselfe in his vsurpation, and (in counterchange) laboured to surprize the Towne of Ast, appertaining to the said Duke of Orleans, thinking to finde nobody there to defend it; as hee might haue done, if hee had sooner thought on it: for the Marquesse of Saluces had sent thither Fiue Hundred men, and other troupes of well appointed Soldiers, which the Duke of Bourbon (Regent) had sent out of France to assist the King. But these Forces came very conueniently to coape with the men of Millaine, conducted by Count Galeazzo of S. Seuerino. So the Towne of Ast continued in obedience to Lewes, Duke of Orleans, who being possessed also of the City of Nouara (which is ten miles from Millaine) and the Castle thereof; was immediately after assailed by the said Lodowicke Sforza.

Lodowicke Sforza his hope for the surprizall of Ast.

Now, the King being parted from Naples, came backe by Auerso to Rome (from whence the Pope was gone) and won the Estate of the Venetians, Sienna and Pisa, (which hee tooke into his protection against the Florentines, and gaue the Gouernment to Lewes of Luxembourg, Count of Ligny his Cousin) with Luca & Petra Sancta, where is the passage of the Alpes. And from thence he went to Scura, Serezana, and Pontremo, the entrance of the Alpes mountaines, where the Germaines by maine strength passed all the great Artillery.

The returne of King Charles the Eight from Naples, & his fortunes by the way.

From Pontremo, the King came to lodge at Fornoua, the foote of the Alpie Mountaine: neere to which Borrough the Italians were encäped, to giue the King Battaile. The Marquesse of Mantua was Captaine Generall of the Venetians, & for the Duke of Millaine was the Count of Gayazza, who hauing forsaken the French side, tooke part with Lodowicke Sforza, to whom hee was then Lieutenant Generall. This Army of the Enemy consisted of very neere Forty Thousand men, all in good furnishments; and the Kings amounted not to the fourth part of them.

On Monday the Sixt day of July, One Thousand, Foure Hundred, Foure Score and Fifteene, was fought this memorable Battell of Fornoua; the honour whereof remained to King Charles the Eight. The Marshall of Gie conducted the Auant-garde, wherein, next vnder God, the King had placed all his hope. The King was in this Battaile armed at all points, his Armour most richly engrauen and gilded. Vpon his Cuirasse he ware a Cassocke of Cloth of Siluer, Dammasked with Red, (for his Liueries were Carnation and white) semed in embroyderie of Gold with the Crosse of Ierusalem. The Helmet on his head was of pure Gold, couered with a most rich Crowne, and hee was mounted on a goodly Courser, blacke haired, and named Blacke Sauoy, because Charles. Duke of Sauoy had sent the Horse to him as a present, richly barded, with the Chanfraine of great value, whereon was exalted a braue plume of Feathers, Carnation and White, the Caparisons and other furniture being answerable to the Coate of Armes, semed with the Crosse of Ierusalem.

The memorable Battaile fought at Fornoua, in Anno 1495.

The Royall presence of the King in his Army.

In this Royall equipage and manner mounted, this Prince (aged but Foure and Twenty, or Fiue and Twenty yeares) appeared farre otherwise then his nature carried, or his stature, or complexion: for the horse shewed him, to bee great, and his countenance had a cheerefull couloure, his words likewise discreet and bold. For all these respects was his person particularly obserued by his enemies, who purposed to beset him soundly; but neere to him was the Bastard of Bourbon, Mathew, who that day performed wonders, to saue and guard the person of the King.

A braue King is an eye-sore to his enemies.

The

The beginning and prosecution of the Battaile.

The Enemies (who were ten to one) began the fight, close ioyning to the Valley of Tarro at a place called Vergera, two miles from Fornoua, and foure miles from Parma: but the fire and fury thereof was about the Kings person, who acted maruailes in his fighting, being brauely seconded by Mathew of Bourbon, Lewes de la Trimouille, and Iohn Iaques de Triuulce, a Millanois, expulsed the City of Naples by Alphonso and Ferdinand. Since which time of his disgrace, he tooke part with King Charles, whom he serued both profitably and very faithfully, as being a very valiant and wise Captaine.

The enemies Armie felt (as yet) more feare then harme, for part of them being falne vpon the baggage, to make prey thereof, seemed to minde nothing more: but the French, making no account of so poore a losse, and perceiuing that the person of the King was safe; fell with such fury vpon the Italians, that they who were most valiant in the Army, began to flye in a most strange confusion, as appearing to haue neither manly feare nor shame.

The small French Army relieued almost by miracle.

A small Riuer which they had formerly passed, to come & enclose the Kings person, had so enlarged it selfe in a moment, by meanes of a storme of Raine, Thunder and Lightening, which happened while they were at fierce handy stroakes (God fighting for the noble King of France, whom he guided by the hand) that such as aduentured to passe it againe (which was no small number) neuer thinking on the perill they ranne into, were all furiously carried away and drowned in the water, and the greater part of the Infantery slaine in the field, but the Lords of worth were taken. Of the French there was slaine Seauen Hundred in all, and among them onely Ten Gentlemen of note.

The Army of the Italians foyled & put to flight.

The Bastard of Bourbon, by pursuing the runnawayes ouerfar, without being seconded, was take prisoner by the enemies, who sent to the King the next morning, to craue fauour for carrying away their dead, to giue them buriall. Which he would not permit, but as a signal of the victory, which God had bestowed on him, contrary to all humane hope: lodged that night in the Field of Battaile, and remained there on the morrow till towards the Euening, when hee went to lodge two miles thence, at an appointed place, named Magdelane, whither the Artillery was brought from the Field, and placed about the Kings Pauilion.

The Artillery placed about the Kings royall Pauilion.

On hee iourneyed in the despight of his enemies, and came to Nouara in good time for the Duke of Orleans, besiedged there by them of Millaine: who were compelled to raise their Siedge, and get them gone to Millaine againe. From Nouara the King went to the City of Ast, and thence to Vercellis, where dyed the Count of Vendosme, (a worthy Prince of the House of Bourbon) to the no little griefe of the French. His death happened on Friday, the Second day of October, in the said yeare, Foure Hundred, Foure Score and Fifteene: his Obsequies were celebrated in the principall Church of Vercelles, but his dead body was carried to Vendosme.

The reuolt of Neapolitanes so soone as King Charles was gone thence, & the extremity of the French.

Charles at his returne to France, addicted himselfe to Iusts and Tournaments, and to bee familiar with Ladies; without much remembring them whom hee had left in Italy, scarsly well entreated by the Neapolitanes; who reuolted (in fauour of Ferdinand) so soone as the King was departed. And in such manner, that the Count of Montpensier was constrained to withdraw himselfe to Salerne with the Prince thereof, who still continued honestly French.

In Calabria was the Lord of Aubigny; in Brescia the Lord Gratian des Guerres; Georges de Suilly at Tarentum, all of them in miserable case and brought to extreame necessity, through want of Victuals and money, hauing remained a yeare and an halfe without any succour or money sent from France. So that the French were enforced to yeeld themselues to Ferdinand of Arragon, who (as then) stiled himselfe King of Naples and of Sicilie boldly.

The Count of Montpensier poysoned by the Neapolitane.

Charles being aduertised of these bad newes, and likewise of the death of the Lord de Montpensier (impoysoned by the Neapolitane) which brought along with it more then hope for reddition of the City of Gayetta, the sole entrance for regaining the State of Naples: resolued to set another puissant Armie on foote, and repasse it againe to Naples; hauing named for his Lieutenant Generall the Duke of Orleans. But he refused that charge, alleadging one while one excuse, and then againe another. Now indeed indeed the truth was, that being well informed of the Kings condition, to be so weake and impotent of nature, as presaged no long continuance for him; hee would not leaue France, the Crowne whereof appertained to him, because the King had not any Sonnes.

The sudden death of King Charles the Eight.

In regard of these refusals, the King determined to goe himselfe in person thither, which he could not doe, in being preuented by sudden death, as hee was looking out of his Gallery window, at his Castle d'Amboise, (which hee caused to bee newly re-builded euen as now it is at this day) beholding the Princes and Lords of his Court, playing at Tennis. Hee dyed the Seauenth day of Aprill, the end of the yeare Foure Score and Seauenteene, before Easter, at which day sollemnly begin the yeares in France. In Guienne they begin on the day of the Incarnation of our Lord, which is the Fiue and Twentieth day of March.

The Kings vow before his death.

This Prince some while before his death, made a vow to God, no more to commit any mortall sinne: he withdrew himselfe from the worldly vanities of his Court, forsooke the loue of Ladies, and liued chastly wth his wife Queene Anne, a beautifull and wise Princesse.

The age of the King at his death.

At the houre of his death, hee entred into the Flower of his Age, hauing finished but Seauen and Twenty yeares. Of his owne naturall disposition, he was humble and courteous to euery one, bountifull and magnificent, a good Catholique, without hypocrisie, faithfull, an vpright Iusticer without dissimulation, and well beloued of his people. Of whom, and of all strangers hee won the reputation, to be the most valiant and couragious Prince of his person, that had beene seene in an hundred yeares before. From Amboise his body was carried to Paris, and from thence to Saint Denis, in France, where his Figure is to bee seene in Brasse, kneeling on his knees, and his hands closed, but aduanced towards heauen, with this Epitaph, as a testimony of his valiancie.

His body carried from Amboise and buried at S Denis.

The Epitaph hanging in a goodly Table by his Tombe.

Hic Octaue iaces Francorum Carole Regum,
Cui victa est forti Britonis ora manu.
Parthenope illustrem tribuit captiua triumphum,
Claraque Fornouio pugna peracta solo.
Coepit et Henricus regno depulsus auito,
Bellare auspicijs sceptra Britanna tuis.
O plures longinquc dies si fata dedissent,
Te nullus toto maior in Orbe foret.

His deformity recompenced with greater blessings.

Hee was deformed in face and body, but in recompence thereof, God had giuen him a faire minde, susceptible and capable of haughty enterprises: which (without all question to the contrary) would haue beene executed, if his life had lasted longer time.

The Cardinals in opposition against the Pope.

The Conquests of Charles the Eight in Italy, were trauersed by the King of Castile, Ferdinand of Arragon, contrary to former promise, and by Pope Alexander the Sixt, pertaker with the House of Arragon, a coniurd Enemy against our Charles, from whom (in violence of passion) hee laboured to take the name of most Christian King, for transferring it to the said Ferdinand of Castile. But the Cardinals opposed themselues couragiously against him, so that this Pope deuised another name or title, giuing to the said Ferdinand & his Wife the Sirname of Catholique Kings; a name which hath euer since remained to them, for hauing brought to end the warres of Granado.

Preparation to recouer Millaine.

King Lewes hauing succeeded in the Crowne, repudiated Madame Iane of France, whom hee had espoused perforce, and tooke to Wife Madame Anne of Bretaigne, widdow to King Charles the Eight. After this Marriage, he made his preparations for recouering his Dukedome of Millaine, (which belonged to him, in the right of Valentina of Millaine, his Grandmother, as wee haue formerly related in the Order of Orleans) and for the expulsion of Lodowicke.

Here-

Hereupon, and to effect what hee intended, he caused a potent Army to passe the mountaines, conducted by the Lord d'Aubigny, Robert Stuart, an honourable Scot, Marshall of France, called the good Father of Cheualrie, & Iohn Iacques de Trimoüille, a Millanois (afterward Marshall of France) who at their first approach, tooke Nouara and Rocque, land Alexandria in the dust, the spoyle whereof serued for recompence to the Souldiours. Pauia fearing to runne the same fate, yeelded it selfe freely to the French: so that within the compasse of fifteene dayes, they conquered the Dukedome of Millaine. All this while was Lodowicke within the City, who growing distrustfull of the people; got secretly thence with his two Sonnes, escaping by the Lake of Coma, and fled toward Maximilian, King of the Romaines, to derive some succour from him. By his departure, Millaine was taken by the French, the fourth day of September, in the yeare, One Thousand, Foure Hundred, Foure Score and Nineteene; the Castell still holding out for Lodowicke the Moore.

Millaine taken by the French.

Lewes the Twelfth receiued tidings at Lyons, concerning the surprizall of Millaine; whether hee went with all diligence, and made his entrance into it. The Captaine of the Rocquet or Cittadell, who could well haue held it two yeares space at the least, so strongly it was furnished with all things necessary; did yet neuertheless yeeld it into the Kings hand, to haue the moity of the goods and riches that were in it.

King Lewes his entrance into Millaine.

Lodowicke, assisted by the forces of Maximilian, preuailed on so farre, that hee got entrance into Millaine, by intelligence and reuolt of the Inhabitants, this was done the third day of Ianuary, in the said yeare foure hundred fourescore & Nineteene; the French yet keeping still the Castell, which Lodowicke could not get by friendship nor force.

The Iubilie for the Seculer yeare, One thousand fiue hundred, being open at Rome (the Eeuen of Christmasse, in the said yeare foure score and nineteene, on which day the Romaines begin their yeare) by Pope Alexander the Sixt: great concourse of the people (of all Nations) flocked into Italy, namely of the French, whose deuotion was much troubled by the bad dealing of Lodowicke, who did set their liues at open sale, giuing a Duckate for euery head brought him: so that in all the Innes and Hosteries throughout Italy, vpon the high roade wayes conducting to Rome, French Pilgrimes throats were cut most cruelly. Which was no sooner discouered, but the French Army, remaining in the parts about Millaine, made warre (without any pity) on them of Millaine, and so fast as any of them could be taken, blood for blood (and more to expiate and appease the Ghosts of the French. And for example to the Hosteries and Innes (all crimson tinctured with their blood:) diuers were burned with their Masters, Wiues, Maid-seruants and Men-seruants, without sparing sparing so much as their Cats, which serued as no meane terror an affright to others.

The yeare of Iubilie at Rome.

The bloodie cruelties of the French against the Italians.

Now, that which gaue subiect to the Millanoises (by their owne confession) to reuolt from Lewes the twelfth, was this extreame bad behauiour in the French. At the first Voyage which King Charles the Eight made beyond the Mountaines; the Italians (so speaketh our French Saluſt Philip de Commines) adored the French, reputing them to bee Saints, and saying, that they had not their like for goodnesse, Faith, mildnesse and discretion. But this good opinion of them lasted not long, for our French misgouerned Libertines, by their riots and robberies, declared the quite contrary: and gaue apparant subiect of being accused, for taking mens wiues perforce from them, and goods from the people, whersoeuer they could find them by night or day.

The first Voyage of King Charles the Eight into Italy.

Concerning the women, it may be that they lied not; and for the rest, doubtlesse somwhat was done; for the French could not finde any thing too hot, or too heauie, a disease neuertheless) as common to the Italians, Germaines, Spaniards, and other Nations, as to the French. But this was it that confounded the Kings affaires, which otherwise had carried themselues formally: but being conducted without any order, and the French Souldiers transported with pilferies; this was the reason, of alienating the Italians from their former affection to the French, to the great griefe and and discontentment of honest mindes, for the extraordinary honour and renowne, which the French nation might haue won to themselues in this Voyage.

And such bad behauiours, are meanes vtterly contrary for attaining to any great Conquest, in what part soeuer it is (but especially in Italy) and to keepe it long: because the Italians are the most ielous and couetous Nation, beyond all other in the world. Wherefore, whosoeuer would make him selfe a Potentate in Italy; hee must hold it for an infallible Maxime, to be very modest and retent in all his actions; but especially towards women; and to lay no oppression vpon the people.

The natural disposition of the Italians.

The Italians are inconstant, and desire nothing more then change, they contemne the facility of the French, and hate the rigor of the Dutch, a Nation diuers wayes proud and tyrannicall, yet can better conserue their Conquests, then we: who of all our Voyages to Piedmont, Millaine, Naples, and Sicilie, haue not reserued one inch of ground. Diffidence is the Mother of Assurance, and to make our owne best beginning, it behoueth vs first to conquer our selues.

Distrust is the mother of assurance.

Maxima cunctarum Victoria, victa voluptas.

A graue Verse, well seruing for an Epitaph on the Tombe of Great Scipio the African: who abstained from all force and violence towards men and their goods. Moreouer, to containe the people subiected to duty, by a moderated gouernment betweene mildnesse and power: is to stand vpon good guard night and day, and not to trust ought else, but in good behauiour towards the Italians, with whom to communicate and be the least familiar, is the best and safest.

The Epitaph on the tombe of great Scipio

Now the men of Millaine being thus reduced vnder the obedience of Lord Lodowicke; the King was constrained once more, to bring an Army into the Field; which he committed to the conduct of Messire Lewes de la Trimouille, Viscount of Thouars: who hauing made an agreement betweene the Lords of Aubigny and of Trimoüille; all three ioyned together, and gaue such order and direction to the Army, that Lodowicke standing in feare thereof, was inforced againe to forsake Millaine, with an hundred horse onely, and so withdrew himselfe to Nouara, where was his Army and Artillery. As speedily was he followed by the French Army, whereto a Bourgongnon Captain, named Des Tottieres, yeelded himselfe, being come forth of the said Towne of Nouara, wherein (at that time) for Ledowicke were foure thousand Swizzers, eight thousand Lanſ-kenets, about sixe or seauen thousand Lombards, and eight hundred Bourgongnons, who with the said Captaine Des Tottieres, ioyned themselues to the French Army on the one side, and the foure thousand Swizzers, won by the Bailiffe of Dijon, on the other side.

King Lewes raiseth another Army against Lodowicke.

Lodowicke came forth into the Field, and presented Battaile to the French, which they accepted very willingly, and Lodowicks Army comming to handy blowes; they submitted to the French without striking one stroake: because the Swizzers and Lanſ-kenets being not paid their Wages, they would not by any meanes fight. Such misfortunes as this, doe often happen to Princes, that make vse of Strangers seruice, who when need requireth; will bee sure to hold their hands, making three or foure demands for money before the Battaile, when they well know it is not to be had. Let a Prince therefore prouide his Army of his owne Subiects, of whom he shall bee better and more profitably serued: for strangers soules are meerely mercenary, and they affect not Princes, but in regard of the benefit they can deriue from them. They are for their seruice that will giue them most, and their loue is poysed in the Ballance with their wages, but no otherwise. Lodowicke being thus betrayed, disguised himselfe in the habite of a Gray-Frier, as hoping so to saue himselfe. But the Lord of Trimouille, causing a passage to be made betweene two Pikes crossed, for all them of the enemies Army, departing with their liues and goods saued, one after another: Lodowicke being knowne, was taken, and sent Prisoner to Chasteau de Pierre Encise at Lyons, from whence he was (not long after) transported to the great Tower of Bourges, and there he finished his dayes.

The Army of Lodowicke faileth him in the Field.

A very worthy aduice giuen to Princes.

Lodowicke taken and sent Prisoner into France.

The Towne of Nouara by this meanes yeelded it selfe to the King, who had for his part of the victory (won on the thursday before Palme-Sunday in the same yeare fourescore and nineteen) Lodowicke, and all his Artilery, with the Towne of Nouara, very rich and mighty in goods.

Ascanio Sforza brother to Lodowicke.

The Cardinall Ascanio Sforza, left Gouernour at Millaine by his Brother, hauing heard the tidings of his surprizall: departed thence, accompanied with three hundred Horse, belonging to the richest Inhabitants, and some pieces of Artillery, taking his way towards Bologna. On the way hee was met by a Venetian Captaine, that came with his troupe to ioyne with the Armie Royall. This Captaine was named Soncino Bianſono, who crying out aloud France and Saint Marke, ſet vpon the Cardinalls Company, conducted by Count John, Brother to the Marqueſſe of Mantua, to whom hee gaue charge, to purſue him fighting to Chaſteau de Rinolles, where the Cardinall was as ſoone inueſted by the Venetian, who had priſoner in his power Count John of Mantua, of whom hee had a great ranſome. With him was taken the Abbot of Sanzeles, foure of the Viſcounts, Captaine Bardo, & an hundred thouſand Duckats in ready money, with all the Iewels of the Cardinall Aſcanio, who likewiſe was contented to yeeld, onely his life ſaued. Hee was deliuered into the hands of Stephen de Vers, Seneſchall of Beaucaire, Lord of Montoiſon, and the Iudge Mage of Prouence: who brought him ſafely to Chaſteau de Pierre-Enciſe at Lyons, euen where before his Brother was impriſoned.

The Inhabitants of Millaine much daunted at the ſurprizall of their Duke, his Brother alſo, and the diſcomfiture of their Armie, by that of the Kings which had inueſted them; ſent their Deputies to the Cardinall George d'Amboiſe, who by the King was eſtabliſhed Lieutenant Generall ouer the Millainers; entreating him to take compaſſion of them, to ſaue their City from pillage, and to make his entrance into it, cruing moſt humbly pardon of him, for their offence committed, by admitting Lord Lodowicke into their City. The Cardinall made it manifeſt to them, by Maſter Michaell de Ris, Doctor of the Lawes, and Councellour in the Parliament of Bourgongne, that the enormity of their rebellion was puniſhable with death: becauſe (without any ſubiect) they had withdrawne themſelues from obedience to their King and Souraigne Lord, who had ſo mildly and mercifully dealt with them. And that the ſumme of a million of Pounds which they paid yearly to Lodowicke in taxes and tallages, hee had moderated it to the ſumme of ſixe hundred and two & twenty thouſand pounds (here is to be noted, that the Dukedome of Millaine valued yearely fifteene hundred thouſand Duckats) which gentle and mild vſage in the French, they had neuertheleſſe vtterly forgot.

All which notwithſtanding, hee declared to them in the Kings name, that hee would ſpare the liues of the Inhabitants, and exempt their City from pillage, and all the people from death, which they had iuſtly deſerued, vpon condition: that they would yeeld and deliuer to him, the principall Authours of the rebellion, to bee iuſtly puniſhed, and themſelues (for euer after) continue faithfull to the King, and to his Succeſſours the Kings of France, their Dukes and Souereigne Lords.

Moreouer, to defray the charges of this laſt warre, the City of Millaine ſhould (for an honourable amends) pay three hundred thouſand Ducates; to wit, fifty thouſand in the preſent Moneth of Aprill, One thouſand, fiue hundred and fifty thouſand the firſt day of May next followng; and the other two hundred thouſand at the end of the ſame yeare, except the King would be pleaſed in clemencie, to prolong them a further time for the laſt payment.

The Cardinall d'Amboiſe his entrance into Millaine.

Which being agreed vnto, the Cardinall d'Amboiſe entred into Millaine vpon Good Friday, it being the ſeauenteenth day of Aprill: accompanied wih Meſſire Iacques de Triuulce (Marſhall of France in the time of King Frances) the Biſhop of Lucon, Chancellour of Millaine, the Lord of Neuf-Chaſtell, with other Lords and Captaines of the Armie. Hee went to lodge at the Hoſtell called La Cour-Viſcha, the Pallace belonging to the firſt Viſcounts of Millaine, whether the three Eſtates thereof went in ſolemne proceſſion, bearing the Crucifixe and Banner of the Virgin Mary; after which followed all the Children of the City, Sonnes and Daughters, cloathed all in white, and in this manner the Cardinall welcomed them in the Court of his Pallace, ſitting aloft vpon a Theater, and round about him his French Lords and Captaines. For the Inhabitants, the man moſt famous among their Aduocates, named Maiſter Michael Touſe, made the Oration, deſiring grace and mercy on their their behalfe. The Councellour de Ris returned a kinde and mercifull anſwere, whose then the inconſtant people deſerued: which being concluded, all the young Children (innocent in the guilt of their Fathers) paſſed two and two together before the French Lords, crying with lowd voyces, France, France, Mercy, Mercy.

Now King Lewes the Twelfth, hauing recouered his Dukedome of Millaine, wherein he eſtabliſhed as his Lieutenant Generall Iohn Iacques de Triuulce, Marſhall of France, a Lord naturally affected of the Countrey, and moſt faithfull to the Crowne of France) with the Seigneuries of Geneway, where gouerned (for his Maiſty) the Prince Philip of Cleues, Lord of Rauaſtaine, his Couſin by the Mothers ſide: hee reſolued to conquer the Kingdomes of Naples and Sicily. To effect his intention, he cauſed to paſſe into Italy his Lieutenant Generall Lewes of Armaignac, Duke of Nemoux, and Meſſire Robert Stuart, a valiant Scottiſhman, Lord of Aubigny, Knight of his Order, and Marſhall of France, worthily called, The Father of Chiualrie, who (in ſhort time) reconquered the City and Kingdome of Naples, againſt Dom Frederick of Naples, who after the death of Dom Ferainand his Nephew, had poſſeſſed himſelfe thereof.

The Kings purpoſe to conquer Naples & Sicily.

His reſiſtance was but of ſmall continuance, being compelled to yeeld himſelfe to the Lord of Aubigny, who ſent him into France, whither (within few dayes after) his Wife and Children, excepting the Eldeſt Dom Ferdinand of Arragon, Duke of Calabria, who had fortified himſelfe in the City of Tuceatum) followed him. So came the Kingdome of Naples againe to her legitimate and naturall Lord the Kings of France, in the yeare of our Saluation, One Thouſand, Fiue Hundred and Two.

Dom Frederick conquered & ſent into France.

Ferdinand of Arragon King of Caſtile (to whom the French gaue the name of Iohn Gippon) was moſt highly offended at theſe Conqueſts of the French in Italie, and practiſed all meanes hee could deuiſe, to turne the winde a contrary way. Particularly he dealt with the Venetians (at all times held and knowne to be wiſe & well aduiſed worldlings) to aſſiſt theſe partakers of Arragen, for the kingdome of Naples; as they did within a while after. He (for his owne part) making an outward ſhew of being well pleaſed, at the ſucceſſefull fortunes of the French, gaue charge to his Sonne in Law Philip, Arch-duke of Auſtria (Father vnto Charles the Fift) that, at his returning into the Netherlands or Low-Countries, hee ſhould reſolue on a brotherly amity, in him towards King Lewes, who as then ſoiourned at Lyons, as being neereſt to him of his Eſtates, that were in Italy.

The Conqueſts of the French in Italie enuied by Ferainand of Arragon.

Philip being there well entertained, performed to the King Liedge homage for the County of Flanders, a Peeredome of France: ſo practiſed and done in fauour of King Ferdinand his Father in Law, when they made this agreement; to wit. That the ſaid Ferdinand ſhould enioy the Realme of Sicily, and beare the title, renouncing for the King, all right which he had or could pretend; and her yeelding it to the ſaid Ferdinand and his Succeſſors; moreouer and beſide the Countries of Apuglia and Calabria, neighbours to Sicilie. As Ferdinand (for his part) acquitted and releaſed to the King, and to his Succeſſors Kings of France, the Title of King of Naples, and of Ieruſalem, with all that hee could pretend thereto, without any time after ward, either he or his Succeſſors ſhould take the titles, or vſe the Armes. And that vnto the Kings of France ſhould remaine Abbruzzo and Terra di Laucuro (wherein is the City of Naples) which Lands of Abbruzzo and di Laucuro, aſſigned to the French with the ſaid Titles and Armes of Kings of Naples and of Ieruſalem, & thoſe of Calabria and Apuglia, aſſigned to the Arragonnois, ſhould bee a conquered and wonne by theſe two Kings each at his owne coſt and by power, without any damage or diſturbance enſuing by the one to the other.

The County of Flanders a Peeredome of France.

The accord betweene Ferdinand and the Kings of France.

This Partition or diuiſion was approued by Pope Alexander the Sixt, and peace ſworne betweene theſe two great Princes, Lewes the Twelfth, and Ferdinand the Firſt, King of Spaine, called th Catholique. Wherein were comprehended Maximilian King of the Romanes, and his Sonne Philip, Arch-duke of Auſtria: publiſhed and proclaimed in the City of Lyons, the Fourth day of Aprill, after Eaſter, in the yeare, One thouſand, fiue hundred and three.

The peace ſworne betweene France and Spaine.

Fredericke of Naples dies in France in the City of Tours.

Lewes had vsed (very fauourably) Fredericke of Naples, to whom, and to his Wife and Children hee had assigned in Aniou the principall Cities and Townes for their Estate, to the value of Thirty Thousand Crownes of Rents, which hee enioyed till his deceasse, and which hapned in the City of Tours. Hee had beene foure yeares King of Naples, hauing succeeded his Nephew Dom Ferdinand, Successor to his Father Dom Alphonso: euen he who (pressed by the victorious Armes of King Charles, after hee had made knowne for King his said Sonne Ferdinand) fled into Sicilie, where hee dyed a Monke; who was Sonne and Successour in the same Kingdome to Ferdinand, the Bastard Sonne to Don Alphonso of Arragon, Adopted by the Second Ioane Queene of Naples, as wee haue formerly reported to you.

Gonsale Ferdinandes de Cordoua sent into the Kingdome of Naples

Ferdinand, to the preiudice of the accord and peace, which had beene sworne to Lewes the Twelfth, sent into the kingdom of Naples Dom Gonsalo Ferdinandes de Cordua, to whom the Spaniards had giuen the Sirname of a great and valiant Captaine, who receiued secret command, that possessing himselfe of Apuglia and Calabria: he should find some apt and conuenient means, wherby to expell the French out of the Kingdome of Naples: which Realm is diuided into sixe principall Prouinces, as namely,

The Prouinces of Naples.

Terra di Lauoro, La Principalita, La Basilicata, Calabria, Apuglia and Abruzzia. Puilla or Apuglia is subdiuided in three parts: the Land of Otranto, that of Bari, and the Capitanate ioyned to Abruzzo, and separated from Apuglia, by the Riuer of Ofanta; so that the Capitanate had beene at all times esteemed and ceenzed ioyned to Abruzzo.

This is the most fertile Countrey of Italy, as well for all manner of Corne, as feeding of Cattell: so that the Custome thereof valueth (at the least) Fo[illegible] Score Thousand Duckats yearly, and comprized with the Partage of the French.

The naturall disposition of braue Leaders & Captaines.

Gonsale neuertheleesse, according to the disposition of a Commander, whose naturall inclination is, alwayes to preferre the enlarging of their estate before the feare of God, and faith sworne & promised with most exquisite solemnity; laying claime to the Capitanate, possessed himselfe thereof perforce, alleadging, that it belonged to his partage, as ioyning to Apuglia, which it could not doe.

But this Captaine hath beene said in all his actions and course of life, to bea man faithlesse and without feare of God, and was euermore wont to say. That a Souldiour who desireth to make himselfe famous to Posterity, should build his fortune according to those occurrences, wherely hee findeth the best meanes to doe it, and to warpe the cloath of his honour with a grosse woofe: without caring what men may iudge concerning the right or wrong of his Armes; prouided, that hee doe aduance the affaires of his Master.

Warrelike dexterity of the Italians in their malice or wrong.

And now the French are to seene in Armes, standing on their Guard against their enemies, appearing at their first arriuall milde as Lambes, loath to be moued: Afterward like Lyons, against such as would take their Pasturage from them. In all occasions elsse, men of Warre, of long foresight and prouidence, in managing and conseruing their Conquests, the honour and the profit of them.

A second agreement and pacification.

The French being succoured, regained the Capitanate, and shut vp Gonsalo in Barletta; who aided likewise by his men, had his reuenge. Hee made a second agreement and pacification, notwithstanding which, albeit sworne againe by the King, and Ferdinand of Arragon: yet Gonsalo left not the pursuit of his intent. And by surprizing the Lord of Aubigny, by the death the Vice-Roy of Naples, Lewes of Armagnac; the Spaniards became Maisters of that which we held there, and namely of the City of Naples, whereof the said Ferdinand Gonsalo de Cordoua, possessed himselfe the Thirteenth day of May, in the yeare Fiue Hundred and Three.

The Pope and the Venetians make a confederacie against the King of France.

This surprizall happened by default in the Venetians, who had promised succour to the King: but they performed it not: which made him conclude to giue them battaile at Agnadell, which was won by the French, the King being there in person, on Friday the eighteenth day of May, One thousand, fiue hūdred & nine After which Pope Iulius the Second (turning his back on the King, who had cōquered & rendred those Townes which the Venetians held of the Churches Patrimony) inuested in the Kingdome of Naples, One thousand, fiue hūdred & ten Ferdinand of Arragon paying Eight

Eight thousand Ounces of Gold, payable yearely on the day of the Prince of the Apostles, and from three yeares to three yeares, a white Hackney, Fifty thousand Crownes of Siluer in ready money, and the wages of three hundred men of Armes, at all times, and as often, as hee should bee summoned thereto, on behalfe of the Sacred Seate.

The famous Battaile of Rauenna fought on Easter day.

Against this Pope and his pertakers, was won the Battaile of Rauenna, by the Gentle and Couragious Prince Gaston de Foix, Duke of Nemoux, Counte de Estampes, Nephew to the King, and his Lieutenant Generall in Italie, by the death of Charles de Amboise. The victory of this Battaile, wonne vpon the sollemne day of Easter, being the Eleuenth day of April, 1beginning the yeare one Thousand, fiue hundred and twelue; was on the French side, albeit they lost their chiefest Leader there.

This good Pope Iulius the Second, brought troubles quite throughout all Italie, onely to expell the French nation thence. He excommunicated King Lewes the Twelfth; Maximilian, King of the Romanes, and other pertakers with the French. The Bull of the said excommunication, was giuen at Saints Peters the foureteenth of the Calends of August, One thousand, fiue hundred and eleauen, and of his Pontificalitie the eight Subsigned Iulius Ecclesiæ Catholica Episcopus; which fulminations was declared to be of none effect or vertue, by the Galicane Church. It was also the same Pope, who seconding the desseignes of Ferdinand of Arragon, whom he had inuested in the Kingdome of Naples; gaue him a secret Bull of dispensation, to possesse himselfe of the Kingdome of Nauarre, against Iohn de Albret, and Queene Katharine his wife, for being allied and of kinred, and taking part with King Lewes the Twelfth. This Bull beareth date the Eighteenth day of Febrary, in the yeare for Inuesting the said Ferdinand in the Kingdome of Naples, One Thousand fiue hundred and tenne, the seauenth of his Pontificalitie, at the Pallace of Laterane.

The King of France excommunicated by Pope Iulius the second.

Vrbanus Reuersus, Chanon and Chaunter of the Citty of Sens, and Doctour in Diuinitie, in his Booke of the liues of the Archbishops of Sens writeth, that after the Battaile at Rauenna, won on the sollemne feast day of Easter, beginning the yeare fiue hundred and twelue against Pope Iulius the Second, the elected Emperour Maximillian, and the Venetians; the said Pope Iulius, ouer and beside his fury against the French, and King Lewes the twelfth, King of Naples, Duke of Millaine and Lord of Geneway; composed three verses and small Prayers, in honour of the Virgin Mary, to expell the French out of Italie. And he ordained, that they should be said thorow all the lands vnder his obedience, and of his Allies and Confederates euery day, at Morning and Euening, at towling the Bell for Aue Maria; with great Pardons and Indulgences to all such as said them. To meete equally with this kinde affection in Pope Iulius, (a Martialliste and warriour) good King Lewes the twelfth, father of his people, obtained of the Prelates and Cleargy of France; that euery day, in all Churches Cathedrall, Collegiall, Conuentuall and Parochiall, at the eleuation of the body of our Lord in the Masse, this Versicle should be sung, Concerning three Verses; composed by the Pope in honor of the Virgin Mary.

O Salutaris Hostia
Quæ Coeli pandis ostium,
Bella premunt hostilia.
Da robur, fer auxilium.

Verses made to answer the kindenesse of Pope Iulius.

But in the Oratorie and Chappell of the King, the Chaunters in that place, instead of Fer auxilium, vsed to say.

Da robur, Serua Lilium.

Which was afterward was put in practise, by all the Cathedrall & Parish Churches thorow France.

King Frances the first his comming to the Crowne.

But the good King Lewes the twelfth, being deceased in his hostell Des Tournelles at Paris, the first day of Ianuary, one thousand foure hundred & foureteene, King Frances the first, his cousine, the very neerest to succeed him, came to the Crown of France, & to the pretensions of Ierusalem, Naples & Sicilie, as also of Millayne, Countie of Ast. &c.

Lewes, Third of the name, King of Sicily, and Duke of Aniou, Eldeſt Sonne to King Lewes the Second, and Yoland of Arragon, onely Daughter to the King of Arragon, Dom Pedro Firſt of the name, to whom appertained without any difficulty the Kingdome of Arragon vſurped, (according as many other Seigneuries were) by the Brother to the ſaid King John, Dom Martin of Arragon againſt his Niece. The ſame King Lewes the Third, Porta d'Arragon ſur le Tout de ſes Armes, according as did his Brother and Succeſſour.

The Armes of Charles Martell.

Rene, King of Sicily, called the Good, who varied his Armes of Alliances of his Predeceſſours Dukes of Aniou, and Kings of Sicily: becauſe that he, Porta d'Hongrie, in regard of Charles Martell, (Sonne to Charles, Second of the name, King of Sicily and of Naples) Crowned King of Hungary, Party de Sicilie, (as did Monſieur Lewes of France) Et Tierce de Ieruſalem: en Chef ſouſtenu des Duchez d'Aniou, & de Bar: Sur le Tout d'Arragon. Wee may ſee theſe carried in moſt part of the Armes, belonging to the Illuſtrious Houſe of Lorraine, deſcended of the Houſe of Aniou, in the perſon of Madame Yoland of Sicilie and of Anieu, Daughter to the good King Rene.

And the difference in Armes of the ſaid King, maketh it ſelfe eaſily knowne, by the Eſcutcheons of the Princes of this Houſe, Knights of the Order of the Holy-Ghoſt, whereof we haue formerly ſpoken.

The Deuice for the Armes of Duke Godfrey of Bullen.

They haue placed Arragon in the fourth part of the Chiefe, & parted the Armes of Gueldres betweene that of Aniou and of Bar, and aboue all, for them of Lorraine, La Deuize bien Blazonnee, of the Firſt King of Ieruſalem, of the Latine name, Godfroy de Bologne, Duc de Lorraine, & de Bouillon. This Deuice is richly Blazonned, D'Or à la bande de Gueules chargee de Trois Allerions d'Argent. Thoſe of Bologne were, D'Or au Gonfanon de Gueules frange de Synople. And them of Lorraine (before the ſaid Godfrey of Bologne) were D'Argent au Cerf paſſant de Gueules, ſomme d'Or ſans nombre.

The good King Rene Blazoned his Armes, as in like manner did his Father, and of the faſhion deſcribed in his Armes by his Herauld, and King of Armes of his Order called Croiſſant d'Or.

And as concerning the Deuiſe of the ſaid King Rene, in the lifetime of Queene Iſabel (Ducheſſe of Lorraine) his firſt wife. He placed it within a Chaplet or wreath of Pater-noſters or Beades, and in the middeſt thereof this Legend in Italian Letters, Deuot Luy Suis; I am deuoted to her. I haue ſeene the Armes of this Prince in the Churches of Auignion and Prouence, entoured with Cappelets, inſtead of Collar, of the Order: which giueth ſufficiently to be vnderſtood, that they were made before the Inſtitution of the Order of the Creſcent, whereof we are to ſpeake hereafter. And I do not remember to haue read, that the Illuſtrious Houſe of Lorraine had any Order, or Collar about the Armes; but onely a Chappelet of Pater-noſters.

CHAP. XIIII.

L'Ordre Du Croiſſant.

HIS good and worthy King, being loath to let ſlip his Age in ſilence, and not performe ſome act worthy of eternall memorie; his thoughts likewiſe meditating among themſelues, that euery good and Noble Courage, in ductie ought to attempt, and bend his whole aime at all Actions Generous and Magnanimious, proceeding from vertue to vertue, and alwayes to encreaſe in well doing, as well in mildeneſſe and courteſie, as in valiancie and glorious deedes of Armes; to the end that his renowne might ſtill goe on by encreaſing, and neuer taſte of diminiſhing: For this cauſe, and in the honor of God, ſupport and maintention of the Church, as alſo the exaltation of Knighthood; in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred threeſcore and foure, the ſaid good King Rene deuiſed and erected a new Order of Knighthood, tearmed Of the Creſcent, or Halfe-Moone, whereof he declared himſelfe to the the Chiefe and Soueraigne; and after him his Succeſſors, Dukes of Aniou, and Kings of Sicilie.

The reaſons of the Orders Inſtitution.

The armes of the Duke of the Order.

Hoc eſt Puiſſant Prince Rene D' Aniou, Roy de Hieruſalem, de Scicilie, d' Arragon, de Valence,

The Symbole of this Order, was a Creſcent of Gold, whereon was aptly and conueniently engrauen, as likewiſe expreſſed by red enamelled Letters, this word, Loz, which would ſignifie; Praiſe by Encreaſing; Loz En Croiſſant, which the Knights did weare on the right ſide of their Cloakes or Gownes. At this Creſcent was tyed and made faſt as many ſmall Staues of Gold, faſhioned in Collomnes or like Tags of Points, of Gold enamelled with red: as the Knights of this Order, had bin ſeene or preſent in Battailes, Mines vnder ground, or Siedges of Townes and Cities; which made due acknowledgement of their Valour and Proweſſe.

I haue read, that the Knights of the ſaid Order of Anion (compoſed of ſixe and thirtie in number) did weare Cloakes of Red or Crimoſine Veluet, and the Mantelet of White, with the lining and Caſſocke of the ſame. At the firſt Chapter of this Order were made Knights, King Rene, founder therof, whoſe qualities are here thus remembred.

Valence, Sardeigne, Maillorque, & de Corſogne, Duc d' Aniou, & de Bar; Comte de Prouence, de Forqualquier, & de Piedmont: Chef de L'Ordre.

The High and Potent Prince Rene of Aniou, King of Ieruſalem, of Sicilie, of Arragon, of Valentia, Sardaignia, Maiorica, and of Corſica; Duke of Aniou, and of Bar: Count of Prouence, of Forcalquier, and of Piedmont; Chiefe of the Order. The Titles appertaining to King Rene.

Monſieur Iohn of Aniou, his Sonne, Duke of Lorraigne: Monſieur, the Vicount of Saint Ballory.

Monſieur Saladine d' Angleure, Viſcount d'Eſtanges, Lord of Nogent.

Monſieur Bertrand de Beauuay, Lord of Precigue, de Sille le Guillaume, and of Brian-, Preſident in the Chamber for the Kings accounts at Paris, and Great Maiſter of the Hoſtell for the King of Sicilie, and Captaine of the Caſtell of Angiers.

Of whom are yet to be ſeene (for the moſt part) the names and Armes in the Church of Saint Maurice of Angiers, in the Chappell, which (in regard of them) was called The Chappell of Knights. The Chappel of Knights at Angiers.

Here you may reade, what is ſaid, concerning this Order, by Meſsire Iohn Bourdigne, in his Hiſtorie of Aniou, the ſeauenteenth Chapter of the third Part; without repreſenting the ſaid Coates of Armes, and names of the Knights, made after the ſame before remembred.

By the fauour of Monſieur Chapelle, Councellour to the King, and Maiſter in his Chamber of Accounts at Paris, a man ſtudious and learned (Il porte d'Or au Bœuf de Gueulles Acerne, & Ongle d' Azur, au Chef de Gueulles, charge de Trois Annelets d'Or) haue ſeene the Armes of eighteene Knights of this Order of the Creſcent, and the moſt part of their Names (for there are Armes which are not noated or named at all) Of Monſieur Laſnier, Councellour to the King, and Lieutenant Generall in the Duchie of Aniou: Qui porte d'Argent à Trois Teſtes de Laſnier de Sable, Deux en Chef, & Pautre en Pointe, au Cheuron d'Azur, charge de Trois Aigles d'Or. This houſe of the Aſniers is the moſt remarkeable of Aniou, and from thence haue deſcended a great number of worthy perſons, both for learning and knowledge.

Meſsire Iohn Bourdigne, deſcribing the entrance of King Frances the firſt, into his Citie of Angiers, in the Moneth of Iune, One thouſand fiue hundred and eighteene, maketh in this manner. The entrance of King Frances the firſt into Angiers.

A la premiere Porte, appellee la Herce, eſtoient les Venerables Recteur, Scholaſtique, Docteurs, Procureurs, Bourgeois, & autres Officiers de l'Vniuerſite, leurs Bedeaux deuant eux, en eſtat Dix ou Douze en nombre, auec leurs groſſes Maſſes d'Argent, aux Armes de Nations & Facultez de ladite Vniuerſite. The ſame in Engliſh.

AT the firſt Gate, called the Port Cullis, were the Reuerend, the Rector, Scholaſticks, Doctours, Atturneys or Aduocates, Bourgeſſes and other Officers of the Vniuerſitie, their Beadles before them, which were Ten or Twelue in number, with their great Maces of Siluer, bearing Armes of the Nations and Faculties of the ſaid Vniuerſitie. And to accompanie the Rector and Doctors, there were many learned men Schollers, Bachelers and Licentiates, which made a goodly ſight to behold. The King, being come to the place where they were; reuerence was done vnto him by them, the Rector, Doctours and Scholaſticks in moſt humble manner. And the King, with a moſt kinde heart and chearefull countenance rendring them ſaire ſalutations, there ſtaying himſelfe for ſome ſpace of time, to heare an Oration, which the moſt learned and renowned Doctour Frances Laſhier, an Angeuin by birth, made to him: Whereby the King was very highly contented, and well edified, and promiſed Or Harrow-Gate.

promised to the Vniuersities of Angiers, that he would keepe the Rights and Priuiledges thereof.

The Armes thereof are thus.

1. There is not any name at all: But the Armes is Face d'Or, & d'Azur in Pointes, chacune de Quatre pieces.

15. Le Premiere Senatour en l'An Vnder that name, such a man it appeareth, was Senatour in the yeare One thousand foure hundred fortie and two. The Shield is the same as the thirteenth, and in the one part and the other written in Gothish Carracters, Anjou Roy.

16. For the Count of Bandemont Senatour in the yeare One thousand three hundred, the Shield D'Or, à la Bande de de Gueulles, chargee de Trois Allerions d'Argent.

17. Without writing, L'Escu Bar. Vnderneth is written De Barts, Lorraine.

18. Which is De Cossa, formerly obserued. And this Shield is standed with these two words, Gossequed Cossa.

These are all that I could compasse concerning this Order, contrary to the promise of good store of persons, which were liberall in protestation of many more: the Learned (no doubt) will supply what is wanting herein. Monsieur Perez, Councellour in the Parliament of Prouence, promised vs his Recherches, and the Iousts and Tournaments of this good King Rene, with the particularities of his Orders, and others beside, which hath made vs come short of a much larger measure.

In magnis voluisse sat est.
Non omnia possumus Omnes.

Rene of Anjou was a very deuout Prince, among all them of his time and Reign; he was liberall & magnificent towards men of the Church, and other persons of knowledge and Studie. He was well practisde and expert in the Noble Art of Painting; which I haue seene many Tables of his owne handie worke in Prouence, and elsewhere, which haue made good proofe of his skill and knowledge. Painting and the Mathematickes haue bin (at all times) thought expedient, and to be commended in Princes: because they are beneficiall to them, either in the times of Peace or Warre. His King tooke great delight in Iusts and Tourneyes, as Bourdigne telleth vs in his Chronicle, vnder the yeare One thousand foure hundred threescore and nine.

Painting and the Mathematicks commendable in Princes.

Le Roy Louis (Vnziesme du nom) estant en sa Ville de Tours, le Roy de Scicile, & la Royne Marie de Laual son Espouse par deuers luy se transporterent; lesquels le Roy à grand ioye receut, & fit venir plusieurs Princes & Princesses, Seigneurs & Dames pour les festoyer. Et pour leur bien-venuë fit faire Iousts, Tournois, Mommeries, & tels Esbattemens, pource Quil scauoit que le Roy de Sicile les aimoit.

The same in English.

King Lewes (eleauenth of the name) being in his Citie of Tours, the King of Sicilie, and Marie of Lauall his Wife, came thither to visite him: whom the King welcommed with great ioye, and caused the appearance of many Princes and Princesses, Lords and Ladies, for their feasting. And for their better entertainement, he procured to be performed Iusts, Tourneys, Mummeries and such like sports; because he knew and saw, that the King of Sicilie affected them.

This is the same King Rene of Sicilie, to whom King Lewes the eleauenth gaue the priuiledge to Seale with White Waxe, for an especiall grace and fauour, as we haue said in the second Booke of these Recherches, and elsewhere. He was present with the Generall Estates, held at Tours in the great Haule of the Archbishops Pallace, by King Lewes the eleauenth of the name, the sixt day of Aprill, in the yeare One thousand foure hundred threescore and seauen, before Easter, and other dayes following, vntill the foureteenth day of the same Moneth included.

The Generall Estates appearance at Tours.

In the first Parquet (for there were three, the second for Lords of the Bloud, the Constable, Chancellours and Prelates in midst of the Hall; and the third for Noblemen, Counts, Barons, such as were of the Kings Counsell, and Deputies of great Cities) was seated the King in an high Chaire, whereto he was to ascend by three degrees in height, which Chaire was couered with Blew Veluet, powdered with Floures de Luces of gold. Ouer him were foure golden Lances, the Canopie and Vallans being also answerable to the same. The King was attired in a long Roabe of White Damaske, thickly stitched with fine Gold very neere together, and Buttond before with Golden Buttons, Furred with Sable Martines: hauing a little blacke Cappe vpon his head, with a Feather of fine Gold Wiers in it. On either side of the King there were Chaires, distant (backward from his) some seauen or eight foote space, the one on the right hand, and the other on the left, but both of them couered with rich cloath of Gold vpon Crimosine Veluet. In these Chayres, as that on the right hand, was seated the Cardinall of Saint Susanna, Bishop of Angiers, cloathed in a sumptuous Cardinals Cappe. And in that on the left hand sate The King of Ierusalem and of Sicilie, Duke of Aniou, hauing on an Ashe-coloured Veluet Roabe or Gowne, Furred with Martens.

Courts or Seats of Dignitie.

Thus much haue we learned, concerning the Order of the Crescent, or halfe Moone; attending for more ample memories, as well as of others, and whereof we are desirous to haue certaine knowledge. What we haue to this purpose now spoken, is from Frances de l'Alouette, who in the first Booke of his Genealogie of Coucy, alleadgeth vnto vnto vs: That many Princes and great Lords of Fraunce, haue made Orders of their Deuises, which they had for themselues.

Orders made of Deuises.

The ancient Lords of Bourbon, had that of the Golden Shield.

The Lords of Luxembourg made theirs, A Parke round Paled with Woode.

The Counts of Foix (whereto should be added Lords of Bearne) of Comte.

The Lords of Coucy; Of a Lyon, to perpetuate the memory of the same Lyon which Enguerran de Coucy, first of the name, tearmed the Great, fought with and killed in his Forrests: where afterward he caused to be builded the Abbey of Premonstre, Chiefe of the Order, in the Reigne of King Lewes, called the Deuout.

Hereto he might haue added.

Bouchard Lord of Montmorency.

The Lords of Montmorency, who carried for Deuise, The Dogge, the Symbole of faithfulnesse; with the common saying, that Bouchard de Montmorency (by others called of Mont-Remy) came to offer his seruice, with all his followers, to King Philip, first of the name, and who (as the same man auoucheth) that Bouchard and his followers, Portoient au Col vne Chaine d'Or, composee de Testes & Cimiers de Cerfs, & depuis sur l'Estomach vn Chien. Did weare about his necke a Chaine of Gold, composed of Crests and Heads of Harts, and vpon the Breast a Dogge.

Such Princes and great Lords, might both make and maintaine the Order of their Deuises, in regard of their Greatnesse, and wealthinesse of their Houses. But we haue since then seene, in time of the Generall Estates of the Kingdomes being at Paris, a meane Gentleman, to be the Instituter of a new Order of the Crescent, called of saint Magdalen. Of which Order here is to be seene the Crosse, with the Statutes beginning and ending thereof.

L'Ordre de la Sainte Magdelaine.

The Order of Saint Magdalen, Instituted at Paris in the yeare of Grace, One thousand sixe hundred and foureteene, by a Noble Gentleman, named Messire IOHN CHESNEL.

CHAP. XV.

The time of the Orders Institution.

DVring the time as the Generall Estates of France, were present at Paris, in the yeare of Grace One thousand sixe hundred and fourteene; a Breton Gentleman, issued of a Noble House, renowned both for valiancy and Nobility, as well in Bretaigne as Anjou, beside other Prouinces of the Kingdome: being returned from the East and Normandie, moued by deuotion, and partly a zealous passion, to see (against Gods Commandements, and Sacred Ordenances of the King) such Diuelles, rude Encounters and Garboiles, as daily happened among such, as, standing on tearmes of Honour, grounded on an ill kinde of goodnesse, as taking the wall, or a word scarsely well spoken, but farre worse vnderstood, or taken with a wrong Bias, the subiect being about a Strumpet (the commonest quality of all other) cut the throates of one another, euen as Butchers serue Swine, loosing both bodies and soules for euer in the pit of eternall fires, which they would not do for defence of the Catholique Faith, and seruice for the King. Vpon these considerations, hauing collected together some few good and memorable noates; he presented them to the Nobilities Chamber, for the stablishing of a new Order Military, erected on the foremer ner ground. The principall vow whereof was, to abiure Duels, Fights and Frayes, with all other kindes of quarelling: but onely to regard the honor of God, the seruice of his Maiestie, and conseruation of the Kingdome.

Quarrels of light and friuolous occasions.

Honest intentions can haue no bad ends.

The King looking vpon the Papers, declared by his gracious behauiour, that the Gentlemans purpose was pleasing to him; and so much the rather, because he plainely perceiued, that Charitie vrged him meerely thereto: without seeking after his perticular profit, priuate fauours, rewards, Wages or Pensions.

He prouided the Order, and Crosse belonging thereto, according to his owne minde and meaning, which onely tended to this end, to entreat his Maiesties liking and consent; that this nouell Institution of French Knights, might be vnder the inuocation on Saint Magdalen, the Mirrour of Penitence and Repentance. Within compasse whereof, such Noble Frenchmen (ill borne, and worse bred) making account and profession of swearing, blaspheming the holy name of God, and of the blessed Virgin his Mother, fordging ill grounded quarrels, and thereon murdering one another like bruite beasts: might returne to better vnderstanding, by example of that sinfull Woman, who as of a Sinke, filled with all vice and abhomination; by meanes of her true and vnfeigned repentance, became a Vessell full of precious balme and all perfection.

Concerning the Circle of the Order.

The Crosse of this Order, which serued for wearing about the necke, and on the Cloake; finished with Floures de Luces at three Branches; for reuiuing againe the memory of the Order of the Lillie, which was of Nauarre; and the foote stood, or began in a Croissant. The Order was Baptized with that name by Rene, Duke of Anjou, outwardly cantonned with small Palmes, made aptly in a roundure, as a noate for signale of the voyage to the holy Land, made by the Institutour of the said Order, according to the example of the auncient French Paladines, who were called by the name of Palmers, returning from the Holy Land; as at their going thither, they were tearmed Croisiers. The shape of Magdalen her selfe, was presented Ouall-wise in the midst, as giuing name to the Order, the Crosse whereof is Cantonned with Floures de Luces, glittering out of Sunnie-beames, as shewing the Excellency of the Kingdome, the most famous of Christendome.

How Trauailer came at the first to be called Palmers

The Inuenter of this Order, was named Messire Iohn Chesnell (whose Grandfathers were renowned (for their valour) in the Hiſtory of Bretaigne, vnder the name of Chesnel, Lord of Chappronnaye) who describing the habite, Crosse and Collar, with the Statutes of the Order (which follow after) presented them and himselfe to the King. He made him Knight, putting vpon him the Cloake of the Order, & the Collar with a Crosse of Gold about his necke. And euer since that time, they tooke the title of Knight of Saint Magdalen, being so named, as well in the Court, as elsewhere. The Escutcheon or Shield of his Armes is composed of sixteene Quarters, 4.4.4.4. & one ouer all, which are in this manner Emblazoned.

Rules and Statutes to be obſerued by the Knights of the Order of Saint Magdalen.

CHAP. XVI.

The Kings prerogatiue in the Order to appoint a Prince &c.

I. HE King is to continue alwayes (if he be ſo pleaſed) Chiefe of this Order: as well for his Honour, as for the good of his Seruice. And he may commit or allow a Prince, to be the Generall, and as his Lieutenant (vnder his owne good pleaſure) ouer the whole Order. To whom the Knights ſhall ſtand obliged to be obedient, next vnto the King. The ſame Prince ſhall haue power and authority, to conduct the Knights of this Order to Warres, and elſewhere; according to the command of his Maieſtie, during the time of his charge, but no longer.

Great Maiſter of the Order & his charge. & Hebergs Royall.

II. Vnder the ſaid Prince, ſhall be the Great Maiſter of the Order, whom the Knights ſhall make election of from three yeeres to three yeares. He ſhall haue the care and charge, of all the Reuennues belonging to the Order, and to whom all the Knights ſhall render their obedience. During the yeares of his charge and Office he is to make his continuall reſidence in the principal Academy of the Order, which ſhall be named The Royall Lodging; whereon ſhall depend all the other Academies of the Kingdome.

For admiſſion into the Order

III. Such as ſhall be admitted and receiued into this Order, ſhall be Noble by three Races or Deſcents. They ſhall not be tyed or engaged to Iuſtice. They ſhall be well enſtructed in the Catholique and Apoſtolique Religion: They muſt be ſound, healthfull, and well diſpoſed of body, without any diformitie either Corporall or Spirituall, whereof may be receiued any apprehenſion. And Corporall or Spirituall, whereof may be receiued any apprehenſion. And thereof they muſt be bound to bring true atteſtation from their Biſhop (eſpecially) for matter of Religion: from three worthy and well knowne Gentlemen, concerning their Nobilitie: and from a skilfull Phyſition, for their health.

At any Knights receiuing into the Order.

IIII. On the day of entertaining or receiuing any Knight, either by the King, Prince Committee, or Great Maiſter of the Order; hee is to make a ſolemne Vowe and profeſſion, to renounce all doubtfull and hazardous Play or Gaming. Not to blaſpheme the name of God, nor to commit any act that ſhall be vicious, and vnbefitting a Chriſtian Knight. He ſhall not reade prohibited and vnlawfull Bookes, without the permiſſion of his Superiours in the Order, and the Ordenaries of the places, whereſoeuer the Academies are ſeated. Hee is to ſhunne the reading of Bookes that are of wicked Doctrine, which corrupt good manners; and diſſolute Songs, ſcurulous talke, and diſhoneſt companies of euill fame.

Concerning the Habite and Collar.

V. The Habite of the Knights on the day of their reception, muſt be of Skie-Colour, and the Collar of the Order, of the Letter M. doubled with Lambda, and the Letter A. repreſenting the names of Saint Mary Magdalen; of Lewes and of Anne, King and Queene of France; enterlaced and enchained with double Harts, ſtraiuerſed and wounded with Darts of Gold Croſſed, and the ſaid Ciphers or Letters enamelled with the Colours and Liueries of his Maieſtie, Carnation, White and Blew. The Cordon or Riband muſt be Red or Crimoſine, whereon to hang the Croſſe of Gold enamelled with Red, with an Ouale in the middeſt, wherein muſt be (on the one ſide) repreſented or figured, the Image of the holy penitent Saint Mary Magdalen, and S. Lewes on the other. And on the Mantle or Cloake, the Croſſe of Red or Crimoſine Sattin, embroidered with Gold and Siluer, hauing the like Ouale as is ſaid before, and a Magdalen. And for the deuiſe round about it, theſe words; L'Amour De Dieu Eſt Pacifique.

The Houſe for the Knights.

VI. Theſe Knights are to haue a Houſe neere to Paris, which his Maieſty may beſtow vpon them, if he be ſo pleaſed, wherein there muſt be a Chappell, and wherein alſo the Knights are to be entertained. There ſhall ordenarily attend ſixe Religious Prieſts (who are to weare the Croſſe as the Knights doe) there, to ſay daily diuine Seruice, and to aſſemble (in the ſame Chappell) the Knights of the Order, who are there to be receiued at their preſentment, vpon the conditions before ſpecified. At which Reception, and at the end of the Maſſe, ſhall be ſaid by thoſe Religious Prieſts the Veni Creator; the Letanies of the Sacred Virgin, and the Prayers of Saint Mary Magdalen, and likewiſe of Saint Lewes. Which being done, the Knights muſt take the Oathe before the King, or the Prince his Committee, or the Great Maiſter of the Order. From whom he is to receiue the Sword hallowed, the Habite for Knighthood, the Great Order, the Croſſe and Cordon. Afterward is to be ſung the Te Deum, and the Pſalme Laudate Dominum omnes Gentes; at the end whereof, the Knights Aſſiſtants muſt goe and embrace the new Knight; giuing him the kiſſe of Peace, Vnion and Concord, euery man in his Ranke, according to the order as they haue bin entertained.

The taking of the Oath, and receiuing of the Knightly dues.

The time for probation of the Knights.

VII. Concerning the Houſe, which the Knights are to haue neere to Paris; it muſt be called and named The Royall Lodging, wherein muſt ordenarily be fiue hundred Knights: all bound to abide therein, during the time of two yeares Probation, beginning at the day of entertainement, and yet they may abide there longer, if themſelues thinke it good. At the ending of thoſe two yeares for their Probation, they ſhall take the ſolemne Oathe of the Order (in preſence of the Religious Prieſts of The Lodging Royall) Of Charitie, Obedience and Coniugall Chaſtitie; and to weare the Collar and Croſſe of the ſaid Order, during all their life time.

What they ought to renounce.

VIII. In like manner, they are to renounce and abiure all Duelles or Combats, all rude Encounters and Aſſaſſinates, yea, and all quarrels out of the Kings Seruice: except ſuch wherein they ſhall be taxed, in which caſes, they may lawfully defend defend themselues by Armes, which they are to weare by their profession. In the Oath is likewise included, that they are to liue and dye in the Kings seruice; without adhering or ioyning themselues to any Leagues or Parties whatsoeuer, vnder what cause, pretence or subiect that can be alleadged. For this perfect knowledge ought to be engraued in the depth of their soules, that the very greatest seruice which they can render to God; is, first to serue him, then their King, and lastly their Countrey, for exaltation of the truely Catholique Faith, and honour of the Kingdome.

Appearance once yearely at the Royall Lodging.

IX. Euery Knight of the said Order, after their Approbation, shall stand bound to appeare in person at the Lodging Royall, euery yeare once, on the day and Feast of Saint Mary Magdalen, Patronesse of the said Order. To the end, that they may Communicate together, and render an account of their actions to the Great Master, and to twelue Knights more, elected and chosen as his Assessours and Counsellours: who are to iudge of all their differences, and the transgression of their Vowes, which are to be kept inuiolably; vnder paine of being cashcerd, & degraded of the Order, if their recidiuation extend to the third time.

For them dwelling in the House.

X. The Knights abiding and dwelling in the Lodging, must stand obliged, to be assistant on Sundayes and Feastiuall dayes at Diuine Seruice, celebrated by the Priests of the Order; and to receiue the holy Communion euery first Sunday of the Moneth, at the least. To say daily the Letanies of the Sacred Virgin, with the Prayers of S. Mary Magdalen, and of S. Lewes, their Chappelet and Salue Regina.

Of Exercises for the Knights

XI. The Exercises of the Knights, are to be ruled according to the houres of the day, for auoiding Idlenesse, the Fountaine or well-spring of all vices. And for this effect, in the Lodging Royall, and elsewhere, there must be maintained Esquires, Maisters in actions of Armes, Learned Mathematicians, and some number of well experimented Souldiours, to enstruct Military agilities, and exercises fit for Horse and Foote For other houres of Recreation after these Exercises, there shall be a Tennis Court, Stoole-Baule-Play, and other pastimes, fit for maintaining a knight in the expertnesse of Armes, for better disposition of the body. And from the Knights lodgings or chambers shall be banished (as hatefull and detestable for euer) all play at Dice, Cards or such like.

For maintenance of the Priests and House Officers

XII. For nourishment and maintenance of the sixe Keligious Priests, the King is most humbly to be petitioned; for the annexing and ioyning to the House, some good and especiall Benefice, for the better continuance of Diuine Seruice. And for maintaining the Officers of the Lodging, each Knight that shall enter into the said Order, must be engaged to giue a thousand Francks at his entrance, for the first yeare, and an hundred Pistolets for the second yeare, by way of Pension, which is to be paied to the Reiuer of the Order, established by the Great Maister: as well for himselfe, as for two Seruants and two Horses, which must be his furnishment; vntill there shall be some better meanes established. Which is to be awaited, either by the charitable gifts of Princes or Great Lords, or by Conquests made by the Knights themselues, on such as are enemies to the Church; or by the stocke moued to his Maiesty for his owne memoriall, which was presented to him in the Moneth of Iuly, One thousand sixe hundred and foureteene, when it shall be graciously granted and Signed.

For married mens entring into the Order

XIII. Concerning maried Gentlemen, such as would enter into this Order, they are to be obliged; ouer and beside the attestation of their Nobility, Catholique Religion, and good habitude and disposition of body: to bring with them the full consent of their Sonnes, for making their two yeares probation, to be admitted and receiued as Knights, which otherwise they cannot be. And such as be formerly entertained Knights, and vnmaried: may lawfully marry after their Probation, if themselues do so thinke it good; considering, that the Order bindeth nor restraineth, but for the Vow of coniugall chastity.

XIIII. And in regard of them, which (at all times) haue had the habitude of vertue, and are knowne for such by common reputation, perfected in their Exercises by maturity of their yeares, more capable to enstruct others, then to be enstructed, and being tied to the duties of Mariage, and cares attending on a Familie, and yet (neuertheless) desirous of admittance into the said Order: they may be receiued, with charge of the precedent proues, and onely fifteene dayes of exercise, necessary for a Knight. Which time being past, they shall notwithstanding be engaged, to assist on Feast dayes and Sundayes at Diuine Seruice, in the Lodging of the Order; except there be some sufficient essoine or excuse. And submit themselues, to receiue direction in their Conscience; that their Spirits may be the more strongly enabled, and fit for maintenance of all vertues, among the vicious thornes and briers of this wicked world, and to chastise and correct themselues for such imperfections and behauiours; as they had contracted before their receiuing into the Profession of the Order. They shall likewise stand obliged, to be personally present at all Assemblies of the Knights, and one day in the weeke (by allowed discretion) to continue the exercises necessary for a Knight, the space of two yeares: yet neuertheless, without binding them to a continuall abiding, whereto are tied those Knights which be not married. And they must be such as are rich, of good degree and quality: because they will be engaged, to maintaine the exercises of the Order, and such poore Gentlemen, that haue no meanes for entrance, that they may the better satisfie the Vow of Charity.

For such as are of ripe yeares and well enstructed, comming into the Order.

Concerning farre distance frō the Schools & Academies

XV. Married Gentlemen, which haue deuotion to the Order, and yet notwithstanding, are far off from the places where the Academies be, and haue not meanes to maintaine their Family in the neerest Townes to them; may yet receiue the golden Crosse of the Order, at the hands of the Great Maister, euen as well as Knights of Honour. Alwayes prouided, that they first haue made proofe of their Catholique Religion and Nobilitie; obliging themselues to the Prayers of the Order, and yeelding fauour and assistance to the Knights of the Order, like friends in affaires of importance, whereto they shall be required, and in so doing, they become partakers of the Orders Prayers. Yet they may not enioy any Commanderies, nor aspire to the charges and dignities of the Order; nor weare the Crosse on the Cloake; but (as Friends) may be holpen by Knights of the Order, when any such neede shall be.

Priuiledges appertaining to the Knights.

XVI. These Knights may not be compelled by their bodies, for the paiment of ciuile debts: and their equipage or furnishment shall stand exempt from all executions. They can but oblige the benefit of their patrimony; because they are not to be impeached from following the Kings Seruice, at what time soeuer they shall be thereto commanded. And these Knights may also make choice (at once for all other) of some one of the Parliaments in France; whereto they may be called, there to be iudged and sentenced definitiuely.

Consideration for poore Gentlemen.

XVII. If there shall be in the Lodging more money, then is required to pay the Officers thereto belonging; the ouer-plus may serue, for entertaining poore Gentlemen to the Exercises, that haue no meanes for their learning, for satisfying the Vow of Charity.

The Kings daily visitation by the Order.

XVIII. And to the end, that there may be alwayes about the King, some of those Knights for his seruice: there shall daily goe to visite him, fourescore or an hundred of these Knights (the number of fiue hundred remaining ordenarily compleat in the Lodging) departing from the Order vnder conduct of some one of them thereto appointed by the Great Maister, each Company going on his day in the weeke, while the rest stay at home about their exercises.

For Seruants that be of the best condition called Brethren-Seruants.

XIX. Such as are Brethren Seruants, shall be had from the most honorable Families in Townes and Cities, next to the Nobility: who shall be bound to bring attestation of three races, and that their Grandfathers and Fathers haue alwayes liued honorably, without any roate of infamie, and in the faithfull beleefe of the Catholique Church. They shall be bound to the same Vowes and Offices as the Knights. They shall weare as a noate on their Cloakes, a Scarlet Crosse, purfled with Siluer, and a Siluer Crosse of the same fashion, as that of Gold worne by the Knights, which is to hang at a round Cordon of Crimosine silke. For entring into the Lodging, and Exercises, vsed among the Knights, they shall pay to the Receiuer of the Order at his entrance an hundred Crownes, and two hundred pounds of Pension the yeares following; as well well for himselfe, as maintenance of a Horse to performe his seruice on. And that Bretheren Seruants may be admitted to Military charges, as members of the Kings Companies going to Warre. And if they attaine to the performance of some worthy Act of Armes, and for the Kings seruice, they are to be ennobled, that they may the more lawfully aspire to that honorable quality. And they may establish Stocke or Bancke of money, for maintaining them of their owne condition that lacke the meanes for entring into the said Exercises, and Order of Brethren Seuants, by the Charities conferred on them, by those of their condition, and by the Testaments of such, as shall be deuoted to this holy Order.

For Seruants of the meaner qualitie.

XX. The Groomes or meaner Seruants attending on these Knights, shall be c the most honest Families of Mechanicall Artezans; who shall bring testimony o their good life and manners, by two or three of the principall men of the Parish, an and of the Curate. Their Garment shall be of Blew Cloath, with a Gallonne Lace of Crimosine Silke: And they must be skilfull in one Trade or other, for their better seruice in the Lodging, and for the Knights that are to make vse of them. Eue ning and Morning they must attend the Knights seruice, as is appointed them by the Great Maister: but the rest of the day, they are to trauaile faithfully for the common benefit, euery one in his Art and profession, as they shall be employed by Maisters experimented in them. They must be bound to the same Vowes and Prayers as their Maisters, for auoiding all vicious example in so holy a Company. And for attaining to this happinesse, they are to bring no thing but their proues appointed, and must remaine in the Lodging all their life time: if so themselues thinke it expedient, or may withdraw themselues thence (if they will) after the tru yeares of their Probation. All their life long, they shall be priuiledged by some fauours of the Order; in recompence of such good seruices, as they shall per-forme thereto.

This intention came to no purpose.

These were the Articles deliuered to his Maiesty by the said Lord of Chappro-naye; which sorted not to any effect, by reason of many impossibilities, as well a bout the Lodging, as the Stocke and Banke, with other difficulties beside. So th this Order tooke both birth and death, in the person of the same Chappronnaye, wh hauing lost all hope, of seeing the execution of these his good intentions; left all hi goods to his friends, retreating himselfe from the World, and liued confined to a Hermitage (by him erected) neere to Valuin in Gastinois, at the end of the Forrest o Bierre, or of Fontaine-bleaud, vpon a Rock, which discouereth the course of the good ly Riuer of Seine. He remaineth in this place, knowne to the Countrey neighbour and at Paris, by the name of L'Hermite Pacifique de la Magdelaine; The Peaceb Hermite of S. Mary Magdalen.

The Order of Bretaigne; called of the Hermine, and of the Eares of Corne; Instituted by Frances, Duke of Bretaigne, Sonne to Iohn the sixt, Sirnamed the Conquerour: In the yeare of Grace On thousand foure hundred and fifty.

CHAP. XVII.

L'Ordre de Bretaigne ou de L'Hermine & de L'Espy.

RAnces, Duke of Bretaigne, last of the name, yongest Sonne (but not i fortune) to Iohn, sixt of the name, called the Conquerour, by imitatio the steps of the Princes of the Bloud of France, his Cousines, and whom he was most Nobly descended: Instituted the Order of Knigh hood, tearmed Of the Hermine, in the yeare of Grace One thousand fou hundre

dredth and fifty. Which order was otherwise called, Of Eares of Corne in regard, The forme of the Great Collar. that the Great Collar thereof, was composed of Gold, in the true forme of Eares of Corne, enterlaced like to a Saultour, and bound both aboue and beneath, with two ries and circles of Gold.

A Beast called Ermine or Hermine.

At the end of this Collar, hunge by two or three small Chaines of Gold, a little Beast, white as Snow, vulgarely called an Ermine; but in writing it more truely, it is tearmed an Hermine, appeating to passe or runne ouer a word or motto, vnder a Bancke or faire Tuste of greene grasse, diapred with goodly flowres. Beneath which, was the deuise of the said Duke Iohn the Conquerour, Three wordes, to expresse the soule or sense thereof, to witt, A. MA. VIE. Whereby he would make knowen For my Life. to the world, that the greatnesse and hieghst of his courage was such, as rather then to stayle in his honour, he would expose himselfe to a thousand and thousand deaths.

Concerning the naturall disposition of the Hermine.

The meaning of this deuice, conueigheth it selfe perticularly to this creature the Hermine, whose nature and kinde is such (according to the testimony of the best naturallists) that when he is pursued, in regard of the excellencie & raritie of his furre:
he will suffer himselfe to be taken, rather then to runne or thwarte thorow any boggy, soule or filthy passage, so proudly doth he stand on the pureness of his coat or skinne.
For hunteesmen, well acquainted with his naturall inclination, to take him; will soile his hauntes and trackes with mud, mire and dirte. In like manner, hee is as earnestly coueted and sought after for his whitenesse, euen (as in elder times) was the Genett for his blacke furre, speckled or spotted with red, and which (in those times) for excellency, was called, The Richest Furre. These two Animalls, the Genett and Hermine, The Hermine compared with the Genet.
haue serued for Subiect to two seuerall Orders of Knighthood, in France and Bretayne:
as the Hedge Hogge or Porcupine, and the Weather or Sheepe, to them of Orleance and of Bourgongue, called at this present Flanders.

The Hermine furre for Princes in life and death.

The Hermine, for his excellent whitenesse, is the very richest furre, sought for and put in vse by Princes, at their highest and chiefest Feasts, and dayes of greatest Sollem-nity, worne in their Gownes, Robes, Cloathes, mantelets and Surcoates, as the fayrest furre to grace their life time. And after their death, their Palles and Coates Armours are furred therewith, being layed vpon them; and vsed beside in their Obse-quies and Funeralles.

For purity and excellency, it goeth farre beyond the Lettice, next vnto which is accounted the Menu-Vair. In a worde, it is white as milke, and thereupon (in former times) it was the occasion of the Auncient French name of Lettice, by way of Antono-masia, farre aboue all other white furres, whereof there are many kindes.

Plinie maketh mention of the diuersity of these Beasts, whereof the Romanes made great reckning in those times then, and describeth their nature in his eight Booke and seauen and thirty chapter. Conuntur Hyemc, et Pontici Mures, bi dumtaxat Albi, quorum palatum ingustu sagacissimum est. Hac cute expoliuntur Vestes. That the Rattes of Pontus (for so are the Hermines called, by comming from those parts in great abundance) and namely the Whites, which all the length of Winters time, keepes in their holes or dennes. That this creature hath a wonderfull capacity and vnderstanding, for discouery of any Game that may serue for his nourishment. With skinnes of this Beaste, the Romane Senatours had their robes furred. But merchants for lucre and Men that traded in the sale of Furres.
gaine, which they made by the sale of these exquisite Furres, procured many fraudes and deceites: so that the Emperours and Senate had dayly their patience much disturbed, by continuall complaintes against those Regraters and Monopolizers. Whereunto also may be added, that these Hermines haue some kinde of notion and future knowledge, as is obserued by Aelianus, in the first Booke of his various Historys, where he tearmeth these Animalles in this manner, Mures futurorum prascios.

For addition of a further grace to this rich Furre, and to make it appeare much whiter then it is, by the luster and beauty of his contrary: the Furriers or Skinners, as matter belonging to their arte and skill, doe spot or speckle it with little quantities or morsels, of Lambes skinnes of Lombardy, famous and much commended for their Blacke shining splendour. For the Hermine is a little creature, wholly white, of the likenesse and bignesse of a Rat, the nose or snoute pointed and sharpened. The Fur-riers or Skinners doe make vse of this beasts tayle, to grace Aumusses, which are worne by

by Bishopes, and Chanons of great reuenewes. But oftentimes (which is not to much knowen) they deale like the Regraters spoken of by Plinie, they deliuer Meges Vaire or Lettice, in stead of Hermines, as Martines of Foxes, and Cattes of Speyne for Gennets.

Chaunge of the ancient Armes of Bretaigne.

The Dukes of Bretaigne, which followed after the Conquerour, in such sort affected the whitenesse of this little beast: that they chaunged their auncient Armes, to take De Sable seme d'Hermines d'Argent, sans nombre. And yet notwithstanding, ignorant Painters haue emblazoned Bretaigne contrary to trueth, and the Rules of the Noble Art of Painting: according to which course, we may make naturally, or after the life, Roses of Gueulles on d'Argent, because Nature produceth them Redde and White. Lillies are (of their owne nature White and Yellow, as the Paullet: to figure and present them with Gueulles, like to them of Florence; is not for Enquirie, but rather ignorance in Armes, howsoeuer the art and cunning of man, may make variation of naturall colours, as in the Scripture, the spotted Ewes to deceiue Laban. In all things Nature ought to be imitated. Ignorant Painters haue scarsely so much vnderstanding to informe them, that the Colour and Mettall of Bretaigne are Sable and Argent. The Crosse in her Banners and Cornets, is alwayes made with white; and that the Armes of the later Dukes of Bretaigne, were De Sable, seme d'Hermines d'Argent. Such as are Maisters in Blazons, doe note these Armes by this onely word: Il porte de Bretaigne, for breuities sake; As De France, de Nauarre, Daulphine, d'Orleans, d'Aniou, d'Alanson, or de Valois for France. For Kingdomes of England, Scotland, Leon, Castile, Arragon, Portugall, Hungaria, Bohemia, Polonia, Denmarke and Sweden, without emblazoning them any otherwise: because these being the principles and grounds of the Art, he who maketh profession thereof, ought not (by any meanes) to be ignorant therein.

Nature should be followed in all things.

Emblazons for the Kingdomes.

Duke Frances the first, caused his Castell of the Hermine to be newly builded, in memory and honor of the said Order; which he composed of fiue & twenty Knights, without taxation of blame or reproach. They were garmented with Cloakes of white Damaske, lined with Carnation, the Mantelet or Chaperon of the same; whereon was worne the Great Collor of the Order, composed of Eares of Corne, accordingly as before you see the same figured.

The number of the Orders Knights, and their Habite.

The Subiect for these Eares of Corne, is (by some) reported, and referred to the cure of Agriculture or Husbandrie, which the Kings, Dukes and Counts of Bretaigne alwayes had, to the end, that their Prouince might be the more fertile and aboundant.

The reason for the Eare of Corne.

Poets, in their wonted humour of gracefull fiction, haue feigned, that the Gods being assembled on a day, for their recreation in Euboea, in the Island of Bœotia: Iupiter their Chiefe and Great Maister, commanded them to speake their mindes in some thing, which was the best and most profitable for the life of men. Vulcane said, that it was Fire; Neptune Water; Mercurie a House to dwell in; Ceres Corne; and Minerua the Oxe.

In the Sea called Aegeum.

These opinions were diuersly bandied among them, each of the Gods and Goddesses maintaining what themselues thought best. Some preferred Fire, to be as the Spiracle or infuser of life. Others auouched, that men might liue without Fire, and many Nations there were, that had no knowledge in the vse thereof. Others affirming, that both the one and other were altogether necessary for the life of Man, according to the saying of Pindarus.

Opinions debated among the Gods.

Water is the best Element,
And Gold as the Fire resplendent,
Shineth aboue all other substances.

Mercurie the guide and directer of Societie among men, fearing to be preuented in his opinion; defended dwelling in an house, affirming, that the forenamed Elements were necessary for man, who yet remained left and exposed to the Ayres iniuries, and the violence of furious Beasts, wilde, saluage and cruell, without the inuention of buildings, which make Townes and villages by multiplicity. Ceres and Minerua being ioyned together, hoping to winne the day from the other Gods, said, that they had Mercurie said to be the reformer of humaine society.

had better considered on the case, For men haue (indeed) like lodging, dwelling and feeding as the Beasts haue.

Silua domus erat, Cibus Herba, Cubilia Frondes.

But yet Ceres had thought on a better distinguishing for nourishment, and giuen man Corne, in stead of wilde Acornes.

Prima Ceres ferro mortales vertere Terram
Instituit, cum iam glandes, atque arbuta sera
Deficerent siluæ, & victum Dodona negaret.

Then, that the Oxe was the most necessary creature for the seruice of men, as being the Symbole of Rest, and of Husbandry. Hereupon Iupiter, who alwayes was a well willer to Ladies, according to his wounted behauiour, and for whose sakes he had so often times disguised himselfe; adiudged the victory to Ceres and Minerua. Adding moreouer (for reason in a Iudge) that Tillage, Husbandry, the Countrey and Fieldes was the most perfect, most innocent and iust, beyond all other kindes of life that men could make election of. Husbandry is the absolute Elixar (without any compounding) that maketh a man satisfied and contented, euen as if hee possessed a Kingdome.

Read Ouid for the wanton disguises of Iupiter.

Post aliquot mea regna videns mirabor aristas.

Others haue held and maintained, that the Auncient Kings, Dukes and Countes of Bretaigne, caried the Standard and Banner of the great Prince Gomer, who was sonne to the Patriarche Iaphet, first peopler of the plenteous Gaules, which was L'Escu d'Azur au Lyon rampant d'Or. Armes afterward changed De Gueules en Macles d'Or, by a certaine King named Macliauus, who reigned in the time of our King Clouis; Armes still held by the Lords of Rohan, descended of this auncient Stocke and Linage.

Gomers Banner borne by the Kings of Bretaigne.

But others are of the minde, that the proper and naturall Armes of Bretaigne, were D'Azur a Trois Gerbes de Bled liees d'Or, retained by the Lords of Ponthieure, Escar delles de Bretaigne Moderne. And

That a certayne Duke of Bretaigne, hauing seene in heauen an Image of the Sacred Virgin, clothed in a mantle of Hermines; he forsooke Les Espics et Gerbes de Bled d'Argent en champ d'Azur, and tooke De Sable seme d'Hermines d'Argent. This is the opinion of Richard de Vassebourg, and other reporters of nouelties, to such as they would haue to credit them.

The opinion of Richard de Vassebourg.

It is a matter most certaine, that the Prouince of Armorica (called at this present Bretaigne) was first of all inhabited by the Gaules. Wee learne in the tenth Chapter of Genesis, that Iaphet (whom the Rabbines make to bee the eldest sonne of the Patriarche Noah, Cham the second, and Sem the third) in the deuision of the world, made three hundred and so many yeares after the Flood: had in his lot and partage, the Septentrionall or Northerne partes of Asia, Europe and their Ilands, which his seauen children deuided among them.

Armorica now called Bretaigne.

Gomer, the Eldest sonne of Iaphet, first exposed himself vpon the liequid or moist element, that is to say, to saile on the Ocean-sea: and that he made or Carpented Gallies, shippes and vesselles, by the module or patterne of the Arke, formed by his Grandfather Noah. And being followed by his Brethren with their Families, peopled the firme land and the Isles; according, as Iosephus informeth vs in the first of his Antiquities, the fift and sixt Chapters.

Iosephus in Historiar. Iudaic. Lib. 2. Cap. 5. 6.

Zonaras, in his first booke and fourth history, writeth, that Gomer and his Brethren parting from the mountaines of Taurus and Amanus; shaped their course ouerthwarte Asia towards the North, and came to the riuer Tanais, which rowling from the North to the South, runneth on to ioyne with the marishe Moetides, which crossing Scythia, seperateth Asia from Europe. And then soiourning in the North, sought for shelter in Europe, proceeding on so farre as Cades, a straight at this instant called Gibraltar, but beforenamed of Gomer or Hercules. And coasting along the land, the brethren of Gomer tooke vp their dwelling, some heere, some there; but Gomer went vp to the Armoricane Ocean, that is the coaste of Bretaigne, a Prouince first inhabited by the Gaules: and of this Gomer, the Gaules were called by the Greekes Galates, and by the Hebrewes Gomerites, this is related to vs by Iosephus, in the place before alleadged.

Zonaras in Lib. 1. Hist. 4.

The Gaules called Galates and Gomerites.

Lucian

vnto vs: That many Princes and great Lords of Fraunce, haue made Orders of their Deuises, which they had for themselues.

Orders made of Deuises.

The ancient Lords of Bourbon, had that of the Golden Shield.

The Lords of Luxembourg made theirs, A Parke round Paled with Woode.

The Counts of Foix (whereto should be added Lords of Bearne) of Comte.

The Lords of Coucy; Of a Lyon, to perpetuate the memory of the same Lyon which Enguerran de Coucy, first of the name, tearmed the Great, fought with and killed in his Forrests: where afterward he caused to be builded the Abbey of Premonstre, Chiefe of the Order, in the Reigne of King Lewes, called the Deuout.

Hereto he might haue added.

Bouchard Lord of Montmorency.

The Lords of Montmorency, who carried for Deuise, The Dogge, the Symbole of faithfulnesse; with the common saying, that Bouchard de Montmorency (by other called of Mont-Remy) came to offer his seruice, with all his followers, to King Philip, first of the name, and who (as the same man auoucheth) that Bouchard and his followers, Portoient au Col vne Chaine d'Or, composee de Testes & Cimiers de Cerfs, & de sus l'Estomach vn Chien. Did weare about his necke a Chaine of Gold, composed of Crests Heads of Harts, and vpon the Breast a Dogge.

Such Princes and great Lords, might both make and maintaine the Order of their Deuises, in regard of their Greatnesse, and wealthinesse of their Houses. But we haue since then seene, in time of the Generall Estates of the Kingdomes being at Paris, a meane Gentleman, to be the Instituter of a new Order of the Crescent, called of Saint Magdalen. Of which Order here is to be seene the Crosse, with the Statutes beginning and ending thereof.

The Order of Saint Magdalen, Instituted at Paris in the yeare of Grace, One thousand sixe hundred and foureteene, by a Noble Gentleman, named Mesire IOHN CHESNEL.

L'Ordre de nr Sainste Magdelaine.

CHAP. XV.

The time of this Orders Institution.

DVring the time as the Generall Estates of France, were present at Paris, in the yeare of Grace One thousand sixe hundred and foureteene; a Breton Gentleman, issued of a Noble House, renowned both for valiancy and Nobility, as well in Bretaigne as Aniou, beside other Prouinces of the Kingdome: being returned from the East and Asie, moued by deuotion, and partly a zealous passion to see (against Gods Commandements, and Sacred Ordenances of the King) such Diuelles, rude Encounters and Garboiles, as daily happened among such, as, standing on tearmes of Honour, grounded on an ill kinde of goodnesse, as taking the wall, or a word fearsly well spoken, but farre worse vnderstood, or taken with a wrong Bias, the subiect being about a Strumpet (the commonest quality of all other) cut the throates of one another, euen as Butchers serue Swine, loosing both bodies and soules for euer in the pit of eternall fires, which they would not do for defence of the Catholique Faith, and seruice for the King. Vpon these considerations, hauing collected together some few good and memorable noates; he presented them to the Nobilities Chamber, for the stablishing of a new Order Military, erected on the former ground. The principall vow whereof was, to abiure Duels, Fights and Frayes, with all other kindes of quarelling: but onely to regard the honor of God, the seruice of his Maiestie, and conseruation of the Kingdome.

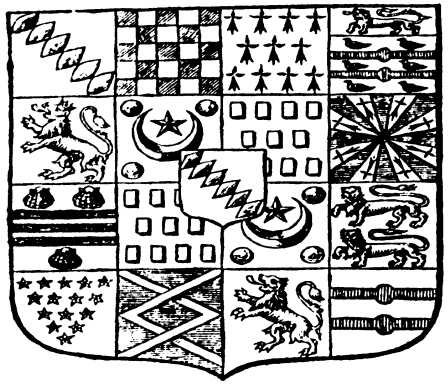
Honest intentions can haue no bad actions

The King looking vpon the Papers, declared by his gracious behauiour, that the gentlemans purpose was pleasing to him; and so much the rather, because he plainely perceiued, that Charitie vrged him meerely thereto: without seeking after his particular profit, priuate fauours, rewards, Wages or Pensions.

He prouided the Order, and Crosse belonging thereto, according to his owne minde and meaning, which onely tended to this end, to entreat his Maiesties liking and consent; that this nouell Institution of French Knights, might be vnder the inuocation on Saint Magdalen, the Mirrour of Penitence and Repentance. Within compasse whereof, such Noble Frenchmen (ill borne, and worse bred) making account and profession of swearing, blaspheming the holy name of God, and of the blessed Virgin his Mother, fordging ill grounded quarrels, and thereon murdering one another like bruite beasts: might returne to better vnderstanding, by example of that sinfull Woman, who as of a Sinke; filled with all vice and abhomination; by meanes of her true and vnfeigned repentance, became a Vessell full of precious balme and all perfection.

Concerning the Crosse of the Order.

The Crosse of this Order, which serued for wearing about the necke, and on the Cloake; finished with Floures de Luces at three Branches; for reuiuing againe the memory of the Order of the Lillie, which was of Nauarre; and the foote stood, or began in a Croissant. The Order was Baptized with that name by Rene, Duke of Anjou, outwardly cantonned with small Palmes, made aptly in a roundure, as a noate or signale of the voyage to the holy Land, made by the Institutour of the said Order, according to the example of the auncient French Paladines, who were called by the name of Palmers, returning from the Holy Land; as at their going thither, they were tearmed Croisiers. The shape of Magdalen her selfe, was presented Ouall-wise in the midst, as giuing name to the Order, the Crosse whereof is Cantonned with Floures de Luces, glittering out of Sunnie-beames, as shewing the Excellency of the Kingdome, the most famous of Christendome.



How Trauailers came at the first to be called Palmers

The Inuenter of this Order, was named Mesire Iohn Chesnell (whose Grandfathers were renowned (for their valour) in the Histori of Bretaigne, vnder the name of Chesnel, Lord of Chappronnaye) who describing the habite, Crosse and Collar, with the Statutes of the Order (which follow after) presented them and himselfe to the King. He made him Knight, putting vpon him the Cloake of the Order, & the Collar with a Crosse of Gold about his necke. And euer since that time, thee tooke the title of Knight of Saint Magdalen, being so named, as well in the Court, as elsewhere. The Scutcheon or Shield of his Armes is composed of sixteene Quarters, 4.4.4.4. & one ouer all, which are in this manner Emblazoned.

Rules and Statutes to be obſerued by the Knights of the Order of Saint Magdalen.

CHAP. XVI.

The Kings prerogatiue in the Order to appoint a Prince &c.

I. HE King is to continue alwayes (if he be ſo pleaſed) Cheefe of this Order: as well for his Honour, as for the good of his Seruice. And he may commit or allow a Prince, to be the Generall, and as his Lieutenant (vnder his owne good pleaſure) ouer the whole Order. To whom the Knights ſhall ſtand obliged to be obedient, next vnto the King. The ſame Prince ſhall haue power and authority, to conduct the Knights of this Order to Warres, and elſewhere; according to the command of his Maieſtie, during the time of his charge, but no longer.

Great Maiſter of the Order & his charge. L'Hebergé Royale.

II. Vnder the ſaid Prince, ſhall be the Great Maiſter of the Order, whom the Knights ſhall make election of from three yeeres to three yeares. He ſhall haue the care and charge, of all the Reuennues belonging to the Order, and to whom all the Knights ſhall render their obedience. During the yeares of his charge and Office he is to make his continuall reſidence in the principal Academy of the Order, which ſhall be named The Royall Lodging; whereon ſhall depend all the other Academies of the Kingdome.

For admiſſion into the Order

III. Such as ſhall be admitted and receiued into this Order, ſhall be Noble by three Races or Deſcents. They ſhall not be tyed or engaged to Iuſtice. They ſhall be well enſtructed in the Catholique and Apoſtolique Religion: They muſt be found, healthfull, and well diſpoſed of body, without any difformitie either Corporall or Spirituall, whereof may be receiued any apprehenſion. And Corporall or Spirituall, whereof may be receiued any apprehenſion. And of they muſt be bound to bring true atteſtation from their Biſhop (eſpecially) for matter of Religion: from three worthy and well knowne Gentlemen, concerning their Nobilitie: and from a skilfull Phyſition, for their health.

At any Knights receiuing into the Order.

IIII. On the day of entertaining or receiuing any Knight, either by the King, Prince Committee, or Great Maiſter of the Order; hee is to make a ſolemne Vowe and profeſſion, to renounce all doubtfull and hazardous Play or Gaming. Not to blaſpheme the name of God, nor to commit any act that ſhall be vicious, and vnbefitting a Chriſtian Knight. He ſhall not reade prohibited and vnlawfull Bookes, without the permiſſion of his Superiours in the Order, and the Ordenaries of the places, whereſoeuer the Academies are ſeated. Hee is to ſhunne the reading of Bookes that are of wicked Doctrine, which corrupt good manners; and diſſolute Songs, ſcrulous talke, and diſhoneſt companies of euill fame.

Concerning the Habite and Collar.

V. The Habite of the Knights on the day of their reception, muſt be of Skie-Colour, and the Collar of the Order, of the Letter M. doubled with Lambda, and the Letter A. repreſenting the names of Saint Mary Magdalen; of Lewes and of Anne, King and Queene of France; enterlaced and enchained with double Harts, ſtraucrſed and wounded with Darts of Gold Croſſed, and the ſaid Ciphers or Letters enamelled with the Colours and Liueries of his Maieſtie, Carnation, White and Blew. The Cordon or Riband muſt be Red or Crimoſine, whereon to hang the Croſſe of Gold enamelled with Red, with an Ouale in the middeſt, wherein muſt be (on the one ſide) repreſented or figured, the Image of the holy penitent Saint Mary Magdalen, and S. Lewes on the other. And on the Mantle or Cloake, the Croſſe of Red or Crimoſine Sattin, embroidered with Gold and Siluer, hauing the like Ouale as is ſaid before, and a Magdalen. And for the deuiſe round about it, theſe words;

L'Amour De Dieu Eſt Pacifique.

The House for the Knights.

VI. Theſe Knights are to haue a Houſe neere to Paris, which his Maieſty may bestow vpon them, if he be ſo pleaſed, wherein there muſt be a Chappell, and wherein alſo the Knights are to be entertained. There ſhall ordenarily attend ſixe Religious Prieſts (who are to weare the Croſſe as the Knights doe) there, to ſay daily diuine Seruice, and to aſſemble (in the ſame Chappell) the Knights of the Order, who are there to be receiued at their preſentment, vpon the conditions before ſpecified. At which Reception, and at the end of the Maſſe, ſhall be ſaid by thoſe Religious Prieſts the Veni Creator; the Letanies of the Sacred Virgin, and the Prayers of Saint Mary Magdalen, and likewiſe of Saint Lewes. Which being done, the Knights muſt take the Oathe before the King, or the Prince his Committee, or the Great Maiſter of the Order. From whom he is to receiue the Sword hallowed, the Habite for Knighthood, the Great Order, the Croſſe and Cordon. Afterward is to be ſung the Te Deum, and the Pſalme Laudate Dominum omnes Gentes; at the end whereof, the Knights Aſſiſtants muſt goe and embrace the new Knight; giuing him the kiſſe of Peace, Vnion and Concord, euery man in his Ranke, according to the order as they haue bin entertained.

The taking of the Oath, and receiuing of the Knightly dues.

The time for probation of the Knights.

VII. Concerning the Houſe, which the Knights are to haue neere to Paris; it muſt be called and named The Royall Lodging, wherein muſt ordenarily be fiue hundred Knights: all bound to abide therein, during the time of two yeares Probation, beginning at the day of entertainement, and yet they may abide there longer, if themſelues thinke it good. At the ending of thoſe two yeares for their Probation, they ſhall take the ſolemne Oathe of the Order (in preſence of the Religious Prieſts of The Lodging Royall) Of Charitie, Obedience and Coniugall Chaſtitie; and to weare the Collar and Croſſe of the ſaid Order, during all their life time.

What they ought to renounce.

VIII. In like manner, they are to renounce and abiure all Duelles or Combats, all rude Encounters and Aſſaſſinates, yea, and all quarrels out of the Kings Seruice: except ſuch wherein they ſhall be taxed, in which caſes, they may lawfully defend defend themselues by Armes, which they are to weare by their profession. In Oath is likewise included, that they are to liue and dye in the Kings seruice; with out adhering or ioyning themselues to any Leagues or Parties whatsoeuer, vnd what cause, pretence or subiect that can be alleadged. For this perfect knowled ought to be engrauen in the depth of their soules, that the very greatest seruic which they can render to God; is, first to serue him, then their King, and lastly their Countrey, for exaltation of the truely Catholique Faith, and honour of th Kingdome.

Appearance once yearely at the Royall Lodging.

IX. Euery Knight of the said Order, after their Approbation, shall stand bound to appeare in person at the Lodging Royall, euery yeare once, on the day and Feast of Saint Mary Magdalen, Patronesse of the said Order. To the end, that they may Communicate together, and render an account of their actions to the Great Master, and to twelue Knights more, elected and chosen as his Assessours and Counsellours: who are to iudge of all their differences, and the transgression of their Vowes, which are to be kept inuiolably; vnder paine of being cashеerd, & degraded of the Order, if their recidiuation extend to the third time.

For them dwelling in the House.

X. The Knights abiding and dwelling in the Lodging, must stand obliged, to be assistant on Sundayes and Feastiuall dayes at Diuine Seruice, celebrated by the Priests of the Order; and to receiue the holy Communion euery first Sunday of the Moneth, at the least. To say daily the Letanies of the Sacred Virgin, with the Prayers of S. Mary Magdalen, and of S. Lewes; their Chappelet and Salue Regina.

Of Exercises for the Knights

XI. The Exercises of the Knights, are to be ruled according to the houres of the day, for auoiding Idlenesse, the Fountaine or well-spring of all vices. And for this effect, in the Lodging Royall, and elsewhere, there must be maintained Esquires, Maisters in actions of Armes, Learned Mathematicians, and some number of well experimented Souldiours, to enstruct Military agilities, and exercises fit for Horse and Foote For other houres of Recreation after these Exercises, there shall be a Tennis Court, Stoole-Baule-Play, and other pastimes, fit for maintaining a knight in the expertnesse of Armes, for better disposition of the body. And from the Knights lodgings or chambers shall be banished (as hatefull and detestable for euer) all play at Dice, Cards or such like.

For maintenance of the Priests and House Officers

XII. For nourishment and maintenance of the sixe Keligious Priests, the King is most humbly to be petitioned; for the annexing and ioyning to the House, some good and especiall Benefice, for the better continuance of Diuine Seruice. And for maintaining the Officers of the Lodging, each Knight that shall enter into the said Order, must be engaged to giue a thousand Francks at his entrance, for the first yeare, and an hundred Pistolets for the second yeare, by way of Pension, which is to be paied to the Reiuer of the Order, established by the Great Maister: as well for himselfe, as for two Seruants and two Horses, which must be his furnishments; vntill there shall be some better meanes established. Which is to be awaited, either by the charitable gifts of Princes or Great Lords, or by Conquests made by the Knights themselues, on such as are enemies to the Church; or by the stocke moued to his Maiesty for his owne memoriall, which was presented to him in the Moneth of Iuly, One thousand sixe hundred and foureteene, when it shall be graciously granted and Signed.

For maried mens entring into the Order

XIII. Concerning maried Gentlemen, such as would enter into this Order, they are to be obliged; ouer and beside the attestation of their Nobility, Catholique Religion, and good habitude and disposition of body: to bring with them the full consent of their Sonnes, for making their two yeares probation, to be admitted and receiued as Knights, which otherwise they cannot be. And such as be formerly entertained Knights, and vnmaried: may lawfully marry after their Probation, if themselues do so thinke it good; considering, that the Order bindeth nor restraineth, but for the Vow of coniugall chastity.

XIIII. And in regard of them, which (at all times) haue had the habitude of vertue, and are knowne for such by common reputation, perfected in their Exercises by maturity of their yeares, more capable to enstruct others, then to be enstructed, and being tied to the duties of Mariage, and cares attending on a Familie, and yet (neuertheleſſe) desirous of admittance into the said Order: they may be reined, with charge of the precedent proues, and onely fifteene dayes of exercise, ecessary for a Knight. Which time being past, they shall notwithstanding be en-ged, to assist on Feast dayes and Sundayes at Diuine Seruice, in the Lodging of e Order; except there be some sufficient essoine or excuse. And submit themelues, to receiue direction in their Conscience; that their Spirits may be the more rongly enabled, and fit for maintenance of all vertues, among the vicious thornes nd briers of this wicked world, and to chastise and correct themselues for such im-erfections and behauiours; as they had contracted before their receiuing into the rofession of the Order. They shall likewise stand obliged, to be personally pre-nt at all Assemblies of the Knights, and one day in the weeke (by allowed iscretion) to continue the exercises necessary for a Knight, the space of two eares: yet neuertheleſſe, without binding them to a continuall abiding, whereto e tied those Knights which be not married. And they must be such as are rich, of ood degree and quality: because they will be engaged, to maintaine the exercises f the Order, and such poore Gentlemen, that haue no meanes for entrance; that they ay the better satisfie the Vow of Charity.

For such as are of ripe yeares and well enstructed, coming into the Order.

Concerning farre distance frō the Schools & Academies

XV. Married Gentlemen, which haue deuotion to the Order, and yet notwith-anding, are far off from the places where the Academies be, and haue not meanes o maintaine their Family in the neereſt Townes to them; may yet receiue the golen Crosse of the Order, at the hands of the Great Maister, euen as well as Knights f Honour. Alwayes prouided, that they first haue made proofe of their Catho-ique Religion and Nobilitie; obliging themselues to the Prayers of the Order, and ecelding fauour and assistance to the Knights of the Order, like friends in affaires f importance, whereto they shall be required, and in so doing, they become parakers of the Orders Prayers. Yet they may not enioy any Commanderies, nor a-ise to the charges and dignities of the Order; nor weare the Crosse on the Cloake; our (as Friends) may be holpen by Knights of the Order, when any such neede hall be.

Priuiledges appertaining to the Knights.

XVI. These Knights may not be compelled by their bodies, for the paiment f ciuile debts: and their equipage or furnishment shall stand exempt from all excutions. They can but oblige the benefit of their patrimony; because they are not o be impeached from following the Kings Seruice, at what time soeuer they shall e thereto commanded. And these Knights may also make choice (at once for all o-her) of some one of the Parliaments in France; whereto they may be called, there o be iudged and sentenced definitiuely.

Consideration for poore Gentlemen.

XVII. If there shall be in the Lodging more money, then is required to pay he Officers thereto belonging; the ouer-plus may serue, for entertaining poore Genlemen to the Exercises, that haue no meanes for their learning, for satisfying the ow of Charity.

The Kings daily visitation by the Order.

XVIII. And to the end, that there may be alwayes about the King, some of hose Knights for his seruice: there shall daily goe to visite him, fourescore or an undred of these Knights (the number of fiue hundred remaining ordenarily com-eat in the Lodging) departing from the Order vnder conduct of some one of them hereto appointed by the Great Maister, each Company going on his day in the eeke, while the rest stay at home about their exercises.

For Seruants that be of the best condition called Brethren Seruants.

XIX. Such as are Brethren Seruants, shall be had from the most honorable Fa-ilies in Townes and Cities, next to the Nobility: who shall be bound to ring attestation of three races, and that their Grandfathers and Fathers haue lwayes liued honorably, without any roate of infamie, and in the faithfull be-efe of the Catholique Church. They shall be bound to the same Vowes and ffices as the Knights. They shall weare as a noate on their Cloakes, a Scar-et Crosse, purfled with Siluer, and a Siluer Crosse of the same fashion, as that of old worne by the Knights, which is to hang at a round Cordon of Crimosine ilke. For entring into the Lodging, and Exercises, vsed among the Knights, ey shall pay to the Receiuer of the Order at his entrance an hundred rownes, and two hundred pounds of Pension the yeares following; as well for himselfe, as maintenance of a Horse to performe his seruice vnto And their Brethren Seruants may be admitted to Military charges, as members of the King Companies going to Warre. And if they attaine to the performance of some wor thy Act of Armes; and for the Kings seruice, they are to be ennobled, that they the more lawfully aspire to that honorable quality. And they may establish Stocke or Bancke of money, for maintaining them of their owne condition that lacke the meanes for entring into the said Exercises, and Order of Brethren Se uants; by the Charities conferred on them, by those of their condition, and by the Te staments of such, as shall be deuoted to this holy Order.

For seruants of the meaner qualitie.

XX. The Groomes or meaner Seruants attending on these Knights, shall be of the most honest Families of Mechanicall Artezans; who shall bring testimony of their good life and manners, by two or three of the principall men of the Parish, and of the Curate. Their Garment shall be of Blew Cloath, with a Gallloune Lace of Crimosine Silke: And they must be skilfull in one Trade or other, for their bet ter seruice in the Lodging, and for the Knights that are to make vse of them. Eue ning and Morning they must attend the Knights seruice, as is appointed them by the Great Maister: but the rest of the day, they are to trauaile faithfully for the com mon benefit, euery one in his Art and profession, as they shall be employed by Maisters experimented in them. They must be bound to the same Vowes and Pray ers as their Maisters, for auoiding all vicious example in so holy a Company. And for attaining to this happinesse, they are to bring no thing but their proues appoin ted, and must remaine in the Lodging all their life time: if so themselues think it expedient, or may withdraw themselues thence (if they will) after the nine yeares of their Probation. All their life long, they shall be priuiledged by some fauours of the Order; in recompence of such good seruices, as they shall per forme thereto.

This intention came to no purpose.

These were the Articles deliuered to his Maiesty by the said Lord of Chappronaye; which sorted not to any effect, by reason of many impossibilities, as well a bout the Lodging, as the Stocke and Banke, with other difficulties beside. So this Order tooke both birth and death, in the person of the same Chappronnaye, who hauing lost all hope, of seeing the execution of these his good intentions; left all his goods to his friends, retreating himselfe from the World, and liued confined to Hermitage (by him erected) neere to Valuin in Gastinois, at the end of the Forrest of Bierre, or of Fontaine-bleaud, vpon a Rock, which discouereth the course of the goodly Riuer of Seine. He remaineth in this place, knowne to the Countrey neighbours and at Paris, by the name of L'Hermite Pacifique de la Magdelaine; The Peaceable Hermite of S. Mary Magdalen.

The Order of Bretaigne; called of the Hermine, and of the Eares of Corne; Instituted by Frances, Duke of Bretaigne, Sonne to Iohn the sixt, Sirnamed the Conquerour: In the yeare of Grace One thousand foure hundred and fifty.

CHAP. XVII.

L'Ordre de Bretaigne ou de l'Hermine & de l'Espy.

Frances, Duke of Bretaigne, last of the name, yongest Sonne (but not in fortune) to Iohn, sixt of the name, called the Conquerour, by imitation the steps of the Princes of the Bloud of France, his Cousines, and whom he was most Nobly descended: Instituted the Order of Knighthood, tearmed Of the Hermine, in the yeare of Grace One thousand four hundred and fifty. Which order was otherwise called, Of Eares of Corne in regard, The forme of the Great Collar. the Great Collar thereof, was composed of Gold, in the true forme of Eares of Corne, enterlaced like to a Saultour, and bound both aboue and beneath, with two ties and circles of Gold.

A Beast called Ermine or Hermine.

At the end of this Collar, hunge by two or three small Chaines of Gold, a little beast, white as Snow, vulgarely called an Ermine; but in writing it more truely, it is stiled an Hermine, appearing to passe or runne ouer a word or motto, vnder a Bancke or faire Tuste of greene grasse, diapred with goodly flowres. Beneath which, was the deuise of the said Duke Iohn the Conquerour, Three wordes, to expresse the soule or sense thereof, to witt, A. MA. VIE. Whereby he would make knowen to the world, that the greatnesse and highst of his courage was such, as rather then to staple in his honour, he would expose himselfe to a thousand and thousand deaths. For my Life.

Concerning the naturall disposition of the Hermine.

The meaning of this deuice, conueigheth it selfe perticularly to this creature the Hermine, whose nature and kinde is such (according to the testimony of the best naturallists) that when he is pursued, in regard of the excellencie & raritie of his furre: he will suffer himselfe to be taken, rather then to runne or thwarte thorow any boggy, foule or filthy passage, so proudly doth he stand on the pureness of his coat or skinne. For huntesmen, well acquainted with his naturall inclination, to take him; will foile his haunches and trackes with mud, mire and dirte. In like manner, hee is as earnestly coueted and sought after for his whitenesse, euen (as in elder times) was the Genett for his blacke furre, speckled or spotted with red, and which (in those times) for excellency, was called, The Richest Furre. These two Animalls, the Genett and Hermine, true serued for Subiest to two seuerall Orders of Knighthood, in France and Bretayne: as the Hedge Hogge or Porcupine, and the Weather or Sheepe, to them of Orleance and of Bourgongne, called at this present Flanders.

The Hermine compared with the Genet.

The Hermine, for his excellent whitenesse, is the very richest furre, sought for and put in vse by Princes, at their highest and chiefest Feasts, and dayes of greatest Sollemnity, worne in their Gownes, Robes, Cloathes, mantelets and Surcoates, as the fayrest furre to grace their life time. And after their death, their Pulles and Coates Armours are furred therewith, being layed vpon them; and vsed beside in their Obsequies and Funeralles.

The Hermine furre for Princes in life and death.

For purity and excellency, it goeth farre beyond the Lettice, next vnto which is accounted the Menu-Vair. In a worde, it is white as milke, and thereupon (in former times) it was the occasion of the Auncient French name of Lettice, by way of Antonomasia, farre aboue all other white furres, whereof there are many kindes.

Plinie maketh mention of the diuersity of these Beasts, whereof the Romanes made great reckning in those times then, and describeth their nature in his eight Booke and seauen and thirty chapter. Conuntur Hyemc, et Pontici Mures, hi dumtaxat Albi, quorum palatum ingustu sagacissimum est. Hac cute expoliuntur Vestes. That the Rattes of Pontus (for so are the Hermines called, by comming from those parts in great abundance) and namely the Whites, which all the length of Winters time, keepes in their holes or dennes. That this creature hath a wonderfull capacity and vnderstanding, for discouery of any Game that may serue for his nourishment. With skinnes of this Beaste, the Romane Senatours had their robes furred. But merchants for lucre and gaine, which they made by the sale of these exquisite Furres, procured many fraudes and deceites: so that the Emperours and Senate had dayly their patience much disturbed, by continuall complaintes against those Regraters and Monopolizers. Whereunto also may be added, that these Hermines haue some kinde of notion and future knowledge, as is obserued by Alianus, in the first Booke of his various Historie, where he tearmeth these Animalles in this manner, Mures futurorum prescios.

Men that traded in the sale of Furres.

For addition of a further grace to this rich Furre, and to make it appeare much whiter then it is, by the luster and beauty of his contrary: the Furriers or Skinners, as matter belonging to their arte and skill, doe spot or speckle it with little quantities or morsels, of Lambes skinnes of Lombardy, famous and much commended for their Blacke shining splendour. For the Hermine is a little creature, wholly white, of the Beautifull black Lambes of Lombardie.

likenesse and bignesse of a Rat, the nose or snoute pointed and sharpened. The Furriers or Skinners doe make vse of this beasts tayle, to grace Aumusses, which are worne by by Bishopes, and Chanons of great reuenewes. But oftentimes (which is not to much knowen) they deale like the Regraters spoken of by Plinie, they deliuer Menu Vaire or Lettice, in stead of Hermines, as Martines of Foxes, and Cattes of Spayne for Gennets.

Chaunge of the ancient Armes of Bretaigne.

The Dukes of Bretaigne, which followed after the Conquerour, in such sort affected the whitenesse of this little beast: that they chaunged their auncient Armes, to take De Sable seme d'Hermines d'Argent, sans nombre. And yet notwithstanding ignorant Painters haue emblazoned Bretaigne contrary to trueth, and the Rules of the Noble Art of Painting: according to which course, we may make naturally, or after the life, Roses of Gueulles on d'Argent, because Nature produceth them Redde and White. Lillies are (of their owne nature White and Yellow, as the Paullet: to figure and present them with Gueulles, like to them of Florence; is not for Enquirie, but rather ignorance in Armes, howsoeuer the art and cunning of man, may make variation of naturall colours, as in the Scripture, the spotted Ewes to deceiue Laban. In all things Nature ought to be imitated. Ignorant Painters haue scarsely so much vnderstanding to informe them, that the Colour and Mettall of Bretaigne are Sable and Argent. The Crosse in her Banners and Cornets, is alwayes made with white, and that the Armes of the later Dukes of Bretaigne, were De Sable, seme d'Hermines d'Argent. Such as are Maisters in Blazons, doe note these Armes by this onely word: Il porte de Bretaigne, for breuities sake; As De France, de Nauarre, Daulphine, d'Orleans, d'Aniou, d'Alanson, or de Valois for France. For Kingdomes of England, Scotland, Leon, Castile, Arragon, Portugall, Hungaria, Bohemia, Polonia, Denmarke and Sweden, without emblazoning them any otherwise: because these being the principles and grounds of the Art, he who maketh profession thereof, ought not (by any meanes) to be ignorant therein.

Nature should be followed in all things.

Emblazons for the Kingdomes.

The number of the Orders Knights, and their Habite.

Duke Frances the first, caused his Castell of the Hermine to be newly builded, in memory and honor of the said Order; which he composed of fiue & twenty Knights, without taxation of blame or reproach. They were garmented with Cloakes of white Damaske, lined with Carnation, the Mantelet or Chaperon of the same; whereon was worne the Great Collor of the Order, composed of Eares of Corne, accordingly as before you see the same figured.

The reason for the Eares of Corne.

The Subiect for these Eares of Corne, is (by some) reported, and referred to the care of Agriculture or Husbandrie, which the Kings, Dukes and Counts of Bretaigne alwayes had, to the end, that their Prouince might be the more fertile and aboundant.

In the Sea called AEgeum.

Poets, in their wonted humour of gracefull fiction, haue feigned, that the Gods being assembled on a day, for their recreation in Euboea, in the Island of Bœotia: Iupiter their Chiefe and Great Maister, commanded them to speake their mindes in some thing, which was the best and most profitable for the life of men. Vulcane said, that it was Fire; Neptune Water; Mercurie a House to dwell in; Ceres Corne; and Minerua the Oxe.

Opinions debated among the Gods.

These opinions were diuersly bandied among them, each of the Gods and Goddesses maintaining what themselues thought best. Some preferred Fire, to be as the Spiracle or infuser of life. Others auouched, that men might liue without Fire, and many Nations there were, that had no knowledge in the vse thereof. Others affirming, that both the one and other were altogether necessary for the life of Man, according to the saying of Pindarus.

Water is the best Element,
And Gold as the Fire resplendent,
Shineth aboue all other substances.

Mercurie said to be the preseruer of humaine society.

Mercurie the guide and directer of Societie among men, fearing to be preuented in his opinion; defended dwelling in an house, affirming, that the forenamed Elements were necessary for man, who yet remained left and exposed to the Ayres iniuries, and the violence of furious Beasts, wilde, saluage and cruell, without the inuention of buildings, which make Townes and villages by multiplicity. Ceres and Minerua being ioyned together, hoping to winne the day from the other Gods, said, that they had had better considered on the case, For men haue (indeed) like lodging, dwelling and feeding as the Beasts haue.

Silua domus erat, Cibus Herba, Cubilia Frondes.

But yet Ceres had thought on a better distinguishing for nourishment, and giuen man Corne, in stead of wilde Acornes.

Prima Ceres ferro mortales vertere Terram
Instituit, cum iam glandes, atque arbuta særa
Deficerent siluæ, & victum Dodona negaret.

Then, that the Oxe was the most necessary creature for the seruice of men, as being the Symbole of Rest, and of Husbandry. Hereupon Iupiter, who alwayes was a well willer to Ladies, according to his wounted behauiour, and for whose sakes he had so often times disguised himselfe; adiudged the victory to Ceres and Minerua. Moreouer (for reason in a Iudge) that Tillage, Husbandry, the Countrey and Fieldes life was the most perfect, most innocent and iust, beyond all other kindes of life that men could make election of. Husbandry is the absolute Elixar (without any compounding) that maketh a man satisfied and contented, euen as if hee possessed a Kingdome.

Read Ouid for the wanton disguises of Iupiter.

Post aliquot mea regna videns mirabor aristas.

Others haue held and maintained, that the Auncient Kings, Dukes and Countes of Bretaigne, caried the Standard and Banner of the great Prince Gomer, who was sonne to the Patriarche Iaphet, first peopler of the plenteous Gaules, which was L'Escu d'Azur au Lyon rempant d'Or. Armes afterward changed De Gueules en Macles d'Or, by a certaine King named Maclianus, who reigned in the time of our King Clouis; Armes still held by the Lords of Rohan, descended of this auncient Stocke and Linage.

Gomers Banner borne by the Kings of Bretaigne.

But others are of the minde, that the proper and naturall Armes of Bretaigne, were D'Azur a Trois Gerbes de Bled liees d'Or, retained by the Lords of Ponthieure, Escar belles de Bretaigne Moderne. And

The opinion of Richard de Vassebourg.

That a certayne Duke of Bretaigne, hauing seene in heauen an Image of the Sacred Virgin, clothed in a mantle of Hermines; he forsooke Les Espics et Gerbes de Bled d'Argent en champ d'Azur, and tooke De Sable seme d'Hermines d'Argent. This is the opinion of Richard de Vassebourg, and other reporters of nouelties, to such as they would haue to credit them.

Armorica now called Bretaigne.

It is a matter most certaine, that the Prouince of Armorica (called at this present Bretaigne) was first of all inhabited by the Gaules. Wee learne in the tenth Chapter of Genesis, that Iaphet (whom the Rabbines make to bee the eldest sonne of the Patriarche Noah, Cham the second, and Sem the third) in the deuision of the world, made three hundred and so many yeares after the Flood: had in his lot and partage, the Septentrionall or Northerne partes of Asia, Europe and their Ilands, which his seauen children deuided among them.

Iosephus in fine Antiquit. Iudaic. Lib. 2. Cap. 5. 6.

Gomer, the Eldest sonne of Iaphet, first exposed himself vpon the licquid or moist element, that is to say, to saile on the Ocean-sea: and that he made or Carpented Gallies, Shippes and vesselles, by the module or patterne of the Arke, formed by his Grandfather Noah. And being followed by his Brethren with their Families, peopled the firme land and the Iles; according, as Iosephus informeth vs in the first of his Antiquities, the fift and sixt Chapters.

Zonaras in Lib. 1. Hist. 4.

Zonaras, in his first booke and fourth history, writeth, that Gomer and his Brethren parting from the mountaines of Taurus and Amanus; shaped their course ouerthwarte Asia towards the North, and came to the riuer Tanais, which rowling from the North to the South, runneth on to ioyne with the marishe Moetides, which crossing Scythia, seperateth Asia from Europe. And then soiourning in the North, sought for shelter in Europe, proceeding on so farre as Cades, a straight at this instant called Gibraltar, but beforenamed of Gomer or Hercules. And coasting along the land, the brethren of Gomer tooke vp their dwelling, some heere, some there; but Gomer went vp to the Armoricane Ocean, that is the coaste of Bretaigne, a Prouince first inhabited by the Gaules: and of this Gomer, the Gaules were called by the Greekes Galates, and by the Hebrewes Gomerites, this is related to vs by Iosephus, in the place before alleadged.

The Gaules called Galates and Gomerites.

Lucian

Lucian a Greeke Author, in his Gauliſh Hercules reporteth, that the wiſe Druides, Prieſts and Soueraigne Iudges of the Gaules, called their firſt Founder Ogmius, which ſignifieth in their mother tongue (improperly called Greeke, ſaith he, for it was Gauliſh) Father of Wiſedome, and of Eloquence. That they figured and preſented him in the ſhape of an old Man, wrinckled, blacke, ſwarthie and Sun-burnt, like to an auncient Mariner, with ſmall ſtore of haire, or rather like a Balde-headed man; his body wrapt in a Lyons skinne, holding his Clubbe in his right hand, and a bended Bowe in his left, his backe charged with a Quiuer, which was well furniſhed with Arrowes. From his tongue were extended forth ſmall Chainets of Gold, wherewith were tied and bound by the eares, an infinite number of men, with ſmiling countenances.

The picture of the Gauliſh Hercules.

The morall interpretation of the figure.

Theſe Diuine Druides gaue hereby to vnderſtand (ſo ſaith the ſame Lucian) that their Prince Gomer, hauing aduentured himſelfe vpon the vnknowne Seas; came to inhabite and people the flouriſhing Gaules, and had firſt (before all men elſe) tamed and ouercome that fierce ſtearne Element the Ocean, repreſented by the Lyon, an vnconquerable creature. Alſo, that by his Eloquence or well ſpeaking, he had (in ſo perillous an enterpriſe) attracted all the way along with him, Men, who had followed him on their owne meere good will, with glad hearts and pleaſing lookes; hauing pollicied and gouerned them in all vertues and Sciences, compared to Gold. That hee brought theſe faire deſignes of his to paſſe, by wiſedome and prouidence, by pregnant arguments and reaſons, whereby he pierced thorow their eares, & penetrated to the very depth of their hearts that heard him. From hence it is, that the Greekes inuented their Hercules, to be a queller and tamer of Monſters, & celebrated the memory of Iaphet, Father to Gomer, vnder the name of Iapetus; to whom they gaue the title, To be the firſt Diſcouerer of vnknowne Lands and Countries.

The Greekes Hercules a tamer of Monſters.

Audax Iapeti genus primum: ſe credere tranſtris.

How & from whence the Gaules name is deriued.

From this firſt kinde of Nauigation, the Gaules deriued their appellation. The name of Gallus is Syriac and Chaldean, Gallin, which ſignifieth diſpoſed to floate vpon Waters, Brookes and Riuers. And thence is deriued the word Gallerin, which properly in Hebrew and other Eaſterne Languages, ſignifieth ſo much as a Shippe, Arke, Boate, Ferry Boate, Wherrie, Cocke-Boake, Gondeloe and Barcke for paſſage, made by craft of Carpenters, to paſſe freely ouer Floods and Waters. As we haue made repetition of in the matter of Marine or Sea buſineſſe, by the names now in vſe of Gallies, Gallotes, Galliottes, Galleaſſes and Gallions; eſpecially lightly and arteficially made by Ioyners and Carpenters skill; by meanes whereof men may paſſe the Seas at pleaſure. And by this obſeruation, our Gauliſh Hercules was named Gomerius Gallus, becauſe, by aduenturing himſelfe vpon the Seas; he had warranted and defended his followers from Shipwracke, onely in ſuch Veſſels made of Wood. Hence was it alſo, that Forreſts were (in times paſt) called Gaules in generall, and a Wood perticulerly was named Gaull: A Tree alone, high and ſtraine, fairely exalted, Gaule, a word whereof we make vſe yet to this preſent, whereby to denoate and ſignifie a Beame or Pearch. The Romant of Reynard of Montauban, compoſed in the time of Phillip Auguſtus, hath theſe relations, according to the auncient French in thoſe dayes.

The Gauliſh Hercules named Gomerius Gallus.

* Eins Carpentier en ᵇ Bos, ᶜ Sot ſi charpenter

And this is the reaſon why the Bretons, the moſt ancient people of the Gaules, haue retained (euen to this very day) the name of Goy for a Wood & Forreſt. And among vs, the ordenary Oath of honeſt plaine meaning Country men, is by Ver-goy, as if they would ſay, By the Greene-Wood. And let me tell you, that (from all Antiquitie) people liuing liuing & dwelling in the fieldes, were called Bagaudes, or Bagaudæ, whereof mention is made by Eutropius, & Paulus Oroſius. Theſe were of the Gaules Chriſtians, that had retreted themſelues into the woods, during the perſecutions of cruell Dioclesian, only to liue in their owne Religion. Since which time, this name or word hath bin taken in the worſt ſenſe, and referred to ſuch, as hide themſelues lurkingly in Woodes and Forreſts, only to prey vpon, and rob all paſſengers, and ſo, by corruption of Letters, are tearmed high-way-men, Theeues & robbers, of whom we ceaſſe to ſpeake any further, and returne againe to our Bretons.

Bagaudes or Bagaudæ.

The countrey of Bretaigne hauing bin firſt of all inhabited by Gomer and his followers (who afterward peopled the reſt of the Gaules, Spayne, Allemaigne or Germanie, Italie and Greece) the Druides made there their principall abiding, from whence afterward they diſperſed themſelues into the neighbouring Prouinces. And although it was ſo, that their Prince, high Prieſt and preſident of the Gaules, held the Seate of his Principality at Dreux, In finibus Carnutum, as Cæſar ſaith in his Commentaries: yet notwithſtanding, the chiefeſt Colledge of thoſe Drudes, was in the Gauliſh Bretaigne whereof we now diſcouſe, euen the very ſame; and not in England, ſo ought the ſame paſſage in the ſixt Booke of Cæſars Commentaries to be vnderſtood.

Bretaigne firſt peopled by Gomer and his followers.

And thither it was that the Noblemen of the Gaules ſent their ſonnes, to learne thoſe Sciences whereof the Druides made profeſſion, as the ſame Cæſar reporteth in the place before alleadged,

Bretaigne Armorica, not England

England, which is now named Great Bretaigne, was peopled by the Gauliſh Bretons, who gaue it their name, as heere you may ſee for further aſſurance, by the Noble Romaine Hiſtorian Cornelius Tacitus, in the life of his Father in Law Iulius Agricola. In uniuerſum æſtimanti, Gallos Vicinum ſolum (of England) occupaſſe credibile eſt. Eorum ſacra deprehendas: Sermo haud multum diuerſus, in deposcendis periculis eadem audacia. Strabo maketh a perticuler deſcription of the Breton Gaules paſſage into England, whether they caried their Religion, Diſcipline, Language and boldneſſe in Fights, which it ſeemeth he hath borrowed of Cæſar in his fift Booke, where he ſpeaketh in this manner.

Britannicæ maritimæ pars ab iis incolitur qui prædæ, & belli inferendi cauſa Ex Armoricis tranſierunt; qui omnes fere iis nominibus Ciuitatum appellantur, quibus orti ex Ciuitatibus eo peruenerint, & bello illato ibi remanſerunt, atque agros colere coeperunt.

Venerable Beda, an Engliſhmen by nation, in the firſt Booke and firſt Chapter of his Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory of England, ſpeaketh thus. Britannia Oceani inſula cui quondam Albionomen fuit, inter Septentrionem; (& Occidentem locata eſt. In primis hæc Inſula Britones ſolum, a quibus nomen accepit, Incolas habuit qui De Tractu Armorica (vt fertur) Britanniam aduecti, Auſtrales ſibi partes illius vindicarunt.

So is it very certaine, that the maritime Coaſtes of England, inhabited by the Gauliſh Bretons, had their Townes and Villages called (as Cæſar, telleth vs) by the names of thoſe of Bretaigne Armorica, which cauſeth the ſame Cæſar ſpeaking of them of Walles which he tearmeth Cantium, to ſay: That in Manners and faſhion of behauiour, they differed not much from the Gaules. Qui Cantium incolunt, non multum differunt a conſuetudine Gallorum. Who by the meanes of Nauigation (whereto they were made aptly prepared, more then any other people) caried into that Iſle of Albion, their faſhions, Manner of life, their Language and their Religion: For they had learned it of the Druides, as Tacitus writeth in the fourteenth Booke of his Annales.

We are creedily informed, that at Lions, Authun, Neuers, with other places in the Prouinces of France, there had bin Druides, and namely in Normandie, Auſonius the Bourdelois, ſpeaking of Profeſſours famous and renowned in his time: maketh mention of one Patera, a nation of Bayeux in Normandy, Sexton of the Temple of Apollo called Belenus.

On the behalfe of the ſaid King Phillip, it was namely ſtipulated and couenanted, that Rex Anglia recipiet Arturum in hominem, ita vt Arturus Britanniam tenebit de eo. And on the part of King John without Land. De Arturo ſic erit quod nos non amouebimus eum, & minuemus, neque de feudo, neque de dominio Britanniæ citra mare, niſi per rectum indicium Curiæ noſtræ. This Arthur was Sonne to Geoffrey, Count of Bretaigne, Sonne to Henry, King of England, who being come to Paris to ſee Philip Auguſtus, that dearely affected him; he fell ſicke and died the foureteenth of the Calends of September, One thouſand one hundred foureſcore and fiue, and was buried in the Quire of the Church of Paris, before the high Altar; The King being aſſiſtant at the Conuoye in perſon, followed by Thibault, Count of Champaigne and Brie, Seneſchall (that is to ſay, Great Maiſter) of France, with Count Henry his Brother, the Counteſſe of Champaigne their Mother, and Lady Margaret of France, Siſter to Phillip Auguſtus, Widdow to the King of England, Henry the yonger, married to Bela, King of Hungaria, Croatia and Dalmatia. Within ſome few daies, the ſame King Phillip; Quatuor Sacerdotes in Eccleſiâ beatæ Mariæ Pariſius, in qua Comes ſepultus fuerat, pro ſeipſo, & pro anima piiſſimi patris ſui Ludouici, & pro anima dilecti ſui Gaufridi Comitis Britanniæ perpetuo inſtituit. This we learne from Rigordus, in the life of the Emperour Auguſtus, vnder the yeare before remembred.

Couenants paſt betweene the two Kings of France and England.

Now, the ſame yeare of the Peace, accorded (as before) betweene King Phillip Auguſtus, and John King of England, Succeſſour to King Richard, who dyed at the Siedge of Chalux (to get a maſſie Treaſure of the Emperour Lewes the Debonaire, his Wife Ermingard, their three Sonnes Kings, Lothaire, Lewes and Pepin, as alſo their wiues, all made ſitting at a Table, which was compoſed of the pureſt Gold) the Count of Bretaigne Arthur, was made Knight Of the Starre, in the Towne of Guerney in Normandie; and affianced to Madam Agnes, or Mary of France, Daughter to the ſaid King Phillip Auguſtus, and Agnes of Morauia. Which Daughter of France, and Phillip of France her Brother, were made Legitimate by Pope Innocent, Third of the name: And here you may reade the very words of that Marriage contract.

Arthur made Knight of the Starre.

The Popes diſpenſation for the Contract of Marriage.

Philippus Dei Gratia Francorum Rex. Notum ſit omnibus præſentibus & futuris, Quod nos conceſſimus dilecto noſtro Arturo Comiti Britanniæ, quod nos trademus ei Mariam filiam noſtram in Vxorem, quando id poterimus facere de iure ſecundum conſuetudinem Eccleſiæ; & modo fecimus ea, quæ facere poſſumus ei de iure, de ſecuritate dicti futuri matrimonij, & hoc fecimus ei iurari ſicut prædictum eſt de parte noſtrâ. Et ipſe iurauit nobis quod ipſe accipiet eam in Vxorem, cum ipſa ad ætatem debitam peruenerit, & numquam vita vitâ Comite, dimittet eam aliquo modo. Actum Parisius Anno Domini Millesimo Ducetesimo Secundo, Mense Aprili.

Indirect dealing in King Iohn to king Philip. Augustus.

But vpon the bad and indirect dealing, which King Iohn of England vsed toward him; he inuested himselfe in the Countie of Bretaigne. Qui iure hæreditario ad eum pertinebat, this is affirmed to vs by Rigordus. Adijciens Comitatum Pictauensium, Aneidegauensium, quos armorum iure sibi acquireret. Quâ de causa Rex Arthurum perpetuo in hominem ligium accepit, & acceptâ à Rege licentia, mense Iulio recessit. And here is the Charter of the Homage, and of the Inuestiture of the said Arthur Count of Bretaigne, in the Counties of Bretaigne, Anion, Maine, Touraine and Poictou.

A Copie of the Charter.

PHILIPPVS DEI GRATIA FRANCORVM REX. Notum, &c. Quod nos recipimus Arturum Comitem Britannia in Hominem Ligium contra omnes qui possunt viuere, vel mori, nemine dempto, de suis Britanniæ, Andegauiæ, Cenomaniæ, & Turoniæ, quando, Domino volente, vel nos vel ipse ea acquisierimus saluis omnibus tenementis de quibus nos vel homines nostri vicinentes eramus co dit, quo diffiduciauimus Ioannem Regem Angliæ pro intercepti nimis quos nobis fecerat de hac vltima guerra, de qua nos obsedimus Botauant, tali modo. Quod quando recipiet hommagia de Andegauia, Cenomania, atque Turonia, ipse recipiet homagia illa, saluis conuentionibus inter nos, & ipsum factis. Ita quod si Arturus resiliret conuentionibus inter nos, & ipsum factis, ipsi cum feodis suis ad nos veniet, & nos iuuabunt contra ipsum. In super autem de Dominio Pictauiæ, recipimus eundem Arturum in Hominem Ligium, si Dominus dederit quod nos, vel ipse eam quocumque modo acquisierimus. Barones vero Pictauiæ qui imperij nostri sunt, & alij quos voluerimus, facient nobis hommagium ligium contra omnes qui possunt viuere, vel mori de terris suis, & de præcepto nostro facient ei hommagium ligium, salua fide nostra. Si autem Charissimus Frater, & amicus noster Rex Castellæ in terra aliquid iuris clamauerit, per iudicium Curiæ nostræ definetur, si ipsos de assensu vtriusque non poterimus pacificare. De Normannia vero fierit, quod nos id quod acquisiuimus, & de eo quod Dominus nobis concedet acquirere, ad opus nostrum retinebimus, quandiu nobis placuerit: & hominibus nostris, qui pro nobis terras suas amiserunt, dabimus id quod nobis placuerit de terra Normannie. Actum apud Gornacum Anno Domini Millesimo Ducentesimo Secundo, Mense Iulio.

This peace broken by King Iohn.

This Peace of Andely or of Gournay, was broken by the occasion of Iohn, King of England, who refused to performe Liedge Homage, for the Counties of Poictiers, Anion, and the Duchie of Aquitaine, which he then held and possessed in France of the Crowne, and violating his Oath, was entred into Armes against his Soueraigne. This Iohn, tearmed as well without Faith, as without Land, hauing got possession of his Nephew Arthurs person, had caused him to be strangled in prison, and had taken into his custodie also Eleanor, eldest Daughter to Geoffrey Count of Britaigne, deceasing at Paris, as we haue formerly said, and Sister to the same Arthur, being both of them Children of Geoffrey, the elder Brother to Iohn without Land, whom hee had closely shut vp in a strong prison in England, as fearing, least she should driue him forth of the Realme of England, which appertained to her, in the right of her Father Geoffrey of England.

King Iohn executed by the hew to the King Arthur

Whereupon, and for this cause, King Iohn of England, was by Decree of the Court of Peeres, in the Parliament of February One thousand two hundred and thirteene, attainted and conuinced in the crime of high Treason, for the death of his Nephew Arthur, who was Liedgeman to the King, in regard of the Counties of Bretaigne, Anion and Poictou, Fiefes which he held of the Crowne of France, acquired and confiscated to the King. Who moreouer leuied a great Naual Army, for the Conquest of England, which (as he presumed) did belong to him, as being the neerest Heire, and ablest ableſt to ſucceede in the Crowne, Cauſæ quæ Philippum Regem magnanimum mouerunt ad hoc, vt vellet in Angliam transfretare, hæ fuerunt, vt Episcopos qui diu à sedibus suis eiecti, in Regno suo exulabant, suis Ecclesijs restitueret: vt diuinum Seruitium quod iam per septennium in tota Anglia cessauerat, faceret renouari: Et vt ipsum Ioannem Regem, qui Nepotem suum Arturum occiderat, pœnæ condignæ subijceret. So ſpeaketh Rigordus, and vnder the ſame yeare before ſet downe.

Alice ſiſter to yong Arthur by the ſame mother, married to Peter de Dreux.

Now, this Arthur dying in this manner by violence, and without iſſue, Alix his ſiſter, by one and the ſame Mother, Daughter to Guyon Viſcount of Thouars, and to Constance, Counteſſe of Bretaigne (Widdow in her firſt marriage to Geoffrey of England, of whom we haue ſpoken before) Daughter and ſole heire to Conan the yonger, Count of Bretaigne: Alix, I ſay, was married to Peter of Dreux, and by marriage was couenanted to him the Countie of Bretaine, wherein hee was inueſted by Phillip Auguſtus, in the ſame yeare One thouſand two hundred and thirteene, as Rigordus informeth vs concerning the ſaid yeare. Petrus filius Roberti primogeniti Roberti Drocarum Comitis cognati Philippi Regis magnanimo, duxerat in vxorem filiam Isabellis de Toartio sororem vterinam Arturi, ex parte matris suæ Cimitisse Britanniæ: quam cum acceperat à Philippo Rege magnanimo totum Comitatum Britanniæ minoris.

The Homage performed by this Peter of Dreux to Phillip Auguſtus, is ſet downe in the yeare One thouſand two hundred and thirteene at Paris: and not in the time of Saint Lewes, yongeſt Sonne to Phillip Auguſtus, as is vainely reported by the Pennes of ſome Hiſtorians, that write more liberally, then wit or gouernment are able to warrant.

An Order begun by this Geoffrey, and called the Cuſtome of Bretaigne.

This Geoffrey of England, fauourite of Phillip Auguſtus, Count of Richmont, and ſo by his wife Constance made Count of Bretaigne; was Authour of the Aſſiſe and Order, for the intire Feodale ſucceſſion to eldeſt Brothers or Siſters, without any partage or deuiſion made to the yongeſt: & likewiſe, concerning the yonger, to whom was giuen Money at their marriage; and to the yongeſt of all, a Nagge and Armes for all their portion. This Aſſiſe or Aſſeſſement was heretofore called The Cuſtome of Bretaigne (whereof we ſhall ſpeake more hereafter) and ſaid to be done in the yeare One thouſand one hundred and foureſcore, publiſhed by the Eſtates of the Countrey, to ſerue (in following times) for a firme, ordained and ſetled Law. But concerning Peter of Dreux, Husband to Alix of Thouars, Counteſſe of Bretaigne: he was of the Houſe of France, and in this manner (as wee vnderſtand) his Originall.

The GENEALOGIE and Originall of the Counts of Dreux.

KIng Lewes le Gros, ſixt of the name, and Alix of Sauoye his wife, had ſixe maſle children, the fourth whereof was Monſieur Robert of France, Count of Dreux, as alſo of Perche and Brenne, Lord of Vienna in Daulphine, of Bray (called by his name) Count Robert of Troſy in Brie, and of Chaille in Bierre. This Monſieur Robert had to wife Agnes, Counteſſe of Breme, and of this marriage iſſued a Daughter and fiue Sonnes, the eldeſt whereof was Robert, called the yonger, ſecond of the name, Count of Dreux, who tooke to wife Yoland, eldeſt Daughter to Raoull, Lord of Coucy: by whom hee had fixe Daughters, and foure Sonnes, the fourth and laſt whereof was

1. Peter of Dreux, Husband to Alix, Counteſſe of Bretaine, and of this marriage iſſued a Sonne and a Daughter, which was Yoland of Bretaigne, and was wife to Hugh of Luſignan, called the Browne, Count de la March, and of Engouleſme.

The Sonne was

II. Iohn of Bretaigne, Sirnamed the Red Count (in regard of his Haire) firſt of the name. He eſpouſed Blanch, daughter to Thibault, ſixt of the name. Count Palatine of Champaigne and Brie, and King of Nauarre, firſt of the name: of whom came two Daughters, and ſixe Sonnes, as namely

1. Iohn.
2. Peter, who dyed yong, buried at the the Gray-Friers in Paris.

3. Thibault the eldeſt.
4. Thibaulte the yonger.
5. Nicholas. And
6. Robert.

The Daughters were

1. Alix of Bretaigne, who was twiſe married: Firſt to John de Chaſtillon, Count of Blois and of Chartres, And in ſecond mariage to Bouchard, Count of Vendoſme.

2. Eleanor the ſecond Daughter died yong.

III. John, ſecond of the name, eldeſt Sonne to John the firſt was made Count and Duke of Bretaigne. He tooke to wife Madam Beatrix of England, daughter to Henry, King of England, third of the name: And of this Alliance proceeded three Sonnes, and as many Daughters.

The Sonnes were

1. Arthur.
2. John, Count of Richmond in England. And
3. Peter.

The Daughters were

1. Blanch, wife to Phillip of Artois, eldeſt Sonne to the ſecond Robert, Count of Artois.

2. Mary, wife to Guy de Chaſtillon, Count of Saint Paule, Brother to Huon, Count of Blois. And

3. Anne, a profeſſed Nunne at Font-Eurauld.

The ſaid John of Bretaigne died at Lyons, at the Crowning of Pope Clement the fift, in the yeare One thouſand three hundred and fiue: And then ſucceeded his Sonne

IIII. Arthur, Duke of Bretaigne, who was twiſe married. Firſt to Beatrix, Viſcounteſſe of Limoges, and by her he had three Sonnes, to wit

1. John the third.
2. Guy, Count of Pointieure, who eſpouſed the onely Daughter to Henry, Baron d'Auaugour: and by her he had one onely Daughter, named Ioane the Cripple, wife to Charles of Blois. And
3. Peter, who died yong.

In ſecond marriage he tooke to wife Queen Yoland, widow to Alexander, King of Scotland, Counteſſe de Montfort l'Amaury, ſiſter to John the ſecond, Count of Dreux, and by her he had one Sonne

John, tearmed of Brenon, who was Count of Montfort: And foure daughters, to wit.

1. Iane, wife to Robert of Flanders, Lord of Caſſel, Alluye and Montmirall, yongeſt Son to Robert, Count of Flanders.

2. Alix, wife to the Count of Vendoſme.

3. Beatrix, wife to Guy, Lord of Laual.

4. Mary, a Religious ſiſter at Paſſy.

V. John, third of the name, Duke of Bretaigne, who was maried three times. His firſt wife was Iſabel of Valois, daughter to Monſieur Charles of France, Count of Valois, without iſſue. The ſecond was Madam Iſabell of Caſtille, Daughter to the King of Caſtille Sancio, fourth of the name, without iſſue likewiſe. And in third marriage he had Ioane of Sauoy, Daughter to Guy, Count of Sauoye, iſſueleſſe alſo. So that by his death, the Succeſſion grew to be queſtioned, between

Charles of Blois, yongeſt Sonne to Lewes, Count of Blois, and Margaret of Valois: husband to Ioane of Bretaigne the Cripple, Niece to the party deaſed, And John of Brenne, Count of Montfort l'Amaury, Vnckle to the ſame Cripple.

By a Decree (the King ſitting in his Parliament, well furniſhed with Peeres) dated at Conflans the ſeauenth day of September, in the yeare One thouſand three hundred fortie and one, The Duchie of Bretaigne was adiudged to the ſaid Count of Blois and his wife. And yet notwithſtanding

VI. John de Brenne of Montfort, fourth of the name, being aſſiſted by the Engliſh; maintained himſelfe in the Duchie of Bretaigne, ſo that a Battaile was fought in Bretaigne the nine and twentieth day of September, One thouſand three hundred threeſcore & foure, where the ſaid Charles de Blois was ſlaine; and (within a while after) Canonized by the Pope Vrbane. To reſiſt againſt John de Brenne, King Charles the fift ſent his Brother the Duke of Anion, and the Lord of Cliſſon to make warre vpon him. So that John the fift, Sonne to John the fourth, was conſtrained to agree with the Widdow and Children of Charles de Blois, in giuing to them the Countie

Countie of Pointieure, and to come and receiue homage to the King, for the ſaid Duchie of Bretaigne, and Countie of Montfort l'Amaury, Lands of Niuernois and of Rethelois, deliuered into the Kings hands. And which were reſtored againe by a Treatie, made betweene the ſaid Charles and Duke, the fifteenth day of January, One thouſand three hundred and foureſcore, ratified by the ſame Duke at Guerrande the tenth day of Aprill, in the ſame yeare One thouſand three hundred and foureſcore. He tooke to wife Margaret, daughter to Lewes eldeſt Sonne to Robert Count of Flanders, third of the name: and of this mariage came

VII. John, fift of the name, Duke of Bretaigne, who was twiſe married. Firſt eſpouſed Madam Mary of England, daughter to King Edward, third of the name; but had no iſſue by her. His ſecond wife was Madam Jane of Nauarre, daughter to Charles the Bad, King of Nauarre, ſecond of the name: And by her hee had three Sonnes and foure daughters.

The Sonnes were

1. John the ſixt, to whom his Mother gaue the Countie of Richmont, with all her moueables, gaines and winnings.
2. Arthur, Conſtable of France, And
3. Richard, Count d'Eſtampes, Lord of Cliſſon; who tooke to wife Margaret of Orleans, daughter to Monſieur Lewes of France, Duke of Orleans, and Madam Valentina of Millaine. Which Margaret of Orleans brought to the ſaid Richard (in marriage) the Countie of Vertus. In this mariage was borne two ſons and three daughters.

The Sonnes were

1. Frances of Bretaine, Count d'Eſtampes and Vertus.
2. Lewes, who deceaſed very yong.

The daughters were

1. Katharine of Bretaigne, wife to William de Chalon, Prince of Orenge.
2. Margaret, Lady Abbeſſe of Font-Eurauld: And
3. Iſabel who dyed yong.

The foure daughters of Duke John the Fift, the eldeſt was

1. Mary, wife to Alain, Viſcount de Rohan.
2. Mary wife to John, firſt of the name who was Duke of Alanſon.
3. Blanch, wife to John, Count of Armiagnac: And
4. Bonna, wife to the Viſcount of Lomagne, eldeſt Son to the ſaid John, Count of Armaignac.

VIII. John, Sixt of the name, and fift Duke of Bretaigne, had to wife Madam Jane of France, ſecond daughter to King Charles the ſixt; and by her he had borne to him three Sonnes and two daughters.

The eldeſt Sonne was

1. Francis, the firſt.
2. Peter, Husband to Frances d'Amboiſe, only daughter to Lewes d'Amboiſe, Viſcounte of Thouars. And
3. Gilles, Husband to Frances de Dinan, Lady of Chaſteau-Briand, Monta-Eſland, and of Beaumanior.

Peter and Gilles, not hauing any iſſue.

The Daughters were

1. Iſabell, wife to Guy, Counte of Laual; And
2. Margaret, who died young.

IX. Frances, firſt of the name, Duke of Bretaigne (the Authour of this ſubiect) had two Wiues. The firſt was Madam Yoland of Cicilie daughter to Lewes, firſt of the name, King of Cicilie, and Duke of Anion of the Second Ligne; but by her hee had not any children. His Second Wife was madam Iſabell of Scotland, daughter to the King of Sotland, Iames, firſt of the name; Siſter to Madame Margaret of Scotland, firſt wife to King Lewes the Eleuenth. And by her he had three Daughters.

The firſt daughter was,

1. Margaret of Bretaigne, wife to Frances of Bretaigne, Counte d'Eſtampes, eldeſt Sonne to Richard Counte d'Eſtampes, Lord of Cliſſon, and Brother to Duke John, Sixt of the name.
2. Katherine, wife to John, Lord of Roham, Viſcounte of Lyons, Sonne to Alain Viſcounte of Rohan; And
3. Frances, Wife to John d'Albret, Eldeſt Sonne to Charles d'Albret, Second of the name.

Frances the firſt being deceaſed without any heire male, not one of his daughters ſucceeded in the Duchie of Bretaigne, but Peter, Second Brother to the ſaid Frances the firſt. Becauſe, by a Treatie made at Guerrand the Twelfth day of Aprill, in the yeare of Grace One Thouſand, sand, Three hundred, Threescore and foure, betweene Iohn, Duke of Bretaigne, Fifth of the name, and Iane of Bretaigne Countesse of Pointhieure, it was couenanted: That thenceforward, Females should not succeed in the Duchie of Bretaigne, all the while, and so long as heire Males should be found, issued of the Ligne of Bretaigne. So that, according to these Conuentions and Agreements made and sworne:

No daughters ſucceeded in in the Duchie of Bretaigne.

X. Peter succeeded in the Duchie of Bretaigne; but he deceasing without any Issue, the said Duchie of Bretaigne fell to the second Sonne of Iohn the Fift.

XI. Arthur of Bretaigne, Constable of France, Second of the name, was thrise maried. His first Wife was the eldest Daughter to Iohn, Duke of Bourgongne, widdowe to Monsieur Lewes of France, Daulphine of Viennois, and Duke of Guienne, Sonne to King Charles the Sixt. His second wife was the daughter to the Lord d'Albret. And the third wife was Katherine of Luxembourg, daughter to the Counte of Saint Paule: but by these hee had not any children. So that the Duchie of Bretaigne came to [illegible]

XII. Frances, Second of the Name, Eldest Son of Richard of Bretaigne, Brother to the said Arthur the second, according to the Treaty held at Guerrand. By his wife Margaret, Sister to the Counte of Foix, he had two Daughters, the Eldest whereof succeeded in the said Duchie, through defect of heires males, issued and descended of the true Ligne of Bretaigne.

The daughters names were

1. Anne: And
2. Isabell, who died young.

In the life time of the said Frances the second, deceassed King Lewes, Eleuenth of the name, the last day of August, in the yeare one Thousand, foure hundred, fourescore and three. After whom succeeded his Son Charles, Eight of the name; who being as yet in yeares of Minority, and not able to gouerne his Kingdome: his Eldest Sister Madam Anne of France, wife to Peter, Duke of Bourbon, Second of the name, Lord of Beaujeu, was proclaimed Regentesse, according to the will of deceased King Lewes the Eleuenth. Shee being sole Gouernesse, and hauing in her possession the person of the King her brother, disposed of the whole State, Offices and Reuennues of the Kingdome, euen according to her owne mind. She estranged from the Kings seruice, first all the Auncient Officers of the Crowne; and within a while after, the Princes of the Bloud, and other Princes that were strangers.

Madam Anne of France Regentesse of the King and state.

Lewes, Duke of Orleans, prime Prince of the Bloud, who afterward was King of France, Twelfth of the name, had formerly pretended, that the guarding of the Kings person, and Regencie of the Realme, appertained to him. But he not being (as yet) of competent age to gouerne himselfe, the Estates Generall of France, being assembled at Tours after the death of King Lewes the eleuenth; adiudged that prerogatiue to the Lady of Beaujeu, a Princesse of a proud surlie minde, and one that had very high aspiring humours. Lewes playing one day at the Tennis, neere to the Court of Paris, there happened a stroke to grow in question and difference; which the Lady of Beaujeu (being then and there present) iudged against the Duke of Orleans. He wexing offended at her peremptory forwardnesse, replied out aloude: That hee was badly sentenced, and the Iudge had lied.

The Duke of Orleans his opposition against the Regentesse.

The Lady of Beaujeu, hardly enduring to put vp the lye, caused the Councell to be assembled, where, by consultation passing among them, it was thought conuenient, that the Duke of Orleans should be committed to safe custody. But he being aduertized thereof by a Gentleman, named Iohn de Louuaine; suddenly escaped from Paris, accompanied with his Cousin the Counte of Dunois, Frances of Orleans, Messire Guy Pot, and Louuaine that had bin his Intelligencer. He rode directly towards Pontoise, from whence departing to Vernueill and Alanson; he stayed there for some time with the Duke, whom he perswaded to take part with him, and the greatest Lords of the Kingdome, only to disturbe the peace thereof: vnder the ordenary and common couller of them, that couet to fisshe in troubled waters, for Reformation of the Realme; Contrary to the Law of God, which forbiddeth a Subiect to rise against his Prince, what specions pretence soeuer may be alleadged for it.

The Duke of Orleans escapeth from Paris priuilie.

When these newes were come to the Court, all the Princes and Lords were disappointed, and all their Companies quashed from their former meaning; which hauing in great measure incensed and displeased them, they made great musterings and Leuies leuies of men throughout all their Prouinces, as the King did the like for his owne parte. On either side happened sharpe bickerings and encounters, and in this busie time of turmoile; Peter de Rohan, Lord of Gie, Marshall of France, and the Lord of Graville, mediated to pacifie the Duke of Orleans. Conditionally, that he should come to the Court, there to hold the rancke and qualitie of his place, as was fitting for the prime Prince of the Bloud. And that the Counte of Dunois, Frances of Orleans, his Cousine (who was reputed to bee the matche, tinder and fire of these commotions:) should absent himselfe from the Realme for some space of time, withdrawing into the Countie of Ast, which belonged to the Duke of Orleans.

Labour to winne the Duke of Orleans, and ceasle the disturbance.

And so by this accord (which was but of very shorte continuance) all men (on either side) layde downe their Armes, to the great discontentment of martiall minded men, cheated and deceiued in their chiefest hopes, of speeding best in strifes and garboiles, as is ordenarily noated in all Ciuill dissentions. This dawbed agreement with the Duke of Orleans, was concluded at Boisgency, in the yeare of Grace One Thousand, Foure hundered, Fourescore and fiue.

Troubled waters are best fishings for Souldiours

No long tarying made the Counte of Dunois at Ast, but, without licence from the King, returned backe into France, and fortified himselfe in his Castle of Parthenay in Poictou. The Lady of Beaujeu, seruing still as Sentinell to these contrary courses, and suspecting this returne of his; aduertised the King thereof, who, to cleare himselfe in this businesse; by councell of the Regentesse, sent to the Duke of Orleans, who then made his abode in his Citty of Orleans) to come speedily, and yield himselfe to him.

The Counte of Dunois his sudden returne into France.

The Duke (well informed of these charitable and kinde offices, which the Lady of Beaujeu perfourmed to him, and quite against the haire:) assured the Marshall de Gie, that he would be as soone at the Courte, as he. And on the morrow, being the Fift day of Ianuary, in the yeare fourescore and sixe, he departed from Orleans, and came to Blois, from whence he went with his Houndes and Haukes, as if he intended to goe see Flight. Withall possible diligence hee went to Nantes in Bretaigne, where hee was kindly welcommed by Duke Frances, Second of the name: who Shipte himselfe in his cause and quarrell, with all them of his first intelligence.

His queint escaping to the Duke of Bretaigne.

Their names that tooke part with the Duke of Orleans.

Thorow all France (by Poastes and Courriers) they declared and proclaimed, the manifest reason of their entring into Armes, and the agreement of their Sealed League, bearing this Title.

The reasons published of their entring into Armes.

A Briefe of the Leagues Proclamations.

SEaled and confirmed by the Confederated Princes, for seruice of the King, Reformation of the Kingdomes Pollicie, and his Royall Court (where open sale is made of all things) for ease of the people, and maintenance of those Orders agreed on by the Estates Estates in Parliament. For gouerning his brginesse Reuennues, and reestablishment of the Officers of the Crowne: Against disturbers of the weale publique; Breakers of the Ordenances, done in the generall Assemblie of the States, and who (according to their owne willes) possessed and ruled the King in his minority; hauing expelled and thrust away from about his Royall person, the Princes of his Bloud, and chiefe Officers of the Crowne.

These Proclamations are dated the tenth day of February, in the yeare One Thousand, foure hundred, fourescore and six, at Cognac, at La Flesche, at Nantes, and sundry other places beside.

The Kings proceedings against his reuolted subiects

When the King had intelligence of these rebellious proceedings; forthwith he sent an Army into Poictou, and besieged Parthenay, which was taken and raced downe to the ground. As much he caused to bee done in Guienne, on the Lands and Castles of the Counte of Comenges, and other pertakers with Orleans, who (for the greater part) were retreated into Bretaigne.

The Kings army in Bretaigne.

The King summoned the Duke of Bretaigne, to restore him his Subiects, of whom he made vse in this his reuolt. Vpon his refusall, he dealt with the Noble men of the Countrey, of whom hee withdrew the most part, to fight against their owne Duke. And in the meane while, hee entred a puissant Army into Bretaigne, where ioyning with the Bretons of his intelligence; he wonne Redon, Ploermell and other places, for beginning the yeare Fourescore and Seauen. In which yeare also, they of Vannes yielded themselues to the French: who afterward went valianly and besieged Nantes in the moneth of Iune, surprising Moncontour, Ancenis and Chasteau-Briand.

A mariage intended for the Lord Iohn d'Albret.

At the beginning of the yeare fourescore and eight, the French Armie tooke Fougeres, and Saint Aubin du Cormier on the one side; while the King (on the other) tooke into his hands, all the goods of the Lord of Albret, as returning to his Crowne. The Confederated Princes, to draw to their faction the said Lord d'Albret (a very riche and powerfull Lord) Father to Iohn d'Albret, King of Nauarre, Great Grandfather to Lewes the Thirteenth of the name, King of France and Nauarre, at this present reigning) in Bretaigne and Guienne: had propounded a mariage to him, of Anne of Bretaigne, eldest daughter to the said Duke Frances the second; who, imitating the last Duke of Bourgongne Charles, promised his daughter in mariage to all the Princes, from whom hee hoped to deriue any aduantage and seruice, helpefull for his owne affaires and occasions, Anne of Bretaigne diuers times promised in Mariage and all disapointed.

For she was first promised to the Prince of Wales, Eldest Sonne to the King of England, Edward, Fourth of the name; Afterward to this Alain d'Albret; then to Maximilian of Austria, King of the Romaines, widdowed of Mary of Bourgongne, daughter to the last Duke Charles: And secretly (but in good earnest) promised to Lewes Duke of Orleans, who was resolued to diuorce Madam Iane of France, a wise and vertuous Princesse, but somewhat mishapen of body, and whom he had espoused against his will, to obey King Lewes the Eleuenth, a Prince difficult to be endured, and whom he durst not deny in any matter whatsoeuer. Neuertheless, not one of these purposed mariages sorted to any effect, God hauing otherwise disposed for the good of France; as we shall see by the successe, and the pretendants leste all deceiued.

The voyage of Alain d'Albret into Spayne to King Ferdinand

Alain d'Albret feeding vpon these new promises of Loue: beside his owne forces, and those of his friends, drawne by him into this quarell; made a voyage into Spayne, to King Ferdinand and Queene Isabell of Castile (vsurpers of the Kingdome of Nauarre, against the King Iohn d'Albret) enemies to Lewes the eleuenth. Hauing visited them at Valentia, hee obtained of them the assistance of a thousand men of warre, conducted by their Grand Maister d'Hostell Iuan Graile, a Cathalognian: with whom Alain d Albret being embarqued at the Port of Saint Sebastian in Biscaye, he arriued safely in Bretaigne the third day of Maye, One thousand foure hundred, twenty and eight.

Lewes de la Trimouille Generall of the Kings Armie.

In the meane time, the King soiourning in his City of Angiers, gaue order to his Army, whereof (in absence of Gilbert de Bourbon, Count of Montpensier) hee gaue the conduct to Lewes, Lord de la Trimouille: albeit young in yeares, yet a wise Captaine, and of high attempting, also (of his time) he wonne the faire title of Cheualier sans Reproche, A Knight without detection.

The

The Army of the Leagued Princes, enlarged with the succour of England, Spaine and Eight hundred Germaines, sent by Maximilian of Austria; was fully determined to set vpon the French. On they proceeded to handy blowes, neere to Saint Aubin du Cormier, on Monday being the Eight and Twentieth day of Iuly, in the said yeare Foure Score and Eight: the honour and benefit whereof remained to the French, through the wise carriage of the Lo.d de la Trimouille, who was Lieutenant Generall thereof.

The Battell fought neere to S. Aubin 1488.

The Lord d'Albret and the Marshall de Rieux saued themselues (with the first) by trusting to their Spurres. The Count d Escales and Claudius de Montfort English-men, were slaine in the Field of Battaile, with Three Hundred English, to whom, and to Twelue hundred Bretons (ioyned with them, and bearing badges of the red Crosse) fell vtter ruine and slaughter, and not a man saued. The Duke of Orleans was arrested Prisoner among the Germaines, whom the Generall put to passe the Pikes.

The Duke of Orleans and Prince of Orenge taken Prisoners.

The Prince of Orange perceiuing all to be in disorder; rent his Blacke Crosse (the Enfigne of Bretaigne) and threw himselfe on the ground among the dead: but being known to be liuing, was taken prisoner, as the like was Iuan Graille, Maiordome to Ferdinand of Arragon. Of the Bretons Army Sixe Thousand lay slaine in the field, and of the French but Twelue Hundred.

Duke Lewes sent to the Tower of Bourges.

Which Victory thus won by the French, brought to them also the Conquest of Dinan, Saint Malo, and other Townes beside, which yeelded themselues to the victorious Generall. After the Battaile, Lewes Duke of Orleans, was sent Prisoner to the strong Towne of Bourges, where hee remained two whole yeares in one of those Cages, which yet are to be seene at this day: in danger to haue continued there a farre longer time, but for the teares and entreates of Madame Iane of France his Wife. The Prince of Orenge was sent with a sure Guard, to the Castell of Font de See, to verefie the ancient Oracle, which neuer fayled to speake the truth; that Celuy: qui contre son Prince.

Esleue le front trop hault
Et qui trouble sa Prouince
En fin trebuche d'vn sault.
Et sent la Iuste Iustice
De ce grand Dieu punissant,
De son foudre rougissant
L'horreur & tel malefice.

Thus conuerted into English.

He that against his Prince
Exalts his head too hye,
And troubleth his Countries peace,
At length full low may lye.
And feele the iudgement iust,
Of that offended God:
Who punisheth such horrid sinnes
With his reuenging Rod.

The death of the Duke of Bretaigne.

The losse of this Battaile afflicted the Duke of Bretaigne in such sort; that he died on Tuesday being the Ninth of September, in the same yeare Foure Score & Eight. His death was followed with that of his last Daughter, Madame Isabell of Bretaigne, His Eldest Sister Anne, the young Duchesse of Bretaigne.

XIII. Anne, Duchesse of Bretaigne, was by the Testament of the last Duke Frances the Second her Father, left in the Guard and Tutelage of the Lord de Rieux, Marshall of Bretaigne, and of the Lady de Loual, Step-Sister to the Lord Allaine d'Albret; in regard that the said Anne was then but twelue yeares old, being borne in the yeare; One Thousand, Foure Hundred, Three Score and Sixteene.

It

It was the meaning of the Marshall & Lady of Lauall, to espouse her to the Lord Alaine d'Albret: but he being ouer-farre stept into yeares, the young Princesse made it appeare plainly, that she would not haue him. The Count of Commenges and Philip of Montauban, Chancellour and Gouernour of Bretaigne (during the minority of Anne, by the Testament of her Father) being both together otherwise minded, began to grow offended with their Lady, at her refusing the Lord d'Albret: who displeased also therewith; by the meanes of Peter of Bourbon, Lord of Beaujeu, husband to Maddam Anne of France; yeelded himselfe to the Kings Seruice, who (within a while after) released all his Seigneuries to him.

The Lord d'Albret submitteth to the Kings Seruice.

By this businesse concerning the Duchesse of Bretaigne, this Prince brought such benefit to France; that he deliuered vp to the French, both the City and Castell of Nantes, which being surrendred in the end of March, Foure Score and Ten: The King came speedily thither, & made his entrance the Fourth day of April following. And there he kept the Feast of Easter, vntill the Eleauenth day of the same Moneth of Aprill, beginning the yeare Foure Score and Eleauen, when hee resolued to goe and besiedge Rennes, whereunto the Duchesse had retreated her selfe, and (by that meanes) at one aduenture to subdue Bretaigne, & so annexe it for euer to the Crowne of France.

A Marriage purposed for the Duchesse of Bretaigne.

The taking in of Guincamp by the French, began this Instant yeare, and ended with the hopefull happy Marriage of the young Duchesse to the said King Charles the Eight: to the no small benefit of that poore Duchy, miserably ruined by wars of the French and English. For the young Duchesse being badly succoured by the King of the Romaines, her pretended Husband; could not expect any great matter of defence from him, nor from his Germaines, whose weapons hung heauy by their sides, and therefore made them march the slower.

Both the higher and lower Bretaigne (Rennes reserued and very few other places) were reduced vnder the French Command, and it had beene no meane dishonour to them, to leaue the rest for Maximilian. And King Charles hauing set at liberty the Duke of Orleans, through the instant intreaties of his Sister, Madame Iane of France, Wife to the said Duke of Orleans, and granted the same grace to the Prince of Orenge: his side became very strongly fortefied, as well by those two Princes, as also the Lord d'Albret, the Count of Dunois, and the Viscount de Rohan, a potent Lord in Bretaigne, as now it was an easie matter for him, to make himselfe absolute Lord of the Dutchy.

The Kings part very greatly strengthened.

On the other side, the Dutchesse (perswaded by her faithfull followers, who made plaine demonstration to her of her misery, and the calamity of a poore Princesse, despoyled of her goods, and now driuen to such distresse, as, either to see her selfe exiled, or else confined to some Monastery (began to lend an eare, of faire agreement with King Charles. And the meanes for attaining thereto, was onely but by one way, namely Marriage; she being then aged fifteene yeares, and the King Twenty, wherein there was little inequality.

The King receiued into Rennes.

For full-resolution in this case, his Maiesty hauing won the Suburbs of Rennes, was (within three dayes after) receiued into the Towne with all magnificence, in the Moneth of Nouember, and the same yeare Foure Score and Eleauen. The Marriage being concluded on, he sent his promised Margaret of Austria, to her Father Maximilian, King of the Romanes, who had declared himselfe an enemie to him, making war against him, in fauor of the confederated Princes. Albeit, in the life time of King Lewes, the Eleauenth, his Daughter had beene granted to the Prince Daulphine Charles, and sent into France, where she was nourished some yeares, attending due age for the performance of Marriage.

The King married to Anne Duchesse of Bretaigne.

The Nuptialls of the King and Anne Duchesse of Bretaigne, were sollemnized at Langeois in Touraine, the Sixt day of December, in the same yeare Foure Score and Eleauen: in the presence of Lewes Duke of Orleans, Charles, Count of Engoulesme, Peter Lord of Beaujeu, both before and then Duke of Bourbon, and Frances, Count of Vendesme, Princes of the Bloud; there were also present John Vicount of Narbonn, Guy of Rochfort, Chancellour of France, Messire Lewes d'Amboise, Bishop of Alby, and Messire John de Rely, Doctour in Diuinity, Bishop of Angiers, and Ordinary Confessary to the King, all these were on the Kings behalfe. And with the Duchesse came John de Chalon, the Prince of Orenge, Philip of Montauban, Chancellour of Bretaigne, the Lord of Guemene, and diuers other great Lords, as well French as Britons.

In this Marriage was borne three Male Children, all dying in the life time of their Father; who hauing reigned fourteene yeares and somwhat more, deceased (without Issue) in the City of Amboise, the Seauenth day of April, ending the yeare yeare Foure Score and Seauenteene, before Easter, and the Seauen and Twentiedi of his age. A Prince deformed of face and Body, but in recompence thereof, God had endued him with a capable spirit, very susceptible of lofty enterprises; which doubtlesse he would haue effected, if heauen had spared him longer life time, being educated (from his tender yeares) in the feare of God, works of piety and deuotion; and these were his onely direction.

The death of King Charles in the City of Amboise.

In Second Marriage, Queene Anne of Bretaigne matched with Lewes the Twelfth, King of France, by the decease of Charles the Eight his Cousin. Which Lewes the Twelfth (called Father of the People) after his Sacring performed at Rheimes, the Seauenteenth day of May, Foure Score & Eighteene; caused himselfe to be separated from Madame Ioane or Iane of France, whom he had espoused and perforce, without giuing his will and consent thereto.

The second Marriage of Queene Anne of Bretaigne to King Lewes the Twelfth.

This was done by Sentence deliuered from these Cardinalls, as namely Philip, bearing title of Saint Peter Ad Vincula, named of Sauonna; Marcellinus, Cardinall of Luxembourg, and Bishop of Mans; Lewes, Cardinall D'Amboise, and Bishop of Alby, and Ferdinand, Bishop of Scepta, all of them Iudges delegated by Pope Alexander the Sixt.

Both the parties being in single condition, as they were before Marriage; King Lewes tooke to wife the said Queene Anne of Bretaigne (whom hee had dearely affected from the time before remembred) in the Moneth of Ianuary, Anno, One Thousand, Foure Hundred, Foure Score and Eighteene.

Of this Marriage issued, two Sonnes, deceasing young, and as many daughters: to wit,

The Issue of King Charles the twelfth.

Madame Claudia of France, married to King Frances, First of the Name: And, Renes of France, Wife to Hercules d'Este, Duke of Ferrara; of whom King Lewes the Twelfth vndertooke the protection, against the violences of Pope Iulius the Second.

This Queene Anne dyed at Chasteau de Blois, the Nineteenth Day of Ianuary, the yeare of Grace, One Thousand, Fiue Hundred, and Thirteene, Her body lieth buried at Saint Denis in France, in the Sepulcher of King Lewes the Twelfth her last husband, without the Quire on the left hand.

The death of Queene Anne of Bretaigne.

When this Queene was widdow to King Charles the Eight, shee engirt her Armies with a Band or Cordeliere of Siluer, which she had inuented, like to an Order of Knight-hood: to the end that the Armes of Queenes, Princesses and Ladies of high degree (being Widdowes) might bee in the like manner beautified. Shee wore, as a Girdle, a Cordeliere of white threed, and gaue the like to alll the Widdowed Ladyes of her Court, to weare vpon their mourning garments in her imitation.

The gift of Queene Anne to widdowed Ladies.

And when shee made or built any Shippes in Bretaigne, Shee called them by the name of Cordelieres; especially the principall Ship of them, which wee tearme Royall.

Madame Claudia of France, her Eldest Sister, Wife to King Frances the First, gaue to the King her Husband the Duchy of Bretaigne, with other Lands beside, which shee held in succession both from Father and Mother, as heere you may behold the Contract of the Donation.

A Copie of the Queenes Letters Patents, for the Duch of Bretaigne, and other Lands.

CLaudia, by the Grace of God, Queene of France and Ducheſſe of Bretaigne &c. To all such as ſhall ſee or read theſe our preſent Letters, Greeting. We make publikely known that as on the Two and Twentieth day of Aprill laſt paſt, in the City of Paris, wee gaue granted to our moſt deare and louing Lord the King our Husband, the Duchie of Bretaigne Counties of Nantes, Blois, Montfort l'Amaury, and the Siegneury of Couey, for cauſes full related in thoſe Letters Patents, made and paſt before Iohn du Pre, and Iohn Dam, Notaries to our Prouoſt of Paris, by vſing the Priuiledge of Right, wherein Queenes are ſubiected to Conſtitutions and Cuſtomes, whereby thoſe Donations made by Wiues to their Husbands during their Marriage, may be ſaid to be innalidate and of no worth, but for the enioying during her life time only. Since when, conſidering, that the ſaid Donation was granted for life onely, wherein we haue not ſatisfied our owne will and true meaning, which was, and is, to giue them to him to all perpetuity, if in caſe hee ſhall ſuruiue vs, without Children deſcending of our Marriage, or to our Children. Hauing regard to the Clauſes contained in the ſaid Donation, and likewiſe to the charges, coſts and expences, which he muſt needs bee at, for conquering of our Duchie of Millaine, the paines and trauailes which hee taketh continually to recouer it; yea, the great and (well neere) infinite Summes of money, which hee hath beene at for many yeares, as well in the life time of our moſt louing Lord and Father, King Lewes (whom God abſolue) as ſince then, ſent from the Realme of France, as well for conquering it ſundry times, as to conſerue and keepe it ſtill ours.

And conſidering withall, that many Princes of our Blood, & other great Lords, Subiects, & Seruants to our Kingdome, haue expoſed their goods and perſons in the Conqueſt, recouery and keeping thereof: And that being iſſued and extracted of the Houſe of France, whereof (with all our heart) wee deſire the proſperity and augmentation.

And, that if our ſaid Duchy of Bretaigne and County of Nantes, ſhould happen to the hands of ſome ſtrange Prince or Lord (which God forbid) it would proue the cauſe of many warres, diuiſions and debates, to the great preiudice of the ſaid Kingdome and Duchie of Bretaigne, as heretofore wee haue knowne by our deare experience: And for the intire Loue wee beare to the good and loyall Subiects of our ſaid Duchie of Bretaigne, and County of Nantes, the reſt quiet and tranquility whereof wee heartily wiſh, and make no doubt but it may attaine vnto (by Gods aſſiſtance) ſo long as the Duchy and County ſhall appertaine to the Crowne of France.

For theſe cauſes and conſiderations, with others which haue much moued vs, and are at large ſet downe in the Letters of donation made at Paris, vſing the Priuiledge of Queenes as before is mentioned; with our certaine knowledge, good counſell, and aduice, pure, franke and free goodwill, ſo much as in vs lyeth, or reaſon can require: wee haue giuen, granted and transferred, doe giue, grant and transferre by donation irreuocable, to our ſaid Lord and husband, at this preſent accepted and couenanted, our ſaid Duchie of Bretaigne, Counties of Nantes, Blois, Montfort l'Amaury, and Siegneury of Couey, without reſeruing any part or parcell of them, but going ſo farre forth as they can and doe extend in the Duchie, Counties and Seigneuries, giuen and granted to our ſaid Lord and Husband perpetually, if hee ſhall ſuruiue vs without Heyres deſcending by our Marriage, or after the death of ſuch deſcendants, if hee doe ſuruiue them after our deceaſe, euen as his owne proper and peculiar inheritance.

And wee promiſe on the ſound faith and word of a Queene, to keepe and obſerue all things before remembred, and neuer to gainſay or contradict any thing, for any cauſe, reaſon or meanes whatſoeuer, either directly or indirectly.

And wee promiſe, to warrant and defend (towards all, and againſt all) and to pay all Intereſts and damages, that may happen to my Lord the King, if the ſaid Donation ſhould not take entire and full effect; and that vnder the engagement and Obligation of all and euery part of our goods, and namely the ſaid Duchy, Counties and Seigneurie.

And

And we renounce all exceptions, as well of Right as of Fact, and will that any ſuch caſes happening: hee ſhall take poſſeſſion at all times, and as often as himſelfe ſhall thinke good. In teſtimony whereof, &c. Beneath the Originall of the ſaid Contract of Donation, is written in this manner.

Die Vigeſima Octaua Menſis Iunij, Anno Domini Milleſimo Quingenteſimo Decimo Quinto, Donatio ſupradicta facta eſt præſente Domino noſtro Rege acceptante; Domino Cancellario, Magiſtris Florimondo Robertet, Roberto Guydoyen, & nobis Notarijs ſubſignatu.

T. Paſtille. I. de Monthennault.

And thus the Duchie of Bretaigne, ſundred for euer from the Crowne of France, was inſeperably reunited thereunto, by the ſaid Queene Claudia, and King Henry the Second her Sonne; as well by the fore-recited Donation, as at the requeſt, and by the aduiſe of the States of Bretaigne, the Fourth day of Auguſt, in the yeare, One Thouſand, Fiue Hundred, Thirty and Two. The full reuniting of Bretaigne to the Crowne of France.

We haue heretofore ſpoken ſomwhat, concerning the cuſtome of Bretaigne, called Aſſiſe, made for Feodale Succeſſion, adiudged by aduice of the States to Eldeſt Brothers and Siſters, and what kinde grace remained to the youngeſt. Before this Count deceaſed: which was corrected by Geoffery of England, Count of Richmond, firſt Husband to Conſtance, Ducheſſe of Bretaigne his wife, and here you may read the nouell Aſſiſe. The diuiſion of Bretaigne before this Law.

The Answere returned by Augustus to the Pope.

NVmquid obliuisci poterit Mater Filiorum veri sui? Et ECCLESIA ROMANA REGNI FRANCORVM? cum vterque de Natura sit impossibile, iure difficile, & de facto enorme. Quid enim vltra facere debuimus MATRI NOSTRAE ECCLESIAE ROMANAE, & non fecimus ei vsque in hodiernum [illegible] es cum Patribus nostris? Cum ipsa gaudente gauisi sumus, & cum flente fleuimus vtrumque Calicem passionis, & latitiæ, sine dissimulationis dolo, conbibentes. Persecutiones ipsius, quæ frequentes acciderunt, Patres nostri REGES FRANCORVM, & roborabant humeris, & extentis brachijs defendebant. Exempla promere, est beneficium tractare, quorum debetis in quem collata sunt, non qui contulit, meminisse. Hæc sunt beneficia meritorum REGNI FRANCORVM? Hæ retributiones, & gratiarum actiones Deuotionis, & Fidei quam ECCLESIAE ROMANAE Patres nostri semper exhibuerunt, in omni persecutione vestra, pro Ecclesia Domini, & suis, fideliter imperare, & resistere viriliter alienis?

To race out this fault and errour, Pope Innocent the Third, in the yeare of Grace before mentioned, and the Second of his Pontificiality; determined this cause to the benefit of the Church of Tours. And as hee was a very learned man; so was hee likewise bold and couragious, in the expressing of his owne intentions.

So pronouncing the definitiue Sentence, which hee caused to bee executed vnder paine of Excommunication; in taking away the Pallium from the Bishop of Doll, beginneth with these words.

Innocentius, Seruus Seruorum Dei. Doleat Dolensis & gaudeat Turonensis Ecclesia, &c.

Of other Knights, stiled by diuers Names; as Knights of Battaile; Knights of the Siedge; Knights of Mines vnder the Ground; And Knights of the Accolade or Embrace.

CHAP. XVIII.

A power peculier to Martialists.

OVer and beside these Orders of France, which doe beare their perticular Titles; Kings, Lieutenants Generals of Armies, and Captaines of maine Battalions, were wont to giue the name of Knight, to such as had carried themselues valiantly in Battailes, rough Encounters, Mines vnder ground, Assaults, and Siedges laid to Cities, Townes and well fortefied places. Moreoeuer, in times of Peace, Kings vsed to make Knights, by colling or embracing them, who were vulgarly called Knights of Grace and Fauour, which are the meanest of all the rest; and yet notwithstanding, this Grace cannot be giuen but by the King one-[illegible], euen no more then the degree of Nobilitie. As for the other Titles, I meane Knights of Battaile, Knights of the Mine vnder ground, and Knights of the Siedge laid to Cities; Lieutenants Generals haue that power from the King, granted in the [illegible] of their charge.

Knights of fauour made onely by Kings

Before, or after the Battaile, such Knights are made, and in such forme and man-[illegible], as we haue obserued to you in our second Booke.

The making Knights of Battaile.

Of Bertrand du Guesclin, Constable of France, after the Encounter made at Coche-[illegible], famous by the surprizall of Sir John Chandois, chiefe of the English Armie, [illegible] totlly disrouted; made Knights of Battaile, to wit, Messire Iacques le Mercier, Lord and Patron of Saint Quentin des Isles, a Village neere to Bernay, in Norman-[illegible]die; and the Sonne in Law of the said Mercier, named Bertauld de Gastell, Lord and Patron of the Village called Vitray le Gastel, neere to L'Aigle in Normandie. Moreouer, at Paris there are three Bretheren, descendants from the Familie [illegible] the same Bertauld, bearing the same Sir-name and Armes of Gastel, which are D'Argent à Deux Cheurons de Sable: the eldest of which three Brethren, is Mai-[illegible] Frances Gastel, Councellour to the King, and Generall in his Court of [illegible]ydes.

Knights of Mines vnder ground.

Concerning Knights of Mines vnder ground, before, in the Order of Bour-[illegible], Page 492. We haue there declared, that Renaud of Montferrand was made Knight in the Mine of the Castell of Vertueil in Poicton, by the good Duke of Bourbon. Whereto we may adde and annexe, that which is said in the Chroni-[illegible] of the Vrsins, vnder the yeare One thousand foure hundred and twentie, dis-[illegible]coursing on the Siedge of Melun, maintained by the Lord of Barbazan for the French, against the English and Bourgongnons. The English hauing found by proofe, that he gaue them hot worke in their assaulting; made their recouse to [illegible]ndermining; which was perceiued by the besiedged, who counter-mined also against them.

Et pour-ce qu'on disoit qu'en Mines se faisoient de vaillantes Armes, on sit sçauoir [illegible]ues s'il y auoit personne qui vouluſt faire Armes, qu'il vint. Dont LOVIS IVVENAL DES VRSINS requit audit Reigneur de Barbasan, qu'il luy donnaſt congié d'en faire. Ce qui luy fut octroyé, mais qu'il trouuaſt Partie, laquelle il trouua assez aysément. Et estoit vn bien Gentil-homme Anglois d'Angleterre. Heure fut assignee, à laquelle ils comparurent, & y auoit Torches, & Lumiere. Et combattirent l'vn contre l'autre vne grosse demie-heure, & n'y eut celuy qui ne perdist de son sang, & de ceux qui auoyent auoyent les Gardes furent retraicts. Et n'y auoit guere Heure au iour, qu'il n'y eut [illegible] la Mine des faicts d'Armes. Entre les autres, Raymond de Lore, qui estoit vn vaillant [illegible] cuyer entreprit d'Armes Deux contre Deux, & fut pour Deux [illegible] Et combattirent contre Deux Anglois, bien, & vaillamment, & ne [illegible] ne pouuoit-on prendre l'vn l'autre, car il y auoit vn gros Chemin en Trauers de la Mine, haut iusques à la Poictrine, & estoit defendu que nul ne passast par Dessus, ny Dessous.

Le Roy d'Angleterre, & le Duc de Bourgongne firent plusieurs Chemises [illegible] Seigneurs, lesquels vaillamment s'esloient portez au faict des Armes, qui auoient [illegible] faicts en la Mine. Et sonnoient Trompettes, & Menestriers en leurs Seiges, & faisoient [illegible] grand Ioye.

Le Seigneur de Barbasan dict aussi qu'il en vouloit faire, & enuoya querir [illegible] Louis des Vrsins, & Gilles d'Escheuiller (Bailly de Chartres) & les fit Cheualiers [illegible] aussi sonner ce qu'il y auoit de Trompettes, & sonner les Cloches de la Ville.

And because it is said, that in Mines vnder-ground valiant actions of Armes are [illegible] formed; it was made knowne, that if there were any man, that would [illegible] Armes; he should come to doe it. Whereupon, Lewes Iuuenall des Vrsins, [illegible] of the said Lord of Barbazan, that he would giue him leaue to make proofe of his [illegible] which was granted to him; but hee must finde a partie to coape withall, and it was [illegible] a very worthy Gentleman of England. The houre was appointed, and Torches and Lights [illegible] there readily prepared. And they fought each against the other a large halfe-[illegible] space, and neither of them escaped, without expence of his blood, till by them which [illegible] the Guards, they were retreated. And there was not any houre in the day, but stout deeds [illegible] of Armes were acted in the Mine. Among the rest, Raymond de Lore, who was a [illegible] liant Esquire, vndertooke to fight two against two, and accepted (as his Second) the [illegible] Lewes des Vrsins. And they fought against two Englishmen, brauely and valiantly, [illegible] had the honor, and yet could not one take another: because there was a great Spar or Beame [illegible] uerthwart the Mine, reaching so high as to the Breast; and it was prohibited, that they should not passe either aboue, or beneath it.

The King of England and the Duke of Bourgongne made many Knights and great Lords, that carried themselues valiantly in actions of Armes, and they had bin Knighted in the Mine. And Trompets were sounded, and other Musicks in their Siedges, making great delight and ioy.

The Lord of Barbazan said likewise, that he would make some Knights, and sent for the said Lewes des Vrsines, and Giles d'Escheuiller (Bayliffe of Chartres) and hee made them Knights, causing it to be done with the sounding of Trompets, and ringing the Bels of the Citie.

Knights of Besiedgings of Townes or Cities.

Now as concerning the besiedging of Townes and Cities, John Bourdigne, in his Historie of Aniou, vnder the yeare One thousand foure hundred fiftie and two, in the Moneth of Iune, speaking of the Siedge of Fronsac (called in Latine Francicum Castrum, the Founder whereof is made to be our King Charlemaigne. The Chronicle of Bouchard, Monke of Laureshеim, an Abbey of the Order of Saint Benedict, in the Messine Countrey, vnder the yeare Seauen hundred threescore and nine: Rex dom[illegible] Legati, quos miserat, reuerterentur, Castrum iuxta Dornoniam (that is Dordogne) [illegible] nomine, Francicum ædificet) hath written, that at the same Siedge were made Knights Peter des Barres, and John de la Haye, with many other valiant Squires, that had there performed faire deedes of Armes. All our French Historians are full of Examples concerning these Knights of Battailes, Mines vnder-ground, and hot Siedges.

Knights of the Embrace or Accollade.

The last are those of the Embrace and Accollade, which the King vouchsafeth and giueth to ennoble them. Such as are of best aduise among them, doe take their Letters of Nobilitie, and of their Knighthood coniointly together, for otherwise they are put to double expences; whereof we say at Paris, as a common Prouerbe, and by way of mockerie. Il en ha belles Lettres sans les Seaux: He hath goodly Letters, but without their Seales. And here you may behold the forme of them.

LEwes by the Grace of God, King of France and of Nauarre. To all present and to come, Greeting. We make knowne, that desiring by the Example, and in the Imitation of the Kings our Predecessours, to acknowledge by titles and degrees of Honour, such of our Subiects as deserue for their faithfull Seruices, which heretofore haue bin made knowne to vs, by Letters Patents of the Kings our fore-goers, for the ennobling of N. bearing date in the yeare One thousand sixe hundred and seauenteene, and for the causes therein contained, whereby is permitted to him, and his posteritie, begotten and borne in loyall Marriage, to beare such Armes, and when it shall seeme good to him, to require and demand the Order of Knighthood. For these causes, and others thereto mouing vs, and to incite more and more our said Beloued and Loyall N. Lord of N. and perticularly for such and such worthy Seruices, as well by him, as such and such his Grandfathers, Father and Vncles, performed in such and such places, and in such yeares. We haue made and Created him a Knight in Colling and Embracing him, as in the like cases hath bin accustommed. And in consequence whereof, we haue giuen and confirmed, doe giue and confirme the title and degree of Knighthood, by these presents signed with our hand. For the said Title and degree of Knighthood, the Rights, Honours, Priuiledges and Preheminences, which are [illegible] the said N. as well in Warre, Court and publique Assembly of our Nobilitie, as in iudgement and otherwise euery where, he shall thinke fit, in the forme, and as hath bin vsed to make vse and enioy the same by as other Knights of the Embracing or Colling, created by our hand, and the Kings our Predecessours.

ceſſours Euen ſo doe we giue in command to our beloued and faithfull [illegible] Officers of our Actournies, Generals of Aydes, [illegible] Stewardſhips, Iudges, or their Lieutenants, and to all our other Iuſtices whom it may appertaine: that the ſaid N. they doe ſuffer and haue each [illegible] anicy and vſe plainly and peaceably the ſaid Rights of Knighthood, Honours Prerogatiues, and Preheminences which are thereto belonging. For ſuch [illegible] And to the end that this may be a matter firme and ſtable for euer, we haue [illegible] ſet our Seale. Reſeruing in all other things our right, and what elſe [illegible] Moneth of Aprill, and yeare of Grace One thouſand ſixe hundred and eight [illegible] Reigne the eight.

Signed De Lomenie.

[illegible] say) hee gaue many Battailes. This Gerard, liuing to be full of yeares, died, and buried at Vezelay, which he had builded and richely endowed.

The old History of Sir Gerard of Rousillon.

He maried Frenanda, Daughter to the Duke of Aquitane Gaulfier, or Walfaire, hom King Pepin ouercame: And by her he had three sonnes, Sampson whom Char- maigne affected, making him Duke of Bourgongne, Counte of Autun and Rousillion, (if we may credite the Romancers, against the trueth of Historie) hee died at Ren- nes, and his body was carried into the Great Church of Arles, and enterred in the Cloister, among the auncient Kinge of Bourgongne.

Ranulph Duke of Aquitaine.

The second sonne was Ranulphe, whom the said Charlemaigne made Duke and Go-uernour of Aquitaine, a Prouince which till then, had beene commaunded by her owne Kings, and was soone after (vntill such time as Eubles, Counte of Poicton, had the said Aquitaine) in title of a Duchie proprietarie, and pattimoniall.

The third Brother to Sampson, and Sonne of the said Gerard, was Albane, to whom Charlemaigne gaue the Counte of Poicton, in title of fauour and benefit, but not in property: for in his time, such benefits were not giuen but for certaine yeares, and (at the most) for life, according to the qualitie of the services receiued.

The beginning of the Counts of Poicton.

And at such time as Charlemaigne caused to bee buried, the bodies of them slaine at Roncevaux, in the Abbey of Sordre, neere to the Towne of Argis in Gascoigne, and at the foote of the Pyrenean mountaines: in the Letters for foundation of the said Abbey, made by Charlemaigne, the forenamed Ranulphe and Albane Bretheren, were presented, and Charlemaigne called them brothers of his good kinseman Sampson. Of the last of these two brethren, are issued and descended the Counties of Poicton.

Banner belonging to the countrey of Aquitaine, whereof he had the charge. And same Banner was borne by the first Counte of Angoulesme, Sirnamed Taille-Fer.

The Banner of Austrasia.

The other Banner which the sayd William the deuoute carried, was that of his owne
Stocke and Linage: differing (neuertheless) from them of the Auncient house Austrasia, and of Bourgongne. Because that of Austrasia was De Bandes d'Or et

And concerning the first Kings of Bourgongne, vanquished by the sonnes of Clouis, they bare La Banniere D'Argent A La Giure Tortillee De Synople, A la Gueule Beante De

Of Clotilda: So it is the easier knowne, that the Armes of Clotilda, Wife to King Clouis, are bad lye emblazoned on the first Portall of Saint Geneniefe du Mon vt à Paris, which are D'Or & d'Azur: whereas they rather should be D'Argent à la Giure de Symple. That first Kings of Bourgongne, hauing conquered that part from the Gaules; which (to this very day) retaineth the name of Bourgongne, the higher and lower, and seeing the Banner of the Gaules, was D'Azur au Lyon remptant d'Or; they added to their Armes a spoyle or prey, that is to say the skin of a Lyon, which supplyed the blanke place of their Armes. And such bare Vernaire Maior of the Pallace of Austrasia, and Senatour of Bourgongne, both the one and other in deuise, but not in Armes.

The higher & lower Bourgongne.

CHAP. II.

Of the first Dukes of Bourgongne.

Robert the strong, Marquesse and Count of Anjou.

VNder the Reigne of Lotharius the Emperour, eldest Sonne to Lewes the Debonnaire, was made Duke & Gouernour of Bourgongne Thierry, his Cousin Germaine, Sonne to Robert the Strong, Marquesse and Count of Aniou, as wee haue formerly said elsewhere.

Within a while after, Charles the Bauld, King of France, and Emperour, made King of Bourgongne Bozon, Count of Ardenne, a Kingdome which the Descendants of the said Bozon enioyed sometime, euen vntill one named Raoull, became the vtter spoyle thereof. For the higher Bourgongne was vsurped by the Empire. Berard of Saxony possessed himselfe of Sauoy: Gignes the Fat, of Daulphine, and one Hugues made his seizure on Prouence; the Descendants of Thierry retaining still the Dutchy of Bourgongne.

Berard of Saxony.

The said Thierry had espoused the Daughter of Theodoricke (eldest Son of Sampson, the first Duke of Bourgongne.) And of this marriage were borne Richard and Gilbert, who tooke the Sirname and the Armes of Bourgongne, Bande D'Or & d'Azur de Six pieces A la Bordure de Gueules.

Of Richard the Iusticer.

Richard, called the Iusticer, or the Iust Duke of Bourgongne, married Othina, Daughter to a King of England, of whom was borne Raoull or Rodolph, Duke of Bourgongne, and King of France, after Eudes and Robert his Paternall Cousins.

Gisleberta, Sister to the Emperour Otho.

Gilbert of Bourgongne, Brother to Richard, in like manner held the said Dutchy. Hee had to Wife Gisleberta, Sister to the Emperour Otho, first of that name, and to Gerberga, Wife to Lewes beyond the Seas, King of France. And of this Marriage there issued but one Daughter named Berthaire, Dutchesse of Bourgongne, married to Otho, Brother to the King Hugh Capet.

Otho and Berthaire seeing themselues to be without Issue; adopted for their Son Henry, Brother to the said Otho, and to Hugh Capet.

Gerberga, Countesse of Dijon.

The same Henry tooke to Wife Gerberga, Countesse of Dijon, Widdow to the Count of Mascon (descended of the Linage of Theodoricke, Sonne to Sampson of Bourgongne) named Richard, by whom he had a Sonne named Otho-Guillaume, adopted likewise by the said Henry and Gerberga, who had no Children at all. So that he was Duke of Bourgongne, and lyeth buried in the Abbey of Saint Benigne, at Dijon.

By the death of this Otho-Guillaume, deceasing without issue: Robert the deuout King of France, gaue the Dutchy of Bourgongne to the second of his Sonnes, Monsieur Henry of France. Who being crowned King of France, after the death of his Father Robert: gaue (in way of Appennage) the Dutchie of Bourgongne to his Brother Monsieur Robert of France.

Monsieur Robert of France.

Hee, to shew himselfe conformable to the Lords of the Countrey, tooke the Banner and Armes of Sampson the first Duke of Bourgongne. Now you shall see the Family and Descent of the said Monsieur Robert of France.

CHAP. III.

Of such as were second Dukes of Bourgongne; but of the House of France.

MOnsieur Robert of France, Duke of Bourgongne, tearmed the Aged, because he had liued a long & goodly time, had to wife Amegarda; and in this marriage were borne two Sonnes.

Henry, And

Hugh of Bourgongne.

Henry dyed in the life time of his Father, leauing two Sonnes,

Hugh, And

Eudes of Bourgongne.

1. Hugh, Eldest Son of Henry, succeeded in the Dutchy of Bourgongne, after the death of Monsieur Robert of France, his Grandfather, dying in the yeare, 1075. buried at Semur in l'Auxois. The said Hugh dyed without Issue by his Wife Yolanda, in the yeare, 1097. And was buried at Clugny, where he became a Monke, after the decease of his Wife and made profession thereof in his latest sickenesse. And by his death

2. Eudes (first of the name) his Brother, inherited the Dutchy of Bourgongne, he founded the Abbey of the Cisteaux Friers, in the yeare 1098. and dyed in the Voyage of Ierusalem, the yeare of Grace, 1102. He left behind him two Sonnes

Henry of Bourgongne.

4. Hugh, Second of that name, received the Dutchy of Bourgongne, of Duke Eudes his Father, at his going in the Voyage to the Holy-land, and held it till his decease (happening in the yeare of Grace 1133.) of the Duchesse Mahauld his Wife. He likewise left two Sonnes

Eudes, And

Alexander of Bourgongne.

5. Eudes, Second of the name, Duke of Bourgongne, deceased in the yeare of Grace, 1164. leauing by Mary his Wife one only Sonne

6. Hugh, Third of the name, Duke of Bourgongne, who had two Wiues. The first whereof was Alix of Lorraine, and by her he had two Sonnes.

Eudes, And

Alexander of Bourgongne.

The other Wife was Beatrix, Daughter to the Daulphine of Viennois, Count of Henry, by whom he had not Issue. Hee made two Voyages to Ierusalem, the first in the yeare 1165. and at his then returning, hee founded the holy Chappell at Dijon. And in the yeare 79. hee gaue the County of Langres to the Bishop of the said place Gaultier, being his Vncle; with the consent of Henry Count de Bar, who pretended some Title thereto. At his second Voyage ouer the Seas, when King Philip Augustus tooke the strong City of Acres from the Sultane Saladine, the said Hugh the Third dyed in the yeare 1192. the eight day of August. His body was brought thence, and buried at the Cisteaux. And by his death succeeded in the Duchy of Bourgongne his Eldest Sonne

7. Eudes, Third of the name, who had 2. wiues. The first was daughter to Thibault, the great Count of Blois, & in this marriage was born one Son, named John (who died in his Fathers life time, without Children) and 3. Daughters.

Mary, wife to the Count de la Marche.

Mahauld, Wife to Raoull King of Germany; & these 2. daughters left no Issue.

The Third was Alix, married to the Lord of Chalon, Seigneur John Brichemell; & in this mariage were born many children, among whom was John de Chalon, Bishop of Langres, & Hugh de Chalon, Father to John de Chalon, Lord of Arlay.

The other wife of Duke Eudes the third was Alix de Vergy. He died in the yeare 1218. and was enterd at the Cisteaux. By his second wife he had one only Son.

8. Hugh, Fourth of the name, Duke of Bourgongne. He acquitted the County of Chalon by exchange, to John Count of Bourgongne, & of Chalon his Kinsman, the Son of Stephen, Count of Bourgogne, Lord of Salins. His Mother & he founded the Iacobines at Dijon, in the yeare 1230.

The said Hugh had two wiues. The first was Yolande of Dreux, and of her hee begot three Sonnes & two Daughters.

Hugh,

John, And

Robert of Bourgongne.

The Daughters were

Alix, wife to Henry Duke of Brabant, &

Mary, wife to Guy, Viscount of Limoges.

The second wife of the said Hugh the fourth, was Beatrix; by whom he had one Son and foure Daughters.

Hugh of Bourgongne, Lord of Avalon, Chanaghes, Montreal, Montbar, and other Seigneuries in Bourgongne, which his Father left him.

The Daughters were.

Beatrix, wife to Hugh le Brun, Counte de la Marche, and of Angoulesme.

Isabell, wife to Peter of Brabant.

Margaret, wife to Iohn de Chalon Counte of Burgongne, Lord of Salins. And Ioane, who became a Nunne.

The said Hugh the Fourth died in the yeare 1273. and was buried at the Cisteaux. His two eldest Sonnes of the first Bed, Hugh and Iohn, deceased before himselfe, both of them leauing no issue but Daughters. For.

Hugh by his Wife Mahauld, eldest Daughter to Archambauld of Bourbon the yonger, Countesse of Neuers, d'Auxerre, and of Tonnerre, had foure daughters.

Yoland, Countesse of Neuers, who was maried twise, First to Monsieur Trist and de France, Sonne to the King S. Lewes, dying at Thunis (without issue) with the King his Father. In second mariage she had Robert of Flanders, Eldest Sonne to Guye, Counte of Flanders.

Margaret, Countesse of Tonnerre, Lady of Montmirall in Perche; Second wife to Monsieur Charles de France (Brother of S. Lewes) King of Scicilie.

Alix, Countesse of Auxerre, Lady of Saint Aignan in Berry; Wife to Iohn de Chalon, Lord of Roche-fort in Bourgongne: And the fourth daughter was.

Ioane or Iane of Bourgongne, deceassing very young.

Iohn of Bourgongne, Second Sonne to Hugh the Fourth, had to wife Agnes, Second Daughter to Archambauld of Bourbon the younger. Shee had as her partage or diuident, the Seigneurie of Bourbon; and of this mariage was borne a daughter onely, Beatrix of Bourgongne, Lady of Bourbon, sole heire to her Father and Mother; and maried to Monsieur Robert of France; Counte of Clermount in Beauoisis, Sonne of the King S. Lewes. And of this mariage is issued the Royall house of Bourbon, which hath succeeded to the Crowne of France, the most Illustrous of all Christendome.

Hugh the Fourth, by his Testament left the Duchie of Burgongne, to his third Sonne 9. Robert, Second of the name, which Duchie was confirmed to him by the King S. Lewes, against all the pretences of the Counte of Flanders, Second Husband of Yoland of Bourgongne, Eldest daughter to Hugh of Bourgongne the Eldest sonne of Hugh the Fourth. Of which second mariage proceeded diuers children, which were excluded from the said Duchie, becausse being borne and descended of Daughters, they are (by the Law of the Kingdome) excluded from inheritances.

The said Robert Duke of Bourgongne tooke to wife Madame Agnes of France daughter to the King S. Lewes: And of this Mariage issued many Children namely fiue Sonnes, and foure Daughters. The Sonnes were

Hugh,

Eudes,

Robert, Count of Tonnerre, dying without any issue.

Iohn, And

Lewes of Burgongne, deceasing also without Children. The daughters were Margaret of Bourgongne, first wife to Lewes Hutin, Tenth of the name, King of France, and of Nauarre first of the name.

Ioane, wife to Phillip de Valois, Sixt and last of this name, King of France.

Blanche, Wife of Edward, Eldest Son to the Counte of Sauoy: and an other Blanche, wife to N. Counte de Bar.

The said Robert the Second deceased the yeare of Grace, 1309. After whom succeeded in the Duchie of Bourgongne his Eldest Sonne 10. Hugh, fift of the name, who dying without Children the yeare 1315 (and buried at the Cisteaux) left for Successour in the Duchie of Bourgongne, his Brother

11. Eudes, Fourth of the name. He had to wife Madame Ioane or Iane of France Eldest daughter to Phillip le Long, fift of the name, King of France & Nauarre, by right whereof, the said Eudes the Fourth, was Counte Palatine of Bourgongne and of Artois.

Of this Mariage was borne two Sonnes

Philip, And

Iohn of Bourgongne.

The said Eudes was Founder of the Conuent of the Chartreuse Monkes in the Towne of Beaune, the yeare of Grace 1332. and died in the yeare 1349. two Sonnes died in his life time, to wit Phillip

Phillip in the yeare 1346. he had espoused Madam Ioane of Bologne, afterward Queene of France in regard of King Iohn her Husband. Of this marriage, the said Phillip of Bourgongne left one Sonne and a Daughter: The Sonne was

12. Phillip of Bourgongne, after the death of his Grandfather Eudes, the fourth, and his Grandmother. So that he was both Duke and Count of Bourgongne, and of Artois. He had to wife Margaret of Flanders, onely Daughter to Lewes, Count of Flanders. He deceased without issue, the fiue and twentieth day of Nouember 1362.

Iohn of Bourgongne, dyed before his Brother, in such manner and fashion, as by the death of the last Duke Phillip, the Duchie of Bourgongne came to Iohn King of France, second of the name, by meanes whereof, the said Duchie of Bourgongne returned to the Crowne of France by right of reuersion, through the defect of a masle childe. And in the person of the said Phillip, ended the first ligne of Princes of the Bloud of France, Dukes of Bourgongne.

CHAP. IIII.

The second and last Ligne of Dukes of Bourgongne, issued of the House of France.

THE last House of Bourgongne (the Subiect of this discourse) tooke beginning in the person of Phillip of France, Sonne of King Iohn and Brother to the Dolphin Charles, after King Iohn his Father, and of Bonne Daughter to the Duke of Bohemia. This Phillip was borne in the yeare 1342. and was Duke of Touraine and Earle of Poictiers. He had to wife Madame Marguerite Daughter to Lewes Count of Flanders, and of Iane Countesse of Rethel. Of this mariage was borne a Daughter onely, Marguerite of Flanders, who was maried to Edward Prince of Wales, Sonne to King Edward the third of England, and died without issue. The said Phillip died in the yeare 1375. and was buried at the Abbay of Royaumont.

Iohn Duke of Berry, Earle of Poictiers, Counte of Auuergne, and of Montpensier, Lord of Mehun sur Yeure, and of Concressault, Sonne of King Iohn and Brother to the Dolphin Charles, after King Iohn his Father, and of Bonne Daughter to the Duke of Bohemia. He had to wife Madame Ioane Daughter to the Counte of Auuergne and Boulogne, and of Ioane Countesse of Auuergne and Boulogne. Of this mariage was borne a Daughter onely, Marie of Berry, who was maried to Iames of Bourbon, Counte of Ponthieu, Sonne of Peter Duke of Bourbon, and of Isabell of Valois. The said Iohn Duke of Berry died in the yeare 1416. and was buried at the Abbay of Bourges.

Phillip of France, Sonne of King Iohn and Brother to the Dolphin Charles, after King Iohn his Father, and of Bonne Daughter to the Duke of Bohemia. He had to wife Madame Marguerite Daughter to the Counte of Auuergne and Boulogne, and of Ioane Countesse of Auuergne and Boulogne. Of this mariage was borne a Daughter onely, Ioane of Bourbon, who was maried to Charles Dolphin of Viennois, Sonne of Guyes Dolphin of Viennois, and of Beatrix of Hungarie. The said Phillip died in the yeare 1397. and was buried at the Abbay of Royaumont.

Phillip of France, Sonne of King Iohn and Brother to the Dolphin Charles, after King Iohn his Father, and of Bonne Daughter to the Duke of Bohemia. He had to wife Madame Marie Daughter to the Duke of Bourbon, and of Anne Countesse of Auuergne. Of this mariage was borne a Daughter onely, Bonne of Berry, who was maried to Iohn Earle of Armignac, Sonne of Bernard Earle of Armignac, and of Beatrix of Bourbon. The said Phillip died in the yeare 1424. and was buried at the Abbay of Royaumont.

Phillip of France, firnamed the Hardy for his valiancie.

King Charles the fift, was married by his Father, his Grandfather Iohn & Phillip of Valois, to Iane of Bourbon, a beautifull wise Princesse, Daughter to Peter, first of that name, second Duke of Bourbon, in the yeare 1349. Wherein hath appeared the arguing ignorance of Haillan, who (very vnaduisedly) hath written in his History of France, that the said King Charles the fift, preferred the beautie of Iane of Bourbon, before his own perticuler pleasures, or the greatest goods of France, and the Estate, which he encreased and augmented greatly, by accession of the Counties of Flanders, Artois, and the Low Countries, and the course of so many warres, as France was then molested withall, & which it might haue auoided: if the said King Charles the fift, had married the rich Heire of all those Countries Madam Margaret of Flanders, instead of espousing her to his yonger Brother, Phillip the Hardie, as he did the twelfth day of Aprill, An. 1369.

Iane of Bourbon a wise and beautifull Princesse.

Madam Margaret of Flanders, called the Rich Heire.

The very date of these Mariages are sufficient to confute Haillan, and to shew him, that at such time as King Charles the fift was married, the said Margaret, daughter to Lewes de Malines, Count of Flanders, was not as yet borne. And she was no more but eleauen yeares old, when she remained Widdow to Phillip the last Duke of Bourgongne, he deceasing at the age of foureteene yeares, at Rounray neere Dijon, the moneth and yeare before obserued. Also, the said Margaret continued a Widdow eight yeares, and vntill the yeare 1369. the twelfth day of Aprill, when King Charles the fift caused her marriage to his Brother Monsieur Phillip of France, Duke of Bourgongne. And the King, Charles the fift, had espoused Iane of Bourbon, in the yeare 1349.

Phillip the last Duke of Bourgongne.

Now

Charles the second King of Nauarre.

Now after the death of the said Phillip the last Duke of Bourgongne, the King of Nauarre, Charles, second of the name, prepared himselfe by way of opposition, against Iohn King of France, who reunited to his Crowne the said Duchie of Bourgongne: because he pretended, that by the death of the last Duke Phillip, he ought to inherite the said Duchie of Bourgongne, in regard of his Grandmother Margaret of Bourgongne, wife to King Lewes Hutin, Father of Madam Ioane of France, onely Daughter to the said Margaret of Bourgongne, eldest Daughter to Robert, third of that name, Duke of Bourgongne.

The Duchie of Bourgongne a great Fiefe of France.

But the said King of Nauarre was disappointed in his ends and conclusions, by Order of Parlement at Paris; because the Duchie of Bourgongne is an Appennage and great Fiefe of the Crowne of France, whereunto it returneth, through defect of male children, issued and borne in loyall Marriage.

Duke Charles the Warriour.

The same Reuersion was practised after the death of Charles the Warriour, last Duke of Bourgongne, of this last Ligne, deceasing without Heire Masle, hauing left but one Daughter, Mary of Bourgongne, from whom (after the death of her Father) King Lewes the eleauenth, tooke into his power the Duchie of Bourgongne, which hee reunited inseparably to the Crowne of France, conformably to the tearmes of donation of the said Duchie, made to Monsieur Phillip of France, called the Hardie, by King Iohn his Father. Behold here the Teneure of the said Donation.

A Copie of the Kings Letters Patents.

Of

Of the Marriage betweene the said Phillip first Duke of Bourgongne, and Margaret of Flanders, were borne three Sonnes and foure Daughters.

Mary of Bourgongne, wife to Amadis, Duke of Sauoye.

Katharine, Wife to Leopolde of Austria.

Margaret, Married foure times. And Bonna, dying young. The Sons were,

Iohn,

Anthony, Duke of Brabant and of Lemburg: And Phillip Counte of Neuers and of Reuell.

The said Monsieur Phillip of France, died in the Moneth of Aprill, the yeare of Grace one thousand Foure hundred and Foure, he was founder of the Charterhouse at Dijon, and in the Quire thereof is to be seene, the goodly Sepulchre of the said Phillip the hardy, in blacke Marble. His Figure or effigie lyeth in white Marble, hauing on his head the Ducall bonnet of guilded Brasse, holding in his right hand a long Staffe, finishing in the forme of a Scepter, of guilded Brasse likewise, and the iust length of his Figure, which is there alone by it selfe. On the sides by his head, are two Angels of white Marble, bearing the armes of Bourgongne. About the Tombe is a mourning of white Marble, containing the Figures of diuers personages, the very best carued and shaped, of all the Tombes that euer I haue seene. The Duchesse his wife was enterred at the Isle in Flanders, in the Church of Saint Peter, neere to her Father; for she furnished her husband about the space of a yeare, and died in the Citty of Arras, the chiefest in the Counte of Artois, the Moneth of March, One thousand foure huundred and fiue, After his Phillip succeeded his Eldest Sonne.

2. Iohn, Second Duke of Bourgongne, surnamed the Bad. He had to wife Margaret of Bauaria, daughter to Albert of Bauaria, and Sister to William of Bauaria, Counte of Henault, and of Holland. And of this marriage issued one Sonne, and three Daughters, namely Margaret of Bourgongne, Wife in first Nuptialles to Monsieur Lewes of France, Duke of Guienne, and afterward Daulphine, Second sonne to King Charles the sixt. Shee was remaried to the Counte of Richmond, Arthur of Bretaigne, Constable of France. The said Margaret was buried in the Carmes at Paris.

Katherine, Wife to Phillip of Orleans, Counte de Vertus in Champaigne; sonne to Monsieur Lewes of France, Duke of Orleans, whom this Iohn of Bourgongne caused to be murdred at Paris, at the Porte Barbette, as we haue already related.

Mary, Wife to Adolphe, Duke of Cleues.

Isabell, Wife to the Counte of Ponthieure. They of this house, Portent de Bretaigne Escarlela d'Azur a trois Gerbes de Bled liees D'Or.

Anne, Wife to the Duke of Bedford, of whom the Tombe is to bee seene in the Celestines at Paris, neere to the Chappell of Orleans: And Agnes of Bourgongne, wife to Charles Duke of Bourbon.

And like as this Iohn of Bourgongne, had caused by the blowes of Axes, the Duke of Orleans his Cousine, to be mercilesly massacred, and his braines dispersed on the ground: his owne were dealte withall in the same manner, and his body cut with Axes, on the Bridge of Montereau, or Fourche yonne, on Sunday the tenth of September, 1419. at fiue of the clocke in the euening. Long while after, his body was caried to the Charterhouse neere Dijon, and laid in a vaulte before his Father; where yet is the Skelleton and head of this Duke to be seene, with the markes and cutts of the Axes. Aboue this vaulte is a Tombe of blacke Marble, like vnto that of his Fathers, on the Table whereof in white Alablaster, lieth the figures of the said Iohn of Bourgongne, and Margaret of Bauaria his wife. At the head of her portraiture, is (answerable to that of her husband) an Angell, bearing an Escutcheon of Armes, parted with Bourgongne on the right side, and Bauaria on the other. Which is *Lozange d'Argent et d'Azur en Bandes, Escartele de Haynau, qui est d'*Or *au Lyon de Sable, contrescartele d'*Or au Lyon de Gueules. Their only Sonne, sole Authour of these rich Tombes, was Bloud reuenged with blood in one and the same manner.

3. Phillip, Second of the name, Third Duke of Bourgongne, surnamed the good by his owne people (for hee was the scourge, and the most cruell enemy of France; leauing as heire of his goods, and malicious rancour, Charles, called the Warriour, last Duke of Bourgongne, capitall enemy thereto.)

The good Duke of Bourgongne Phillip so called by his owne people.

This

This Phillip had three wiues. The first whereof was Madam Michaele of France Daughter to King Charles the Sixt.

The second was Bonna of Artois, widdow to Phillip of Bourgongne, Counte of Neuers and Retheil: But by these two Princesses he had no children.

And therefore in his third Marriage, he espoused Madam Isabell of Portugall Daughter to the King of Portugall Dom Iohn, first of the Name, Bastard of Dom Pedro King of Portugall, and of Madame Thereza Gallega. This is the same Dom Pedro, who vsurped the kingdome of Portugall, against the King of Castille Dom Iohn, first of the name, and Madam Beatrix of Portugall his wife, and lawfull heire to Dom Ferdinand, King of Portugall, Legitimate sonne to Dom Pedro, first of the name.

The Lady Phillip of Lancaster.

This Dom Iohn of Portugall, tooke to wife an English Princesse, named Phillip of Lancaster, by whom he had a plenteous issue, and among other, Dom Pedro Duke of Coimbre, who had to wife Madam Isabell of Aragon, of whom he begate sixe Children: the second whereof was Dom Iohn of Portugall, who espoused the last legitimate Queene of Cyprus, according as we haue said elsewhere. This Iohn stiled himselfe Prince of Antioche, in the Table of the Knights of Bourgongne.

Isabell of Portugall, Third wife to Phillip Second Duke of Bourgongne, was brought in to Flanders by her Brother Dom Henry of Portugall, Duke of Viseo. At her receiuing into the City of Bruges, there was a famous sound of Trumpets, being an hundred, sixty and foure seuerall Trumpets: a number very difficultly seene, at one time together, in the Courte of any other Prince. The Nuptialles were celebrated with all Magnificence in the said Citty of Bruges, the ninth day of Ianuary, one Thousand foure hundred twentie nine.

A famous sound of Trumpets the like seldome seene.

Phillip of Bourgongne so dearely affected this third wife, as he made a vow, neuer to haue any other: howbeit, hee was greatly subiect to short stockings (which we vse in our common language, to tearme fittes of Amourous nature) and vsually to couet after change; which caused this Dutchesse to bee very suspitious of keeping his oathe. Yee neuertheless, in fauour of her, he tooke for his deuise these few words; I will haue none other so long as I liue. A deuice which hee caused to bee carued and painted on all his Buildings, Glasse windowes, Tapistries, and moueables of houshold whatsoeuer. For yet is to be seene on the cupborde in the great hatule at Dijon (wholly worme-eaten) the very same deuise; which is more amply to be obserued in many other places, hauing these words expressed at large: I will haue none other all my life time but Dame Isabell. Which is also to bee seene on the Coapes and vestiments of his order, in the Holy chappell, and in the Charter house at Dijon.

Of this last marriage issued three Sonnes, as namely,

Anthony, borne at Bruxelles, the last day of September, one thousand foure hundred and thirty.

Iosses, borne in the City of Gaunte, the fourteenth day of Aprill, one thousand foure hundred thirty two. And these two children died in their young yeares.

Charles, borne at Dijon, on the morrow after S. Martines day in winter, one thousand foure hundred thirty three. And at his Baptizing was stiled Counte of Charalois.

The said Phillip the second died in the City of Bruges, the sixt day of Iuly, in the yeare of grace, one thousand foure hundred sixty seauen, And his body was carried to the Charter-house at Dijon, where he lieth with his three wiues, in a great Sepulchree of blacke Marble, without any figures thereon, or mourning about, it not being finished. So that on sollemne Feast dayes, the Monkes couer the said tombe with a great hearse-cloth of gold, frindged round about; with the armes of the said Duke. After whom succeeded

4. Charles the fourth and last Duke of Bourgongne, sirnamed the Warriour, who had three wiues. The first whereof was Madam Katherine of France, daughter to King Charles the seauenth, called the victorious; whom hee espoused, being (as yet) but ten yeares olde, in the Towne of Saint Omer, in the yeare one thousand foure hundred thirty nine, And died at Bruxelles (where she was buried) Anno. one thousand foure hundred fourty sixe, without any issue.

The second was Isabell of Bourbon, daughter to Charles (first of the name) Duke of Bourbon, and of Agnes of Bourgongne. This marriage was sollemnized at the Isle in Flanders, on All-Saints day in the yeare of Grace 1454. And of this marriage was borne their onely Daughter Mary of Bourgongne, wife to Maximillian of Austria, King of the Romans.

The third wife (and by whom he had no issue) was Madam Margaret of England, Sister to the King of England, Edward, fourth of the name.

Madam Margaret of England.

The said Charles, last Duke of Bourgongne, was slaine at the siedge of Nancy in Lorraine, on Sunday, being the Euen to the Feast of the Kings 1466. Hee was enterred in the Church of S. George at Nancy; but afterward, at the request of Charles the fift, Emperour; deliuered by the Duke of Lorraine, and transported into the great Church of Luxembourg.

Foure Dukes of the last branch of Bourgongne.

In this manner, this last branch of Bourgongne, had but foure Dukes; Phillip, Iohn, Phillip the second, and Charles, whose portraicts (after the life) are to be seene in many places of this Realme, and namely in the great Glasse-Window of S. Iohn at Dijon, and in the great Haule of the Cisteaux Abbey, where the Dukes are garmented and attired, according to the manner of the Presidents, with their Bonnets in the Parlements of France, which they tearme Cotanes, with great Hoods and Cloakes of Scarlet, furred with Ermines. Each of these Dukes had his perticuler Motto or Deuise written by him: Phillip the Hardy, Moult me tarde: Iohn the Bad, Ie le tiens: Phillip the Good, L'ay Empris: and Charles the Warriour, Ainsi ie frappe.

The manner of the auncient Worthies beards.

The body of Charles, being knowne after the day of fight, was carried to the Church, where the Duke of Lorraine Rener, hauing a Beard of Gold, according to the manner of the Auncient Worthies; caused Holy Water to be sprinkled on him: To very good purpose, thus speaketh Paradine in his History.

Longest expectations conuerted to vexations.

It is a very remarkeable meditation, concerning the death of this great Prince, and the Order of the Golden-Fleece, instituted in this House of Bourgongne, how (ordenarily) it commeth to passe: that such things as we couet with most feruour; yea, seeke and pursue with our greatest dilligence; in the conclusion, the enioying of them, and the pleasure we take in them, bringeth vs much more damage and losse, then all the contentment we conceiued in them. This famous House of Bourgongne, that might haue walked equall with the very greatest Princes of Christendome: fell in an instant, hauing continued no longer then an hundred and seauen yeares in all. Phillip the second was the richest Prince of Christendome; by his inheritable portion, Duke of Bourgongne, by succession, Count of Flanders, Artois and Charolois; Duke of Brabant, and of Luxembourg, by acquisition, Count of Namures; and by treatie with Iacquetta of Bauaria, his Neece, Count of Haynau, Holland, Zeland, Lord of Frizeland, and of other great Lands, from whence he deriued yearely vnspeakeable summes of money, ensuing by the trafficke and vent of Wools and Fleeces, which were fatall to this House of Bourgongne, in the person of Charles the Warriour; who being ouerlightly wedded to the quarrell of the Count of Romont, warred on by the Swizzers, from whom he had taken some Waggons, laden with Sheepes-skinnes; to little or no purpose, he iniuried that Nation, being then obscure, and without any renowne, and from whom he could winne but their extreame pouertie. Yet Charles fighting against them; lost his Riches at Granſſon; his men at Morath; and his life at Nancy, according to this Disticke, made after the Germaine manner.

Wools & Fleeces fatall to the house of Bourgongne.

The Duchie of Bourgongne returning to the Crowne of France.

So the Duchie of Bourgongne returned to the Crowne of France, by the death of this Charles the last Duke, deceasing without any Heire Masle; conforme to the words, expresly set downe in the Donation and Inuestiture of him. And this was the reason, why King Lewes the eleauenth, for the ease of his Subiects of Bourgongne, who (in cases Royall) came to pleade in the Parlement of Paris: established in Bourgongne a Soueraigne Parlement at Dijon, by his Letters Patents, whereof here followeth the tenour.

A Copie of the Kings Letters Patents, for holding a Soueraigne Court of Parlement, at Dijon in Bourgongne.

LEwes, by the Grace of God King of France. To all them to whom these pre-sent Letters shall come: Greeting. So soone, after the decease of our late Cou-sine Charles (in his life time, and not long since Duke of Bourgongne*) our dearest and well affected Subiects, men of the Church, Nobles, and those of the Common estate in our Countrey and Duchie of* Bourgongne*, Countie of* Charolois*, Lands de* Noyers*, and other included in them, comming to vs, as being our owne by the said decease, desiring to remaine, and liue and dye vnder, and in our obedience; haue thereby most liberally, & with extraordinarie good will, rendered and deliuered vp into our hands and obeysance, themselues freely, by acknowledging vs to be their Naturall and Soueraigne Lord; for which cause, we (as in such cases customarily is required) haue deliuered our Oath, to some of our Officers, and especiall Seruants, by vs deputed and sent into those Countries.*

Since when, the three Estates, or Principall persons among them, in good and sufficient number, haue come to vs, most humbly entreating vs, that it might stand with our pleasure (for the good, securitie, safe conduct and maintenance of Iustice, by our authoritie and right in the Countrey, Duchie and Countie, and for the support and ease of our Subiects and dwellers in them:) To ordaine and establish in our said Duchie of Bourgongne*, Countie of* Charolois*, Baronnie of Noyers, and* Lands included within the said Duchie*, A Soueraigne Court, that may be tearmed and stiled, A Court of Parlement, Founded and furnished with Presidents, twelue Councellers, and other Officers, notable persons, conuenient and necessary for the exercise and maintenance of the said Soueraigne Court, and in such number of Councellers, as hath bin at the Parlement of* Beaune*, and that they may name to them* The Great Dayes of the Duchie of Bourgongne. Also, that it may be of such preheminence and authoritie, touching the power of Iudgement and Soueraigne Iurisdiction; as our Court of Parlement sitting at Paris, Wherein the said Great Dayes haue their due course. Moreouer, we are further entreated, that we would maintain the Parlement of Dole*, and of Saint* Laurence*, for the Counties of* Bourgongne*, Auxonne, and other Lands beyond* Saone*, where (from all Antiquitie) they haue euer had a Soueraigne Court, to exercise therein the same forme and manner, as hath bin accustomed in times past.*

We make knowne, that we haue hereon considered, especially, the great affection and desire, which the said three Estates haue shewne by effect, to liue and continue alwayes vnder vs, and in our power and seruice, obedient in all things, as good, true and loyall Subiects. Considering also, that the said Duchie and forenamed Lands, are of great extendure and farre off from our good Citie of Paris, whereto they haue (from all Antiquitie) resorted, for all right of Soueraigntie. Whereby, our Subiects, dwelling in the said Duchie and adiacent Countries, shall be ouer-much trauailed and hindered, by repairing hither, there to seeke for purchase, send for, and procure the prouisions and remedies in this last helpe and power of Soueraigntie.

For these Causes, and other serious considerations vs mouing thereunto: wee haue of our especiall grace, full power and royall authoritie, by these presents created, instituted, ordained and established in the said Duchie and forenamed adiacent Countries, A Court and Iurisdiction Soueraigne, to be there hence-forward held, and alwayes called, named or stiled, A Parlement and Soueraigne Court, hauing all right of Power and Soueraigntie in the said place for the said Great dayes. And herewith we haue ordained, that the said Parlements of Dole*, and of Saint* Laurence*, shall henceforth be maintained as Soueraigne, according as heretofore they haue bin from all antiquitie, and the said Parlements are to be held, according to the manner declared in our other Letters Patents, formerly granted to the said Estates. And our will is, that all causes of Appeales, and whereof the Court and Soueraigne Iurisdiction may and ought to take knowledge in the last Resort, and otherwise, which haue bin moued and suscitated, betweene our Subiects and habitants in the said Countrey, Duchie, Countie and Lands adiacent: shall be there ded-* led, determined and brought to due end, according as in other Soueraigne Courts of our Kingdome: without admitting the Sentences, definitiue decrees, and prolongings, which there shall be giuen and pronounced, to be prouoked, appealled and reclaimed into any other Soueraigne Courte of our Kingdome, for any causes whatsoeuer.

To exhibite the action of the said Iustice and Soueraigne Iurisdiction, and for maintaying and supporting the Preheminences, Prerogatiues, Authority and Right Royall of Vs and the said Court: Wee haue Ordained, and doe Ordaine, by these presents, that henceforward there shall bee in the said Court with our President, two Knights, twelue Councellours in Our accustomed manner, two Aduocates, and one Proctour or Atturney to the high Iusticer, and one Pregnotarie or chiefe Register in eche of the said Parlements, and fiue Ordenarie Vshers, appointed in chiefe Office, who shall make vp the body as well in especiall, as being members of the said Soueraigne Courte, and such & such stipends, as by our other Letters Patents for them are taxed and ordained. To whom also we haue giuen, and hereby giue power to exercise in the same Courte, and elsewhere throughout the limits of the said Countrey, Duchie and County, all actions, executions and exploites of Soueraigne Iurisdiction.

And becaus defect of cleare expression, and ample declaration to the Countrey and limits, (not vnderstanding their reporte to the said Parlement) may mooue an occasion hereafter day by day, of many losses, debates and controuersies among our Subiects, as well of our said Duchie and County, as other Countreyes of our Kingdome, neighbouring and bordering on the said Duchie of Bourgongne: Wee haue willed and Ordained, Doe will and Ordaine, as already is declared, that all our said Countreyes, Duchie and Countie of Bourgongne, Countie of Charolois, Lands of Noyers, and other Countries and Territories, which at the death of our late Cousine Charles of Bourgongne, resorted to the Great Dayes of Beaune and Saint Laurence, and all our other Subiects and Inhabitants in them, shall appeare directly by Appeale (or otherwise) in our said Court of Parlement, for Bourgongne, and not elsewhere.

We also will and Commaund by these presents, our Louing and faithfull Councellours, such as are of our Courte of Parliament at Paris, the Gouernours of our said Countries and Duchie, and all other our Iustices and Officers, or their Lieutenants present or to come, and euery one of them: that our instant Creation, Institution and Establishment, with all contained in these present Letters, be entertained and kept, cause to be maintained and kept from point to point, according to their forme and tenure. Causing also these presents to be published, entertained and Registred in our Courts of Audience and other Iurisdictions (if need be) to the end, that no excuse or ignorance may be pretended, for such is our especiall will and pleasure.

In witnesse whereof, we haue affixed our Seale to these presents. Giuen in our Citty of Arras, the Eighteenth day of March, in the yeare of Grace, One Thousand Foure hund sixty fiue, And of Our Reigne the Sixteenth. So signed by the King; Monsieur the Cardinall of Bourbon; the Counte of Beauieu; the Counte of Marle, Marshall of Bourgongne, and others present.

The Institution of the Order of the Golden-Fleece: The number of the Chapters, and Knights thereof.

CHAP. V.

POets haue feigned, that Phrixus and Helle, the Sonne and Daughter to Athamas, King of Thebes, to auoid the daunger of death; exposed themselues to passe the Sea of Pontus, being mounted on a Ramme. They say also, that the maid Helle, Sister to Phrixus, being fearefull; fell into the waues, and that (of her) the Sea was named the Helle-spont, now the Straite of Galipolis, or Saint Georges Arme, on the Shoares whereof, are the two Castelles

He was Son to Eolus, and maried Nephrles. &c.

How the Hellespont came to be so named.

A famous Poet in the time of Orpheus.

ſtles of Seſtos and Abydos, renowmed in their Poeticall fictions, by reaſon of the clandeſtine loue of Hero and Leander, whom the Poet Muſeus hath named The bright ſhining Starres of theſe two auncient Townes (which make the Separation of Europe and Aſia) and are at this day, two Bulwarkes of the Turkiſh Empire, and of Conſtantinople. Moreouer, Phrixus being preſerued from death in this dangerous paſſage, the Ramme (for his good ſeruice) was enriched with a Golden Fleece, and Sonne to Aeſon by Polymela.

tranſported into the Prouince of Cholcos, where it was carefully kept, vntill the Voyage of the Argonautes Paladines, conducted thither by their worthy Captaine Iaſon.

The reaſon of chuſing the Fleece for the Order.

This Fable ſerued as a Subiect (ſo ſay diuers Hiſtorians) to Duke Phillip of Bourgongne, to Inſtitute the Order of the Golden Fleece, in memorie of the great reuenues which hee raiſed by trafficque and merchandiſing of Woolles with the Low-Countries, full of excellent paſtures, for the breede and nouriſhing of Beaſts bearing Woll.

A Couch, ſuch as Ladies lye on.

Others ſay, that the ſaid Duke Phillip, keeping (very priuately) a Lady of Bruges, endued with beauty beyond all compare, entering one Morning into her Chamber: hee founde vpon her Toilet, a Fleece of the Low-Countries, whereby this vnadviſed Lady, gaue occaſion of laughter, to diuers Gentlemen attending on the ſaid Duke. He, to cloude and couer the miſtery, ſollemnly vowed: that ſuch as made a mockery of the Wolly Fleece, ſhould neuer haue the Honour, to weare a Collar of an Order of the Fleece, which hee intended to eſtabliſh, for the loue of that Lady.

A Third and the likeliest reation.

Yet there is an other oppinion (of more apparance then both the reſt) that this Duke, altogether couetous and deſirous of honour: inſtituted this Order, in memory of valiant Gedeon, who with three hundred men, fought againſt an infinite Army of the Madianites, and deliuered the people of Iſrael. Heere you may read the Letters Patents of this inſtitution.

Phillip, by the Grace of God, Duke of Bourgongne, Lothreic, Brabant and Lemborg, Count of Artois, Palatine of Bourgongne and of Namure, Marqueſſe of the Holy Empire, And Lord of Salines and Malines, maketh knowne to all preſent and to come. That for the Great and perfect loue, which we beare to the Noble Eſtate of Knighthood, the honour whereof we intend to aduance and encreaſe: in regard, that by the order of Knighthood, the true Catholique Faith, the eſtate of our Mother the Holy Church, the eaſe and tranquility of the publique good, may be defended and maintained: To the praiſe of our Lord, and in Honour of our Lord Saint Andrew our Patrone, Apoſtle and Martyr of Ieſus Chriſt our Sauiour, for promoting the Holy Faith, ſeruice of the Catholique Church, and exhorting all men to liue well and Vertuouſly. The tenth day of the moneth of Ianuary, And in the yeare of Grace, or of our Lord, One thouſand foure hundred twenty nine, Which was the day of ſollemne Mariage, betweene vs and our moſt deare Spouſe, Iſabell of Portugall, in our City of Bruges; where we haue ordained, receiued, created; we ordaine, receiue and create, the Order and Brotherhood of Knights in a certaine number, whom we will haue to be called and named Of the Golden Fleece, vnder ſuch forme, condition, Statutes and manner as heere followeth.

The Statutes and Charters of the Order.

IN the firſt place, we will that there ſhall be Thirty Knights, all Gentlemen of name and Armes, without any touch or reprehenſion: of which number our ſelfe will bee the Chiefe, during our life, and our Succeſſors after vs.

The Articles of this Ordenaunce, doe amount to Foureſcore and fourteene: which we paſſe ouer in ſilence, to bee imprinted and further knowne.

He created foure Officers of the Order, namely the Chauncellor, Treaſorer, Atturney, and King of Armes, tearmed and named Golden Fleece.

The Great Coller of the ſaid Order, is compoſed of double Fuſilles, enterwouen with Stones and Flints, ſparckling flames of fire; at the end whereof hangeth (on the breſt) a Fleece, wholly of Gold, enammelled according to Arte. Theſe Fuſilles are ioyned two and two together, repreſenting, as if they were double Letters of B. which ſignifieth Bourgongne, intermingled with Flint ſtones, to noate the Armes of the Auncient Kings of Bourgongne, of the Noble blood of France. The ſe Flints are engirt with ſparkes and flames of fire, which is the deuice of the ſaid Duke of Bourgongne: and the ſoule or ſpeaker for all, Ante Ferit, Quam Flamma Micet, ſo with Paradine in his Heroicall deuiſes. The great Cloakes or Mantles, had the hoodes of the ſame embrodery of Gould. In the Church of Paris on the day of All Saints, are to be ſeene the Ornaments on the High Altar, as alſo the Coapes and veſtiments, giuen by the worthy Cardinall of Gondy deceaſſed.

2. Coſimo de Madicis, Duke of Florence.
3. Albert, Duke of Bauaria. And
4. Emmanuell Philebert, Duke of Sauoye.

Phillip, Second of the name, King of Spayne, after that Charles the Fifte his Father, had giuen ouer his Eſtates and Seigneuries to him, that hee might retreate himſelfe to liue at reſt in Spayne: Hee helde the Firſt Chapter of his Order in the Citty of Antwerpe, Anno.

Anno One thousand fiue hundred fiftie foure, where were choſen nineteene Knights, the moſt apparant of them being theſe Princes:

1. Henry, Duke of Brunzwicke.
2. Ferdinand, Archduke of Auſtria.
3. Charles, Infant of Spaine, Sonne to the ſaid King Phillip the ſecond, who held his ſecond Chapter in the Citie of Gaunt, Anno One thouſand fiue hundred fiftie nine, where were made many Knights, the principall being theſe.

1. The moſt Chriſtian King of France, Frances, ſecond of the name: And
2. Guibard de Medicis, Duke of Florence.

After the death of the Emperour Charles the fift his Father, happening in Spaine, at the Monaſtery of the Hieronymites of S. Iuſtus de la Vera de Placentia, in the moneth of September, One thouſand fiue hundred fiftie eight, the ſaid Phillip of Spaine returned out of Flanders to Caſtille, where he remained all his life time in peace and quietneſſe, euen till his deceaſe, happening in the moneth of September, One thouſand fiue hundred ninetie eight. We will let paſſe vnder ſilence, the other Chapters of the ſaid Order, and the names and qualities of ſuch as were honored therewith, by the ſaid King Phillip the ſecond, and his onely Sonne Phillip the third, now reigning, Chiefe and Soueraigne Great Maiſter thereof, to whom appertaineth onely the giuing of the ſaid Order. Whereof hath amply written, Iames Meiera Elemmingus, Paradine in his Hiſtory of Bourgongne. S. Iulian, on the ſame Hiſtorie; the Sequanois Memories of Meſſire Iohn Golut, imprinted at Bezanſon; the old Romant of the Golden Fleece, imprinted in two Volumes, of the old impreſſion, and Meſſire Oliuer de la Marche, in his Hiſtory of Flanders.

The returne of Phillip of Spaine out of Flanders to Caſtille.

Phillip, the Inſtitutour of this Order, appointed, that the Knights thereof, at three dayes of the ſollemnitie (S. Andrew being Patron thereof) ſhould weare three different habites. The firſt day Scarlet, to let them thereby vnderſtand, that heauen cannot be obtained, but by effuſion of Blood and Martyrdome. The ſecond day Black, repreſenting griefe and mourning for the dead. The third and laſt habite was of white Damaske, in ſigne of the Soules puritie, as euery Knight ought to be carefull of, in all the actions of his life and behauiour. The Emperour Charles the fift, willed and ordained, that the Knights of the ſaid Order, at ſolemne Feaſts, and when the Chapters were held, ſhould weare their long Caſſockes of Cloath of Siluer, vnder the Cloake of Crimoſine Veluet, and the Mantellet or Chapperon of Violet Veluet, and ouer them the Great Coller of Gold: For on other dayes, they vſed to weare but a Ribband, and light Crimoſine Taffataes, with the honor of the Golden Fleece.

The three Habits worne by the Knights, & their ſignification.

The Knights, at receiuing the ſaid Order, make Oath & ſolemne promiſe, before the ſoueraigne Head and great Maiſter thereof; to be faithfull to him, towards all, & againſt all, without any exception, and to maintaine the Statues thereof. And hauing thus ſworne, the Soueraigne kiſſeth them, and putting the Collars about their necks, ſaith: In the name of the Father, the Sonne and Holy Ghoſt.

The Oath taken by the Knights.

Of the marriage betweene Phillip of Bourgongne, and Iſabel of Portugal, three Sonnes were borne. Anthony, borne at Bruxelles nine months after the marriage, the laſt day of September, One thouſand foure hundred and thirtie. And Ioſſe, borne at Gaunt, the foureteenth day of Aprill, One thouſand foure hundred thirtie two. Theſe two Princes dyed in their infancie: but the third and laſt, named Charles, was borne at Dijon, on the morrow after Saint Martins day in winter, One thouſand foure hundred thirtie three. His Godfather that gaue him his name, was Charles of Bourgongne, Count of Neuers, and with him the Lord of Croy, Minſon and Fauourite to Duke Phillip. This yong Prince Charles, had the title of Count of Charlois by his Father, as he himſelfe had it, by Duke Iohn his Father.

The iſſue of Phillip and his wife.

Prince Charles Count of Charlois.

Paradine writeth in his Hiſtory of Bourgongne, that the Knights of the Fleece elected this yong Prince from his birth, to be of their Brotherhood, and of the Order celebrated that yeare in the holy Chappell of Dyon: where (ſaith he) were ſeene the Tables, Titles, Armes and Blazons of the ſaid Knights, on the Chaires in the Quire of the Church, as yet to this day they are. But Paradine is miſtaken in the latter of theſe two opinions.

For, concerning the Count of Charolois, at an age ſo tender, to be ranckt among Knights, knights, as formerly is ſaid: he neuertheleſſe being vncapable, to receiue the Order of Knighthood, an act moſt ſolemne, that any Gentleman can receiue in his life time, and for the expences whereof, his Subiects are takable. It is ſuch an honor, as cannot be conferred, but on a perſon capable of iudgement and reaſon, to receiue his creation, and vnderſtand the tearmes of the Oath, which he muſt make to the Soueraigne of the Order, a point moſt importing the Title of Knighthood, and namely in France. For there, at all times, the Nobility kept the Oath of Fidelity made to their Prince, as no perill of life could enforce the infringing. Otherwiſe, it was ſuch an opprobrious ſhame and ſcandall, as all the water in the world would not ſuffice to waſh off. So are we enſtructed by Saint Bernard, in his two hundred and fineteenth Epiſtle. Probro Incitur apud Francigenas iuramentum ſoluere. Rideo (ſaith he, writing to foure Biſhops of the Court of Rome, for defence of King Lewes the longer, ſeauenth of the name) an excuſare aliquatenus eum poſſit. Ira, ætas, Maieſtas; Maieſty, Anger, Age, no, nor the King himſelfe hath any power, to diſpence with the Vaſſaile or Subiect, for the Oath which he hath made to his Lord.

Obiections againſt the opinion of Paradine.

As touching the opinion of Paradine, about the Armes which are in the holy Chappell at Dyon; there is not any likelihood, that they were placed there, the yeare when the Count of Charolois was borne; becauſe it was not the ſame yeare, when the Dukes of Orleans and Alanſon, Princes of the Blood of France, were made Knights of the ſame Order, and whoſe Armes are to be ſeene in the ſaid Quire. Which was in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred and forty, at the Chapter for the ſaid Order held at Saint Omer, according as before hath bin obſerued. It was for in the Chapter held at Dijon; neuertheleſſe, in the body of the ſaid holy Chappell, there are the Eſcutcheons of foure & twenty Knights, who (happily) might be ſome of thoſe Knights that were at Dyon, at the birth of Charles Count of Charolois. Thoſe Shields or Eſcutcheons are (for the moſt part) ruined, and pearched ſo high, as nothing can be knowne by them: And all the Chaires of the Quire are filled with Armes, as we haue particularly noated on their places, and will againe mention; after wee haue ſpoken a word or two, concerning the Church where they are.

The Church of the holy Chappell at Dijon, is properly called, The Chappell of Dukes, becauſe it ioyneth to the Pallace of the ſaid Dukes of Bourgongne, where (at this preſent) the Gouernours of the Prouince doe lodge. This Hoſtell is called The Houſe of the King, and at one of the corners, is a great ſquare Tower, called the Tower of Bar: becauſe Rene, Duke of Lorraine and Bar, King of Ieruſalem and Sicile, Count of Prouence, was ſometime there priſoner to Duke Phillip the ſecond (Authour of the Order now in queſtion) who had giuen ſuccour to the Count of Vaudemont, Anthony of Lorraigne, againſt this Duke de Bar, beſiedging Vaudemont, in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred thirty one. Which ſiedge was raiſed by Toulongeon, Marſhall of Bourgongne; who tooke the ſaid Duke priſoner, leading him to Dyon. There he built a Chappell on the right ſide of the Quire of that holy Chappell; in the Glaſſe-windowes whereof, are the Armes of the ſaid de Bar En Eſcange, Compoſees & blazonnees de Six quartiers ou Cantons. The firſt is of Hungaria, Party de Ieruſalem, tierce de Sicilie: theſe three are ſuſtained by Anion, Bar and moderne Lorraine, which is D'Or a la bande de Gueulles chargee de trois Alleryons D'Argent. On the other ſide of the Quire, to the South, is the Chappell of Trimouille, at this preſent, one of the moſt Illuſtrious Houſes of France. In the Glaſſe-windowes of this Chappell, are their Armes repreſented and blazoned D'Or, Au Cheuron de Gueulles, Et trois Aigles d'Azur, portees d'vne grand Aigle: As we ſee the Ducates of Spaine, marqued with the Armes of Ferdinand of Arragon, and Iſabel of Caſtile.

Trimouille one of the moſt famous houſes of France

As for the Founder of this holy Chappell, which we haue already noated before in the ſecond Chapter; the Menologie beareth, that euery yeare, the fift day of May, there is a Seruice duely ſaid for him. Hac die celebratur Anniuerſarium recolendæ memoriæ Domini Hugonis Ducis Burgundiæ preſentis Eccleſiæ fundatoris, in quo ſeruiunt Domini Canonici, prout in feſtis quadruplicibus, & manualiter diſtribuuntur ſex libræ Turonenſes nenses per Grenetarium, & Gubernatorem Cause Ecclesiæ. This distribution is made of money extraordinary, by him who hath the charge to receiue the Wine affected by the Chanons, whom they call the Landlord of the Church.

The Brotherhood of our Ladies Charity.

At Paris, it is a thing knowne to all the world, of the miracle which happened to the holy sacrificing Hoast, in the house of a Iew burned aliue, to be cut and pierced through with stabbes of a Knife, in the same place where is builded the Oratory and the Church Domini Bullientis, belonging to the Brotherhood De la Chevalerie nostre Dame; vulgarly called, Of the Billettes, by a French word corrupted of Latine. Phillip the second gaue the very like Hoast in this Church at Dijon. I did very distinctly obserue the stabbes of the Knife, or where the Knifes point had pierced, stained and vermillion coloured, as if that day they had bin giuen. The Hoast is of meane greatnesse, and the figure represented thereon, is the Sauiour of the world, seated on his Throane, and the Raine-bowe of Heauen vnder his feete, but of admirable whitenesse. This is the Sanctuary and Tutelary assurance, for this Capitall Citie of Bourgongne, as is remarkeable by this Verse, being in the Chappell of the said holy Hoste, ioyning to the Quire on the South-side.

Sanguinis hic guttas Christi de carne fluentes,
Diuso, præsidium Patriæ reuerenter adorat.

It is enchased in a small Circle of Gold, on both sides couered with Christall, locked in a Chest of Siluer guilded, in forme foure square, couered with blew Veluet, and kept in a Tabernacle or Chappell, fast engirt with barres of Brasse. It is shewne to the People on the high Altar, all the first Sundayes of the Moneths, after the Masse for the Order of the Fleece: and on Good-Friday after Tenebres, and the Friday for the foure Seasons of the yeare, after Compline or Euensong. It is carried with great Ceremony from it owne Chappell, to the high Altar, the Cleargy singing interchangeably in sweete Musique Vexilla Regis prodeunt, to the versicle O salutaris Hostia, that Officiant Channon exalting it, and shewing it to the people two seuerall times. Afeerward is sung De profundis for the dead, and in the end the Collect, when the Priest Officiant turneth himselfe to the people, and saith with a loud voice God hath the Soule of the Admirall Chabot, Founder. Amen This is he which founded this Salutation, hauing held great Reuenues in Bourgongne, possessed (at this day) by the Marquesse of Mirebeau, foure miles from Dijon, of his Sirname and Armes. The Admirall is enterred with the Celestines at Paris, in the Chappell of Orleans. The Masses and Canonicall houres for the said Order, which are daily celebrated in the said holy Chappell, betweene the houres of seauen and eight; were founded by the two last Dukes of Bourgongne, at a thousand and fifty pounds Tournois of rent, assigned on the Demeanes of Salins, for the Countie of Bourgongne.

Chabot the famous Admirall of France.

In the same Chappell is a Saint Andrewes head, of Siluer doubly guilded, and in it a bone of the said Apostle, which I haue seene and handled. The house of Bourgongne tooke him for Patron of this Order, because (as the Bourguignons say) in the Church of Saint Victor of Marseilles in Prouence, there is to be seene the Crosse of the said Apostle, whereon he was crucified at Patras in Achaia. But the Crosse is not in such fashion, as ignorant Painters picture it, in forme of a Saultour, like to the Character X of the Greekes.

Saint Victor martyred at Patras in Achaia.

This Apostle, eldest Brother of Saint Peter, went to Preach the holy Gospell to the Scythians, Sogdians, and Æthiopians, in the Prouinces of Greece, and namely in Cappadocia, Galatia, Bithynia, Pontus Euxinus, in Macedonia, and in Achaya: where being arriued in the Citie of Patras, he was apprehended by Ægeas the Proconsul there, for the Emperour Nero, because he Preached Iesus Christ crucified. He was crucified himselfe, and tyed fast about an Oliue-tree, where he continued three dayes without dying, Catechising and confirming new-become Christians, in the Law of Saluation and Life. mber, in the yeare of Grace fourescore and thirteene. Returning againe to the rosse of Saint Andrew, which Painters fashion according to their owne fancies: it holdeth no way with the Motto of Bourgongne, neither is proper to this biect. It is well enough knowne, that the Inuestiture, and taking possession of e auncient Realme of Bourgongne, was done by tradition of the Launce of Saint aurice; and kept carefully by the first Kings of Bourgongne, descended of the Van-

Grosse ignorance in some Painters.

And yet notwithstanding, common ignorance hath so farre preuailed, as to call a aultour, a Bourguignon Crosse, and to represent the Apostle Saint Andrew, bearing a Crosse before him, blazonned for a Saultour in Scotland and Bourgongne. oreouer, it was so authorised for future time, to serue as a noate of obseruation, in the Standards and Ensignes of the Spanyards and Flemings, acknowledged in rance, vnder the name of Bourgongnons. In the treatie at Arras, made betweene ing Charles, seauenth of the name, King of France, called the Victorious, and the id Duke Phillip of Bourgongne, Sirnamed the Good, the One and thirtieth day of eptember, Anno One thousand foure hundred thirty fiue, it is said; That the said ord of Bourgongne, and all his faithfull Subiects, and others, who haue heretofore carried Armes the Ensigne of the said Lord, that is to say, The Crosse of Saint Andrew: ll not be compelled to take other Ensignes, vnder any command, or in any Armie, which ll be in this Realme or without; be it in presence of the Duke, or of his Constables, either hu paye, wages, or otherwise, &c.

Concerning the Armes belonging to Bourgongne.

Wee come now againe to the Armes of the Knights of the Golden Fleece, which this present are to be seene on the Chaires, in the Quire of the Chappell of Dukes Dyon. On the right hand at entring into the said Quire, on the first Chaire, ore highly exalted then any other; is the Table of Armes of the Institution of the rder.

1. Vnder the Helmet is written in Letters of Gold, this Deuise; Autre N'aray; will haue none other. In the midst are the Armes of the Duke, Desquels le premier artier est de Bourgongne, qui est de France sans nombre à la bordure componnee d'Argent, & de Gueulles, escartele de l'Ancienne Bourgongne, qui est Bande d'Or & d'Azur fix pieces à l'Orle de Gueulles; party de Brabant, qui est de Sable au Lyon rempant Or. The third Quarter, party de l'Ancienne Bourgongne, & d'Argent au Lyon rempant de Gueulles, which is of Luxembourg. And the fourth of moderne Bourgongne, boue all of Flanders, which is D'Or au Lyon rempant de Sable. And about the aid Escutcheon is the Order, vnder which in old Letters of Gold, are written these ords: Phillip Duke of Bourgongne and of Brabant: these Armes are on the Frontisiece of this modell Le Mezail est tarre de front (there is none but this there, all the est are simple and beside) & pour Cimier vne double fleur de Lys d'Or sur le Bourrelet, f the Collours of Bourgongne, which are d'Argent & de Gueulles. It hath neither Tenants nor Supporters: And three Chaires there are empty, but on the fourth, on the aid right hand

The Dukes Armes emblazonned.

2. Is the Shield of Arragon. D'Or à quatre Paux de Gueulles; the Mezail turned right; the Bourrelet of the Liueries of Bourgongne (Carnation and White, Componnces à Bourgongne moderne) euen as to all the other. The Creast a little White Crosse, and thereon Vn Dragon yssant d'Or. Beneath and vnder the Shield, as in he other Tables, is written in Letters of Gold after the auncient manner, and like mo the rest: Alphonso, by the Grace of God, King of Arragon, &c. The Order is round bout.

White & Carnation the Liueries of Bourgongne.

3. The third Table, Porte de France au Lambeau d'Argent. Pour Cimier sur le Tymbre vne double Fleur de Lys d'Or. And for the Legend: Charles Duke of Orleans, of Valois and of Millayne. This was the eldest Sonne to Monsieur Lewes of France, Duke of Orleans, murdered by Iohn the Bad, Duke of Bourgongne, as we haue obserued in the precedent Booke.

Iohn the Bad Duke of Bourgongne.

4. The fourth D'Argent à trois Faces de Gueulles, escartele d'Argent à trois Haches de Gueulles. Cimier, vn Vol, that is to say, Deux Aisles d'Argent, chargees d'vne Hache de Gueulles. In the midst vn Leurier de Sable, au Collier de Gueulles, bordé & cloué d'Or. The word, Anthony Lord of Croy, & de Renty.

5. Vaire

Cimier: Vn Leurier yſſant d'Argent au Collier de Gueules, borde & cloue d'Or.* Aboue is written, Anthony de Thoulongeon. And vnderneath the Order: Here lieth the noble and puiſſant Lord Sir Anthony of Thoulongeon, Knight, ſomtime Lord of Fraſne, & de la Bathe, Marſhall, Guardian, Gouernour and Captaine Generall of Bourgongne. Who deceaſed at Dyon on the day of Saint Michael, being the thirtieth of September, in the yeare 1432. God hath his Soule.

Marſhall Guardian, Gouernour, and Captaine Generall of Bourgongne.

Enguerran de Monſtrelet writeth, in the yeare of Grace, 1406. that Monſieur Lewis of France, Duke of Orleans (againſt whom Iohn Duke of Bourgongne quarelled for the Gouernment of the Realme, through the indiſpoſition or diſhability of King Charles the Sixt) gaue the firſt day of the ſaid yeare, as Newyeares gifts to his friends and familiars, Small, new and knagged Staues fairely gilded, which he had taken for his Deuice: And the Legend or Motto thereof was, Ie Lenuis, to make publikely knowne, that hee did and would hold the foreſaid Superiority, and Lord.

Iohn of Bourgongne, being an oppoſite to the Duke of Orleans, tooke a Ioyners plaine for his Deuice, and the Motto theſe two words in Dutch, Hic Houd, which ſignifie in French, * Ie le Tiens. To let the Duke his Nephew know, that his new plaine ſhould euen and make ſmooth his knotted Staues, As meaning, that hee would maintaine himſelfe in his authority, neere to the perſon of the King, and chiefly by power. From thence forward, the ſaid Iohn of Bourgongne (Sirnamed Peter, the Bad obſerued for his Deuice, as well on his Coynes as Enſignes and Banners, two new Staues croſſed as a Saultour, and in the midſt of them a Plaine. His Decall Cloake, on his Tombe at the Charterhouſe neere Dijon, is ordered with the ſame Deuice; which the Archdukes, Counts of Flanders, to this very day haue retained in their monyes of Gold and Siluer.

* I will hold & maintaine it.

The Chronicle of Signieur Iuuenall de Vrſins, ſpeaking of the yeare 1411. ſaith. It ſhall ſuffiſe to kill a notable Burgeſſe in robbing and rifling him, to ſay by any one in way of hatred: Behold an Armaignac. And take the Enſigne of (Iohn) the Duke of Bourgongne, or his Deuice: Which was a Saultour, by them called the Croſſe of Saint Andrew, And one Floure de Luce in the midſt. And there they had written, God ſaue the King, and euery one tooke it to bee ſo, yea, Women and young Children. A little after: And they made knowne to the people, and expreſly wrote to good Cities and Townes: that they would create a new King, and depriue his Children of the Crowne. This was the Originall of the Leagues, which afterward were made in France.

A Saultour called the Croſſe of S. Andrew.

John of Bourgongne was the firſt of all his Predeceſſors(heads of the ſame part)that was Inuenter of Ceſle Croix Bretechee,& paſſee en Sautour. Before that time it was vnknowne in France: as we learne by the ſame Chronicle of Vrſins, in the ſaid yeare 1411. And it is to be aduertiſed,that all things were done in the name of the King, and of Monſieur the Daulphine. But they left the direct white Croſſe, which was the true Enſigne of the King: And tooke the Croſſe of Saint Andrew, and the Deuice of the Duke of Bourgongne, the Saultoure; and ſuch as they called Armaignacks, Portoient la Bande. That is to ſay, wore a white Scarfe, the Liuery of France, as red is of Spayne.

The Order of the Croſſe of Bourgongne.

Of this Deuice of John of Bourgongne his youngeſt Sonne, the Emperour Charles, called the Fift, King of Spaine, made a new Order, named The Order of the Croſſe of Bourgongne, at the Kingdome of Thunis in Affrica: Charles the Fift hauing expulſed thence that famous Rouer or Pyrate Aryadene, Sirnamed Barbaroſſa, and placed in poſſeſſion of his ancient Inheritance, Muley Mulcaſſes. Hee made his entrance at Thunis,on Monday,being S. Mary Magdalens day the two and twentieth of July, An. 1535. At his entrance, the Emperour wore a Coate of Armes of Cloth of Gold, hauing on the breaſt and backe embroydered on Crimſon Silke: The Croſſe of Bourgongne, and the Plaine in the midſt. To preſerue the memory of this entrance, and the victory which hee obtained againſt the Turke and his Pirate; the ſaid Emperour, in acknowledgement of their valour, who had aſſiſted him in a Conqueſt ſo ſignall: inſtituted the ſaid Order of the Croſſe of Bourgongne, and gaue Collars to the principall perſons of his Court,compoſed of two Staues in Saultour,and direct-ly on the b eſt,a Plaine, hauing this word about it: Barbaria.

The Pirate Aryadene or Barbaroſſa.

Kings of Spaine only giue the Order of the Golden Fleece.

Now although the Emperours of Germany are deſcended of Philip, Archduke of Auſtria, Count of Flanders, and of the Low Countries: yet notwithſtanding, they haue not the power and permiſſion, to conferre the Order of the Golden Fleece. The Kings of Spaine declared themſelues to bee chiefe of the ſaid Order, and retained the right ſolely to themſelues, for conferring and granting the ſame.

The King Don Philip the Second,by the Contract of Marriage of the Infanta his Daughter,to the Archduke Albert of Auſtria; howſoeuer in fauour of this Alliance, hee gaue them the Low-Countries: yet it is abſolutely ordered, that the ſaid Arch-Duke cannot take any Title of Chiefe of the ſaid Order,nor can conferre it to any perſon. That honour is reſerued to the Kings of Spaine, and to her ſucceeding Kings.

Within ſome few yeares,a Treaty was made betweene the Emperour Rodolph the Second and laſt deceaſed,and a Lord of Hungaria; among which Articles, this is one. That the Emperour ſhall procure to and with the King of Spaine: ſo that the ſaid Lord may bee made Knight of the Golden Fleece. In acknowledgement whereof,he hath embraced the Emperours part againſt the Turke.

Homages done and rendred to the moſt Chriſtian Kings of France by the Counts of Flanders, of Henault, &c.

THoſe Predeceſſors,which were Counts of Flanders,Henault, Artois,&c. haue euermore beene Liege-men to the Crowne of France: which was continued by the deſcendant Heyres to Mary of Bourgongne,as well in quality of the ſaid Lords Counts,as the Peeres of France.

Baldwine Count of Flanders and Henault,&c.

In the Regiſters of the Court of Parliament, the Homage is yeelded to King Philip Auguſtus, called the Conqueror, Second of the name, by Bauldwine, Count of Flanders, Hainault,&c. In the City of Compeigne, the Moneth of June 1196. In the preſence of William de Champaigne, Cardinall and Archbiſhop of Rhemes; Madame Mary of France, Counteſſe of Champaigne, Siſter to the ſaid King Philip;

Philip; and other Princes and Lords, Peeres of France. According as it written by Rigordus, and William the Bretone in the life of the ſaid Phillip Auguſtus.

Ferrand of Portugall, Succeſſour to the ſaid Baldwine in the Counties before named, by the meanes of his wife: did Homage as a Liege-man to the ſame King Phillip Auguſtus, at Bois de Vincennes, in the moneth of Ianuarie, the yeare of Grace, One Thouſand two hundred and eleuen. As heere you may behold the Tenure.

Ego Ferrandus, Comes Flandriæ et Hannoniæ, Notum facio vniuerſis ad quos hæ preſentes litteræ peruenerint; Quod Ego ſum Homo Ligius Domini mei Illuſtriſſimi Francorum Regis Philippi contra omnes Homines et Fœminas qui poſſunt viuere et mori. Domini Milleſimo Ducenteſimo Vndecimo, Menſe Ianuarij die Quinta.

In the ſame Regiſters of Court, is the ſentence of the Throne of Iuſtice, holde by Lewes Hutin King of France & Nauarre Tenth and Firſt of this name, againſt the Count of Flanders Robert; and he, and his Dutchmen Fauourers and adherers, declared guilty of high treaſon, and for their Fellonie condemned to looſe their liues, and their goods ſeized and confiſcated to the King. This ſentence of Iuſtice, the King then ſitting in his Parlement at Paris, is dated the fourteenth of July, and in the yeare of Grace, One Thouſand three hundred and Thirteene.

The moſt remarkable of all the Homages rendered to our Kings, by the ſaid Count of Flanders; is that of Phillip, Archduke of Auſtria, Sonne to Maximillian, elected King of the Romaines, and Madame Mary of Bourgongne, Father of Charles the Fift, and of Ferdinand, Emperours, Kings of Spaine, Bohemia and Hungaria, in the ſaid Court of Parlement at Paris, where(in caſes Royall) it was Iuſtifiable, that the ſaid Counties of Flanders, Henault, Artois, and others Lands; were their Vaſſailes and Subiects. Heere is the Verball Proceſſe of the ſayd Homage.

The Proceſſe of Homage.

John Amy, Notarie and Secretarie to our Lord the King. Seeing it hath pleaſed the noble and puiſſant Lord Guy de Rochefort, Knight, Lord of Pluuot and of Labergement Lord Chancellor of France, ſo much of his Grace to preferre me, as to ordaine and command the Letters, for receiuing the Homage made to our Lord the King from his hand: By the moſt high and mightie Prince Monſieur Philip, Son to the King of the Romaines, Archduke of Auſtria, Count of Flanders, Artois and Charolois, the fift day of this inſtant moneth of July, 1499. My ſaid Lord the Chancellour being in the Cittie of Arras, and in the Biſhops houſe; ſuch worthy actions and great Ceremonies, as were there then obſerued and done, to the exaltation, honor and benefit of the King, And of his Crowne, deſeruing to liue in perpetuall memorie: I am ſo bold as to ſet downe in writing, concerning what I both heard and ſaw, touching the preſent acte and matter; eſpecially, from the laſt day of Iune now paſt,vntill the fift day of July. And for our entrance into the matter, it is moſt certaine and an vndoubted tracth;

The departure of the Lord Chancellor to goe for Arras.

That my Lord the Chancellor, departed the ſaid laſt day of Iune (after dinner) from the Towne of Dourlens in Picardie, to iourney for the Citty of Arras, where he arriued the ſame day. Being alwayes accompanied with the Lords of Rauenſteine and of Gruture, the Lord Charles de la Vernade, Knight and Lord of the ſame place, as alſo Sir Chriſtopher de Cremona, Councellors and Maiſters of the Requeſts in the Kings Houſe: Meſſire Rioull de Launoy Bayliffe of Amiens; Meſſire Frances d'Eſtain; Hugh de Meghe, Meghe; Amaury de Quinquinille; Nicholas de Foix; Phillip d'Eſtas; Richard Nephew, and Peter de la Vernade, Councellers in Ordinarie, Macè Touſtaene, Atturney Generall to the ſaid Lord in his Great Councell, John Burdelot, Atturney Generall in the Court of Parlement at Paris; Anthony le Viſte, Speaker in the Chancerie of France, Dreux Bude, John de Ville-Breſme, Raoull Guiot, Phillip Maillart, Notaries and Secretaries to our ſaid Lord the King; and my ſelfe.

The Chancellours first entrie at his comming to Arras.

As the Lord Chancellour and all his Companie were riding in god order, within a mile and an halfe of the City of Arras, hauing the Vſher of the Great Councell before him, bearing his Mace openly diſcouered, Armed with the King Armes, and following after the ſaid Vſher the Chafe-wax, ſided by two Kings of Armes to our Lord the King, clothed in their Coates of Armes: as namely, Mon-Ioye, Principall King of Armes of France, and the King of Armes, Normandie: there arriued and came before the ſaid Lord Chancellour, the Biſhop of Cambray, the Lord Thomas de Pleures, Knight Chancellour to the Lord Archduke Monſieur the Count of Naſſau, the Lord of Fiennes, with other, as well Knights as Squires, yet addmitted of Councell to the ſaid Archduke. The Lord Thomas de Pleures preparing to ſalute the Lord Chancellour, came vnto him, ſaying, that the Lords in his company and himſelfe, were ſent from their Lord and Maiſter the Archduke, to tell him: That the Archduke was very ioyfull for his arriuall, and the others Lords which were with him, affirming them all to be moſt hartily welcome. With much other faire and gentle language, euery one in the traine did the like (on behalfe of the Archduke) doing great reuerences and honor to the Lord Chancellour, not any of the Lords fayling in the like. For which kindneſſes, the Lord Chancellour vſed them very honorably, embracing the Lords, euen as if this fauour had bin done to the Archduke himſelfe, perſonally there preſent.

Salutation declared by the Chancellor.

Soone after, they ordered them on either ſide, for their more formall ryding into the Citie, and when the whole Companie was neere entring into the Suburbes: the Lord Chancellour was met by the Lord Archduke, who to receiue and welcome him, had purpoſely come on horſſeback from the Abbey of Saint Vaaſt in the Cittie of Arras, and ridden quite therow the Cittie to ſee him come, and meete him.

The meeting of the Archduke and the Chancellour.

Thus the Lord Archduke, accompanied with a great number, as well Knights of his Order, as Squires, and other Officers of his Houſe, being rancked on either ſide, to make way and giue place to the Lord Chancellour: he was no ſooner come neere, but both the Archduke and they put off their Bonnets, ſhewing themſelues ſubmiſſiuely bare, and he put on his Mule, to be cloſe to the Chancellor. Him he embraced very humbly, being alwayes bare-headed before him, bidding him moſt heartely welcome; ſpeaking further to him in this manner. How fareth my Lord the King? Whereto the Lord Chancellour anſwered; That he was well and in good health, with more ample ſpeeches in honor of his Mueſty. The Archduke gaue gracious welcome to the Lords of Rauſtein and Gruture, ſaluting alſo honourably the Maiſters of the Requeſts, and other Councellers to the King. After many gracious paſſages in ſpeeches, and amiable countenances of the Archduke, to the Chancellour and Rauſtein: he all this while held his hatt in his hand, and would neuer be couered, but when the Lord Chancellour did the like.

The entrance into the Cittie of Arras.

The Archduke and the Chancellour rode on together, to make their entrance into the Cittie, the Chancellour alwayes keeping the right hand; and before them rode the Vſher of the Great Councell, bearing his Mace aloſte and open. The Chafe-waxe carying the Kings Seale on his backe, As it is the cuſtome there, when the Lord Chancellour rideth throw the Kingdome; and the two Kings of Armes in their Order. A thing neuer any other comming betweene the Archduke and the Chancellour. A thing which was well noated and obſerued, as heedfully by the Archdukes people and Officers, as by the common people: whereof there was a mighty aſſembly, both without the Cittie and within, comming purpoſely to ſee this Entrance.

The Chancellours comming to the Kings Lodging.

Still all along (in conference) did the Archduke guide and conduct the Lord Chancellour, being alwayes vncouered to him; except when the Chancellour put on, then did he ſo likewiſe: euen to the entrance of the Cloyſter of the Great Church, the Archduke ſtill ſtriuing to bring the Chancellour to the Biſhops Place (where he alwayes vſed to be lodged) but that he was hindred therin, by the earneſt intreates and importunities of the Chancellour, who ſhewed himſelfe ſufficiently ſatisfied with that which he had then done in honour of the King. Wherupon, in kind language he departed from the Lord Chancellour, returning into the Cittie of Arras, to his owne lodging at Saint Vaaſt, the Chancellour remayning in the Biſhops Houſe, accompanied with the Counte of Naſſau, and other great perſons belonging to the ſaid Lord Archduke. Afterward, the Lords and Gentlemen on either ſide, repaired to ſuch lodgings, were in due order appointed for them.

After diuers entercourſes of courteſie, performed by the ſaid Lords, Thomas de Pleures, the Counte of Naſſau, the Lord of Molembais, and other Officers attending on the Archduke, during Monday, Tueſday, Wedneſday and Thurday following, being the firſt, ſecond, third and fourth of this inſtant moneth July; many treaties paſſed before the Lord Chancellour in his Lodging, for concluding on matters, points and articles propounded by the Kings Atturney Generall, in his Parlement at Paris.

Requeſt made for Reception of the Homage.

And thoſe matters being ended, vpon Thurſday, requeſts was made by the Archdukes Officers to the Lord Chancellour; that he would diſpoſe himſelfe, for receiuing the Homage, which the ſaid Archduke was to performe to the King, in regard of his Peerdome and Counties of Flanders, and likewiſe for the Counties of Artois, Charolus, with other Lands helde by him, belonging to our Lord the King and his Crowne. For the doing whereof, day and houre was to be aſſigned to the Archduke, to the end he might come and Do his Duety.

Appointment for the ſitting of it.

Whereto the Lord Chancellour made anſwere, that the morrow, being Friday, and fitte of the ſaid Moneth; betweene the houres of nine and ten in the morning, he would be ready to receiue it, which day and time was accepted by the Officers to the Archduke.

For this purpoſe, the Lord Chancellour appointed, that the place ſhould be the ſecond Haule of his Lodging, which was hanged with rich Tapeſtrie, and a Stare exalted two or three degrees, and thereon placed A ſumptuous Chaire, couered all ouer with Floures de Luces, wherein himſelfe was to ſit during the reception, and ſuch words as ſhould be deliuered, concerning the Homage that was done.

The Chancellours ſeuerall ſeuts to Lord Thomas de Pleures.

Friday being come, about ten a clocke in the morning, the Lord Chancellour benig in his Chamber, accompanied with Lords, Maiſters of the Requeſts, and other of the Councell before named, as alſo the Bayliffe of Amiens: worde was brought him by Thomas de Pleures, and other Officers, that the Archduke was departed from his Lodging: and comming towards him, to performe the Homage, if he would diſpoſe himſelfe to receiue it. Whereto the Chancellour made anſwere, that So ſoone as his Lordſhould be come into the place appointed for Homage; he would be readie there in perſon.

Officers came two other ſeuerall times, as well Gentlemen of the Chamber, as alſo the Secretaries to the Archduke; ſignifying to the Lord Chancellour; that the Archduke was entred the firſt Haule, which ioyned to the ſecond: And yet the Chancellour would not ſtirre.

At the third time, becauſe the Officers affirmed, that the Archduke was entred the ſecond Haule (as indeed it was true) and likewiſe that the Lord de la Gruture, Robert Framezelles, Chamberlaine to the King, and the Lord of Rauſtein (who had accompanied the Archduke from his Lodging, into the ſecond Haule) came alſo to tell the Chancellour, that the Archduke was in the ſecond Haule, and in the very place appointed for the Homage.

The manner of the Chancellours comming to receiue the Homage.

Then the Lord Chancellour, attired in a rich Roabe of Crimoſine veluet, and his Hat on his head, came from his Chamber, which ioyned to the ſaid Haule, in manner following.

Before him went the Vſher of the Great Councell, bearing his Mace open and aloſte, who with aloude voyce cried and ſaid, ſo ſoone as he was come forth of the Chamber, and entring into the ſecond Haule (becauſe there were aſſembled a great multitude of people, as well Gentlemen and Officers to the Archduke, as others, ſo that hardly a man could turne himſelfe) theſe words three or foure times: On before there, make way and, giue roome. After the ſaid Vſher followed the two Kings of Armes; then came the Lord Chancellour, and after him the Lords of the Requeſts, be-being of the Great Councell, and the Kings Notaries and Secretaries, with whom I my selfe went. And because the Lord Chancellour had appointed me (before his departing from his Chamber) to take such a conuenient place, where I might be present at the Homage, to heare both his owne wordes, the answeres of the Archduke, and what else should be past betweene them, according as his Letters formerly had directed me; I endeauoured my selfe not to faile therein.

The Archduke speaketh words to the Lord Chancellour.

Here is to be obserued, that as the Lord Chancellour approched neare the Chaire, wherein he was to sit, the Lord Archduke, who all this while had attended there his comming: immediately tooke off his Hat, and spake to the Chancellour these words; My Lord, God giue you a good day, in speaking which words, he humbled his head very low. But the Lord Chancellour, without vsing any action of courtesie, or vttering one word, only lifted his hand to his Hatt on his head, touching it, but not otherwise stirring it; sat down in the Chaire. When presently one of the Kings of Armes, according as formerly the Chancellour had directed him, cried three times with a loud voyce; Keepe Silence.

Which being done, the Archduke presented himselfe bare headed before the Lord Chancellour, to doe his Homage, saying. My Lord, I am come hither before you, to performe the Homage which I owe to the King, concerning my Peerdome, and Countries of Flanders, Artois and Charolois, which I holde of My Lord the King, and of his Crowne

He offereth to doe the Homage and to performe it.

Then the Lord Chancellour, sitting so in his Chaire, and couered both with his Hat and hoode, demanded: If he had either Girdle, Dagger, or any other Weapon about him? Whereto the Archduke (Lifting vp his Garment, which was without a Girdle) Answered No. Heereupon the Lord Chancellour Tooke his two hands betweene his owne, and holding them so ioyned, the Lord Archduke began to bow, shewing apparance of falling on his knee. But the Lord Chancellour would not suffer it, but raising him vp with his hands as he held him, he vsed these words to him: your good will is sufficient, and we are pleased. Then the Lord Chancellour proceeded in this manner, holding still the Archdukes hands betweene his owne, and he bare headed, off ring alwayes his knee to the ground. You shall continue a man to your Soueraigne Lord, bearing him Faith and Liege Hommage, in regard of the Peeredome and Counties of Flanders, as also the Counties of Artois, Charolois, and all others Lands which you hold of the King and his Crowne. You shall promise to serue him till death inclusiuely, to and against all that can liue and dye, without reseruing any: To procure his good, and preuent his harme, and to acquit and carry your selfe towards him, as to your Soueraigne Lord and King.

The Lord Chancellour receiueth the Archdukes hands betweene his owne.

The Archduke answereth to the Chancellour.

Whereunto the Archduke answered: By my Faith so I promise, and so I will doe. When he had so spoken, the Chancellour vsed these words. And I receiue you, (the Kings right reserued in other things, and of others in all concerning them.) Then holding forth his cheeke the Lord Chancellour kissed it. Afterward, the Archduke demanded of the Chancellour, Letters for receiuing the said Homage: which he commanded me to make, for his more speedy dispatch.

The Archduke desireth Letters for receiuing the Homage.

Now arose the Chancellour out of the Chaire, and putting off his Hat and Hood, made low reuerence to the Archduke, and vttered these words. My Lord, I perseuered yer-while the Office of a King, by representation of his person. But now I am Guy de Rochefort, your most humble seruant, alwayes ready to doe you any seruice, to the King my Soueraigne Lord and Maister, in whatsoeuer it shall please you to commande me. For which the Lord Archduke thanked him, returning these speeches. I thanke you my Lord Chancellour, & desire you in all my affaires to my Lord the King, that I may haue your helpe and furtherance.

The Chancellour commendeth the Archduke.

Witnesse my Seale manuell set heereunto, the first day of August, An. 1499.

This Liedge Homage was made to King Lewes the Twelfth, to whom was giuen that excellent Elogium and Title of honor; Father of his People. After whom succeeded King Frances the first: who was graced with the stile of The Father of good Letters. At his comming to the Crowne of France, Charles of Spayne, Sonne to the Archduke Phillip of Austria, whose Homage we haue so lately reported, sent as Ambassadour to his Sacred Maiesty, the Counte of Nassau, who (in the name of his Maister) gaue Faith and Liedge Homage, for the Counties of Flanders, Henault, Artois, Charolois, and other Lands held of the Crowne of France, in the yeare One Thousand Fiue Hundred and Fifteene.

CHAP. VII.

Concerning the Prouinces and Seigneuries of the Lowe Countries.

Eyer, and (next to him) Marchant, both Chroniclers, in their Historie of Flanders, composed in the time of Charles the fift, Emperour, to foment and cherish the warres, betweene the two famous Crownes of France & Spayne; would seeme to begin the Low Countries frō the Riuer of Somme, comprehending therein the Counties of Bolongne and Saint Paule, & make them Homageable to the Count of Flanders. And for their better attayning therto, they noate downe, that vnder the yeare Nine Hundred thirtie and one (when our Kings of the Second Ligne leaned towards their declination) that Arnoull, the Great Counte of Flanders, possessed himselfe by force of Armes, of the Cittie of Arras, and the Abbeis of Artois, and afterwarde of the Townes of Bolongne on the Sea, Aire, Doway, Teroanne, and other places beside. And that the Counties of Boulogne and Saint Paule, were then belonging to the Counte of Flanders. Vterque Comitatus, erat in clientelâ Comitum Flandriæ.

Historians opinions concerning the Nether-Lands

But these good Historians should haue turned ouer the Leafe, where is apparantly discerned, that Lotharre King of France, after the death of Arnoull, recouered those vsurped Lands, and inuested therein the eldest of the Sonnes to William Counte of Ponthieu, of the Countie of Boulogne, and the youngest in the Countie of Saint Paule, in Arriere Fiefe to that of Boulogne, and not the Counties of Flanders, nor Artois.

A contradiction of those Historians.

And for manifestation to the Dutche, that (at all times) the Counties of Boulongne, Saint Paule, and other limitrophing Seigneuries, haue bin vnder Homage to the Crowne of France: we will heere insert a sollemne Arrest or decree, giuen in the Generall Parlement, held a Ville-Neufue le Roy, neere to Sens, the yeare of Grace, One Thousand Two Hundred and Nine. in the moneth of Maye, vnder the raigne of Phillip Augustus.

A sufficient proofe for auouching the contrarie.

A decree seruing as a generall Rule, for the Homages of the Duchie of Burgongne, Counties of Neuers, Boulogne, Saint Paule, the Seigneurie of Dompierre, and other greate Fiefs, nakedly arising from the Crowne of France, for their Arriere Fiefs, and dependances of them.

The proportioned allowance of King Lewes the Eight.

France, the Counties of Bologne and Saint Paul, with other Lands, vnder charge of Homage, and they to returne againe to the Crowne, by defect of Heyres Male, borne in loyall Marriage. This Appennage inserted in the Registers of the Court, is dated in the Moneth of Ferbruary, One Thousand, Two Hundred, Twenty Three.

The acknowledgement of Monsieur Philip of Flanders.

The said Monsieur Philip of France in the Moneth of December, One Thousand, Two Hundred, Twenty Sixe, acknowledged to the King Saint Lewes his Nephew; that he held of him and the Crowne, the Fortresses of Mortaign and of Liste-Lonne, and the Homage of the County of Saint Paul, he held that of Bologne (these are the very words of the acknowledgement, inserted in the Court of Parliament Registers) with charge of their returning to the Crowne of France, by the defaylance of Heyres Male. These Counties then are not, nor euer haue beene of the Low-Countries.

The diuision of the Low-Countries of Netherlands.

Which are at this present diuided into Seauenteene Prouinces, whereof some haue made it an Estate and Common-wealth, a part by it selfe. Others of them haue acknowledged their Dukes, and the rest confesse themselues Heyres to Mary of Bourgongne.

The Duchie of Brabant, and her contenance in Townes and Cities.

The first is the Duchie of Brabant, which hath two and twenty Leagues or Miles in length, and twenty in breadth, making Foure Score Miles in Circuit. The principall Cities and Townes are Louuaine, Bruzelles, Antwerpe & Bosle-Duke. And thereon dependeth the Duchie of Arfeet, the Marquisate of Berghes, the Counties of Hoostrate and Megue; The Seigneuries of Breda & Kaueslein; the Duchie of Lemlourg; the Estates of Mastrich & of Valquembourg; the Countie of Dalen, and nineteene Baronies.

Malines.

Malines maketh an Estate by it selfe, not subiect to the Duchie of Brabant: although it be iustly seated in the middest of three principall Townes thereof.

Gueldre.

Gueldres or Gelres, a Duchy sometime inhabited by the Auncient Francs, named Sicambrians, and by the Menapians. This Duchy containeth vnder it, the County of Zutphen: And the principall Townes are Nimegen, Ruremonde, Zutphen and Arnam.

Ouure-Issell.

Depending or belonging thereto is the Estate of Ouure-Issell, Trans-Iselana, seated both beyond, and on this side the Riuer or Flood of Issell. It is diuided into three other Estates; Iland, Drent, and Tuend. Her best Townes are Deuenter, Zuell, Campen, and Vollenhone: but Deuenter is the chiefest of all.

Frizeland.

The Frese or Friezeland hath heretofore carried the title of a Kingdome. This Prouince is diuided into the East part, and the principall Towne is called Linguen seated on the Riuer of Visurgis, and is subiect to the King of Denmarke. The Westerne part is watred with the Riuer of Emis, in Latine Amasis, and Amasius.

Holland.

Holland, tearmed Batauia, and the Inhabitants Batani, is but a Peninsula or halfe Iland, watered by the Rhine and the Meuze, threescore miles in Circuit, and but three houres of ground walke onely in breadth. Her best Cities and Townes are Dordrech, Hardam, Delpht, Leyden (Lugdunum Batauorum, a famous Vniuersity) Gonde, Amsterdam, the best, richest, and most peopled of all. And the Hage, a County in Latine Haga Comitis, which yet is not engirt with Walles.

Vtrecht.

Vtrecht is an Estate apart by it selfe (Vltraiectum) the principall Towne whereof beareth the same name; and it is seperated from that of Holland.

Zeland.

Zeland is likewise an Estate apart, sometime (heretofore) bearing the Title of a County, according as Holland did. Her chiefest Townes are Meidelbourg, and next to it Zierrizee; howbeit more Ancient then the other.

Flanders.

Flanders a County, hath thirty Leagues in length (which are but three dayes iourney of way) and twenty in breadth. Her principall Cities and Townes are at this present, Gaunt, Bruges, Ypre, The Isle, Douay, and Tournay. It hath two Principalities, Gaure, and that of Vsbing: Foure good Portes of the Sea, Newport, the Escluse, Dengueque, or Donkerke and Ostend, made famous in our time, for enduring a besieging of three yeares and an halfe. In this County the Inhabitants speake partly Dutch, and partly French, which they doe tearme Flandre Gallicante.

Artois.

Artois, as wee haue already said, hath for her good Cities and Townes, Arras, Saint Omer, Bethune, Aire and Bapaulme: Therouane and Hesdin, were spoyled in the time time of King Henry the Second, and Charles the Fift Emperour. By the Treaty made at Chasteau Cambresis, betweene King Henry the Second, and Dom Philip the Second, King of Spaine, An. One Thousand, Fiue Hundred, Fifty Eight, it was agreed by the said two Kings, that the Bishops Sea of Therouane (then ruined) should be transferred to Bologne on the Sea for the King; and to Saint Omer for the King of Spayne, which was done by consent of the Archbishop of Rheimes, Metropolitane. And equall diuision to be made of the Rents, on the Table, as well those Episcopall as Capitulary, and of all goods in generall appertaining to the Bishopricke, Church and Chapter of Therouane, with the Rights of Collation and other. Then to Attribute the one moity to the Bishopricke of Bolongne, the Country of the most Christian King: and the other moity to the Bishopricke of S. Omer, for the King Catholique.

Artois.

The people and Inhabitants of Artois, speake the French Language.

Henault.

Hanault, a County inhabited by the Neruians, touching or bordering on the County of Namure, and the Bishopricke of Liege. Her chiefest Townes are Monts, Valenciennes, Quesnoy, Landrecy, Marienbourg and Maubeuge.

Ostreuant.

Betweene Artois and Henault, is the Countrey of Ostreuant, where is the Monastery builded heretofore, by King Charles of France, Sir-named the Bauld. Of this Monastery speaketh Meyer in his Chronicle of Flanders, saying. That Charles the Bald, by his Letters Patents giuen at the Pallace of Crecy, the fift of the Ides of July, Indiction Eleuen, after the Romane account, and the yeare of Grace, Eight Hundred, Three Score and Eighteene, the Eight and Thirtieth yeare of his Reigne, and Second of his Empire: Gaue to the Conuent of the deuout Sisters (where was Abbesse Hermintrude his Daughter, Sister to Iudith, Wife of Bauldwine Bras de Fer) many Lands and Possessions.

The Monastery builded by King Charles the Bauld and his bounty thereto.

Carlus Rex Comobio Hasnonensi sito super Fluuium Scarbum in Comitatu Attrebatensi, pago Ostrebanto, vbi Hermentrudis filia eius, Vxoris ferrei Comitis Soror, Sacris praesidet Virginibus, multa contulit, eorumque bona ac Priuilegia confirmauit. Adiecit eidem Asmundsiper Scaldum, in Ostrobanto Vuerocinium: in Comitatu Tarauanensi Aucia-cum super Fluuium Vuelludam.

Monkes placed in sted of the Sisters or Nunnes.

In place of the Sisters or Nunnes, afterward there were appointed to bee blacke Monkes, and an Abbot. One of them vnder the Reigne of Philip le Bell, King of France and Nauarre, hauing receiued some wrongs from John, Count of Henault, who was very molestuous, in outraging the Monkes of this Abbey of Henault, and more particularly in abasing the Sergeants, which had informed against him confraendly vnder the Kings owne hand. He made his complaint to the Parliament, whereby a Decree (inserted at large in the Registers of the Court) The said John Count of Henault, was condemned to make an honourable amends naked, in his Shirt, with a halter about his necke, to desire pardon of God, and mercy of the King and Iustice, beside other greater amends and reparations. But vpon the earnest prayers and supplications of the said Count, the Halter was changed into Ribands of Silke; but the rest of the Decree remained in full force and vertue; only the place for this honourable amends excepted, which was performed at Saint Quintins.

Count John of Henault his Censure in the Parliament.

Out of the Chronicle of Flanders.

Here you may read what is set downe in the Ancient Chronicle of Flanders. The Abbot of Henault pleaded a long time in Parliament against the Count Iohn of Henault, and at the length, by the large Priuiledges which were giuen him by the Kings of France, who had founded and supported the said Monastery: the Abbot obtained iudgement for his cause, by remaining in the especiall guardance of the Kings; for long time before they had beene Guardians to the place. To the said Monistery and diuers Sergeants of the Kings, the Count of Henault and his people, had offered many outrages and acts of disobedience. Proceeding so farre therein, that King Philip sent Monsieur de Valois his Brother, and a great power of Men to constraine Count Iohn of Henault, to beare himselfe more obediently. And at last it was ordered at Saint Quintins, whither the Count came and made amends according to the Kings will. A note of most worthy obseruation for great Lords that dare rebell against Iustice, and the Officers thereof.

Luxembourg.

Luxembourg, a Duchy (heretofore wonne by Monsieur Lewes of France, Duke of Orleans, and whereof (by power against him) Iohn Duke of Bourgongne possessed him-himselfe, where began the effects of the *Ioyners Plaine, and the mortall hatred which these two Princes bare to each other (as Enguerran de Monstrelet affirmeth to vs) hath three score and ten miles in circuit and compasse, being planted in the Ardenes. The Townes thereof are Luxembourg, Arlon, Audemare, Thionuille (the ordinary abiding of our Kings and Monarches of the Second Ligne, for the Royall sport of hunting, it being called in our Annales Theodonis-Villa, ruined by King Henry the Second) Vireton, Montmedy, Tuoy, Neuf-Chastell, and Danuilliers.

*Before spoken of in his Armes and Deuice.

In this Duchy of Luxembourg (where a very goodly Pyramides is to bee seene) there are Seauen Counties, and the small Towne of Saint Hubert, called the Towne of Contention, in regard it is seated on the Confines and limits of Luxembourg, & likewise of Liege, which hath many times beene the occasion of quarrels & debates, betweene the Inhabitants of these two Prouinces.

Namure.

Betweene the forenamed Liege, Brabant and Henault, is planted the County of Namure, washed with the Riuers of Mosselle, and of the Sambre, the first seate of our ancient French. It containeth foure Townes, as namely these, Namure, Bouuines, Charlemont, and Valencour. In all these Parts the French Language is spoken.

Within the space of thirty or forty yeares, or thereabout, they of Holland, Zeland, and the round neighbouring people, professing the Religion of Luther, Caluine, and others beside (called by some, Disturbers of the Romish Church, and her quietnesse) haue made a Common-wealth a part by themselues, vnder the name of Estates of the vnited Prouinces. Who (by force of Armes) haue freed themselues from subiection and homage to the Kings of Spaine, the Heyres to Mary of Bourgongne, and acknowledge themselues to bee a free people, by the Truce made betweene the King of Spayne Dom Philip the Third, and them: in the City of Antwerpe, the ninth day of April in An. One Thousand, Sixe Hundred and Eight.

THE ORDER OF ENGLAND,

Of the Blew Garter: Instituted in the yeare One thousand three hundred fortie seauen.

The Fift Booke.

CHAP. I.

England, sometime called Albion, and Great Bretaigne, which title it beareth at this present, vnder the famous King Iames, first of the name of England, and of Scotland the sixt: is an auncient Kingdome, wherein by the Lawes and Customes thereof, doe succeede the Females, as well as Masles; as is obserued by the Noble Roman Historian Tacitus, in the life of Iulius Agricola, who wholly made that great Iland subiect to the Roman Empire, as were the Gaules Germanie and Spaine.

This Isle of Albion was peopled (according to common report) by Brute and his followers, they being acknowledged by the name of Bretons, in the yeare of the World two thousand eight hundred and fiftie: And a thousand sixe hundred yeares before the Birth of our Sauiour and Redeemer Iesus Christ.

To this Brute, first Prince thereof, and from whom it receiued the Sirname of Bretaign, was giuen for his Armes: D'Or au Lyon rampant de Gueulles, escartelé d'Azur, à trois Coronnes d'Or mises d Or miſes en Pal. Armes which haue bin oftentimes changed, as we ſhall perceiue in the purſuite of this Diſcourſe.

Peopled by Brute and his followers.

The permiſſion of Conſtantine the Great to the Kings of England.

For the Authors of the Engliſh Hiſtories doe write, that Gurguintus their two and twentieth King, carried for Armes in his Banner D'Azur à trois Coronnes d'Or en Pal without other quartering. And the ſame Hiſtorians write, that Conſtantine the Great Emperour gaue permiſſion to the Kings of England, to beare the Crowne Royall, cloſe and ſimme aboue, after the Imperiall manner, by a perticuler priuiledge of honor; whereas other Kings of thoſe times, had no other then a ſimple Bonnet or Chappeau. But the queſtion is to know, whether the Iſle of England had bin wholly conquered in the time of Conſtantine, & that very long time before, the Romaines did leaue Kings there; rather then in Germany, in Spaine and among the Gaules; conſidering, that whenſoeuer they ſubdued any Prouince vnder their obedience, they vſed to take away the noate of any other power, then their own, ſending ſuch Gouernors thither, as were of their owne naturall Romaine language.

The inſolence of the Romans in their Conqueſt.

We will forbeare to meddle with the reports of thoſe Engliſh Romancers, who before the conqueſt of their Iſle made by the Romaines, vnder the Emperor Seuerus, ſet downe threeſcore and three Kings, ſucceeding after Brute (who was their firſt King) to the time of Lucius, after whoſe death, they write, that the Emperor Seuerus paſſed into Great Bretaigne, with mighty Romaine troupes, poſſeſſing himſelfe thereof, and ended his dayes in the Citie of Yorke, the yeare of Grace two hundred and eleauen.

The Roman Emperour Severus dyed in Yorke.

They make theſe threeſcore & three Kings to ſucceede man by man, without any woman. And yet neuerthe leſſe, it is a caſe conſtant, that the right of this Iſle, Iure gentium Dotis nomine, the Caſtome of the Kingdome admitteth, and receiueth women in their ſucceſſion. We haue the fundamentall Law reported in the life of Iulius Agricola, by Tacitus, deciphering the Cuſtomes of the auncient Bretons, and the ſcituation of their Iſland. Britanni hos atque talibus in ſtinctì Voadicea generis Reggi fœmina (Nec. enim Sexum in Imperijs diſcernunt) ſumpſere vniuerſi bellum. This Voadicea or Vadicea, in thoſe times was Queene of Great Bretaigne, in which Kingdome (euen to this nation both Maſles and Females doe ſucceede; Lancea ad fuſum tranſit.

Sigibert, continuer of the Chronologie of Euſebius, and of S. Hierome, doe ſtruſt vs, that the inhabitants of this Iſland, for the ſpace of almoſt foureſcore yeares, were wholly expoſed to the ſpoyles and rauages of the Scots and Piets. In ſuch ſort, that being forſaken of the Romains ſuccour, by counſell of the Biſhop of London, they went into Bretaigne Armorica from whence their Anceſtours deriued their firſt originall and birth, as we are taught by venerable Bede) whereof was then King, one named Conſtantin, who gaue them his Brother, called Conſtantine, elected King of Great Bretaigne, in the yeare foure hundred and thirteene. He left three Children, the laſt whereof was Vterpendragon, who, as Son and Succeſſour had Arthur, King of Great Bretaigne, ſirnamed The Great.

Conſtantine the Conqueſt, or at leaſt King Arthur.

The ſame Sigibert, in the yeare of Grace foure hundred forty fiue, will haue this this Arthur to reigne in Great Bretaigne, and would haue vs to beleeue, that he was a braue and valiant Prince. But where ſhould he (in thoſe times) conquer thirteene Kingdomes, and performe ſuch admirable actions of Armes, as thoſe fabulous Romancers doe make him the Author of? They make him King of Bretaigne Armorick, which then was gouerned by her owne Princes.

In theſe times (as Sigibert telleth vs) the King of Albion Vortigerne, by aduiſe of the wiſeſt Barons of his Kingdome; aſſembled the moſt excellent Architects throughout the land, to build a Caſtell of Royall ſtructure, to ſerue as his retreate of aſſurance and faſety. But as the workeman (being many) laboured for ſeating the foundation thereof, the earth being vncertaine & quagging; all their paines proued in vaine. Then aduiſe was giuen him, to ſeeke for a man borne without a Father, and to ciment the bones of the Caſtell (which he would haue to be made) with his blood, by which meanes the foundation thereof would be firme and ſtable. A yong man was found, named Merlin, who was brought with his Mother before the King, and there Merlin's Mother confeſſed, that ſhe conceiued him by an Incubus, vnder the phantaſticke forme of a man. Merlin reuealed many hidden things to the King, and which ſhould happen afterward in the ſucceſſe of diuers yeares. He diſcouered alſo to the King, that that vnder the foundation of the Caſtell which he intended to build, there was a Lake, and vnder it a Grotte or Denne, whereto two horrible Dragons reſorted, the one Red, which deſigned the Bretons his Subiects, whoſe Haire and Beards were Red; and the other White, which figured the Anglo-Saxons, dwelling in a Prouince of Saxonie in Germany. By a fight of theſe two Beaſts, which he cauſed to be performed in preſence of the King, the White Dragon had the victory ouer the other; to ſhew thereby, that the White ſkinned Saxons, ſhould one day ouercome this Iſle of Bretaigne, and make themſelues Lords thereof.

Merlins interpretation of the two Dragons fight.

He foretold, that Aurelius Ambroſius ſhould vanquiſh Hengiſtus in a field of battaile; that Vortigerne (to whom he ſpake) ſhould be taken and burned by the Piets; that after his death, this Ambroſius ſhould be King, and haue to his ſucceſſour Vterpendragon his Brother, and both the one and other ſhould be poiſoned. After them ſhould reigne the Beare of Cornewall, Arthur the Great, who ſhould be the ſupport and Protector of the Church. That he ſhould conquer the Weſterne Iſlands in the Ocean Sea; poſſeſſe the Prouinces of the Gaules; and make himſelfe dreadfull to the Romane power, but he ſhould haue a ſad and diſaſtrous end.

Arthur foretold to be a ſupporter of the Church.

He Propheſied mo couer, that the Metropolitane See of London, the Capitall Citie of the Kingdome, ſhould be transferred to that of Canterbury, ſometimes called Dorderma: And that the Archbiſhop of Yorke Saint Sampſon, with ſeauen other Biſhops, ſhould paſſe from Great Bretaigne, into the leſſer, called Armorica. That the Anglo-Saxons being become Maſters of Great Bretaigne, ſhould change the name thereof, and call it Angle-land. Alſo, that the Engliſh ſhould be conquered and ſubdued by the Normans, and many other things he propheſied beſide, yet all the aſſurance thereof he receiued from the ſpirit of lying. Theſe are extracts of fabulous Romancers, who neuer ſpeake a word of truth.

Angle-land, ſo called by the Anglo-Saxons.

Theſe Romancers of England, doe make this Arthur, Author of the Knights of the Round Table. A Table erected in a place of Fayerie-land, by the admirable cunning of the Prophet Aterlin. In my yonger dayes I read thoſe Romances of Merlin, and of the ſaid Round Table: Since when, I haue alſo ſeene a manuſcript Booke, beautified with many figures, wherein likewiſe was repreſented the Prophet Merlin, and his Round Table, with theſe Verſes in French.

Knights of the Round Table founded by King Arthur.

I.

MERLIN, ladis de ſon art & pratique,
Moult bien vſant ſelon l'ancien aage,
Edifia par chef d'œuure authentique,
LA TABLE RONDE en triomphant ouurage,
Et ſe monſtra ſi expert, & ſi ſage
En ſon ſcauoir, que ſon œuure hautaine,
Sans vice aucun eſtoit perfaicte, & pleine
D'honneur exquis, & Royale ornature.
Car de beauté eſtoit reſplendiſſante,
Et des ouuriers dicte en iudicature,
LA TA BLE RONDE en honneur triomphante.

II.

La Table eſtoit d'vn ouurage myſtique,
Bien prattique d'excellent aduentage,
Par Cheualiers en eſtat magnifique
La fit garder, & preſeruer d'outrage,
Qui tous eſtoient remplis de grand courage,
Bien reclamez en ceſte baſſe plaine,
En la gardant ſouffrirent maintes peines,
Pour l'approuuer par raiſon, & droicture,
Sur tout ouurage eſtre la plus plaiſante
Et demourer ſans quelque forfaicture
La TABLE RONDE en honneur triomphante.

III.

Vn Seige eſtoit en ceſte TABLE antique,

Bien

Bien ordonné d'œuure de haut parage,
Que Mesdisans ont iuge fantastique,
Plus dangereux que tempeste ou orage:
Mais tels Menteurs pleins de mauuais langage,
Furent confus, car la place tant saine,
Promise estoit par la Cour Souueraine,
A Galaad sur toute creature, &c.

The Verses thus Englished:

I.

MErlin long since by his great Art and skill,
Well fitted to that graue and auncient Age,
Erected an authentique Maister-piece:
The Table Round, excelling all workes else.
He shewed himselfe so expert and so wise
In depth of knowledge, that his worthy worke
Was perfect without errour, and truely full
Of Honor exquisite, and royall beautie,
Because therein it was resplendishing.
And tearm'd by workemen of greatest iudgement
The Table Round, in Honor triumphant.

Collected out of an ancient French Manuscript Chronicle.

II.

The Table was of Misticke workmanship,
Well practised for excellent aduantage,
By Knights of most magnificent degree;
Who kept it Nobly from scandale and outrage,
For all of them were of highest courage,
Well gouernde in their meanest actions.
To keepe it famous, they endurde great paines,
Approuing alwayes by reason and iustice,
Their deedes to be aboue all common reach,
And so continued without any impeach;
The Table Round in Honor triumphant.

III.

One seate there was at this auncient Table,
Appointed for deedes of highest eminence,
Which detractours iudged to be fantasticke,
More dangerous then rudest stormes and tempest,
But such Lyers full of all ill language were confuted: for that Seate safe and sound,
Was promised by the Court Soueraigne
To Galaad, from any other creature, &c.

Concerning the Incubi and Succubi according to Antonius de Tuderano.

It is a matter vndoubtable and certaine, euen by the interrogatories of Witches and Sorcerers themselues, that in their Sabbats, deuilles are distinguished by Incubi and Succubi. Saint Augustine, the light of the Church, in the three and twentieth Booke, Chapter foure-score and eight of his Cittie of God, and S. Thomas, in his first Tome the three-score and first Question, the third Article, and other more beside, doe hold this commixing of deuils with men and women, for a matter no way to be doubted. The Doctor of Doctors, Saint Hierome, on the sixt Chapter of the Epistle of Saint Paul to the Ephesians, & after him Saint Iustine the Martyr, haue left vs in one word, that which may moue doubt of the mingling of Sathan and his minions, with any of the indifferent sexes. Dæmones seruiunt prauis amoribus: & ex seminibus aliunde sumptis, conuert into Incubes on the behalfe of Sorcerers. But whether of this damnable coition, a reasonable soule may be engendered, or no, the discourse would be too wearisome and tedious. The women of the ancient Gothes, as some some Historians haue obserued, & the Daughters in Turkie haue made proofe. Wherto, without repetition of infinite examples, we may adde the vulgar oppinion, that of a Iewishe Maide, woed by an Incubus, Antechriste should be borne. Thus much hath bin said, varying somewhat from our former purpose.

The Women of the olde Gothes, and Maides of Turkie.

But returning againe to Merlin, he was in those times (as was verily credited) the Prince of Magitians, renowned to all ages after him, for a notable Iugler, Enchaunter and Magitian, and whose fame remained, and liueth yet in request, especially in the Countrey of our Bretaigne, vnder our two Kings Charles the Fifte and Charles the sixt, Father and Sonne. For the Chronicle of the good Duke of Bourbon, Lewes, second of that name (Authour of the Order of the Thistle, obserued before) informeth vs in the three-score and ninthe Chapter, that the Constable of France, Messire Oliuer de Clisson, in name of King Charles the Sixt his maister, defending the County of Pointhieure, against the Duke of Bretaigne; tooke the Towne of Saint Brieu, and the Bishops Castell, belonging to the said place. A House, which was very neere to the Crosse of Malthast, where Merlin wrought his wonders.

Merlin a man made very famous.

In the Chronicle of the Duke of Bourbon Lewes the Second.

The olde Romancers called such men Fayries, as were Magitians and Sorcerers, renowned and famous in their times, and who performed such actions, as exceeded the Order of Nature, and was indeed altogether impossible. As those men, of whom Saxo Grammaticus speaketh in his History of Denmarke, the Archbishops of Vpsala, Primats of Gothia, Ioannes and Olaus Magnus, Vncle and Nephew, in their Historics of the North: And the Spanish Monke Torre-Quemada, in the last Booke of his Hexameron. What this Merlin was, all the Historians of England do speake wonders of him, and either begin or finish (alwayes) their Narrations and serious discourses, with some one or other of his pretended Prophecies.

English Historians speaking of Merlin.

Iannes Leslæus, Bishop of Rosse, in his Scottishe History, Page an Hundred forty one, saith Cæterum Vortigernus Scotorum scelerum Pœnas acerrimas postea luebat: Siquidem Aurelius Ambrosius Constantini Regis filius, eum vxorum Anhaicam Hengisti filiam, & Horos in turrim compulsos Igni subiecto miserrime consumpsit: id quod Merlinus Vates ex Nobili Fœmina (vt dicitur) Ab Incubo susceptus illi prædixerat. The Romancers write, that this pretended Prophet was charmed by his Loouer or faire Friende, and transported into Fayrie-land, the Kingdome of King Oberon, and Vrganda the Vnknowne, where being placed in a Garden of pleasure, he there sleepes, and so still shall sleepe vntill the day of Iudgement. But returne we now to King Arthur.

Merlin his falling in to loue with the Lady of the Lake.

Sigebert, speaking of him, according to the History of England, in his time traduced out of Brittish into Latine, writeth, that he was successour to his Father Vterpendragon, the yeare of Grace foure hundred and seauenty. Mortuo Vterpenaragon Rege, Substituitur in Regno filius eius Arturus, cuius mirabiles actus etiam linguæ personant Popularum, licet plura esse fabulosa videantur.// It is said, that he fought with the Sesnes or Saxons, and subdued them, the Scots and Picts: he conquered Ireland, and made the Kings of the Orcades and of Gothland his vassailes and tributaries. And on further successe, made himselfe Master of Denmarke and Norway, whence he went and skirted in the Gaules, vanquishing in Combate the Gouernours of them for the Romaine Emperours. In such sorte, that by their saying (meere Fables) at Paris he helde his Seate and Throne Royall Nine whole yeares, at the end whereof, he returned againe into great Bretaigne, and after he had long time reigned there, he died in a Battaile, which he had against his Nephewe Monredon, in the yeare fiue hundred Forty two, (the fable of his long age.) That in all his Conquests, hee had the seruice of one Sworde or Courtle-Axe, called Calsbourne; a Launce named Ron; a Head-picce and Creast of fine golde, made in shape of a Dragons throate, and a Shielde, whereon was figured an Image of the Sacred Virgin, so Sigebert telleth vs. And now beholde what Leslæus saith in his Scottish History, Page an hundred fourty fiue, vnder the Reigne of the King of Scotland Eugenius the third.

Arthur held his Royall Throne at Paris for the space of nine yeares.

Concerning the Knights of the Rounde Table.

And see also what the same Authour reporteth, Of the Knights of the round Table, whom he saith to haue seene in his time. Hunc Arthurum Scribunt Quatuor supra Viginti Athletas Equestris Ordinis (quod rei bellicæ gloria præstabant) Insignibus Nobilitasse, ac rei militaris scientia, gloriaque magnitudine pares, pari omnes amore complexum fuisse. Cum omnes simul accumberent, nequis forte se primo in loco constitutum gloriose prædicaret, aut ad infimum locum deturbatum inuide cogitaret, Mensam Rotundam ad Coronæ formam effingendam durauit. Locum in quo omnes accumbere solebant Rotundam Arthuri Tabulam, & Nostrates, & Britanni appellant. Eandem ego mensam (Si Accolæ falsa quadam Maiorum superstitione conflictati, non errent) in Winthonien si Castro, ad æternam rei memoriam solemniter conseruatam, Militumque Equestrium nominibus vndique nota tam, non ita pridem aspexi.

His words of the death of Arthur, & his Queene Guenora.

The same Authour, speaking of the death of the said Arthur, King of Great Britaigne, writeth, that he was slaine by the Scottes and Picts, on the Riuer of Humber in the Battaile which was giuen against him by Eugenius, third King of that name of the Scottes. And that his wife, named Guenora, was fast shut vp in a Tower, in a place called Angusa; where she remained all the rest of her life time, and that there her Sepulture was seene.

How Arthur & his Knights were seated at the Table.

This was deuised by the rare witt and inuention, of the Romancers of this Round Table, to make it equal in sitting for foure and twenty Knights, because when the King banquetted with them (as they say) the Precedency of the Knights was knowne to be in them, which were neerest seated to the person of the King. And concerning the rounde forme of this Table, euery one knoweth, that the Romaines had theirs made halfe rounde, and the rest wholly right as others for seruice, and because those Tables were tearmed by the Greeke Letter Sigma Martiall saith.

Septem Sigma capit, Sex sumus, adde Lupum.

The Tables of the Gaules.

But as for them of the Gaules, they were Rounde, and with diuers corners; as many such like are yet to be seene in Paris, and elsewhere, especially in the Chamber of Accountes at Paris. This is thus obserued by Athenæus, in the Fourth Booke of his Dypnosophists, in the Title De Coena Celtarum.

The Armes of King Arthur.

Diuers Armes are giuen to this Arthur. I haue seene an olde Booke of Blazon limned, which giueth him D'Azur à Treize Coronnes d'Or. Others of Synople, in the first and fourth Quarter Vne Croix d'Argent, la premier Canton charge d'vn Soleil d'Or ayant l'image de la Vierge Marie au Mitan: le Deux & Troisiesme quartiers de Gueules trois Coronnes d'Or mises in Pal.

The olde Coffin of King Arthur found.

Matthew Paris writeth, that in the yeare A thousand one hundred ninety and one the bones of the said Arthur were found at Glasco, enclosed within an olde Coffin neere vnto which were raised two auncient Pyramides, engraued with inscriptions but the Letters were so olde and ill formed, as nothing could bee knowen by them. This Tombe was found, as a ditche or trenche was made, for the enterment of a Religious man; for the earth being raised, they espied an olde Chest, whereon was a Crosse of Lead, with this Epitaphe. Hic iacet inclytus Britonum Rex Arthurus in Insula Analonis Sepultus. The place was sometime wholly enclosed with a M[ound] in the ground, and was named the Isle of Avalon, as much to say, as the Isle of Apples.

After Arthur succeeded Constantius, Aurelius, Caretticus, Ethelbert, who made his abyding at Canterbury. In his time Pope Gregorie sent Orthodox Preachers, to purdge Great Bretaigne of grosse heresies. After Ethelbert reigned successiuely

The Kingdom of Canterbury won by the Saxons.

Cadwan, Athelstane, Echenwald, Sygobert, Ecbert, Lotharius, Ceolrit, Baird, vnder whom the Saxons ouercame the Kingdome of Canterbury, and held it in possession sometime.

Sigibert, with diuers other Historians and Chroniclers doe tell vs, that they of Great Bretaigne were subdued by the Saxons, in the yeare of Grace Foure hundred fourescore and twelue. Others affirme it to bee in the yeare foure hundred foure fourescore and twelue. And others in the yeare Sixe hundred fourescore and six. And that the Englishe

Englishe and Saxons deuided the Isle of Great Bretaigne into Seauen Principalities and Toparchies, each of which were distinguished and knowne by different Armes.

Great Bretaigne deuided into seauen iurisdictions.

The Principall Kingdome was that of the Saxons, otherwise tearmed of the Northumbrers, or Northumbers, to the King whereof the auncient Romancers doe attribute for Armes, D'Azur a la Croix Feurencee d'Or, cantonnee de quatre Merlettes, et vne en pointe de mesme. It is said, that to King Ardulf the same Armes were giuen by King Charlemaigne, reseating him in his Kingdome, according as the Chronicle of Laureshem sheweth, in the yeare Eight hundred and eight. Interea Rex Nordumbrorum de Britannia insula nomine Ardulf, Regno, et Patria pulsus, ad Imperatorem dum adhuc Noniomagi moraretur (that is to Noyon in the Isle of France, or in Picardie, whereas the said Emperour Charlemaigne was exalted King of France) venit et patefacto aduentus sui negotio, Romam proficiscitur, Romaynerad iens, per Legatos Romani Pontificis, et Domini Imperatoris in Regnum suum reducitur. Præerat ea tempestate Ecclesiæ Romanæ Leo Tertius, cuius Legatus ad Britanniam directus est Adolphus Diaconus de ipsa Britannis Saxo. &c.

The principall Kingdome of the Saxons.

Armes giuen by Charlemaigne to King Ardulphe

The same Chronicler, in the yeare Eight hundred and nine. Postquam Ardulphus Rex Nordumbrorum reductus est in Regnum suum, et Legati Imperatoris atque Pontificis reuersi sunt, &c. The Armes giuen by Charlemaigne to the said Ardulphe, were (as is affirmed) conserued by the Kings of England his Successours, euen vntill the Reigne of William the Conquerour, who abolished them, to make his owne Royall Stemme there.

The Saxons, possession of Great Bretaigne.

The English and Saxons issuing out of Germanie, dwelt in the Countreyes of Scandinauia, and part of Saxonie, and of Thuringe, who being possessed of Great Bretaigne, made themselues famous, vnder diuers names according to the Climate, and scituation of the lands by them conquered, where they made their partitions East, West, North and South. And according to the testimony of Mathew Paris, a Monke of the Abbey of Saint Albane in England, the first King of the West-Saxons was named Cerdicius, of whom the descent and Ligne (sometimes allied to the most Illustrious Crowne of France) continued fiue hundred, threescore and eleuen yeares, without interruption (some Kings of Denmarke reserued, who held England) and euen till the death of Edward Sonne to King Etheldred) happening in the yeare of Grace, One thousand, threescore and sixe on the Eeue of the three Kings.

When the Danes were in England.

For the Succession of whom, because hee deceassed without issue, there happened contention, the Barons of England fauouring Harold, a Prince of their Nation. Yet so it followed neuertheless, that William Duke of Normandie, by the assistance of the King of France, Phillip first of that name, made himselfe Lord and Master of England.

The promise of Harold to Duke William of Normandie.

This Harold being cast vpon the Sea coaste of Ponthieu, by a stormie tempest of Winde, as he sayled on the English Seas, was brought to William then Duke of Normandie, and to free himselfe out of his power, hee promised to keepe and perserue for him, the right which he pretended to haue to the Crowne of England, by the deceasse of Edward without issue. And moreouer, was affianced to one of the said Dukes daughters, named Alizon. But seeing himselfe aduanced to the Royaltie, by fauour of the English Barons; he falsified the Oathes made by him, & kept not any one of them.

Honors alter manners.

Now this William was auouched to be a Bastard, by Robert Duke of Normandie, begotten by him in his amourous pursuites, on one named Hellen, daughter to a Groome of the Chamber (of the said Robert) named Foubert, who was the sonne of a Skinner.

The right of Duke William to the Crowne of England.

By two meanes hee had right to the Crowne of England. The first, because his Great Grandfather Richard, Second Duke of Normandie, had giuen his Sister Emma or Emina in mariage to the King of England Ethelred, and of that mariage was issued the said King Edward. Who seeing himselfe without children, and acknowledging the good kindnesses, which hee had receiued in Normandie of the said William, during the time of his banishment from England: He instituted (as his Heire and Successour in the Kingdome) the said Duke William; this we deliuer from the Auncient English Historians.

William receiued from Pope Alexander, an hallowed Banner of the said Dukes Armes, who caried De Gueules a Trois Leopards d'Or, L'un ſur L'autre; And hauing with him a great number of Frenche Noblemen, dwelling in England, as deriued from the greateſt houſes thereof, euen to this very day: tooke Shipping from the Porte of Saint Valery, and landed in England at that of Haſtingues, in the Moneth of Auguſt, Anno One Thouſand Sixty and ſeauen. Neere to which Towne of Haſtingues was the battaile fought, wherein William the Baſtard had the victory, famous by the death of his contrary Harold, ſlaine by the ſhot of an arrow, fighting valiantly in the mideſt of his people. In this manner the Kingdome of England came to the Dukes of Normandie, by the winning of the Battaile, fought on the day of Saint Calixtus Pope, before the Ides of October. And of the Conqueſt of the ſaid Kingdome, William the Baſtard was ſirnamed the Conquerour. This change was preſaged by a great Comet, in memorie whereof this Diſtick was made, as it is reported by Mathew Paris in his Hiſtory of England.

The 20 day of October Duke William came into England, and the Battaile was fought with Harold.

William the Conquerour had to wife Mahauld or Mathilde, daughter to the Count of Flanders, Baudouin de L'Iſle, by whom he had fiue daughters, and foure ſonnes.

Aliſon, affianced to King Harold, who neuer would eſpouſe her, but died vnmaried.

Alix, who had to her husband the Count of Blois Stephen, after whoſe death, ſhe entred into Religion at Marſigny among the Nunnes.

The youngeſt died in her infancie.

His Sonnes were Robert the eldeſt.

Richard; theſe two were borne in Normandie.

William, ſirnamed the Red.

And Henry.

The Genealogie is collected by Matthew Paris.

This Genealogie is thus ſet downe in the Regiſters the Courte, but it is otherwiſe in Mathew Paris, who vnder the yeare One thouſand, Sixty eight, nameth the birth of Henry in England, ſaying that his Elder Sonne William the Red, and Robert the ſecond, were borne in Normandie. And that in the ſaid yeare, Robert his ſecond Sonne, whom he had made Earle of Northumberland, was ſlaine by the people of the ſaid Countrey. And yet notwithſtanding, hee contradicteth himſelfe ſoone after, declaring the Genealogie in theſe tearmes. Ex Regina Mathilda Liberos multos procreauit, Robertum ſicleicet, Ricardum, Willelmum & Henricum: quorum Primogenitus Robertus, ad hæc patre viuente, Normanniam negari molleſte ferens, in Italiam abijt ira ſuccenſus; vt ſibi Bonifacij Marchionis in Vxorem ducta, patri, affinibus adiutus, bellum moueret. Sed hac petitione fruſtratus, Philippum Francorum Regem, contra patrem ſuum excitauit. Quare benedictione et hæreditate paterna orbatus, in Anglia Regnum poſt mortem patris ſui non ſucceſsit, Ducatum Normanniæ autem vix retinuit. And the ſame Author, ſpeaking of the death of the ſaid King of England William the Conquerour, happening at Rouen One Thouſand, Foureſcore and eight, the eight of the Ides of September, ſaith that Normanniam filio ſuo Roberto Anglian, poſſeſſionem maternas, cum theſauris Willelmo Ruffo legauit. By his teſtament he leagued Normandie to Robert his eldeſt Sonne; but in fauour of William the Red, all his Treaſures, goods and poſſeſſions, as alſo the riches of his Mother Queene Mahauld, and the Kingdome of England he left to him.

In this manner William the Red, ſecond of that name, came to the Crowne of England. Robert his Brother, going in the voyage to the Holy land (in imitation of the Frenche Paladines) the yeare of Grace One thouſand foureſcore and ſixteene, Hee pawned the Dutchie of Normandie, for the ſumme of Ten thouſand poundes of Money. The Red hauing reigned Thirteene yeares, was ſlaine with an Arrowe, (ſhot at a Hart ſwiftly purſued) by one of the ordenary attendants on the ſaid King, named Walter Tyrell, of the Kings Chamber, vnwittinly, and not on any pretended purpoſe, on the next next day after Saint Peter ad Vincula, the ſecond of Auguſt, in the ſecular yeare One thouſand, an hundred. His death is notably deſcribed by the Monke Mathew Paris.

By his vnbemoaned death, Henry his Brother, firſt of that name, and laſt of the Sonnes to William the Baſtard, came to enioy the Crowne of England, on the day of our Lady in Auguſt, and the ſame yeere. By his firſt wife Mathilde or Mahauld, daughter to Malcolme King of Scottes, and of Saint Margaret his Queene, hee had a Sonne and a daughter.

Henry Beauclarc firſt King of the name.

The Sonne was William, Duke of Normandie.

The daughter was Mahauld, married in the yeare, One Thouſand, one hundred and nine, to the Emperour Henry, Fift of that name. And Mahauld the Queene of Scottes dying in the yeare One Thouſand one Hundred and Eighteene, the ſaid King Henry, making haſte to a ſecond mariage; in the yeare one thouſand, one hundred, twenty one, tooke to wife Adela, Daughter to Geoffrey, Counte of Louuaine, who left him no children.

The drowning of King Henries children.

The yeare before, William, the eldeſt Sonne to King Henry, was drowned in the Sea, paſſing from Normandie towardes England, with his Brothers and Siſters Baſtardes, and a great number of chiefe Officers of England: ſo that there remained to the ſaid King Henry, but his only daughter Mahauld for heire, and the Emperour Henry her husband being dead, in the yeare, One thouſand, one hundred, twentie ſixe, ſhee returned into England, where ſhe was acknowledged as Queene, after the deceaſſe of her Father. And the yeare following, Foulques Counte of Anion, hauing beene at the voyage of Ieruſalem, eſpouſed there the Eldeſt Daughter of King Baldwine the ſecond, with promiſe to ſucceede him in the Kingdome of Ieruſalem, as he did. So that the Countie of Anion, being lefte remayning to Godfrey, ſirnamed Planta-Geneſt; becauſe he tooke delight in that branch or ſtalke (as is auouched by S. Lewes) the ſaid Widdow Mahauld maried with him: And by this mariage three Sonnes were borne.

Mahauld the Empreſſe maried Godfrey Plantagenet, and their iſſue.

Henry, borne in the yeare One thouſand, one hundred, thirty two.

Geffory, in the yeare One thouſand, one hundred, thirty foure, hee dying without iſſue.

And William, who was Earle of Mortaing by his owne ſtock, and by that of his Wife Comes Varennarum, the only daughter to William the third Earle Warren, who dyed in the voyage beyond the Seas, where he followed King Lewes the younger. We gather all the Genealogies of the famous houſes of France, out of the Regiſters of the Court of Parliament at Paris, where they are inſerted altogether equally.

Now, in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand, one hundred, thirty ſiue, the firſt day of December, died in Normandie the King of England Henry, firſt of that name, who in his life time had receiued the Empreſſe Mahauld his heire and onely daughter, Queene of England, and ducheſſe of Normandie.

The death of King Henry the firſt in France.

Yet it chaunced neuertheleſſe, that Stephen Counte of Bologne, Sonne to Stephen Counte of Bologne (Brother to Thibauld Counte of Blois) and of Adela, fourth daughter of William the Baſtard, firſt King of that name of England (by conſequent Nephewe on the mothers ſide) to deceaſſed Henry the firſt, notwithſtanding their Oath; was receiued by the States of the Kingdome, and crowned King of England at London, two and twenty dayes after the deceaſe of his vnckle. Mahauld being payed with this Coyne. Fore nimis turpe ſi tot Nobiles fœminæ ſubderentur, ſo ſaith Mathew Paris.

Stephen crowned King of England.

The Count of Anion was as ſpeedily in Normandie, as his wife in England, where, in a foughten Battaile, ſhe vanquiſhed King Stephen her Couſine, tooke and led him priſoner on Candlemas day, in the yeare One thouſand, one hundred and forty. But deliuered againe the ſame yeare, in exchange of Counte Robert, Brother to Mahauld the Empreſſe. Ten yeares after, Henry was receiued Duke of Normandie, for which he did Liege Homage to King Lewes, Seauenth of that name.

King Stephen ouercome by Maude the Empreſſe.

In the yeare, One thouſand, one hundred and fifty, died the ſaid Counte of Anion Geoffrey Plantageneſt, in the Caſtell of Loir, the ſeauenth of the Ides of December. The King of France, Seuenth of the name, being returned from his voyage beyond the Seas, was ſeparated from Alianor of Aquitaine his wife, for her impudicity. Guy, Duk of Aquitaine, and Count of Poictou, had by Adelaida of Nauarre (of o. thers named Ermesinda) Daughter to Don Garcia, Sixt of that name, King of Nauarre, two Children, to wit, William and Mary who was Lady of Melle, and of Lusignan in Poictou, of which Seigneuries shee was called Mellusina, and married with Raymond de Crotsic, Count de Foresl in Bretaigne, which is in the Ile de Ruis (sometime called The firme Iland) where is an Abbey which beareth the same name, whereof Peter Abaylard Breton (Founder of that of Paraclet, betweene Noyant on Seyne, and Troyes in Champaigne) was Abbot sometime, and managed it in such sort, as himselfe describeth in his owne life.

Peter Abaylard Founder of the Abbey called Paracletum.

William Duke of Aquitaine the Fourth, and Third Count of Poictou of that name, by his Wife Gisle, Daughter to William Duke of Normandy, had a Sonne (bearing the same name as his Father and Grandfather did) Fift of the name, Duke of Aquitaine, and Fourth Count of Poictou. Who by Ioane, Daughter to a King of Scotland, had two Daughters: Alianor, Wife to King Lewes the Seauenth, called the Deuout, and Peronella, married to the Count of Vermandois Raoull the younger, Sonne to the Elder Sonne of Monsieur Hugues de France, tearmed the Great, Brother to King Philip the First.

This William, at the beginning of his gouerning, was a cruell and vnruly Prince, robbing Churches, and contemning the Ministers of them. But being exhorted by Saint Bernard, Founder of Clerueaux (a Monke of holy life) hee tooke better course, repenting and making satisfaction for his offences; hee went the Voyages of our Lady of Mont-Serrat, Saint Iames in Spayne, and to Ierusalem.

Saint Bernard Founder of Clerueaux.

At his returne from them, after hee had visited the places of deuotion at Rome, hee, and three of his Seruants, withdrew into Toscane, the Territory of Sienna, neere to Chastillon, a place very Desert and solitary (sometime called Stabulum Rhodis, and at this instant Male-Val) where the said William, Founder of the Religious Guillemins, after his owne name (called White Cloakes at Paris) happily departed out of this life, about the yeare of Grace, One Thousand, One Hundred and Forty, but according to some, Fifty Sixe.

The Guillemins founded by this repentant William.

King Lewes the Deuout and Pittifull, being Crossed in the Councell of Vezelay, for the Voyage ouer the Seas; tooke his Wife Queene Alianor in company with him. Shee affecting change, complained among her Houshold People, that shee was married to a Monke: I alledge the words of Mathew Paris, throughout the History of England in his time, and not any other. Shee became enamoured of a Prince of the Sarazens, named Saladine, who was famed to bee a braue and valiant Knight, in the Barriers belonging to the Goddesse of Loue, and Letters hauing flowne from either side (pretending matter of other subiect) an enteruiew was made between the Kings & Christian Princes, with consent of Saladine, at Melande, where hauing seene Queen Alianor at his pleasure, he became so wounded; that the sore (hauing long time festered) gaue further instruction for recuring, and (in time) succeeded to the rest. Nulla tam occlusa fores, quin pateat aditus Feli, & Adultero, so say the Greekes as a common Prouerbe.

Queene Alianor grew enamoured of Saladine.

Saladine burnt vifull in his Tombe 1193 Yeers.

All such Christian Prisoners, as shee desired to haue of the said Prince Saladine, were speedily sent her well cloathed, and without any ransome. These familiarities were the cause, that the King her Husband, and the Christian Princes (there assembled for the good of Christendome) would haue had her made some assignation & rendeuous to the said Saladine, for the surprizing of him by an Ambuscado: which shee would neuer yeeld to doe, but contrariwise, gaue him aduertisement thereof, resoluing to make her selfe banquerout, both of God, her honor and husband, to follow Saladine.

Which caused the said Deuout King to returne home into France, where hee assembled the Prelates and Lords of his Parliament at Baugency on Loire, by whose Decree, hee separated himselfe from his Wife, alleadging the Orders prohibited by the Church, to Contract Marriage, and laying some blame on himselfe, only only to couer the honour of the said Alianor, by whom hee had two Daughters married to two Brothers.

Mary to Henry le Large, Count Palatine of Champaigne, and Brie.

Alix, to Thibauld, Fourth of the name, Count of Blois.

But hee was reproued by his Councell, vpon good and iust cause, in regard hee gaue her liberty, to withdraw freely into her owne Lands, which were of very great extendure, and (by the meanes of this Diuorce) were very vnaduisedly disunited from the Crowne of France. Because in such occurrences he ought (imitating the Kings his Predecessors) to haue limited her to some place of assurance, and there haue giuen her leysure (during the remainder of her life time) to acknowledge her offence.

She married againe with Henry the Sonne to Geoffery of Anion.

Alianor was not long without company: For the yeare after her separation, to wit, the yeare of Grace, One Thousand, One Hundred, Fifty One, shee espoused Henry (Eldest Sonne to Geoffery of Anion, and the Empresse Mathauld of England) Duke of Normandy and Count of Anion, Touraine and Maine, by his owne right, and by the iust Title of the said Alianor his Wife, Duke of Aquitaine, and Count of Poictou; by meanes of which accessions, hee was one of the greatest and most potent Princes in the Kingdome of France. So that in the Yeare, One Thousand, One Hundred, Fifty Two, Henry of Anion crossed from Normandy into England, with a Fleete of two and thirty Shippes, well furnished with good Soldiours and prouision for Warre, where hee began rough encounters against King Stephen, who the same yeare, and on the day of Saint Laurence, lost his Sonne Eustace of Bologne, by a sodaine and vnexpected death.

The death of Eustace, Sonne to King Stephen.

In the yeare Fifty and Three, the Prelates and Barons of England, endeuored to make peace betweene King Stephen and Duke Henry of Anion, vpon these conditions: That the King should adopt, and accept (as his Sonne and Successour) the said Henry of Anion in the Realme of England, yet the King himselfe to enioy his Royall right, all the rest of his life time.

Which being thus agreed on, and the States of England hauing sworn obeysance to Henry, and acknowledging him for their Prince, after the Kings decease: it fortuned that hee liued not long after, because he dyed the yeare following, the eight of the Calends of Nouember. So by his death, Henry of Anion, Second of the name, in the yeare, One Thousand, One Hundred, Fifty Foure, the Sunday before Christmasse, the fourteenth of the Calends of Ianuary, was solemnly crowned King of England at Westminster, by Thibauld Archbishop of Canterbury. This Henry was called Short-Mantle, because hee delighted to goe cloathed in short Garments.

Henry of Anion Surnamed Short-Mantle, crowned King of England.

In the Yeare, One Thousand, One Hundred, Fifty Two, Queene Alianor was deliuered in Childbed of her first Sonne, whom our Histories call Henry, & Mathew Paris William. Eodem Anno natus est Dux Henrico ex Alienore vxore sua Filius, & vocatus est Willielmus, quod proprium nomen est Dux Aquitanorum & Comitibus Andegauensium. But this childe (according to the said Paris) died the yeare an Hundred, Fifty Sixe.

The same Author maketh this Henry, Second Sonne, of whom he appointeth the birth to bee in the yeare an Hundred, Fifty Fiue, & in the City of London the chiefe City of England. Natus est Londonijs pridie Calendas Martij, Henrico nono Anglorum Rege, ex Regina Alienore Filius legitimus, & vocatus est Henricus.

The Conquest of Ireland intended by the King.

In the same yeare, the said second King Henry resolued on the Conquest of Ireland, whereof he demanded the title, and permission to conquer it, of Pope Adrian, paying yearely for euery house, one penny of an hundred, into the Treasury of Saint Peter, which was granted vnto him.

The yeare, One Thousand, One Hundred, Fifty and Seauen, was borne Richard, third Sonne of King Henry & Queene Alianor, in the City of Oxford in England. And the yeare following, the said Alianor lay in of a fourth Sonne, who was named Geoffrey. And the Chancellour of England Thomas Becket, went on the behalfe of the King his Maister, to demand in Marriage Madame Margaret of France, Daughter to King Lewes the younger, and of Queene Constance, Daughter to Alphonso

A Marriage for the young Prince of England Henry.

Alphonso, seauenth King of Castile, for the Prince of England Henry, then aged but three or foure yeares onely, which was granted to him.

King Lewes of France Sirnamed the Lyon.

In the yeare One Thousand, One Hundred, Sixty Two, Queene Alianor was deliuered of a Daughter at Rouen, who had the name of her Mother Alianor, and who in the yeare, One Thousand, One Hundred, Sixty Nine, was Wife to Alphonso, Eight of the name, King of Castile. And of this Marriage was borne, the wife and vertuous Queene Blanche, Wife to King Lewes, Eight of the name (Sirnamed the Lyon, for his inuincible courage, and of Mont-pensier, because that after the taking the City of Auignion from the Albigeois Heretiques, where hee was imprisoned, and returning into France, hee dyed at Montpensier in Auuergne) and of this Marriage was borne the King S. Lewes, and many other children.

Mahauld, or Maud another Daughter married to the Duke of Saxony.

Formerly, this Alianor, Wife to Alphonso King of Castile, had another Daughter named Mahauld (as wee vnderstand by the said Mathew Paris) who was married to the Duke of Saxony Henry, Father to the Emperour Otho, fourth of the name, (of whom we haue spoken in our Second Booke) who, in the right of his Mother contended (but to no purpose or benefit) for the Kingdome of England, after the death of his Vncles, & the murders committed on the persons of Arthur and Alianor of Bretaigne (children to the Prince Geoffrey of Bretaigne) by the meanes and in the right of Constance his Wife, & of Richmond his chiefe claime, by King John without-Land, their Paternall Vncle.

Of this Alliance of Mahauld of England, and Henry Duke of Saxony, Mathew Paris, saith. Anno Dominj, M. C LXV. Reginaldus Colonienſis Archiepiſcopus venit à Weſt-monaſterium ad Regem Henricum, accepturus in coniugem Matildem Filiam Regis Primogenitam Henrico Saxoniæ Duci.

Raymond, Count of Tolosa buried by the Priests without Christian burrall.

In the same yeare Queene Alianor had another Daughter, who was called Ioane, Wife in first Marriage to William King of Sicilie. In her second Marriage, shee espoused Raymond de Saint Gilles, Count of Tolosa, fourth of the name, Protectour of the Albigeois Heretiques. For this reason in my Manuscript Chronicle, concerning the life of this Count of Tholosa, and of Simon de Mont-fort his aduersary, I tearme it Peſſime Hereſe, according to the language of the time. And for this cause, Raymond the younger his Sonne, and last Count of Tholosa, could neuer obtaine power and permission of the Church, to bury the body of the said old Count Raymond his Father, in any hallowed ground, or to take it out of the prophane place, where yet his Graue is to be seene in the Garden of the Commandery of Saint Iohn of Ieruſalem, neere to the Dealeade.

The birth of King John Sirnamed Without Land.

In the yeare, an Hundred, Sixty Sixe, the said Queene Alianor was deliuered of a Sonne, who had to name John, and was Sirnamed (by his Father) Without Land.

Now the Count of Bretaigne Conan being dead, in the Yeare, One Thousand, One Hundred, Sixty Eight, Constance, Daughter and Sister to the Kings of Scotland; left by his Wife but one Daughter (bearing the name of her Mother) as his onely Heyre, whom the King of England caused to be espoused to his third Son Geoffrey, whom the King of England caused to be espoused to his third Sonne Geoffry, who was Count of Bretaigne, in the right of his Wife Constance, as we haue already said in the Tract of the Ermine.

King Henry caused his Sonne to bee Crowned King of England in his owne time.

In the yeare, One Thousand, One Hundred, and Seauenty, the fourth of the Calends of July, King Henry the Second caused his Eldest Sonne Henry to be crowned King of England (then aged about fifteene yeares) by Roger, Archbishop of yorke, and the Bishops Suffragans to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The death of Becket Archbishop of Canterbury.

In the yeare after the said Coronation, Thomas Becket (whose Genealogie wee haue set downe in our History of Nauarre) Archbishop of Canterbury and Primate of England, was slaine in his Church, on a Tuesday morning in the feast of Christmas, One Thousand, One Hundred, Seauenty One. Hee was the yeare following Canonized, and ranked among the Saints Martyrs, his Graue reported to bee night and day full of Miracles: The foure Murderers which had slaine him, and the King of England Henry (reputed to bee Author of the Murder) were excommunicated by the Pope. And during that yeare, the Primatiall Church, being without diuine Seruice in it, had the Altars vnpaued, and the whole Church likewise, as left left naked, and the Belles vn-hung, in signe of sorrow and sadnesse, vntill the Day of Saint Thomas the Apostle, when by authority from the Pope, the Church was pu-rified, and diuine Seruice againe restored, by Bartholmew the Bishop of Oxford, who, there celebrated Masse, and made a Sermon beginning with these words: Secundum multitudinem dolorum meorum in corde meo, conſolationes tuæ lætificant animam meam.

King Henry absolued by the Pope, and tyed to first conditions both Father and Sonne.

And the yeare following, King Henry the Father had his Absolution from the Pope, with many conditions and satisfactions, as well to the Church of Canterbury as to the Kindred and friends of the reputed Martyr Saint Thomas of Canterbury, despoyled of their goods, and banished out of England; with charge also to send (at his owne cost) Two Hundred men of Armes for one whole yeare, ouer the Seas, to fight with the Sarrazins in the Holy Land.

This was done in Normandy, and the Kings, both Father and Sonne, promised & sware to fulfill the Conditions in euery poynt, according as they were prescribed by Albert and Theodore, Cardinalls and Legates to Pope Alexander, Third of that name.

The young King comming into England with his new-married Queene.

This being done, the young King returned into England, leading with him his newly espoused Wife, Madame Margaret of France, crowned Queene by Retrou, Archbishop of Rouen, assisted with the Suffragans, belonging to the Primacy of Canterbury, the Second of the Calends of September, in the yeare, One Thousand, One Hundred, Seauenty Two.

The young King Henry in Armes against his Father.

The next yeare ensuing, the young King Henry tooke Armes against his Father, in such sort, as all England was (in an instant) filled with partialities, taking and re-taking Townes and places, with robberies, slaughters and murders; as was prophe-sied before by the Martyre Saint Thomas, and before his death. The young King withdrawing himselfe out of England, went into France, to King Lewes the younger, his Father in Law, with him were ioyned his Brethren, Richard Duke of Aquitaine, and Geoffrey, Count of Bretaigne, by the aduice and councell of Alianor their Mother. So the Kings Father was punished for Beckets death, by the fruit of his owne loynes, who still pursued him (saith Mathew Paris) euen to death. But by mediation of King Lewes the Seauenth, peace was made betweene the Father and his Sonnes, who (according to their duty) desired pardon of him, because they had risen and rebelled in Armes against him.

Queene Elianor reconcileth the Sonnes to their Father.

It fortuned in the yeare One Thousand, One Hundred, Foure Score & Three that the King Father would compell his Sonnes, Richard Duke of Aquitaine, and Count of Poictou, by his Mother, and Geoffrey the Count of Bretaigne, in right of his Wife Constance, to doe homage for their Lands to their Elder Brother King Henry the younger. Against which they opposed themselues, saying: That they were men, and faithfull Subiects to the King of France, their Soueraigne Lord, and so were they not to him of England.

The death of King Henry the younger in France.

This refusall was the cause that the Father leuied an Army, which hee committed to the Conduct of his Sonne King Henry, to make them obey him. But while the busines went forward, Henry the young King dyed in the Flower of his age (being aged eight and twenty yeares) on Saint Barnabies day, in the same yeare, Foure Score and Three, and was buried before the High Altar in the chiefe Church of Rouen.

His Queene buried in the City of Acres.

Queene Margaret, his Widdow, was afterward remarried to Bela King of Hungary; after whose death, shee spent the rest of her life in the Holy-Land, and was buried in the City of Acres. The forenamed King Henry the younger deceased without issue, in the Castell of Martell, in the Vicounty of Turen, thus writeth Mathew Paris. In flore iuuentutis ſuæ, cum annum ætatis Vigeſimum Octauum compleuiſſet, intra Gasconiam, in illotractu terra, quæ Torroina dicitur, apud Caſtellum Martel, in feſto Sancti Barnabæ Apoſtoli, Rex iunior è medio ſubſtractus eſt.

The death of Geoffry Count of Bretaigne.

This death was followed with that of his Third Brother, Geoffrey Count of Bretaigne, hee deceasing at Paris, as we haue obserued in the Third Booke, in the yeare of Grace, One Thousand, One Hundred, Foure Score and Sixe. Eodem anno Gaufridus Comes Britanniæ, & Regis Angliæ Filius diem clauſit ſupremum, Decimo Quarto Kalen-

The death of King Henry the ſecond at Chinon in France.

Two yeares after, the King of France Phillip Auguſtus, by force of Armes conſtrained the ſaid King Henry the ſecond, to make peace with his Sonne Richard, and as well to reſigne to him the Kingdome of England, as alſo whatſoeuer he poſſeſſed in France by his Fathers inheritance. Which being done at Tours, he came to Chinon, where (in griefe) he tooke his bed, and three dayes after this agreement, he dyed at the ſaid place of Chinon, in the yeare One thouſand one hundred foureſcore and eight, the Octaues of Saint Peter in Iune. As they carried his body to be interred in the Monaſtery of Font-Euraud, Royally cloathed, the Crowne of Gold on his head, rich Gloues on his hands, Buskins of cloath of gold on his legges, guilt Spurres on his heeles, his great Seale on his finger, the Scepter in his hand, and Sword by his ſide; hauing his face bare and vncouered: Richard his Sonne, came running to the conuoye, and preſenting himſelfe before the corps, ſuddenly blood ſtarted forth at the noſe of the dead King, and ran out extreamely boyling. Conſtitim erupit ſanguis ex naribus Regis mortui, ac ſi indignaretur ſpiritus in aduentu eius, qui eiuſdem mortis cauſa eſſe credebatur, vt videretur ſanguis clamare ad Deum: So ſaith Mathew Paris. Such ſights are ordinarily ſeene, at the approachings and confrontings of murderers of the murdered. And this accident was followed by the death of Mabaulá, wife to the Duke of Saxon, Daughter to the ſaid King Henry the ſecond, ſhee being come into England, and grieuing for the deceaſe of her Father.

The dead Kings body bled at the preſence of his Sonne Richard.

In his eſtate and dignities ſucceeded Richard, firſt of the name, and for the firſt act of his reigne, he ſet at libertie Queene Elianor his Mother, whom the King her husband had kept in ſtrict impriſonment. Fifteene yeares he had continued in England, in the Ides of Auguſt, and after he was abſolued by the Archbiſhops of Canterburie, of Rouen and of Treues, becauſe he had borne Armes, and made warre ſo many times againſt his Father: he proceeded to his Sacring and Coronation, which is particularly deſcribed by Mathew Paris, becauſe the Crowne of England, being falne into the houſe of the Counts of Anion; many ceremonies were therein vſed, belonging to that of the moſt Chriſtian Kings of France, to whom they were allied.

The Sacring & Crowning of King Richard the firſt.

The meeting appointed to be at Weſtminſter, and not at London, the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome, the Clergie in order went foremoſt with the Croſſe, holy Water and perfuming Cenſors, cloathed in their goodlieſt Coapes, followed by Archbiſhops, Biſhops and Abbots in their Pontificall habits. So went they on to the doore of Duke Richards Chamber, whence they conducted him into the Church and royall Chappell of Weſtminſter, and before the high Altar thereof, in a ſolemne Proceſſion. In the midſt of the Biſhops and Cleargie, went foure Barons, each bearing a rich Candleſticke, with waxe tapers lighted in them, being followed by two Earles, the firſt whereof carried the Scepter Royall, on the top whereof was a ſigne or marke of Gold (Mathew Paris doth not expreſſe it, Sceptrum Regale, in cuius ſummitate ſignum erat aureum) and the other a royall Rod, hauing a Doue on the end thereof. After them went two other Earles, and one in the midſt of them, who carried three Swords in faire guilded Scabards. Next followed ſixe Earles and Barons, bearing an Exchecker (portantes Scacarium vnum) whereon were the Royall ornaments, after which followed the Earle of Exceſter alone, bearing aloft the Crowne Royall, enriched with infinite precious Stones, and then went the King betweene two Biſhops, ouer whoſe head foure Barons carried a goodly Canopie or Heauen of State, on foure golden Lances.

The manner of the Royall pompe in performance.

Being come to the Altar, before the people and Cleargie, the King ſware vpon the Euangeliſts, and many Reliques of Saints, to giue (all his life time) due honour and reuerence to God, to his holy Church, and to the Paſtours thereof; he ſwore and promiſed alſo, to render good Iuſtice to the people, whom God had committed to his charge; to aboliſh all euill Lawes and bad cuſtomes, and to ordaine ſuch as are good. Which words being ſpoken, the Biſhops and Chamberlaines attending on him, tooke off his ordenary garments, except his Breeches and Shirt, which was made open and vnſowne vpon his ſhoulders. And then Baldwine, Archbiſhop of Canterburie, conſecrated and annointed him with holy Oyle in Foure parts, on his Head, his Shoulders, and his right Arme: All which while, the Quire ſung the vſuall Prayers, which commonly are exerciſed in ſuch Ceremonies, couering his head with a hallowed Cappe of fine Linnen, and putting alſo a Bonnet thereon. Poſito deinde ſuper caput eius panno lineo ſacrato, pileum deſuper poſuit. And after they had put on his Sandales, tiſſued and wrought with Gold, then they brought him his Royall Ornaments, namely the Tunick and Dalmaticke, and then the Archbiſhop gaue the Sword into his hand, for the puniſhment of ſuch as ſhould doe euill to the Church.

The Kings body annointed in foure ſeuerall places.

This being done, two Earles did put on his Spurres, and cloathed him with the royall Cloak (of crimoſine Veluet, thick powdred with golden Leopards) the Archbiſhop gaue him expreſſe charge, in the high name of God Almighty, to publiſh openly and aloud, whether he was reſolued to obſerue and keepe intirely, all thoſe things whereto he was ſworne, or no. Whereto the King anſwered, that (by the helpe of God) he would faithfully keepe whatſoeuer hee had promiſed, without fraud or falſe meaning. And then the King went to take the Crowne on the Altar, which he deliuered into the hands of the Archbiſhop, who hauing crowned the King therewith, put the Scepter Royall into his right hand, and the Rod of Iuſtice into the left, and with theſe adornements he was conducted to his Throane, by the Biſhops and Barons, the Croſſe, Candleſticks and three Swords being borne before him in ſuch manner as formerly hath bin related.

The ſame was done at the Offering, at the Agnus Dei, at kiſſing the Paxe, and at the Proceſſion after high Maſſe. Returning into the Quire againe, the King was deueſted of his Royall Ornaments, for putting on other more light, and going all in order to the Royall Dinner, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, being ſeated in the moſt eminent place of the Table, on the right hand of the King, the other Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earles and Barons, according to their rancke and dignitie, were ſeated in order, and then followed the people and Cleargie. This Coronation was performed on Sunday, the third of the Nones of September, in the ſaid yeare, one thouſand one hundred foureſcore and eight, & on the morrow, he receiued the Homages of the Lords of the Kingdome.

This Richard, ſirnamed Coeur de Lyon, for his valiancie, went in the voyage beyond the Seas, with King Phillip Auguſtus, in the yeare One thouſand one hundred foureſcore and tenne. Which voyage is amply deſcribed by Mathew Paris, but maketh no matter to our diſcourſe, wherefore we will let paſſe in ſilence, the particularities remarked by the ſaid Mathew Paris. Both the Kings tooke Shipping at Marſeilles, where they deuided themſelues, King Phillip ſhaping his courſe for Geneway, and the King of England ſayling to Meſſina in Sicilie.

King Richard Sirnamed Cœur de Lyon for his valiancie, and his voyage to the Holy-Land.

Richard (at his returne) endured ten thouſand afflictions, whereof briefely behold the ſubiect. In the yeare One thouſand one hundred foureſcore and twelue, Leopold Duke of Auſtria came into the holy Land, to beare Armes there, as other Chriſtian Princes did. At his Arriuall, the Marſhall of his Campe, hauing marked out a Lodging for the Duke his Maiſter, planted downe his Tent and his Enſigne on it. A Norman, being a follower to King Richard, maintained, that the lodging place belonged to him. From words they fell to blowes, and Richard, without vnderſtanding the reaſons of the parties, cauſed the Duke of Auſtriaes Tent and Enſigne to be pul'd downe, and hurl'd (vpon a heape) into a ditch of mire. The Duke made complaint to Richard, to haue reparation of this offence, but he payed him with deriſion: whereupon, the Duke ſeeing he was deſpiſed, deſired God, to doe reaſon for him, and then he would remit the iniurie.

The briefe Hiſtory of his returning home and many miſeries by the Duke of Auſtria.

Richard, after he had done wonderfull deedes in the Holy-Land, was aduertiſed, that his Brother John without Land, ſought to poſſeſſe himſelfe of the Kingdome of England, which made him reſolue of returning home. And being on the Sea, with the Queene Berengaria of Nauarre his wife, and Ioan of Sicilie her Siſter, he ſo continued nued seauen weekes together, suffering infinite miseries, and lastly was cast on the coast of Barbarie, from whence (within the space of three dayes) he might haue bin at Marseilleis. But fearing the Count of S. Gilles and of Prouince, with whom he had dealte but hollowlie in the Holy-land: he determined to shape his course thorow Germanie, and from thence passe for England, without aduenturing into France, where Phillip Augustus kept a choaking Peare in store for him, to quench his thirst.

The firſt occaſion of the quarrell.

King Richard returne I thorow Germanie

Hereupon he put to Sea againe, accompanied with three men only, to wit Baldwine of Bethon, Maister Phillip his Clearke, and Anselme his Chaplaine, and some Brethren Templers, who for their owne preseruation, went to the Land on coasts of Sclauonia, from the Port of Gazara, whether Richard sent one of his people, to the neerest Castle, for a Pasport from the Lord thereof, that he might trauaile thorow his Lands in safetie. The Lord of this Prouince was Nephew to the Marquesse of Mont-ferat, slaine by an Assassine some while before, by intelligence of the said Richard, as some reported. Richard being in his iourney, had bought of a Ieweller of Pisa three Rubies, valuing the sum of nine hundred Bezans, and had caused them to be beautified with curious workemanship. One of them he sent to the Lord of the Prouince, who desired to know of the messenger, what he was, that should send him such a present. Answere was made, that they were Voyagers, returning from the Holy-Land, the chiefe wherof was named Baldwine of Bethon, with his associate, & a Merchant, named Hugo, who sent him that Iewell. The Lord looking aduisedly on it, said to the messenger: That Merchant is King Richard, I know it by this King. And although I haue sworne a sollemne oath, to stay all Pilgrimes returning from the Holy-land, without taking any thing of, or from them: yet notwithstanding, for the beautie of this present, and dignitie of him that sent it; I return him backe his Ring, and licence to passe freely through my countries.

Three costly Iewelles bought by King Richard.

The honourable minde of the Lord.

The messenger reported to King Richard what had hapned, and being much affraid of stay in his enemies countries, Richard and his followers, being furnished with hired horsses, departed secretly from the Porte. They were (neuertheless) pursued on the Lords behalfe, by Spies, that had giuen intelligence to his Brother (who was an other Lord of the same Prouince) in hope of taking Richard, if he passed thorow his lands. Richard arriuing (vnluckilie) in the Cittie where the same Lord dwelt, vpon aduertisement of his Brother, he commanded a man, whom he held to be most faithfull of all his followers, (named Roger, a Norman by nation, and borne in Argentane, who had continued twentie yeares in his seruice, and enioyed his Niece in marrige) to visite and search exactly all the Innes in the Cittie, wherof he would giue him the halfe in propritie, if he could discouer the King of England.

Great wait & search laid for King Richard.

Roger discouered him, making himselfe knowne to be a Norman, giuing him aduertisment, what search was made for him, and aduising him withall (for his good) to dislodge thence so soone as he could, sending him a very good Horsse. Now, while Richard was prouiding for his escape, Roger fed his Lord with nothing but lies and fables: that it was a man named Baldwine of Bethon (and not King Richard) and companions of his returning home from the Holy-land. But the Lord not satisfied with this answere, made stay of all of them in the Innes.

The honest dealing of Roger the Norman with King Richard.

Richard saued himselfe by a more prosperous wind, with one named Guillaume de l'Estang, and a Boy, that vnderstood the Germaine tongne, trauayling three dayes and nights, without receiuing any sustenance, or tarying in any place. But hunger pressing them extreamely, they came to lodge in a Towne, being neere to the Riuer of Danubie, named Gynatia in Austria, as saith Mathew Paris, but according to the Histories of Germanie (which I haue read) it is called Erdbourg, where then remained Leopold, Duke of Austria, to welcome Richard thither, like him falne out of a Feauer, into a farre worse disease. Being come to his Inne, he sent his Boy to make prouision for him in the Market, where the Boy shewing his purse to be full of Bezans, and buying very exquisite victuals: he was stayed by the inhabitants of the Towne, to vnderstand further of his condition. Hauing certefied them, that he belonged to a wealthie Merchant, who would arriue there within three dayes; they permitted him to depart. Richard being heerof aduertised, and much distasted in his health, by so many hard sufferances on the Seas, and perillous passages on the wayes: concluded, to repose there some some few dayes in the Towne. During which time the Boy alwayes made their prouision of food. But by ill accident, on the day of Saint Thomas the Apostle, the Boy being in the Market, chaunced (through neglect) to haue King Richards Gloues tuckt vnder his Girdle. The Magistrate of the Towne ol seruing it, tooke the Boy, and gaue him torment, to make him confesse whose Gloues they were. The power of punishment, and threates, to haue his tongue cut out of his head, compelled him to tell the truth. So in short while after, the Duke of Austria hearing the tydings, engirt the Inne where Richard was (with a band of armed men, and Richard) with his Sword in his hand yielded himselfe to the Duke, which kept him strongly enuironed with well armed Souldiours, who watched him night and day, with their Swords readie drawne. This is the affirmation of Mathew Paris, concerning the surprizall of King Richard.

King Richard taken by the Duke of Austria, and his hard vsage to him.

But I haue read an ancient Manuscript of old Poesies, written about those very times, which reporteth this Historie otherwise. Saying, that Richard being in his Inne, disguised himselfe like a seruant Cooke, larding his meate, broching it, and then turning it at the fire himselfe. In which time, one of the Duke of Austrieas followers, being then in the Inne, came (accidentally) into the Kitchin, who tooke knowledge of this Royall Cooke, not by his face, which he had purposely diffigured with the soyling of the Kitchin; but by a Ring of Gold, which (very vnaduisedly) he wore on his finger. This man, ran immediatly and aduertised the Duke his Maister, that the King of England was within the compasse of his power, and vpon this aduertisement Richard was arrested.

The History related another way.

In the yeare following, namely, One thousand one hundred fourescore & thirteen the Duke sold King Richard to the Emperor Henry, for the sum of threescore thousand pounds of Siluer, the pounds answering the weight & order obserued at Cologne. With which sum Leopold towred the wals of the Citie of Vienna in Austria, & bought the Duchie of Styria, Neopurg, and the Counties of Lins and Wels, of the Bishops of Passau and of Wirtspourg. So speaketh the Latin Chronicle of Otho of Austria, Bishop of Frisinghen, for these perticularities were forgotten by Mathew Paris, who further saith: That in the same yeere of fourescore and thirteene, the third holy day after Palme-Sunday, Leopold led Richard prisoner to the Emperor, who sent him vnder sure guard to the Tribales. Retrudi eum praecepit in Triballis, à quo carcere nullus ante dies illos exiuit, qui ibidem intrauit: de quo Aristoteles Libro Quinto. Bonum est mactare Patrem in Triballis; & alibi,

The Duke of Austria sold King Richard to the Emperor

Sunt loca, sunt gentes, quibus est mactare parentes.

The Englishmen were more then a whole yeare, without hearing any tydings of their King, or in what place he was kept prisoner. He had trained vp in his Court a Rimer or Minstrill, called Blondell de Nesle, who (so saith the Manuscript of old Poesies, and an auncient Manuscript French Chronicle) being so long without the sight of his Lord, his life seemed wearisome to him, and he became much confounded with melancholy. Knowne it was, that he came backe from the Holy Land, but none could tell in what Countrey he arriued. Whereupon this Blondel, resoluing to make search for him in many Countries, but he would heare some newes of him; after expence of diuers dayes in trauaile, he came to a Towne (by good hap) neere to the Castell where his Maister King Richard was kept. Of his Host he demanded, to whom the Castell appertained, and the Host told him, that it belonged to the Duke of Austria. Then he enquired, whether any prisoners were therein detained, or no; for alwayes he made such secret questionings, wheresoeuer he came; and the Hoste gaue answer, that there was one onely Prisoner, but he knew not what he was, and yet he had bin retained there more then the space of a yeare. When Blondel heard this, he wrought such meanes, that he became acquainted with them of the Castell, as Minstrels doe easily win acquaintance any where; but see the King he could not, neither vnderstād what it was he. One day he sat directly before a window of the Castell, where King Richard was kept prisoner, and began to sing a Song in French, which King Richard and Blondel had sometime composed together. When King Richard heard the Song, he knew it was Blondel that sung it, & when Blondel paused at halfe of the Song, the King entreated him to sing the rest. Thus Blondel won knowledge of the King his Maister,

A pretty History concerning the finding of King Richard by a Minstrell.

Blondel singeth a French Song, made by his Lord and himselfe.

Maister, and returning home into England, made the Barons of the Countrie acquainted where the King was.

Otho Frisinghensis reporteth, that Pope Leo then ruling the Church, excommunicated the said Leopold, because by the like imprisoning, the Pilgrimes returning from the Holy-Land, were greatly wronged, the voyage intermitted & impeached, to the great preiudice and hinderance of the Latines of the East. And that the Emperour Henry preuailed by money, to get into his power the King of England (as he did) and kept him vnder sure guard, strongly giued and fettered in the Citie of Wormes, where the Emperor then remained, who made cõposition for the said Princes ransome, raising therby a great sum of monie. Mathew Paris speaketh nothing of this fulmination.

Onely he saith, by the pursuite and dilligence of Hugh, Abbot of Cluny, and William, Chancellour of England, the Emperour held a Diet in Germanie, whereat were assembled the Bishops, Dukes and Counts of the Empire, whether he brought King Richard, and charged him with many infamous actions.

Imputations laid vpon King Richard by the Emperour at the Diet.

1. First of all, that by his counsel and meanes, he had lost the Kingdome of Apu[lia] & that of Sicilie, which belonged to him by hereditary right, after the death of King William, and for the recouery whereof, he had spent vnspeakable sums of monie, and brought a puissant Armie thither to none effect, wherein King Richard promised his assistance faithfully, & to mediate with Tancred, to restore the said Kingdomes to him.

2. Concerning the Kingdome of Cyprus, that in pride and brauery, he had preiudiced thereon, which appertained to his kinsman and allie, whom he had vniustly, and without any grounded reason despoiled, and put in prison rigorously, inuading his Treasures and Realme, and selling it to a stranger Prince.

3. With the death of the valiant Marquesse of Montferrat, heire to the said Emperor, whom he had traiterously pursued, and so wrought with the Arsacides, that inhumanely they murdered him.

4. That on the like occasion, he had sent the Arsacides, to massacre the King of France his Soueraigne Lord Phillip Augustus, by an insigne trechery, against the oath and homage which he had sworne vnto him.

5. And that by an act of ouer-weening pride and rashnesse, to wrong the Princes which went to the Holy-land in his time, he had pul'd downe the Standard of his Cousine the Duke of Austria, & threw it into a Ditch at the Port of Iaph, vsing words of arrogancie and iniurie, against the Germaine Natton.

King Richard defended himselfe worthily, washing his hands by the best meanes he could deuise; & yet neuertheless, to get out of the Emperors fingers, he was constrained to compound and pay to the said Emperor, an hundred and fortie thousand Markes of money (according to the poize of Cologne) for his ransome, whereof he paied part ready downe, and gaue sufficient Hostages for the rest.

King Richard compounded with the Emperor for his ransome.

During the imprisonment of King Richard, Earle John without Land his Brother beleeuing he should neuer come home againe; laboured to possesse himselfe of the Kingdome of England, and of the Seigneuries belonging to the Crowne of France.

Prince John his proceedings against his Brother.

In this designe he was fauoured by the King Phillip Augustus, in hatred of the which King Richard had said vnto him, being in Sicilie, that Alix his Sister, whom he had long time fianced, should neuer haue any thing of him. So saith Rigordus for an especiall obseruation, and that this was the true fourse, whence sprung the mallice between these two great Princes, in their voyage to the Holy-land. Which neuertheless, Mathew Paris hath not spared to touch, to impose the blame on Phillip Augustus, whom he taxeth at euery word, to discharge his owne King Richard, who (by his returne) disappointed his so forward Brother.

King Richard complaineth against the Duke of Austria.

In the yeare One thousand one hundred fourescore and fifteene, King Richard sent his Ambassadors to the Holy See, & to the Pope, to complain & craue iustice, for the outrages he receiued by Leopold Duke of Austria, who had staied him as a prisoner returning from his perillous voyage of the Holy-land, and vsed him otherwise, then a Prince of his qualitie ought to be; that he had sold him to the Emperor, as if he had been a Lion an Oxe or an Asse (these are the very words of Mathew Paris) and that both of them together, intended to ruinate his Kingdome, by the excessiue value of his ransome. That both these Princes (although they were Christians) had worse dea[lt] wi[th] with him, then Saladine could haue done, a vowed enemy to the Christians, if by hazard of the Warre, he should haue fallen into his hands, against which Saladine the said Richard was come to fight, from one of the corners of the World, to the other, abandoning his Kingdome wherein he was but newly seated, his deare Countrey, Kindred and friends. That therefore the Pope should command the said Leopold and others, to send him the Hostages, which he and they kept for the rest of his ransome, restoring that againe vnto him, which they had vniustly extorted from him, with all his expences, damages, & interests, as well to him as his people, whom they had abused.

The Duke of Austria excommunicated by Pope Celestine and his Lands interdicted.

Pope Celestine the Third, after hee had three seuerall times summoned the Duke of Austria Leopold; by the aduise of his Cardinals, he excommunicated particularly and namely the said Leopold, and generally all them that had ill entreated King Richard and his followers. Hee sent an interdiction on all the Lands of the said Duke, giuing charge and command to the Bishop of Veronna, to publish the Excommunication three seuerall Sundayes in all the Seigneuries belonging to the said Duke: who should still stand excommunicated, if hee did not restore to King Richard his Hostages, & the monies which he had exacted of him, with the expences, damages, and interests, for his so long time of detention.

Heauen reuenged the wrongs of King Richard.

The Duke lending a deafe eare to all this, Austria became afflicted with an vniuersall Pestilence and famine, the great Riuer of Danubie, mounting out of her bed and ordinary current, drowned and deuasted a great part thereof, and tenne thousand persons. The Duke managing his Horse vpon Saint Stephens day, brake one of his legges, whereinto the Gangrena falling, hee was glad to haue it quite cut off: but the disease extending vp into his thigh, the fire thereof so embraced the body of this miserable Duke; that acknowledging his fault, hee promised to satisfie the Popes Command. Whereupon, the Bishops of the Countrey, gaue him absolution of the Excommunication, which he had incurred, & ministred vnto him the Communion of the faithfull, and so hee dyed cruelly. His body remained a long time without burial, full of wormes crawling in it, because his Sons made no account of satisfying King Richard; to whom at length they sent his Hostages, so saith Mathew Paris.

The death of the Duke of Austria.

But Otho of Austria, Bishop of Frisinghen, affirmeth, that the Pope excommunicated Leopold, and relateth his death in another manner. That falling (on a day) from his Horse, he brake his leg, and the affliction thereof causing him to detest the vanities of the world: hee became a Hermite of S. Augustines Order, leauing his Seigneuries to his Sonnes Leopold and Fredericke, And that hee died in the yeare, One Thousand, One Hundred, Foure Score and Foureteene.

King Richard his Warre against the Poictouins, and vnfortunate death.

The said King Richard in the last yeare of his Reigne, which was 1199. made war against the Poictouins, who were become rebels vnto him, putting all to fire & sword. Finally, he came into Limosine, laid Siege before the Castle of Chaluz, where he was wounded with an arrow, & empoysoned Quarrell, shot from the said Castle by one named Peter Bazile; the seauenth of the Calends of Aprill. He liued twelue daies after, in which time the Castle was yeelded. The poyson reaching to the heart, King Richard dyed on Tuesday the eighteenth of the Ides of Aprill. Hee commanded his Entrailes and Bowels to be carried to Poictiers, his Heart to Rouen, and his Body to Font-Euraud (for reasons alleadged by Mathew Paris) to be buried at the feet of his Father. Mathew relateth not the subiect of this besieging the Castle of Chaluz, and of Cabrit, because he would not taxe his Prince of Couetousnesse.

The reasons of King Richard's warre alleadged by Rigordus the Monke of Saint Denis.

But the Monke of S. Denis in France Rigordus, who liued at the same time, enstructeth vs that there was a rich Treasury, for the pictures of the Emperor Charlemaigne, or of Lewes the debonnaire, his wiues & Children, Sons & Daughters, were seated at a Table made all of fine Gold. Thus you heare what he saith, and as it followeth.

Anno Domini M. C. XCIX. Sexta Idus Aprilis, Ricardus Rex, Angliæ iuxta Lemouicum Ciuitatem grauiter vulneratus occubuit. Obsederat enim Castrum quoddam quod Caldum lucum (de Capreolo Lemouicenses vocant) hebdomada Passionis Dominicæ occasione cuiusdam thesauri, à quoddam Milite ibidem inuenti, quod ex nimia ambitione à Vicecomite Lemouicensi instantissime sibi reddi petebat: Miles enim qui thesaurum inuenerat, ad ipsum ipſum Vicecomitem confugerat. Dum vero Rex in obſidione Caſtri moram faceret, & per ſingulos dies ipſum Caſtrum viriliter impugnaret, Baliſtarius quidam ex improuiſo, quarello tranſmiſſo, Regi Angliæ lethale vulnus intulit, & paucis reuolutis diebus, viam vniuerſæ carnis ingreſſus eſt. Sepultus vero quieſcit apud Fontem Ebrardi, in quadam Abbatia Monialium, inxta Patrem ſuum. Theſaurus autem prædictus, vt ferebatur, ſuerat Imperator quidam de Auro puriſſimo cum vxore & Filys, & Filiabus ad menſam auream reſidentibus, qui Poſteris, quo tempore fuerant, certam dabant memoriam. To the ſaid King Richard the Firſt, dying without Iſſue, and who (as we haue noted before) inſtituted for his Heyre and Succeſſor his Nephew Arthur, Count of Bretaigne; ſucceeded (by force of Armes) his laſt Brother

King John ſucceeded after his Brother Richard, and was crowned at Rouen firſt.

John Without-Land, Earle of Mortaigne, who cauſed himſelfe to bee crowned at Rouen, with the Ducall Circle of Normandy. Comes Iohannes Rotomagum veniens, in octauis Paſchæ, Gladio Ducatus Normanniæ accinctus eſt, in matrice Eccleſia, per miniſterium Walteri Rotomagenſis Archiepiſcopi, vbi Archiepiſcopus memoratus, ante maiu Altare, in capite eius poſuit Circulum Aureum, Habentem in ſummitate per Gyrum Roſulas Aureas artificialiter fabricatas. Behold how wee repreſent the Ducall Wreath or Garland, which Mathew Paris calleth Circulum, the Circle, which is properly meant for Earles or Counts. His Sacring and Coronation performed at Weſtminſter and at London, in the Cathedrall Church of Saint Paul, on the Aſſenſion day, the Sixt of the Calends of June, in the ſaid yeare, One Thouſand, One Hundred, Foure Score and Nineteene, and the Oration of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury Hubert, reported by Mathew Paris; were preſages of the misfortunes happening in England in his time, the Kingdome not appertaining to him, but to Arthur, the Count of Bretaigne. For ſo ſoone as hee heard of his Brothers death, hee made great diligence (by meanes of the old Queene his Mother Alianor, and her partakers) to entrap the Children of Geoffrey of Bretaigne, his Brother, in ſuch ſort; that Conſtance, Mother to Arthur, the lawfull Heyre to deceaſed King Richard, ſpeedily came to Paris, as into a place of aſſurance.

His Coronation at Weſtminſter.

But within a while after, one Guillaume des Roches, to whom King Philip Auguſtus had giuen the gouernment of Mans, found meanes to perſwade the ſaid young Count Arthur, to make agreement with his Vncle John Without-Land, promiſing him Mountaines and Vallyes, which were but words, only to bee poſſeſſed of him, which cauſed him to returne the ſooner to Paris.

King John (in the life time of King Richard his Brother) had eſpouſed * Hauiſi, Daughter to the Count of Gloceſter Robert, Baſtard to the King of England Henry, Firſt of that name, a rich Heyre, yet John diuorced her, in the yeare, One Thouſand, Two Hundred. The reaſon of this Diuorce was thus grounded, becauſe they were Kinne in the third Degree; in ſtead of whom hee tooke Iſabell, only Daughter to the Count of Angouleſme, whom the Earle of March, Hugh of Luſignan, Sirnamed the Browne, had formerly eſpouſed; ſo ſaith Mathew Paris. Duxit idem Rex Iſabellam filiam Comitis Engouleſmi, quam prius ſuſceperat in ſuam Hugo cognomento Brunus, Comes Marchiæ, & Dominica prima ante feſtum Sancti Dionyſy apud Weſtmonaſterium conſecratur in Reginam, quæ copula poſtmodum Regi, & Regno Angliæ magno detrimento fuit. Du Tillet ſaith, that this Queene Iſabell, being Widdow to the ſaid King John, did marry againe with Hugh le Brun, by whom ſhee had many Children.

* Her name was not Hauiſa but Iſabell, and ſhee was third daughter, and one of the Heyres of William Earle of Gloceſter, Sonne of Robert Earle of Gloceſter, naturall Sonne of King Henry the Firſt.

The opinion of the Monke Rigordus in this caſe.

To agree theſe two opinions, it is expedient to take that of Rigordus, Hiſtriographer to King Philip Auguſtus, who (in his life) telleth vs, that this King conueyed away the Wife of the ſaid Earle of March, becauſe the ſaid Hugh le Brun, the Vicount of Thouars, and Geoffrey of Luſignan (who were Vaſſailes to the King of England) withdrew themſelues from his obeyſance, (to his no little griefe and diſcontentment) & gaue themſelues in ſeruice to King Philip Auguſtus. Sed quia Iohannes uxorem ſuam Hugonis Bruno in dolo abſtulerat, filiam ſcilicet Comitis Engouliſmenſis, a fidelitate eius receſſerunt, & Regi Francorum, datis obſidibus, confœderati ſunt. But after the death of King John, ſhee came againe to liue with her Huſband.

In the ſame yeare, the Kings of France and England came to an enterueiw at Vernon, where Count Arthur did Homage to his Vncle King John, for the Counties of Bretaigne, which (as wee haue elſewhere ſaid) was the Meſne-Fief of the Duchie of Normandy. But the ſaid Arthur, fearing treaſon in his Vncle, continued in the Guard of the King of France, and what King John could not compaſſe at two ſeuerall enterniewes; he executed two yeares after, to wit, in the yeare, One Thouſand, Two Hundred and Two, being in the Caſtell of Falaize. By faire promiſes & flatteries, he won the ſaid Arthur thither, whom hee ſent ſoone after to New-Caſtle at Rouen, whither he followed him, and murdered him with his owne hands, and cauſed his body to bee caſt into the Sea, ſo that it was neuer ſeene afterward. Hee compaſſed the meanes alſo, to get into his power the Siſter of Arthur, whom he ſent Priſoner into England, where ſhe dyed.

An enterniew betweene the Kings of England and France.

King John murdered Prince Arthur with his owne hands.

The death of Count Arthur, lawfull Heyre to the Crowne of England, being diſcouered, King Philip Auguſtus ſet on foote a potent Army, to poſſeſſe himſelfe of Normandie and other Seigneuries, which the ſaid John Without-Land held in the Realme of France, declaring him alſo to bee guilty of high Treaſon, a Traytor diſloyall, and a fellon to his owne blood, by Decree of the Court of Parliament, furniſhed with the Peeres, the King ſitting in his Throane of Iuſtice, in the Hall of the Biſhop of Paris, in mid-Lent, One Thouſand, Two Hundred and Three, as it is reported by Mathew Paris. Prima præpoſitio fuit in præſentia Domini Papæ (at Rome before Pope Innocent the Third) quod Arthurum Nepotem ſuum propriis manibus per proditionem interfecit, peſſime Mortis genere, quod Angli Murder vocant. Pro facto idem Rex condemnatus fuit ad mortem in Curia Regis Francorum per Iudicium Pariſiorum ſuorum. Conſuetudo enim eſt in Regno Francorum, Quod Rex habet omnimodo iuriſdictionem in Homines ligies ſuos, & Rex Angliæ erat ſuus homo ligius tanquam Comes, & Dux. Ergo licet alios Rex iniunctus, tamen tanquam Comes & Dux, erat de Iuriſdictione Domini Regis Francorum. Sed ſi Comes & Dux in Regno Francorum delinqueret, poſſet, & deberet iudicari ad mortem per Pares ſuos. Imo, ſi non eſſet Dux vel Comes, vel Homo ligius Regis Franciæ, & deliquiſſet in Regno Franciæ, ratione delicti in Regno Franciæ perpetrati, potuerunt cum Barones iudicare ad mortem. Alioquin, ſi Rex Angliæ quia Rex erat iniunctus, non poſſet iudicari ad mortem, impunè poſſet intrare Regnum Franciæ, & interficere Barones Franciæ, ſicut interfecerat Arthurum. Such courſes haue likewiſe paſt in diuers other Kingdomes, which (notwithſtanding are not to bee produced as a warrantable ground or example for any other State to imitate.

An Armie prepared for Normandie.

At the ſame time, as this ſentence was giuen againſt King John, the Barons and great Lords of England, that were with him at Caen in Normandie; left him, forſooke his Seruice, and withdrew themſelues into England; whither the King followed them, extorting of all his Noblemen, and of the Conuentuall and Pariſh Churches, the ſeauenth part of all their mouables, which begot him farre more ill will then before. As much he did in the yeare Two Hundred and Fiue, which hee continued the whole time of his Reigne.

King John much diſtaſted by his Subiects.

In the yeare, Two Hundred and Seauen, on the day of Saint Remigius, Queene Iſabell of England was deliuered of her Eldeſt Sonne Henry, by the name of the King his Grandfather.

His colourable dealing with the Pope.

King John, for his robberies vſed againſt Churches, his Nobles, and them of the third Eſtate of England, was long time excommunicated by Pope Innocent the Third, who ſent his Legate Pandolph, with the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and many other Biſhops expelled out of England, to him, to ſet him in the way of ſaluation, whereof hee made an outward appearance, and by faire promiſes, rendred to the Popes Legate the Crowne of England, which he receiued ſoone after at his hands, as if he held it of the holy Sea of Rome, whereto hee acknowledged himſelfe Feudatory and Tributary, of a Thouſand markes of money yearely. But his deuotion and repentance was of no long continuance, becauſe, when hee ſaw himſelfe abſolued of the Cenſures thundered againſt him (which hee ſhould haue feared, in regard of the place whence they came) hee grew worſe and worſe, and laboured to ſurcharge his Subiects with impoſts and Subſidies. Which made them to alienate themſelues from their obedience, and from the affection which they had ſworne to him, Heauie oppreſſion of the People.

Then beholding Thomas and Raoul with dreadfull lookes, and passing before them, he said: That they should come no more into his presence, and that their eyes should no more see his face; because the renowne, or rather infamy of their Apostate Master (meerely mad) did infect his sences with a stincking savour.

A description of Robert of London.

The Ambassadours preparing to depart with their shorts shame, the Ammirant began to observe Robert of London, Priest to King John, who was a little man and of blackish hayrie skinne, hauing one of his armes longer then the other, his fingers wrong placed, hauing two thumbes together on one hand, & his face like to a Iew or Tawnie More. He considered with him selfe, what misshapen men the King of England had made his choyce of, to be Ambassadours to him, vncapable to manage a matter of such importance, and especially his Sir Priest Robert, so ill formed as he was. Neuertheless he remembred, that in a deformed body, there might be enclosed an apprehensiue spirit, and he proone to be a crafty companion: for, beholding the crowne of his head to be shauen, he thought him thereby to be a Priest. He caused him to be called alone by himselfe, for the two other hauing onely spoken before him, the Priest kept the silent Clocke all the while.

The Ammirant priuately conferring with Robert of London,

Hauing thus made stay of him, and sent the two other thence in some disgrace, the Ammirant began to talke and conferre with him priuately, enquiring earnestly of him; if King John his Master had any vertue in him, whereby to make himselfe commendable; if he had any generous children, of fayre expectation and hope; and whether he were powerfull in the acte of generation, or no: adding withall, that if Robert gaue him tales in stead of currant payment, hee would neuer after credit a Christian Priest. Robert hauing made oathe, by the faith of a Christian, and of a Priest; promised the Ammirant to tell him the trueth, in whatsoeuer he demaunded of him:

Robert his answeree to the Ammirant, concerning King John.

First of all he assured him, that King John was rather a Tyrant, then a King, rather a subuerter of his State, then a Gouernour; oppressing and treading downe his Subiects, to loue, cherish and aduance Strangers. To his people he was terrible, and as rigorous as a Lyon; but to Strangers and Rebells a meere Sheepe. By his sloth and negligence, he had lost many Lands and Seigneuries, and had no other thirst or desire, but to lose and destroy the Kingdome of England. That he was insatiably couetous, dreaming on nothing night and day but to pill and poule his Subiects, to feather his owne neast, and p ff fle himselfe of others goods and possessions. As for the children begotten by him, hee had but few, and none that yeelded hope of worth in any thing, but euen like to their father. That he had maried a wife which hated him to the death, and he her in the same manner. A woman incestuous, a whore and adulteresse and Sorceresse (read the life of Saint Lewes, written by Sire de Ionuille, there you shall see the effects) conuinced many times of these vices, and that King John had often strangled his strumpets, on the very bed of his said wife. This King (for his owne part) made it a triumphall sport, to violate wiues, and the Daughters of his Noblemen: And as for his Religion, there was none other in him, but he a meere Atheist in his actions and discourse.

The Ammirant further demaundes.

The Ammirant hauing heard Robert, detested the naturall disposition of his Prince, and demaunded, why the English would so long endure him: for either they were truely women, or else of very seruile soules. Whereto Robert answered, that the English were naturally suffering, vntill they should bee prickt to the blood: but then they imitated and resembled the Elephant & Lyon, who feeling themselues wounded, mount vp in choller, and shake off the yoke of seruitude. Whereto the Ammirant replied, that the English were ouer-long patient and fearefull. Many times, Robert conferred familiarly with the Ammirant, who gaue him great gifts of precious Stones, Gold, Siluer, Pearles and Silkes, granting his licence of departure; but the other two Ambassadors, he would neuer more see them.

Robert made Keeper of the Abbey of Saint Albans.

King John vnderstanding by the Ambassadors, how contemptibly and dishonourably the Ammirant of Marocco esteemed of him; grew very chollericke against him. Robert presented him with part of the gifts which had bin giuen him; in recompence whereof the King his Master gaue him the keeping of the rich Abbey of Saint Albans, the first Martyr of England; albeit it was without vacancie; for John Albot de le Cele was yet liuing.

Now

London Receiued in the Barons.

Now in the yeare One thousand, two hundred and fifteene, towards the Feast of Easter, the Noblemen of England assembled in Armes at Stamforde, summoning the King, to maintaine the liberties of the Kingdom, graunted by the Kings Saint Edward, and Henry first of the name, according as he had promised two Moneths before. Vpon his refusall, the Citty of London, chiefe of England, which began the daunce of Rebellion; opened her gates to the Nobles, who became Maisters thereof, and of diuers Castelles: so that the King, fearing a generall reuolt, was constrained to confirme the liberties and customes of the Realme, by his Letters Patents, dated the fifteenth day of June, in the said yeare Two hundred and fifteene. But he well declared within the yeare, that what he had done, was but to make a separation of his enemies, who were farre aboue him in strength.

his recourse to the Pope.

Then he made his recourse to Pope Innocent the third, as holding the Kingdome of England of him, because hee would bee assisted bothwith spirituall and temporall Armes.

The Dauphine of France elected by the Barons to be King.

The Nobles seeing their part to be the weakest, implored the succour of Phillip Augustus, King of France, a most Magnanimous and generous Prince, and being assembled in Councell at the Citty of London, with an vniuersall consent of them all: They elected for their King of England, the eldest Sonne of the said Phillip Augustus, named Monsieur Lewes of France, sirnamed the Lyon. Because hee was the neerest to succeed to the Crowne of England, by reason and right of his wife Madam Blanche of Castille, Daughter to Alphonso the eight of the name, King of Castille, and of Madame Alianor of England, daughter to King Henry the Second, and sister to the Kings Richard and John Without-Land.

The Ambassadors sent into France.

The Nobles hauing made this election, sent into France as their Ambassadours, Simon Earle of Winchester, and Robert, Sonne to William High Marshall of England, who brought to King Phillip Augustus and Lewes his Sonne, the signed Letters of his Election, sealed also by the Nobles of England, instantly entreating them to accept her seruice, with the Crowne. The King made answere to the Ambassadours, that he would not suffer his Son so to passe into England, without good Hostages, for seeurite of his person.

Foure and twenty Hostages.

Hee demaunded foure and twenty Hostages, of the Principall Lords of England; whereof the Ambassadours hauing immediatly giuen intelligence in England; the Barons sent into France with all diligence, the said foure and twenty Hostages to Phillip Augustus, who sent them vnder good and sure guard to the City of Compeigne (in Latine Compendium, and by the name of King Charles the Bauld Emperour, who rebuilded it, Karnopolis.

The Daulphines parting from his Father.

While the Kings were preparing a powerfull Fleete, they sent before to succour the Barons of England, the Castillian of Saint Omer, the Castilian of Arras, Hugues Chacun, Eustache Neuuille, Baudouin de Bretaile, Guillaume de Guines, Gilles de Melun, Guillaume de Beaumont, Gilles de Hersey and Bizet de Fargis, all braue and valiant French Knights, with a great number of other Commanders and Sergeants, who mounting vpon the Thames, arriued at London, where they were welcommed with all ioy and gladnesse, the third of the Calends of March.

What Lords of France were with King Lewes.

Lewes hauing taken his leaue, and receiued the blessing of his Father King Phillip Augustus, who then was at Melun; departed thence on Saint Markes day, and coming to Callice, found there his Fleete readily prouided, consisting of Sixe hundred Shippes, and Fourescore great Galions and Caracks, which he had prepared, armed and well furnished with Armour and prouision for warre: his Admirall being Eustace the Monke, an English Pyrate.

With King Lewes were the very greatest and most valiant Lords of France, to wit, Henry Count of Neuers, with an hundred Knights: Enguerran de Bailleu, Lord of Coucy, Marle and Crecy in Laonois second of that name, with fifty Knights. This Lord of Coucy Portoit de Coucy, qui est Vaire de Gueules et d'Argent, Escarlete de France. Because that his mother was youngest daughter to King Lewes le Gros and Alix de Dreux. Robert de Dreux had thirty Knights. Iohn de Mont Mirell had twenty Knights. The Counte de Roussy had tenne Knights: The Counte of Holland had thirty Knights: Arnoul Counte of Guines, had fiftcene Knights. The Counte Perche; the Counte of of Mont-fort; the Counte of Mont-Belliard, with an infinite number of braue men, the floure of Chiualrie, who being arriued at Calice, put their Sayles to the winde, and safely coasted on England, landing in the Isle of Tenet, at a place called Stanchore, the twelfth of the Calends of Iune. King Iohn was then in the Porte of Douer with his Army of Strangers, but being not strong enough to Fight with Lewes; he fled thence toward Winchester, so that Lewes (at his owne ease) landed his Army at Sandwich, and at his first arriuing, possessed himselfe of all places on the Coasts of England, except Douer, and so came straight to London, where he was magnificently receiued by the Barons of the Land, of whom, (together with the Citizens of London) he receiued their Homages, and liedge oathe of fidelity: As on his part, he sware vpon the Holy Euangelists, that he would make good Lawes to them all, and recouer their lost inheritances, vsurped in the name of King Iohn Without Land.

His comming to London.

Immediatly he laboured to cleanse the Countrey, of wandring Dutch Soldiours, which depended on King Iohn, and tooke the homages of the King of Scots Alexander, for that which he possessed from the Crowne of England, and of the Earles, William de Warren, William Earle of Arundell, William Earle of Salisbury, William Marshall the younger, and an infinite number of others, who abandoned and forsooke King Iohns part, to Honour the rising Sunne; who receiued for his Lord Chauncellour, Simon de Langton, an Englishman.

King Iohns Dutch Soldiours sent out of the land.

While matters thus proceeded, King Iohn chaunced to dye in the Castell of Newarke, on Saint Lukes day in October, the said yeare, One thousand, Two hundred and sixteene.

The death of King Iohn in the Castell of Newarke.

After his death, they of the Clergie and Nobilitie, (who had maintained his cause) met together at Gloucester, where they crowned King of England, His eldest Sonne Henry, called the Third of that name, being then but ten yeares olde: And the voyage which Monsieur King Lewes made backe into France, gaue way to the Barons of England, to do their seruice now to the rising Sun, But the said Monsieur Lewes of France, in his Crowning King of England, tooke for Armes, De France Escartele d'Angleterre, which he held all his life time, with the title of King of France and England, &c. And the memorie thereof is conserued to this day in the Rituall of Ceremonies, obserued at the Sacring and Crowning the most Christians Kings.

The comming of King Henry the Third to the Crowne, and his marriage.

Henry, third of the name, eldest Sonne to Iohn Without Land, and Isabell of Angoulesme, tooke to wife Ælianor of Prouence, Sister to Margaret the Queene of France, wife to the King S. Lewes, daughter to Raimond, Counte of Prouence, and by this mariage were borne fiue Sonnes, and three Daughters, the Sonnes were Edward, after King of England by the name of King Edward the Fift.

Edmund, Earle of Lancaster.

William died young, and was buried at the new Temple London.

Iohn died young, and Richard who died also young. The daughters were Margaret, Wife to Alexander King of Scots.

Beatrix, maried to Iohn Duke of Bretaigne, and Catharine, who died young.

The two marriages of Edward the first, and Issue.

Edward, First of that name, eldest Son of King Henry the Third, was married twise. The ſame Edward the third, in the Fiftieth yeare of his age, which happened in the yeare of Grace One thouſand, three hundred, ſixty and one, for the Ceremony of his Iubilie, which the Church celebrated from Fifty to Fiftie yeares, auncientlie from Age to Age, that is to ſay, from an Hundred yeares to an Hundred yeares, and now at euery fiue and twenty yeares) gaue repeale of Curſſe to all his ſubiects, and baniſhed perſons for time or perpetuity: hee deliuered out of priſons, ſuch as were detained for debts, and all kinde of crimes. He was Authour of the Franchiſes and Priueledges, which the Engliſh tearmed The Great Charters. Ordayning and appointing alwayes after, that his Succeſſours the Kings of England, ſhould practiſe and doe the like, in the Fiftieth yeare of their age. And the ſame yeare he ordayned, that all Expeditions of Iuſtice, Decrees, Sentences, Iudgements and Contracts, ſhould thenceforforward be made in the Engliſh-Saxon tongue. For vntill this yeare, ſince the Conqueſt of England made by William the Baſtard, Duke of Normandy, Liegeman to the facred Kings of France: all thoſe Expeditions were concealed in the French language.

The Royall Iubilie of King Edward the Third.

Richard, Second of that name, Sonne to Edward Prince of Wales, deceaſing while his Father liued: came to the Crowne of England, after the death of his Grand-father Edward the third, in the Moneth of Iuly, One thouſand, three hundred, ſeauenty ſeauen. Hee was twiſe maried.

The comming of King Richard the ſecond to the Crowne.

Firſt to Madame Anne, Siſter to the Emperour Wenceſlaus; but by her hee had no iſſue.

His ſecond wife was Madame Iſabell of France, daughter to King Charles the Sixt, being eight yeares of age when ſhee paſſed into England. Shee had no iſſue neither, becauſe King Richard was made a priſoner, and afterward ſlaine, by commaund of Henry of Lancaſter, Earle of Derbie, Sonne to Iohn of Gaunte, Duke of Lancaſter, whom the ſaid Richard had baniſhed from England. So that Henry hauing ſafety in France, obtayning ſuccour, came againe into England, where he was made King. The faction of the White Roſe againſt the Red (ſuch as wee haue formerly touched) began againe at this time, becauſe by the death of Richard, Lyonnell of England, Duke of Clarence of the White Roſe, was the elder Sonne of Edward the Third, and ought to precede Iohn of Gaunte; from whoſe Sonne neerthel-eſſe, this Henry Earle of Derby, (taking part with the Red Roſe) caried the Crowne by might, and contrary to reaſon. Richard reigned twenty two yeares, and died without any iſſue; his Succeſſour in the Kingdome, was Henry of Lancaſter, fourth of the name, Crowned the laſt day of September, in the yeare One thouſand, three hundred, fourtelcore and nineteene; hee was maried twiſe, firſt to Mary, daughter and one of the heires to Humfrey de Bohun, Earle of Hereforde, Eſſex & Northampton, & by her he had foure Sons, & two daughters.

Henry, who was King, fift of that name.

Thomas, Duke of Clarence.

Iohn, Duke of Bedforde; And

Humphrey, Duke of Gloceſter. His Daughters were

Blanche, wife to Lodowick, Sonne to the Duke of Bauaria: And Phillip, married to Iohn King of Denmake.

Thomas Duke of Clarence, was ſlaine in an encounter of the French, & left noiſſue

Iohn Duke of Bedforde was three times maried. His firſt wife was Anne, daughter to Phillip the good Duke of Bourgongne: her graue is to bee ſeene in the Celeſtines at Paris.

The ſecond wife was Katherine of And by whom hee had Henry, Biſhop of Winchеſter, and Cardinall of England. The laſt was Iacquetta, daughter to Peter of Luxemburg, Earle of Saint Paule.

Humphrey Duke of Gloceſter, tooke away perforce Iacquetta of Bauaria, wife to Iohn Duke of Brabant; to whom ſhe came againe, after the death of Humphrey, deceaſſing without iſſue.

The ſecond wife of Henry the fourth, Ioane, Widdow to Iohn de Mont-fort, Duke of Bretaigne, and by her he had no childe. Hauing reigned almoſt foureteene yeares, hee died the twentieth day of March, in the yeare One thouſand, foure hondred & twelue, leauing for Succeſſor to the Crowne of England, his eldeſt Son

Henry fift of that name, who through the bad faction of Phillip of Bourgongne, (whom his owne wel-willers tearmed the good Duke) eſpouſed Madam Katherine of France, daughter to King Charles the Sixt. The mariage was celebrated in the Citty of Troyes in Champagne, whereby iſſued their only Sonne

Henry, ſixt of that name, who was King of England by the death of his Father, happening the laſt day of Auguſt, in the yeare one thouſand, foure hundred, twenty & two, hauing reigned nine yeares. He had to wife Margaret of Cicilie, daughter to good King Rene of Cicilie, Duke of Anion, and of this mariage came their only Sonne Edward.

The faction of the White Roſe preuailed againſt the Red, becauſe Richard duke of Yorke, chiefe of the White Roſe, gaue two Battailes to the ſaid King Henry the Sixt, detained priſoner. In both of them, Margaret of Sicilie, a moſt couragious Princeſſe, went into France for ſuccour, and (by meanes therof) paſſed againe into England, and wunne the bataile, wherin was ſlaine the Duke of Yorke, head of that part, as alſo the Earle of Rutland, and ſet her husband at liberty.

After his deliuerance, Edward, ſonne to Richard Duke of Yorke, gaue him two battailes, which the ſaid King Henry loſt, ſo that he was conſtrained to flye into Scotland, from whence he returned in the habite of a Greye Frier: but being diſcouered, he was commited to priſon, wherein he remained ten yeares. At the end wherof, he was deliuered by Richard Duke of Warwick, and the Duke of Clarence.

Edward of Yorke, Earle of Marche, was enforced to eſcape out of England, and to ſecure himſelf in Flanders, with his Father in Law Charles Duke of Bourgongne, of whom hauing ſuccour, he came againe into England, tooke, and cauſed King Henry the Sixt to be ſlaine, and his Son Edward, detayning Queene Margaret priſoner, and appointing her ranſome at fifty thouſand Crownes, which King Lewes the eleuenth payed for her deliuerance. The ſaid King Henry reigned almoſt thirty nine yeares, and by his death, his enemy daughter of Iames the fift, King of Scots, Husband to Mary of Lorraine, daughter to Claudius, Duke of Guise. The said Iames the fift, was Sonne to Iames the fourth, king of Scotts, Husband to Madame Margaret of England, daughter to king Henry the Seauenth, and eldest Sister to king Henry the Eight.

The said Iames, king of England and Scotland, intituled him King of Great Britaine, for reuniting the two kingdomes in his owne person. By his wife and Queene, Anne of Denmarke, daughter to Frederick, second of that name, and king of Denmarke, hee had two Sonnes and three daughters.

Henry, Prince of Wales, died aged about nineteene yeares, in the Moneth of November Sixe hundred and twelue.

Charles, Duke of Yorke, and now Prince of Wales, borne in the Moneth of November, One thousand, Sixe hundred.

His daughters, were named

Elizabeth, borne in the Moneth of August, One thousand, fiue hundred, fourescore and sixteene: Married in the yeare Sixe hundred and twelue, to the Counte Palatine of the Rhine Frederick, Prince Elector of the Empire.

Mary, borne in December One thousand, fiue hundred fourtscore & eighteene.

And Sophia, dying young.

THE INSTITVTION OF THE ORDERS OF ENGLAND.

CHAP. II.

Fashion of Royall Garments in England.

Mathew Paris (one of the most Auncient Historians of England, next to Venerable Bede and Gyldas) describing the liues of the first Kings of England, Successours to William the Conquerour, writeth, that the said Kings brought into England, the fashion of Royall Garments and ornaments, the Ceremonies obserued and vsed, as well at the Sacring of the most Christian Kings of France; as also the forme of creating of Knights vsually in France. He speaketh it to this purpose, because king Henry, third of that name, made knights of his Brethren by the mothers side, the Sonnes of Hugh le Brun, Earle of Marche, and of Queene Isabell of Angoulesme, Mother to the said king Henry, who made those knights, Secundum Regum Francorum consuetudinem, after Fasting, Watching and Bathing. Wee haue set downe the auncient formes vsed at those Creations, in the Tracte of the Order of the Star, to speake any more thereof, ferueth but to say the same againe.

Knights made by King Henry the Third.

We may onely say, that in England, there hath not bin any Ordes, bearing a peculier name; before that of the Blewe Garter, instituted by king Edward, Third of that name.

At all times, as some affirme there haue beene knights of the Bath, so named, because, before they were honoured with guilded Spurres, (which is the marke or note of knighthood) they washed and bathed themselues, watched in the Church, made Confession of their sinnes, to be more cleane and pure both in Soule and Body, to receiue the degree and Honour of knighthood, the acte most importing their whole life.

Sir John Froissard writeth, that the king of England Henry, Second of that name, hauing conquered the Realme of Ireland, and brought vnder his obedience the foure petty kings thereof: the said Richard made them all foure knights, on Thursday, being the feast of our Lady in March, in the Cathedrall Church of Saint Peter in London, wherein they had watched on Wednesday all the whole night.

Before

Before the Coronation of the King of England, Henry of Lancaster, Fourth of that name, he made Sixe and Forty Esquires Knights of the Bath, who had their Chambers each man seuerall to himselfe in the Tower or Castell of London, watching and bathing themselues on Saturday night, and on Sunday at High Masse, the King himselfe made them Knights, giuing them long Grey Cassocks or Coates, with strait Manches or sleeues, furred with Minniuer, each hauing on his left shoulder, a double Corden of White Silke, with Tassells and Fringes hanging at the same.

It is held that there were no Knights of the Bath, before this Kings time

At the Coronation of Mary, Queene of England, Daughter to King Henry the Eight, the like number of Knights of the Bath were made.

An ancient custome obserued in England, of Knighting before crowning

And this hath anciently beene obserued in England, that Kings (before their crowning) made a certaine number of Esquires, Knights of the Bath, to be serued by them at their Sacring and Coronation, as Mathew Paris noteth in many places of his History. And we learne of him, as also of Ingulphus, Iohannes Salisburiensis, of Matheus Florilegus, of William Camden, and other Historians of England, the Ceremonies which the Kings exercised in the Creation of Knights of the Bath, others were called Knights of the Crownes, because, to distinguish them from Esquires, they wore vpon their left shoulders an Escutchion of Azure Silke, with three Crownes of Gold embroydered thereon.

Knights of the Bath called Knights of the Crownes, and the reason why.

The Esquires that were chosen to be made Knights; in the Euening before the Ceremony, were cloathed with Ash-coloured Gray-Cloth, after the manner of Hermites, with the Hood or Capuch, a small woollen Cappe on the head, and Gamathes of the same Cloth on the legges. And in this manner they went two & two together in the Euening, to shew by this Ceremony, that they consecrated their liues to Iesus Christ, and in defence of his faith to spend their dayes in warre, euen to the last drop of their blood.

Their Habite before Knighting, and Ceremonies obserued.

At returne from the Church, these Batchelors went and supt all together, each Bachellor hauing two Esquires to serue and attend on him. After supper euery man returned to his Chamber, where his Bed was fairely Curtaind with Red Silke, before which was fixed the Shield of Armes, and Blazons of the Bachelor, and neere to the Bed stood a Bathing-Tubbe, with necessary Linnens thereto belonging. Prayers being ended, they bathed themselues, curlled their locks of hayre, and their Squires afterward did the like.

On the next Morrow, about the break of day, they were awaked with the sound of Instruments, summoned and called to arise, by the noise of Drums and Trumpets. Cloathed againe in their Hermites Habites, as they were the day before; the Constable and Marshall of England called these Bachelors by order, causing them to sweare and promise: To loue God aboue all things; to defend the Church; to honour the King; and maintaine his royall Rights; to protect and succour Widdowes, Maides and Orphants to their vtmost power. Which the Bachelors hauing promised, and sworn vpon the holy Euangelists to doe, they were then conducted (two and two together) to Matins and Masse, being preceded or Vsherd by the Instruments of Musique, Trumpets, Fifes and Drummes, the Heraulds and Kings of Armes. And after Matins, they were (in the same manner) guided backe to their Chambers, there despoyled of their Hermites Habites, and cloathed with rich Garments of Carnation Silke, the Cassocke and Surcote, and the great Mantle or Cloake of fine Scarlet in Graine, as they tearme it in England. A white Hat or Bonnet, and a Linnen Nightcap on the head, white Gloues on the hands, fastened to the Cloake, tuckt vp on the left shoulder, with long tasselled Cordons of white Silke.

The Oath giuen to the young Bachellors.

The Knights in their rich Habites and furniture.

This being thus done, euery Bachelor mounteth on his Horse or Courser, being a choyse Horse for Seruice, well saddled and harnised with White and Blacke, and on the Chanfrane or Front-stal, the Signe of the Crosse in Embroydery; each man hauing his Page before him on horseback, who beareth the Bachelors Sword by the point of the Scabbard, the hilt fairely gilded aloft, whereto are fastened the gilded Spurres, and on either side of this Page on horseback, the two Esquires belonging to the Bachellor.

According to ancient custome.

In this equipage the Bachelors goe to the Court, or Castell of the King, guided with delle si qu'il ne s'en sçauoit conseiller, & n'y faisoit que penser tousiours, cõbien que le Comte de Salebery fust le plus priué de tout son Conseil, & l'vn de ceux d'Angleterre qui plus loyaument l'auoit serui. Si aduint que pour l'Amour de ladite Dame, & pour le grand desir qu'il auoit de la voir, il auoit faict crier vne grand Feste de Iousles à la My-Aoust, à estre en la bonne Cité de Londres. Et commanda expressement au Comte de Salebery qu'il ne laissast nullement que Madamoiselle sa femme n'y feust, & qui elle amenast toutes ses Dames & Damoiselles qu'elle pouuoit auoir entour elle. Aelix la Comtesse y vint le plus simplement Atournee qu'elle peust, &c.

In another Chapter he writeth, that the same King did so ardently loue the faire and Noble Lady Madame Alix Countesse of Salisbury, as he could not abstaine. For Loue admonished him night and day, representing her beauty so fresh and gracious, as he could do nothing but dayly thinke on her. Howbeit the Earle of Salisbury was one of the most priuate of his Councell, and one of them of England that had most loyally done him seruice. So as it came to passe, that for loue of the said Lady, and for the longing desire hee had to see her; hee caused to bee proclaimed a sollemne Feast of Iousting, in mid-August, to bee held in the good City of London. Expressly he commanded the Earle of Salisbury, that he should be no hinderance to his Lady and Wifes being there, & that she should bring with her all the Ladies and Gentlewomen, as shee could haue about her. Alix the Countesse of Salisbury came thither, the very simplest attired that could be, &c.

Concerning the Orders first Institution, and vpon what occasion

We haue written in the Eight Booke of the Historie of Nauarre, Page 469. that the Order of the Kingdome of England, tearmed of the Blew Garter, was established (according to the the testimony of Polidore Virgill, in his Historie of England) by King Edward, Third of the name, Sonne to Edward the Second, and Madame Isabell of France (the flaming Firebrand of France) in the yeare One Thousand, Three Hundred, Forty and Seauen. That this Order had S. George for the Gouernour or Patron; Loue for the Subiect, and the Deuice French. Forasmuch as King Edward being wounded with loue of faire Alix, the Countesse of Salisbury, one day as hee was deuising with her, the left Garter (of Blew Silke) of this Lady, hung loosely down vpon her shooe. King Edward, ready at the Ladies Seruice, and to take vp the Garter; by little and little lifted her cloathes so high, that the Courtiers had some sight of her white Smock, & could not refraine from smiling. The Lady reprehended the King for this publike fault before his own people (who carried good lookes, but bad thoughts, and pleased their owne opinion so much, that they made an Idoll of their vaine conceits:) King Edward therefore, to couer his owne honour, stopt all their mouthes with these few French words; Honny Soit Qui Maly Pense: (Honny signifieth in the old French Language To reproach, to Speake ill, and to Dishonour) and made instantly a like or the same vow, as that was of the Duke of Bourgongne Philip the Second, noted heretofore: That such was the mockery of this Garter, as it should be held a great Honn to weare the like.

The French words embroydered on the Garter.

The number of Knights to bee of the Order, & manner of their Habits.

That effects might follow wordes, hereon arose the Knights of the Order of the Blew Garter, which hee composed of Fiue and Twenty Knights, and no more.

Euery one of them, according to the first Institution, must be cloathed with a long Cassocke of Carnation Sattin or Damaske: the large Cloake or Mantle of Violet Veluet, lined with White Damaske, and the Chapperon had a faire large round hood of Crimosine Veluet, worne on the right shoulder, tyed before with two great Cordons of White Silke, trayling downe to the ground, with two great Tassels of Silke. Nor are these Cloakes turned vp on the left shoulder, because thereon is Embroydered, Vn Escu d'Argent, charge d'vne Croix dreitte de Gueules Liure d'Angleterre, & a l'entour, dudit Escu la Deuise de L'ordre, Honny Soit Qui Maly Pense. The Buskins or Gamashes worne by the said Knights, are likewise of Carnation Veluet, and beneath the knee on the left legge, a Garter or small Girdle, Blew, Embroydered with Gold and Precious Stones, fastened with a Buckle & Tongue of pure gold about the Legge.

Collar of the Great Order of the Order.

The Great Collar of the Order (whereof some make Author King Henry Fift of that Name, as wee vnderstand by William Camden King of Armes in England, by the name of Clarenceaux, in his Historie of England) was of Gold, composed of White Roses, and Red Roses, enterlaced and knit in manner of True-loue Knots. At

At this present, in stead of those knots, are combined the Thistles of Scotlands Order, since King Iames came to the Crowne of England; to the end, that the two Orders might be ioyned together, according as the Kingdomes are. At the point of the said Caller (directly on the Breast) hangeth the figure of Saint George on Horseback, hauing a Dragon at his feete, which is not made in Ouall forme. The lesser Order which these Knights doe daily weare about their neckes, is a Blew Cordon or Ribband, and a George depending thereat. I haue seene of these Collars at Paris, when the Duke of Lennox was there, in the yeare One thousand sixe hundred and foure. Here you shall see who were the first Knights, and other of the same Order, from King to King vnto this present.

Vnion of the two Orders of England and Scotland.

Now note what Froissard saith in his first Volume of this Order, which he calleth The Fellowship or Brotherhood of Saint George.

En ce temps vint en propos, & en voulente au Roy Edouard d'Angleterre qu'il feroit faire, & redifier le grand Chastel de Windesore, que le Roy Artus fit iadis faire, & fonder lieu premierement fut commencte, & esleuee la Noble Table Ronde dont tant de lens & vaillants Hommes, & Cheualiers estoint, & y sirent & trauaillerent en Armes, & en prosesse par tout le Monde. Et feroit ledit Roy vne Ordonnance de Cheualiers, de Luy, & de ses Enfants, & des plus Preux de sa Terre, & en seroient en somme Quarante: & les nommeroit on les CHEVALIERS DV BLEV IARTIER, & la feste à durer d'An en An, & de la solemniser à Windesore le Iour Sainct George (qui est le Vingt-Troisiesme d'Auril. Et pour ceste fesse commencer, le Roy assembla de tout son Pais Comtes, Barons, Cheualiers & leur dist son intention. Et ils luy accorderent ioyeusement pource qu'il leur sembloit vne chose moult honorable en tout Amour se nourriroit. Adonc furent esleus Quarante Cheualiers (Froissart s'est mesprise, car cest Ordre n'estoit composé que de Vingt-cinq Cheualiers, & du Roy Chef de l'Ordre non compte au nombre des Vingt-cinq) par aduis, & par renommee les plus Preux de tous les autres, lesquels seellerent & iurerent à pourfuir, & tenir la Feste, & les Ordennances telles qu'elles estoient la dessus, & fit le Roy fonder, & edifier vne Chappelle de Sainct George au Chastel de Windesore, & y establit Chanoines pour Dieu seruir, & les renta moult grandement. Puis enuoya le Roy publier la feste par ses Heraulx en France, en Escosse, en Bourgongne, en Haynau, en Flandres, en Braban, & en l'Empire d'Alemagne. Et si donnoit à tous Cheualiers, & Escuyers qui venir y voudroient, Quinze Iours de Sauf conduict apres la Feste. Et deuoit estre ceste Feste le Iour de Sainct George ensuiuant L'an Mil Trois Cents Quarante Quatre au Chastel de Windesore. Et deuoit estre accõpagnee la Royne d'Angleterre de Trois Cents Dames, & Damoiselles toutes Nobles & Gentil-Dames, & parees richement de parements semblables.

John Froissard in the first Tombe of his Chronicle.

For the rest, we haue sufficiently discourssed the Armes, Crests & Supporters of the said Order of the Garter, which may be seene in an infinite number of imprinted Bookes and Manuscripts, remaining yet in mine owne hands, with the figure of the vnion of the Roses White and Red, printed & cut in Copper at London, by Iodocus Hondius, An. 1589.

We will finish this Order, by the Blazons and Supporters of the Armes of England, and with the Kings, Heralds and Pursuiuants of Armes of the said Kingdome.

The Armes are De France, Escartelé D'Angleterre.

The Supporters: On the right side a Leopard, and on the other a Griffon.

There are three Kings of Armes.

Garter, who is first; for honour of the Order, but not for Antiquity, because his Institution was but by King Henry the Fift.

Clarenceux: And Norroy.

Both of them Instituted by King Edward third of that name; And these two Kings are called Kings of Prouinces.

There are sixe Heralds; namely,

2. Sommerset.
6. Chester.
3. Windsore.
5. Richmond.
4. Lancaster.
1. Yorke. *

Who haue foure Pourssuiuants vnder them; to wit,

3. Rougedragon.
1. Portcullis. Which we tearme Harro,

* The Officers of Armes doe giue their attendance according to their antiquity in creation.

Harroy, that the King of England, Henry, eight of the name, tooke for his Deuise.

2. Blew-Mantle.
4. Rouge Crosse.

All these Officers are immediately allowed by the owne hand of the Kings of England, or in their absence or impeachment, by the Constable or Earle Marshall of the Kingdome, who giuing them their Crownes and Collars, createth the Pursuiuants and granteth Coates to the Heralds and Pursuiuants. They haue a House or Colledge for their meeting together, perticularly appointed for them in the Citie of London, and their Pensions or Wages are iustly payed them from the Kings Exchequer.

Gabrer King of Armes, hath charge of all such matters as concerne the Order, to carry mandates and all instruments necessary, as well to the Knights as Bachelers, elected and named for the said Order.

Clarenceaux King of Armes, hath for his deuision all the Prouinces and Countries of England, which are in the East, West and South sides, from the Riuer of Trent.

Norroy is King of Armes, of those parts extendind beyong the said Riuer, into the North.

The charge and exercise of these two Kings of Armes, is to command the Heralds and Pursuiuants, to view and visite in the Prouinces of their diuisions, all Noble Houses; to obserue, make and describe their Pedegrees; distinguish and blazon the Armes of yonger Brothers from the elder; to ouerthrow and deface in publique Market places, those which are vsurped by Yeomen, Villaines, or their Sons; and to cut off the Spurs of those vsurpers, who counterfeit themselues as descended from Nobles, Knights and Esquires. Also to giue Armes to such Yeomen, whom the Kings will haue ennobled: And to order the Blacks, Obsequies and Funerals for Princes, Gouernors, Knights, and Nobles in their partitions.

In England there is perticularly a Chamber of Iustice, to iudge causes concerning the facts of Knights of the Garter, as well for things touching their goods, as those that respect their honor and person. And this Chamber is named The Court for Knights. Therin is deliuered all Commissions, Exploits and Assignations, necessary in matters ciuile and criminall: the signification whereof belongeth to the King of Armes Garter, who imployeth in them (according to the importance and occurrences of the fact) the other Kings of Armes, or Heralds.

The End of the Orders of England.

The Order of Scotland, called of Saint Andrew, or of the Thistle, and the Rew.

CHAP. III.

L'Ordre d'Escosse, dit de Saint Andrieu ou du Chardon & de la Rue.

Edenborough the cheife Citie of Scotland.

Scotland, a part of Great Bretaigne, is an auncient State or Kingdome alone, and seperated from England by two Riuers, the one comming from the East, and called Tueda, and the other from the West, named Solueo, all the rest of the Iland is engirt with the Sea, tearmed the Ocean. Edenborough is the Capitall Citie of the Kingdome (where the Kings of Scots, predecessours to Iames the sixt, now reigning, and King of all Great Bretaigne) haue made their ordenarie residing.

Setting aside the auncient Originall of the Scots, and the Warres which they haue had against the Picts, the old English and Saxons their neighbours, and which the curious Reader may see in the Histories of Marianus Scotus; of Ioannes Lesleus, Bishop of Rosse, imprinted at Rome, In ædibus populi Romani, Anno 1568. of George Buchanan, and other Scottish Historians; wee will come to their Kings, the first of whom (by their saying) was Fergus, who they make to be the Son of Ferquhard, King of Hibernia or Ireland. Fergusius fausiis omnium acclamationibus, Fatali Cathedræ insidens, primus Scotorum Rex in Albione dictus est. Three hundred and thirty yeares before the Incarnation of our Sauiour and Redeemer Iesu Christ.

Fergus the first King of Scotland.

King Hiber that came from Egypt, & brought the Mable Stone.

The Scots say, that their King, named Hiber, who came from Ægypt to inhabite on the coasts of Spaine, and from thence into Ireland, so called of his name; brought along with him a Stone of Marble, made in the fashion of a Chaire, wherein hee made it his vse to sit. And this Chaire, which they called Fatale, the Kings of Scots were seated in, at their election to the Kingdome. A custome which was continued by the Kings, descending of Fergus, first of that name, vnto the King John Balioll, ouercome by the King of England Edward, first of that name, who caused the Marble Chayre to be brought from Scone in Scotland, where it was kept; to his Pallace at Westminster neere London, where at this day it is to be seene. Which Edward was incited to doe, because by an ancient credited saying, it was verily beleeued, that the Kingdome of Scotland should change from thence, to follow the fortune of him, who was to become Maister thereof, according as two verses, engrauen on the fatall Marble, doe report.

The Mable chaire brought into England.

Ni fallat fatum, Scoti quocumque locatum
Inuenient lapidem, regnare tenentur ibidem.

The Armes of King Fergus.

This Fergus, by the magnanimity of his courage, tooke for his Armes and deuise, the creature accounted the Symboll of valiancy and generositie, to witt D'Or, Au Lyon rempant de Gueules (which the Kings of Scotland haue retained, without changing, euen to this present) Au Mezail tarre de front, et coronne, et pour Cimier vn Sceptre au coste droict, et vne Espee nuë a l'autre.

Donald the first Christian King of Scotland.

After the said Fergus, the Scots accounte fiue and twenty Kings Idolaters, vnto Donalaus, first of that name, who was their first Christian King, by the meanes of Pope Victor, first of the name, who sent them Priests, by whose preaching and miracles wrought, the said King of Scotland, the Nobility and people, embraced and receiued the Catholique Religion, in the yeare of Iesus Christ, two hundred and three, and from the establishment of the said Kingdome, fiue hundred, thirty and three.

After the said Christian King Donalde the first, vntill King Achaius, there are rancked seauen and thirty Kings successiuely.

This Achaius, made League and Alliance offensiue and defensiue, towards all and against all Kings and Princes, not excepting any; with King Charlemaigne and the most Chri-

Christians Kings of France his Successours to perpetuity, in the yeare of Grace, Eight hundred and nine. The Conuentions and agreements of this League spake particularly.

The Articles of the League concluded on.

That to Perpetuity, Alliance and Confederation, should be betweene the Scotts and Frenche.

That in the warres which the English made, the said Scots and French should giue succour mutually and reciprocally, the one to the other.

That if it happened the said English, should make warre in France; the Scotts must then giue them succour with men of warre, who should be waged and maintained at the expences of the French.

The same should they likewise doe, furnishing the expences with their money, if the said Scotts should be warred on by the English.

That for following time, neither the Scotts nor French, should fauour the parte of the English, either with money, councell, Armes or victualles, vnder paine of being declared guilty of High Treason.

That the French should make no Peace or Truce with the English; except the King of Scots were comprised and named therein.

That the Couenants and Conditions aboue named, should be confirmed from King to King, and at euch change of them, and their Pragmaticall Sanctions to bee sealed and confirmed reciprocally on both sides.

The ioy for this confederated alliance.

The Scots ioyfull of this Alliance, accepted it for their aduantage and benefit, as the very greatest and most famous of Christendome, and deleagued for their Ambassadours, William, Brother to Achaius their king, assisted with the councell of foure persons more, renowned for learning, named Clemens, Iohn, Rabanus and Alcuinus, accompanied with foure thousand men of warre, sent to the succour of king Charlemaigne. Of those foure Doctours and vtterers of knowledge, king Charlemaigne kept two, the one as Regent and Gouernour of the Vniuersitie of Paris, and the other for that of Pauia, which he had founded and erected, to instruct in learning the French, Lombardes, and the nations of Italie, which hee had reduced vnder his obedience. The two worthy Doctours, so stayed by king Charlemaigne at Paris and Pauia, were Iohn, sirnamed Scotus, a Scottish man both by nation and Sir-name, and Claudius Clemens.

Two learned Doctours aduanced by King Charlemaigne, Iohannes Scotus & Claudius Clemens.

To preserue the memory of this Alliance to posterity, the Scotts report, that Charlemaigne gaue permission to the said Achaius, king of Scotland, and to his Successours in the said kingdome, to Honour and enclose Le Lyon de leur Armes D'vn double Essonier et Tresceheur Fleuré, Contrefleure De France de Gueules, & de porter la Coronne esleuee, et clescheé a l'Imperiale, le Chappeau decoré de quatre Fleures de Lys esleuee entre pareil nombre de Croix pattees. Which the kings of England

The Armes of Scotland Enlarged.

Scotland haue conserued in Armes, And Crowned to this very day.

Æguinard, Secretary to the State, nourished (from his tender youth) in the Court of France, decribing the life of the said King Charlemaigne, maketh a denumeration of strange Princes, who sought for, and embraced the amity of that puissant Monarch. First of all, the Emperours of Constantinople, Nicephorus, Michaell and Leo: Aaron King of the Persians, Ruler of the greatest part of the East, the Indiaes excepted: Alphonso King of Gallicica and of the Asturies, with the Kings of Scotland, of whom he speaketh thus. Scotorum quoque Reges sic habuit ad suam voluntatem per suam munificentiam inclinatos, Vt eum nunquam aliter quam Dominum, seque subditos ac seruos eius pronuntiarent. Extant Epistolæ ab eis ad eum missæ, quibus huiusmodi affectuum erga illum indicatur.

Such as sought the friendship of King Charlemaigne.

This Alliance of the two Crownes of France and Scotland, hath continued (as the Scots themselues say) for the reignes of one and Forty Kings of France, and sixe and Forty of Kings Scotland, contayning the space of Eight hundred and twenty yeares.

The continuance of this lincked amity, and the succours giuen by the Scots to France.

In vertue of which Alliance or Confederation, many remarkable succours haue bin giuen by the Scots to France. The forenamed Achaius assisted King Charlemaigne, with foure thousand Scots, conducted by his Brother Guillaum, who did profitable seruice in tho warres, in Italie, Saxonie, Hungaria and Spayne.

Malcome, Third of that name, King of Scotland, sent two thousand men of his to Monsieur Hugues de France, called the Great, Counte of Vermandois, Brother to Philip, first of that name, to ioyne in the Voyage of the Holy Land, for the Conquest of Ierusalem, vnder the Conduct of the valliant Prince, Godfrey of Bullen.

Alexander, second of that name, sent Three thousand Scots, to the succour of the Great King Saint Lewes, Conducted by Patach of Dunbar, Earle of Marche, for his voyage into the East.

Alexander, third of that name, sent to the same Saint Lewes, for his Voyage into Affrica, other two thousand Scots, Conducted by the Earles of Caerrct, and of Athol.

Dauid la Bruce, sent three thousand Scots to King Iohn, Conducted by William Earle of Douglas, who were slaine on the day of Poictiers.

Robert Stuart Lord Gouernour of Scotland.

Robert de Stuart, Gouernour of Scotland, and vncle to King Iames, First of that name, sent seauen thousand Scots to Monsieur Charles of France, the Dauphine of Viennois, Conducted and commaunded by his Sonne the Earle of Bouquhan, and Archembald Douglas, Earle of Wigton, and Brother in Law to the Earle of Boucquhan, who won the Battaile at Baugency.

His Sonne Murdaque, also Gouernour of Scotland, sent ten thousand Scots to the same Charles, being King, Fifte of that name, Conducted by his Brother the said Earle of Boucquhane, and Archembald Douglas, and the one eyed Earle of Douglas, Father to the Earle of Wigton, Godfather to the Earle of Boucquhane; who perished (for the most part) at the Battaile of Vernueill. Anno, 1424.

Iohn Stuart, Constable of Scotland.

Iohn Stuart, Constable of Scotland, in the yeare One thousand, foure hundred twenty fiue, brought foure thousand Scots to King Charles the Seauenth, with many other Companies, commaunded by Dauid le Pitulot.

Since those times, the Scots haue alwayes continued, and giuen to France very worthy seruices; vnder the charge of Robert Bernard; an other Robert and Iohn Stuart, Lord of Aubignie; Alexander Duke of Albaine, and Iohn his Sonne; Earle of Boucquhane; during the Reignes of Lewes the Eleuenth, Charles the Eight, Lewes the Twelfth, Frances the First, and Henry the Second.

The French against the Scots.

The said Scots, not satisfied to haue assisted with their powers France, whensoeuer it had neede, to diuert the auncient enemies thereof from warring thereon; drew them against themselues into Scotland: so that vpon the same subiect, the English (at all times enemies of France and Scotland) entred into their Kingdome, foare wounded, and tooke prisoner Dauid le Bruce, of whom we spake before, and with him ten thousand Scots slaine, at the Battaile of Dunham.

Iames the Fourth, vpon the same subiect, had warre against his Father in Law the King of England Henry, Eight of that name: was slaine in the Battaile of Flodden, with him the most part of the Nobility, and well neere foureteene thousand Scots.

Iames the Fift, his Son, had also the same Henry the (Eight being his Vncle) pressing vpon vpon him, because hee had made warre in fauour of the King of France, Frances the First, his Father in Law. This Warre succeeded ill to him, he dyed with griefe & discontent, eight dayes after an vnkinde crosse of Fortune, by the ouerthrow of his Army, conducted by Oliuer de Sainct-Clere, his Fauourite.

The death of King Iames the Fift.

Mary Stuart, Queene of Scotland, his Daughter and onely Heyre, was by the three Estates of the Realme, promised in Marriage to Prince Edward of England, Sonne to the said King Henry the Eight, in the Life time of his Father. But he being dead, the said Estates of Scotland finding this Alliance not liking to them, married their Queene, sending her into France, to the French Daulphine, Second Son to King Henry, Second of that name. Edward being angry at this Marriage, sent an Army into Scotland, conducted by his Vncle the Duke of Somerset, who wonne the Battaile of Puique, wherein dyed Fifteene Thousand Scots.

King Edward disappointed of his Marriage.

Beside these succours and signall Seruices, rendred so many times by the Scots to France, heereto may bee added, that since King Iames, Sixt of that name, King of Scotland, came to the Crown of England, by the death of Queen Elizabeth, Daughter to King Henry the Eight: the States of England made many requests to the Scots, that seeing they were now ioyned together, as being one people, vnder the obedience of one King onely, and their Kingdomes compriſed vnder the name of Great Bretagne; it was very requisite and good reason, that (thenceforward) there should be no other Alliance, Confederation or other Gouernment, but that of the English, labouring by this meanes, to diuert the Scots from the ancient Alliance of France, whereto the Scots would not listen by any meanes.

Motion made for altering the Alliance.

Because (from time to time) there had beene Alliance and Affinity betweene the French and Scots, from King to King, and Kingdome to Kingdome, and their Affinity renewed by diuers Marriages. For Iewes the Eleauenth being Daulphin, had to Wife in his first Nuptialls, Madame Margaret of Scotland, Daughter to King Iames First of that name, at which time, the blood of the two Nations of France & Scotland were conioyned and mingled all together. In regard that there were an Hundred and Forty, as well Scottish Ladies as Gentlewomen, married into France, of which number, were the two Sisters to the Queene Daulphine, the one whereof espoused the Duke of Bretaigne, and the other the Earle of Flanders.

Alliance contracted from time to time.

Alexander Duke of Albany, Brother to the King of Scots, Third of the name, espoused the Counteſſe of Bologne: And running at Tilt against Monsieur Lewes, Duke of Orleance, was wounded with a splinter of a Launce, of which hurt he died immediately, leauing off this Marriage.

The Issue by this Marriage.

Iohn Stuart, Duke of Albany, Count of Bologne, and Gouernour of Scotland, during the Minority of Iames the Fift: who married in his first espousals Madame Magdalen of France, eldest Daughter to King Frances, First of that name. And in second Marriage, the said King Iames tooke to Wife Mary of Lorraine, Dowager of Longue-Ville, Sister to the Duke of Guise; And of this Marriage was borne only one Daughter.

Mary Stuart, Queene of Scotland, Wife to the Daulphine Frances, Second of that name, King of Scotland.

The Kings of France incited by the fidelity of the Scots, of succours and Seruices so many times receiued from them, and of losses and damages suffered by them, in being alwayes of their part and Alliance: haue recompenced their principall charges, from the great Fiefs and fees of their Crowne.

Iohn Stuart, Constable of France.

Charles, Seauenth of the name, gaue the Office of Constable of France, the first of the Kingdome, to Lord Iohn Stuart, Earle of Boucquhane. He was made by the same King, Count d'Eureux, an ancient Appennage belonging to the Princes of the blood of France, Kings of Nauarre, and hee gaue him the Siegneury of Concressault. He deserued for his great and worthy Seruices, to beare for honor in the first Quarter of his Armes, De France à la Bordure de Gueules, à huict fermailets d'Or.

The Earle of Douglas was honoured with the Duchie of Touraine, which Charles the Seauenth, and his Brethren, Eldest Sonnes of France, held for their Appennage or Portion.

The said Douglas enioyed the said Duchie, hee, his Sonne, and youngest Sonne, vnder Priuiledges granted to Scottish Merchant.

These Priuiledges of the Scots, were confirmed by King Henry the Great, Fourth of that name, in the yeare One Thousand, Fiue Hundred, Foure Score and Nineteene. According as the same was formerly done by King Charles the Ninth, who in Anno One Thousand, Fiue Hundred, Three Score and Seauen, confirmed the Priuiledges granted by the Kings his Predecessors to Scottish Merchants, Priuiledges of Exemption from all kinds of Impositions laid vpon their Merchandises. Priuiledges not onely verified in the Court of Parliament at Paris; but also confirmed by Arrests in the Yeares, One Thousand, Fiue Hundred, Foure Score and One, and One Thousand, Fiue Hundred, Foure Score and Foure.

The Captaines of the Scottish Guards, who had the places of Honour wherevnto they were called: As those of the first Men of Armes; of ordenary excuses, the Marshall of the Lodging; the keepers of the keyes, & of the Quire in the Church, were naturall Scots. And vntill the disastrous death of King Henry, Second of that name, slaine by a Lance in the Iousts of Paris, by the Count de Montgommery, naturall Scots. By whose death and absence, those Charges were conferred on the Lords and French Gentlemen, admitted in like manner into the Companies of the Scottish Guards, with the naturall Scots. But returne wee now againe to King Achaius, the subiect of this our digression.

King Athelstane against Hungus King of the Picts.

Hungus, King of the Picts, pressed by the powers of Athelstane, King of the East Saxons, made his recourse to the said Achaius, who with his Army of ten thousand Scots, entred on the Marches and Frontiers of Northumberland, where hee gaue hot welcome to Hungus at his returne; yet he was surprized by the Army of Athelstane, with all his forces, as hee resolued (neuertheless) to giue the Enemy Battaile. And being in the night time on their knees at prayer, the Scottish men beheld in Heauen the Crosse of Saint Andrew the Apostle, their Patron, by vertue and encouragement of which sight, by breake of day the next morning, they had the victory ouer the King their enemy, who was there slaine, and the place hath euer since retained his name, being called Athelstanes Foord, abruptly tearmed Austans Foord. The Scots write, that about the yeare of Grace, Three Hundred, Three Score and Nine, Saint Regulus came forth of Greece into Scotland, bringing with him the Reliques of Saint Andrew the Apostle, whom they held for their Tutelary Saint and Patrone. And his Crosse En Saultoir (vnhansomly fashioned) for Colonel in their Penons, Standards and Banners.

A Vision of the Crosse of Saint Andrew.

Athelstanes or Austans Ford

After this Achaius, the Scots account twenty Kings in Succession, euen vnto Malcolme, Third of that name, who began to reigne in the yeare of Grace, One Thousand, Three Score and One. Of his Wife Saint Margaret, Sister to Edgar, he begat sixe Sonnes, and two Daughters.

Saint Margaret Wife to King Malcolme

Edward, slaine with his Father.
Etheldred, dying young.
Edgar.
Alexander.
Dauid: And
Edmond, who became a Monke.
The Daughters were

Mathilde, or Mahauld of Scotland, Wife to the King of England Henry, First of that name, called Beauclarke. And of this Marriage descended the Kings of England, Successors to the said Henry. The other Daughter, was Mary of Scotland, Wife to Eustace Count of Bologne, Brother to Godfrey of Bologne the First King of Ierusalem.

Donald, Brother to King Malcolme.

By a Concubine, before his Marriage, hee had a Bastard Sonne named Duncane, who was King of Scotland, Second of the name after Donald, Brother to Malcolme the Third, who, with his eldest Sonne was slaine on the Marches of Scotland, by the King of England William, Sirnamed Rous, or Rufus, Sonne to William the Conqueror, in the yeare of Grace, One Thousand, Foure Score and Seauenteene, the Sixe and Thirtieth yeare of his Reigne, the Queene Saint Margaret deceasing with sorrow foure dayes after him. In his time was made the Conquest of Normandy, by Willam the Bastard. And the Illustrious Family of the Stuarts, which holdeth

Originall of the Royall Family of Stuart

deth the Crownes of Great Bretaigne at this present, tooke stemme and foundation from Walter (Sonne of Fleance) Great Seneschall or Steward of Scotland. After King Malcolme succeeded

Donald, Sixt of the name, his Brother, in regard of the young yeares of his Nephewes; transported them into England, vndet the Guard of King Edgar, their Vncle by the Mothers side. The reigne of this man was of no long continuance, because

Duncane, Bastard of him dead, being assisted by a puissant Armie, which was sent him from William Rufus, vnder whom hee had martially serued: expelled Donald out of Scotland; who reigned no more then eighteene Moneths, but fled into the Ilands Hebrides. Duncane was slaine within a while after, by the cunning traines of Donald; who came againe into Scotland, where he ill-intreated the Nobility, the chiefest whereof resolued to call home

Edgar conducted into Scotland by an English Army, and the First King there annointed.

Edgar, the Third Sonne of Malcolme. From England he was conducted into Scotland (by an Army of Englishmen, sent from William Rufus) where he was receiued and installed in the fatall Chayre at Scone, and Donald shut vp in Prison, where hee dyed with griefe, in the fourth yeare of his Reigne.

Edgar was the first of the Kings of Scotland, Annointed and Sacred with Holy Oyle, by the Bishop of Saint Andrewes, named Godric, which hath euer since beene obserued at the Coronation of the Kings of Scotland. Saint Margaret, Mother to the said Edgar obtained this Priuiledge of Pope Vrbane the Second, who at that time presided in the Holy Seate.

This King liued peaceably in his Kingdome about the space of nine yeares, and dyed without Issue, in the yeare of Grace, One Thousand, One Hundred and Nine, and after him succeeded his Brother

Alexander, First of that name, called the Strong, who dyed also without Issue, after he had reigned Seauenteene yeares, in Anno, One Thousand, One Hundred, Twenty Sixe, leauing for his Successour his Brother

English Earldomes comming to the Crowne of Scotland.

Dauid, First of that name, who in the life time, and with the consent of his Father Alexander, tooke to Wife Mahauld, Daughter and sole Heyre to the Earle of Cumberland, Northumberland and Huntingdon, Earledomes, which by meanes of this Alliance came to the Crowne of Scotland, vnder the homage of that of England. Of this Marriage was borne their onely Sonne

Henry, who dyed in his Fathers life time.

Hee had espoused Adama, Daughter to the Earle of Warren, and by her hee had three Sonnes, and as many Daughters.

Malcolme,
William: And
Dauid.
The Daughters were Adama,
Margaret: And Mahauld.

Moreouer, hee had by the Widdow of Gualtier, Knight of the Thistle, a Bastard Sonne, named Gualtier, a Monke of holy life, Confessour and Councellour to his Brother Malcolme.

Dauid, First of that name dyed, hauing reigned nine and twenty yeares, in the yeare, One Thousand, Fiue Hundred, Fifty One.

Malcolme, Sirnamed The Virgin-Man.

Malcolme, Fourth of that name, teamed the Virgin-Man, eldest Sonne to the Prince of Scotland Henry, scceeded in the Kingdome, after the death of Dauid the First his Grandfather. He liued chastly, and not being married, gouerned by his naturall Brother, formerly named, and dyed after hee had reigned thirteene yeares.

An. 1163. he had for his Successour his Second Brother

William, Sirnamed the Lyon, who left by his Wife Hermingard, Daughter to the Earle of Beaumont, youngest Daughter to William the Conquerour, one Sonne, named

Alexander, and three Daughters, all married into England, to wit and other Authors who liued at that time, say all with one consent, this of her. Magnam post Abaelardi coniugis mortem ei in assiduis precibus fidem seruasse, Corpusque eius de loco vbi obierat, ad prædictum Paracleti Monasterium transtulisse.

Shee dyed the Sixteenth of the Calends of Iune, An. One Thousand, One Hundred, Threescore and Three. And at her entering, the Celestiall and Diuine Loue of these faithfull Louers appeared by Miracle. Helouisa, being at the end of her life, ordained and desired to bee carried to the Sepulchre or Tombe of Abaylard her Husband. After her death she was brought thither, and (a miraculous thing) her Husband, who twenty yeares before had lien in his Graue, lifted vp his arme on high, receiued the body of his Wife, and after hee had embraced it, held it fast to him.

An other testimony of true and cordiall affection.

Heloisa in agritudine posita præcepit, vt mortua intra Mariti tumulum poneretur. Et sic eadem defuncta ad tumulum deportata, Maritus eius qui multis diebus ante eam defunctus fuerat, eleuatis in brachijs illam recepit, & ita eam amplexatu, brachia sua restrinxit.

To the end, that like as this modest Dame (during her Marriage) had singularly affected and honoured her Husband; so after the dissolution thereof, and his life, she loued him more entirely, with loue wholly diuine and Celestiall, and liued all the rest of her life in continuall Chastity, & in obseruance of the Monasticall Rules, which the said Abaylard had prescribed to her, and followed him in the same Graue, to liue with him in eternall glory. These are the words of Peter of Clugny, writing the newes of her Husbands death, to the said Helouisa. Hunc ergo venerabilis & charissima in Domino Soror, cui post carnalem copulam tanto validiore quanto melius diuinæ charitatis vinculo adhæsisti, cum quo, & sub quo diu Domino deseruisti; hunc inquam, loco tuo, vel vt te alteram in gremio suo confouet & in aduentu Domini, in voce Archangeli; & in tubâ Dei descendentis de Cœlo, tibi per ipsius gratiam restituendum reseruat. Returne wee now againe to the Kings of Scotland.

Alexander the Third (of whom we discourst before this digression) dyed in An. One Thousand, Two Hundred, Foure Score, and Three, hauing reigned thirty foure yeares.

Being dead without Issue, and hauing declared (by his Testament) his Successor in the Kingdome: there grew contention betweene Iohn Baliol, and Robert Bruce, Princes issued of the Scottish Blood, to which of them the Crowne should come, because they were both descended of Dauid, Brother to King William; Robert, of Isabel of Scotland, the youngest Daughter, and Iohn, of Margarete of Scotland, eldest Daughter to the said Dauid. To vnderstand clearely this Genealogie, let vs tell you.

The variance happening betweene Iohn Baliell and Robert Bruce.

Dauid, First of that name, King of Scotland, Brother to King Alexander the First, had a Sonne.

Henry of Scotland, Father of three Sonnes, namely of Malcolme, Fourth of that name, King of Scotland, deceasing without Issue, as we haue said, of William, King of Scotland, of whom the Line fayled in the person of King Alexander the Third, the Subiect of this digression. And of Dauid of Scotland, Earle of Huntingdon, who left but two Daughters; to wit

Margaret: And

Isabell of Huntingdon.

Of Margaret, eldest Daughter to Dauid of Huntington, descended one onely Daughter

Dernogilde, Wife to Iohn Balioll, Father and Mother of this Iohn Balliol, who contended for the Crowne.

Isabell, youngest Daughter to Dauid of Huntingdon, wife to Robert Bruce, had a Son Robert Bruce, Father of this Robert Bruce, who pretended his precedency to the Kingdome, before his Cousin Iohn Balioll, who maintained the contrary. To make agreement betweene them, Edward the First, King of England, Sirnamed Long-shanks, was made Arbitratour, who adiudged the Crowne to Iohn Balioll, sitting in the Fatall Chayre, according to the ancient Customes. This Iohn and his Sonne Edward, were taken and ouerthrowne in Battaile, by the said King Edward the First, and then hee transported the Fatall Chayre, as we haue formerly declared.

Robert Bruce came to the Crowne of Scotland, which he defended valiantly against the English, surmounting them in great store of Encounters; so that he purged Scotland of the English, after a furious and Blody Battaile, wherein he had the victory, the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred and foureteene, the feast day of S. Iohn: This Robert had two wiues. By the first, named Elizabeth, Sister to the Earle of Marre, he had but one daughter, named Margery.

The other wife, was Sister to the Earle of Hulleſten, and by her he had one Sonne and two daughters, namely Dauid.

Margaret: And

Mahauld.

At the generall Parliament of Scotland, holde in the yeare before remembred, it was ordained, that for following time, the Kingdome of Scotland should appertaine to Dauid, the Sonne of Robert. And if he chaunced to dye without heires Males; to Edward, Brother of the said Robert, and to his Male children; who deceasing without heires Masculine: the Crowne of Scotland should then come to Margerie, eldest daughter to King Robert, and to her descendants, as well Males as Females.

An Order agreed on in the Court of Parliament.

There was a Treatie of Peace, betweene the Scots and English, by meanes of the Mariage of Ioane, daughter to Edward, the Third of that name, King of England, with Dauid of Scotland, Sonne to the said King Robert, who died the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred twenty and nine, and the foure and twentieth of his Reigne. Somewhile before his death, hee had made a vow to crosse ouer the Seas, to make warre vpon the Sarrazins: which hauing not done, hee appointed by his Testament, that his heart should be buried at the Holy Sepulchre of Ierusalem, which was performed by Iames Douglas his faithfull Knight, who (at his returne) came to dwell in Spayne, where he died in the seruice of the King of Arragon, in a Fight giuen against the Moores.

Peace treated on betweene the English and Scots.

Dauid, Second of the name, succeeded in the Kingdome of Scotland, by the death of King Robert his Father. His repose was so troubled by Edward of England, that this young King was constrained to forsake his Kingdome, and shelter himselfe in France, in the Courte of King Phillip de Valois, the Sixte and last of that name, who gaue the Conduct of a puissant Army to William Douglas, and hee expelled the English out of Scotland, where he reseated his Master King Dauid: who hauing reigned nine and thirty yeares, more in warre then peace, more in afflictions and miseries, then any pleasure or contentment: died in the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred twenty, without hauing any issue by his two wiues, Ioane the Daughter of England, or Margaret, daughter to the Knight Iohn Logy: So that by his death, according to the Decree of Parliament Generall, related before, the Crowne of Scotland came to the Eldest sister.

The English expulsed out of Scotland.

Margerie, who married Walter Stuart, and of this Mariage descended the Kings of Scotland, that reigne to this day. Behold heere the Sourse of that Illustrious Family.

The Originall of the Illustrious Family of Stuart.

Banquho, Thane of Loquhabir, that is to say, President and Gouernour of such a Prouince in Scotland, with his Sonne Fleance, caried themselues so vertuously in their charges, that they attained to great credit in Scotland. This was the reason, why King Mackbeth (immediate Predecessour of King Malcolme the third) was very enuious of their vertue, practising by wicked stratagems to murther them both. The father was slaine in the place.

Fleance escaped, and saued himselfe in England, trauayling to the Gouernour of the Prouince of Wales. This Fleance and his Father caried for their Armes D'or a la Fesse Eschiquettee D'Argent & de Sable de quatre Traicts, Which are the Auncient Armes of the Stuarts. This Fleance espoused the Daughter to the Gouernour of Wales, and of this mariage was borne.

The Armes caried by Fleance and his Father.

Walter, surnamed Banquho (according as his Father was) who returning into Scotland, fought valiantly for his King, against the Ilands Rebells, and the Sauages of Scotland. In recompence of his extraordinary vertue, he was made Great

There can no truth be expected from the father of lies.

ment, or as there is a common Prouerbe at Paris: He is a Foole that so trusts. On the morow after this crowning the Earle of Atholl, he was fastened to the taile of a Horse, being led so thorow all the quarters and streets of the Citty. On the third day he was drawne with foure Horses, his hart and bowells rent forth of his body, which finally was deuided into foure quarters, the head and they being sent through all the Prouinces and Townes of the Kingdome, and affixed to the principall places of them.

The rest of his complices.

The Complices in this execrable Parricide, were pinched, with burning Pincers, quartered, and cast vpon Wheeles, so to finish the rest of their miserable liues.

Prouidence to auoide confusion, and good successe ensuing on it.

James, Second of the name, the only Male childe left, succeeded in the Kingdome of Scotland, being then but sixe yeares of age: And this young condition of the Prince, gaue subiect to the Malcontents, to remoue all things out of order. To cleanse Scotland of these enormities, the Gouernour and Chauncellour of the Realme, assembled the three Estates in the Royall Citty, where the mutiners appeared, and were there ouer-reached at the end of a Feaste, made in the Kings Castell. The Table cloths being taken away, on the Table where the mutiners sate, was placed a Bulles head which (long before had bin the noate among the Scots, of condemnation to death.) They were instantly manacled and bound with cordes, and by their execution, Scotland reduced to perfect quietnes.

Ad præfinitam diem omnes sese sistunt. Publice coitur, disseritur varie de rebus variis; Prandetur simul. Douglacio Comiti, Dauidi eius fratri, ac Malcolmo Flemingo Cammaldeo, in Castello Edimburgensi, subito remota mensa, Caput Tauri (quod Scotis tunc temporis signum fuit in reos capitalis sententiæ latæ) Apponitur. In mensa vinculis constringuntur: post capite mensam multantur: quo facto res Scotica pacata fuit.

The said James had to wife Mary, Daughter to the Duke of Gueldres, and of this mariage issued three Sonnes and two Daughters.

James, afterward King, Third of the name.
Alexander, Duke of Albanie; And John, Earle of Marre. The Daughters were Mary, Wife to Iames Hamilton, Earle of Arane: And Margaret.

This James was slaine by the slice or piece of a Faulckon, breking at the siedge of Roxborough, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand foure hundred and ninety, hauing reigned foure and twentie yeares, leauing for his Successour his eldest Sonne

James, Third of the name, aged then only seauen yeares, who espoused Margan, Daughter to Christierne, First of that name, King of Denmarke, Sueden and Norway, by whom he had three Sonnes, and one Daughter.

James, afterward King, Fourth of the name.
Alexander, Duke of Rothsaye: And John, Earle of Marre.
The Daughter is not named -------

King James being (in his olde dayes) addicted to all couetous courses, and gouerned by councell of men of meane qualitie; all the Nobles of Scotland bandied themselues against him, elected Prince James his eldest Son, aged then but sixteene yeares, for their King, and vnder his conduct, marched in rancked Battaile against the Father, who was there slaine the eleuenth day of Iune, Anno, 1488. being the eight and twentieth of his Reigne, leauing for Successour in the Kingdome, his eldest Sonne.

James, Fourth of the name, who at the beginning of his Reigne, found the Realme full of troubles and seditions, The Earle of Lennox, the Lord of the Isle, and an infinite number of Barons, arose against him, to take the Crowne from him, and to reuenge (as they said) the murder by him committed on the person of his Father King James, whose bloody Shirt they caried openly, through the Townes and Prouinces of Scotland, thereby to procure a generall reuolt. Yet it came to passe (notwithstanding) that the mutiners were vanquished in a fought Battaile, to make it knowne to Subiects: that it belongeth not to them, to raise Armes against their Prince, or to Canton themselues in his Townes, vnder whatsoeuer pretence or appearance.

Such are still apt to oppose their lawfull King, can neuer prosper.

Notwithstanding this victory, K. James, was long time afflicted with disturbances, hauing euermore before his face, the countenance of his father, of whose death he had bin the occasion. And he was verily perswaded, that at euery step he trode; the shadow of his Father followed him at his heeles.

Omnibus vmbra locis adero; dabis improbe pœnas.

He called also to his memory, diuers passages of the sacred Scriptures, That the sinne which bandieth himselfe against his Father, and speaketh euill of his Mother, shall be accursed in heauen and on earth: And all the people shall say, Amen. The same is said also of disobedient children, as passe out of the world into eternall darknesse. Qui maledixit Patri suo, & Matri, extinguetur Lucerna eius in medijs tenebris: So it is said in the twentieth of the Prouerbs. And if the life of the disobedient childe, shall be alwayes fatall and vnfortunate; then must his death be altogether extraordinary, the Rauens of the Torrents, accustomed to Carrion, shall picke out his eyes, and his body shall serue for foode to the yong Rauens; in the last of the Prouerbs. Oculum qui subsannat Patrem, & qui despicit Matrem, effodiant eum Corui de Torrentibus, & comedant eum filij Aquilæ. Heauen and Earth shall passe, but the Word of God remaineth for euer.

For this reason the said King James, obtained an absolution from the Pope, Alexander the sixt then sitting, as the Scottish Histories relate in these words. Alexander Sextus, Pontifex Maximus, cum intellexisset Regem incredibili quodam dolore penè consectum, quod eorum factioni, qui manus Patri inferendas coniurabant, se adiunxerat. Formunum primum suum Amanuensem (quem Protbonotarium vocant) abeum mittit, qui illum suo nomine bono esse animo iuberet, &c. This was done in the yeare of Grace, One thousand foure hundred ninetie one.

King Henry the seuenth his Daughter Margaret married to King James the fourth of Scotland.

This James tooke to wife the eldest Daughter of King Henry of England, seauenth of the name, named Margaret, in right of whom, James, sixt of the name, King of Scotland, succeeded to the Crowne of England after the death of Queen Elizabeth, as we haue alreadie showne in our precedent discourse. And of this marriage were many children born, which were not long liued: so that there remained but two Sons: James, fift of the name, King of Scotland, borne in the yeare, One thousand fiue hundred and twelue, the fifteenth day of Aprill: And Alexander, Duke of Rothsay, who died an infant, One thousand fiue hundred and sixteene.

Now notwithstanding this Alliance and kinred, King Henry of England the eight, brought his Armie into Scotland, against his Brother in Law, who was ouercome in the Battaile at the foote of the Mountaine by Flodden, foure houres after midday, the ninth day of September, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand fiue hundred and thirteene, the fiue and twentieth yeare of his Reigne, and nine and thirtieth of his age. After the Battaile, the Body of the King could not be found among the dead, nor remaining with the liuing. The English said, that the morrow after the Battaile, by the breake of day, they found the body of the King of Scotland, stretched out at length, and wholly dead, and that they caused it to be carried, first to Warwicke, and afterward to Richmond. The Scots on the contrary did maintaine, that the body transported by them into England, was that of the Lord of Bonhard, and not of the King, who the night after the Battaile, was seene safe and well at Kelsoy, and that from thence (grieuing for the Battailes losse) he went to finish his dayes at the holy Sepulcher of Ierusalem, and the deuout places of the holy Land, in prayer and teares, as performing penance for the death of his Father. Iudicia Domini abyssus multa.

Doubt and question about the Kings body.

James the fift, came to the Crowne of Scotland, being then but two yeares old. He was hurried among the troubles and seditions of the time, which neuer faile to giue their attendance, especially at such times as Kings are in their minoritie, according as the diuine written Word hath giuen vs assurance: Væ Regno, cuius Rex puer est, in whatsoeuer sence it can be turned.

He married two Wiues, the first Madam Magdalen of France, Daughter to King Francis the first. This mariage was solemnized (the said James being present) in the Church of Paris, the first day of January, One thousand fiue hundred thirty seauen. She died of a Feuer in Scotland, the sixt of the Ides of Iuly, in the same yeare.

In second Nuptials he espoused (by Ambassadours in France) the Earle of Murray, and David de Betoun Cardinall, Bishop of Mirepoix in Languedocke) Mary of Lorraine, Lorraine, Daughter to the Duke of Guise, Claudius of Lorraine, Widdow to the Duke of Longueuille. Of this marriage in Anno One thousand fiue hundred and thirtie, was borne James, in the yeare One thousand fiue hundred thirtie eight.

Arthur in Anno One thousand fiue hundred and fortie, both of them dyed in one day.

Mary, who was Queene of Scotland, borne in the yeare of Grace, One thousand fiue hundred fortie and two, the seauenth of the Ides of December.

James the fift, dyed soone after, to wit, the nineteenth day of the Calends of Ianuary, One thousand fiue hundred fortie two. Appointing his buriall to be neere to his wife, in the Church of Holy Crosse in Edenborough.

Mary, his onely Daughter, came to the Crowne of Scotland, the seauenth day of her birth, Crowned at Striueling, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand fiue hundred fortie three. And promised the same yeare to the Prince of Wales, Edward of England, Sonne to King Henry the eight, a marriage which was neuer performed. After the death of King Henry the eight, his Sonne Edward the sixt did what he could, to haue this Royall Princesse into England, against which, the Great Lords of Scotland made their opposition. Vpon this refusall, the English entred the Kingdome with a potent Armie, whereby the Scots were vanquished in a pitched Battaile. So that the States of the Realme thought it most conuenient, to send the yong Queene into France, and marie her there to the French Prince Daulphine Francis, afterward King of France, second of the name. The English endeauoured to surprize her on the Sea, but notwithstanding all their ambushes, she arriued safe and well there, in the yeare One thousand fiue hundred fortie seauen. And the espousals of the said Queene Mary, and the Prince Daulphine were celebrated in the Church of Paris, the foure and twentieth day of Aprill, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand fiue hundred and fiftie eight, after Easter. Of this mariage came no issue, and by the death of the said King Francis the second, happening in the Citie of Orleance, the the fift day of December, One thousand fiue hundred and sixtie. Queene Mary Dowager of France, returned the yeare following into her Realme of Scotland, and in some time after, she tooke as her second Husband, Henry Stuart, Duke of Albany, and Lord D'Arnley. And of this marriage issued their onely Sonne (called James the sixt) King of Scotland; by the vntimely and much to be moaned death of so great a Princesse, happening in England in the yeare, One thousand fiue hundred eighty eight.

We haue spoken formerly, that the Illustrious house of the Stuarts, tooke Originall and descent from Banquho, Thane of Loquhaber. And now say, concerning the appellation of the word Thane: Stuartorum familia (vt rem à capite arcessam) à Banquhone Regio in Loquhabriâ Thano; id est (vt Latine loquitur) Præside. This is all that is spoken by the Bishop Lesleus, in the seauenth Booke of his Historie, Page 257. without explicating more vnderstandingly, the source of this strange name, being an auncient Saxon word. For in the old Lawes of the English Saxons (commonly called Anglo-Saxons) mention is made of this word Thaynus and Sub-Thaynus, in many places.

Of the words Thaynus and Sub-Thaynus.

Among the auncient Anglo-Saxons, their estate of Nobilitie was deuided by certaine degrees of honour and preheminence. In the first place were the Earles, and next, the Barons, who were called Thanes. After them marched the Castillians, who they vsed to call Sub-Thanes, and the simple Gentlemen of the Field.

Degrees of Nobilitie among the Anglo-Saxons.

If the Fielden or Countrey Gentleman, had so well husbanded his affaires, as in value he were worth fiue Hides in Arpents of Land (Hyda in the Saxon Law and Norman, contained foure Roddes, and each Rod comprehended foure and twentie Acres of ground, as yet they speake in Normandy and Bretaigne) a Parish Church, an Abbey, Priorie or founded Hospitall, a House with a Tower, in manner of a Clock-house, with Battlements, murdring loop-holes, and a draw-Bridge: if he haue also some charge of office in the Kings House: Then he may goe equall and fellow like with the Baron called Thane, and may purchase the title also by the Princes

As concerning Merchants and Cittizens of walled Cities or Townes, if they haue made three voyages on the Ocean Sea, and won so much by their industrie, as to liue thereon, without meddling any more with Traffick: they shall be ennobled, and haue the name and qualitie of Thanes.

Concerning Cittizens and Merchants becomming Thanes.

If any one be so addicted to Studie, as he meriteth to haue some Order in Holy Church, for the seruice of Iesus Christ: he shall hold rancke with Noblemen, be exempt and discharged of all taxations and Subsidies, all therewhile as he liueth an Ecclesiasticall person. The knowledge of these auncient Lawes of the Anglo-Saxons, which made themselues Maisters of Great Bretaigne, doth serue exceedingly well to vnderstand the auncient Historians of England, and namely Mathew Paris, who through the whole course of his Historie, layeth stumbling-blockes in the way of strange Readers, for vnderstanding the auncient vocables of the Saxon Nation.

That which at this day is called Pampelona (founded by Pompeye, in the yeare Sixe hundred, fourescore & two of the foundation of Rome, and about Three-score before the birth of our Sauiour and Redeemer Iesus Christ) is now the Citty that hath the Bishops See, which, vnder our first Kings of Nauarre, acknowledged for Metropolitane the Archbishop of Auch, in the County of Armaignac in Gascoignie, and which (from Antiquity) had nine Dioceses and Gouernments, which confessed it to be Metropolitane. For this cause the Archbishoprick of Auch, with her large extendure, was called Nouempopulana, a Nouem Populis sibi contributis. At this day, the Bishop of Pampelona is subiect to the Archbishoprick of Saragossa, as the other Bishops of Nauarre in like manner are.

Of new People contributing thereto.

Concerning the auncient extendure of Nauarre cited euery way.

The Auncient extendure of the Kingdome of Nauarre, began towards the East, at the Towne of Atapuerca, neere to Burgos, the Capitall Citty of olde Castille, and the very greatest part of the Mountaine of Idubeda. To the North it possesseth the Prouince of Alaua, the Countrey all about the shoares of Sadorra, the lands of Losa, and the two parts of Biscaye, namely of Alaua and Guipuscoa. On the South side, it containeth the greater part of Arragon, the Pyrenean Mountaines, and those of Moncayo, with the territories of Calahorra, Terrassona and of Agreda. It runneth cutting on all sides, by the bad neighbouring of the Kings of Arragon and Castille, which haue sliced it into quarters. For vnder the last Kings, it was noated, as reduced only to sixe Merindadaes, (that is to say Gouernements: for in Nauarre Merin signifieth the Gouernour or Consull of a Citty) as it is at this day.

What Merindadaes are according to the meaning.

New Nauarre is bounded with the Pyrenean Mountaines on the East side: On the North, with the Prouince of Biscaye called Guipuscoa, and part of that of Alaua: The West containeth that of La Rioia, along the riuer of Ebro: And on the South, it hath the Kingdome of Arragon. And yet neuertheless, Nauarre is the most Noble, and the very auncientest Kingdome of Spayne, as it is acknowledged by Mariana, in the place before alleaged. Hanc Prouinciam quamuis angustis regionibus circumscriptam, in Præcipuis Hispaniæ partibus poni placuit. And the reading of this Inuentory instructeth vs, that the Kingdomes of Ouiedo, Leon, Arragon, Castille, Galicia, Portugall and other, in number equall to the Prouinces of Spayne; had not any beginning before, but long after this of Nauarre. And that which is most worthy, famous & remarkable, is; that the most part of these forenamed kingdoms, haue bin erected by Kings of Nauar.

The bounds of new Nauarre.

The wordes of Mariana.

Most of the Kingdomes erected by Kings of Nauarre.

The first Merindada of which Kingdome, is that of Pampelona, the Capitall Citty, a Citty engirte with good walles, and with an olde strong Castell, the auncient abyding of the Kings of Nauarre. Beyond which, on the other side of the Citty, the Spanyards haue builded a new one, to maintaine their auncient holding against the French.

Concerning the seuerall Merindadaes how they are in themselues. The Prince of Viana.

The second Merindada is the Dioceese D'Estella, within which is included the Principality of Viana, a title belonging to the eldest Sonnes of the Kings of Nauarre: As in France, the eldest beareth the title of Daulphine of Viennois; in England, the Prince of Wales; and (heertofore) in Arragon, the Prince of Gironna; and in Castille, the Prince of the Asturies.

The third is Tudela, sometime called Cantabria, as we haue already said.

The fourth is Sangnessa.

The fifte is Olita, the ordinary dwelling of King Charles the Noble, Third of the name. These fiue Merindadaes are in the higher Nauarre, on the side of Spayne, beyonde the Pyrenean Mountaines. And the Sixt Lower Nauarre Vltra Portos.

Is the lower Nauarre, on the side of France, called by the Spanyards, Vltra Puertos, that is to say, Beyonde the Portes. For they tearme Ports, the straites, whereby a man may very vneasily passe ouer the Pyrenean Mountaines, when we goe from France into Spayne. This lower Nauar is deuided from the higher, by the small Bridge of Arrequy, betweene the Abbey of Roncenaux, and Saint Iohn pied-de-puerto. The first Towne and strongest place thereof, on the higher side, is that of Saint Palais, (in Latine Sanctus Pelagius) wherein is the Chancery, and the money Minte of Nauarre. The sole Prouince, of the great body of this Kingdome, remained to the heires and descendants of the Kings, Katharine de Nauarre, & Iohn d' Albret her husband: vnworthily despoyled of their paternall inheritance, by Ferdinand of Arragon, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand, Three hundred and thirteene, And in the Moneth of July the same yeare. The

CHAP. II.

1. Garcia Ximenes, Count of Bigorre, and of those Lands which (at this present) are called, The lower Nauarre, was, according to the ancient fashion vsed among the French, exalted on a Shield or Escutcheon of Armes, King of Sobrarbre or Nauarre, by Sixe Hundred French Gentlemen, the third day of May, when the Church celebrateth the Inuention of the Holy Crosse, in the yeare of Grace Seauen Hundred Sixteene, and of Here Cæsar Augustus, Seauen Hundred Fifty Foure, two yeares after the Affrican Arabes, made themselues Maisters and Lords of Spaine: from whom King Garcia Ximenes conquered the Bourgades or Village of Aysa, Amescua, Abrarsusa, and the little Towne of Iaca, which hee made the Capitall of his new Conquest. He caused to be newly builded the Hermitage of Saint Iohn Baptist de la Pegna, that is to say, de la Roche d'Orouell, where hee was exalted King, and neere thereunto a Castell, which serued him, & the Kings his Successors a very long time, as a Pallace and ordinary dwelling.

Hee dyed full of glory and honour, for hauing beene the first, that fought against the Moores, and so consequently, the first Christian King of Spaine: in the yeare of Grace, Seauen Hundred Fifty Eight, the Three Score and Tenth yeare of his Age, and the Two and Fortieth of his Reigne; hee lieth buried at Saint Iohn de la Pegna. By his Wife Inigo, Daughter to the Count of Commenges, hee had his onely Sonne and Successor

2. Garcia Inigo (bearing the names both of his Father and Mother) Second King of Nauarre or Sobrarbre, and Second of the name. Hee extended the bounds or limits of his Kingdome, so farre as to the City of Alaua, one of the three Merindades of Biscay, which hee conquered from the Moores. Hee reigned Forty and Foure yeares, and dyed the yeare of Grace, Eight Hundred and Two. By Estesiana of Carcassona, his Wife, he had a Sonne and Successour.

3. Fortunio Garcia, who reigned thirteene yeares, and dyed in the yeare of Grace, Eight Hundred and Fifteene. By Theoda of Arragon his wife, Daughter to Galindo, Count of Arragon; hee had a Sonne who was his Successour.

4. Sanctio Garcia, First of that name. The Spaniards pronounce it in their Language, Sancho Garces: but I conuert these strange words into our more sweet and gentle passage. In the Latine Phrase, this name of Sancho is tearmed Sanctus, and Sanctius, which in Gascoigne (where the name is very common) they call Sainct Sans.

The Reigne of him was Seauenteene yeares, and he died the yeare of Grace, Eight Hundred, Thirty Two; hauing by his Wife Estesiana, Daughter to the Count of Narbonna, for his Successour in the Kingdome

5. Ximenes Inigo, who reigned but Eight yeares.

And heere the Noble and Generous minded Reader, if hee please, may obserue once for altogether, that in Spaine speaking of Kings: they set downe before their proper names, this title of honour for abbreuiation, Dom or Don. And speaking of Queenes and Princesses, Donnes or Dognacs, which commeth of the Latine, Dominus and Domina, and by abbreuiation, Domnus and Domna: Dom Philip the Third, and Donna N. of Austria his Wife. The Knights of Spaine doe likewise carry this Title, according as the very fame is in Italy. In Gascoigne the Sonnes neuer speak of their Father, without this Epithite, Seigne Pay, and of their Mother, Done May, which is as they vsually say at Paris, My Lord, my Father, Madame, or my Lady, my Mother.

The addition of Dom or Don to men, & Dona or Dogna to women in Spaine.

All these manners of speaking were deriued from the Ancient French, who talking of their own Kings and Queens, haue alwayes placed these qualities of honour before; Domnum Childericum, Damnam Fredegundam; as wee haue obserued in the History of Nauarre, by the testimony of Saint Gregory of Tours, the most learned and ancient of all our Historians.

The additions in France.

Iniga, Lady of Biſcay, who eſpouſed a Gentleman of the Countrey called Zuria, Sirnamed the Faire, who by the death of his Wife (ſhee deceaſing without Children) held the Seigneurie of Biſcay, whereof hee became Lord in the yeare Eight Hundred, Three Score and Ten.

In ſecond Marriage, he eſpouſed Dona Dalda, Daughter to Don Sancco Eſteguis Hortunes, Lord of Tauira de Durango. And of this Marriage are iſſued, the Lords of Biſcay.

The ſaid Zuria was Sonne to a Knight named Lopez, a very rich Lord in Biſcay, deſcended of Bermond Laygnes, Sonne to Layn Caluo, Iudge of Caſtile.

The Dukes of Aquitaine carried the ancient Armes of the Gothes, D'Argent au Lyon de Sable; from whom they were iſſued and deſcended.

Zuria neuertheleſſe, forſaking the Armes of his Houſe, tooke them of Sobrarbre, in honour of ſo great an Alliance: that is to ſay, D'Argent au Lyon de Synople.

The Spaniards, who are alwayes contrary to the French, doe ſay, that this Count tooke theſe Armes to preſerue the memory of the Biſcaines, who exalted the Armes of their Lord or Prince; aloft on the Tree of Garnica, where they m de their Aſſemblies, as well of Councell, as delight.

Howſoeuer it was, this Zuria tooke and carried ſuch Armes, leauing them belonging to his Father, who carried his owne, which ſpake and anſwered to his name, as wee ſay.

Lopez in Spaniſh ſignifieth a Wolfe, and thereupon, Il portoit d'Argent au Loup Ceruier de Sable, which is altogether from any apparance, inaſmuch as the Spaniſh Hiſtorians ſay, that the firſt who carried Wolues in Armes, was Dom Diego Lopez de Haro, on the day, Des Naues de Toloſa: whereof wee will obſerue the particularities at the end of this Diſcourſe, purpoſely for the Armes of Nauarre.

Of the Marriage of Zuria and Dalda of Tauira, was borne their Sonne

Manſo Lopez, Second Lord of Biſcay: And of Tauira de Durango and him, came

Inigo, Third Lord of Biſcay, Sirnamed the Left-handed; becauſe hee had gotten a bad cuſtome, to ſerue himſelfe alwayes with the left hand, and not with the right. He had for his Sonne and Succeſſour

Lopez Diaz, Count, and Fourth Lord of Biſcay. This was the man, who before any other of his Predeceſſors, tooke for his Armes (as correſponding to his name) D'Argent Vn Loup de Sable. Hee left (beſide a Baſtard, called Inigo the Left-handed) for his Sonne and Succeſſour

Sanceo Lopez, Fift Count of Biſcay, who had two Sonnes

Inigo Sanchez: And Garcia Sanchez.

The eldeſt was ſlaine by his owne people, in ſeeking to appeaſe a quarrell, and left his Children very young: ſo that the Biſcaines tooke for their Lord, his Baſtard Brother

Inigo the Left-handed, Sixt Lord of Biſcay, who imparted to his Couſins ſome Lands and Seigneuries: from whence came the Lords of Lodio and D'Horoſco in Biſcay. The Sonne of this left handed Lopez, was

Lopez Dias, Sirnamed the Red, Seuenth Lord and Husband of Dona Tella, by whom he had Diego Lopez, called the Faire, Eight Count of Biſcay, who had to Wife a French Lady, named Madame Almiana, or Almicia, Daughter to the Lord of Saint John Pied-de Port, in the lower Nauarre. And of this Marriage was borne their Sonne & Succeſſour in the Countie of Biſcay, Lopez Dias; whoſe Father carried for Armes, D'Argent a deux Loups de Sable.

Lopez Dias, Ninth Lord of Biſcay, was Sirnamed of Naiera, a Towne of ancient demaine in Nauarre, which the King of Caſtile, Alphonſo Eight of the name, gaue him, to draw him to his part, and ſoone after, the Towne of Haro, whereof he had the Title and Sirname, which ſtill continned to his Linage. He tooke to Wife (according to Garibay) Mencia, Daughter to the Count Arias, and by her he had three Sonnes, & one Daughter.

Diego Lopez de Haro Lord of Biſcay.

Lopez Dias de Haro, Biſhop of Segobia.

Martin Lopez de Haro; And Dogna Vrraca Lopez, Wife to the King of Leon, Ferdinand Second of the name. Some doe grant him to haue another Daughter, named Gaufreda, Wife to the King of Nauarre, Garcia ſeauenth of the Name; but it is contrary to truth.

Diego Lopez de Haro, Sirnamed the Good, Tenth Lord of Biſcay, had to wife Maria Diaz de Lara, Daughter to Count Nugno Manrique de Lara, in his firſt Marriage. And in the Second, hee had Toda Perez, Daughter to Dom Pedro Roderiguez D'Azagra, and by her he had two Daughters, both of them married to the Counts of Lara, Aluarez and Gonſaluez.

Diego Lopez de Haro, Eleauenth Lord of Biſcay, tooke for Armes, D'Argent à l'Arbre de Garnica de Synople, à deux Loups de Sable, trauerſez au pied de l'eſt Arbre, c'eſt adire l'vn deuant, & l'autre derriere l'Arbre, laquelle eſt entre ces deux Loups à l'Ordre de Gueules, charge de Huict Croix en Sautoir d'Or. As a Signall and memory, that hee had aſſiſted at the ſurprizall of the Towne of Baeſa, from the Moores of Andalouzia. For hee was (in his time) renowned, to be as valiant in Armes, as a wiſe and prudent Counſellour: whereby hee obtained the Sirname of Cabeca brana, that is to ſay, A good Head, furniſhed with good Iudgement. Hee had to Wife Dogna Vrraqua Aphonſa, Daughter to the King of Leon Dom Alphonſo, and of Igna de Mendoce; and by her hee had foure Sonnes.

Diego Lopez de Haro, Twelfth Lord of Biſcay.

Sanceo Lopez.

Lopez the Dwarfe: And

Alphonſo Lopez, Father to John Alphonſo de Haro, called the Old. We will let paſſe the reſt of this Genealogie in ſilence; becauſe it is not incident to our Diſcourſe.

King Inigo Ximenes Ariſta, had by Toda of Biſcay, Daughter to Count Zeno, his Sonne and Succeſſour

7. Garcia Inigo, Third of the name, the Reigne of whom was eighteene yeeres; deceaſing in the yeare Eight Hundred, Foure Score and ſeauen, or (according to ſome, who make him to reigne ſeauen and twenty yeares) Foure Score and Fifteene. By Dogna Vrraca, Daughter and ſole Heire to the Count of Arragon, Dom Fortunio Ximenes, hee had two Sonnes and one Daughter. The Sonnes were Fortunio.

Sanceo, Sirnamed Abarca: And the Daughter

Sancia, Third Wife to the King of Leon, Dom Ordogne.

8. Fortunio, Second of the name, King of Nauarre, and Count of Arragon, (in regard of his Mother) reigned no more but Sixe yeares, without being married. Hee gaue ouer the World and his Kingdome, to ſerue the King of Kings in the Monaſtery of Saint Sauieur de Leyra, where he profeſſed himſelfe a Monke, in the yeare Nine Hundred and One: After whom ſucceeded in the Kingdome his Brother

9. Sanceo, Second of the name, Sirnamed Abarca, becauſe hee affected to weare Gamaches and Buskins of Leather on his Legges, and Galoches of wood and blacke Leather on his feete, which in Spaniſh they tearme Abarcas. In this regard, ſuch as were deſcended of his Ligne, retained the Sirname of Abarca and bare in their Armes, D'Or à deux Galoches de Sable Eſchiquettees d'Or.

By Toda his Wife, Daughter to the Count of Pigorre, or of Carcaſſona, hee had foure Sonnes and fiue Daughters: his Sonnes were.

Garcia Sanceo, his eldeſt.

Ramiro.

Gonſaluez: And

Ferdinando. The Daughters were

Vrraca Ximenia, Wife to the King of Leon, Alphonſo, Fourth of the name.

Maria, Wife to Sigefroy the Fift, Count of Barcelona.

Thereza, married to the King of Leon, Dom Ramiro, Second of the name.

Sancia, Second Wife to Ferdinando Gonſales of Caſtile; And Blanche Valeſca, Wife to the Count of Biſcay, Sanceo.

Sanceo reigned nineteene yeares, or (according to Dom Rodericke of Toledo, who ſets downe the yeares of the reigne of Dom Fortunio his Brother, with his) fiue and twenty yeares; And dyed in the yeare of Grace, Nine Hundred and Twenty. After him ſucceeded his Eldeſt Sonne

10. Garcia Sanceo, Fourth of the name, Tenth King of Nauarre, and Count of Arragon: who by his Wife Thereſe of Biſcay, had two Sonnes, & three Daughters. The Sonnes Were

Sanceo Garcia: And

Ramiro

Ramiro.
The Daughters were Vrraca.
Ermesinda: And Ximena.

His Reigne continued forty and nine yeares, and hee dyed in the yeare of Grace, Nine Hundred, Three Score, and Nine. Hee had for Succeſſours in the Kingdome, his two Sonnes

Sancio Garcia: And

11. Ramiro.

Who raigned together in loue and Concord, contrary to the Maxims of State: That the world cannot endure two Sunnes, nor one Kingdome two kings.

Omniſcque potestas
Impatiens conſortis erit.

Ramiro reigned ten yeares, without being married, and by the death of his elder Brother, remained ſole King of Nauarre and Count of Arragon Seauenteene whole yeares. Hee had to Wife Vrraca de Bigorre, and by her hee had three Sonnes;

Garcia. Ramiro. Gonſales. } Father of { Sancco, and Ramiro.

Sancio Garcia reigned Twentie and Seauen yeares alone, and with his Brother: And died in the yeare of Grace, Nine Hundred, Foure Score and Thirteene. After whom ſucceeded his Eldeſt Sonne

12. Garcia, Fift of the name, Sirnamed Trembling, or the Trembler, becauſe hee would ſhiuer and ſhrug (as couetous of eaſe) at all times when he ſhould mount on Horſeback, for riding to warre. By Ximena of Barcelona his wife, he had one only Sonne, named Sancco. Hee Reigned but ſeauen yeares, and dyed the yeare of Grace One Thouſand and Three, leauing for Succeſſour

13. Sancco, Fourth of the name, called The Great, who had to wife Elua la Nigra, that is to ſay, The Little, Daughter to the Count of Caſtile Don Sancco, and by her he had three Sonne, Garcia, King of Nauarre.

Ferdinand, Firſt King of Caſtile: And Gonſales, King of Sobrarbre, and of Ribagorſa.

By the Damoſell D'Aynar, Digna Cast, his Loue-Miſtreſſe, he had a Baſtard, named Ramiro, Firſt King of Arragon.

This King Sancco was Sirnamed the Great, as well in regard of manifold vertues ſhining in him; as alſo, becauſe hee was (in his time) the very greateſt Chriſtian Prince of Spayne. Who, as other Kings of Chriſtendome did the like, fought the friendſhip of King Robert the Deuout, Sonne to Hugh Capet. Glaber Rodolph, in the tenth Booke of his Hiſtory of France, and Second Chapter, after hee hath ſet downe the particularities of the enterview, between the King and the Emperour of Germany Henry, on the Riuer of Meuſe, the Frontire of the Kingdome and Empire, ſaith, that hee wonne the amity of all the Kings his neighbours, and particularly the King of Nauarre, Dom Sancco the Great. Fuit ibi pax cum Regibus in cyro Regni ſui poſitis, Maxime cum ſupradicto Imperatore Henrico: Ab aliis quoque Regibus gratificè ſuis ſemper habitus ab Alrado ſcilicet Rege Anglorum, & Rodolpho Rege Auſtraſiorum, nec non & Sanctio Rege Nauarriæ & Hiſpaniarum, mittebantque ei munera, & ab eo petebant auxilia. This King Sancio was called the Great, becauſe hee poſſeſſed Nauarre, Arragon, Caſtile, Sobrarbre and Ribagorſa. This was hee that made Kingdomes of Arragon and Caſtile, as we ſhall ſpeake more at large elſewhere. He dyed the eighteenth day of October, in the yeare of Grace, One Thouſand, Thirty Fiue, and the eight and thirtie of his Reigne; leauing the Kingdome of Nauarre to his eldeſt Sonne

14. Garcia, Sixt of the name, and Sirnamed of Naiera, becauſe (from his tender youth) he had been nouriſhed in the City, where King Sancco the Great his Father, made his Royall abiding. In imitation of the King of France, Robert the Deuout, who inſtituted the Order of the Starre, in honor of the Virgin Mary; the ſaid Garcia, before all other the Kings of Spayne, erected in honour of the ſame Virgin, an Order of Knighthood, which hee called: Of our Lady of the Lilly.

The

The Order of the Lilly, Or of Nauarre.

THE Subiect of Inſtituting this Order of the Lilly, was, that this Prince hauing beene very ſicke; in the extremity thereof, ſent to Saint Sauiour de Leyra, and other places of deuotion, that Prayers and interceſſions might bee made for his recouery and health. In the ſame time of his ſickneſſe, was diſcouered in the City of Nagera (where ordinarily hee kept his Court) an Image of the Virgin Mary, iſſuing forth of a Lilly, and holding her Sonne betweene her armes.

Vpon the Inuention or finding of this Image, the King very ſodainly recouered his health, beſide infinite other Miracles performed there, on all kindes of diſeaſed perſons, by the admirable Vertues, ſuppoſed of the Virgin Mother, whom the Scripture tearmeth, The Lilly of the Vallies, Lillium conuallium. In honour of whom, in the ſame place where this Image was found, King Garcia cauſed to bee builded a Church and Monaſtery of Royall ſtructure, wherein he placed the Monks of Clugny, and the Church was called Sancta Maria Reale de Nagera, in memory of the occaſion and place.

Moreouer, to perpetuate his deuotion to the Virgin Mary, ſaid to bee Queene of Heauen, and Lady of the Angels; hee inſtituted in his Kingdome, the ſaid Order of Knights of Saint Mary. of the Lilly, whereof he would bee Founder and Soueraigne Great Maiſter, and after him, the Kings of Nauarr his Succeſſours. He compoſed this Order of Eight and Thirty Knights, the chiefeſt Gentlemen of Ancient Families in Nauarre, Biſcay, and old Caſtile, who at receiuing the ſaid Order, muſt vow and ſollemnly ſweare in preſence of the King, to expoſe their goods and perſons, for conſeruation of the Crowne of Nauarre, and expulſion of the Moores. Each of theſe Knights weareth on his Breſt a Lilly, embroydered in Siluer, and on ſollemne Feaſt daies, a double chaine of gold enterlaced with Letters M. after the manner of the Ancient Gothiſh. At the end of this Chaine, hangeth in a wattled Ouall, Vn Lys d'Or Eſmaille de Blanc Sortant d'vne Terrace, portant & vne d'Or Coronnee; as it is figured in the Frontiſpice of this Diſcourſe.

Theſe Knights were ſtrictly charged and obliged, to ſay ouer fiue times their Beads, compoſed of fiue round Lincks, with other Seruice & Prayers, which were ordained and preſcribed to them by the Monks of Saint Mary la Reale de Nagera, with with the Rule of the said Order, touching the dayes when they should goe to Confession and the Communion. The Institution of this Order was in the yeare 1048. since when it was long time conserued in honor by the Kings of Nauarre, Successors to Garcia, whose Effigies are yet to be seene with this Order about their necks, as well in the said Church of S. Mary at Nagera, S. Sauiour de Leyra, S. Mary la Reale of Pampelona: as also in the Church at Roncesuaux, and at S. Iohn de la Pegna.

Garcia in the life time of his Father, married Estesuanetta, or Stephanetta, Daughter to Roger Count of Carcassonna, and of Beziers: And of this Marriage issued foure Sonnes, and as many Daughters: The Sonnes were Sanceo Garcia, his Successour in the Kingdome.

Ramiro, Lord of Calahorra, Calaguris in Latine (a strong City and potent, conquered from the Moores by the said Garcia de Nagera) of Toresillas, de los Cameros, de Ribafresca, de Lea, Billoria de Trebeiano, and other places.

Ferdinando, Lord of Iubera, Laguniella, &c.

Raymond, who had for his partage the Lands of Murillo, Agoncillo and others. The Daughters were Ermesinda, Lady of Villa Mediana, & of Martos.

Ximenia, Lady of Carcueros, Hornos and other places.

Maiora, Lady D'Yangas: And

Vrraca, Lady of Aluerita, Lardero, and Muerones, Wife to a Count, named Dom Garcia. But our Garcia of whom we now speake, was slaine in the Battaile of Atapuerca, about foure miles from Burgos, won by King Ferdinand of Castile his Brother, the yeare of Grace 1054. hauing reigned twenty yeares. His body was laid by his Wiues (deceasing before him) at Santta Maria la Reale, de Nauarre. His Eldest Sonne succeeded him

15. Sanceo Garcia, Fift of the name: By Pleasincea his Wife, hee left three Male Children, Ramiro Sanceo.

Garcia, First: And Garcia, Second.

These two were after the death of King Sanceo their Father, nourished in the Court of Alphonso, King of Castile, First of the name, who for their maintenance gaue them diuers Lands; for they neuer had any issue in Nauarre.

King Sanceo was slaine by his last Brother Raymond, Lord of Murillo, in a certaine Ambuscado, which hee had purposely prepared for him, the yeare of Grace, 1066. hauing reigned two and twenty yeares, or thereabout.

Ramiro Sanceo, Infant of Nauarre, and naturall Heyre to the Kingdome, by the death of his Father; tooke to Wife Degna Eluira, Second Daughter to Cid Ruis Dias de Biuaro, and by her hee left two Sonnes, and one Daughter.

Garcia Ramiro, who was King of Nauarre.

Sanceo Ramiro: And the Daughter Eluira.

Now, because this Cid Ruis Dias de Biuaro, was the most renowned Captain and Knight of Spaine, & of whom diuers Romancers haue sung and written wonders; in regard also that by the Marriage of the Prince of Nauarre, and Eluira his Daughter, the Kings of Nauarre are descended to this instant, euen to the Sacred Maiesty of Leires the Second of the name, King of Nauarre now reigning: I will summarily set downe heere in this place, the Originall and descent of this Great Captaine.

Nugno Belides or Belcides, a Gentleman of Germany, and a Natiue of Celogne, being desirous to fight against the Moores, went in the Voyage for Spaine, where becomming well knowne by his valiancie, he espoused Degna Sola, Daughter to Don Diego Porcello, a rich and mighty Lord, who dwelt at Burgos in Castile: Of this Marriage was borne their Sonne Nugno Nugnez Rasura, who was Iudge of Castile, and had by his Wife a Sonne and a Daughter.

Gonsalez Nugnez: And

Teresa, who was Wife to Layn Calua, likewise Iudge of Castile

Gonsalez Nugnez, had to Wife Madona Ximena Fernandez, Daughter to Count Dom Nugno Fernandez, Sonne to the King Dom Bermond, First of the name, and Father to Fernand Gonsalez.

Teresa tooke to Husband Layn Calua, Iudge of Castile, who had by her foure Sonnes Fernan Laynez.

Bermudo Laynez.

Layn Laynez; And

Diego

Diego Laynez.

Fernan Laynez, the eldest Sonne, was Father of Layn Fernandez, Father of

Antomo Laynez, who by his Wife Ella, or Berta had a Sonne

Layn Nugnez, Father of { Diego Laynez. And Ferdinand Laynez.

Who married with Dogna Ximena Nugnez, Daughter to the Count Dom Nugno Aluarez d'Amaya. And by her he had the Count Dom Aluaro Fagnez Minjo.

Diego Laynez eldest Sonne of Layn Laynez, espoused the Daughter of Dom Roderigo Aluarez, Count and Gouernor of the Asturies: And of this marriage was borne

The Cid, Ruis Dias de Biuaro.

The same Diego Laynez, had by a Countrey Damosel a Bastard, or naturall Sonne, called Fernando Diaz Laynez: And hee tooke to wife the Daughter of Anthony Antolinez, a very worthy Knight of Burgos. Of this marriage were borne Martin Antolinez.

Pero Bermudez.

Melendo Fernandez.

Fernan Alphonso: And

Ordogno, Knights highly renowned by the Romancers of Spaine, for performing actions of wonder, with the Cid their Vnckle.

Ruy Diaz, called the Cid, by the Moores of Spaine (which in the Affricane & Morisco tongue, signifieth a King & Lord) tooke to wife Ximena Gomez, Daughter to the Count Dom Gomez, Lord of Gormaz, neere Kinsman to the King of Leon. By this marriage he had a Son and two Daughters Diego Rodriguez, who dyed in the Battaile of Consuegra, fought against the Moores, and left no issue. The Daughters were

Sola, wife to the Infant Dom Pedro, Sonne and heire to Dom Pedro, King of Arragon; but by him he had no childe. The other Daughter was Eluira, who married with the Infant of Nauarre, Ramiro Sanceo, eldest Sonne to King Sanceo Garcia; but the issue of this mariage we haue already related.

The Cid bare in Armes, De Gueulles à la Bande de Synople bordee d'Or: retained by them of Mendoza, and the Antolinez. These last Portent du Cid, A l'Orle & Bordure de Gueulles à huict Saultours d'Or.

Martin Antolinez, and Pero Bermudez, Bretheren, with Nugno Gustios de Lincuella, were (during their life time) three famous Knights, renowned for their valour beyond all other. In the presence of the King Dom Alphonso, who soiourned there in the Towne of Carion; they Combatted against the Lords of Carion, Fernand and Diego, Sonnes to Count Gonzalo Gonzalez, Lord of Carion, and Suero Gonzales their Vnckle, for an offence done to the Daughters of Cid Ruy Diaz. And in this Combate (fought to the vtmost extremity) the Counts of Carion were foiled and vanquished Martin Antolinez fought against Fernand, and in this Combate hee had one of the Swords belonging to the Cid, so famously spoken of by the Romancers, for excellency of the temper. They called this Sword Colida, on the Blade whereof, and on the one side, were engraued these two words (deriued from the Gospell, Sermo vester sit, Sic, Sic, Non Non; Si, Si. And on the other side, No, No. The Cid wonne this Sword from the Count of Barcelona, in the Battaile which he gaue to the King Dom Pedro of Arragon.

Pero Bermudez had likewise in this Combate, another Sword of the Cids, called Tysona (wonne by the Cid, on the day when he fought against Alfaear the Moore, King of Thunis) and wherewith he slew his enemy Diego. These two Swords of the Cids, are to be seene in the Haule Royall of Armes at Madrid.

To continue the memorie of this Combate, fought in presence of the King, and the Lists engirt with Chains, wherein the Knights acted their Chiualrie: Pero Bermudez, and his descent, carried in their Escutcheon of Armes, Escheequete d'Or & de Sable de Quinze pieces de Cinq traicts, à l'Orle d'Or chargee d'vne Chaine d'Azur. And of this Linage of the Antolinez, there are to be found in Portugal (euen to this present) knowne by these Armes.

The Cid and the Antolinez are interred

Church of the said chiefe Citie of Nauarre. Leauing for Successour his eldest Sonne

23. Thibault, second of the name, King of Nauarre, who reigned eighteene yeares. By his Wife Madam Isabel of France, Daughter to the King S. Lewes, hee had no childe. By a Concubine, which long time hee secretly maintained, called Marquisia Lopa de Rada, Daughter to Giles de Rada, a Knight of Nauarre, hee had a naturall Daughter, bearing the same name of her Mother

Marquisa, who was married to Dom Pedro Fernandez d'Ixar, Lord of Aicibia, naturall Sonne to the King of Arragon, Iames, first of the name, and of the Lady of his affection, Donna Thereza de Vidaure.

The said Thibauld the second dyed at Trappes in Sicile, in his returne from the voyage of Thunis (made with the King Saint Lewes) the fift day of December, Anno One thousand two hundred three score and tenne. The Hearts of the said King and Queene, are at the Iacobines of Pervence, before the high Alter, in a Coffin (purposely made) of Brasse, doubly guilded, and round in forme: Their Bodies lye at S. Stephens of Troyes in Champaigne. Thibault left his Kingdome and goods to his Brother

24. Henry, King of Nauarre, first of that name, called the Grosse, exalted and Sacred at Pampelona, on Monday the foure and twentieth day of May, One thousand two hundred seauentie one. He had to wife Blanch of Artois, daughter to Monsieur Robert of France, Count of Artois: By her he had

Thibault, who dyed at a yeare old, it being the same of Sacring his Father: And Ioane, or Ione, who was Queene of Nauarre, and wife to the King of France Phillip le Bel.

Before his marriage, he had amorously embraced a beautifull yong Gentlewoman, of the house of Lacarra, by whom hee had a naturall Sonne, named Henry, who was Lord of Ablitas, and high Steward of Nauarre, chiefe of the Noble Familie, sirnamed the Henries in Nauarre.

King Henry died with fatnesse, which stifled him, in the Bishops Pallace of Pampelona, the one and twentieth day of Iuly, Anno One thousand two hundred seauentie foure. And lyeth in the Quire Church of Sancta Maria la Real of Pampelona. After him succeeded his only daughter Ioane of Nauarre, wife to Philip

25. Phillip, sirnamed Le Bel, King of Nauarre, first of that name, and of Fraunce fourth of the name of his owne descent, yongest Sonne to the King Saint Lewes. And of this marriage were borne foure Sons, and three Daughters

Lewes, called Hutin.

Phillip, sirnamed the Long.

Charles, tearmed Le Bel. And Robert, who died at eleauen yeares old. The Daughters were Margaret, wife to Ferdinand fourth of the name, King of Castile, Sonne of Sancco le Brane, fourth of the name, yongest Song Sonne to Alphonso the Tenth, all Kings of Castile.

Isabel, wife to the King of England, Edward, second of the name: And Blanche, who died yong.

Phillip le Bel deceased in the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred and foureteene, on the Eeuen of Saint Andrew, in the Deserts of Fontaine Blaudy where he was borne. And Queene Ioane, of Nauarre, died ten yeares before him, to wit, in the yeare, One thousand three hundred and foure, the second day of Aprill, at Bois de Vincennes. Her Tombe might haue bin seene in the Gray Fryers, before the burning of the Church of this great Monastery, which was vnfortunately set on fire at ten of the Clock in the night, on Saturday the nineteenth of Nouember, One thousand fiue hundred and fourescore. The said Queene Ioane reigned neere one and thirtie yeares, and the portraits of Phillip le Bel, & Ioane of Nauarre (drawne to the life) may be seene on the North gate of the Church in Paris, and on the fore-front of the Royall Colledge of Champaigne, called Royall Colledge of Champaigne, founded by the King and Queene at Mont de Pari, beneath the Butcherie of Sainct Geneuiefue.

Lewes, Sirnamed Hutin, that is to say Mutenous, or Tempestuous, their eldest Sonne, was King of Nauarre, first of that name; in regard of his Mother, and of France (by the Fathers side) tenth of the name, who caused the Parliament of France to be alwayes sedentary at Paris. He was Sacred and Crowned of Nauarre at Pampelona, the first day of October, in the yeare, One thousand, three hundred and seauen, and reigned tenne yeares (or there about) in Nauarre, hee had two wiues; the first whereof was Margaret, daughter to Robert the Second, Duke of Bourgongne: And in this Marriage was borne but one only Daughter.

Madam Ioane or Ione of France, Queene of Nauarre, by death of the Kings of Nauarre and France, Phillip le Long, & Charles le Bel, who both deceased without issue.

The second wife of Lewes Hutin, was the Que ne Clemencia of Hungaria, daughter of Charles Martell, and Sister to Robert (that is to say Charles Robert) Kings of Hungaria; of whom was borne their only Sonne a Posthumus, after his fathers death

27. John, King of France and Nauarre, first of the name; whose life and reigne, continued but eight dayes. By the death of him, and his Father also Lewis Hutin, happening in this manner, his Father dying the fifte day of June, and the Sonne in the moneth of Nouember following, An. One Thousand Three hundred and Sixtene.

28. Phillip Sirnamed the Long, or Great, was King of Nauarre Second, and of France first of the name. By Ioane, Countesse of Bourgongne and Artois, his Wife, Daughter to Otho, Count of Bourgongne, and Mahauld Countesse of Artois, he had one Sonne, and foure daughters.

Monsieur Lewes of France and of Nauarre, who died very young: The daughters were

The ſaid Peter of Nauarre (whom the French then called Monſiegn Pierres, as the Gaſcoignes vſe to ſpeake) and his wife lye buried at the Charterhouſe of Paris, on the right ſide of the high Altar, where you may ſee their Tombe and Pictures in white and blacke Marble, without any inſcription. Hee was a Prince (in his life time) perticulerly affected to the ſaid Monaſtery of the Charterhouſe, where hee founded foure Celles of Monkes, which at this day are to bee ſeene quoated with theſe foure Letters C. D. F. G. The Religious men thereof, are called The Monkes of the Prince of Nauarre. The Foundation heereof was in the yeare, One thouſand three hundred ninety one, allowing then foure thouſand Crownes of Gold (then called Francks, there were Francks on Hoſbacke, and on foote) with which ſumme of Money, the Charterhouſe of Paris bought the land and Seigneurie of Vile-Neufue le Roy, foure miles from Paris. Moreouer, the Prince gaue them many Ornaments and Decking for their Altars; eſpecially for Feſtiual dayes, and other ſolemne Feaſt dayes in the yeare, when the Copes and Veſtiments are publikely to bee ſeene on the Prieſts, at the ſaid Charterhouſe Monaſterie in Paris, very coſtly imbrodered with Gold, charged with the Armes of Nauarre and d'Eureux. In acknowledgement of ſo many great and gracious fauours, the ſaid Charterhouſe Monkes ſtood bound to ſay for him (during his life) two Conuentuall Maſſes, the one De Feſta, and the other for the dead, and on the day of his death, Monachatum vnum: that is to ſay, by the whole Monaſtery of the Charterhouſe, in what place ſoeuer of the Land they were, eche Prieſt ſought to ſay Sixe Maſſes. The profeſſed (no Prieſt) two Pſalters, and the Laye brethren, a certaine number of their Beades or Chappelets, for the ſoule of the deceaſſed. After his death, the ſaid two Maſſes were chaunged into an Aniuerſarie, which ſhould bee euery yeare ſaid, on the Feaſte of the Aſcention. He died of a Fluxe in his belly, at the Seidge of Bourges, with Gilles, Brother to the Duke of Bretaigne, in the yeare, One thouſand foure hundred and Fyue (ſix, according to the Chronicle of the Vrſins. The Tombe of the ſaid Peter of Nauarre, and his wife, is made of white and blacke Marble: On their heades are the Crownes belonging to Counteſſes, of double guilded Braſſe, and their Collars of the ſame, anſiwerable to the Honorable Order obſerued in thoſe dayes.

Peter is Armed with Nauarre, Quartered (no purpoſe) with Bourbon, in ſted of d'Eureux, hauing the Baſton Compone, as before, which the Kings of Nauarre haue alwayes caried, ſince King Phillip d'Eureux, euen to this preſent. Of this Peter of Nauarre cum Dom Peter, Lord of Peralta, Conſtable of Nauarre, of whom are deſcended the Marqueſſes de Falces, Lords of Peralta. This famous family is ſtill to the Female ligne, in the perſon of the Lady Marqueſſe de Falces, who I ſaw at Peralta, in my laſt voyage into Spayne, in the yeare foureſcore and eleuen. The daughters were theſe Ladies.

Madame Mary of Nauarre, wife to Alphonſo of Arragon, Counte of Denia (in Latine Dianum) at this day a Marqueſſe.

Blanche, who died at Olita, being then aged about thirteene yeares And Ioane of Nauarre, maried twiſe. Firſt to Iohn de Montfort, Duke of Bretaigne: in ſecond mariage ſhe had Henry of Lancaſter, King of England.

Hee had moreouer a naturell Sonne, named Lionell of Nauarre, the ſtemme of the Marqueſſes de Cortez, Marſhalles of Nauarre.

Queene Ioane died at Eureux, where ſhe made her abiding, in the end of the Moneth of November, Anno, One thouſand three hundred ſeauenty three, Her heart was buried in the Church of Pampelona, but her body enterred at Eureux. Charles the Bad her husband, outliued her thirteene yeares, and died at Pampelona, on Tueſday the firſt of Ianuary, Anno, One thouſand three hundred foureſcore and Sixe, the ſeauen and thirtieth of his Reigne, and of his age the Fiue and fiftieth. His heart was caried to Sancta Maria d'Vxel, his Bowells to Roncenaux; but his body buried in the great Church of Pampelona, by the heart of his wife; he finiſhed his life in a very ſtrange manner. In regard of his age, being benummed with much colde, a diuiſe was giuen, that he ſhould be wraptē in a cloth well wet and ſteeped in Aqua Vitæ, and ſo ſowne vp therein, till the cloth being growne drie, it ſhould then be wet againe with Aqua Vitæ. He which ſowed him vp in the cloth, had a waxe Candle lighted ſtanding before him, and to breake off the thred, he tooke the waxe candle to burne it in ſunder: but it ſo chaunced, that the enflamed thread ran on to the cloth, ſetting it both on fire and flame, without any remedy to redreſſe it. So he liued three dayes, crying and ſhricking moſt lamentably, with the extreame agonies which he endured, and in that maner ended his life: which was reputed (by many) a iuſt and diuine puniſhment inflicted on him, in regard of his wicked and lewde life. Thus you heare what the Chronicle of the Vrſins ſpeaketh of him, in the yeare, One thou-

This Genealogie sheweth aparantly, in what neerenesse of Alliance the house of Rohan is to the most Christian Kings of France and Nauarre: And for this consideration, King Henry the Great, of eternall memory, gaue the title of Duchie and Peer-dome to the Eldest Sonne of Rohan.

Against King John d'Albret, and Katharine his Wife, the Kingdome of Nauarre was vsurped by Ferdinand of Arragon, as we haue both heere, and elsewhere formerly declared. John a'Albret died in the Castell of Moning in Bearn, the seauenteenth day of June, One thousand fiue hundred and sixteene, His Body lieth in the Cathedrall Church at Lescar. Queene Katharine suruiued her Husband a yeare, or there about, because she died at Mont de Morsan on Tuesday the twelfth of February, One thousand fiue hundred and seauenteene, the seauen and fortieth of her age, and nine and twentieth of her Reigne. Her Body was likewise caried into the Church of Lescar, and laid by her Husband.

Wee haue heeretofore remembred, that the Kings of Nauarre haue caried vari Armes, and chaunged diuers times.

Armes by paternall inheritance.

Those of Garcia Ximenes, who was First King of Nauarre, and Count of Bigor by his paternall inheritance, caried but L'Escu de Gueules, without any other ornament Armes retained by the auncient Lords of Labrit, since then called Albret, to whom King Charles Sixt of the name, gaue permission to beare Seme de France au Quartier d'Honneur, and the other to retaine those of the auncient Kings of Nauarre, a Countes Bigorre, the Stemme of the house of Albret:

The Prouinces of Spayne inuaded by the Moores of Affrica.

The fame Garcia Ximenes, being come into the Hermitage of Saint Iohn de la Pegna, neere to Iaca, in the territorie of Nauarre, to giue his furtherance in the Fun rralles of Iohn l'Archimandrite or Abbot of the same place, who was departed out this wretched and transitory life, into glory eternall and without ending, the yeare Grace seauen hundred and sixteene, two yeares after the inuading of all the Prouinces of Spayne by the Moores of Affrica; thus it happened to him. After the said Funeralls being at Prayer in the night season, he and all his People saw a Shield in Heauen shining like Gold, wherein appeared a great Oake, greene and fairely flourishing wi leaues, hauing on the top thereof a Crosse Red as blood, Which serued them as good presage, of happy encountring with the Moores in fight. Ximenes being chose chiefe of this holy enterprise; he left the auncient Armes of his house, and tooke D'Or au Chesne de Synople, au Chef d'Or a la Croix pommetee de Gueules. Of this vision, and

This vision or miracle may be credited to farre as men please.

the newe-made Conquest of the said Garcia Ximenes, both he and his descendants were honoured with the title of The Kingdome of Sobrarbre, Regnum Subarbori, and Subrarbre by abbreuiation, and the Lords of this large extended Countrey, called Kings of Sobrarbre, and Sobrarbre by the Spanyards. Who enuying the glory and renowne, of the First Kings of this first Christian Kingdome, haue reiected this miracle: writing, that the extendure of the Kingdome of Sobrarbre, was so named for the proximitie or neerenesse thereof, to the Serres and Mountaine of Arbe, which seperateth and deuideth Sobrarbre, from the plaine and Champayne-ground, which extendeth it selfe from the Flood of Cinga, so farre as to the Riuer of Ebro.

These Armes were chaunged the second time, by the Sixte King of Nauarre Inigo Ximenes, sirnamed Arista, who beside his deuise formerly related, tooke for Armes of the Kingdome, L'Escu d'Azur a la Croix Pommettee ou patte d'Argent, long time retained by the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon. The subiect of this second Armes, ensued thus. The said Ximenes Arista, being one night in prayer at Saint Sauiour de Leyra, there appeared an Angell to him, who gaue him courage to warre against the Moores of Spayne, with Vne Estendard de Soye Bleue, charge d'Vne Croix Blanche pommettee. So that Arista, wholly animated with valour and newe receiued strength, by bearing this Celestiall Banner; descended downe the Mountaines, where the Kings his Predecessours had made their abyding, and conquered on the plaine, the Cities of Pampelona and of Alaua from the Moores.

Another vision on the cause of an other alteration.

The Third Armes of the Kings of Nauarre, which haue remained with them till this instant; were taken by King Sancio the Strong, Eight of the name. As a signale memorie of the Battaile Des Naues de Tolosa, wun against the Moores by his good conduct. We will therefore set downe the particularities of that memorable ouerthrow.

A True, but brisfe Discourse of the famous Battaile called Des Naues de Tolosa, fought betweene the Christians and Moores, In Anno, One Thousand two Hundred and Eleuen.

CHAP. IIII.

After the Battaile of Alarcos, lost by the rashnesse of the King of Leon Dom Alphonso, Ninth of the name (hauing despised the succours of the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon, because the onely honour of victory might be arrogated to himselfe) on Wednesday the seuen and twentieth of July, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand one hundred fourescore and fifteene, the Moores thirstily pursuing their victory; razed Alarcos, forraging on (euen as themselues pleased) so farre as to the Portes D'Vbenes, about sixe miles from Toledo, wherein was shut vp Dom Alphonso, grieuously wounded on the day at Alarcos, which he besieged tenne dayes together, without the least preuayling or doing any thing, and then was compelled to discampe, by the braue resistance of the besiedged and defendants. The Moores returned to encampe there the second time, so that he was forced in flight to Leonois, to finde Iosceph Mahamet, the Miramomelin of Affrica, either for Peace, or (at the least) for a Truce of Nine yeares continuance.

Iosse of the Battaile at Alarcos.

During which time, Aben-Iosep Muhamet died at Marocco, leauing for Successour his Sonne (or Brother) Aben Mahamet, Sirnamed The Greene, because ordinarily he wore his Robe and Tolibant Greene, to shewe, that he was descended of the Stocke of the false Prophet Mahomet, as indeed he was, comming of Aben-Alauecy, of great renowne among the Affricanes and Arabes, to haue his originall deriued of the Queene Fatima, Daughter to Mahomet, Wife to the King and Caliphe Hosman.

The death of Aben Iosseph Muhamet at Marocco.

The Truce being vpon the point of expyring, Aben-Mahamet, hoping and purposing the conquest of all Spayne; departed from Marocco into Spayne, with a very great number of Affricanes, who being ioyned with his other forces in Spayne, made a dreadfull Army, consisting of aboue three Hundred Thousand Men.

This

The huge Armie of Aben-Mahamet against the Christians.

This horrible deluge, made an assembly of all the Christian Kings and Princes of Spayne, who armed themselues on all sides in this common cause. Ferdinand, Sonne to the King of Leon Alphonso, Ninth of the name, conducted the troupes of his Father Dom Alphonso, and made a Caualcado or out-ranging vpon the Moores of Baesa & Anduyar and of Iaen, where he tooke some Castles, burnt and spoyled all, and (laden with the spoyles) returned to Toledo. This he did in Andalousia, in the yeare, One thousand two hundred and eleuen, where likewise (on the other side) the King of Arragon aduentured on the Moores of Valencia, out of whose seruility he deliuered Adamuzo, and some other strong places: while (in the meane time) Aben-Mahamet, by three moneths siedge, tooke the strong Towne of Saluatierra, where he put all the inhabitants to the edge of the Sword. This surprizall happpened in the Moneth of December, One thousand two hundred and eleuen.

Saluatierra taken and all put to the Sword.

Alphonso, King of Leon, being then at Talauera, heard the sad tydings of this strong Townes surprising, and despayring (by present power) to resist against so potent an Army, as that of the Moores was: obtayned of the Pope, sitting then in his holy Chaire, a Croisade, or expedition of Christians out of diuers Countries, by his Ambassador Roderick Ximenes, Archbishop of Toledo, causing it to be published among the States of the Christian Princes, to whom he sent his Ambassadours, to signifie the great multitudes of the Moores, which passed out of Affrica into Spayne dayly, to make themselues Lords and Maisters thereof. Among them were thirty Kings, and the Army consisted of an hundred and threescore thousand horse, and an innumerable multitude of foote Soldiours.

Roderick Ximenes Archbishop of Toledo.

The Armie of the Christians.

Vpon the publication of this Holy Croisade, an vnspeakeable number of French, Germanes, English, Dutch, & other went into Spayne, and there ioyning with the natiues of the Country, made their Armies bodyes to consist of an hundred thousand Foote, and threescore thousand Horse. To traine the baggadge of the Christian Army, there were threescore thousand Chariots. Eche Horseman hauing dayly paide him a Maruedis of Golde; euery Footeman the fourth parte thereof, and eche Soldiours Boye the fourth part of a Footeman: which wadges was furnished by all the Princes of Spayne; excepting him of Portugall, who would not yield any contribution.

This Army was assembled on the plaines of Toledo, in the Moneth of Iune, One thousand two hundred and Twelue, from whence they departed to meete with the Moores. Alphonso of Leon was the conducter of the Arriere-garde; he of Arragon, the maine Battaile; and the Counte Diego Lopez de Haro, Lord of Biscaye (who was one of the first that fled on the day at Alarcos) led the vangard. The Christian Army thus Marshalled into three diuisions, went and besiedged Malago, foureteene miles from Toledo, a very good place, and which they wonne by force, the three and twentieth day of the said Moneth of Iune, where the Christians (as an acceptable Sacrifice to God) put all the inhabitants to the sword, as their enemies formerly had dealt with the Christians at Saluatierra: and the sacke or spoyle of this so strong a place, was giuen to the Straungers, who had very valiantly fought for it. From hence the Christian Army went to Guadiana, one of the greatest riuers in Spayne, and to Calatraua, winning it from the Moores that were therein, by way of composition, (Liues and Iewelles saued, and conducted to a place of security, by the Counte of Haro) against the opposition of all the forraine succour, who coueted nothing more, then the vtter extermination of that wicked race. The place was rendered to the Knights (bearing name thereof, Knights of Calatraua) who possessed it before; but the pillage was giuen to the Strangers.

A Counsell for the bloody diuision of Saluatierra.

The spoyle of Calatraua.

Aben-Mahamet had wonne againe Iaen from the Christians, where hee continued supinely, expecting the route and rupture of the Christian Army, weakened in the greater parte of the Straungers, being constrained (through want of victualles) to returne among them. Which highly exalted the courage of the Moores, and gaue them vndoubted hope, to furnish their affaires in better order, which was greatly disioynted by so many enemies, with whom they were yet to meddle withall.

The Christians Armie displayed in Campaine at Alarcos.

From Calatraua the Christian Army came againe to Alarcos, died red yet with the large effusion of blood, but blanched & made white soone after with the Moores bones.

Where

where the Christians soiourned certaine dayes. This was the place where the King of Nauarre Sancio the Strong, Eight and last of the name, brauely shewed himselfe, with a choice troupe of his best Horse and Foote, Soldiours of good and sound approbation. At his arriuall the Christian Army recouered a new face of ioy and alacrity, expressed by the honourable welcomming of this Great Commander, whom they entertained in a ranged Battaile.

With the King of Nauarre were many great Lords and Gentlemen of France, Champaigne, and other places. Gonsalo Gomez Garcia d'Agonciello, carried the Royall Standard of Nauarre, which was of Blew Silke, A la Croix Blanche Pommettee, as we haue already said.

The great Lords of Nauarre present at the Army.

About this Colonel were the Lords of Nauarre, as namely, Garcia Almorauid; Pero Martinez de Leet; Pero Garces d'Aronis; Sanceo Fernandez de Montagut, Brother to Dom Pedro de Montagut, Great Maister of the Templers, to whom the King of Arragon had giuen the City of Tortosa: Pero Martin de Subica; Martin de Milagro, Garcia Ximenez d Oiellctta; Ximenez d'Ayuar, Pero Velez de Gueuara; Mauleon de Casconte; Raymond de Peralta; Ximenez de Bastan; Iuan Garcia de Bidaurra; Pero Gonsales de Marrano; Arnauld de Leet; Inigo de Oteyca, Fortunio Ximenez; Nugno Sanchez, Brother to the Archbishop of Toledo Dom Roderigo Ximenez; Inigo de Kada; Miguell de Rada; Ximenez Iniguez; Inigo Destunica; Diego Iniguez his Sonne; Fremin d'Aguiniga, Monsen Iuan de Arcillano; Ochoa Fortunez; Lope Fortunez; Roderigo de Arazuri, and many other, with the Inhabitants of the Borough of Sainct Sernin of Pampelona, who made their comming well knowne to the Enemy, by the surprizall of many places, which serued as a leuelling for the approaches to and from Saluatierra, possessed by Aben-Mahamet.

This Towne is seated at the foote of the intangling Mountaines, which the Romaines called Montes Marianos, at this present La Sierra Morena, the most detestable Countrey to bee seene in all Europe, and a retreate for no honest people.

Montes Marianos now called La Sierra Morena.

The King of Nauarre being thus ioyned with the Kings of Arragon and Leon, the Christian Army departed from Alarcos, to encampe neerer on the Skirts of Saluatierra.

On the Sunday following, the Army being in Battaile array, the Generall Muster was made; and on the next day, they came to lodge at Trescasas, and three dayes after, neere to the foote of the Mountaine Muradall, by the Riuer called Guadalquiuir.

Mahamet (in the meane while) had planted his troupes all along the Mountaines about Iaen, where hee attended the Christians comming resolutely, to giue them a Charge vpon their Retreate.

False suggestions in the Christian Army.

But hauing vnderstood by some Traytors in the Christian Army, what great necessity of Victuals was among them, in regard whereof the Strangers were all withdrawne: hee changed his former resolution to another, and in stead of attending for them, discamped, to get before them to Baesa, from whence hee sent part of his troupes to Mues de Tolosa, to hinder the passage of our men, and seize them first on the high Mountaines. Wherein hee was foreseene by Count Diego Lopez de Haro, who sent his Sonne Dom Diego and two of his Nephewes, Sanceo Ferdinand, and Martin Nugnez, to get first possession of them. There was the Fight sharpe and cruell, because they found the Arabes on the toppe of the pointed Rockes, neere to the Castell of Ferrall, from whence they were to driue them by force of Armes (as they did) and planted downe there their Tents and Pauilions.

The Castle of Ferrall taken from the Moores.

On the Thursday, about the ninth houre, all the Army came and lodged at the foote of the Mountaines, where part of them ascended, and the rest encamped on the bankes of Guadalhaiara. On the morrow, the three Kings of Nauarre, Arragon and Leon, ascended the Mountaines, and lodged themselues betweene those two that were beneath the Castell of Ferrall, which (the same day) they tooke from the Moores.

To come to the place where the enemies Army was encamped, there was but one passage so strait and vneasie, as one man alone could defend it against a whole Army; bridle, to saue himselfe in the Towne of Baesa, or that of Iaen, followed with no more but foure Horse onely.

By his example his chiefest Commanders, shifte for themselues through the wide fields: God knoweth how the rest (pitifully affrighted) serued for a Butte or ayme to the Christians, who made no meane Massacre of the Moores, although they were twenty men to one Christian. So that vpon the account made, there remained slaine in the field Thirty Fiue Thousand Horsemen, and an Hundred and Threescore Thousand Foot-Soldiers, as it is written by Dom Rodericke of Toledo.

The wonderfull slaughter of the Moores, and paucity of the Christians.

Of the Christians were slaine but an Hundred and Fifteene men; among whom was not any of note, but three only, Dom Dalmau de Crexell, whom the Kings caused to bee buried in the Church of Toledo; Dom Alphonso Fernandez de Valladares, Commander of the Barre of the Order of Saint Iames; And F. Pedro Gomez D'Alueyda, Commander Dez Cazez de Toledo, Cornet of the Order of Calatraua. The Christians pursued the Moores so farre as to Vilches, hewing and cutting them still in pieces.

Considerations on this rare Victory.

This Victory was miraculous by all the circumstances. First, by the small number of Christians slaine in the Battaile, in regard and comparison of the Moores. Secondly, by the strange passage which the Heardsman shewed them. Thirdly, by a Crosse, which appeared in Heauen ouer the Christian Army (which Crosse was Red, finishing with foure Flower de luces, after the manner of the Order of Calatraua.) Fourthly, by the seuerall goings and returnings of the Chanon and Cabilcoll of Toledo, Dominicke Paschall, who bearing (according to the ancient custome of Primates) the Crosse of the Archbishop of Toledo, Roderigo Ximenes, a native of Nauarre (and such as obserued the particularities of this Battaile, wherein hee was with many Spanish and French Bishops) passed diuers times thwart the Sarazin Army, without receiuing any stroake or wound, albeit the staffe of the Crosse was shot full of Arrowes.

The diuers and arrowes shot at the Christians.

I haue seene in my time at Toledo, in the Chappell of Saint Lucie of the great Church, the Pictures drawne to the life of that Chanon Paschall, and of the Heardsmen, that shewed the passage to the Christians. The number of Lances and Arrowes darted at the Christians, was so great, that in two dayes of the Christian Armies reposing there; they had no other wood for Kitchin-seruice; beside, making great heapes and bundles of the remainder, in memory of a Battaile so worthy and famous.

During the two dayes, while the Army tarried in the Field of Battaile, Dom Diego Lopez de Haro, by consent of the three Kings, deuided the spoyles of the enemies Army.

Diuision made of the enemies spoyles among the best deserters.

To King Sanchio of Nauarre was giuen (without enuy) the honour of the Battaile, and to his Partakers the Chaines of the Palisado, by them so brauely forced, which hee caused to be brought to Pampelona, where one part of them is to bee seene in the Cathedrall Church, and at Sancta Maria de Roncesuaux. With these Chaines hee had the Tent and Pauilion of the Miramomelin.

The Riches of Gold and Siluer, as also the precious Stones, goodly Horses, rich Clothes of Silke and Gold; were diuided betweene the two Kings, and to all their Companies.

The Colonell of this Christian Army, was a Banner of Crimosine Silke, charged d'vne Croix potencee de Ierusalem, which Gonfanon or Pennon was blessed by the Pope, and deliuered to the Archbishop of Toledo, who carried it on the day of Battaile: After which fight, this Banner was fastened aloft in the Cathedrall Church, stretching from one side to the other.

The Miramomelins great Banner.

The great Banner of Miramomelin, was of Greene Silke, A vne demy Lune ou Croissant, renuersee d'Argent, entoure de Cinque Estoiles d'Or. And in the Orle or Border was this Deuice in Arabian Letters of Gold: Allahil Alla Mehemet Ressule, which is a Prayer of the Turkes: God is God, and Mahomet his Great Prophet.

The Men of the Borough of Saint Sernin de Pampelona, to note their valiant behauiour, carried for Armes of their Citie, Vne Escu de Synople au Croissant versé d'Argent à cinq Estoiles d'Or. And the most auncient houses of Pampelona, haue retained them still to this day: to shew, that they deriued their descent from them, who won that Banner from the Moores.

The words of the Count of Lanfarote.

Sanchio the Strong, forsooke his auncient Banner, Et por auer rompido in esta Batalla el Rey de Nauarra el Palenque de las Cadenas, tomo por Armas las Cadenas de oro en vneuesadas en campo de Sangre. And to preserue to posteritie, the memorie of the Battaile of Tolosa, wherein he brake the enchained Palissado of the Miramomelin: Hee tooke en Treillis compesé de Croix, Saultoire, Pauz, Fesses & Orle de Chaines d'Or en champ de Gueulles.

King Sanchio gaue part of his Chaines, to his Nauarre Knights, and other Spanish Knights of his Battalion, who since that time, gaue ouer their auncient Armes, or else quartered them with Chaines: As yet to this day may be seene in the best houses of Nauarre, and the Prouinces in the Kingdomes of Spaine, all enriched with these Chaines, which serue for Enquirie.

Armes giuen and ordered according to this honorable victory, and carried afterward in memory thereof.

We will obserue some few, deriued from an infinite number of other, according as they are set downe by the Count of Lanfarote. A imitation del Rey Dom Sancho de Nauarre, muchos de los Caualleros que se hallaran in la Batalla de Tolosa, vsaron por Armas la Deuisa de las Cadenas. De las quales se precian muchos linages. That in imitation, and by example of the King of Nauarre Dom Sanchio, many of the Knights, who were present at the Battaile de Nauas de Tolosa, tooke for Armes and Deuise, those Chaines; Armes, which in many most Noble Linages and Families in Spaine, doe hold as great Honour to them, and beare them to this present day. Here follow a few, collected from an infinite number of other.

Don Garzia Romeu of Arragon, who before this Battaile, Portoit d'Argent à vn Aigle de Sable: tooke De Gueulles à trois Pieux en Paux esleuez de dessus trois motes en poincte, & enchainez d'vne Chaine d'Or in Fesse. The Spanyards call those Stakes or Piles of the Palissado Estacas.

Inigo de Mendoza Porta tranche de Gueulles à la Bande de Synople bordee d'Or, flanque de Gueulles a Vingt Pancilles d' Argent, & sur le tout en Saultoir & en Orle de Chaines d'Or. Armes retained by the Mendozaes and the Hurtados of Mendoza.

The Mendozaes of Baesa Portent de Gueulles à la mesme Bande que dessus à l'Orle & Chaines d'Or.

Inigo de Stuniga, and those of his descent, Portent à la Bande de Sable, à l'Orle chargee d'vne Chaine componee de huict Chainons d'Or.

They of Mugnos at Baesa, Portent d'Or à la Croix de Calatraua de Gueulles, Escartelé d'Or à trois Fesses de Gueulles, à l'Orle de Gueulles chargee d'vne Chaine d'Or.

Raymond de Peralta: De Gueulles au Griffon d'Or, à l'Orle de Gueulles à vne Chaine d'Or.

Alphonso Telles de Menesez, who before this Battaile bare but Vne Escu d'Or: afterward, Le chargea d'vne Chaine en Bande d'Azur.

Pedro Masa, descended of Fortunio Masa, a Gascoigne by originall, and who in the Battaile of Alcoraz, giuen against the Moores, in Anno One thousand foure score and sixteene, brought to the King of Arragon three hundred Gascoignes, armed with Battaile-Axes, to succour him, and whence that Noble Familie dwelling in Arragon tooke Sirname: Pour Armes de Gueulles à vne Masse d'Armes mise en Pal, & adroussa deux Chesnes d'Or en Pal, & la Masse au mitan.

Those of the Linage of Abarca in Arragon and Nauarre; Portent d'Or à l'Orle, & la Bande de Chesnes d'Azur, à deux Galoches Eschiquettees d'Or & de Sable, l'vne in Chef au dernier Canton, & l'autre au Canton de la Poincte.

They of Villaseca, Portent de Synople à vne Muraille d'Argent, Bretessee de Sable en Pointe, au Bras armé d'Argent, tenant vne Banderole d'Or à l'Orle d'Or chargee de Tronçons de Chesnons rompus & attachez de deux en deux d'Azur.

Those of the Ligne of Otaco, Portent d'Or à vne Chaine de Sable mise en Bande.

Those of Arracaual, or Iracaual, Portent d'Azur à vne Chaine d'Or mise en Bande, à deux Coquilles de mesme; l'vne en Chef, & l'autre en poincte. And

They of Velma, issued of the house of Dom Diego Lopez de Haro, Count of Biscaye; Portent

Portent de Haro, which is, as we haue formerly said, D'Argent à vn Arbre de Sable, à Deux Loups trauerſez de Sable agueulez de deux Moutons de Gueulles, à la Bordure de Gueulles, chargee d'vne Chaine de huict Chainons d'Or.

The Banner of the Miramamolin borne in many Coates of Armes.

In memory of the ſame Battaile, you may ſee in Spaine and Nauarre, an infinitie of Noble houſes, which beare in their Armes the Banner of the great Miramamolin, A la Lune renuerſée d'Argent, & aux Eſtoiles d'Or; and others full of Croſſes of diuers colours, and the moſt part of them finiſhing in Floures de Luces, by reaſon of that which appeared in Heauen, ouer the Chriſtian Armie the day of Battaile. And there are many Families, eſpecially in Nauarre and other places of Spaine, which beare in their Armes of diuers Mettals and Colours, Floures de Luces in Croſſe, in Saultoir and in Orles.

In Nauarre, they of Naruaez, iſſued from S. Iohn Pied de Port: D'Argent Cinq Fleures de Lys d'Or en Saultoire.

They of Arze, Lords of Villarias, d'Or à cinq Fleures de Lys d'Azur en Saultoir, à l'Orle de deux Traicts Eſchiquetez d'Or & de Gueulles.

They of Maldonados, de Gueulles à Cinque Fleurs de Lys d'Or.

The fauours and recompence giuen to the Prince Heardſman Martin Alhaya.

We will finiſh this Diſcourſe of Nauarre, with the recompence giuen to the Heardſman, that enſtructed the aſſured way to ſurprize thē Moores. He was named Martin Alhaya, who hauing giuen the vndoubted aſſurance, and direction for paſſing without any perill or danger, to the Lords Diego Lopez de Haro, and Garcia Romu, deputies for the Chriſtian Armie; found the Carkaſſe and head of a Cowe, deuoured but lately before by Woolues. The paſſage was therefore called The Cowes Head, in memorie whereof, King Alphonſo of Leon the ninth, Sirnamed the Noble, gaue the title of Nobilitie to this Heardſman Martin, whom he alſo ſirnamed Cabeza de Vaca, The Cowes Head. For Armes Eſchiequette de Gueulles & d'Or de ſept pieces à la Bordure d'Azur, chargee de Six Teſtes de Vaches d'Argent. Store of Lands were likewiſe giuen him, about Baeſa and Iaen. Of him are deſcended the Knights renowned for valiancie in the Hiſtories of Spaine, and namely Dom Fernand Ruyz Cabeza de Vaca, a Knight of high courage and aduentures, and who performed actions of admiration, in the ſuccour which he gaue to the King of Caſtile Dom Ferdinand, called the Sainct, for the ſurprizall and Conqueſt of Cordoua, wonne from the Moores of Spaine, in the yeare One thouſand two hundred thirtie ſixe, foure & twenty yeares after the Battaile of Toloſa.

CHAP. V.

Elagius, neere kinſman to the laſt King of the Gothes Dom Roderigo, drowned in the Guadaleta, after the Battaile wonne by the Moores at Xeres de Medina Sidonia, on Saint Martins day in Nouember, the yeare of Grace ſeauen hundred and foureteene, and of Here de Ceſar Auguſtus ſeauen hundred fiftie two: Saued himſelfe by better fortune, at the Mountaines of the Aſtures, where lying cloſe and ſecretly for ſome time; he auoided the firſt furie of the Ammirant Muſa, as alſo of Captaine Tariffa, who were Conquerors of Spaine.

Thoſe which remained of the naturall inhabitants of the Aſtures, were compelled (by the law of Warre) to obey the victorious Arabes, and to liue vnder their controle, vpon ſuch conditions as they would preſcribe to the vanquiſhed. Pelagius being an ingenious Prince, ſought to winne the amitie of Mugnuſa, naturally a Spanyard, but was made a Renegado, and ſo became Gouernour of Gigion in the Aſtures, for the Captaine Tariffa. This Mugnuſa well liking the ſeruices of Pelagius; made imployment of him in the charges belonging to the Prouince, during the ſpace of fiue whole yeares: at the end whereof, he was ſent to Tariffa, who remained then at Cardon or Corduba.

Pelagius wiſe and worthy Prince ſeeketh fauour with Mugnuſa.

During the abſence of Pelagius, Mugnuſo became enamoured of the Siſter to Pelagius, whom he tooke from her abiding, and conueighed to Gigion, vſing her there as his Loues Miſtreſſe. At his returne from Corduba, Pelagius impatiently offended for the rape of his Siſter; began to quicken his memory, with the practiſes and courſes of Count Iulian, to reuenge himſelfe by the like affront. Wherein hee tooke himſelfe to be much better grounded, then Count Iulian was: conſidering the contrariety of Religion, and vſurpation of the Lands in Spaine by Infidell Moores.

Pelagius offended at his Siſters wrong.

On the other ſide, although he had no ſubiect for vengeance, ſaue this onely vice (not proper to any, but a ſeruile deiected ſoule, vtter enemy to any vertuous act of courage: yet the Conqueſts of Prince Garcia Ximenes, King of Nauarre, ſerued him as a modell and cleare Looking glaſſe, for exciting him to ſome generous act of valour, whereby his Countrey be deliuered. Beſide, the right of Hoſpitality being direly conſidered, we ſtand obliged to keepe it ciuilly, eſpecially on their behalfe, which entertaine vs humainely in our aduerſities, were they Turkes, Pagans or Canibals, being vanquiſhed by the right of Religion, and the Charity which naturally we owe to our Country. All theſe conſiderations together, made Prince Pelagius reſolue, to declare himſelfe an enemy to the Arabes.

Former good examples are eſpecially encouragement.

So that hauing collected from the Towne of Cangas, and other round neighbouring parts of the Aſtures, a troupe of a thouſand fighting men: he was choſen to be their Captaine and Leader, in the yeare of Grace Seauen hundred and nineteene. Firſt he ouercame Alchaman, the Affricane Captaine, and twenty thouſand Moores (ſo ſay the Chroniclers of Spaine.) And not long after, to wit, in the yeare Seauen hundred twenty two: he conquered the Citie of Leon, called by the Romans Legio Gemina, builded by the Emperor Traiane.

The Conqueſts & fortunes of Prince Pelagius.

This Conqueſt of Leon, by Spaniſh Hiſtorians of good noate, is not attributed to Pelagius; who carried no other title, but Prince d'Ouiedo, called in Latine Onetum, and and by a word of further time, The Citie of Bishops: becauſe after the ouerthrow of King Rodericke, the Biſhops of Spaine (with their goods and Shrines) repaired to this Citie, being of difficult acceſſe in the Mountaines of the Aſtures. The Succeſſours of Pelagius continued the ſame title of Princes D'Ouiedo, vntill the time of Ordogne, ſecond of the name, who hauing wonne the Citie of Leon from the Moores, tranſferred thither his Seate, ſtiling himſelfe King of Leon, where he cauſed to be builded the great Church of Sancta Maria Maiore. Le Lyon rempant de Gueulles, en de Sable, en Champ d' Argent, which is giuen to the Kings of Leon for Armes; belonged not to Pelagius, who is not knowne to haue any: as we are informed by Ambroſius Morales, and other good Spaniſh Authors. Wherein the Biſhop of Burgos confeſſeth his fault, who writeth, Que el Rey Dom Pelago gagno à Leon, y vſo deſtas Armas: Pues qu'el Rey Dom Pelago, nunca fue Rey de Leon, ſino de Gixon, ni ſe ſabe de Armas que aye vſado en ſus Eſcudos. That the King Dom Pelagius wonne the Citie of Leon, whereof he tooke the Armes, is to ſmall purpoſe, ſo ſaith Morales. Becauſe the King Dom Pelagius was neuer King of Leon, but onely of Gigion, and it is not knowne what Armes this King Pelagius bare in his Eſcutcheon: This Molina telleth vs, in the life of Dom Henry the third. And that they of Gigion, Portoient en Armes d'Argent à Cinq Lions rempants de Gueulles en Saultoir, à l'Orle de Gueulles chargee de huict Saultoirs (which the Spaniards call Aſpas) d'Or. Very true it is, that the Kings and Princes of Gothia, carried in Armes the Lyon rampant, as I haue ſeene a thouſand times in the Workes of Olaus Magnus, Vnckle and Nephew, both of them Biſhops of Vpſala, and Primates of Gothia. Botherius writeth likewiſe, that the firſt Kings of the Gothes, which paſſed into Spaine; Portoient d'Argent au Lyon rempant de Sable: And that one of the ſame is yet to be ſeene, on the Tombe of Aſtolpho, which is at Barcelona. There is great obſcurity in all theſe monuments, ſo that we neede the thred of Theſeus, to be diuided in ſeuerall Clewes, to guide vs out of theſe mazing Labyrinths. For, if we will credit Ambroſe Morales, he plainely tels vs, that the firſt Armes of the Kings of Leon, was vne Croix Ancree d'Or, richement elabouree, ayant au nitan vn Ruby gros comme vne Chaſtaigne. And that this Croſſe was brought by the Angels of Heauen, to the King of Leon Dom Alphonſo the Chaſte, in the yeare of Grace Eight hundred twentie ſixe. And the ſaid Alphonſo gaue that Croſſe to the Church of Ouiedo, where it is yet to this day. Alſo, that he tooke it for Armes, as, long time after him, did his Succeſſours in the Kingdome of Leon, who bare D'Argent à ceſte Croix Ancree d'Or; which is for further enquirie. But returne we now to Pelagius called Prince D'Ouiedo.

The Armes of Pelagius not certainely knowne.

Richly wrought hauing a Rubie in the midſt, as great as a Cheſtnut.

The Hiſtorie proceeding on from Prince Pelagius.

1. Pelagius, who hauing reigned ſeauenteene yeares, died in the yeare of Grace, Seauen hundred thirtie ſixe: leauing a Sonne and a Daughter.

2. Fafila, who reigned but two years, and dyed, not hauing any iſſue: His Daughter was

3. Ormeſinda, wife to Alphonſo, firſt of the name, King of Gigion, and Ouiedo, Sonne to Peter, Count and Gouernour of part of Biſcaye, iſſued from Recarede, the firſt Orthodoxall or ſound beleeuing King of Spaine. Of this Ormeſinda enſued the cuſtome held in Spaine, that Daughters ſucceeded in the Crowne, through defect of male Children. Of this marriage of Alphonſo the firſt with Ormeſinda, came three Sonnes and one Daughter.

The firſt Orthodoxall Kings of Spaine.

Froila,
Vimarano, ſtabd by his Brother Froila. Fraterno primi mæduerunt ſanguine mani.
Aurelio. And
Odeſinda, wife to Silo.
Alphonſo had by a Concubine, a naturall Sonne, named Mauregatho.

Alphonſon the firſt reigned nineteene yeares, and dyed in Anno Seauen hundred fiftie ſixe: Leauing for Succeſſour in the Kingdome his eldeſt Sonne

4. Froila, whoſe Reigne continued eleauen yeares and a halfe. By Momerana his wife, Daughter to Eudes, Duke of Aquitaine, he left two Sonnes, and one Daughter.

Alphonſo.
Bermundo: And
Ximena, Mother to Bernardo del Carpio. Froila died in the yeere, Seuen hundred, threeſcore, and eight, whereby his Brother

5. Aurelio ſucceeded in the Kingdome, by reaſon of his Brothers childrens minority in yeeres. He raigned but ſix yeeres, and dying without Iſſue, in Anno, Seuen hundred, threeſcore, and foureteene; he had for Succeſſour in the Kingdome of Ouiedo.

6. Silo, Husband to Odeſinda, Daughter to King Alphonſo the firſt. His Raigne was nine yeeres, and died without Iſſue: by his death, the Baſtard, or naturall Son

7. Mauregatho vſurped the Kingdome, which he held but fiue yeeres and a halfe, and died without any child, in the yeere, Seuen hundred, foureſcore and nine. This was he, who for the maintenance of his vſurpation, made himſelfe tributary to the Moores, of an hundred Maidens yeerely tribute, to wit, fifty of noble extraction, and the like number of meaner mens Daughters: Ambition to raigne, had throwne him into ſuch baſe and diſhoneſt bargaines. After him, raigned together

8. Bermundo, And Alphonſo. } Brethren, Sonnes of Froila.

Bermundo raigned two yeeres alone, and foure with his Brother. By Imilona his wife, hee left two Sonnes, very yonng in yeeres.

Ramiro: And Garcia.

By the death of Bermundo, happening in the yeere, Seuen hundred, foureſcore, and fifteene; his Brother.

9. Alphonſo, called the Chaſte, ſecond of the name, raigned nine and twenty yeeres. He liued chaſtely with his wife Bertha, of whom hee neuer had carnall company. And this was the man, to whō the Angels brought the Croſſe, whereof before wee haue made mention. He deceaſed in the yeere of Grace, Eight hundred, twenty, foure: And had for his Succeſſours

10. Ramiro, And Garcia, } Sonnes to the King Dom Bermundo.

Ramiro out-liued his Brother ſix yeers in the Kingdome, and by Vrraca of Caſtile his wife, he had two Sonnes.

Fortunio, And Garcia.

Ramiro died in the yeere eight hundred, thirty, and one, leauing for Succeſſour in the Kingdome, his eldeſt ſonne.

11. Fortunio, or Ordogne.

Who by Mugna his wife, had fiue Sonnes, and one Daughter.

Alphonſo, Bermondo,
Nugno,
Odoacre: And Froila.

As for the Daughter, ſhe is not named.

Ordogne Fortunio, dyed in the yeere eight hundred, forty, one, hauing raigned ten yeeres, leauing the Kingdome to his eldeſt Sonne.

12. Alphonſo, third of the name, whoſe Raigne continued forty ſixe yeeres: by Ximenia his wife, he left foure ſonnes.

Garcia,
Ordogne Fortunio,
Froila: And
Gonſales, the Arch-deacon.

By the death of Alphonſo the third, happening in the yeere eight hundred, foureſcore, and ſixe, his eldeſt Sonne.

13. Garcia ſucceeded in the Kingdome, who raigned but three yeeres, and hauing no Iſſue by his wife, the daughter to Nugno Fernandez of Caſtile, the Kingdome came to his Brother

14. Ordogne Fortunio, ſecond of the name, who raigned eight yeeres, and died in Anno, Eight hundred, foureſcore, and ſeuenteene. He had three wiues: By the firſt, named Eluira, hee had foure ſonnes, and one daughter.

Sancio,
Alphonſo, fourth King of the name.
Ramiro, ſecond King of the name.
Garcia: The Daughter was Ximenia.

His ſecond wife, Ragonda of Galicia, was by him repudiated: and in third mariage, he eſpouſed Sancia of Nauarre. By theſe two wiues he left not any Iſſue, and by his death 15: Froila, ſecond of the name, ſonne to Alphonſo the third, vſurped the Kingdome, being ſirnamed the Cruell, who raigned but one yeere and a halfe: By Mugna his wife he left three Sonnes.

Alphonſo, King.
Ordogne Fortunio: And Ramiro.

He had a Baſtard beſide, called by his owne name, Father to Pelagius, who was a Deacon.

16. Alphonſo, fourth of the name, ſecond

Sonne of Ordogne the ſecond, was King of Ouiedo and of Leon, who reigned ſixe yeares. By Vrraca Ximena of Nauarre, his wife, he left but one Sonne, Ordogne Fortunio, Sirnamed the Bad.

By the death of Alphonſo the fourth, happening in the yeare nine hundred and foure, ſucceeded his Brother

17. Ramiro, ſecond of the name, who reigned twentie yeares. By Thereza of Nauarre, his wife, he had three Sonnes and a Daughter.

Bermondo.
Ordogne, King.
Sancio: And
Eluira, who was ſhorne a Nunne.

By the death of this Ramiro the ſecond, which was in the yeare of Grace Nine hundred twentie foure, the Kingdome came to his ſecond Sonne

18. Ordogne, third of the name, who reigned but fiue yeares. Hee had two Wiues, the firſt of them being called Vrraca, Daughter to Ferdinando Gonſales, Count of Caſtile, was diuorced.

By Eluira his ſecond wife, he had a Son named

Bermondo, ſecond King of his name.

19. Sancio ſucceeded in the Kingdome, after the death of King Ordogne the third his Father. He was ſirnamed the Groſſe, and his reigne endured but twelue yeares: for he died in the yeare, Nine hundred fortie one, leauing the Kingdome to his onely Son, which he had by his wife Thereza, named

20. Ramiro, third of the name, who reigned foure and twenty yeares. By his wife Vrraca he had no iſſue, and by his death, happening in the yeare Nine hundred threeſcore and fiue, the Kingdome came to

21. Bermondo, ſecond of the name, Sonne to King Ordogne the third, his reigne continuing ſeauenteene yeares. He had two Wiues, the firſt whereof was named Velaſquita, who was Mother to Chriſtina the wife of Dom Ordogne the Blinde. And of this marriage enſued a plentifull Linage, which may ſerue to vnderſtand the generall Hiſtorie of Spaine.

Alphonſe.
Ordogne.
Pelagius, and a Daughter named Donna Adonca Ordognez, wife to Dom Pelagius, ſirnamed the Deacon, Sonne of Froila, Baſtard Sonne to King Froila ſecond of the name. And by the marriage of this Adoncia, or Aloncetta of Leon, and Pelagius of Leon, were borne three Sonnes and one Daughter.

Pedro Ordogne.
Pelagius.
Nugno: And the Daughter
Thereſa, Mother to the Count of Caſtile Dom Suero de Caſtro.

The other wife of King Bermondo, ſecond of the name, was Donna Eluira, Mother of Alphonſo the fift King: And of Thereza, a religious Nunne.

He had moreouer a Son and a Daughter, by one or two Concubines.

Ordogno: And Eluira.

Bermondo the ſecond dyed in the yeare of Grace, Nine hundred foureſcore and two: Leauing for Succeſſour his Sonne

22. Alphonſo, fift of the name, who reigned ſixe and forty yeares: And by his wife Eluira, Daughter to Menlendo Gonſalez, enſued a Sonne and a Daughter.

Bermondo: And
Sancia, wife to Ferdinand of Nauarre, the firſt King of Caſtile.

By the death of Alphonſo the fift, happening in the yeare of Grace One thouſand twenty eight, ſucceeded in the Kingdome his Sonne

23. Bermondo, third of the name, who reigned nine yeares: And by his wife Thereza, Daughter to Sancio, Count of Caſtile, he had but one Sonne

Alphonſo, who died very yong.

So that by the death of Bermondo the third, which was in the yeare One thouſand thirtie ſeauen, and leauing no iſſue; the Kingdome of Leon came to his Siſter

24. { Sancia, Wife to Ferdinand.

Firſt of the name, King of Caſtile (ſecond Sonne to the King of Nauarre, Sancio the Great) who created the County of Caſtile to be a Kingdome, as we haue elſewhere ſaid. By this marriage of Sancia, and Ferdinand firſt of the name, called the Saint, were borne in the life-time of Bermondo the third.

Vrraca.

Sancio,

Sancio, King of Caſtile, firſt of the name: And Eluira.

After the death of King Bermondo, and in the ſame marriage, were borne Alphonſo, King of Leon, ſixt of the name: And Garcia.

The eldeſt of theſe two Brethren,

25. Alphonſo, ſixt of the name, was the fiue & twentith King of Leon, in the yeare One thouſand ſixtie ſeauen. He reigned one and fortie yeares in the ſaid Kingdome of Leon, and came to the Crown of Caſtile: Hauing had foure wiues; by the firſt whereof enſued

26. Vrraca, Queene of Leon and Caſtile.

She was twiſe married; firſt to Raymond of Bourgongne, of the Houſe of the Counts of Bourgongne, iſſuing from that of France. And this was the reaſon, why the ſaid Raymond bare, D'Azur à trois fleurs de lys d'Or, as the Counte of Lanzarote writeth in his Hiſtorie of Andelouzia, the firſt Booke, and hundred Chapter. The ſaid Raymond was made Count of Galicia: And of this marriage was borne Alphonſo Raymond, King.

In ſecond marriage ſhee had to Huſband, Alphonſo, called ſeauenth of the name, King of Leon; of Nauarre by vſurpation, and of Arragon in his own right. With her he had but bad ſucceſſe, and no iſſue. The Sonne of the firſt marriage, was Raymond.

27. Alphonſo of Galicia, eight of the name, exalted to be King of Leon (for the diſordered life of his Mother, before ſhe died) in the yeare One thouſand one hundred twentie two. Whoſe reigne laſted thirty fiue yeares. By his wife Donna Berenguela, daughter to the Count of Barzelona, he had many children, in number whereof was

28. Ferdinand, ſecond of the name, who in the right of his Mother, came to the Kingdome of Leon, the yeare of grace One thouſand one hundred fiftie ſeauen, and reigned thirtie one yeares. He married three wiues. By the firſt, Vrraca, Infanta of Portugall, he had Alphonſo, King.

In ſecond marriage he eſpouſed Thereza, of the Houſe of Lara, deſcended from Don Pedro de Lara, one of the firſt Counts and Iudges of Caſtile: but by her he had no Childe.

His third wife was Vrraca Lopez: By whom he had two Sonnes.

Sancio Fernandez: And Garcia.

29: Alphonſo, ninth of the name, eldeſt Son to Ferdinand the ſecond, was King of Leon by the death of his Father, happening in the yeare One thouſand one hundred eightie eight. The ſaid Alphonſo reigned two and fortie yeares, and in his reigne was fought the memorable Battaile of Muradal, otherwiſe called of Toloſa, whereof we haue related the particularities in the former diſcourſe. By his wife Thereſa of Portugall, he had one Son and two Daughters.

Ferdinando.
Sancia: And Dulcina.

By his ſecond wife Berenguela of Caſtile, he had two Sonnes, and as many Daughters.

Ferdinando, King.
Alphonſo, Lord of Molina.
Conſtance, a Nunne. And Berenguela, wife to the Count of Brenne, King of Ieruſalem.

And by a Concubine he had a Baſtard, named Roderigo Alphonſo of Leon.

30. Ferdinand, third of the name, was King of Leon by the death of his Father, which happened in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand two hundred and thirty. This was the ſame Ferdinand, who by aduiſe and counſell of his Mother, vſurped the Kingdome of Caſtile, which belonged to his eldeſt ſiſter Madam Blanch of Caſtile, Queene of France, Mother to the King Saint Lewes. For, by the marriage of Alphonſo King of Caſtile, called the Noble, fourth of the name, and Elianor, Daughter to Henry, ſecond of the name, King of England, were borne nine Children.

Blanche, Queene of France, Mother to Saint Lewes the ninth.
Berenguela, Queene of Leon, Mother Ferdinand the third.
Sancio, dying in his Infancie.
Vrraca, Queene of Portugall.
Ferdinand deceaſed yong.
Malſada, dying in her youth.
Conſtance a Nunne.
Leonora, Queene of Arragon.
Henry, firſt of the name, King of Caſtile, ſtile, who reigned but three yeares, without hauing any iſſue by Malfada of Portugal his wife: from whom he was ſeperated by iudgement of the Church, Pope Innocent the third then ſitting in his holy Seate, becauſe they were married in the fourth degree of conſanguinitie.

Two Daughters more, dying in infancie.

By the death of Henry, firſt of the name, King of Caſtile, Ferdinand King of Leon vſurped the Kingdome of Caſtile, againſt the Houſe of France. And in this Ferdinand, the Kingdomes of Leon and Caſtile remained conioyned and annexed together, without being any more deuided.

The reſt of the ſucceſſion and Genealogie of the Kings of Leon, is to be ſeene in that of Caſtile, in larger relation.

The Order of Saint Iames, called of the Sword; Inſtituted in the yeare One thouſand One hundred fiftie and eight.

L'Ordre de S. Iacques dit de L'Eſpee.

THe Count of Lanſarote, in the firſt Booke of his Hiſtorie of Andalouzia (Imprinted during my firſt voyage into Spayne, in the yeare One thouſand fiue hundred eighty eight) in the two and thirtieth Chapter, ſpeaking of the Inſtitution of Knights, of the Militarie Order of Saint Iames (the onely ſubiect of this Diſcourſe) auoucheth the beginning thereof to be, vnder the Reignes of Alphonſo, ninth of the name, King of Caſtile, and of Ferdinand, King of Leon. El primer Lugar en eſta Hiſtoria tiene la de Sanctiago Patron de Eſpagna Cuyo principio de Religion, y Orden de Cauelleria fue ſiendo primer Maeſtre della Don Perez Fernandez Natural de Fuente Encalada, lugar del Obiſpado de Aſtorga, en tiempo de los Reyes Dom Alonſo el Noueno de Caſtilla, y Dom Fernando ſu Tio Rey de Leon. Siendo ſumo Pontifice Alexandro Tercero, que fue electo en el Anno de 1158.

The words of the Count de Lanſarote.

The Order of Saint Iames, Patron of Spaine, had for the firſt Great Maiſter thereof, Dom Perez Fernandez, a Native of Fuente Encalada, the place of the Countries bounds, and the Diocceſſe of Aſtergua: In the times of the Kings Dom Alphonſo the ninth of Caſtile, and of Ferdinand of Leon. And ſitting then in the Holy Seate at Rome, Pope Alexander third of the name, elected in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand one hundred fiftie eight.

The make or noate of this Order, is the repreſentation of a Sword, being of Red Sattin imbrodered, and a Scallop-ſhell of the ſame vpon the the ſaid Sword, which the Knights of this Order doe weare on their breſts, and on the left ſide. Now, why the ſaid Order is called Of the Sword, (tearmed in vulgar Spaniſh Lagarto) Dom Roderick Ximenes of Nauarre, Archbiſhop of Toledo, and Primate of Spayne, in the Seuenteenth Booke of his Chronicle, deliuereth the reaſon, concerning this deuiſe of Saint Iames of the Sword, & why it is of Red coulter, rather then any other.

Concerning the marke or noate of the Order.

Rubet Enſis Sanguine Arabum.

The Eſcutcheon of this Order, is D'Or a l'Eſpee de Gueules, et la Coquille au mit.m de meſme. And as for the Banner of Saint Iames in Galicia, it is in like manner D'Or a la Croix Fleurdelizee de Gueules, Cantonnee de Quatre Coquilles, & d'vne au mitan de la diſte Croix, de Gueules.

The Eſcutcheon of the Order.

Las Armas y Eſcudos de la miſma Orden, ſon la miſma Eſpada Roxa, con vna Venera in medio della, y el Campo de Oro: aunque en el Pendon las traen diferentes, que traen la Cruz Roja de Calatraua con cinque Veneras in Campo de Oro. Aſsi como quando quan a Hieruſalem, trayan Palmas, de donde ſe Viniero a llamar Palmeros los Peregrinos.

The Armes and Eſcucheons of the ſame Order, are the ſame Red Sword, with a Scallop ſhell in the midſt, in a Field of Golde. It differs (neuertheleſſe) from the Banner of Saint Iames, Which is D Or, a la Croix de Calatraua de Gueules a Cinq Coquilles de meſmes. Thoſe Scallops or Cockles are the Enſeignes and the markes of the Apoſtle Saint Iames, whereof Pilgrimes make vſe, in their Holy Voyage to the Sepulchre of the ſaid Apoſtle. They gather them on the Sea ſhoares, and faſten them in their Hattes or Hoodes, as a marke of their Pilgrimage, Like vnto them, that goe the great Voyage to Ieruſalem, and at their returning thence, doe bring Palmes with them. And this is the reaſon, why (in elder times) ſuch Pilgrimes were called Palmers, only in regard of their Palmes.

Concerning the Great Maſters of Militarie Orders in Spayne.

Heere let it ſerue for a generall aduertiſement, that all the Great Maiſters of the Military Orders in Spayne, haue alwayes neere or about them, into any parts whereſoeuer they goe, be it in Peace or warre: Thirteene Knights Commanders, for their ayde and ſeruice, as alſo to aſſiſt them in Councell, being called Los Trezes. Which will well ſerue to vnderſtand the Hiſtories of Spayne, in deſcribing the Battailes and Encounters, wherein haue bin perſonally preſent, the Great Maiſters of the Orders, either of Leon, Galicia, Portugall or Andalouzia, Prouinces which were long time vnder the Hommage and authority of the Kingdome of Leon, ſending euermore thoſe Thirteene (as occaſions ſerued) to the ſaid Great Maiſters. In the deſcription of the Knights of the vanguarde, conducted by Diego Lopez de Haro, in the Battaile of Muradall, Dom Pedro Arias, Maiſter of Saint Iames, with the Knights of his Order. Among whom were Garcia Gonſales de Candomio, Comendador Mayor de Leon. y Treze: Dom Fernan Perez Comendador y Treze: Ruy Gonſales de Manſilla, Comendador de l'Hoſpital de Toledo y Treze: y Fernan Garcia de Lerma Comendador de las Tiendas y Treze: y Dom Fernan Eſteuan de Villarruuia y Treze: Ruy Gutierrez de Villa Garcia Comendador de Montreall y Treze, &c. All Knights of the Order of Saint Iames: which will guide any Gentleman, reading the Hiſtories of the Militarie Orders of Spayne, deſcribed by Morales, and Radez d'Andrada.

Diego Lopez de Haro in the Battaile of Muradall.

The Order of the Knights of Saint Iames of the Sword, tooke beginning in the Kingdome of Galicia, vnder the Homage of Leon, to ſecond the Monkes of Saint Helie, in the ſame Kingdome.

The Monkes of Saint Helie in Galicia, and their care of poore Pilgrimes.

Thoſe Monkes of Saint Helie in Galicia, perceiuing the great affluence of people, which dayly reſorted to Saint Iames of Compoſtella on Pilgrimage, and that the high wayes were impeached by the Moores, by which meanes, the poore Pilgrimes ſuſtained a thouſand miſeries: They builded Hoſpitalles, which might ſerue for houſe-roome and lodgings to the ſaid Pilgrimes of Saint Iames, to releeue, helpe and heale them, in the caſe of ſickneſſe or other diſtreſſes. The firſt Hoſpital which they builded, was that of S. Marke the Euangeliſt, in the Suburbs of the Citty of Leon. The ſecond, in the marches and limits of Caſtille, ſirnamed De las Tiendas: and afterward many other, on the great high way of S. Iames, which to this day is called The Frenche Way.

Buylding of Hoſpitalles.

Thirteene Gentlemen, mooued with zeale, and in meere Charity to the Monkes of Saint Helie of Galicia, who had done so much for the poore Pilgrimes of Saint Iames (taking this Apostle of Spayne to be their Patrone:) made sollemne vowes, to guarde the passages of the said Frenche Way, against the Moores and Robbers of Spayne. They communicated their purpose to the Monkes of Saint Helie, and fell to agreement, to make one Corps du garde among themselues.

The ioyning of thirteene Gentlemen with the Monkes.

The Monkes and their Priour should exercise all actions of Iustice, in Spirituall occasions, as well on the Knights, as Priests and Clearkes, admitted into the seruice of the said Order. But concerning the Knights, they had a Gouernour and Commander, a Great Maister, who had good knowledge in all Temporall occurrences, by whom was payed the Tenthes and other Rights, to the Monkes of Saint Marke. At the beginning of this Order, these Knights were not maried: but afterward, they had such permission graunted them.

The first Hospitall which these Knights of Saint Iames erected, was in the Suburbs of Leon, ioyning that there of Saint Marke, to the Monkes of Saint Helie, who gaue them the foundation whereon to build theirs. And the first Great Maister of this Order, was Dom Pedro Fernandez de Puente-Encalada, a braue and valiant Knight. Their habit was a Gowne and Hood white, on the breast a Crosse of Red cloth, finishing like the Blade of a Sworde, the Hilte therof Crosletted, and fashioned after the Auncient manner, with a Scallop of the same, on the closing of the Sword to the hilte: And thereupon they were called the Knights of Saint Iames of the Sworde. At the beginning they had their haire on their heads cut close, and their crownes shauen bare, like to the Monkes of Saint Helie: with whom they liued in common, & made their vowes of Chastity, Pouerty and Obedience; but they maried foone after, as hath bin said, and had their benefites seperate by themselues, the right of Tenths reserued for the Monks. Both the one and other kept & obserued the Rule of S. Augustine, in their profession.

Dom Pedro Fernandez, de Puente-Encalada the first Great Maister of S. Iames, & their Habite.

The First Great Maister of this Order Dom Pedro, accompanied with the number of his Knights, went to Rome, and presented himself before Pope Alexander the Third: who confirmed their Rule, in Anno 1175. the third of the Nones of Inly, approuing also what had bin disposed by Cardinall Hyacinthe, his Legat in Spayne.

The Great Maisters going to Rome,

These Knights came (soone after) into bad agreement with Dom Ferdinand King of Leon: who suspected them, to fauour the King of Castille his aduersary. So that they forsooke their Conuent of Saint Marke at Leon, and withdrew into Castille, where they were well entertained. Dom Alphonso gaue them the Towne and Castell of Veles, in Latine called Vrcesia, where they builded a Conuent; which they made the Chiefe of the Order. And because they would not loose the possession of S. Marke at Leon; they sent thither (from Chapter to Chapter) the Brethren of their Order (after the death of the King of Leon Ferdinand) to maintaine themselues in the possession therof. Neuertheless, at the charges of the Knights of Leon, and with prouiso, that they should acknowledge alwayes them of Veles, to be the chiefe men of the Order, as accordingly it was done for some time.

Prouident care for losse of no benefits.

But afterwards, they of Saint Marke at Leon, would no longer acknowledge them of Veles in Castille to be their Superiours; but made their faction apart, encreasing greatly in goods in Extremadura, a riche Prouince, conquered from the Moores by the Kings of Leon.

Two seuerall Houses, fallen factious,

This order of S. Iames, was established likewise in Portugall, where it attained to many Commanderies, confessing Veles to be chiefe of the Order: vntill the time of the King of Portugall Dom Denys, who would haue a Great Maister and Chiefe of the Order alone in his owne Kingdome, without any subiection to that of Castill.

The ability and power of these Knights.

These Knights of Saint Iames became wonderfull rich and plenteous: so that they could bring to the Field a Thousand compleate Launces, of Veles and Leon.

The Great Masters were chosen by the Thirteene Knights, Commanders of the said Order, and Gouernours thereof; who deposed them likewise, if occasion serued.

This Order hath more riches alone by it selfe, then all the rest in Spayne together: An infinity of dignities, Conuents, Monasteries, Hospitalles, Commanderies and Vicaredges. For, First of all.

The two Heads of the Order, are they of Veles and Leon.

The Knights and other beside of the Order.

This Order (without accounting the Kingdome of Portugall) hath more then Sixe hundred Knights, Which weare the habite of Saint Iames; beside the Commanderi s and Dignities: More then two hundred Brethren, Clearkes at Masse, and others, which haue actuall residence in the Conuents, Vicaredges and other Benefices of the said Order. There are many Great Lords of Spayne, who hold it great Honour to them, to weare the habite of Saint Iames, although without any Commaunderies. The Emperour Charles the Fift, to acknowledge the great seruices, which hee had receiued by the braue Knight Dom Ferdinando Cortes Marqueese of Val, who Conquered the great Citty of Mexico, and her rich Prince Motecumacin: Had this habite of Saint Iames presented him, which he refused, except he had a Commanderie of the said Order.

The Emperour Charles the Fifte did weare the habite of this Order.

Which was instituted, to make Warres vpon the Moores, who (in those times) ouer awed Spayne: but now since they are vtterly dislodged thence, the subiect of this Institution wanteth and ceaseth. Pope Adrian the Sixt incorporated the Great Maistership of this Order to the Crowne of Castille, by the death of the last Great Maister Alphonso de Cardegna. This annexion was made in the yeare, One thousand foure hundred ninety and three, So that since then, the Kings of Spayne haue bin perpetuall Administratours of the said order of Saint Iames of the Sword, and so continue.

The Order annexed to the Crowne as other were.

This Order encreased as well in Portugall, as in Leon and Castille. Sancio, First of the name, and Second King of Portugall, imparted to them the bootie, which he had conquered from the Moores, and gaue them of his owne demaines. The head bootie of the Order of Knights, belonging to Saint Iames of the Sworde in Portugall, was lands giuen by the said Sancio the First, as namely, Alcazar de Sal, Palmela and Almada, which neuerthelesse were but simple Commanderies, and acknowledged for Great Maister and Chiefe of the Order, him of Veles in Castille: which was so continued, vntill the reigne of Dom Denys, the Sixt, King of Portugall (Institutour of the Order of Christus) who exempted the Knights of Saint Iames of Portugall, from obedience and subiection to the Great Maister of Castille, and would needes ordaine, that Alcazar de Sal, (for alwayes after) should bee Chiefe of the Order; which yet notwithstanding, was (since then) transferred from Alcazar to Palmela.

King Sancio his bounty to this Order.

Iacques de Vitry, in the sixe and twenty Chapter of his Occidentall History, writeth that the auncient Seale, belonging to the Counsell and Chapter of this Order, was composed with a Sword in the midst, hauing on the right side a Sunne, and a Creseent on the other, and for the Legend: Sello de la Cauallcria de Sanct Iago: But that that of the Moderne, had a Crosse Fleurdlized in Sealing and counter-sealing, which I neuer read in any of the Histories of Spaine. The Count of Lansarote indeede maketh mention, of the Conquest of the Castell of Vilches, performed against the Moores in a day and a night, immediately after the Battaile of Vbeda, wonne by the three Kings of Nauarre, Leon and Arragon. Which place was held to be impregnable, and therefore the three Kings went thither with the Christian Armie. Although it was seated on an inaccessible Rocke, free from Sealing or vndermining; yet it was wonne by an Hidalgo, belonging to the Great Maister of Calatrana, Dom Roderigo de Ast, who was the first that mounted on the Wall, and fixed downe there the Standard of Castile. To whom, for hauing so valiantly besiedged the place, and for becomming Master thereof in a night and a day: the King gaue him for Armes L'Escu d'Azur a vn Soleil d'Or entoure d'Estoiles de mesme: Et dans le Rond dudict Soleil, de Castille, party de Leon. Armes retained by the descendants of that Hidalgo; which yet maketh nothing to this purpose.

THE Order of Saint Iulian of the Peare-Tree, was Instituted in a place called Pereiro, the principall Monastery and Conuent thereof, seated foure Spanish miles from Ciudad Rodorigo, on the Riuer of Coa. Ferdinand, second of the name, King of Leon, and of Galicia, by his Ordonance and Pragmatical Sanction, made himselfe Patron or Protector of this Order, in the yeare One thousand one hundred threescore and sixteene. The yeere following, One thousand one hundred & seauenteene. The said Order was approued by Pope Alexander, third of the name, at the request and supplication of Dom Gomez Fernandez, who was the first great Maister of the said Order, calling himselfe Priour. Pope Lucius the third, confirmed it likewise, in the yeare One thousand one hundred fourescore and three, and exempted it from subiection to the Bishopricks Diocesse. The second Great Maister of this Order, was Benoit Suarez, who obtained a new confirmation of Pope Innocent the third, dated in the yeare, One thousand two hundred and fiue. The first Armes of this Order was L'Escu d'Or, à la Croix Fleurdelisee de Synople, chargee en Cœur d'vn Escu d'Or au Poirier de Synople. The Knights of this Order, kept both the name and the Armes of the Peare-Tree; vntill they went to dwell in a place called Alcantara, as wee intend presently further to shew you.

Alcantara beſieged by King Alphonſo the ninth.

AFter the Battaile of Muradall, wonne against the Moores (as we haue formerly declared, when we ended the diſcourſe concerning the Order of Nauarre) Alphonſo the ninth, King of Leon, went to beſiedge the Citie of Alcantara, famouſly renowned for her goodly Bridge, erected ouer the Riuer of Tayo (in Latine called Tagus) vpon the marches of Portugall and Leon. He became Maiſter thereof, hauing conquered the Moores, in the yeare One thouſand two hundred and thirteene: And gaue the guard thereof to Dom Martin Fernandez de Quintana, who was the twelfth Great Maiſter of the Order of Calatraua.

About fiue yeares after, this place was giuen by them of Calatraua, to Nugno Fernandez, third Great Maiſter Of the Order of Saint Iulian of the Peare-Tree, and to the Knights his Bretheren and Companions: who by the reaſon of this change, forſooke their auncient appellation, and ſtiled themſelues Knights of Alcantara, whereto from the beginning they were vnder obedience and ſubiection. At the firſt they were vſed to weare a kinde of Scarfe, or Band of Red Colour, containing about three or foure fingers in breadth, vpon their white Scapularie. And within a while after, A Greene Croſſe Flourdeluced; but corrected and diſallowed by the Maiſters of Calatraua.

The Knights of S. Iulian became Knights of Alcantara.

The firſt Great Maiſter of Alcantara.

He that firſt tooke the name of Alcantara, was Don Diego Sancio, fourth Great Maiſter De Perrero, in the time of Pope Lucius, ſecond of the name, and in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred and eleauen. They exempted themſelues from obedience to them of Calatraua, forſaking their firſt Armes of the Peare-Tree; and wore the Greene Croſſe Flourdeluced vpon their breſts, towards the left ſhoulder, and vpon their Scapularie, according to the rule of the Ciſteaux, whereof they made profeſſion, but liued vnder the Order of Saint Benedict. As yet, euen to this day, the Nouices of this Order, on the dayes when they obſerue their Feaſt of Eaſter; they weare the Scapularie, and long Hood of White Tamine. At the firſt they made profeſſion of Chaſtitie, vntill the Pontificalitie of Pope Paule the fourth: who permitted them to marrie, as they did of Calatraua.

Here may you ſee the very words of the profeſſion of thoſe Nouices, that are of this Order.

The profeſſion made by the Nouices of this Order.

CHAP. VII.

The Originall of the Kingdome of Caſtile.

Caſtile and Leon ioyned at firſt by Ingeſt Counts.

Caſtile is a Prouince, which in former times was ſubiected to the auncient Kings of Leon; and which being enlarged or augmented by them of Portugall and Galicia, ſoone after became erected into Kingdomes. Both the one & the other were gouerned by Iudges at the firſt; and the firſt of them of Caſtile, had the name of Counts, who are no other then Iudges. Nugno Belchides, or Belides, a Germaine Gentleman, and a Native of Cologne, deſirous to fight againſt the Moores (as hath bin reported to vs) made his voyage to Spaine; where he eſpouſed Donna Sola, Daughter to the Count and Iudge Diego Porcelos, about the yeare of Grace, eight hundred foureſcore and foure.

Concerning the firſt Count of Burgos.

It is the opinion and perſwaſion of the Spaniards, that this Diego Porcelos, was deſcended from Begorre, and that they which went to the Conqueſt of Nauar, with the King Dom Garcia Ximenes: in time alſo afterward conquered the Citie of Burgos, in the elder Caſtile. In memory whereof, the Predeceſſours of the ſaid Dom Diego Porcelos, Porterent de Sebrarbre, qui

The firſt Count of Caſtile.

It is a matter certaine and aſſured, that Dom Alphonſo, Sixt of the name, King Leon, married Donna Vrraca his Daughter, to Raymond of Bourgongne, of the Roy Houſe of France, whom hee eſtabliſhed the firſt Gouernour and Count of Caſ So ſaith one, approuing him to beare the ſaid Title of Count, and bare alſo (as haue ſaid) D'Azur à Trois Fleurs de Lys d'Or. Which is beſt without number, cauſe the Shield or Eſcutcheon of the Sacred and holy Kingdome of France, neuer reduced to this Ternary or true number; but at the ending of the Reigne King Charles, Fift of the Name, called the Wiſe, or the beginning of his Sonne Reigne Charles the Sixt.

In this Marriage of this Raymond of Bourgongne, and Donna Vrraca, the Infanta Leon, was borne their Sonne Alphonſo Raymond, King of Leon and of Caſtile, as it is affirmed.

Dom Vela, Second Count of Caſtile.

The Second Count of Caſtile, eſtabliſhed by the ſaid Dom Alphonſo the Sixt; w the Count Dom Vela, who peopled Salamanca, and who by being iſſued of the hou of Barcellona, Portoit d'Or à Quatre Paulx de Gueules, à l'Orle & la Bordure d'Az Chargee de Huict Croix de Hieruſalem. Becauſe hee made one in the Voyage to Holy Land: And of this Dom Vela, deſcended in Spaine, the Families and Linag of the Roderigoes.

The Third Count, Dom Suero de Caſtro.

Dom Suero de Caſtro was the Third Count, being deſcended of the Ligne of Nug Belchides, by Dom Diego Lainez, who peopled Pegnafiell in Caſtile, one of the Seigni nies belonging to the Crowne of Nauarre. This Suero de Caſtro, Portoit d'Argen Six Tourteaus d'Azur mis en Paulx.

Dom Oſorio de Campos, fourth Count.

The Fourth Count was Dom Oſorio de Campos, of whom are deſcended the Fam lies of Villalobos, and the Oſorios. This Count Portoit d'Or à deux Loups, ayants les yeu creuez de Gueules.

The Fift Count.

Dom Roderigo Ruy Gonſales Giron was the Fift Count who peopled Valladolid, be iſſued of the Family of the Oſneros, of whom deſcended the Girons. His Armes D'Or à trois Girons, endenchez de Gueulles en Pal, à la Bordure Eſchequee d'Or & Gueules de deux Traicts.

The Sixt Count.

The Sixt was the Count Dom Pedro de Lara; Qui Portoit de Gueules à deux Chan eres faſſees d'Or & de Sable, & à chacun des ances huict teſtes de Serpents de Sym This de Lara was elected Iudge of Caſtile, about the yeare, One Thouſand, One H dred.

The Antiquity of the Houſe of Lara.

This Ligne of the firſt Iudges or Counts of Caſtile, is very much intricated, a that which now wee haue ſpoken of, is drawne from the Hiſtory of the Count Lanſarote, a very diligent Antiquary. Qui Portoit en Armes de Gueules à la Cro vairee, au Cimier d'vne Tour d'Argent Maſonnee de Sable ſommee d'vn Cauallier Sainct Iacques de l'Eſpee, tenant ſon Coutelas d'Argent, à la Garde doree de la main dro & de l'autre vn Teſte de More de Sable.

Authors of beſt credit are to be followed in the Hiſtory of Spaine.

The Chronicles of Spain, which they call a Generall Hiſtory, are full of repo and Diſcourſes (for the moſt part) without any heedfull reſpect. The diligent ſe ches for matters of truth, are to be found in the Roules & Treaſuries of the Crow Royall, Audiences, and Monaſteries of ancient Foundation. Stephen Garibay, breſe de Morales, Ieronimo Surita, Argoto de Molina, and the like Authors, of we quali ualified and good temper, flye in another Ayre, and with a fairer wing ur by following the common high road way, what can be ſaid of ſuch dire ion?

The Countie of Caſtile, being rendered Soueraigne; Gonſalés Nugnes Iudge of Ca ile, eſpouſed Donna Ximenia, Daughter to Count Nugno Fernandes, ſlaine by the ing Dom Ordogne: Of which marriage was borne Gonſalues, firſt Count proprieta or owner of Caſtile. Sancio, firſt of the name, the nineteenth King of Leon, made generall aſſembly at Leon, to intrap there (cunningly) ſuch as had combuſted his ate, while he was gone to take better order for Cordoua. Fernand Gonſales (for whom e plot was perticularly prepared) went thither ſo well accompanied, as Sancio was ompelled to ſtrike faile. Among other things which Gonſales had, was a Horſe of oodly ſhape and pace, and likewiſe a Hauke, which all Spaine could not yeelde other of fairer flight. Sancio grew deſirous to haue theſe two creatures, at any price paiment whatſoeuer, but was no way willing to haue them by gift, becauſe he ould not ſtand beholding to their Maiſter. The King and he concluded on ſale the Gennet and Hauke at a certaine price, payable within ſuch a time as they d agreed on. Which being paſt with want of paiment, the couenanted ſumme ould then double euery day, vntill the time of actuall paiment. His Treaſurers gleſting to diſcharge the dues, the Count (a long while after the tearme was ex red) demanded his money, and the vſance agreed on. The account of the prin pall being ſummed vp, and the daily profit thereon depending; the whole ac unt amounted to ſo high a rate, as all the Treaſures of the King of Leon were t ſufficient to make full paiment. Which when King Sancio had well conſidered , to auoide further prolonging, and to be acquitted of his whole debt to the ount: he left Caſtile to him in free proprietie, and diſcharged him likewiſe for llowing times, of all Hommage, Prerogatiue and Iuriſdiction, any way claime le by the Crowne of Leon, but ſtood fully releaſed thereof before-hand. And from nce tooke beginning the Soueraignty of Caſtile, which happened in the yeare of race, Nine hundred threeſcore and five.

A traine prouided for Ferdinand Gonſales.

Caſtile fully acquitted and ſurrendred to the Count.

We haue obſerued in the Treatiſe of Nauarre, that King Sancio the Great, who led himſelfe Emperour of the Spaines, had to wife Donna Nugna, Daughter to ncio Garcia, ſecond Sonne to Garcia Fernandez, Sonne to Ferdinand Gonſales, ſt Count proprietarie of Caſtile. This Donna Nugna, by the death of Garcia her rother (ſlaine in the Citie of Leon, and neuer married) was Counteſſe of Caſtile: hich Sancio the Great created to be a Kingdome, and gaue it as an Appennage and ortion to their ſecond Sonne.

By Leonora Guzman his Concubine, and Lady in Amorous embraces, hee had a great lift or traine of Baſtards, or naturall Children.

Pedro, Sancio, Henry. } By one wombe.

And Fredericke, Ferdinand, Iohn; And Ioane of Caſtile, Wife to Ferdinand de Caſtro.

Let there bee no miſconſtruing the name of Guzman.

Wee haue in this Genealogie very often times made mention, concerning the name of Guzman, ſo many wayes allied to the Royall Houſe of Caſtile: But you muſt obſerue withall, that there are in Spaine, many Families of the Simame of Guzman, very famous and much renowned.

The Ancient Guzmans, are Them of Baeſa,
Of Torall,
Of Nieble the Firſt,
Of Nieble the Second,
Of the Algua; And
The Guzmans of Hardales.

The Armes of the ancient Guzmans.

The Ancient Guzmans dwelling in the Kingdome of Baeca or Baeſa, who bare D'Argent à Cinque Ermines, à l'Orle & Bordure de Gueules chargee de Huict Saultours d'Or: It is a very long time ſince that race was quite extinct. For they which beare the ſame name (at this day) in Andalouzia, haue deriued their deſcent from the houſe of the Garcias, iſſued of the Great Maiſter of the Order of Calatraua, Don Lewes Gonſales de Guzman, Lord of the City of Anduiar in the Territory and Kingdome of Iaen. For the ancient Guzmans were Lords of the Caſtell D'Auiados, about foure miles from the Royall City of Leon.

The chiefe Seate of the ancient houſe.

Wee haue found that about the yeare Nine Hundred and Fifty, the Chiefe place of this Ancient Houſe, was Can de Roa, the dwelling of the Count Nugno Nunez de Guzman: who was the firſt Lord, iſſued and deſcended of the firſt Iudges and Counts of Caſtile, and (who in the end) came to be Kings.

Nugno Fernandez de Guzman.

In the yeare Nine Hundred, Foureſcore and Ten, the King of Leon Bermond or Bermund, Second of the name, cauſed to bee giuen to Nugno Fernandez de Guzman, the grounds and Paſturages of Sora, for the good Seruices which hee had done to him.

And in the yeare One Thouſand Three Score and Eight, did liue Aluaro Diaz de Guzman, Firſt of the name, Lord of the Tower of Guzman, in the Merindads of Cerrato.

Aluarez Ruyz de Guzman.

In the yeare One thouſand one hundred and foureſcore, or thereabout, there is found in the Hiſtories of Spaine, remembrance of another, named Aluarez Ruyz de Guzman, in the time of the Emperour Dom Alphonſo of Spaine, vnder whom, the Count Dom Pedro was the firſt ſtemme or branch of the Familie of the Guzmans. And that he eſpouſed Vrraca Ruys de Caſtro, Siſter to Dom Ferdinand Ruyz de Caſtro.

Pero Ruyz de Guzman.

And of this marriage was born Pero Ruyz de Guzman, who was maried to the ſiſter of the Count Dom Gomez de Manſanado, called Eluira Gomez de Manſanado: of whom iſſued two Sonnes, Nugno Perez de Guzman, and Guillen Perez de Guzman, who were both preſent in perſon at the Battaile of Muradal, otherwiſe called Des Naues de Tolſa, and D'Vbeda.

Ruy Diego Lope de Haro.

This Guillen Perez tooke to wife Eluira Rodriguez, Daughter to Ruy Dias, Lord of Los Cameros, and to the Counteſſe Vrraca Diaz de Haro, Daughter to Dom Diego Lopez de Haro, tearmed the Good, Lord of Biſcaye, of whom we haue formerly ſet downe the deſcent, and who in her firſt marriage eſpouſed Count Aluar Nugnez de Lara. By the ſecond Bed ſhe had Pero Nugnez de Guzman, and other maſle children, with one Daughter, called Mayora Guillen de Guzman.

Pero Nugnez de Guzman.

Concerning this Pero Nugnez de Guzman, hee was Great Adelantado of Caſtile, and one of the very worthieſt Knights of King Ferdinand, called the Saint, at the Conqueſt of Seuille. Hee married the Siſter to the King of Leon Dom Alphonſe, named Vrraca. And at the partition of the Lands of Seuille, conquered from the Moores Moores, and done in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand two hundred fiftie and three mention is made, that this Pero Nugnez had there ſo large a proportion, (euen as according to a great Lord. He was Father to Alphonſo de Guzman, tearmed the Good, a Knight much renowned in the Kingdomes of Caſtile and Leon, and throughout all the frontiers of the Moores; onely for his valour and expertneſſe in Armes.

The deſcent of this Family out of Bretaigne.

In Spaine they hold, that this Noble Family is iſſued of a Brother to the Count of Bretaigne, who being thence ſent in martiall affaires to Leon; was there married to Ramires of Leon, and that to conſerue the memory of their extraction; theſe Guzmans retained the Armes of Bretaigne with the Ermines. It is further ſaid, that this Brother was alſo a kinſman of Agricol or Agrior le beau Iouuent, iſſued likewiſe from the Houſe of Bretaigne, but dwelling in England, and one of the Knights of the Round Table, in the time of King Arthur. Which Agricoll bare likewiſe of Bretaigne, according as we haue obſerued in the ſixt Chapter.

Proofe for their deſcent from Bretaigne.

But it is a matter moſt certaine, that the Houſe of the Guzmans was deſcended from Bretaigne, and that an infinite number of Princes Sons, and other great Lords of France, did heretofore paſſe into Spaine, to fight againſt the Moores, and there continued their dwelling. Among whom was one named Guillaume, William, Brother to a Count of Bretaigne, who tooke alliance with the Houſe of Count D. Nugnez, Lord of Ast; and that in his deſcent, the bloud of Guzman made a commixion with his of Bretaigne. In teſtimony whereof, the greater part of the Guzmans were, and are called Guillaumes, which in Caſtile they call Guillen, by common kinde of ſpeaking.

Concerning the ſirname of Guzman.

Some there are who ſay that the Sir name of Guzman is a Germaine or Almaigne word, compounded of theſe two dictions, Guz-Man, Good-Man, Honeſt-Man: As North or Nor-Man, by being iſſued from the North; Hot-Man, a Rich-Man in Mines of Gold and Siluer, and an infinite number more, of the like compoſition.

The Armes of the Guzmans.

There is found likewiſe, the Armes of the ſaid Guzmans, Qui ſont d'Azur à deux Chaudrons feſſez en Eſcheiquetez d Or & d'Azur aux Anes contournez de meſme, à douze Teſtes d. Serpens de Synople aux deux Oreilles, à l'Orle variee de meſme, chargee de quatre autres Chaudrons de meſme. Armes which are common to the very greateſt Houſes of Spaine and of Caſtile: As to them of Lara, Pacheco, Aſa, Daſa, Fuente Almexir, Herrera, Biedma, and to infinite other beſide.

Guzmans of diuers places.

The Guzmans of Toral haue for Armes D'Azur, aux deux Chaudieres d'Or feſſees, trees & crenelees (as we haue ſaid) flanque d'Argent à huict Ermines en Croix de Sable.

The Marqueſſe of Algaua, and thoſe of Hardales; Les deux Chaudieres à l'Orle d'Argent de huict Ermines de Sable.

For them of Florez, and of Flores (which is but one and the ſame Family) D'Azur au Chaſteau ſomme de trois Tours d'Or, à l'Orle d'Argent, chargee de huict Ermines de Sable.

Thoſe of Cifuentes, and thoſe of Almanſa; Portent d'Argent à cinq Ermines de Sable, à l'Orle, & Bordure de Gueulles à huict Saultours d'Or: which were the firſt Armes of the auncient Guzmans de Baeſa.

Three Noble Ladies that yeelded Kings to Spaine.

In this Illuſtrious Family, there hath bin three Ladies, that haue yeelded Kings to Spaine.

The firſt was Ximenia Nugnez de Guzman, Mother to Dogna Thereſe, Daughter to the King of Leon Dom Alphonſo the ſixt; who had to her Dowrie the Kingdome of Portugall, married to the Count Henry, a French Prince, iſſued of the Houſe of Bogne and Lorraine.

The ſecond was Dogne Mayora Guillen de Guzman, Mother to Queene Beatrix, and Daughter to the King Alphonſo the Wiſe: who had in marriage the Kingdome of Algues, married to the fift King of Portugall Alphonſo, third of the name.

The laſt was Donna Leonora de Guzman, Daughter to Pedro Nugnez de Guzman: by whom Alphonſo, King of Leon and Caſtile (eleauenth and laſt of the name) had King Henry, ſecond of the name.

Saint Dominick Guzmand deſcended of the ſame Family.

But that which hath bin the greateſt glory to this Family, and made it ſhine throughout all Chriſtendome; was that (from thence) iſſued the faire ſplendour of the Church, Sainct Dominicke Guzman (Sonne to Dom Fœlix de Guzman, and Donna Ieanne d' Aſa, being natiues in the Towne of Caleruega, the dwelling place of the Noble Familie of Aſa) Founder and firſt Inſtitutour of the Order of Saint Dominicke, which we call the Iacobines at Paris, and elſewhere. An Order, out of which haue come ſo many Popes, Cardinals, Biſhops and Doctors, famous for their ſeruice in the Church; and in ſuch plenty, as there is not any other Order of Religion, which may be compared with that of Saint Dominicke. From whence the Kings of Spaine (euen to this day) doe deriue the principall excellencie of their Blood and Genealogie; accordingas is moſt curiouſly figured in delicate Copper plates, deſcribed by Frier Fernando del Caſtillo, Prior of the Monaſtery of Saint Mary D'Atbocan, in his Hiſtorie of the Order of Saint Dominicke.

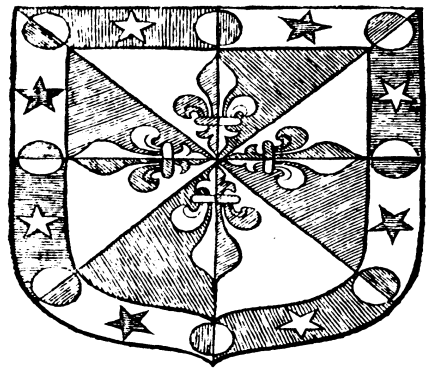
Concerning the Armes of the Order.

At the laſt Generall Chapter of this Order, held in the great Conuent at Paris, in the yeare One thouſand ſixe hundred and ten, being the Feaſt of Pentecoaſt, I ſaw the Armes of that illuſtrious Religion renowned in all parts of the inhabited world. One, D'Argent au Giron d'vne piece de Sable: Another of diuerſitie of deuiſe; but both badly faſhioned. As I ſhewed to the reuerend Father Seraphim Banquy, nominated Biſhop of Engoulesme, Reuiuer or reſtorer of the Schooles of S. Thomas of Aquin in the ſaid Conuent, a man of ſinguler integritie of life, and with whom I haue had very great acquaintance, and who (within a while after the ſaid Generall Chapter) forſooke France, and returned backe to Florence.

The true Armes of the Societie



But it is neceſſary for them of that Company to vnderſtand, that here they may learne the true Armes of their Religion, which. is: Vn Guyron ou Giron de Huict pieces d'Argent & de Sable, & ſur icelluy vne Croix Fleur de lizee, partie de l'vn en l'autre de meſme (that is to ſay, of Sable ou Siluer, and Siluer ou Sable) à la Bordure compoſee de Huict pieces de meſme, de Sable & d'Argent à Huict Eſtoiles de l'vn en l'autre de meſme, à Huict Bezans, & Tourteaux parcellement partiz d Argent & de Sable. The figure thereof is here repreſented, according to the truth of Hiſtory.

The Croſſe of the Order, concerning the Knights: And them of the Religion of S. Dominicke.

CHAP. VIII.

THis Excellent Patriarch was Founder of the Military Order of Knights of Ieſus Chriſt: Inſtituted to warre againſt the Albigeois Heretiques, which were ſcattered and diſperſed ouer all Languedock, Gaſcoignie, Prouence, Dauphine Sauoye and Lombardy; a fight performed to the very vttermoſt, by the Prelates and Gentlemen of France: As you may read in the Hiſtory of Simon de Montfort, and the warres conducted by our Kings, Lewes the Eight, Saint Lewes his Sonne, and the Kings their Succeſſors, againſt obſtinate impugners of the Faith.

The diuiſion of the Croſſe of the Order of Dominicke, worne by the Knights.

And this may ſerue to giue publike knowledge, what manner of Croſſe was carried and worne by thoſe Prelates, Princes, and Lords, with others beſide that Croſſed themſelues againſt thoſe obſtinicie.

Great difference there was betweene them that were croſſed for beyond the Seas, for defence and Conqueſt of the Holy Land, and them that were of this Order. For they which voyaged ouer the Seas, eſpecially if they were of the French Nation, tooke for their kinde of Croſſing Croſſing on the Breaſt, the Croſſe of Ieruſalem (which was Potence & Cantonnee de Quatre Croiſettes) the Colour being Red, the Engliſh White, the Germaines Blacke, the Flemmings Greene, and the Italians Yellow. And the Croſſe Merchahes, that went againſt the Albigeois, wore vpon their Breaſts, the Croſſe of Saint Dominicke, in the ſaid forme as you behold it here figured, Blacke and White, as it is obſerued by Pere Fernando del Caſtillo, all along his Hiſtorie, the firſt Booke, and nine and fortieth Chapter.

The Countries ſeueral colors.

Vſo por Deuiſa eſta ſanéta Religion la Cruz Floreteada de Los Colores de ſu Habito, Que ſon Blancho y Negro, que tambien lo fueron de la Caualeria Militar, que eſtituyo Sanéto Domingo inſtituta in Francia, y Lombardia por el Papa Honorio, contra los Rebeldes de la Igleſia. This Holy Religion vſed for their Deuiſe, The Croſſe Floureded, with the colours of their Habits, which were White and Blacke. And ſo were they likewiſe of the Knights Militarie, which the ſame Saint Dominicke Inſtituted in France and Lombardie, confirmed by the Pope Honorius, for ſuch as rebelled againſt the Church. But returne we now againe to the Genealogie of the Kings of Caſtile.

CHAP. IX.

A further proceeding in the Pedegree or Genealogie of the Caſtile Kings.

BY the death of Alphonſo the Wiſe, happening in the yeare One thouſand three hundred and fiftie, after he had reigned eight and thirty yeares; then his Legitimate Sonne Dom Pedro, firnamed the Cruell, Reigned eighteene yeeres in cruelrie and Tyrannie. For the whole time of his Gouernement was full of murders, maſſacres, euen of ſuch as were deareſt and neereſt to him. So that all the Children of Leonora de Guzman, were compelled to ſeeke for their owne ſafetie, ſome in France, others in Arragon and Portugall, and their Mother bloodily maſſacred at Talauera by the Queene. He put to death alſo all her Children, which he could get into his hands, and in her preſence he cauſed a Monke to be burned, of the Order of Saint Dominicke, who had foretold; that himſelfe (ſhould be ſlaine by the hand of Henry of Caſtile (who was Count of Tranſtamare) his Baſtard Brother, in reuenge of his other Brethren, whom he had cauſed to be murdered.

The cruel and tyrannicall reigne of King Pedro.

He had to wife lawfully, Blanch of Bourbon, ſiſter to the Queene Iane of Bourbon, wife to Charles the fift, called the Wiſe, Daughters to Peter Duke of Bourbon, a Prince of the Illuſtrious Blond of France. Three dayes after this marriage, he ſent her priſoner to Toledo, and from thence to Cuenca. Finally, in the yeare One thouſand three hundred threeſcore and one, he cauſed her to be poyſoned in the Priſon of Medina Sidonia. Her body was receiued by the French, who carried it along with them, and made enterement of it at Tudela in Nauarre.

Blanch of Bourbon wife to King Pedro the cruell, and her death.

To reuenge the death of this worthy Princeſſe, the French proclaimed Warre againſt this Pedro the Cruell, and ioyned themſelues with the Count de Tranſtamare Henry of Caſtile, Baſtard Sonne of Alphonſo the eleauenth. The Generall of the French Armie (conſiſting of tenne thouſand Horſe, and twentie thouſand men on foote) was Bertrand de Gueſclin, a Gentleman of Bretaigne, the very worthieſt Captaine among all them of his time, and who (for his many vertues) was made Conſtable of France. Vnder him marched in this Armie, John of Bourbon, Count de la March, Couſine to the deceaſed Queene Blanch of Bourbon; Anthony, Lord of Beauieu; Arnuld d'Endreghen, Marſhall of France) Le Begne de Villenes; Euſtace d'Embritecourt, Hugh Caueleé; Gaultier Huſſe, Mathew de Gournay; Perducas d'Albret, and an infinite number of other great Lords of the Kingdome, who in the ſpace of fiue and twenty dayes, conquered the greater part of the Kingdome of Leon and Caſtile, whereof was Crowned King the Count of Tranſtamare, Henry of Caſtile, called ſecond of the name: which was done at Toledo, in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand three hundred threeſcore and ſixe.

Reuenge ſought by the French for the death of Queene Blanch.

Henry Crowned King of Leon and Caſtile.

Pedro the Cruell, made recourſe with his Treaſures to the Engliſh, who reſeated him againe in part of his Kingdome; by the ouerthrow of King Henry, who was diſarmed armed sooner then he should haue bin, and Pedro gouerned his Kingdome in like manner as before.

His Contrary, being relieued once more by the French, and they conducted by the same Bertrand du Guesclin: it was the hope of Dom Pedro the Cruell, to raise the Siedge from Toledo with sixe hundred Lances: but he was surprized at Montiel, and Poniarded or Stabd by King Henry his Brother, according to the Propheſie of the Iacobine of Saint Dominicke de la Calcade, the three and twentieth day of March, in the yeare of Grace One thousand three hundred threescore and eight: And thus ended King Pedro, and his cruelty together.

The death of Dom Pedro the Cruell.

Bertrand du Guesclin, whom the Spanish Histories doe tearme Beltran de Claquin, Constable of France, receiued great recompences in the Kingdomes of Castile and Leon, as also in Andaluzia, and namely in the Citie of Molina, but not Medina, according as it is written in the denumeration of the Constables belonging to France.

With him went in this iourney for Castile, and to the seruice of King Henry the second against King Pedro the Cruell, great store of French Gentlemen; where they began to make their dwelling, and were the Stockes or Plants of many great Houses, renowned in those parts to this very day. And those Spanyards that are of the best temper, will truely acknowledge, that all the Histories of the world haue spoken of the French, to be famous for their valiancie, aboue all other Nations ouer the Earth. Ninguno de los Autores en general, y en particular à est en dido tanto la pluma, que de Francia non aya siempre mucho mas, que dezir. Not any Authours in generall or particuler, but haue extended their Pens, much more for the French, and speaking alwayes largely of them. So saith the Count of Lansarote, in the second Booke of his Historie, the foureſcore and fift Chapter; according to the testimonie of whom, was

Many great Houses in Spaine deriued of the French.

Bernard de Bearne, Bastard Son of Gaston Phabus, Count of Foix, and Lord of Bearn. This Bernard tooke Alliance in the House De la Cerda, issued of the Bloud Royall of Castile: and of them are descended the Dukes of Medina Celi, whose Armes are De Castile, & Leon Escartelees de France.

Gaston Phabus de Foix and his Sonne.

Remond Gutierres passed out of Gascoigne into Spaine, Father to Pedro Gutierres, Lord D'Acugna, the Originall or Sourse of the Dukes of Ossona, by the Sirname of Giron in Andaluzia; of the Marquesses of Villena being Dukes of Escalona, by the Sirname of Pacheco: of the Marquisate de Ville-Neufue du Fresna, by Sirname of Portocarrero; of the Counts de la Puebla de Montalban, by the Sirname of Pacheco and of Girona; of the Marquesse of Moya, by the Sirname of Cabrera, and of the Marquesse d'Alcala, by Sirname of Portocarrero. The Armes of this Pedro Gutierres Lord of Acugna are D'Or, à Neuf Coins, ou Triangles d'Azur, de trois en trois en Fesses, à l'Orle d'Argent, chargee de Cinq Escus des secondes Armes de Portugal.

Pedro Gutierres Lord of Acugna and other families.

Arnould de Solier, the Daughter of whom was married to John de Velasco, Great Chamberlaine to the said King Henry the second of Castile; and the said Arnould Solier was Lord of Villalpando. Of this marriage are descended the Velascoes, Constables of Castile, who bare for Armes, D'Argent à la Croix Fleurdelizee d'Azur, flechee en Croix couppee d'Argent, à l'Orle, endenchee d'Azur.

Of Arnold de Solier Lord of Villalpando.

John Nugno, Father of Pedro Nugno, Count of Buelna, and Lord of Cigales a French Knight, issued of the House of France, whose descent is renowned in Granado, and at Valladolid. The principall Succession whereof is falne to Donna Blanche Nugno de Herrera, and of Portugall, Countesse of Buelna, Lady of Cigales, of Pedrasa de la Serra, of Arroyo del puerto, and of others Seigneuries: wife to Bernardino de Velasco, Constable of Castile. The Armes of this Familie are D Or à Sept Fleurs de Lys d'Azur, which is of Thouars in Poicton.

Pedro Nugno Count of Buelna.

Messire Henry Rubin (that is Robert) de Braquemont (great Vncle to Robert de Braquemont, who vnder Charles the sixt was Admirall of France) married in Castile with Dogna Ignez de Mendosa, daughter to Don Pero Gonsalez de Mendosa, and to Dogna Aldonce d'Arala, Daughter to the Predecessours that were Lords of the House De l'Infantadgo, and of this marriage are descended the Lords of Pegnaranda. The Armes of this Bracquemont are De Sable au Cheuron d'Argent. And for Deuise, il

Of Messire Monet da Viegas, a Gascoigne Captaine, is descended the house of Coello, much renowned in the Kingdome of Castille, & elsewhere in the Prouinces of Spayne, in Portugall and in Andalouzia: as is obserued by the Counte of Lansarote, in his Second Booke of the Life of King Henry of Castille, Third of the name, the hundred fifty and three, and two hundred twenty three Chapters. Il portoit pour Armes d'Argent au Lyon rempant de Gueules, charge le Col et le Corps d'vne bande d'Azur Eschiquette d'Or et de Gueules de deux traicts, Coronne Lampasse, et Arme d'Or, a l'Orle d'Azur chargee de Huict Croix Fleurdelisee de Gueules.

The House of the Fountaines in Andaluzia.

Robert de Betancour, Second Son to the Lord of the said place, and of Longue-Ville in Normandie, who dwelt likewise in Castille. One of his descent and ligne, named John de Betancour, was first King of the Canarie Ilands. Stephen de Gariuay or Garibay, in the ninth Chapter of this sixteenth Booke, writeth, that in the yeare of Grace, 1417. Queene Constance, Regentesse of Castille for her Sonne King Iohn Second of the name, gaue in free gift to the said Messire John de Betancour, the Ilandes of the Canaries, with the title of King: Which she did at the requeſt and entreaty of Robert de Braquemount, Admirall of France, to whom this Betancour was a neere kinseman, who conquered the said Ilands, and builded his first Castell in that part of Lansarote, which hee made the chiefe seate of his new Kingdome. This was the man, that first sented and collected the windes for the East Indiaes, and there made his memories. In this voyage he was assisted by good store of the Nobility of France & Gascoignie, namely of two Gascoigne Captaines, the one called Salles, and the other Maulon, very expert both in the Arte of Nauigation; because they were the first Adelantadoes and Discouerers of the Newe Worlde. This Betancour Portoit d'Argent au Lyon rempant de Gueules; Mauleon Portoit de Gueules au Lyon rempant a'Or, et de Sable, Portoit de Gueules a Quatre Aigles d'Argent. there are diuers other houses and Linages in Spayne and Gascoignie, which beare these Sirnames, and Armes also.

The first King of the Canaries.

Betancour conquered the Ilandes of the Canaries.

The first Discouerers of the New World.

Iohn de Betancour gaue the Canaries to his Eldest Sonne Messire Maciote de Betancour: of whom are descended many famous houses in Portugall and Castille. This Isle of Lansarote is falne to Dogna Constance de Herrera, who stiled her selfe Lady of Roia, and of Betancour, Countesse of Lansarote.

It may be esteemed then a presumptuous errour, to make Christopher Columbus the first discouerer of the New World, attributing to him onely all the honour, which was due to the Auncient French Captaines: of whose memories hee might easily possesse himselfe, and all the Cardes of their Nauigations, so much tardied and neglected by the miserable estate and condition of France, vnder the long Reigne of King Charles the Sixt. And yet notwithstanding, all the glory is giuen to Christopher Columbus, whom the Spaniards cal Christouall Colon primer Conquistador de el nueuo Mondo de las Indias:

The Iſſue of Bertrand du Gueſclin.

Now concerning Meſsire Bertrand de Gueſclin or Gleſquin, Lord of Tours in Touraine; he was Lord of Molina, and of many great Landes in Caſtille and Andalouzia. Of the Lady of Saria his Wife, he begot two braue Sonnes, to whom he gaue the Sir name and Armes of Tours, but not of Gueſclin, who caried D'Argent a l'Aigle eſploye de Sable, Lampaſſe, et Arme de Gueules, au Baſton de meſmes brochant ſur le tout. Whereas ſuch are iſſued of his Ligne, Portent d'Azur a Cinq Tours en Saultoir d'Argent maſonnees de Sable. One of thoſe two Sonnes, named Bertrand de Tours, and in Spaniſh Beltran de Torres, was Commaunder of Mondela, of the Order of Calatraua, as Rades d'Andrada hath obſerued in his Tract of that Order, the Three and Thirtieth Chapter. The other held the ſucceſſion of his Mother De Soria, and of him are deſcended diuers great perſonages, among whom was Dom Garcia de Torrez, Biſhop of Burgos. Behold ſummarily the Liſt and numeration of the principall Houſes, iſſued of the French Paladins, which paſſed into Spaine for the Seruice of

The wordes of the Chronicle ſet down by the Author.

El Rey de Caſtillo mando que el Pendon de la Santta Cruzada (que el Papa auia imbiado) fuesſe iunto al pendon Real, y entre lo a Dom Hugo Caualiero Frances, que moraua en la Ciudad de Vbeda que era buen Chriſtiano, y Hombre de buen Vida: y antes d'Eſto el Rey auia Armado Cauallero, y caſada en aquella Ciudad.

The King of Caſtille gaue commaunde, by whom he would haue the Gonfanon, and the Banner of the Holy Croiſſade (which the Pope had ſent vnto him) ſhould be caried with the Colonelle, and that it ſhould be deliuered to Meſſire Hugh, a French Knight, dwelling in the City of Vbeda, Who was a man man without reproche of life, and whom the King had (before) Armed and made a Knight, and married him in the ſame place of Vbeda. And heere you may ſee the Genealogie of this Alfier Maior of the Holy Croiſſade of Salado.

The Martiall Expedition for Arragon againſt the Moores of Valentia.

In the yeare One Thouſand, Three hundred and Twelue, many French Gentlemen went for Arragon, to the ſeruice of King Iames, in the Expedition of Armes, and warring on the Moores of Valencia. Among whom were Hugh Bertrand, Frances Bertrand and Raymond Bertrand, being Brethren, with many other Gentlemen Poſſeuines, and of the ſame Parentage. Albeit theſe Bertrands were originally, of the laſt Countes of Toloſa, and of Saint Gilles in Prouence. The moſt part of them became dwellers in Arragon and Cathalogna, but ſome other of them in Caſtille, among whom was Hugh Bertrand, the firſt Sonne to this Hugh Bertrand, to whom the King of Caſtille Alphonſo the laſt, cauſed to be giuen in mariage, the heire of the houſe of Cueua, rich and abounding in goods, both in and about the Citty of Vbeda. And from thence are deſcended them of the houſe of Cueua, which haue retayned the proper names of Hugh and Bertrand.

Dom Bertrand de la Cana, and his deſcente.

The Authour of the Chronicle of Dom Michaell Lucas, Conſtable of Caſtille, writeth, that Dom Bertrand de la Ceua, was Son to Diego de la Cana, and he youngeſt Sonne to Gilles Martin de la Cana, Regent of the Citty of Vbeda; iſſued of Hugh the French Knight, who was Alfier Maior of the Banner Collonell of the Croiſade, in the Battaile at Salado, who paſſed from France into Spayne to Warre againſt the Moores, with Raymond Bertrand his Sonne, and many other Croſſed Gentelmen. Dom Beltran ſue hijo de Diego de la Cueua, et nieto de Gil Martinez de la Cueua, Regidor de Vbeda, deſcendente de Dom Hugo Cauallero Francez, que fue por Alpherez del Pendon de la Cruzada en la Batalla del Salado, y paſſo de Francia a Eſpagna a la guerra de los Moros con Dom Remon Baltran ſu primo, y con otros Cruzados, que paſſaron del Reyno de Francia, Raymond Bertrand de Perillos.

This Raymond Bertrand, Brother to Hugh, tooke the Sirname of Perillos (of the Seigneurie of Perillac in Quercy, or Cahourry, neere to Toloſa) and dwelt in the Kingdome of Valencia: where he was Father to Frances de Perillos, Viſcounte of Roda in Cathalogna, and Brother to Bertrand de Gueſclin, if we may giue credite to the Chronicles of Spayne.

Betweene Toloſa and Carcaſſonna, renowned Cities in Languedock, paſſing by the Mountaines, to proceed on by Rec de Mineruez, for deſcending to Haute-riuer: In the time of Alphonſo, King of Leon and Caſtille, Sirnamed the Emperour; paſſed into Spayne to warre vpon the Moores, two French Knights, both of them being named Ponces (a name common in Languedock and Prouence, in regard of Saint Pons de Tomiéres, the Biſhops See for Recs de Carcaſſonna) the one Lord of Cabrieres, in the Countie of Veniſſe, and the other of Rec de Mineruez, and ſo by reaſon of him, called Ponce de Mineruez (hee retofore iſſued of the Counts and Gouernours of Toloſa Ponce, both the Father Remond and his Sonne) who had to wife Elmira, Daughter to the King Dom Alphonſo the Sixte: by whom he was made Seneſchall, Great Maiſter, and his Alfier Maior, about the yeare of Grace One Thouſand, One Hundred and Forty.

Of

The Counte Dom Vela Ponce.

Of this mariage came the Counte Dom Vela Ponce, who by Eluira, Daughter to Counte Fernandez de Traua, had the Counte Dom Ponce de Viegas, Husband to another Eluira, Father and Mother to Count Pero Ponce, the Husband of Aldonsa Alphonso, the naturall and bastard Daughter to the King of Leon Dom Alphonso, and to Aldonsa de Sylua, his Loue Lady, daughter to Martin Gomez de Sylua, and Vrraca Velas. In regard of this Alliance, they of this house bare the Armes of Leon, whereof they tooke the title and Sirname, which likewise are the Armes De la Sylua. In this Mariage were borne three Sonnes: Iohn Perez Ponce, Ferdinand Perez Ponce, and Ruy Perez Ponce, who was Maister of Calatraua.

The great honour of Ferdinand Perez Ponce.

Pernan, or Ferdinand Perez Ponce, was one of the very greatest Lords of the Kingdome, and so subscribed himselfe to the Priueledges of Seuille, confirmed by Alphonso the Wise, in the yeare One Thousand, Two Hundred, Threescore and Eight. He had to Wife Dogna Vrraca Gutierrez de Meneses, Daughter to Gutierrez Suarez de Meneses, and to Eluira de Sosa, Daughter to Iohn Garcia de Sosa, and Vrraca Fernandez. Of this Mariage issued two Sonnes, Pero Ponce de Leon, and Fernan Perez Ponce. The eldest whereof tooke to Wife Sancia Gilles Braganssona, of the linage of Pereira, daughter to Gill de Nugnez de Bragantia, and Mary Perez. And of this Marriage was borne one Sonne, and three Daughters: Roderigo Ponce: Isabella, Iana and Vrraca.

The Gouernour of the Asturies.

Roderigo Ponce, Gouernour of the Asturies, was tearmed the Chaste; because his Wife Isabella de la Cerda, and he liued chastely together. So that he leauing not any issue; Fernan Perez Ponce came to the inheritance of his Nephewe. And the Daughters were Isabella, who had to Husband Pero Fernandez de Castro, Sirnamed the Warlike, Father and Mother to Ferdinand do Castro and Iana Ponce of Leon, Queene of Castile, the Wife to the King Dom Pedro.

A Iuarez Perez de Guzman.

Iana espoused Iohn Alphonso, Bastard Sonne to Dionisius King of Portugall. And of this Mariage issued Vrraca, Wife to Aluarez Perez de Guzman, Father and Mother of Theresa Aluarez, Wife to Gutierrez d'Aquilar. And the last Daughter was Vrraca, Wife to Enrique Enriquez, youngest Sonne to the Infant Dom Enrique.

Fernand Perez Ponce, Vncle to Roderigo the Chaste, was Husband to Isabella de Guzman, Daughter of Alphonso Perez de Guzman, called the Good, and Mary Alphonso Cornella: By her he was Lord of Marchena, and had also two Sonnes; Pero Ponce de Leon, and Fernan Perez Ponce, Maister of Alcantara.

Rozero de Lauria Admirall of Sicile.

Pero Ponce of Leon, Lord of Marchena, tooke to Wife Beatrix de Cherica, Daughter to Dom Iaymes, Lord of Cherica; and Beatrix de Lauria, Daughter to Rogero de Lauria (Admirall of Sicilie for the King of Arragon, vsurper of that Kingdome against the House of Anion, after the Sicilian Euensong) and to Saurina, Daughter of Berenguer d'Entensa, Sonne to the Infant Dom Iaymes, and Elfa d'Albarrazin, youngest Sonne to King Iames of Arragon; and Thereza Gilletta of Bidaure. In regarde of this Alliance with the House of Arragon, the said Lord of Marchena, and his descendants, deuided their Armes of Leon, with them of Arragon: A l'Orle de Gueules chargee de Huict Escussons d'Or, a la Fesse d'Azur, which is of Bidaure, one of the twelue principall Houses of Nauarre.

Bidaure one of the twelue principall Houses of Nauarre.

Of this Marriage was borne Iohn Ponce of Leon, whom the King of Castille Dom Pedro the Cruell (subiect of this digression) caused to bee slaine vpon no occasion, and died without issue, leauing the Succession to his Brother.

Pedro Ponce of Leon, Brother of Mary, Wife to Fernand Lord of Ledesma, Brother to King Henry the Second, of whom we spake, and died without any Heire: and of Leonor, Wife to Lewes, Sonne of Alphonso de Cerda, Father and Mother to Iohn de la Cerda (slaine by the commande of King Pedro the Cruell) and of Isabella de la Cerda, Wife to Roderigo Aluarez Ponce.

Pero Ponce of Leon, had the succession of the Lord of Marchena his Father. By his Wife Sancia de Baesa, Daughter to Iohn Ruys de Baesa, and Theresa de Haro, he had Pero Ponce, Successour in the Sates and Seigneuries of his Father, and Iohn Ponce, slaine by the Moores of Granado. The descent of the Elder, continueth to this present in the Family of Roderigo Ponce of Leon, Counte of Medellin, Lord of Marchena, who espoused Dogna Maria d'Aiala, Daughter to Pero Lopez d'Aiala, Great Chancellour of Castille. Of this Marriage issued three Sonne and two Daughters, Iohn Ponce de de Leon, Lewes Ponce de Leon, Lord of Villa-garcia, and Fernand Ponce de Leon. The Daughters were Sancia, Wife to Alphonso Perez de Guzman, Lord of Orgaz, and Dogna Eluira, Wife to Alphonso Fernandez de Cordoua, Lord of Alcaudetes, Iohn Ponce de Leon, Count of Arcos, and Lord of Marchena, was Father to Roderigo Ponce de Leon, Marqueese of Cadiz, and Manuell Ponce de Leon, with other Sonnes and Daughters beside. Roderigo Ponce, Second Count of Baylen, had to Wife Yrlanda de Sandobalk and de Guzman, Daughter to the Lord of Fuentes; of whom came foure Sonnes: Manuell, Fernand Bishop of Leon; Roderigo Ponce, and Iohn Ponce de Leon, of the habite of Saint Iames. Dom Manuell, Count of Baylen, espoused Katharina de Cordoua Daughter to Frances Pacheco, youngest Sonne of Alphonso d'Aquilar: and by her he had Dom Roderigo Ponce de Leon, Count of Baylen, a Knight renowmed in the City of Oran, for fighting against the Moores of Barbarie.

The Armes of the Counte of Baylen.

Now, to shew that this principall and very greatest Ligne of Spaine, is descended from France (the fruitfull Nurserie of the whole worlds Nobility) the auncient Armes of this first Count Ponce Lord de la Minerue in Languedock, were Eschiquettees de Trois Traits de Azur, a Cinq Aigles d'Or en Saultoir (to witt, two in Chief, one in the hart, & two in Pointe) et de Gueules a quatre Huchetz, ou Trompes de Chasse, et Cors d'Argent, l'vnen Chef entre deux Aigles, deux en Fesse, l'Aigle entre-deux, et vne en Pointe entre deux Aigles.

The Moores preuailed against the Spaniards.

I should neuer make an end, if I would obserue all the Families issued of the Noble Frenche, passing hence into all the Prouinces and Kingdomes of Spayne, only to fight against the Moores, who had vsurped the most part thereof, and so finall a number of naturall Spanyards there left: as well it might haue bin without all hope of resource or recouery, for being deliuered from those infidell dogges; but by the succour of the Noble Frenche. Come we now to our Kings of Castille.

A Briefe Genealogie of the Kings of Castille.

XV. Henry, Second of the name (the peaceable King of Castille, by meanes and succour of the French, by Iane Manuell his Wife, had a Sonne and a daughter.

Iohn, King of Castille; And Leonora, Queene of Nauarre.

By Beatrix Leonora Ponce his Concubine, he had Frederick Duke of Beneuentum.

By Eluira Iniguez, an other Concubine;
Ioane, Wife to Alphonso, Sonne to the Marqueese de Villena Dom Alphonso.

By two other Concubines;
Alphonse, Count of Gigion; And
Violanta, Wife to Pedro, an other Son to the Marqueese de Villena.

Henry, died in the Eleuenth yeare of his Reigne, and of Grace One Thousand, Three Hundred Threescore and Nineteene, and then succeeded his Legitimate Sonne

XVI. Iohn, whose Reigne likewise extended to Eleuen yeares, being twise married. By his first Wife Leonora of Arragon, he had two Sonnes, and a Daughter, that died in her young yeares.

His Sonnes were Henry, King; And Ferdinand.

Hee had not any Children by Beatrix of Portugall his Second wife: And he deceased in the yeare One Thousand, Three Hundred, Fourescore and Tenne, leauing the Kingdome to his Eldest Sonne.

XVII. Henry, Third of the name, who Reigned Sixteene yeares. By Constance of Lancaster his wife, he had two Daughters, and a Sonne:
Mary, Queene of Arragon,
Iohn, King of Castille; And Constance.

By the death of Henry, happening in the yeare of Grace One thousand, foure hundred and sixe, the Crowne of Castille came to his only Sonne

XVIII. Iohn, Second of the name; but by reason of his minoritie, Queene Constance his Mother gouerned the Kingdome. This is the same woman, that gaue the Islandes of the Canaries to Iohn of Betancour, a Frenche Knight, whereof hee made the Conquest for her, as we haue already said. The said King Iohn of Castille espoused Mary of Arragon, Daughter to his vnckle Ferdinand, and by her he had two Daughters, and a Sonne Constance died young.

Leonora; And
Henry, King of Castille.

By his Second Wife Isabella of Portugall, Daughter to the Infant of Portugall Dom Iohn, Maister of Saint Iames, he had a Daughter and a Sonne.

Isabella, Queene of Castille; And Alphonso.

The Reigne of this King Iohn the Second, continued Forty Eight yeares: And by his death, happening in the yeare of Grace, 1454, succeeded in the Kingdome his eldest Sonne

XIX. Henry, Fourth of the name, Sirnamed the Impotent, who Reigned One and twentie yeares. In his first mariage hee espoused Madame Blanche of Nauarre, whom he repudiated without any occasion, or hauing any knowledge of her, himselfe not being naturally a man. Hee became amourous of Iane of Portugall, who was his Second wife: to whom (without regard of his owne impotency) he graunted permission, to haue a Minion to lye with her, by whom shee had a Daughter Iane, nourished as if shee had bin the Kings Daughter.

By the death of this King Henry the Impotent, happening in the yeare, 1475, his Sister by the second bed

XX. Isabella was Queene of Castille, and of Leon, who tooke to be her Husband Ferdinand, King of Arragon & of Cicilie, by whom she had two Sons and three daughters.

Michaell, who died young.
Iohn, dying young also.
Iane, Queene of Spayne,
Mary, Queene of Portugall; And
Katharine, the occasion of the misbapps of England.

The Moores driuen out of Granada.

Vnder the Reigne of these Kings the Moors of Granado, were exterminated, by the surprizall of Granado, their chiefe and capitall Citty. In memorie whereof, the said Kings entred at the point of their Armes, D'Or a la Grenade de Gueules fuellee de Synople. The name of Catholique King, was giuen to the Kings of Spayne after this Conquest: And Christopher Columbus began the Conquest of the Newe World. The said Queene Isabella reigned Nine and Twenty yeares, and died in the yeare of Grace, 1504. By her death her Eldest Daughter,

XXI. Iane, was Queene of Castile, Leon and Granado; Wife to Phillip, Arch-duke of Austria, Count of Flanders and the Nether-Lands. And

By this Marriage were borne Leonora Queene of Portugall, and afterward of France.
Charles, called the Fifte, Emperour, King of Spayne.
Isabella, Queene of Denmarke.
Ferdinand, Emperour by the demission of Charles his Brother.
Mary; And Katharine.

After the death of Phillip the Arch-Duke, happening before his Wife; Shee became some-what troubled in iudgment.

XXII. Charles, in the life time of his Mother, tooke the Gouernment of the Kingdomes of Spayne, and reigned Two and Fortie yeares. By Isabell his Wife, Daughter to the King of Portugall, he had Foure Children:

Phillip, King of all the Prouinces of Spayne, and of the Indies, and Lord of the Lowe-Countries:
Mary, Empresse.
Iane, Married in Portugall; And Ferainand, who died young.

By two Concubines hee had a Sonne and a Daughter:

Margaret, Dutchesse of Parma and Placentia, sometime Gouernesse of the Low-Countries; And Dom John d'Austria, dying without children; Famous for the Battaile of Lepanto. By the renunciation of Charles the Fift to the Empire, and to the Estates of Spayne, his Eldest Sonne XXIII. Phillip, Second of the name, came to the Crowne of Spayne, during the life time of his Father, in the yeare One thousand, fiue hundred fifty and eight, and Reigned fifty yeares. He had foure wiues.

By the first Wife, Mary of Portugall, he had Charles, who died vnmaried.

By his Second Wife Mary, Queene of England, he had not any issue.

By his Third Wife Madame Elizabeth of France (who died great with child) she had two Daughters.

Isabella Clara Eugenia, Lady of the Lowe-Countries, liuing yet at this present, Wife to Albertus of Austria, formerly a Cardinall, but without issue; And Katharine, Wife to Charles Emanuell, Duke of Sauoye, who hath a plenteous progenie.

In Fourth Marriage hee espoused his Niece, Anne of Austria, and by her he had Fiue Children.

Charles, deceasing young.
Laurens-Ferdinand, dying young also.
Diego (that is Iames) likewise dying young; phillip, King; And
N. A Daughter dying young.

By the death of King Phillip the Second, happening in September, One thousand, fiue hundred fourescore and eighteene, his onely Sonne XXIIII. Phillip, Third of the name (reigning at this present) came to the Kingdomes of the Spaynes & Indiaes. By his Wife Margaret of Austria (deceasing in Childebed Sixe Hundred and Thirteene) he had Three Sonnes, and as many Daughters.

Anne, Married to Lewes the Most-Christian King of France and of Nauarre, Thirteenth of the name, now Reigning.
Phillip, Husband to Madame Elizabeth of France, Sister to the said Most Christian King.
Mary, who is vnmarried.
Ferdinand,
Laurens
And a Daughter, dying after her Mother.

Now, as concerning the Armes of Castille, euery one knoweth, that they are De Gueules au Chasteau fomme de Trois Tours D'Or: As is to bee seene in the Glasse windowes of the Holy Chappell Royall, in the Pallace at Paris, which Armes of Castille, are those of the Queene of France, Blanche of Castille, Mother to Saint Lewes. But as we haue said concerning the Armes of Leon; the same diuersitie is there touching them of Castille. For Floriano d'Ocampo, a Spanish writer, and the Doctour Perez Antonio Bentiero write, that the King of Castille and Leon Alphonso, Ninth of the name tooke for Armes after the Battaile of Vbeda, De Naues de Tolosa, in memory of the Castell of Ferrall, or the Tent or Pauillion of Miramomelin, ouercome by the Christians in the yeare One Thousand, Two Hundred and Twelue. And that before this Battaile, the Kings of Castille had no other Seale, but their owne Figure on Horseback, and likewise had no other Armes.

Concerning the Armes of Castille.

Miramomelin vanquished by the Christians

In iustification of their saying, they further write, that Dom Alphonso Raymond, Fift King of Castille (who began to Reigne in the yeare of Grace One Thousand, One Hundred Twentie and Two) carried no other Armes (during his life time) but L'Escu de France, such as had bin brought into Spayne by Raymond of Bourgongne his Father, and Guy of Bourgongne Archbishop of Vienna, who afterward was Pope, named Calixte the Second. Which the Count of Lanferote holdeth for a matter most certaine and assured, speaking concerning the Priuiledges of the Auncient Monasteries of Spayne.

The Armes of Don Alphonso Raymond, Fift King of Castille

En los Priuilegios de los Monoies de Sahagun de los Reyes que le signen no se hallan Armas sino vn Rey a Cauallo. Cosa aueri gada, e llana es que Dom Remon nerno del Sancto Rey Ferdinand Casado con Donna Vrraca fa Hija, que era dela Casa Real de Francia, hermano del Conde de Borgonna, y de Guido Arcobispo de Viena tuuo Armas de Francia, succediendo en el Reyno de Castillia Dom Alonso hijo del mismo Dom Remon, que se llamo Emperador de las Espannas temia l'Escudo de las mismas Armas.

The allegation of Count de Lanferote.

Others doe holde, that Nugno Belchides, an Allemaigne Gentleman dwelling at Burgos in Castille, brought thither those Armes, and made such apparance thereof by his owne high deseruings, as the tongue of scandale or disgrace, could no way blast his reputation. But for my selfe, I am of the minde, that it hath beene at all times (and vnder the first Iudges) a knowne certaintie; that these Armes were in frequent vse; yea Armes very easie to take from the name of the Countrey, without the inuention of any other. For, as the same Counte (formerly alleadged) saith. El origen de Toman Castella por Armas fue, por alluision del mismo Reyno de Castilla. And thereupon he produceth the figure of the Auncient Seale, belonging to the Councell of Castille; within the Roundure or Circle whereof was depicted an high mountaine, where in was planted a Castell, charged with three imbattailed Towers: and within another Circle, which made the engirting of the Seale, this Legend written in old Gothishe Letters.

The Seale appertaining to the Councell of Castille.

And Gariuay, or Garibay, in the Foure and Thirtieth Chapter of his Twelfth Booke writeth, that Alphonſo the Ninth, vſed the ſame Armes before the Battaile of Muradall, wunne in the yeare One Thouſand, Two Hundred and Twelue, as we haue already ſaid, He approueth it by the Originall of Priueledges, written in Velam in the Latine tongue, with Seales hanging on Strings of Silke faſtened to them, of diuers coullers, On which Seales, vpon the one ſide was a King mounted on Horſebacke; and on the other ſide a Caſtell, Which Priueledges were giuen and graunted it the Citty of Saint Dominicke de le Calcade, in the yeares One Thouſand, Two Hundred and Seauen.

Proceede we now to other Orders, in the Kingdome of Caſtille.

The Order of Calatraua, Inſtituted in the yeare One Thouſand, One Hundred Fiftie and Eight.

CHAP X.

Of Calatraua in elder times.

THe firſt Military Order of Caſtille, was that of Calatraua (heeretofore a frontire place of Caſtille and Tolledo, Oretum Germanarum by Ptolomie, in the dioceſſe of Calatraua, ſeated vpon the Guadiana, on of the Principalleſt Riuers in Spayne, in Latine called Ana) which tooke birth and Originall in the yeare of Grace, One Thouſand, One Hundred Fifty and Eight, according to the leſte teſtimony of Spaniſhe Chroniclers, as heere you may reade their owne words.

La Orden De Calatraua, comenco en el Anno de 1158. en tiempo del Rey don Sancho de Caſtilla, tomando nombre del Caſtillo de Calatraua. El qual ſiendo de la Orden de los Templarios, y no hallandoſe poderoſos para defender lo contra la fuerca de los Moros, lo dieron al Rey Don Sancho, Y Ofreciendoſe Raymundo Natural de Burueua Abad del Monaſterio de Sancta Maria De Fitero, que es el re yno de nau arra de la Orden de Ciſtel, y Frey Diego Velaſquez de la miſma Orden (que antes auia ſido gran Caualliero en Armas) y otros Caualleros, y Hermanos d'eſta Orden a ſu defenſa. El Rey ſe la dio, Yde Aqui tvvo Principio Eſta Orden Y Caualleria cuya inſignia es la Cruz Roxa Floreteada, que tomaron por Deuiſa en los pechos a imitacion de los Caualleros Franceſes de la Sancta Cruzada, que por eſtos tiempos paſſauan a la guerra de vltra Mar. Sus Armas ſon la miſma Cruz en campo de Oro, y a los lados d'ella dos Trauas Azules, para inſignion del Caſtillo de Calatraua, de donde tuuo ſu Principio.

And as the Authour hath made it Spaniſhe, ſo is it thus Engliſhed.

The Order of Calatraua tooke her beginning in the yeare One Thouſand, One Hundred, Fifty and Eight, Vnder the Reigne of Sancio, Third of the name, he being Sirnamed the Deſired, El Deſſeado, Sixte King of Caſtille, (Sonne to Alphonſo Raymond, King of Caſtille, Sonne to Raymond of Bourgongne, Husband of Vrraca, Daughter to Ferdinand the Saint) and tooke his appellation of the Caſtell of Calatraua, which is an Arabick worde, properly ſignifying a Caſtell, a diction retained retained yet to this day, in the names of Calataiud, Calacanaſor, Calahorra, Calazeit and Cala, in the territorie of Seuille: that is as much to ſay, as the Caſtels of Taiud, Canaſor, de Horra, and of Zeit. So this name of Calatraua is compounded of the Arabicke Cala, and of the Spaniſh Trauas, which ſignifieth Entarues, and Menotes, Mancles, Gines or Trons, to faſten about the feete and wriſts of Priſoners. This Caſtle hauing bin wonne from the Moores of Andalouzia, and wherein they lockt vp Chriſtians very ſtrictly; was giuen to the Knights Templers, onely to guard and defend it. But they vpon tydings, that the Moores leuyed a puiſſant Armie for regayning the ſame Caſtle; began to quake timerouſly, and ſcratch their heads for further conſideration; being vtterly diſtruſtfull of their owne Forces, and ſo rendered vp the Caſtle to King Sancio of Caſtille.

The compoſition of the name Calatraua.

Before whom Dom Raymond, a natiue of Burcua, Abbot of the Monaſterie of Santa Maria de Hytero, preſented himſelfe (they being places ſcituated in the Kingdome of Nauarre) and he being of the Order of the Ciſteaux; with him alſo was Fryer Diego Velaſquez, of the ſame Order. He hauing ſeene ſome courſes of the world, had bin a Knight of great renowne, famous for his proweſſe and valiancie, and ſome other Brethren of the ſaid Order, and diuers other Knights beſide, who offred themſelues to keepe this frontierd Caſtell, whereto the King very gladly condeſcended: And from hence aroſe the Order of Calatraua.

The manner of their Croſſe and enblazon thereof.

The Armes and Noates, Is a Red Croſſe Floureedeluced, which the Knights of this Order tooke for their Deuiſe, and weare vpon their breaſts, by the modell of the French Knights of the Holy Croiſade, at ſuch time as they went to conquer and guard the Holy-Land. The Shield of their Armes was D'Or à la meſme Croix de Gueulles, & en pointe aux deux coſtes d'icelle Deux Entraues & Menettes d'Azur: So affirmeth the Count of Lanſerote. This Abbey of Hytero is in the Dioceſſe of Palenca in Caſtile, ſeated vpon the Riuer of Piſuerga.

The Nobilitie aſſiſted bountifully ſo good a beginning.

After that the King of Caſtile had giuen the place to theſe Monkes, they were quickly aſſiſted by the Nobilitie of Caſtile and Tolledo, who furniſhed them with Money, Armes, Horſes, munition and victuals, neceſſary for keeping a Caſtle, that was to expect a long beſiedging. And the more to animate and encourage them in well doing, the ſame King Sancio made a preſent to God, the Virgin Mary, and to the Abbot Raymond, his Monkes and Congregation of the Order of the Ciſteaux; of ſundry liberall gifts both preſent, and alwayes after to perpetuitie; with the ſaid Caſtle of Calatraua, all the confines, Mountaines, Lands, Riuers, Medowes, Paſturegrounds, Rights, Nominations, Reaſons, and Actions, appertaining any way thereinto the Kings of Caſtile, which he ratified by his Letters Patents, and were giuen in the yeare before dated.

The Kings liberality to the Order of Calatraua.

The Abbot Dom Raymond, (hauing taken poſſeſſion and ſeizure of the place) planted his Monkes therein, and went backe to his Monaſterie. And there (in the neighbouring parts round about it) he aſſembled together a great number of people, amounting (well neere) to twentie thouſand me; who with their Goods, Houſhold-ſtuffe, Families and Cattell, came and peopled in and about Calatraua, ſo that the Moores durſt neuer be ſo bold, as once aduenture to beſiedge it.

The diſcreete prouidence of Abbot Raymond.

Now, in the time of Alphonſo, fourth of the name, King of Caſtile, and called the Noble; a great number of Noble Caſtillians, hauing vndertaken the Rule & Cloathing of this Order of Calatraua: it fortuned that the Order augmented and encreaſed wondrouſly. And now (of themſelues) they grew deſirous, to be vnder the Gouernment of a great Maiſter, that might make them ap", and leade them forth to Warre. In imitation of other Militarie Orders of Knights, as of the Sepulcher, the Temple, Saint Lazarus, Saint John, and other Orders of Paleſtine. The Great Maiſter had his Counſell, conſiſting of thirteene Commanders, and Officers of Receipts.

The first Great Maister of this Order, was Dom Garcia Redon.
After whom succeeded Dom Martin Perez of Syon.

The Battaile of Alarcos. And next to him was Successor Dom Nugno Perez de Quignones, who was slaine in the Battaile of Alarcos, wonne by the Miramomelin (this Arabicke word signifieth The Prince of beleeuers) Ioseph Macemud passing out of Affrica to Seuile, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand one hundred foureſcore and fifteene. The King Alphonſo of Leon, was brought ſore wounded out of the Battaile, which was loſt by him, and wherein dyed Sancio Fernandez de Lemos, Great Maiſter of the Order of Saint Iames of the Sword; Dom Ruy Velaſco, Commander Maior of the ſaid Order; Iohn Arias de Monteroſo, Knight of Galicia, and thirteenth man of the ſaid Order: Dom Ruy Gonſales Giron, a wealthie Burgeſſe of Caſtile; and Dom Sancio Garcia de Salzedo, a mightie rich man, Lord de la Caſa d' Aiala, and an infinite number of Chriſtians beſide.

Such as periſhed in the Battaile.

The fourth Great Maiſter was Dom Martin Martinez.

The Knights of this Order had their firſt Conuent at Calatraua, and then afterward at Ciruelos, at Buxeda, at Corcoles, and at the Caſtle of Saluatierre, and vnder their twelfth Great Maiſter Dom Nugno Hernandez: Their chiefe place of Order was eſtabliſhed at Couos, where it remaineth yet at this preſent. This Order hath bin in ſuch manner enriched by the Kings of Leon and Caſtile, that at the warres againſt the Moores, they alwayes furniſhed three hundred Lances compleate; which is the ordenarie furniture for the Gendarmerie or Compleate Horſe, belonging to the Commanderies of the ſaid Order. And here you may ſee what number there are of them in Caſtile, Leon, Galicia, Andalouzia, with other Prouinces and Kingdomes of Spaine.

In Valentia there are many places belonging to this Order, whereof the moſt principall Priories are in Caſtile; as namely thoſe of Seuille, Granado, Iaen, Alhama, Fuenſeliente, Porcuna, Suqueſa, and Villatoro.

Approbation and confirmation by Popes.

This Order was approued by Pope Alexander, third of the name, who tooke it into the eſpeciall protection and ſafegard of the Apoſtolicall Seate, in the yeare of Grace One thouſand one hundred threeſcore and foure: And confirmed by Pope Innocent, third of the name, One thouſand one hundred foureſcore and nineteene.

The firſt habite.

At the beginning, theſe Knights did weare their Roabes and Scapularies of white colour, as formerly did the Ciſteaux Monkes. Pope Benedict, third of the name, diſpenſed with them for that habite Monaſticall: And Pope Paule the third gaue them permiſſion to marrie once in their life time; but not to haue any benefit of a ſecond mariage.

Diſpenſation for mariage.

The laſt Great Maiſter of this Order, was Dom Garcia Lopez de Padilla, who dyed in the yeare of Grace One thouſand foure hundred foureſcore and nine; when Ferdinand of Arragon and his wife Iſabella, King and Queene of Leon and Caſtile, found the meanes to ioyne and annexe the Great Maiſterſhip of Calatraua to the Crowne of Caſtile: which reunion happened by permiſſion of Pope Innocent, eight of the ſame, in the ſame yeare before obſerued. So that (in time) the three Great Maiſterſhips of the Orders of Saint Iames of the Sword, Of Calatraua, and of Alcantara, were annexed to the Crowne of Spaine, in fauour of Prince Charles, afterward King of the Spaines, and Emperour, fift of the name: By the Buls of the Popes, Alexander the ſixt, Leo the tenth, and Adrian the ſixt. By whoſe meanes, the Kings of Spaine enioy the Reuennues of theſe three Great Maiſterſhips, whereof they beare the titles, and qualifie perpetuall Adminiſtrators.

The Order of the Band, or of the red Scarfe, Inſtituted in Caſtile, in the yeare of Grace One thouſand three hundred and thirtie: By the King of Leon and Caſtile, Dom Alphonſo, eleauenth and laſt of the name.

CHAP. XI.

L'Ordre de la Bande, & de l'Eſcharpe Rouge.

THE firſt perticuler Order, eſtabliſhed by the Kings of Caſtile, to honor their Nobilitie (being not reſtrained vnder any Monaſticall Rule) was that Of the Band, or of the Redde Scarfe: in regard that the Knights of this Order, did weare a Band or Riband of redde Silke, containing the bredth of foure fingers, and in the forme or faſhion of a Scarfe, from the top of the left ſhoulder, deſcending vnder the right arme. It was Inſtituted by the King of Caſtile and Leon Dom Alphonſo, eleauenth and laſt of the name, in the yeare One thouſand three hundred and thirtie; according to the teſtimony of Dom Antonio de Gueuara, Biſhop of Mondognedo, in the Epiſtle which he wrote to the Count of Benenentum Dom

The time of the Inſtitution

Dom Pedro Pimentello, inserted among his Golden Epistles; but he nameth this Institution to be done in the Citie of Palencea.

None but yonger Brothers, and meane Gentlemen, of poore and slender sufficiency, were receiued into this Order of the Band. And yet they must haue followed the Court the space of ten years (or fought three times at the least) against the Moores. And here we haue set downe the Rules and Obseruations, which the Knights of this Order receiued in their Colling or Embracing, & were sworne to keepe inuiolably.

The Knights to be entertained

The Articles and Constitutions for the Knights of the Band.

1. THat the Knight of the Band stood obliged, to speake to the King, for the defence of his Countrey, and good of the Common-wealth.

2. That he must speake to the King nothing but pure truth, without lying or flatterie, and must reueale whatsoeuer he hath heard spoken, either against his person, or the State.

3. A Knight once conuicted of Lying, shall walke a moneths space, without wearing a Sword.

4. He is not to keepe companie, but with Martiall men and Souldiers, or such as are aduanced to charges and dignities of his owne qualitie: but not with Mechanicall Artizans, and men of base or vile condition.

5. He must keepe his faith and promise inuiolably, to and with all men, of what estate or qualitie soeuer they be.

6. He must be prouided of Armes and of a Horse well appointed, vnder paine of loosing the title of his Knighthood.

7. And on the same perill he standeth, if he be seene mounted on his Mule, without his Band, and Sword.

8. He is not to make any complaint of wounds by him receiued in war: neither is tov aunt of his valour and manhood.

9. He is not to make any account, if he be mockt, scorned or railed on by any body: but to haue all his carriage discreete and graue, and wholly measured by the leuell of honestie.

10. He is not to vse any Gaming at Cards or Dice: and must not pawne or engage his Habits, Armes or Horse.

11. He must be courteous towards Ladies and Gentlewomen, to whom he shall performe honor and seruice, to his vttermost power.

At the Inſtitution of this Order, there were none receiued or entertained, but men of the moſt noble and Famous Families of Spaine, the greater part whereof are gone and expired. But the reſt haue conſerued themſelues in Honour and great wealth, euen to this inſtant. As the Velaſques, Manriques, Pimentels, Mendoſaes, de Cordua, Pacheco, d'Eſtuniga, Faiardos, Aurellanos, Tendillas, Cueuas, Andradas, Fonſecas, Luna, Villandrado, Stomayores, and others at this preſent illuſtrious in Spaine, whom they tearme Grandes: who haue permiſſion to couer their heads in the Chamber of the King of Spaine.

Two noble Families yet remaine of this Order.

This Order was continued by the Succeſſors, Sonnes and Deſcendants of the ſaid Alphonſo, King of Leon and Caſtile, laſt of the name. For vnder the Reigne of King Iohn, Firſt of the name, the Emperour Sigiſmond hauing made a Voyage into Spaine, to the end of mediating the quietneſſe of the Church, then troubled with a Schiſme betweene the Kings of Arragon, Portugall and Caſtile: the ſame King gaue this Order to ſome Princes and Lords, attending in the traine of the ſaid Emperour Sigiſmond, as Garibay hath related in his Hiſtory.

The Emperor Sigiſmonds comming into Spayne.

And concerning this Order of the Bande, the memories thereof are to bee found in moſt part of the noble Houſes of Spaine, as well in Caſtile and Leon, as in Portugall, Arragon and Nauarre, in the Armes charged with Bandes, ſome of Gueules or of Synople, and the Mettals & Cólours retained in the noble Science of Herauldry: the moſt part of which Armes haue the Bande held and ſupported by two Leopards mouthes, which they tearme Dragantes.

The Order of the Doue, or of the Holy-Ghoſt: Inſtitutee in Segobia in Caſtile, in the Yeare of Grace, One Thouſand, Three Hundred, Threeſcore and Nineteene: By Iohn the Firſt, Sixteenth King of the Name, of Caſtile.

CHAP. XII.

Iohn, Firſt of the name, the Sixteenth King of Caſtile, was Author of the Order of the Holy-Ghoſt, otherwiſe tearmed of the Pidgeon or Doue. Inſtituted in the City of Segobia, in the yeare of Grace, One Thouſand, Three Hundred, Three Score and Nineteene.

L'Ordre de la Colombe ou du Sainct Eſprit.

But there are ſome Spaniſh authors, who doe report and referre this Inſtitution to King Henry, being his Sonne, the Third of the name.

But bee it referred either to the Father or his Sonne; one of them cauſed the number of Collars to bee made, linked or chained with Rayons or ſplendant beames of the Sunne, Ondoyant or wauing and pointed, whereat hung a Doue of Gold enamelled with White, the Bee and Beake or Bill being Gueules or Red, comming of the Breſt, euen as if it flew, and deſcended downe from heauen to the Earth.

The Collar of the Order.

He adorned himſelfe with his Collar, on the Feaſt-day of Pentecoſte, in the yeare before ſpecified, and diſtributed the other Collars to his moſt intimate Fauourites: giuing to each of them a faire named Booke, containing the Statutes and Ordinances thereof, which hee would haue them to obſerue and keepe.

The diſtribution of his Collers.

But this Order was of ſmall continuance, by reaſon of the Inſtitutours death, which happened in the very ſame yeare of his Inſtitution: it being leftwithout any reſource and memory, to the Kings his deſcendants in Caſtile.

The Order of Saint Sauiour of Montreall, called the Order of Arragon: Instituted in the Kingdome of Arragon, in the Yeare, One Thousand, One hundred and Twenty, by Alphonso, Eighteenth of the Name, King of Nauarre and Arragon.

CHAP. XIII.

The Originall and beginning of the Kingdome of Arragon.

L'Ordre de S. Sauueur de Montreall.

THe First King of the Gothes, that from the plenteous and abounding Gaules, attempted the Conquest of Spaine (saith Augustino Cranata, a Spanish and Romane Antiquary) and made his people to dwell in the Prouinces seated in the steepie descending Vallies, amongst those high aspiring Mountaines, called Pyrenean, and namely in the Countries of Rousillion, Cerdaignia, and Cathalegna, so called by the Gothes and Alains, was King Vallia, as wee haue formerly said in the Second Booke Page 194. in the yeare of Grace, Foure hundred and Twenty. For they are but dreames and idle imaginations, to referre their beginning and first entrance, to the Kings Athanaricus and Alaricus, who neuer saw Spaine, except it were in painting, whereat the most iudicious Writers of Spaine make a meere mockery, as a thing imagined, and farre from any certainty; so speaketh (and very aduisedly) the Count de Lansarote in his Andalouzia. Yo no signo estas Antiguedades y principios, por tenerlos por sin fundamento, sino las cosas mas communes y llanas segun la sensillez de aquellos primeros tiempos, onde no tenian noticia de Las Armas de los Reyes Godos, ni aun de las Historias dellos. I follow not the Principles of those Antiquaries, to hold them fundamentall, except in matters that are most common, and according to the most sensible of those precedent times, wherein no notice was taken, concerning the Armies of the Gothish Kings, nor any of their Histories.

Contradiction in diuers of the Spanish Writers.

Rodericke last King of the Gothes in Spaine.

It is a matter most certaine and assured, that after the death of Roderick, the last King of the Gothes in Spaine; the Moores possessed themselues of the foremmed Prouinces, and had the enioying of them still: vntill the time of Charles Martell, Duke of the French, who gaue charge to his Kinsman Odilon, Duke of Aquitaria to conquer them, as indeed hee did.

Barcellona surrendred to King Charlemagne by a Spanish Moore named Zatun.

But by reason of his death, the Moores reconquered those places formerly taken from them, and namely the City of Barcelona, which they possessed till the time of our King Charlemagne, to whom a Spanish Moore surrendred it, making himselfe his Liedgeman, Subiect, and Tributary, as is obserued by all the ancient Annalists of those times, both Spanish and French, Barcinona Hispaniæ Ciuitas quæ iam pridem à Francis defecerat, per Zatun Saracenum Præfectum eius, Carlo reddita est. But as the Saracens make Trophees, of infringing and violating the faith which they gaue to Christians: so this Zatun (by little and little) turned his coate and credit, and being taken by the French, was banished perpetually. And the Gouernment of that good City (with the neighbouring Prouinces) giuen by Charlemaigne to a Count of his owne House, named Bera, which happened in the yeare of Grace, Eight Hundred and One.

Bera Eighteenth Vicount of Barcellona [illegible]

This Bera (to little or no purpose at all called Bernard) was accused of Felony and Treason, so that hee was enforced to fight himselfe in single Combate, and in an enclosed Field against him that had accused him, and threw downe his Gauntlet as Wager of Battaile. By want of witnesses to auerre the Fact, hauing beene vanquished, and knowne for a false lyer by his owne confession: King Lewes the Debonnaire, Sonne and Successour to Charlemaigne, banished him to the City of Reus, in [illegible] the yeare Eight Hundred and Twenty. In whose place and office he established as Gouernour in all those Prouinces, a neere Kinsman of his owne named Bernard, who brought the Moores of the Countrey to tearmes of duty and obedience. But being accused (through enuy) of some priuate familiarity with the Empresse, Wife to Lewes the Debonnaire: he was remoued, so that an Alemaigne or Germaine Lord or Count, named Geoffrey d' Aria, was appointed in his place, he being the most forward and actiue man at Armes, amongst all them of his time, and hee had the Gouernment.

Bernard displaced, and another appointed.

This Count had to his Wife a French Lady, named Almira, of whom hee begot a Sonne called Geoffrey, Sirnamed The Hairy, to whom our King and Emperour of the Romanes Charles, called the Baulde, gaue for his Armes his Escu d'Or, charge de Quatre Paulx de Gueules. by reason of foure fingers all bloodied, which the said Geoffrey the Hairy returning from a charge vpon the Moores, had laid on his Shield by the said Charles the Baulde.

The Spaniards are all of this consent, that from thence came the Armes to the Count of Barcellona, and to the Kingdome of Arragon, euen to this present.

The Armes of the Count of Barcellona & Arragon.

The Count of Lansarote writeth, that in the Battaile so famously renowned, called Los Naues de Tolosa, the King Dom Pedro of Arragon, had not any particular Standard and Banner: because (saith hee) long time before that, the Kings of Arragon had forsaken the Armes of that Kingdome (which were D' Azur à la Croix pattee au pied fiché d'Argent au Quartier d'Honneur) and receiued them of the Count of Barcellona, which Buchurere, D Or à Quatre Paulx de Gueules, Armes, which according to the testimony of Antonio Beuthero, were won by the same occasion, and by Geoffrey of the Allemaigne Nation, to whom the Emperour Charlemaigne gaue to Wife, one of his owne Kinswomen, called Almira.

Of Count Geoffrey, and his Sonne Surnamed the Hairy.

This Geoffrey was Lord of the Castle d'Aria, in the County of Rousillon, and afterward Count of Barcellona. Hee had a Sonne named the Hairy, Successour in the said County of Barcellona, who being with his Barcellonians present in the Army of the Emperour Lewes the Debonnaire (wee must read his Sonne Charles the Baulde) in the Battaile which hee gaue against the Normans: at the issue thereof, all couered with blood, which ran out of his wounds, the Emperour perceiuing the Count to haue a Golden Shield, gaue him those Quartre Paulx de Gueules, for Armes to him and his Descendants. And the Kings of Arragon, euen to this day, doe hold them for their Armes Royall.

The Armes of Spaniards.

Iosfre el Velloso hallandose coulos Barcellonescses en auiuda del Emperador Ludouico, en la Batalla, que tuuo con los Normandos, saliendo della tinto en sangue de heridas que recibio, leuando en el Armes el escudo darado sin deuisas, el Emperador Vnto quatre dedo de sumano en la sangre del Conde, y lopasso de alto à Banca por el Scudo diziendole. Estas Seran, Conde, Vuestras Armas de las quales vsaronsus Descendientes, y vsa la casa Real de Arragon.

Part of the Countie of Arragon giuen to Geoffrey the Hairy to hold of the Crown of France.

To the same Geoffrey the Hairy, Charles the Bauld gaue likewise part of the Countie of Arragon, newly conquered by the French from the Moores: to hold with that of Barcellona, and the Lands of Rousillion and Cerdaignia in full propriety, hee and his Descendants, vnder Liedge Homage and authority of the Crowne of France, whom the Counts and Kings of Arragon long time acknowledged for their Soueraignes, setting downe at the beginning of their publique Acts, the name and yeare of the Reigne of the most Christian Kings of France; vntill the time which we haue formerly obserued in the Second Booke of these Recherches.

Aznar the first Count of Arragon.

Wee haue heeretofore declared, that Aznar, youngest Sonne to Duke Eudes, despoiled of Aquitaine by the French Armies; made his retreat into Nauarre, where he had a Sonne named likewise Aznar, First Count of Arragon, who was the Father of

Galindo; And of Ximenes Garcia.

Galindo was inueſted by the King of Nauarre Garcia Inigo, in the ſmall City of Iaca, the firſt Conqueſt of Garcia Ximenes made vpon the Moores, and ſome other places elſe thereabout, with title of Count of Arragon, vnder Authority and liedge homage to the Crowne of Arragon. This extendure of the Countrey, watered by the ſmall Riuers of Arga, and of Arragon, hath taken name of the ſaid Riuer of Arragon, which falleth into the great Flood of Iberus.

How the Countrey firſt tooke name.

The principall City of this Kingdome is Sarragoſſa (ſeated on the ſaid Flood of Iberus) named by Pliny in the Third Book and Third Chapter of his naturall Hiſtory Salduba, placed or ranked by Paulinus, among the very faireſt Cities of Spaine.

And indeed it is ſo, for I my ſelfe being there a whole Lent time, in the yeare Foure Score and Eight, am able to auouch it for truth.

The Count of Arando Vice-Roy of Arragon.

At that time the Count of Arando made his entrance thereinto, according to the quality of a Vice-Roy, and Gouernour of Arragon, to whom the King of Spaine (within a while after) ſhewed but ſlender kindneſſe, becauſe he had medled a little too farre, in the buſineſſe of the Secretary of State Dom Antonio Perez, who dyed at Paris, ſome few yeares ſince.

The Counts of Arando had their firſt dwelling on the Riuer of Duero, where was their Houſe Arando de Ducro, hauing diuerſity of Armes belonging to this Houſe.

The Armes of the Counts of Arando.

For ſome carried De Leon party de Gueules à vn Chaſteau plante ſur vn Pont d'Argent maſonne de Sable à vne Riuiere Ondee d'Argent & d'Azur. And others carried ſimply De Gueules audict Chaſteau & Pont à Trois Arches d'Argent & Six Ondes d'Azur, & d'Argent à la Bordure d'Or, chargee de Huict Arreſts de Lance, which in Spaine they call Arandelas, d'Azur. Returne we now to the firſt Count of Arragon.

The Genealogie of the Counts of Arragon, and proceeding from Dom Galindo, on to the whole Succeſſion.

DOm Galindo left three Children: Toda, Wife to the King of Nauarre Fortunio Garceez, Sonne to Garcia Inigo.

Ximenez Aznar; And

Endregot Sirnamed de Galindo.

The Eldeſt of theſe two Sonnes was Count of Arragon, who dyed without Iſſue, as his Brother likewiſe did: And then the County of Arragon came to the Brother of Galindo.

Ximenez Garcia, who was Father to Garcia Aznarez, Count of Aragon, Father to Fortunio Ximenez, Fift Count of Arragon, who died without Children: So that the Countie fell to Endregot de Galindo, who left but one Daughter that was named

Vraca, Wife to the King of Nauarre Garcia Inigo, Third of the name, and Seauenth King of Nauarre.

By this Alliance, the Countie of Arragon was ioyned and annexed to the Crowne of Nauarre. Vntill the time of King Sancio the Great, Fourth of the name, who in fauour of Ramiro his Baſtard, the Sonne of Dogna Caia, Lady of Ayuar, his Concubine, aduanced the County of Arragon to bee a Kingdome which hee gaue to the ſaid

I. Ramiro, Firſt King of Arragon in the yeare of Grace, One Thouſand, Thirty and Foure, and his reigne was Two and Forty yeares.

Hee took to Wife Ermeſinda, Daughter to Rogero, Count of Bigorre, by whom hee had two Sonnes, and the like number of Daughters.

The Sonnes were

Sancio Ramirez; And

Garcia, Biſhop of Iaca.

The Daughters were

Sancia, Counteſſe of Toloſa; And Thereſa, Counteſſe of Prouence.

By a Concubine hee had a Baſtard Sonne named

Sancio, whom hee made Lord of Ayuar, Atares, and of Xauierra;

By the death of King Ramiro, happening in the yeare, One Thouſand, Threeſcore and Sixteene: after him ſucceeded in the Kingdome his Eldeſt Sonne

II. Sancio

II. Sancio Ramiro, Firſt of the name, who reigned Eighteene yeares. This was the man that vſurped the Kingdome of Nauarre, as we haue already related vnto you.

By Felicia his Wife, Daughter to the Count of Vrgell, he had Pedro, King.

Alphonſo, King of Arragon, and of Nauarre by Vſurpation: And Ramiro, a profeſſed Monke at Saint Pons de Tomieres in Languedocke, King of Arragon likewiſe.

By a Concubine the ſaid Sancio left a Baſtard Sonne named Garcia, who was Biſhop of Iaca, after the death of his Vncle.

Sancio dyed in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand, Foureſcore and Foure, after whom ſucceeded his Eldeſt Sonne, named

III. Pedro, Firſt of the name, who reigned Fourteene yeares. By his Wife Agatha, a Florentine, hee had a Sonne and Daughter.

The Sonne was

Pedro, dying in his Fathers life time.

Iſabella, the Daughter, who likewiſe died before her Father. And hee himſelfe dying without any other Children, the yeare of Grace, One thouſand, One Hundred, and Eight, left the Kingdome to his Brother.

IIII. Alphonſo, Firſt of the name, vniper of the Kingdome of Nauarre, who reigned Eighteene yeares. Hee tooke to Wife Vraca, Queene of Caſtile and Leon, Widdow to the Count of Galicia, Raymond of Burgongne, by whom hee had no Iſſue. So that by his death happening the yeare, One Thouſand, one Hundred, Thirty and Foure, his youngeſt & laſt Brother

V. Ramiro, Second of the name, a Profeſſed Monke, in the Abbey of S. Pons de Tomieres, was the Fift King of Arragon.

The Kingdome of Nauarre was reduced into her firſt Stemme Royall, in the perſon of Garcia Ramiro, the Nineteenth King of Nauarre, as wee haue already ſaid. This Monke King tooke to Wife Agnes, Siſter to William, Count of Poictiers, by whom hee had one onely Daughter Petronilla, or by her wife called Petronilla Queene of Raymond Berengarius, Count of Barcellona: who for the cruelty and careleſneſſe of his Father in Law the Monke King, was made Regent in the Kingdome of Arragon.

By his wife he had

Raymond Alphonſo, King of Arragon.

Pedro.

Sancio.

Adoncia, Wife to the King of Portugall: And N. Wife to the Count D'Vrcell.

By the death of this Monke-King, happening in the yeare of Grace One Thouſand, One Hundred, Threeſcore and Two: the Eldeſt Sonne of his Wife Peronella Raymond, who cauſed himſelfe to be named

VI. Alphonſo, Second of the name, was the Sixt King of Arragon, and Count of Barcelona, a County vnited and anexed to the Crowne of Arragon. Hee had by his Wife Sancia, Daughter to Alphonſo Raymond, King of Caſtile and Leon,

The

The said King Ferdinand reigned seauen and thirtie yeares, and by his death, all the Kingdomes and Prouinces of Spaine (Portugal excepted) were reunited into one Body and sole Monarchie, meeting in the person of the Emperour. Charles the fift, Father of

Phillip the second, who made himselfe Maister of the Kingdome of Portugall; And Phillip the third, reigning at this present.

Wee haue formerly seene, that the Kingdome of Arragon had two kindes of Armes, and that the first were wholly suppressed, and the second remained; which we behold magnificently painted, on the great Gate of the Bridge at Sarragossa, on the side towards Nauarre. In the Haule along the Arch of Saint Iohn Baptist, and other publique places of the said Citie.

The Battaile of Alarcos, gainst foure Kings Moores.

It hath had a third Armes, to wit; L'Escu d'Argent à vne Croix de Gueulles (which is that of Saint George de Montesa) Cantonnee de Quatre Testes de Roys Mores de mesme au Bandeau Royal. In memorie of the Battaile of Alarcos, wonne from foure Kings Moores, at the Siedge of Huesca by the third King of Arragon, Pedro first of the name, One thousand fourescore and sixteene; As is reported by Ieronimo Surita, in his first Booke, and two and thirtieth Chapter of his Annales of Arragon.

Dom Pedro Primero deste nombre, Tercero Rey d'Aragon, auiendo vencido en el Anno 1096. cerca de Huesca grandes exercitos de Moros con muchas muertes de los Enemigos en la Batalla, que dizen d Alcoraz. Y siendo hallados entre ellos quatro Principes Moros con insignias Reales, y riquissimas tocas en las Cabeças, las tomo por Deuisa en memoria desta victoria pintadas de color roxo en Escudo a quarteles en campo de Plata, y en medio, d'el Escudo vna Cruz roxa como la de san Iorge de Montesa, que diuide las quatro Cabeças.

But these Armes were not of any long continuance; because they were forsaken vnder the Monke King Ramiro, who tooke the auncient Armes of Geoffrey the Hayre.

Let vs now come to the Militarie Orders, Instituted in the said Kingdome of Arragon.

CHAP. XIIII.

The Institution of the Order of Saint Sauiour of Montreall, or The Order of Arragon.

Alphonso, the eighteenth King of Nauarre by vsurpation, onely by that name, and first of Arragon, was (for his great Warres, which he made all his life time against the Moores of Spaine) named The warriour, and Emperour of the Spaines; because he saw himselfe King of all the Realmes, that is to say, the Christian Prouinces of Spaine, in the yeare One thousand one hundred and eight. For, of his owne chiefe Stocke and Stemme, he was King of Arragon and Nauarre by vsurpation. And by his wife Donna Vrraca of Castile, he was King of Leon, Castile and of Tolledo; yet by her he had not any issue, but expelled her from his company, for her lubricious and dishoneſt life.

The Warriour and Emperour of the Spaines.

He made very strong warres vpon the Moores of Arragon; from whom he conquered Sarragossa, called by the Romaines Salduba, which he made the Capitall Citie of the Kingdome of Arragon, hauing wonne it by force in the Moneth of December, Anno, One thousand one hundred and eighteene.

He caused his Armie to take rest all the Winter time, in the parts about Sarragossa, at a place called Xelsa, sometimes a very good Towne, a Colonie of the Romans, and by them named Iulia Celsa.

When the Spring began to appeare, and lend the world her gladsome smiles; he entred into the Field againe, and besiedged Taraſſona, formerly belonging to the Crowne of Nauarre: against which also hee preuailed, and added it to the Kingdome of Arragon. In the end, he threw his forces on the Moores neighbouring about Sarragossa, from whom, in the yeare One thousand one hundred and twenty, he he tooke perforce Turiaſo, Alauona, Epila (which was credited to haue bin the ancient [a] Saguit, built by the Carthaginians) Cala-Taiud (a Citie built neere to Augusta Bilbilis, by a Moore King, named Taiud) Harica and Daroca, very neere whereto ioyned the Spring of the Fountaine of Xalon, in a goodly ſtrong place, naturally ſeated. And this Alphonſo the Battailer or Warriour, for a Trophee of his Conqueſts; cauſed a Citie to be built (for bridleling and curbing the Moores of Valencia, which he named Montreall.

[a] A Citie in Catalonia beyond Ebrus.

Saint Bernard Abbot of Clairuaux.

An Order of begging Friers.

At this time was very famouſly renowned (for ſanctitie of life) Saint Bernard, Abbot of Clarruaux, a French Gentleman, Lord of Fontaines, a Village and Caſtle diſtant about halfe a mile from Dijon, on the ſide of Talan. This Caſtle is (at this preſent) poſſeſſed by Monkes Fucillatines, who haue cauſed a Chappell to be erected, in the ſame place where Saint Bernard was borne. And this Abbot gaue and preſcribed to the Knights Templers, what Rule they ought to keep & obſerue: but he obtained of this Alphonſo, the ſame place of Montreall, giuen to the ſaid Templers, with charge to warre inceſſantly againſt the Moores. King Alphonſo granted his requeſt, and for their further encouragigin warre and well doing: he granted them the fift part of all the Conqueſts, which ſhould be made vpon the Moores, beſide many great Reuennues, which he granted them, out of his demeanes and Court of Arragon.

But thoſe Templers hauing bin exterminated and defaced in the Councill of Vienna (as we ſhall declare vnto you in more fitting place) Anno, One thouſand three hundred and ſeauen: he inſtituted other Knights in the ſame place of Montreall, denamed from the beſt Houſes in the Kingdome of Arragon. They retained the name as the Knights Templers had done, being called Knights of Saint Sauiour; wore a White Roabe, and on the Breaſt an Ankred Croſſe Red: And their Rule was ſomewhat conformable with that of the Templers, but onely that they had power to marrie. The Kings of Arragon were Soueraignes of the ſaid Order, whereinto were entertained ſuch Gentlemen of Arragon, as ſhewed their beſt deuoire in the warres againſt the Moores. It had many rich Commanderies, the moſt part whereof are grounded on the demeanes of the Kings of Arragon; the like happening to this Order, as did to the Great Maiſterſhips of Saint Iames of the Sword, of Alcantara, and of Calatraua, reunited to the Crowne of Spaine, as hath bin ſaid.

The ſame Ceremonies obſerued in France, for giuing the Order of Knighthood, to any Lord or Gentleman; were practiſed throughout all the Spaines. To bathe on the Eeue of the Ceremonie; to haue the Sword hallowed; as we haue noated in the Order of the Band, giuen to King Alphonſo, the Inſtitutour of this, as Iuricita Surita Surita, obſerueth in his Annales of Aragon, in the life of Ferdinand, ſecond of the name, King of Arragon, made Knight in the Citie of Sarragoſſa by the Duke of Gandia, the euening before his Coronation.

The ſame Surita, ſpeaketh of the Crowning of Alphonſo, fourth of the name, King of Arragon, performed on Eaſter day, in the yeare One thouſand three hundred twentie and eight, by the Archbiſhop of Sarragoſſa, Dom Pedro de Luna. After which Coronation, the King made two hundred Knights, the principall whereof were theſe Iames de Xerica.

Pedro d' Arborea.
Raymond Folke, Count of Cardanna.
Arnand Rogiero, Count of Paillars.
Lopez de Luna.
Alphonſo Fernandez d'Ixera.
Iohn Ximenes d'Vrrea.
Pedro Cornello.
William de Ceruillona.
Otho de Moncado: And Anthonio de Foix.

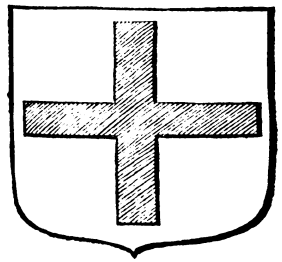
Who after they were made Knights by the Kings owne hand, deuided the reſt among them, to whom they guirded on their Swords, and put on their guilded Spurres: after they had performed the Eeues watch, and other Ceremonies in ſuch caſes required.



The Order of our Lady of Monteſa; otherwiſe tearmed the Order of Valencia: Inſtituted in the Kingdome of Valencia, in the yeare One thouſand three hundred and ſeauenteene.

CHAP. XV.

L'Ordre de Montela, dit de Valencia.

IN the yeare One thouſand three hundred and renne, at a generall Counſell, aſſembled in the Metropolitaine Citie of Vienna in Daulphine, by Pope Clement, fift of the name: the Religion of the Knights Templers, was wholly aboliſhed and defaced throughout Chriſtendome; for ſuch cauſes as we ſhall declare, when we come to ſpeake concerning The Orders of the Eaſt. Two yeares before, the Knights of Saint Iohn of Ieruſalem, expelled (as the other Orders and Chriſtians were) out of Paleſtine, were enſtalled in poſſeſſion of the goodly Iſle of Rhodes, by a Bull granted from the ſaid Pope Clement the fift.

The Chriſtians driuen out of Paleſtine.

The Templers being thus wholly exterminated, in Arragon, vnder the Reigne of Dom Iames, King of Arragon, ſecond of the name, was inſtituted a new Order of Knights, called Of our Lady of Monteſa, in the yeare One thouſand three hundred and ſeauenteene, at Monteſa, in the Kingdome of Valencia. The Statutes of which Order, were altogether anſwerable to that of Calatraua, vnder the Rule of the Ciſteaux. And thoſe Statutes were confirmed by Pope Iohn the two and twentieth, Succeſſour vnto Pope Clement the fift. They had great goods and reuennues, as well in Arragon, as in Valentia and Cathalogna.

The Inſtitution of the Order.

The firſt Great Maiſter of this Order, was Dom William d'Errillo, who tooke the white habite of Calatraua, in the yeare One thouſand three hundred and nineteene, at the Monaſterie of Saint Croſſe, by the hands of the Commander D'Alcaniz. Theſe Knights were afterward diſpenſed withall, to weare the cloathing of the Ciſteaux, in in the due place whereof (for the noate or badge of their Knighthood) they vsed to weare a full Red Crosse vpon the breast, by a priuiledge granted them by Pope Benedict the thirteenth, confirmed soone after by Pope Martin, fift of the name. And for the Shield or Escutcheon of their Armes, it was D'Or à la dite, Croix de Gueules, tearmed The Crosse of the Knight Saint George, Patron of the Kingdomes of Arragon and Arragon.

The Habite of the Order, and diſpenſation afterward.

The Shield of Armes.

Soone after was Great Maister of the said Order, the Infant Dom Iames of Arragon, eldest Sonne to Iames, King of Arragon, second of the name. This Prince, Successour of the Kingdome, to please King Iames his Father, had espoused Donna Leonora Infanta of Castile. Neuertheless, when the Estates met at Arragon, and held their Session there, I meane at Tarragona, in the yeare One thousand three hundred and twentie, this Prince being vpon the point of marrying the Princesse (by whom he might haue succeeded in the Kingdome of Castile) forsooke there his wife, declaring to King Iames his Father: that (long time before) he had made a vowe to God, neuer to marrie, nor to succeede in the Kingdome of Arragon. So that, notwithstanding all the speeches, both of his Father, and the States of Arragon and Valencia, he gaue ouer his right of eldership, to his yonger Brother Dom Alphonso, who was King of Arragon, second of the name, causing the King his Father to enfranchise him. By vertue of which enfranchisement, he released the Generall States from the Oath of fidelitie, which they had taken to him, when he was sworne Prince of Arragon, Valencia and Cathalogna.

A vowe made against marriage and succeeding in the Kingdome of Arragon.

The Prince entred into the Order of S. Iohn of Ierusalem.

He receiued the habite of the Order of Knighthood, belonging to the Knights of Saint Iohn of Ierusalem, at the hands of Dom Bernard Solter, Commander of the said Order, in the presence of his Brother Dom Iohn of Arragon, Archbishop of Tolledo, Dom Simon de Luna, Archbishop of Tarragona; Dom Berengarius, Bishop of Vic, and Dom Raymond d'Ampurias, Prior of Saint Iohn in Cathalogna. But afterward he gaue ouer that Order, and tooke the same of Montesa, whereof he was made Great Maister.

The vnion of Arragon, Valencia and Cathalogna.

In the same Session of the States held at Tarragona, was made the perpetuall vnion of the Kingdomes of Arragon and of Valencia, as also the Principalitie of Cathalogna; without any power of dis vniting, or seperation in sunder vpon any subiect or occasion whatsoeuer should ensue.

Valencia won from the Moors and lost again.

This Kingdome of Valencia, tooke name of the chiefe or Capitall Citie, seated along on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea of Spaine. Her auncient Inhabitants were called Contestanes, seperated by the Mount of Orospeda, from the Bastetanes, dwellers in Murcia. Valencia was conquered from the Moores, by that great Spanish Captaine called Le Cid Ruys Diaz de Biuaro, against the Moore Aben Iaph. But wonne againe by the same Moores, after the death of the said Cid; and so held vntill the yeare One thousand two hundred thirtie and fiue.

Dom Iames (in Spanish Iagues) King of Arragon, first of the name, being resolued to vn-nestle them: aided himselfe by the deuision, which happened among the factions of Zeit, Aben-zeit, and of Aben-zaen, who strouе which of them should rule and command. Zeit made himselfe subiect to the King Dom Iames, embraced the Christian Faith and Religion, being named at the Font of Baptisme Dom Vincent de Bellas: and married with a Christian Lady of the Citie of Sarragossa, named Dominica Lopez. By fauour and friendship of this Dom Vincent; King Iames possessed himselfe of the most parts and places in the Kingdome of Valencia, and besiedged the principall Citie, being especially assisted by Bernard Count of Foix, Pedro Amalh, Archbishop of Narbona, and many French Gentlemen beside. By whose valiant carriage, it was surrendered to him against Aben-zaen, the eighteenth day of September, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand two hundred thirtie and eigh.

The Composition was, that Zaen should withdraw himselfe to Denia (Dianium in Latine) with his Iemmes and Iewels, and the Inhabitant Moores, being to the number of fiftie thousand men. In this manner was this great Citie left vnpeopled, and to fill the same againe, were sent thither many Colonies of naturall Cathalanes and Arragonians, to whom was quartered the emptied Citie, and the Fields round about ut were distributed, by direction from the Foure Commanders, deputed and apnted for the businesse of Dom Iames of Arragon, as namely Dom Berengarius Pabla, Bishop of Barcellona; Dom Vidalio Canelis, Bishop of Huesca; Dom Pedro Hernder d'Apagra, and Dom Simon d'Vrrea, Knights of Arragon, Three Hundred and urescore heades of Families peopled this Citty and conquested Lands, deriued from Nobility of Arragon and of Cathalogna, and of the olde Souldiours in their seuerall ndes, that were imployed at this Siedge, and other enterprises against the Moors: to om power was giuen and priueledge, to be (afterward in times to come) gouerned judged, according to the Lawes, Rights, Stile and Forme of Arragon. To whom re restrained the Christian Families, which were found in the said Citty, who notstanding the Moores, kept and vsed the Christian Catholique Religion, in the urch of Saint Sepulcher, called at this present, of the blessed Saint and Apostle nt Bartholmewe.

THe Historians of Spayne doe all write with one consent, that the Kingdome of France is, and hath beene (from all times) the fruitfull Orchard, or liuely Nursery of Princes, renowned for valiancie thorow out all Regions and Prouinces of the World, And that at one and the same time, hath beene noated to issue from the Royall House of France, Foure Princes, which gaue source and Originall to as many Kingdomes, or became Masters of them. En vn mismo tiempo salieron quatro Caualleros de su Reyno, que occuparoy quatro Coronas de mayores de la Christiandad.

William duke of Normandie.

William, of the house of Normandie was the First, who hauing vanquished (in foughten Battaile) Harold, King of England: was Crowned King thereof in the City of London, the yeare of Grace One thousand, threescore and seauen.

Raymond of Bourgongne.

Raymond of the House of Bourgongne was the Second, who went into Castille to fight against the Moores, perfourming there such admirable actions of Armes: that he espoused Dogna Vrraca, the Infanta of Castille, and legitimate Daughter to King Alphonso, Sixt of the name, Conquerour of Tolledo: By whom he had a Sonne, Emperour of the Spaynes, Dom Alphonso Raymond, Seauenth of the name, King of Leon and Castille. This passage of Raymond of Bourgongne, is by the Spanish writers themselues said to be in the yeare of Grace, One thousand fourescore and eight.

Henry of the House of Bezanson.

In the third place is Henry, of the House of Bezanson, who in the same yeare One thousand fourescore and eight, tooke to Wife Dogna Theresa, naturall Daughter to the same King Dom Alphonso the Sixt, and Dogna Ximena Nugnez de Guzman; by whom he had in marriage the Kingdome of Portugall.

Godfrey of Bullen.

Godfreye, of the House of Bouillon and Lorrain was the last: who hauing conquered the Kingdome and Holy Citty of Ierusalem, in the yeare of Grace One thousand fourescore and nineteene, he was there Crowned the First King.

And heere I must confesse, that the Spanish Historians haue bin negligent enough in seeking after the Genealogie of this Henry (whom they tearme of Bologne; First Count of Portugall, and whom also they make naturall and originally, of the Citty of Bezanson (without the County of Bourgongne) called in Latine Visontio, a word which Spanyards and Portugalles haue much mistaken, to be Bisantium, and from thence haue drawne the originall and descent of this Count Henry, euen from the Imperiall City of Constantinople, grosse errours helde by Vasselus and Garinay.

The Archdeacon of Verdune, in the Booke which he wrote of the Bishops of the said Church, setteth downe, that this Count Henry, Sirnamed of Lorraine, issued of the Royall House of France, who passed into Castille: was made Lord of Portugall, he being younger Brother to Thierry, Duke of Lorraine, and to Godfrey, Baron of Ionuille. He affirmeth withall, that these three Brethren were Sonnes to the Count of Bologne, Sonne to Eustace Counte of Bologne, of the Royall house of France; As also of Ida, Duchesse of Lorraine and Bouillon, issued and descended of the same Royall House of France; And that in this Marriage were borne Eustace, Godfrey and Baudwine, who was King of Ierusalem after Godfrey of Bouillon his Brother, who conquered the Holy Citty. This is the Archdeacons Gibberish in Iangling, concerning the Table Genealogie of the Illustrious Ducall House of Lorraine, whereof there can bee now no question vrdged: but onely that of Bologne, which is otherwise recorded in the Registers of the Courte of Parliament, where all the Pedegrees and Genealogies are to be seene, issued and descended of the Sacred Crowne of France.

Count Henry made Lord of Portugall by the Archdeacons misconstruction.

Bologne of France, and Saint Paul were erected and aduaunced into Counties, vnder Homage to the Crowne of France; in fauour of Adolphe of Flanders (youngest Sonne to Baldwine the Baulde, Second of the name, Count of Flanders, who had the said two Counties to his lott and partage: but being deceased without Issue, the said two Counties returned to his elder Brother Arnoull, Counte of Flanders. Arnoull, second of the name, Counte of Flanders, hauing committed a fellonious offence against Lothaire, King of France: these two Counties were falne into his hand, who inuested therein two Sonnes of William, Counte of Ponthieu, Arnoull or Arnoulle the Eldest Sonne, had the County Bolongne in Fiefe, and the youngest had Saint Paule in Arriere Fiefe, vnder Homage and Authority of the Crowne of France: as we haue already shewne in the discourse of the Golden Fleece.

Bologne and Saint Paul made Counties.

The two Counties fell to the King.

The Genealogie of the Countes of Bologne, according to the Records.

I. Arnoull, Count of Bologne, had one onely Daughter named Mahauld (in Latine Mathildis) Counteesse of Bologne, Wife to Adolphe, First of the name, Count of Guines, Comes Guinarum. Of this Marriage came

II. Raoull, Counte of Bologne, and of Guines, who had to Wife Rosella, Daughter to the Counte of Saint Paul, by whom he had two Sonnes:

Eustace, First of the name, Count of Bologne And Geoffery, Bishop of Paris, High Chauncellour of France.

III. Eustace, First of the name, Count of Bologne, tooke to Wife Ida, Sister to Godfrey, or Gozelon, Duke of Lorraine, Sirnamed the Crump-shouldred. And in this Mariage three Sons were borne.

IIII. Godfrey of Bologne, Lord of Bouillon, who was the First King of Ierusalem, and Counte of Bologne;

V. Baldwine, King of Ierusalem after his Brother, and Count of Bologne; And

VI. Eustace, Second of the name, who was Count of Bologne, and who had but one only Daughter, named

VII. Cohalda, Counteesse of Bologne, Wife to Stephen, Counte of Bologne, King (during his life) of England, as we haue before reported to you, in the discourse of the Blewe Garter. In this Mariage were borne two Sonnes and a Daughter.

The Sonnes were

Eustace, Third of the name, Count of Bologne And

William of Bologne: But both these Brethren died without any issue, and the Daughter their Sister

VIII. Mary was a Religious Nunne, and an Abbesse in England.

Such was the Genealogie of the First House of the Countes of Bologne. Wherein the Archdeacon of Verdune, could not meete with Count Henry, the first hereditarie Counte of Portugall, who cannot be found to bee issued of the House of Bologne, and who (according to Iohn le Feron, in his Catalogue of the Chauncellours of France)

Portoit d'Azur a Cinque Bastons d'Or, au Chef de Gueules, charge de Trois Coquilles d'Argent. And the house of Lorraine (before Godfrey of Bologne, first Latine King of the Holy City of Ierusalem, according to the same Feron in his Constables) Portoit d'Argent au Cerf de Gueules, somme d'Or sans nombre. Contrarie to the opinion of the Archdeacon of Verdune (formerly alleadged and very subiect to caution) who giues vnto for Armes to this Illustarious house, D'Argent a la Croix de Gueules ancrée d'Escarboncle d'Or Pommete et Fleuronne de huict pieces. Setting aside then the Genealogie of this Counte Henry of Portugall, the Histories of Spayne doe tell vs; that in the former dated yeare, One thousand fourescore and eight.

Went into Spayne many Frenche Knights and Gentlemen, to maintaine the cause of the King Dom Alphonso, Sixt of the name; Among whom were Raymond, of the House of Bourgongne; Henry of Lembourg, a Flemming; and Raymond, Counte of Tolosa (who are written by some to bee Cousines and neere Kinsmen) to make head against the Miramomelin Haly Abenacha, the chiefe of the Musulmans of Affrica and Spayne. And to acknowledge truely the vertues of these three French Princes, according to the degree of their valour and merit; they were all maried to three Sisters giuing the legitimate Daughter Vrraca to Prince Raymond of Bourgongne, Sirnamed of Bezanson, who was made Counte Hereditarie of Galicia: To Counte Henry of Lembourg, the Bastard Daughter Theresa, with the Lands of Portugall conquered from the Moores, and those which his Sonne in Lawe and hee could conquer afterward, in title of an hereditary County to him and his descendants: And to Count Raymond of Tolosa, the other naturall Daughter Elvira: Which mariages are recorded vnder the yeare of Grace, One Thousand, fourescore and foureteene.

The three French Princes married to three Sisters.

With Prince Henry, First Lord of Portugall, passed into this Prouince of newe Conquest (the Frontiers and Limitrophing Lands of the Mariscoes) and them comprehended within the enclosure and bournes of the Riuers of Duero and du Mino, Porta, Braga, and of Guymaraines) many Gentlemen both French and Flemmishe. En este mismo tiempo passaron a Castilla con estos dos Principes Dom Remon, et Dom Henrique muchos Caualleros Franceses de los Reynos de Francia, y Estates a ellos suietos. Among them of highest worth and valiancie, were Robert de la Corne, and William his Brother, Alcaydes and Lords of Atognia, Authours of a Noble Familie, bearing the same Sirname: and Rolin Gonsales, Alcayde and Lord d'Azambuya, Chiefe of the House of the same Sirname; and these of the Sirname, and Seigneuries of Almada d'Arruda, de Castagrera, de Lourinhano, de Ville Franche, and de Ville-Verde, all great Houses in Portugall (descended from the Conquerours of the City of Lisbona, Chiefe in the Kingdome of Portugall.

Of this Marrige, of Prince Henry, Counte of Portugall, and Dogna Theresa, issued a Sonne, and two Daughters.

The Sonne was

Alphonso Henriquez, First King of Portugall.

The Daughters were

Theresa Henriquez; And

Aldonsa Henriquez.

By the death of Henry of Lembourg, first Count of Portugall, happening in the yeare of Grace, One thousand, one hundred and twelue; his only Sonne

I. Alphonso Henriquez tooke the title of King of Portugall, in the yeare of Grace, One Thousand one hundred thirtie and nine: And his Reigne (with the yeares when hee was Count) are reckoned to be Threescore and Twelue yeares. Hee had to wife Malfada Henriquez de Lara, Daughter to the Counte Manriquez de Lara, Lord of Molina, a great Commaunder in Castille, by whom hee had a Sonne and three Daughters.

The Sonne was

Sancio, afterward King.

The Daughters were

Vrraca, Queene of Castille.

Theresa, Counte of Flanders; And Malfada.

By a Concubine he had a Bastard Son.

Pedro Alphonso.

II. Sancio, First of the name, by the death of his Father, happening in the yeare, One thousand one hundred fourescore and foure; was the Second King of Portugall, who by his wife Aldonca, or Dolcina, Daughter to Raymond Berengarius, Counte of Barcellona, had foure Sons and fiue Daughters.

The Sonnes were

Alphonso, afterward King.

Ferdinand

Ferdinand (whom we call Ferrand) of Portugall, Count of Flanders by his Wife, prisoner to King Phillip Augustus.

Pedro, Counte of Vrgell in Arragon; And

Henry:

The Daughters were

Theresa, Wife to the King of Leon Dom Alphonso.

By a Moore his Concubine, he had a naturall Sonne

Alphonso Martinez.

IV. Sancio, Second of the name, Sirnamed Capello, succeeded in the Kingdom of Portugall, by the death of his Father, happening in the yeare, One thousand two hundred, twenty and three. He had no issue by Mencia Lopez his Wife: And for his inexperience of Gouerning the State, they made Regent his Brother

V. Alphonso, Third of the name, who was King by the death of his Brother, happening in the yeare of Grace, 1257. and reigned two and twenty yeares. By Mahauld, Countesse of Bologne his Wife, he had two Sonne,

Ferdinand; And

Alphonso.

He repudiated his lawfull Wife without any cause, to espouse the Bastard Daughter of Alphonso the Astrologer, and of Maria de Guzman Beatrix, by whom he had Denys or Dionysius, after King.

Alphonso.

Blanche, a Religious Nunne; And Constance.

By two Concubines, he had

Leonora; And

Ferdinand Alphonso.

This diuorce and repudiation, done without cause, was the meanes of blemishing wholly Portugall, by the notorious nesse of the fact, yea, euen extending to Children borne in loyall and lawfull mariage. And from thence proceeded the pretention, which the late Queene Mother Katharine de Medicis (issued of the House of Bologne) made to the Crowne of Portugall, after the death of the last King of Portugall, Dom Sebastian.

VI. Dionisius, or Denys, First of the name, was the Sixt King of Portugall, by the death of his Father Alphonso, in the yeare, One thousand two hundred threescore and nineteene, and his Reigne continued Sixe and Fortie yeares. XVIII. Phillip, second of the name, King of all the Prouinces, Father to

XIX. Phillip the third, reigning at this present.

Concerning the first King of Portugall, Alphonso Henriques.

IN the description of the surprizall and Conquest of the potent Citie of Cordoua and Baesa, from the Moores of Andalouzia, in the yeare of Grace One thousand one hundred fortie and seauen; it is said that Alphonso, King of Leon, Castile and Toledo, Sirnamed the Emperour, was assisted by the forces of Nauarre, conducted by their King Garcia Ramirez, who was there in person, and that Armie on the Sea, by the Prince of Arragon, Dom Raymond Berengarius, Count of Barcellona, absent.

Two reasons for not naming Alphonso Henriquez.

There is not a word spoken of the succour, nor forces of the first King of Portugall Alphonso Henriquez, and that for two reasons. The first, because hee was in distaste with the said Alphonso, King of Castile, in regard he had declared himselfe to be King of Portugall (which relied on homage to the Kingdome of Leon) without his consent, he being a Subiect and Liedge-man to him. The other, in regard that this new King was then impeached at the Moores Warres of Estremadura, which he led on with such violence: that he tooke from them the Citie of Saint Iren, on the day of Saint Michael, in the yeare One thousand one hundred fortie seauen. And afterward, the Castle of Mafra (where he made Gouernour Ferdinand de Monteiro, who was the first Maister of the Order of Euora, tearmed D'Auis, vnder the Rule of Saint Benedict) with that of Cintra, and the puissant Citie of Lisbona (after a Siedge of fiue Moneths) valiantly taken, the fiue and twentieth day of October, in the said yeare One thousand one hundred fortie seauen, as before we haue spoken.

And without giuing the Moores any leasure to take knowledge of him, he conquered & wan from them Atanquer, Obidos, Torresuedras and other places, by the surprizall whereof, he vn-nestled the Moores of Estremadura, whom he pursued beyond Tayo (one of the most renowned Riuers of Spain, called by the Latines Tagus, where he became Maister of Alcazar de Sal, of the Cities of Euora, and d'Yelues, de Mora, Serpa and de Veia, where the Moores were all put to the edge of the Sword. From Coimbre, the Seate and Royall abiding of the Kings of Portugall, was transferred by this King, vnto the Citie of Lisbona, the very goodliest, and best stored with Merchants, in all the Prouinces of Spaine.

* Which deuideth Castile from Portugal, where gold is found like Gold.

The Crosse and Armes of the Order, called D'Auis; Instituted also in the Kingdome of Portugall vnder the Reigne of the first King of Portugall, Alphonso Henriquez; And in the yeare of Grace, One thousand one hundred forty seauen.

CHAP. XVIII.

Croix & Armes de l'Ordre d'Auis.

During the Reigne of the first King of Portugall, Alphonso Henriquez, was Instituted the Militarie Order, called D'Auis, and vnder the Rule of Saint Benedict, Father of Religion throughout the West, as Saint Bazile was in the East: Basilius in Oriente, Benedictus in Occidente. For like as all the Knights of the East, deriued and squared all their Orders, by the Monasticall rule of that great Doctor Saint Bazile: euen so did the Monkes of the West, draw their Originall from that of Saint Benedict, reputed (by that bright Beacon in the Holy Church Saint Augustine) to be Authour of all the Orders of Chanons Reguler in Christendome, yea, and Secular also, as is to be seene in the Church of Paris, and in most part of Cathedrall Churches of France.

Orders of the East & West, and their Fundators.

Alphonso Henriques, first King of Portugall, hauing conquered from the Moores the Citie of Euora, in the yeare before obserued, One thousand one hundred fortie seauen; confessed and acknowledged, to hold it of God, and of the Virgin Mary. And to maintaine it against the Moores, he placed there a Garison or number of braue spirited Knights: who offred to yeelde him a due account of their Seruices, and to defend the Citie against the Moores. The Knights of this Assembly, made themselues knowne vnder the name Of Fellow Brethren of Saint Mary of Euora, giuing themselues the name of Bretheren, and the place of their abiding was tearmed a Fra- ternitie, or Brotherhood, which was their first dwelling, and without the said Citie of Euora, where yet is to be seene the ruines, prints and steps of their old Castell, flancked with goodly Towers, and engirt with strong Wals. Their principall Church and Chappell, was dedicated to the Prince of Intelligences, the Archangell Saint Michael.

Now, concerning the three first Great Maisters of this Order of Bretheren of Euora, they were these.

The three first Great Maisters of the Order.

I. Ferdinand de Montereiro, to whom the King gaue (as we haue already said) the Gouernment of the Castell of Mafra.

II. Gonsales de Viegas: And

III. Fernand de Yannes, to whom the same King of Portugall Alphonso Henriquez, gaue the strong Castle D'Auis, by him conquered from the Moores, on the frontiers and confines of his new Kingdome: And thereby the Knights of this Order were named The Bretheren D'Auis, who went thither from Euora, which was their first Mannor and dwelling. And of this Castle D'Auis, they conserued the memory in their Shield of Armes, which they tooke thus.

The Orders, Escutcheon of Armes.

Thus you see what is said by Damiano à Goes, a Portugall Knight, in his History of Portugall; Radez de Andrada, in his History of the Knights of Calatraua; and the Count of Lansarote, in his Nobility of Andolouzia.

This Military Order of Portugall was confirmed by Pope Innocent, third of the name, in the fourth yeare of his Pontificalitie, and of Grace, One thousand two hundred and foure, then reigning in Portugall, Sancio, first of the name, Sonne and Successour to Alphonso Henriques. This King Sancio gaue to the said Order D'Auis, these places and Seigneuries of Alcantade,

Alpedrino, and others in the Kingdome of the Algarues, in recompence of the Knights seruice of this new rising Order, who had performed little lesse then wonders at the surprizall of Sylues, the principall Citie of the Algarues, which hee had conquered from the Moores, by aide and succour of some number of English and French Ships, wherein were many Knights of France (at their passage ouer the Seas, with the Kings of France and England, Phillip Augustus, and Richard) who being beaten with a storme, and sundered from the Fleete by tempestuous windes, in the straite of Gibraltar; by a better fauouring gale, saued themselues in the Roade and Hauen of Lisbona.

The taking in of Sylues in the Algarues.

In following time, and in the yeare One thousand two hundred and thirteene, the Order of Calatraua, and the seauenth Great Maister therof Dom Roderigo Garcez de Asa, gaue to the Great Maister and Bretheren Knights D'Auis, that which they had and possessed in the Kingdome of Portugall. In acknowledgement whereof, the Knights and Great Maister of the said Order D'Auis, submitted themselues to the Order of Calatraua, being wholly subiected to their Rule, Statutes, visiting and Coertion, according to them of Alcantara, who did thelike. Neuertheless this chanced to be altered, by reason of the Warres, moued betweene the Kings of Portugall and Castile, and in the time of Iohn of Portugall, seauenth Great Maister D'Auis) natural Sonne to the King of Portugall Pedro, onely of that name, and who possessed himselfe of the Kingdome against his lawfull brethren) when the Order D'Auis would no longer acknowledge that of Calatraua.

The Knights D'Auis submit to the Order of Calatraua.

A

A briefe Noate concerning the Order of Christus and of Portugall.

At whatime the Order of Christus was inſtituted.

NOw, as concerning the Order of Chriſtus, or of Portugall: It was Inſtituted by the ſixt King of Portugall Dom Denys or Dionyſius, in the yeare One thouſand three hundred and eighteene. And willed, that the Knights of this Order ſhould goe cloathed in Blacke, and weare vpon their Breaſt a Croſſe pattee of Red Silke, and another full White Croſſe ouer the Red, ſo that they appeared as two Croſſes together. And the Shield of Armes belonging to this Religion, was D'Argent à croſſe double Croix.

The confirmation of the Order.

This Order was confirmed in the yeare One thouſand three hundred and twentie, by Pope Iohn the two and twentieth, who preſcribed and gaue them the Rule of Saint Benedict. Pope Alexander the ſixt gaue them permiſſion to marrie, as well as other Militarie Orders of Spaine. The firſt great Maiſter of Chriſtus, was Dom Gil Martinez, who before had bin of the Order D'Auis; and their firſt Conuent was at Caſtro-marin, but afterward tranſlated into the Citie of Tomar; more neerely neighbouring on the Moores of Andaluzia, and of the Eſtremadura.

The Commanderies belonging to the Order.

This Order had Commanderies, not onely in Portugall and the Algarues, but in Affrica and the Indies, and eſpecially in Braſile; which made the Maiſterſhip thereof ſeeme ſo wealthie, that it amounted to the yearely Rent of an hundred thouſand Ducates. And this was the reaſon, why it was annexed inſeperably (as well as that D'Auis) to the Crowne of Portugall; the Kings whereof hauing taken the title of perpetuall Adminiſtratours of the Orders D'Auis and of Chriſtus.

The Croſſe, Collar and Armes of the Order.

The Croſſe and Collar of this Order, is to be ſeene in the Quire of the Gray Friers at Paris, on the Chaires at the left ſide, and wreathed about the Armes of ſome Portugall Lords, refuged in France, with the King Dom Anthonio their Maiſter, who dyed at Paris, and whoſe Hart is, at the Aue Marie, but his Body remaining in the ſaid Gray Friers at Paris (as yet vnburied) in the Chappell de Gondye: where vnder the Seate Canopie; may be ſeene the Armes of Portugall, the Croſſe and Order of Chriſtus, and an earthly Spheare, which ſerued as a Deuiſe to the laſt Kings of Portugall.

The reaſon of adding the Spheare to the Armes of Portugall.

Concerning this Deuiſe of the Spheare, it was taken by Emanuel, the foureteenth King of Portugall, by aduiſe and perſwaſion of Iohn, King of Portugall, firſt of the name. Who counceiled him ſo to doe when he was a yong man, to adde a deuiſe to his Armes, and carrie a Spheare, wherein might be portraied the Celeſtiall Circles: as ſeeming to foretell thereby, that vnder this Emanuel (who he thought ſhould be his Succeſſor in the Kingdome) the Portugals would diſcouer to their great gaine and perpetuall renowne) a new Heauen, and Countries as farre remoated from vs, as the Indiaes Eaſt and Weſt. As indeede it came ſo to paſſe, vnder conduct of that great Portuguize Captaine Vaſco de Gama, who embarqued himſelfe at the Port of Lisbone the ninth day of Iuly, in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand foure hundred and ſeauenteene, doubling the Cape of Bona Speranza in Athiopia, becauſe from thence the Ships ſailed into Arabia, and to the Indiaes, as alſo into many other parts of the world, from whence they brought infinite Merchandiſes to the ſaid Port.

Father de Gama the famous Portuguize diſcouerer.

Calicut the richeſt Port of the Indies.

Moreouer in thoſe coaſts was the Prouince of Zophala, richly abounding in Mines of Gold, from Mozambiqa Gama ſailed into the Ile of Mombaza; and from thence to the rich Kingdome of Melinda; and the two and twentieth day of May, foureſcore and eighteene, Gama tooke landing at Calicut, the very richeſt Port of the Indies for Spiceries. Such was the firſt diſcouery of the Eaſtern Indiaes, which did ſo highly enrich the Kingdome of Portugall: whether Vaſco de Gama returned well and ſafe, to the Por:

port of Lisbone, about the beginning of the Moneth of Iune, One thouſand foure hundred foureſcore and nineteene.

The Armes of Portugall altered & changed.

Now, as concerning the Armes of Portugall, they haue bin diuers, by the ſaying and teſtimony of the Spanyards; who haue let ſlip (vnder ſilence) thoſe borne by Henry of Bezanſin or of Lorrain, firſt Hereditary Count of Portugall. For, if he was of the Houſe of Lorraine, the auncient Armes of the Kingdome of Auſtraſia, were wholly like to them of the Houſe of Auſtria, which are De Gueulles à vne Feſſe d'Argent; as Guydo Cocquillus obſerueth in his Hiſtorie of Neuers, the two hundred and one and thirty Page.

The Armes of Henry de Bezanſon

If he was of the Houſe of the Counts of Bourgongne (as there is more apparance that he was, rather then otherwiſe) he had caried of the County, which is D'Azur à Lyon rempant d'Or, Lampaſſé & Armé de Gueulles, ſeme de Billettes d'Or.

And yet notwithſtand, very true it is, that the ſaid Henry of Bourgongne did beare either the one or other, but rather to make knowne to the Spanyards, that he was deſcended of the Houſe of France: he did the very ſame, as his Couſine Raymond of Bourgongne did, who vpon the ſame ſubiect, neither bare of Bourgongne the Duchie or Countie; but of France ſans nombre, as we haue before declared more at large: By his example, Henry de Bezanſon Porta d'Or à Trois Feſſes d'Azur ſemees de France ſans nombre, à la Bordure de Gueulles. Armes long time retained by the Kings of Portugall, after the death of the ſaid Henry of Bezanſon. For the ſame Hiſtorian Guydo Cocquillus, in the two hundred ninetie and eight Page of his Hiſtorie writeth; that he had ſeene in the Chamber of Accounts at Neuers, a Charter of the yeare one thouſand two hundred ſortie and two of Mathilda, Counteſſe of Bologne, wife to Alphonſe, Sonne to King Alphonſo of Portugall, ſecond of the name. On the Great Seale whereof are the Armes of the ſaid Alphonſo of Portugall: A faces ſemees de fleurs de Lys (he forgot the Field of the Eſcutcheon) Le Centre Seal (which is the priuie Signet) party de Fleurs de Lys ſans nombre, & de faces à vn bord rond. The words ingraued about it, are theſe. Mathildis Comitiſſa, Bononie, Moretanie (that is Morayne) Clarmontis (that is Clairmont in Auuergne.) Thus ſpeaketh Cocquillus, by intelligence whereof is to be noated, that whatſoeuer was ſpoken before, concerning the Armes of Henry of Bezanſon, Count of Portugall; Cocquillus forgot to emblazon. Or elſe it was the Printers fault, who ordinarily paſſeth too ſlightly ouer moſt important words of the Hiſtorie. As in the Impreſſion of this Worke, which would require a very great Errata, onely thorow their negligence that were imployed therein.

Mathildathe Counteſſe of Bolgne.

The Authours excuſe vpon the words of his French Impreſſion.

This Alphonſo, Husband to the Counteſſe of Bologne Mathilda, was the ſame man, whom we haue obſerued, to be made Regent for the firſt King of Portugall, third of that name, in the yeare One thouſand two hundred fiftie and ſeauen. Who had by his lawfull Wife the ſaid Mathilda Counteſſe of Bologne, by whom he had the children formerly mentioned, and who (to maintaine himſelfe in his vſurpation) left her, without any cauſe, and eſpouſed Beatrix, naturall Daughter to the King of Caſtile, Alphonſo the Aſtrologer.

The Regent of Portugall, that afterward became the vſurper.

The priuie Sealed Charter a more exact aſſurance.

Which is much more iuſtified by the priuie Sealed Charter, formerly ſpoken of, affirming, that at the ſame time, the Houſe of Bologne Portoit de France ſans nombre, in regard of Monſieur Phillip of France, Legitimate Sonne to King Phillip Auguſtus, called the Conqueroer (for thoſe reaſons heretofore alleadged:) for the ſaid Monſieur Phillip of France married Mahauld of Bologne, Counteſſe of Bologne, and of Dom-Martin, or Damp-Martin, which is but all one (Daughter to Iean, Counteſſe of Bologne, and to Renaud, Count de Damp-Martin) and of this marriage was borne their onely Daughter, Iane of Bologne, Wife to Gaucher de Chaſtillon.

Armes giuen by King Phillip Auguſtus to his Sonne.

Marriage thus made betweene Monſieur Phillip of France, and the ſaid Mahauld Counteſſe of Bologne: King Phillip Auguſtus his Father, gaue him L'Eſcu de France, ſans nombre, au Lambeau de Gueulles. And for Appanage or portion, the Countie of Clermont in Auuergne: Du Tillet writeth, that it was the Countie of Beauuais.

The ſecond marriage of Mahauld or Mathilda.

In ſecond Marriage the ſaid Counteſſe of Bologne. Mahauld, by command of the King

King Saint Loues, and of Queene Blanch of Castile her Mother, espoused vnto [illegible] Alphonso of Portugall, whereon ensued the Children before remembred: but the said Prince of Portugall vsed his wife vnkindely, as wee haue already told you. Returne we now to the Armes of Portugall, according to the Spanyards owne relation, who say, that

The first King of the said Kingdome Dom Alphonso Henriquez, hauing vanquished fiue Kings of the Moores in a fought Battaile, and wonne away their Banners from them, in that famous encounter made at Ourique, and in the yeare One thousand one hundred thirtie and nine: He tooke for Armes L'Escu d'Argent charge de Cinq Escussons d'Azur mis en Croix, & rangez en Saultour. Which deuise the King tooke in honour of the fiue wounds of our Sauiour and Redeemer Iesus Christ (and which he beheld in Heauen on the day of Battaile at Ourique) and with a ioyfull heart, for so happy and glorious a victory.

Diuersitie of opinions concerning his Armes, and the reason of taking them.

Others doe write, that he gaue himselfe those Armes, in memory of the Thirtie Pence, which the Iewes gaue to the Traitour Iudas, for the sale and deliuery of his Lord and Maister, our Sauior and Redeemer Iesus Christ, that they might spend their rage and furie, vpon the onely Lambe of innocence. For the fiue Escutcheons, charged with fiue and twentie Pence, ordered in forme of a Crosse; represented the Bed of bitternesse and sorrow, whereon our Lord Iesus Christ endured Martyrdome, to redeeme vs by his Bloud (of ineffable merit) from eternall death, and the throne of Hell.

An addition to the Armes by Alphonso the third.

Some others doe hold, that in the same Battaile before remembred, King Alphonso won sixe Penons and Banners, belonging to as many Princes of the Moores. In memorie whereof, Il y prit l'Escu d'Argent, charge de Cinq Quines d'Azur, which being ioyned altogether, make vp the Senarie number. And that Alphonso, third of the name, fift King of Portugall, of whom wee haue formerly spoken, added to those Armes L'Orle de Gueulles, chargee de Sept Chasteaux d'Or, in fauour of the Royall House of Castile; from whence he tooke to wife Dogna Beatrix, naturall Daughter to the King of Castile Alphonso the Wise, and to Dogna Maiore Guillen de Guzman: By which Marriage the Kingdome d'Algarue came to the Crowne of Portugall.

CHAP. I.

L'Ordre de Dragon Renuersé.

We haue in some of our former Discourses, obserued the particularities of the Generall Councell of Constans, held in the yeare of Grace, One Thousand, Foure Hundred, and Fifteene, against the erroneous and depraued Doctrine of diuers, amongst whom were reckoned John Husse, and Hierome of Prague, said to be reuiuers of the Albigeois Religion, reputed Heresie in those times, condemned by the precedent Councells.

And in that of Constans, the [illegible] deemed Prophets, Iohn [illegible]sse, and Hierome of Prague [illegible]re burned: because they [illegible]ould not abiure the Religion [illegible]Wicklisse, wherewith those [illegible]o Preachers had instructed [illegible]e Kingdomes of Hungaria & [illegible]hemia, with other Seigneu[illegible]s of Germanie, appertaining [illegible] the Emperour Sigismond, [illegible]ho laboured with his vtmost [illegible]deauour to plant peace in the [illegible]urch, making no spare of [illegible]s toyle and trauaile, into En[illegible]and, France and Spaine, for [illegible]uration of those Princes, to [illegible]rrespond and ioyne with [illegible]m in so holy an enterprise: [illegible]hich hee brought to passe by [illegible]eanes of the Councell of [illegible]stans; determined in the [illegible]eare Foure Hundred and [illegible]ghteene. For ioy whereof, [illegible]e established the Order of [illegible]e Dragon ouerturned, fa[illegible]ously renowned (for long [illegible]me) throughout all Germany, [illegible]and in Italy: in regard that [illegible]e Emperours, who were Suc[illegible]ssors to the said Sigismond, [illegible]onoured the Princes and Vs[illegible]rs of the Empire with this Order.

The care of the Emperour Sigismond for the good of the Church.

The Institution of the Order.

The

The Crosse and Habite of the Knights.

The Knights whereof did dayly weare a Crosse Flower-deluced with Greene, in their ordinary noate or Emblemes; but on Sollemne and Festiuall dayes, they vsed to weare a Scarlet Cloake, and on the Mantlet of Greene Silke, a Tortis of double Chaine of Gold, at the ende whereof hung a Dragon ouerthrowne, her wings seeming broken, enamelled with diuers coulours, according as the Diuell and his Arch-Ministers and Darlings, doe vary and disguise their cunning practises, thereby to deceiue and seduce poore ignorant people.

The Emperours Deſcent.

This Emperour Sigismond, King of Bohemia and Hungaria, was of the Illustrious House of Luxembourg, Sonne to the Emperour Charles, Fourth of the name, nourished and educated in the Court of the King of France Philip de Valois, Sixt and last of the name, whose Coutt was most magnificently maintained, beyond all the Princes of Christendome.

Antiquities are alwayes subiect to alterations.

But the most part of those Ancient Seigneuries, are changed at this present, and the goods or benefits belonging to them, are past into the greatest Houses, erected now into Dukedomes, and other Titles of Honour, according as times alter and change all things, and the willes of the Emperours, who exalted and mounted to d grees of honour and excellencie, such as themselues pleased, and deiected others.

Because there is nothing more certaine and constant in this mutable world; then vncertainty and inconstancie it selfe.

Institution of the Princes by some opinions.

Now, as concerning the number of the Princes Electours, as now at this present it is, and consisting of Seauen; some haue referred their Institution to Pope Gregory, the Fifth of that name, a Saxon by nation, at such time as hee Crowned for Emperour Otho the Third. To whom (say they) hee gaue the Empire of Germany, with charge and condition, that the Emperours his Successors, should bee elected of the Germaine Nation: And Whosoeuer hee was that should bee elected by those Electors, must beare Title of Elect Emperour, and King of the Romaines; vntill hee should be Crowned by the Pope, after which Coronation, hee should then be stiled Augustus, and Emperour of the Romaines.

But this opinion can haue no subsistence. To small purpose would the Popes intrude themselues, to transferre the Empire of the West, won by the French, and with the deare expence of their blood.

A common error in some great men of these times.

But Princes are oftentimes forgetfull of great Seruices, which they cannot recompence to the very least step of merit; rather growing crosse and vnkinde to them, to whom (indeed) they stand most obliged.

Rome gouerned by Lieutenant to the Emperours.

And so hath it fared with the French, by whom the Popes are in possession of the Exarcate of Rauenna, and all that which else they enioy in Italy: For the pretended Donation or gift of Constantine, is but a meere Fable and Chimera. Rome hath alwaies bin ruled and gouerned by Lieutenants to the Emperours; witnesse Sigebert, speaking of the Emperours Constans the Second, and Constantine Ponogat. Charlemaigne established a Parliament at Rome, for the gouerning of Italy, and here vpon it was, that the Emperour Fredericke Barbarossa, at making his entrance into Rome, made a mockery of the Romaines behauiour, who in a vaine friuolous, and long premeditated Oration, would haue made him beleeue, that the Empire was giuen to the Germaines by the Popes. But hee shut vp their mouthes with these few words. Romanorum Imperium maiorum meorum Francorum sanguine emptum, eisdem quibus accepi manibus, tueri conabor.

The Emperours answere to the Romaines.

Those

Thoſe Authours which liued in the time of the ſaid Pope Gregory, haue left no thing written, concerning this Inſtitution of the Electours; no more did they which traced the life of the Emperour Otho.

The iudgement of Onuphrius about the Princes Electors.

Onuphrius the Great Antiquary, in his Chronicle, and in his Treatiſe of the Imperiall Aſſemblies, giueth vs to know, that Election of the Emperours by Seuen Electors, was the Inſtitution of Pope Gregory, who was Tenth of the name, about the yeare of Grace, One Thouſand, Two Hundred, Threeſcore and Twelue.

There is a great Interuall and length of time, betweene this Pope, and Gregory the Fift, who ſate in the Chaire of Saint Peter, in the yeare Nine Hundred, Foureſcore and Fifteene: whereas Gregory the Tenth began to ſit in the yeare One Thouſand, Two Hundred, Threeſcore and Eleauen. He iumpes well, that can mount one, almoſt Two Hundred and Foureſcore yeares at one leape.

In the Regiſters of the Parliament, is ſet downe the Alliance and confederacie, fought and made by the King of the Romanes Philip (elected Emperour) with Philip Auguſtus, King of France; againſt King Richard of England, elected alſo King of Germany, by the ill willers to the King of Germany. In which Confederacie, there is not one word ſpoken of the Electors, but onely of the Princes of the Empire.

Confœderatio Imperatoris & Domini Regis.

PHILIPPVS G. Romanorum Rex ſemper Auguſtus, Notum, &c. Quod propter dilectionem quam mutuo habuerunt erga Dominum Philippum Regem Francorum genitor noſter Fredericus & Henricus Frater noſter (piæ recordationis) Romanorum Imperatores, hanc Confœderationem propter bonum pacis, & publicam vtilitatem cum chariſſimo amico noſtro Philippo illuſtri Rege Francorum duximus ineundam, in hunc modum. Datum Wannaci Anno Dominicæ Incarnationis Milleſimo Centeſimo XC. Octauo, Regni Tertio Kalendas Iulij, noſtri prima. Per manum Conradi Imperialis Aulæ Protonotarij.

In the yeare One Thouſand, Two Hundred Fifty and Seauen, Richard of England, Earle of Cornewall, Brother to the King of England Henry, Third of the name, was elected King of Germany, after the death of William Count of Holland. At that time then, the number of the Electours were not limited or reſtrained to Seauen. For heere you may read the Text of Mathew Paris, who reporteth the Catalogue and number of the Princes of Germany, with their Order of Precedencie, who had right and Electiue Voyces.

The Princes of Germany that had their Voyces in caſe of Election.

HI ſunt maximi in Alemania, ad quorum nutum pendet electio ipſius regni, quod eſt quaſi area Imperij Romanorum: Archiepiſcopus Coloniæ, cuius titulus eſt ſacri Imperij Proto-Cancellarius poſt honorem Archipræſulatus: Archiepiſcopus Maguntinus, Archiepiſcopus Trenerenſis, Rex Bohemiæ, Comes Palatinus de Rheno, Dux Auſtriæ, Dux Suauiæ, Dux & Comes Bauariæ, Dux Poloniæ, Marchiſius de Miſne, Marquitius de Brandeberg, Dux Saxoniæ, Dux de Brunſuic, Dux de Carentene, Dux de Melai, Dux Brabantiæ, qui Dux Louaniæ, Landegrauius, Turingiæ, Marchio Mixiæ. Inter omnes hos Magnates ſuperminens eſt Archiepiſcopus Colonienſis, qui coronare tenetur Regem Alemanniæ apud Aquiſgranum, ab antiqua, & approbata conſuetudine.

The Inſtitution of the Popes Conclaue.

Now like as, or according to the ſame manner, as when Pope Gregory the Tenth in the Councell held at Lyons, vnder the Reigne of Philip the Hardy, Sonne and ſucceſſour to the good King Saint Lewes, in the yeares, One Thouſand, Two Hundred, Threeſcore and Twelue, and Thirteene) made the Decree, that whenſoeuer the death of a Pope happened, the Cardinalls ſhould be lockt vp, vntill they were all come to one agreement, and had giuen their nomination of another. Euen ſo, confuſion happening in Election of the Emperours, by plurality of them that had their electiue Voyces and Suffrages; the ſame Pope Gregory the Tenth ſent to pray, requeſt, and entreate the Princes of Germany, to finiſh the Interregnum which laſted in his time, to the great hurt and preiudice of Chriſtendome, and to prouide remedie for the like happening afterward.

Which accordingly they did, electing for Emperour Rodolph Count of Haſpourg. Whereby wee are to vnderſtand, that the Popes motion and requeſt had exceeded all reaſon, if the Seauen Electours had at that time beene inſtituted. But moſt true and certaine it is, that the reducing the Electors to the number of Seauen, is a moderne matter, attributed (according to Munſter and other Germaines) to the Emperour Charles of Luxembourg, King of Hungarie and Bohemia, Fourth of the name, who had beene nouriſhed the moſt part of his youngeſt yeares in the Court of France, vnder the King Philip le Bell, his Sonnes and Succeſſours.

The ordaining of the Seauen Electors a moderne matter.

Others write, that Pope Clement, Fourth of the name, a Narbonnois by Nation, and Predeceſſour to Pope Gregory the Tenth; was Author of thoſe Seauen Electors, and that his Inſtitution was confirmed by the Bull of the Emperour Charles the Fourth.

Another opinion concerning Pope Clement.

But this opinion is out of all apparance, and the dates of the times are thereto contrary and repugnant.

So that the moſt likely opinion, is of them that ranke it in the yeare, One Thouſand, Two Hundred, Threeſcore and Twelue: For John Carion, followed by Melanthon, in the Fourth Booke of their Chronicles, write, that before the Emperour Fredericke Barbaroſſa, Firſt of the name, who died in the yeare, One Thouſand, One Hundred, Foureſcore and Nine, in the City of Seleucia beyond the Seas; there was no ſpeech at all of the Electours.

No great certainty of the Seauen Electors Originall.

Otho of Auſtria, Biſhop of Friſinghen, Luitprandus, Schafnaburgenſis, and other ancient Hiſtorians of thoſe times haue left, neither found any thing written thereof. Sabellicus in the ninth Booke of his Æneids, Auentinus and others ſing the ſame Song.

When the Emperour keepeth open Court, and walketh in ceremoniall manner, the Archbiſhop of Treuers is placed before him; he of Mentz or Magunce is on the the Emperours right hand, and hee of Cologne on the left. The King of Bohemia holdeth ranke next to the Archbishop of Maguncе, hauing next to him the Count Palatine of the Rhine; and neereſt to him is the Duke of Saxony, and the Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg.

At riding or going in Proceſſions, &c.

In Proceſſions and generall Entrances into Cities or Townes, the Archbiſhop of Treuers rideth or goeth alone before the Emperour, who following next, rideth in the midſt of the Archbiſhop of Maguncе, that taketh place on his right hand, and he of Cologne on his left. Behinde them come the other foure Electors all a-front, they two of Bohemia and Saxonie in the midſt, and the other two goe on either ſide of them.

A Modell of the Perſian Empire.

Some haue written that this number Seauen of the Electors of the Empire, was deriued from the patterne and modell of the Court of the Perſian Kings; who had neereſt to them ſeauen Great Lords of the Kingdome, whereof the Great Sarona (that is to ſay, the High Prieſt) was the Chiefe, by Councell of which ſeauen Lords the whole Empire of Perſia was gouerned.

Heſt. 1. 1. 4.

And thoſe ſeauen Great Lords were called, by Title of Excellencie and Honour, Princes, as wee learne in the Hiſtory of Heſter, the firſt Chapter, by theſe wordes, Septem Duces Perſarum atque Medorum, qui videbant faciem Regis, & primi poſt eum reſidere ſoliti erant. The ſeauen Princes of Perſia and Media, which ſaw the Kings face, and which ſate the firſt in the Kingdome. And their names were Carſhena, Sherhar, Admatha, Tarſhis, Meres, Marſena and Memucan, a preſident of very ſingular example.

The names of the Seauen Princes.

Now heere you may behold the dignities of theſe Seauen Electours of the Empire, the three firſt whereof are Eccleſiaſticall perſons, and the other foure Secular.

The Dignities and Offices of the Seauen Princes Electors.

1. The Archbiſhop of Maguncе, Primate of the Germanies, prime Prince Elector, and Arch-Chancellour of Allemaigne or Germanie.
2. The Archbiſhop of Treuers Arch-Chancellour of Italy.
3. The Archbiſhop of Cologne, Arch-Chancellour of the Gaules.
4. The Duke of Saxony, Great or High Marſhall of the Empire, who beareth the Imperiall Sword, which Office and place we in France call the Conſtable.
5. The Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg, Great Chamberlaine of the Empire.
6. The Count Palatine of the Rhine, Lord High Steward of the Empire.
7. The Duke of Bohemia, Great Cup-Bearer or Taſter of the Empire.

Which dignities and Offices are figured and repreſented in theſe fiue rimiug Verſes following.

Concerning Hungary, and her ancient Inhabitant.

Hungaria (which heretofore was called Pannonia the Lower, and the ancient Inhabitants Peonians, afterwards Panonians) tooke that name of the Scythian Nation, (and were acknowledged by the ſame Title) who in the yeare of Grace Foure Hundred and One, leauing the ſourſe or Spring of Tana, in Latine called Tanais, went to poſſeſſe themſelues of the higher and lower Pannoniaes.

Cadaris, the firſt King of the Hungarians.

Their firſt King after this ſeizure made, was named Cadaris, after whom ſucceeded the cruell Attila, ouerthrowne in a Battaile fought on the Plaines, and in the fields of Sologne, betweene Orleans and Bourges, as wee haue formerly related to you in the Second Booke of theſe Antiquities.

His Reigne continued foure and forty yeares, after whoſe death his Sonnes and thoſe of Bleda, his Brother whom hee had cauſed to bee put to death) ſucceeded, euen to the time of our King Charlemaigne, who made himſelfe Lord and Maiſter of both the Pannoniaes, and made the Prince of Hungaria that then gouerned, his Tributary (as Æginard telleth vs) who was called Doxis. Charlemaigne ſowed there ſome ſeedes of the Chriſtian faith, receiued and embraced by ſome of the Inhabitants: but fully planted and grounded by the Sonne of Doxis.

II. Saint Stephen, the ſecond Chriſtian King of Hungarie, who there ordained Archbiſhops or Metropolitaine See, which happened in the yeare of Grace, nine hundred foureſcore and ſeauenteen. And from thence it proceeded, that the Kings of Hungaria haue retained to this preſent, the double Croſſe or Deuiſe. But they did take other Armes, to wit, Bureſle d'Argent, & de Gueulles de huict pieces. The foure veſſes of Siluer, doe repreſent the foure principall Riuers which water Hungarie, namely Danubie, Sauo, Neſſa, and Drava: which waſh and water all the Lands of Hungarie, making them fertile and rich in Mines. Saint Stephen tooke to wife Giſela, Siſter to the Emperour Saint Henry, & by her he had many Children; among whom was Saint Emerie. By reaſon of this death, Sarola his Siſter had a Sonne named

III. Peter, who inherited the Crown of Hungarie, but his Subiects pluckt out his eyes; for his tyrannicall and diſorderly life. And by his death, the Crowne came to the Sonnes of Michael, Brother to King Geyſa, they both being the Sonnes of Doxis. This Michael left three Sons, namely Camutus.

Ladiſlaus, that is Lancelot; And Vazulius.

Ladiſlaus was Father to three Children, to wit

D'Andreas, afterward King.
Leuenta: And
Bela, afterward King.

IIII. Andreas was the fourth Chriſtian King of Hungarie, in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand ſeauen hundred, who left three children, Salomon.

Adelarda: And Dauid.

After the death of Andreas, Salomon his eldeſt Sonne came to the Crowne: but it was vſurped againſt him by his Vncle

V. Bela, who held the Kingdome three years: And by his death his Nephew

VI. Salomon, enioyed the Crown of Hungarie, in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand threeſcore and three.

Bela, left three Sons, namely Lambert.

Geyſa, afterward King: And
S. Ladiſlaus, King likewiſe.

Salomon made an agreement with theſe two laſt named, to reigne during his life time: but thirteene yeares after, the Ball of diuiſion was thrown between theſe two Princes, which was the cauſe that

VII. Geyſa, ſecond of the name, & his Brother Ladiſlaus expelled Salomon out of the Kingdome, whereof they poſſeſſed themſelues, and the ſaid Geyſa was King three yeares onely, when by his death

VIII. Ladiſlaus, a man of ſanctified life, a great Iuſticer, & who liued chaſtely all his life time with Giſella his wife, Siſter to Zelomira, King of Dalmaſia, who had eſpouſed the Siſter of the ſaid King Ladiſlaus, to whom by his Teſtament (if he chanced to die without iſſue) Zelomira ſhould leaue Dalmaſia & Croatia, with eſpeciall charge and condition, that they ſhould remaine inſeperably vnited to the Crowne of Hungarie, as afterward it came to paſſe. In his time King Salomon forſooke the world, and became an Hermite in the woods of Iſtria, where he liued ſolitarily in all perfection and holineſſe of life. Ladiſlaus reigned nineteene yeares, and dyed bleſſedly (his dead body working many famous miracles) in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand foureſcore and fifteene. He left two Sonnes

Coloman; And
Almo, whom King Ladiſlaus had (by his Will and Teſtament) preferred to the Kingdome, although he was the yonger Brother, as well in regard of his milde and gentle manners; as becauſe Coloman the elder was miſshapen, one eyed and halting, being beſide of a very cruell and wicked diſpoſition. Neuertheleſſe, ſoone after his Fathers death;

IX. Coloman poſſeſſed himſelfe of the Kingdome, and made warre vpon his Brother, when he ſurprized by treaſon, with his Sonne Bela, cauſing both their eyes to be pluckt forth of their heads, and to be ſhut vp in a Monaſtery. He reigned One and twenty yeares, and died in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand one hundred and foureteene, leauing behinde him three Sons, to wit

Stephen.
Ladiſlaus, dying yong: And Nicholas, a naturall Sonne.

X. Stephen, ſecond of the name, by the death of his Father came to the Crowne of Hungarie, albeit he was but eight yeares old, and reigned eighteene. In regard he had not any Children, he adopted for his Sonne and Succeſſour in the Kingdome, his Couſine Bela, whoſe eyes his Father had cauſed to be puld out, and ſhut vp in a Monaſtery.

XI. Bela, ſecond of the name, reigned nine yeares, and dyed of a Dropſie, in the yeare of Grace One thouſand one hundred forty & one. He left foure Sons Ladiſlaus, King ſixe Months.

Geyſa, afterward King; And Almo.

XII. Geyſa, third of the name, ſucceeded in the Kingdome by the death of his Father. His Reigne laſted twenty yeares, and he had two Sons, as namely

Stephen, afterward King; And Bela, King alſo.

By the death of Geyſa (a Prince endued with moſt ſweete and affable nature) happening in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand one hundred threeſcore and one, his eldeſt Sonne

XIII. Stephen, third of the name, ſucceeded him, againſt whom his Vnckle Ladiſlaus ſought to vſurpe the Crowne, which he held the ſpace of ſix Moneths, and (by his death) his Brother Stephen likewiſe vſurped the Kingdome. But he was vanquiſhed in a fought Battaile by the ſaid Stephen; who dyed the ſame yeare as the Battaile was giuen, being the yeare of Grace One thouſand one hundred threeſcore and thirteene, leauing for Succeſſour in the Kingdome after him, his Brother

XIV. Bela, third of the name, the reigne of whom laſted but a ſhort time. He left two Sonnes,

Aymery; And
Andrew.

By the death of Bela, ranked among the number of the Saints, for his holines of life, ſucceeded him in the Kingdome his eldeſt Sonne.

XV. Aymery, whoſe reigne continued eight yeares, and he deceaſing in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand two hundred, left the Crowne to his Son

XVI. Ladiſlaus, ſecond of the name, who reigned but ſixe Moneths, leauing the Crowne to his Vnckle

XVII. Andrew or Andreu, ſecond of the name, who reigned foure & thirty yeares. He made one in the Croiſſade, and went in the voyage to the Holy Land, giuing the care and keeping of his wife Gertrude, to a Lord of the Countrie named Baucban, who had to his wife one of the very faireſt Ladies in Hungarie, that alwayes kept company with the Queene. This Queene had a Brother, who grew very earneſtly amorous of that beautifull Lady, and obtained his pleaſure of her, by the baſe brokage and cloſe contriuing of the Queene, who compaſſed the meanes, to cauſe her Brother lye with the Lady, vnder the name of her Husband Baucban, to whom his wife (much diſtaſted with ſo vile a deed) diſcloſed the ſecret. Hereupon he fell into ſuch a frenzie & iealouſie, that he had ſlaine the Queenes Brother, but onely he preuented it by flight; neuerleſſe, he gaue the Queene ſo many ſtabs with his Pony yard, as ſhe expected hourly the ending of her life.

The King being returned from his holy voyage, called before publique Iuſtice Baucban, whom he had left Gouernor of his Kingdome, to vnderſtand the reaſon, why he had committed this violence on the perſon of the Queen his wife. When he had heard the whole matter at large related to him; with his owne mouth he gaue the ſentence of abſolution to Baucban, & condemned the Queen to be burned aliue, which accordingly was executed; that both men and women might take example, for medling in ſuch wicked buſines. Andrew by his firſt wife Gertrude had three Sons and a Daughter.

Bela, afterward King.
Coloman. And
Andrew.
The Daughter was
Saint Elizabeth, wife to Lewes Landſgraue of Thuringe,

By another wife he had one Son
Stephen, Father of Andrew, who was afterward King.

This King Andrew, being a valiant Prince, and a great Iuſticer, died in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand two hundred thirty and fiue, leauing the Crowne to his eldeſt Sonne

XVIII. Bela, fourth of the name, who reigned forty yeares, and dyed in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand two hundred threeſcore and fifteene. He had two Sonnes:

Bela, dying in his Fathers life time. And

XIX. Stephen, King of Hungary, fourth of the name, whoſe reigne continued foure and twenty yeares. He was traiterouſly ſlaine by one of his Minnions or Fauourites, in the yeare of Grace One thouſand two hundred foureſcore and nineteene: He left a Son and a daughter.

XX. Ladiſlaus, King of Hungarie (third of the name) by the death of his Father.

The Daughter was
Mary, wife to Charles, King of Sicilie. And in this marriage were borne many Children, to wit

Charles, ſirnamed Martell, Father of { Charles, King. Clemencia. And Iane of Sicilie.

Which Andrew the third dyed without iſſue in the yeare of Grace One thouſand three hundred and one, but in his life time, Charles Martell of Sicilie layed claime to the Kingdome of Hungary, in the right of his Mother Queene Mary, and with him Charles his eldeſt Sonne, being ſupported by ſome Lords of the ſaid Kingdome of Hungarie.

After the death of the ſaid Andrew the third, the Hungares (being deuided among themſelues) elected for their King Wenceſlaus, who was of Bohemia. Others gaue their voyces to Otho, Duke of Bauaria, who made his entrance into Hungary; but ſlunke away ſuddenly after his entrance. Theſe deuiſions were (at the length) determined, in a generall Aſſembly of the Eſtates of the Kingdome, who (with one conſent) adiudged, & gaue the Crown to

XXII. Charles of Sicilie, Sonne to Charles Martel, and the Queene of Sicilie Mary of Hungarie; Crowned King in the yeare One thouſand three hundred and ten, who left behind him three Sons

Lewes.
Stephen; And
Andrew, Father of Charles, King of Sicilie.

XXIII. Lewes, by the death of his Father, was King of Hungarie, who ſought to reuenge the death of his Brother Andrew, Husband to Iane Queene of Sicilie; from whom he laboured to vſurpe the Kingdome of Sicilie. He died in the year of Grace, One thouſand three hundred foureſcore and two, he being aged threeſcore and ſixe yeares old: Leauing behinde him but two Daughters by Margaret, ſiſter to Cazimire, King of Poland, deceaſing without iſſue.

The Daughters were Heduelga; And
Mary, wife to Sigiſmond of Bohemia, Brother to Wenceſlaus, King of Bohemia, Sons to Charles of Luxembourge, Kings of Bohemia, and Emperours of the Romaines, the one after the other.

Predictions ſuppoſed concerning this Order of the Dragon.

This Sigiſmond was Author of the Order of the Dragon Ouerthrowne; the only ſubiect of this diſcourſe. The Germaines, Agents and followers of Martin Luther, a Succeeder in the Doctrine of John Huſſe, and Hierome of Prage, condemned and burned at the Councill of Conſtans; had made ſome publique declaration, againſt the Inſtitution of this Order. Seeming to blaze abroad, that in former times, vnder the Emperors of Germanie, the Dragon had bin the Signale of the Empires faire fortunes and felicitie, felicitie, euen as it was in the times of the first Romaine Emperours. Whereto was added, that Charles of Luxembourge, King of Bohemia, Emperour, fourth of the name, and his Sonnes, Successours in the Empire and Kingdome of Bohemia, had bin the subiect and motiue cause (thorow their extreame couetousnesse) of loosing not onely Bohemia and Hungary, but generally the whole Estate of the Empire in Germanie and Italie, hauing (for certaine prices and summes of money) sold the Cities and Countries subiected to the Empire, displuming the Eagle, like to the Crowe of Horace, & brought it to a bare honorable title, without profit, power or any subsistance, but onely by the subuentions and helpes of the Germaine States, which are but Arbitrary, and according as the necessities of the Turkish wars doe presse them.

The Triumphall entrances of the Emperours into Rome

Now, it is a matter most sure and constant (according to the testimony of Ammianus Marcellinus, in the life of Iulian the Apostata, his sixt Booke) that the Romaine Emperours, making their entrances in Triumphall pompe: had borne before them on Pikes and long Statues, artificiall Dragons, made of light materials, and hollow within, their mouthes and throates wide gaping, onely to receiue in the ayre, by meanes whereof they hissed and whistled like Serpents: their Tayles couered with Crimosine Taffetie, floated with the windes, like to shining writhing Adders. According as it was obserued by the Poet Claudian In Ruffinum.

A Dragon carried as Colonell of the Armie.

In like manner the Emperours of Germanie, when they marched in a ranked Battaile, they caused a Dragon to be carried, planted vpon a Waggon or Chariot appointed for War, engirt and guarded with the best Souldiours in all the Armie. Our auncient Historians, in describing the Battaile wonne by Phillip Augustus, called the Conqueror, King of France (second of the name, against the rebellious Flemmings, and their Count Ferrand of Portugall; Reynand Count of Monstroeil, Bologne and of Dampmartin; the King of England Iohn; and the Emperor of Germanie Otho, fourth of the name; doe say, that the French conquered the Dragon, which the said Emperour Otho caused to be carried vpon a great Armed Chariot. This was at the Battaile of Bouuines, wonne by King Phillip Augustus, in the yeare of Grace One thousand two hundred and fifteene, in the Moneth of Augustu, but the day I haue not remembred.

But come we now againe to Sigismond. It was in the time of his Reigne, when the Battaile at Nicopolis was lost from the Christians, and won by the Great Turke Baiazeth, in the yeare One thousand three hundred fourescore and sixteene, on Monday before the day of Saint Michael in September.

A Briefe Relation of the Battaile fought at Nicopolis, betweene the Christians, and Baiazeth the Turkish Emperour.

Sigismond had obtained of the most Christian King, Charles the sixt, the succour of a thousand Knights, and as many Esquires, the most valiant Gentlemen in his Kingdome, with such troupes of braue disposed Souldiours, as amounted well neere to twelue thousand. Of them was chiefe Leader and Commander Iohn of Bourgongne, who was Count of Neuers (Eldest Sonne to Phillip the Hardie, Duke of Bourgongne) conducted by Phillip of Artois, Count d'Eu, and Constable of France: The Counts of March, Henry and Phillip de Bar; Frances Enguerran, Lord of Coucy and Count of Soissons; Guy de la Trimouille, Lord of Sucilly; William his Brother; Iohn of Vienna, Admirall of France; Iohn de Maingre, called Boucicault, afterward Marshall of France; Renauld Lord of Roye; the Lords of Saint Paule, of Montorell, and of S. Py; the Hazele of Flanders; the Lord de la Riuiere Montquell, and many other Lords, of very great experience in the managing of Armes.

The succour of Knights and Squires in France.

Baiazeth, to raise the Siedge of Nicopolis in Bithinia, came thither with two hundred thousand men. Twentie thousand Turkes were vanquished (in an Ambuscado) by the Lord of Coucy, accompanied onely with fiue hundred Horse; which bred choller and anger in the Counts of Neuers and Eu, who enuied the glory of this valiant Captaine.

The power of Baiazeth to raise the Siedge of Nicopolis.

Sigismond was of the minde, that the Hungars should haue the first place of preferment on the day of Battaile; because they were fashioned, inured and made apt to fight with the Turkes, and that the French should be in the grand Battalion of the Armie. The Lord of Coucy (who dyed prisoner at Byrsa) was of the same opinion; yet contraried by the Lord de la Trimouille, who alleadged for his reasons, that this was an vndoubted signe of cowardise and feare. But Coucy auouched, that it was the safest and most assured counseil; For in occurrences of Warre (quoth he) men must suffer themselues to be guided by reason, and not by contempt or misprising the enemies forces. Moreouer, he would place the tayle of his Horse, where Trimouille durst not set his Horses head.

A consideration for at pointing the Order of the Battaile.

Thus good counsell was interpreted to the worst, and onely for the sinnes of the French; who with the Germaines, English and Flemings, to the number of twenty thousand men; were round engirt with the Infidels Armie, and instantly slaine in the Field: But of the Turkes to the number of threescore thousand men: The Hungars and the Emperour saued themselues, without so much as looking on the enemy, leauing the Strangers in the crowdes.

Quarrell and Contention deafe to all good aduise.

Foure hundred of reserued Prisoners, on the morrow had their throates cut before the Pauillion of Othoman: but certaine French Lords, to the number of sixe and twentie, were spared, and ransommed at two hundred thousand Florines.

The bloudy issue of the Battaile.

Iohn de Neuers, euen at the point of perishing by the Sword; One Deruis hauing seene his countenance; stayed Baiazeth from putting him to death. Assuring him, that he would be the subiect and cause, for the effusion and expence of more Christian

A man so named, or his Office.

Christian bloud; then Othoman, and all them of his Law, were able to doe with all their power.

Buriall denied the Christians

The Turkes buried their dead, but left the Christians lying in the Field of Battaile, without admitting them any buriall, becauſe they ſhould be foode for the Foules of the Ayre, and ſaluage beaſts of ſlaughter. But contrary to their hope or expectation, there they remained thirteene Moneths, as white as Snowe, and without any attaint: which euidently declared, that their death equalled Martyrdome, dying in defence of their Faith. The Count D'Eu, and Guy de la Trimouille dying priſoners, without ſeeing any more their Countrey of France.

Sigiſmond, dyed in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand foure hundred thirtie ſeauen, being the threeſcore and tenth of his Age; and of his Reigne ouer the Romaines ſeauen and twenty; the ſeauenteenth of Bohemia; the fifteenth ouer the Hungares; and fift of his Empire. He was the Father of

And by his death, the Lords of Hungarie (awaiting for the Poſthumous fruite of Queene Elizabeth, left great with childe) elected for their King

CHAP. II.

The Originall and Genealogie of the Kings of Bohemia.

Prage the chief Citie of Bohemia.

Bohemia is a Prouince of Almaigne or Germanie (on all ſides encloſed with the Forreſt of Hircynia) waſhed or watered with two great Riuers, of the Elue and of Multauia, whereon is ſeated the Citie of Prage, it being the Capitall or chiefe of the Kingdome. It was (at the firſt) gouerned by Dukes, but afterward vnder the reigne of the Emperour Fredericke Barbaroſſa, firſt of the name, Bohemia grew w erected to a Kingdome by the ſaid Frederick, in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand one hundred foureſcore and eighteene. This great Prouince was firſt inhabited cording to the teſtimony of Tacitus in his Germania) by the Boui bonnois people of le, as well as Bauaria, and from it enued, that ſhe hath ſtill retain d her Auncient me of Boia, and of Boemia or Bohemia; A Boys Gallia Populis: Afterward chaſed and Retayning ſtill her Auncient name. ulſed thence by the Vandales, who (by Tatitus) are called Marcomans; which by Countreys name were tearmed Bohemians, or Bohem-Mans, and not Marcomans, Vandales.

At what time it became a Kingdome.

Borſinus the firſt Chriſtian Prince of Bohemia.

The Faſt Chriſtian Prince of this Prouince (which was in elder times vnder the mage and Iuriſdiction of the King of Morauia, which at this preſent is but a Marqui- and Bohemia a Kingdome) was named Borſinus, who died in the yeare nine hun- d, or there about, the tenth Duke of Bohemia: Father to Radiſlaus Duke; Father Duke Boriſlaus: Father to Duke Boleſlaus, Second of the name; Father to Duke Iſlaus, Third of the name; Father to Iamires, Duke; Vncle to Briſetiſlaus, Duke, o died in the yeare of Grace one thouſand fifty and two.

Iutha a Nunne taken out of a Monaſtery.

This man tooke out of a Monaſtery of Nunnes, erected at Ratisbonna (a village of uaria, called in the Coſmographicall Itinerarium of Ethicus, Auguſta Tibery, and af- ward in vulgar ſpeech Reginoburgum, Reganesbourg in the Chronicle of Laureſheim, d Regensbourg, where the Monaſtery of Saint Hemerian is, and wherein was ſhorne onke Childerick, laſt King of France of the deſcendants of Clouis, the yeare of Grace uen hundred and fifty) the Daughter to the Emperour Otho, Second of the name, led Iutha; whoſe father purſuing this rape and outrage, entred into Bohemia Rage and Reuenge purſuing the rape. h a potent Army, reſolued to put all to Fire and Sword. The two Armies being on the point of ioyning, Iutha fell on her knees proſtrate before her Father, obtay- g pardon of him for her reape. But becauſe the Emperour had made a ſolemne we and Oathe, to eſtabliſh his Throane Royall in the very middeſt of Bohemia: by agreement made betweene the Father in Law, and his new abſolued Sonne, hee The Imperiall Seate erected in Bohemia by Otho. ſed to be built a Royall Seate of Free Stone (high and Stately) in the Countrey of eſlauia, which is the middeſt and nauill of Bohemia, in memorie of this perpetuall a- ement. And the Emperour permitted his new Sonne in Lawe, and his ſucceſſours Lords and Dukes of Bohemia, to beare of the Empire, that is to ſay De Gueules Aigle eſploye d'Or Eſchiquete de Sable. Armes retained yet to this d y by the Mar- eſſe of Morauia, and by the deſcendants of this Briſlaus, who by his Wife Iutha d fiue Children.

The iſſue of Briſlaus and Iutha.

Spitignio, Duke by the death of his Father.

Vratiſlaus, Duke by the death of his Brother, and Proclaimed King of Bohemia the Emperour Henry the Fourth, in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand one hun- d foureſcore and ſixe.

Conrard, who vſurped the Dukedome (but he tooke not on him the name of King) ainſt his Brothers Children, and Reigned no longer then Seauen Moneths.

Vratiſlaus, Firſt King of Bohemia, had many Sonnes, whereof none ſucceeded him the Kingdome, becauſe

I. Ladiſlaus, the Sonne of Conrard, made himſelfe to bee inueſted in the Kingdome, the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa, ſo to continue to him and his Succeſſours, in yeare before remembred. He had for his Succeſſour in this newe ſpringing Kingme, his Sonne

II. Frederick, God-ſonne to the Emperour Barbaroſſa, who had for Succeſſour

III. Primiſlaus, Father to Wenceſlaus; And

IIII. Ottocarus, otherwiſe called Primiſlaus the Second, inueſted in the Kingdome Bohemia by the Emperour Phillip, Sonne to the Emperour Frederick. This Otto- Hubrick or Huldrick Duke of Carinthia. arus acquitted to the Duke of Carinthia Huldrick (ſeeing himſelfe without Children) rinthia, Carniola, the Marquiſate of Sclauonia, and many other Lands beſide, as wee ll haue occaſion to ſpeake of heereafter.

Now concerning this Ottocarus (whom the Italians called Odoacres) hee had for eat Maiſter of his Pallace Rodolphe, Counte of Habſpourg, who being come to the perialll dignitie; ſent to ſummon Ottocarus, to render vp to him the Dukedome of Auſtria, Austria, whereof hee had possessed himselfe in the vacancie of the Empire, after the death of Richard of England: And yet Ottocarus had Married Margaret, Sister to Frederick Duke of Austria, but deceassing without issue, and Ottocarus himselfe had not any Sonne. Whereupon the said Rodolphe alleaged, that the Dukedome of Austria was a Masculine or Male Fiefe of the Empire, from which (according to the Salique Law) Daughters were excluded, and so the sirright ceassing, he was the very next heire of the house of Austria, in regard of his Mother. Furthermore, he would haue restored to him the Dukedomes of Carinthia, Carniola, Carnia, the Marquisate of Sclauonia, and other lands, by him acquitted to Duke Huldrick, which he had no power to alienate, without permission of the Emperour first obtained. but Ottocarus contemning the Emperour, because hee had formerly bin at his seruice; sent absolute refusall both of the one and other.

Austria a maasle Fiefe of the Empire.

Now both prepared to stand vpon their guard, the Emperour to reduce Ottocarus to reason, and Ottocarus to defend and maintaine his Conquest. Yet to auoyde the inconueniences, which ordenarily doe attend on warrs; an agreement was laboured betweene the two Princes, whereby Ottocarus rendered to the Emperour the Dukedome of Austria. But in regard of the other Lands demaunded, there was a treaty about a double alliance, of the Emperours Sonne, named Rodolphe, with Agnes Daughter to Ottocarus, and a Sonne in Lawe of Ottocarus, with a Daughter of the Emperours. Young Rodolph had no long time of life, yet of this mariage he left a Sonne, named Iohn, who slew the Emperour Albert his Vnckle.

An accord made betweene Ottocarus and the Emperour.

After this agreement, Rodolphe hauing recouered the Dukedome of Austria, sent another summons to Ottocarus, to doe him homage for the Lands acquired from Huldrick; which Ottocarus flatly refused to doe. Vpon this deniall, both parties were vp in Armes, and the Armies ready to encounter, being not a mile distant eche from other, but that of the Emperour farre the greater. Ottocarus sent his Ambassadours to mediate some agreement with the Emperour, offering him such Homage as he required: prouided, that it might bee done in perticuler (for preseruation of Royall dignitie) and within the Emperours Tente or Pauillion, which being graunted, the Emperour caused his Pauillion to bee erected in the very highest parte of the Army, and vnder it a lofty Throne Royall and Canopy of State, ascending vp Ten or Twelue degrees; to the end, that this Homage might be seene of the whole Armie, yea and of the King of *Bohemia*es too.

Ottocarus vndertaken in doing his homage.

When hee was entred into the Pauillion Royall, he ascended (in all reuerence) so high as to the Emperours Seate, at the foote whereof hee prostrated himselfe, and tooke the accustomed Oath vpon his knees. As the Emperour held his hands according to Order; instantly the whole Pauillion opened in foure parts, and sunck downe to the ground: by meanes whereof, Ottocarus was publiquely seene on his knees before the Emperour, by both the Armies, which formerly he had so highly disdayned. The wife of Ottocarus hearing tydings of this homage; sent so many despightfull messages to her Husband: that he left his Army in the Field, and defied the Emperour, who presently prepared to meete with his enemy.

Ottocarus slaine in the Battaile.

The Battaile was fought in Austria, betweene the Riuer of Danubie, and the Towne of Laba: where Ottocarus was buried, being slaine by a Noble man of Styria, and with him Foureteene Thousand Bohemians, beside a great number of prisoners taken. This Battaile happened in the yeare of Grace, One thousand two hundred threescore and nineteene, according to the Germaine Chronicles: or after Martinus Cromerus, One thousand two hundred and fourescore. To verifie the auncient Prouerbe, which saith: Que se pense reparer sa Honte, Qui l'accroist, et l'augmente: He that so seeketh to repaire his shame, doeth rather augment and encrease it.

CHAP. III.

Concerning the Genealogie and Originall of the House of Austria.

L'Orde d'Austrie et de Carinthie dict de Saincte George.

THE Originall of the House of Austria, the First, and most Famous of Christendome (next to that of France) descended from the Kings of France of the first Ligne; if we may credite Valdezio and Augustino Cranato the Romaine. They both agree together, to trouble the quietnesse of France, in case of precedency of Spayne before the other, and both haue written in their owne Language; That the House of Austria descended in the true ligne of Pharamond. But these men haue no other warrant or authority, then their owne braine.

The Counties of Habspourg, Landtgraue of Alsatia, and Lora of Strasbourg, issued of the auncient Princes of Allemaigne, descended by the Genealogie of the French, Sucedien diendo enel Imperio Rodolpho Segundo Conde Habspurg Lantgraue de Alsacia, y Segnor de Argentina de los antiquos Principes de Alemania de la generation de los Francones. There is not any Prince in Christendome, but holdes it a glory to him, to deriue his descent from the Ancient French, and to be allied to the most famous Floure de Luce. But the Count could haue proceeded on further, and obserued these Princes of Allemaigne or Germanie, till he had come to approue the tract of Rodolphe; he left off in too faire away.

Such as seeme to haue interpreted themselues more clearely, are of Opinion; that the Countes of Habspourg (the fourse and spring of the House of Austria) are descended of Thebert, otherwise called Theodobert, Second of the name, King of Austrasia (whereof the Duchie of Lorraine made part) Son to Childebert Second of the name, King of Orleans, that is to say of Bourgongne and of Austrasia. In which censure and conceite, both the one and other haue much mistaken themselues.

For Saint Gregorie of Tours, the prime man of our Auncient Annalists, and all our Chroniclers whatsoeuer, sing all in one key and noate: That this Theodobert was vanquished by his Brother Thierry (Second of the name, King of Orleans) in two fought Battailes, the first giuen neere to Toull in Lorraine, and the other before the Citty of Colegne. In both which, the said Theadobert hauing saued himselfe, was yet slaine by treason (so saith Ado Viennensis) and his head caried to his Brother Thierry, who who, by his death, made himselfe King of Austrasia: which happened in the yeare of Grace sixe hundred and seuenteene.

The Issue of Theodobert.

This Thiebert or Theodobert had two Sonnes and one Daughter, by the Queene Theudichilda his Wife, as namely Sigebert, bearing the name of his Grandfather, Meroueus was the other Sonne, And Berthoara, a Lady absolutely perfect in beauty

These children were deliuered to their Vncle Thierry, who sent them to the Citty of Mentz, whether Queene Brunhault or Brunechild, their Grandmother was come before them. This Queene was more cruell then a Tyger of Hircania: She caused Sigibert and Meroueus to be murdered, but kept their Sister neere her selfe. We learne by Aimonyus the Monke, in the Third Booke of his History of France, the fourescore and seauenth Chapter, these are his owne words. Theodoricus compositis de sententia rebus, inde cum multis spolijs progressus; secum abduxit filios fratris sui, cum filia quæ specie intebat decora. Dum Metos aduenisset, respexit Ariam suam Brunichildam tanto obuiam sibi venisse, Quæ arreptis Theodoberti filijs, eos sine mora nec tradidit (Shee caused the eldest to be strangled) et minorem quidem natu, Meroueum nomine, lapidi illisum innocentem coëgit exalare spiritum; the younger had his head flat quashed with a stone. But the Daughter was afterward assured to Prince Adaluado, Sonne to Agilalphus, King of the Lombards.

The words of the Monke Aimonius.

Brunechilde or Brunehaulte was Daughter to Athanagilde, King of the Vuisigothes of Spayne, a Princesse so contrary to the Bloud of the Kings and Princes of the most illustrious Bloud of France; as She caused Tenne of them to dye in diuers kindes. She was wife to Sigibert King of Austrasia, Sonne to King Clothaire the First. Of her and the said Sigibert came Childebert King of Austria, Second of the name by hi Father, and after the death of Gunthran his Vncle, was King of Orleans. The said Childebert the Second espoused Sedeluba, by whom he had a Sonne and a Daughter, Thierry, and Theudelinda; and by a Concubine he had Theodobert, of whom they would deriue the House of Austria.

Brunehaulte the cruell and bloudie Queene of France.

Brunechilde for her bloudy cruelties, was first relegated or banished at Rouen, by the said Theodobert, King of Austrasia; but returning thither againe, She caused Childebert and his wife to bee poysoned the very same day: procuring afterward Thierry, King of Orleans and Austrasia, to be poysoned in the same manner. But being conuicted of so many murders, Clothaire the Great, Second of the name, King of France, and the Generall Estates called a Parliament, by decree whereof in the City of Auxbun, the moneth of May Sixe hundred twenty three: She was condemned to be drawne and dismembred by foure vntamed Horses. After which execution, She was buried at Saint Martin d'Athun, where at this present her Tombe is to be seene.

The sentence giuen against Queene Brunehault, and her death.

As for Thierry, he was kilde with a clap of Thunder, leauing foure naturall Children or Bastards: the first second and third whereof named Sigibert, Corbo and Merewes, were slaine by the commaund of Garnier, Maire of the Pallace to the said Thierry, and the last Son Childebert was slaine afterward. How can there then be any appearance of reason, why those Spanish writers, should draw the sourse and Originall of the Illustrious House of Austria, from these three Bastards, slaine, and not hauing any issue.

The proofe auouched by the Counte of Lansarote for the Archdukes of Austria.

The Count of Lansarote, in the Foure and fiftieth Chapter of his first Booke of Nobility, saith. That the Archdukes of Austria descended of Rodolphe, Second Counte of Habspourg, Landtgraue of Halsatia, and Lora of Strasbourg, issued of the auncient Princes of Allemaign, descended by the Genealogie of the Frenche, Sucedien diendo enel Imperio Rodolpho Segundo Conde Habspurg Lantgraue de Alsacia, y Segnor de Argentina de los antiquos Principes de Alemania de la generation de los Francones. There is not any Prince in Christendome, but holdes it a glory to him, to deriue his descent from the Ancient French, and to be allied to the most famous Floure de Luce. But the Count could haue proceeded on further, and obserued these Princes of Allemaigne or Germanie, till he had come to approue the tract of Rodolphe; he left off in too faire away.

The House of Austria is descended from the Countes of Habspourg.

Most sure and infallible it is, that the House of Austria is descended of the Lords and Countes of Habspourg, a Castell and Bourgade builded in Swetia, by the first Lords of the said place, named Radpot and his Brother Garnierus, or Warnierus, Bishop of Strasbourg, about the yeare of Grace, One thousand threescore and tenne. And the Histories of Germanie doe tell vs, that the said Garnier, being prouided of the Bishoprick of Strasbourg (one of the very richiest of Germanie, and whereon dependeth the Landsgrauiat of Halsatia, who beareth for Armes De Gueules a la Bande Fleurronnee d Argent) aduanced his Brother Radpot, and layd the first foundation of the Houſe of Habſpourg.

In elder times they were Iudges of Bishops temporall Iurisdictions.

Radpot was Father to Garnier, Father of Otho; Father of Garnier; Father of Albert, who was made Landsgraue of Halsatia for the Church of Strasbourg: as we haue in France Vidames of Cathedrall Churches; of Chartres, of Mans, of Amiens, of Beauuais, of Mascow, and other more beside.

The first Count of Habſpourg.

This Albert was likewise Captaine Generall of Strasbourg which office in Italie they tearme Gonfalonniero, and (for his great seruices) he was made The first Counte of Habſpourg, by the Emperour Phillip, Sonne to Frederik Barbarossa. The same Albert tooke to wife Heduuica, Daughter to Herman, Count of Kybourg, and of this mariage was borne one Sonne, named Rodolphe, Second Count of Habſpourg, who followed the Courte of the Emperour Frederick, Second of the name; and after his death, he Courted it with Othocarus, King of Hungarie and Bohemia, to whom he was Great Maister of the Pallace, as we haue already said. After the death of Frederick the second, and his Sonnes Henry and Conrad Emperours: Henry, Landsgraue of Hessen; William, who was Count of Holland and Zealand; and Richard of England were chosen Emperours. After whom, there grewe a difference about the Election; because the Marquesse of Brandenbourg fauoured the King of Bohemia Othocarus: the other Princes of Germanie leaned to the contrary. So that, either in a brauado, or else by way of happinesse, this Rodolphe, Count of Habſpourg, was declared King of the Romanes, and Crowned Emperour (first of the name) at Aix la Chappelle, in the yeare of Grace, 1273.

Rodolph Count of Habſpourg made King of the Romanes and Emperour.

This Rodolphe tooke to wife Anne, Countesse of Hohemberg, and of her were borne three Sonnes, and seauen Daughters; whom I must let passe vnder silence, to bee the briefer in discourse. Only I meane to speake of,

The Issue of this Rodolphe

Iutha, that is Iudith, Wife to Wenceslaus, King of Bohemia, Sonne and Successour to Othocarus.

The Sonnes we may not omit;

Herman, who neuer had any issue, but dyed drowned in the Riuer of Rhine, the Ice hauing broken his Bardge, on the day of Saint Thomas, One thousand two hundred and fourescore, in the life time of his Father. Hartmanno fue abogado en el Rin: The Spanyards appoint this man to the first place, being followed next by

The first taking the name and Armes of Austria by the Sonnes of Rodolphe.

Albert, whom the Emperour his Father made Duke of Austria, in a diet which he held in the Citty of Ausbourg: in regard of which Duchie, his Sonnes and descendants forsooke the Sirname of Habſpourg, and tooke the name and Armes of Austria, as we learne by Martinus Cromerus, in the tenth Booke of his History of Poland, in these words. Ab eoden Alberto origenem duxerunt illi, qui deinceps illis Regionibus (speaking of the higher Pannonia, which is Austria) præfuere vsque ad nostra tempora, et Karolum Quintum Imperatorem Hispaniarum, &c. Regem.

We haue formerly related, that the Duchie of Austria was falne to the Distaffe or female kinde, by the death of Frederick, Duke of Austria, Brother to Margaret, Wife to the King of Bohemia Othocarus, who possessed himselfe thereof in the right of her: but seeming, the Empire being then vacant, by the death of Richard of England. And the Spanyards speaking of this Othocarus say thus. y. auiendose rebelado con este Estado de Austria Othocaro Rey de Bohemia, le vencio Rudolpho Cæsar, y dio el Estado de Austria contitulo de Dugue a su hijo Alberto agno 1285. de quien traen Origen lo Archiduques.

The Third Sonne was

Rodolphe, Duke of Sueuia, and King of Bohemia (by reason of the Queene his Wife Agnes of Bohemia, Daughter to the King Othocarus, and sister to Wenceslaus) who had one Sonne by the same Wife, named Iohn; who slew his Vncle Albert, Duke of Austria, neere to the Castell of Habſpourg and died prisoner in Italie. And as for the Emperour Rodolph the Father, after he had well enriched his Children: he died in the yeare of Grace, One thousand two hundred fourescore and eleuen, in the threescore and thirteenth yeare of his age, and eighteenth of his Reigne.

A

An Orderly proceeding in the Descent of Austria, being thus deduced from the Originall.

After the death of the Emperour Adolphe of Nassau:

I. Albert, Duke of Austria, eldest Sonne to Rodolphe of Habſpourge was elected Emperour; who by his wife Elizabeth, Daughter to Maynard, Count of Tiroll, and of Goritia, had sixe Sonnes and foure Daughters.

The Sonnes were

1. Fredericke, elected King of the Romaines, but he had as his Competitour and Contrary Lewes, Prince Palatine, (Sonne to his Aunt, by the Mothers side, Atshuld of Habſpourge, third Daughter of Rod. Iphe) elected likewise King of the Romaines, who vanquished him in a fought Battaile, the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred and thirtie.
2. Otho the Hardy, Father of Frederick, who dyed in the yeare One thousand three hundred forty and foure.
3. Leopolde, that dyed One thousand three hundred forty and sixe.
4. Albert who dyed One thousand three hundred and eight.
5. Henry, who dyed in the yeare One thousand three hundred forty and two.

Rodolphe, Duke of Sueuia, Brother to Albert, had left by Agnes of Bohemia his wife, a Sonne in yong yeares, named Iohn of Habſpourge, or of Sueuia. The Emperour Albert his Vncle, had published himselfe Tutour to his said Nephew, and in that quality seized on his person, and kept him (for some time) at Vienna in Austria. In the meane while, he exalted his owne Sonne Rodolphe to the Kingdome of Bohemia, which appertained to his said Nephew Iohn, in regard of his Mother by fauour of mariage, wherein with Rodolphe, Sonne to the Emperour Rodolphe, it was namely and formally couenanted and contracted, that the death of Othocarus, King of Bohemia happening: Agnes his Daughter, Rodolphe her Husband, or such as descended of them, should inherit the Crowne of Bohemia. Iohn compassing the meanes to escape from Vienna, and knowing that he was not only bereft of the Kingdome of Bohemia, but likewise of the Duchie of Sueuia: being desperately transported, he slew his Vncle Albert, neere to the Castle of Habſpurge where he was walking. And by this murder, he dyed miserably at Pisa in Tuscanie, in the Conuent of the Augustines, where he was kept in perpetuall prison.

The Pope gaue away the Kingdome of France, but could not deliuer it.

Of all the Sonnes of this Emperour Albert of Austria (this was the man, to whom Pope Boniface the eight, had giuen the Kingdome of France, and which he could not deliuer, from Phillip le Bel, King of France and Nauarre) there remained but Albert, his fourth Sonne, all the rest hauing not left any issue. This

II. Albert, second of the name of Austria, had bin Subdeacon of a Church, and a Chanon in the Cathedrall Church of Passaw. Where hearing the death of all his Brethren, he obtained a dispensation, and tooke to wife Ioane, Daughter to the last Count of Peirt, named Huldrick, deceasing without any heire masle in the yeare, One thousand three hundred twenty and foure. By meanes of this marriage, the County of Sungoia came to the Houſe of Austria. Of this Ioane he begat three Sons and as many Daughters.

The Sonnes were

1. Leopold.
2. Rodolphe. And
3. Albert.

III. Leopold, the third Duke of Austria, ioyned to the said Duchie the Countie of Hogemberg in Sueuia, hauing bought it of the Lord owner, in the yeare One thousand three hundred threescore and eleauen, and seeking to subiect the Switzers; he was slaine by them in a fought Battaile at Sempach, the twentieth day of July, in the yeare One thousand three hundred fourescore and seauen. He left foure Sonnes by his wife, a beautifull Lady, and Daughter to King Iohn of Arragon.

1. Fredericke, who hauing conueighed Iohn the Antipope from the Councill of Constans; was excommunicated by the same Councill, and the Lands which he had in Sueuia or Suetia, and the neighbouring parts, confiscated by the Emperour Sigismond, whereof the Switzers possessed themselues. And therefore he had a nick-name giuen him in scorne, being called Fredericke with the emptie Wallet. He had a Sonne named Sigismond (that left not any issue) who engaged the Lands which he had in Sungoia, and the Landsgraviat of Halsatia, to the last Duke of Bourgongne Charles. And from thence grew the Switzers wars against the said Duke Charles: who lost his riches at Granzon, his men at Mourath, and his life at Nancy.

The second Son of Leopold, was

2. William, nourished in the Court of the King of Hungary, and destenied to be King of Poland, in regard of his wife; but he was denied and reiected by the Polonians.

3. Ernestus: And

4. Leopold, who seeking to reuenge the death of his Father (whose name he bare) slaine by the Switzers at Sempach; was likewise slaine himselfe by the Switzers, belonging to the Canton of Glaris.

Rodolphe, second Sonne to Albert the Subdeacon, espoused Margaret, Daughter to the King of Bohemia, and Duke of Carinthia, the onely heire to the Countie of Tyroll, annexed by this meanes to the Duchie of Austria. This Rodolphe dyed by poyson at Millaine, in the yeare One thousand three hundred threescore and fiue, and his body buried in the Church of Saint Stephen at Vienna. He left no issue.

IV. Albert of Austria, third of the name, yongest and last Sonne to the Subdeacon, Duke of Austria, was twise married. First to the Daughter of Charles of Luxembourg Emperour, fourth of the name (Author of the Golden Bull) King of Bohemia. And in second marriage he had Beatrix, Daughter to the Burgraue of Nuremberg. He dyed poysoned by a Physition, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred fourescore and fifteene. By Beatrix his wife he had one onely Sonne, named

V. Albert, fourth of the name, Duke of Austria, Sirnamed the Mathematitian, and by the Spanyards El Sabio, who making warre against Iosso, Marquesse of Moraui, dyed of a dissenterie. By one of the Daughters to the Count of Holland his Wife, hee had one onely Sonne

VI. Albert, fift of the name, who in the yeare of Grace One thousand foure hundred thirty eight, was elected King of the Romaines. Hee tooke to wife the Daughter to the Emperour Sigismond, and by this Alliance hee was King of Hungarie and Bohemia; dying, he left her conceiued with a Posthumous, and when the childe was borne, they called it

VII. Ladislaus, King of Hungary, assured for marriage to Madam Magdalen of France, Sister to King Lewis the eleauenth, but he dyed before hee had sight of her. And this Princesse was married to Gaston of Nauarre, Prince of Viana, slaine at Libournia neere to Bourdeaux, with the splinter of a Lance in a Tourney. It behoueth therefore to take the Ligne of Leopold, eldest Sonne to Albert, second of the name, fourth Sonne to the Emperour Albert of Austria. Of Leopolds foure Sonnes, not any had issue, but

Ernestus of Austria, that stiled himselfe Duke of Carinthia, who hauing espoused Cymburga, Daughter to the Duke of Massouia in Poland (William his Brother thought to be King of Polonia, but being reiected by the Polonians, he went from the Court of Hungaria, and on meere dispight, passed into Italie, married himselfe in Apuglia, and left no issue) by whom he had foure children, to wit

Albert, who contended for the Empire

Katharine.

Margaret: And

Fredericke.

Albert the eldest Sonne dyed without issue, as the like did Sigismond, Sonne to Fredericke with the emptie Wallet: So that all the Seigneuries fell to the yongest Sonne of Ernestus

VIII. Fredericke, Duke of Austria, Carinthia, and Styria, Count of Carnia, Carniola, Sclauonia, Cilia, Gorittia, Istria and Tyroll, Marquesse of Burgaw of Hohemberg, Veldkirk, Sungaw, Brisgaw and Landsgraue of Halsatia.

This Fredericke deuided all those Seigneuries into two estates; the one called of Viena, & the other of Ænipont the second Vienna had in her Iurisdiction & Authority, Austria, Carinthia, Styria, Carnia, Cilia, Gorittia and Istria.

Ænipont had in her prerogatiue, the Lands which the House of Austria, possessed sessed in Sueuia, the Countie of Veldkirk, and the Seigneuries of Sungaw, Brisgawe, all that Halsatia neighbouring on Strasbourg, and likewise the County of Tirol.

Fredericke seeing himselfe Emperour, and enriched with so many Seigneuries, as were already reduced vnder his power: Tooke the title of Archduke of Austria, and since that time, all they of the House of Austria, as well the Eldest as yongest, Direct, as Collatrals, carried the title of Archdukes of Austria, were they of Viennois, or of Ænipont. Which Seigneurie of Austria hath had diuers Titles; for it carried that of the Marquisate, vntill in the yeare of Grace, One thousand one hundred fifty and one, when the Emperour Fredericke Barbarossa gaue the title of Kingdome to the Duchie of Bohemia, and to Bauaria the Title of a Duchie, in fauour of Guelpho his Partaker (whence grew the siding and factions, betweene the Imperiall Guelphes, and the Gibelines, pertakers with the Popes.) And also the Title of Duke, to the Marquesse of Austria, which so continued, vntill the time of this Fredericke, whereof now is the occasion of our present discourse.

He, after the death of his Cousine Albert, was elected King of the Romaines, third of the name (for Fredericke, eldest Son of Leopolde, Competitor with Lewes of Bauaria, is not accounted among the Emperours) in the yeare of Grace One thousand foure hundred and forty, notwithstanding the close vnder-handing of his elder Brother Albert. And this is the same Emperour Frederick the third, who was Author of the Order of S. George, whereof we shall speake more hereafter.

10. The last Emperour Albert dying, left his wife great with childe, by meanes whereof, the Lords of Hungary named for Tutour of the fruite in the wombe, and their Queene the Widdow, the said Emperour Fredericke the third; with this charge and condition, that if she chanced to be deliuered of a Son, he should be his Guardian, and haue the Wardship of him, vntill he came to the yeares of commanding; but if it proued to be a Daughter, then they would elect and take him for their King. She was deliuered of Ladislaus, as we haue formerly said, and he comming to the age of gouernment: Fredericke would not listen to any resignation, but following the naturall disposition of such honest Tutours, refused to loose what he had kept so long. Iohn Huniades, a very valiant and generous Captaine, vndertooke the matter for King Ladislaus against this Fredericke, whom he constrained to yeelde the King his right, and the places he held in Hungarie from him.

The same Fredericke passed into Italie, where he caused himselfe to be crowned Emperour. He had to wife Leonora, Daughter to the King of Portugall Edward, and the Nuptials were celebrated in the Citie of Naples by the King Alphonso. He dyed in the yeare One thousand foure hundred fourescore and thirteene. By his wife Leonora of Portugall he had three children:

Christopher, who dyed yong.

Kunegonda a Daughter; And

IX. Maximillian of Austria, who (at the age of eighteene yeares) was conducted to the Citie of Vienna in Flanders, where he espoused Mary of Bourgongne, the onely Daughter to Charles last Duke of Bourgongne, the very richest heire of Christendome. And by meanes of this marriage, ioyning with the House of Spaine: that of Austria is mounted to that height of greatnesse, as now we behold it at this day. This Maximillian (in the life time of his Father) was elected King of the Romaines, in the yeare One thousand foure hundred fourescore and sixe. Mary of Bourgongne dyed in the sixt yeare after her marriage, & Maximillian in the moneth of Ianuary, One thousand fiue hundred and eighteene. He left three Sons and one Daughter, named

Margaret of Austria, conducted into France, and affianced to Monsieur the Daulphine Charles, afterward King, eight of the name, who comming to the Crowne, sent her backe into Flanders, and tooke to wife Anne, Duchesse of Bretaigne, a Prouince reunited to the Crown of France, the Originall whereof, was as we haue said in the Order of the Hermine.

The Sonnes were

Phillip. }
Frances. } dying in their Infancie.
And } George. }

X. Phillip of Austria espoused Dogna Iane of Arragon, Daughter to Ferdinand of Arragon, and Isabell of Castile, which which Iane by the death of her Father and Mother, was heire to the Kingdomes of Leon, Castile, Arragon, Valencia, Granado Tolledo, Maiorica: and by vsurpation of Nauarre, Naples and Sicilie. In this marriage were borne Eleanor, wife to the King of Portugall, Emanuell: and in second marriage, to King Frances the first.

Charles, King of Spaine, and afterward Emperour, fift of the name, borne in the Citie of Gaunte in Flanders, on the day of Saint Mathias, being the foure and twentieth day of February, in the yeare of Grace One thousand foure hundred fourescore and nineteene.

Isabel, wife to Christierne, King of Denmarke; And Ferdinand, borne in the Citie of Alcala de Henarez in Spaine, Anno One thousand fiue hundred and three: we haue before (in the Tracts of the Orders of Spaine) obserued this Genealogie. Phillip of Austria being gon out of Flanders to Spaine, with Queene Iane his wife, to haue her Crowned there: dyed in the Citie of Burgos in September One thousand fiue hundred and sixe. He was Sirnamed the Great, not for any great viuacity of Spirit, or in regard of his ambition: but for the great and large extendure of those Seigneuries, whereof he was possessed before his death.

Margaret his onely sister, left by Chares the eight, was married in Spaine to Dom Iehn, Sonne to Ferdinand of Arragon, and Isabel of Castile: who being deceased without issue, she was remarried to the Duke of Sauoye Philebert, after the death of whom (not hauing any children) she returned into Flanders the second time, and was (during some space of time) Gouernesse for her Nephew Charles the fift, elected King of the Romaines at the age of twenty yeares; succeeding in the Empire after Maximillian his Grandfather, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand fiue hundred and nineteene. Formerly we haue remembred the marriage and descent of the said Charles of Austria whose Brother

XI. Ferdinand of Austria tooke to wife Madam Anne Queene of Hungary and Bohemia, Sister to King Lewes, Sonne of King Ladislaus, by whom he had diuers Children, both Sonnes and Daughters.

XII. Maximillian, second of the name, Emperour, King of Bohemia and Hungarie, Archduke of Austria.

Ferdinand; And

Charles.

Maximillian tooke to wife Mary of Spaine, Daughter to the Emperor Charles the fift, and by her he had many Children.

XIII. Rodolphe second of the name, King of Hungary and Bohemia, Emperor, Archduke of Austria, who deceased without any issue.

XIIII. Mathias, second of the name, King of Hungarie and Bohemia, Emperour, who reigneth at this present.

Ernestus died without children.

Andrew, Cardinall.

Albertus, Cardinall, afterward secularized, and Husband to the Infant of Spaine, Isabella Clara Eugenia, Heire of the Low-Conntries, vnder obedience to the King of Spaine, without issue.

Leopo'd, Bishop of Passaw, and Gouernour of the Kingdome of Bohemia.

Elizabeth, wife to King Charles, ninth of the name.

Anne, last wife to the King of Spaine, Dom Phillip the second, and many other Children.

Partage de la Prouince entre freres.

Charles the fift, and Ferdinand Emperours, Sonnes to Phillip of Austria and Iane of Spaine, deuided betweene them the Estates and Seigneuries both by Father and Mother. Neuertheless an vnequall portion, and which (among vs) to this day, passeth as a common Prouerbe. The deuision of Spaine, all goes on one side, and nothing on the other. Because Charles the fift tooke for his share, all Spaine, the Kingdome of Naples, Sicilie, Sardaignia and Maiorica, with all the Low Countries of the House of Bourgongne: Giuing (when all was done) to his Brother Ferdinand, the Patrimonie of Austria, filled with Titles of Kingdomes and Seigneuries, making a goodly show (but very little benefit, the greater part of them being possessed by the Turke) as are the Kingdomes of Croacia, Dalmasia, Rascia, the Archduke of Austria, the Duchies of Styria, Carinthia, Carnia, Carniola, and the Countie of Tyroll: which Realmes and Seigneuries summed vp altogether, value not the reuennues of the Duchie of Normandie. Beside all which, the Archdukes of Austria, want not the addition (according the custome of Spaine) of a long list, or bedroule of Titles, both of Duchies and Counties, where they haue not any thing to raise.

The Duke-dome of Normandy of great reuen-tiues.

Now, as concerning the Arch-Duchie of Austria, which is the higher Pannonia, our ancient Annalists report, that our King Charlemaigne reduced and comprehended vnder his power, the whole girdling and circuit of those Countries, obserued by his Secretary of State Eghinard. Ipse per bella memorata Italiam totam, quæ ab Augusta Prætoria, vsque in Calabriam inferiorem, in qua Grecorum atque Beneuentanorum consistit esse confinia, Decies Centum, & eo amplius passuum millibus longitudine porrigitur. Tum Saxoniam, quæ quidem Germaniæ pars non modica est. Post eam vtramq; Pannoniam, & oppositam in altera Danubij ripa Daciam, Histriam quoque, Liburniam, atque Dalmatiam sui iuris effecit, atque perdomuit. Hee might very well say, Vtramque Pannoniam, because as wee haue said already, there is the higher and lower Pannonia.

The Countries related by Eghinard.

Austria is the higher, whereof Vienna is the Capitall Citie: and the lower is the Kingdome of Hungary, whereof Buda (possessed by the Turke) was heretofore the principall City.

Austria is the higher Pannonia, and Hungaria the lower.

Charlemagne changed the name of the higher Pannonia, into that of Austria, and afterward (by addition of Letters) it was tearmed Austriche: as wee learne by Aventine in the fourth Booke of his History of Bauaria.

Carolus incolumi milite, nemine resistente, vsque ad Arabonem, & ad confluentem eius, & Danubij, cum triplici exercitu Castra mouet. Ibi aliquot dies statiua habet, & cum non essent qui vincerentur, eam regionem quam Marte cæpit, præsidiis validis firmat. Hostes vallis fixis congestis aggeribus excludit. Deinde Boiorum colonias Geroldum Boiariæ Præsidem deducere iubet, Templa extrui imperat (for vntill this time the Hungars had followed Paganisme) agros, prata, vineas, inter Præfectos, Equites, Monachorum Magistros Pontificesque Boiariæ, sicut vetera testantur Diplomata distribuit, Ea que Regio Austria hæc est, Orientalis Boiariæ limes tum vocata, adhuc nomen retinet.

La Marche d'Austriche.

And after Charlemaigne, the higher Pannonia was called The Marches of Austria, peopled with Colonies taken from the Bauarians, conducted and gouerned by this President of Bauaria.

Concerning the Presidents of Bauaria, and Marquesses of Austria.

1. Girauld, first Marquesse of Austria, to whom succeeded by Order.
2. Theodoricke, that is to say Thierry.
3. Gotfrid, that is Godefrey, or Geoffroy.
4. Girauld, Second race of the name.
5. Baldericke, that is Bauldry.
6. Sigenard.
7. Leopold.
8. Arnulphe.
9. Gebelhard.
10. Eger.
11. Engelricke; And
12. Conrard, who being deceased without an Heyre Male, about the yeare of Grace, Nine Hundred and Fourescore: then began the Second of the Marquesses of Austria, in the person of

1. Albert, Count of Bamberg, called the Cripple, descended of the Dukes of Sueuia, or Suaba, inuested with the Marquisate, by the Emperour Saint Henry, Second of the name. Albert had for his Successor his Sonne

2. Leopold, who dyed in the Pallace of Ingelheim, at the Marriage of the Emperour Henry, Third of the name. Otho, Bishop of Frisinghen, descended of the second Marquesses of Austria, writeth in his Sixt Booke and Fifteenth Chapter; that this Albert had his head smitten off, and that Leopolde was the first Marquesse of Austria, of the Second Ligne, wherein he is argued of ignorance by Auentine, according to the words formerly reported. Whereby it appeareth, that Gerold or Girauld, was the first Gouernour on the Frontiers of Bauaria. And the Gouernours of those Frontiers were (in those times) both before, and afterward acknowledged, vnder the Title of Marquesses: Marchiones Finium, & limitum Rectores.

Otho Frisinghen condemned by Auentine.

Lupolde, (thus ſpeaketh the ſame Biſhop of Friſinghen (being as yet in his youth) was preſent alone on hunting with the Emperour Otho, Second of the name, and wounded a wilde foaming Boare, which the Emperour purſued very cloſely.

4. Albert, Marqueſſe of Auſtria, Father of

5. Leopold, dying without Iſſue; And
6. Erneſtus, Father of
7. Leopold, Second of the name, Marqueſſe of Auſtria, Father to
8. Leopolde the Saint; And to Saint Leopolde was the Father of fiue Children, as namely of

1. Conrard, Biſhop of Paſſaw, and then afterward of Saltzbourg.
2. Otho, Biſhop of Friſinghen, whoſe learned writings are remaining with vs.
3. Leopolde.
4. Albert; And of
5. Henry, made firſt Duke of Auſtria by the Emperour Fredericke Barbaroſſa, Firſt of the name, after whom ſucceeded his Sonne
6. Leopolde, called the Vertuous, Brother to Fredericke, deceaſing without Iſſue.

This is that Leopolde, Second Duke of Auſtria, who went in the Voyage to the Holy Land, when our King the Conquerour Philip Auguſtus, Second of the name, and Richard of England paſſed thither alſo.

Leopolde that dealt ſo diſhonourably with King Richard of England.

The ſtrong City of Acres, anciently called Ptolomais, and Acon were beſiedged during the ſpace of two whole yeares, and finally conquered and taken (by faire force) from Saladine, King of thoſe Marches beyond the Seas, whereof he became Maiſter againe foure yeares after. Which repriſall happened in the yeare of Grace, One Thouſand, One Hundred, Foureſcore and Thirteene. In which Seruice Leopolde carried himſelfe there ſo valiantly, that with the firſt of his Allemaignes or Germaignes; hee wonne a Tower for entring the City, whereon hee planted his Armes and Pennons. In regard whereof wee will ſay and affirme

The Armes of the firſt Dukes of Auſtria.

That the firſt Marqueſſes of Auſtria, and the two Dukes which ſucceeded them, carried the ſame Armes, as namely, D'Azur à Cinq Alouettes d'Or en Saultoir. And the like number is ſeene En pointe, in thoſe of the Archduke Mathias (who ruleth at this preſent) before he was Emperour. But now concerning the Antiquity of theſe Armes, it is firſt to be conſidered:

The Romaines defending the Frontiers of Danubius.

That the Romaines, for guard and defence of the Marches and Frontiers of Danubius, held a ſtrong Garriſon in the City of Vienna, called Fauienna or Famina. The Emperour Traian hauing warred on Decebalus, left for Gouernour at Vienna Marcus Aurelius, with a Legion of old Soldiers called in French L'Alouette, but in the Latine Tongue Legio Decima, and by his Sirname Alauda; to ſhew that this Legion was Gauliſh, and drawne from the Frontiers of the Rhine. For the word Alouette is preciſely Guliſh. So is it reported in the Germaine Hiſtories, yea, and the Spaniards themſelues, in theſe words.

The Latine.

Eran ſus Antiquas Armas cinco Abubillas de Oro en Eſcudo Azul. De cuya Deuiſa hazе memoria Ciceron en la Epiſtola à Attica, alli dize, que la Region que Caſar leuanto in Francia traia el Abubilla, y por eſto fue llamada Alaudata. por lla marſe eſtas Aues aſsi en Latin. But the ſame Spaniards are diſcontented, when it is ſaid that, El Marques Leopoldo quinto deſte nombre por conſentimiento del Imperio puſo por Armas en Eſcudo Roxo la Faxa Argentada. For in one and the ſame caſe, they ought to render a reaſon.

The change of the ancient Armes of Auſtria to moderne.

Diuers opinions there are concerning the changing of the ancient Armes of Auſtria, to moderne; which are De Gueules à vne Feſſe d'Argent. Some haue taken them for a Deuice to repreſent the breake of Day, and the Sunnes riſing in the Eaſte. And concerning what the Spaniards ſay, that the moderne Armes were taken by Duke Leopolde; they learne from the Hiſtory of Hungary, written by Bonfinius, in his Fourth Booke and Fourth Decade, as alſo by Auentine and others, that haue diſcourſed thereon. But obſerue what is ſaid by Oliuer de la March, Firſt Maiſter of the Hoſtell to Philip Archduke of Auſtria, King of Spayne, Firſt of the name, in the firſt Booke written by him of Memories.

Ie ne puis paſſer par raiſon, que ie ne deuiſe aucune choſe, pour quoy les Armes de ſi Noble Seigneurie ſont en deux manieres differentes les vnes des autres. Car les anciennes, & eſleues Armes d'Auſtriche, ſont, & ſe blaſonnent d'Azur à cinq Alouettes d'Or: & les nouuelles que l'on dict les Armes de la neufue Auſtriche ſe blaſonnent de Gueules à vne face d'Argent.

I cannot reaſonably let it ſo paſſe, in regard I doe not deuiſe any thing, becauſe the Armes of ſo noble a Seignenrie, are in two manners different the one from the other. For the ancient and old Armes of Auſtria, are and emblazon themſelues D'Azur a cinque Alloueates D'Or. And the new, which are ſaid to be the Armes of new Auſtria, are emblazoned De Gueules a vne face d'Argent.

There is ſome iniury done by this Authour in his narration, for hee calleth Leopolde Iaſpar, making him without Children, and that it was his Brother Fredericke, which changed thoſe Armes; contrary to the opinion of all Hiſtorians. He proceedeth afterward, ſaying.

Que les chreſtiens mal menez des Meſcreans, ce Iaſpar fut à propos ſecouru par ſon Frere moyne (that is younger) Frederic, lequel auoit vne blanche parure ſur ſon harnois (hee would haue ſaid a white Coate of Armes) pour eſtre cogneu entre ſes Hommes, & print aſſa lance dextre vn grand Volet de blanche Soye (hee would ſay a Scarfe) & parce qu'il trouua toutes les Bannieres de ſon Seigneur & Frere, & les Siennes abbattues, & perdues, il prit le Volet blanc en ſa main, & plongea ledit Volet au ſang des Morts, tellement qu'il fut tout teinct en Rouge couleur, excepte le milieu du Volet, qu'il tenoit dans ſa main, qui demeura blanc. De ce fit vne nouelle Banniere, & s'eſcria. Auſtriche, Seruiteur de Ieſu Chriſt, & ſe ferit ſi merueilleuſement, & de tel courage parmy les Sarraſins, qu'tant en occit, abbatit, & meſhaigna à la bonne ſuitte qu'il eut qu'il redreſſa la Battaille, & furent Sarraſins deſconfits, & fut le bon Frederic tellement bleſſe, naure ſur ſon corps en auerſes parties, que la blanche parure, dont ſes Armes furent couuertes, & dont l'ay deuant touche, fut toute teinte, & rougie de ſon ſang, excepte que ce qui eſtoit ſous la teinture de ſon Eſpee, demeura blanc: & comme le blanc demeura en la poignee du Volet, & fit Face parmy Le Vermeil ſang du Noble Prince, pour la deffence de noſtre Foy: Et la Battaille gaignee par le vaillant Frederic, il fut ſi bien penſe, medecine, & ſecouru de ſes bleſſures, qu'en bref temps il fut guary: & pour memoire de la Victoire, ledit Frederic par le Conſeil de ſa Nobleſſe, changea de la en auant les ſecondes Armes, telles que ie les ay deuiſees cy-deſſus.

The Chriſtians being badly dealt withall by the Miſcreants, this Iaſper was very conuenently aſſiſted by his meaner Brother (he would haue ſaid the younger) who had a white decking or ornament vpon his harneſſe (he would haue ſaid a white Coate of Armes) to be knowne among his men, and wore a great cloth of white ſilke on his right arme (hee would haue ſaid a Scarfe.) And becauſe he found all the Banners of his Lord and Brother, and his owne likewiſe to bee beaten downe and loſt, hee tooke the white cloth in his hand, and plunged the ſaid Cloth in the bloud of the ſlaine, ſo that it became wholly tincturd of a Red colour; except the midſt of the Cloath which he held in his hand, and remained white. Of this hee made a new Banner, and then he cried: Auſtria, the Seruant of Ieſus Chriſt. Then hee carried himſelfe ſo wonderfully, and with ſuch courage among the Sarrazins, beating downe and killing ſo many, as alſo maiming and ſpoyling them, by the meanes of his quick and ready followers; that hee repayred the Battaile, and the Sarrazins were diſcomfited. Beſide, the good Frederick was ſo hurt and wounded in diuers parts of his Body; that the white decking or ornament wherewith his Armes had beene couered, and whereof I haue ſpoken before, was all dyed and made Red with his owne Bloud: except that which was vnder the handling of his Sword, which continued white. And as the white remained in the handfull of the Cloth: ſo it made a Feſſe amidſt the Vermilion Boud of the Noble Prince for the defence of our Faith. And the Battaile being wonne by the valiant Frederick, hee was ſo well applyed with medicines, and cured of his wounds, that in a ſhort time he was fully healed.

And for a memory of his Victory, the ſaid Frederick (by councell and aduice of his Nobility) bility) changed from thence forward, the ſecond Armes, in ſuch manner as I haue before declared to you.

Thus you ſee what is ſaid by Oliuer de la March.

Concerning the ſoile or earth naturally of Auſtria.

The Hiſtories of Germanie doe deduce the ſubiect of theſe Armes, from the nature and quality of the earth, or ground of Auſtria. Which being Red, and thwarted with the great Siluerie Riuer of Danubius, euen as with a Girdle: hath her ſecond Armes thereby ſo blazoned, without any other Art or cunning. Returne we now againe to ſpeake of Duke Leopolde.

It was the very ſame man, that ſo long time kept King Richard of England Priſoner, whoſe dangerous and hard aduentures wee haue already ſpoken of, at his returne from the Holy Land, in the Tract concerning the Orders of England, in the Second Tome of this great Labour, and the Fortie and Seauenth Page.

The death of Leopolde Duke of Auſtria.

This Leopolde on a day falling from his Horſe, chanced to breake one of his Legs, the affliction whereof cauſing him to deteſt the vanities of the world; hee became an Hermite of Saint Auguſtines Order, leauing his Seigneuries to his two Sonnes Leopolde and Fredericke. And dyed in the yeare of Grace, One Thouſand, One Hundred, Foureſcore and Foureteene. Concerning his two Sonnes:

Fredericke the youngeſt dyed in the Holy Land (when the Emperour Henry the Sixt made his Voyage thither) at the Siege of Damieta, in the yeare, One Thouſand, One Hundred, Foureſcore and Eighteene. And as for his Eldeſt Brother Leopolde, Second of the name, Third Duke of Auſtria, hee dyed in the yeare of Grace, One Thouſand, Two Hundred, and One, leauing three Sonnes, and as many Daughters.

Leopolde the younger his Iſſue.

Henry,
Leopolde; And } All three deceaſing without Iſſue.
Fredericke.

The Daughters were

Margaret, Wife to Ladiſlaus, Marqueſſe of Morauia.

Gertrude, Wife to Henry, Duke of Sueuia in firſt Marriage, and in ſecond to the King of Bohemia Othocarus.

Agnes, Wife to Herman, Duke of Carinthia, and in this Marriage was borne Maynard, who was Counte of Tyroll, Father of one only Daughter, named Haduuiga, that is Auoia, who was Mother to Rodolphe, Counte of Habſpourg, and ſole heire of the Houſe of Auſtria.

Quarrell and debate for the ſucceſsion of Auſtria.

By the death of Frederick, laſt Sonne to Leopolde, Second of the name, there grewe great debate about the Succeſſion of Auſtria, betweene the three Brethren in lawe, and Herman, Marqueſſe of Bada, Husband to Gertrude, Siſter to Henry Firſt Duke of Auſtria, who maintained, that his Wife ought to be preferred before the Daughters of Leopolde.

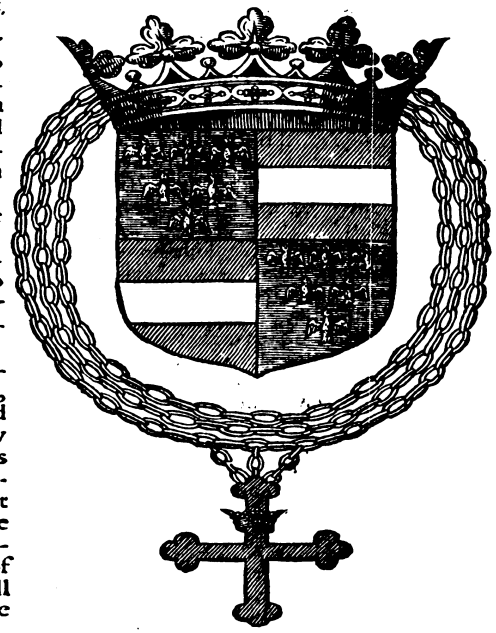
But the King of Bohemia Othocarus, without liſtening to any of thoſe pretenſions; poſſeſſed himſelfe of Vienna, the Capitall Citty of Auſtria, where he builded a Caſtell, and enioyed the Dukedome foureteene yeares, in the right of his Wife Gertrude, whom he cauſed to be poyſoned, to Marrie the Daughter to the King of Hungarie. At the end of the foureteene yeares, he was deſpoyled of the ſaid Dukedom, by the Emperour Rodolphe, Firſt of the name, as we haue already ſaid. And thus came the Dukedome of Auſtria to the houſe of the Countes of Habſpourg, who poſſeſſe it to this day. Such then is the Genealogie of the Marqueſſes, Dukes and Archdukes of Auſtria. Come we now to the Order of Knighthood.

Diuers contend, and a contrary enioyeth.



The

The Order of Knighthood, belonging to Auſtria and Carinthia; And called Of Saint George.

The time of the Orders Inſtitution, and the cauſe.

THE Emperour Fredericke, third of the name, and firſt Archduke of Auſtria, was Authour of The Order of Knights of Saint George; ſo ſaith Wolfangus Lazius, in the third Booke of his Hiſtorie of Auſtria. Which Inſtitution is ſet downe to be in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand foure hundred threeſcore and ten, expreſly ordained, to guard the Frontiers of Germanie, Hungarie, Auſtria, Styria, Carinthia, and to hold head againſt the Turkes, by whoſe ordenary courſes and inuaſions, the Marches were very miſerably waſted.

A White Coat of Armes, and a plaine Red Croſſe.

The Knights of this Order of Saint George. Portoient la Cotte d' Armes Blanche, & la Croix plaine Rouge. The Emperour granted to the firſt Great Maiſter of this Order, the title and qualitie of a Prince, and for the ſoiourning and abiding of him and his deſcendants, Mileſtad, a ſtrong place in the Dukedome of Carinthia, adorned with a Caſtle of defẽce, where was erected a Colledge of Chanons, vnder the Rule of Saint Auguſtine, with a Biſhop, who was to be choſen and elected of their body, for direction in ſpirituall occaſions.

The Empetors largeſſe to this Order.

Beſide Mileſtad, the ſaid Emperour Fredericke gaue to the Order, Lands and Iuriſdictions reuolued to the Seigneurie of Auſtria; by death (without heires) of the Lords of Cranichberg, Lords of Trantmanſdorf, of Skarfenek, and of Saint Pernelle. At the beginning, the Knights of this Order caried themſelues very well, for reſiſtance of the Turkes; but in the end (as all things elſe decline) ſo they became reduced to nothing.

Intent for readuancement of the Order.

The Emperor Maximillian, laſt of the name, would haue replanted and reeſtabliſhed the ſaid Order, by changing the Red Croſſe to another, entoured with a Ducall Crown and wholly of Gold: but vnciuill wars (about diuerſity of Religion) happning in Germanie, quite ſmothered thoſe diuine ſeedes: for Chriſtian Religion is the onely ſure and ſafeſt Foundation, out of which Church there is no ſaluation.

By reading Wolfangus Lazius, in his Hiſtory of Auſtria & Vienna, is proued the perſons of the Marqueſſe Leopolde, vnder the year One thouſand one hundred & foure: Of Othocarus, elected Duke of Styria, in ſtead of Marqueſſe, in Anno 1180. Of Fredericke, Duke of Auſtria and Styria in the yeare One thouſand two hundred twenty fiue. And the ſame Lazius writeth, that in the yeare One thouſand two hundred forty fiue, Fredericke, Duke of Auſtria, on the Feſtiuall day of Saint George (Patron of the moſt part of the Militarie Orders of Chriſtendome) made an hundred and forty Knights of his owne Lands & Seigneuries, in the Citie of Vienna in Auſtria, Anno Domini Milleſimo Ducenteſimo Quadrageſimo Quinto, Fredericus Dux Auſtriæ plenus, & Argento, in Feſto Sancti Georgij Centum Quadraginta Iuuenes de terra ſua Nobiles, apud Viennam honorifice Gladio & Cingulo Militari Donauit.

Order of Poland; called, The Order of the White Eagle.

CHAP. IIII.

The Originall and Genealogie of the Kings of Poland.

How the Country grew to be so named at the first.

Polonia, a great and spacious Prouince, became so called of the word Pole, which in the Sclauonian tongue signifieth A Field or leuell Plaine of Ground, apt and proper for the exercise of Hunting, whereto the Inhabitants being extraordinarily addicted: they were therefore called Polacks, and Polanders, and their Countrey Poland. But by Froissard, and them of his straine Poulaine, as Bohemia Behaigne. By the Romaines, the whole extendure of the Countrey of Poland, Lithuania, Tartaria, and so farre as to the Lands in the North; was called Sarmatia, and the Inhabitants Sarmates, a name perticuler, according as that of Scythia was in generall.

Of the two Brethren Leko and Cieko, & their people.

About the yeare of Grace Fiue hundred and fiftie, two Bretheren, named Leko and Cieko, departing out of Croatia, which made part of Sclauonia (called by the Latines Illyria) with a great number of People, enclosed in too narrow a straite: went to seeke their fortune, for larger liberty, and liuing more at ease. They all betooke themselues towards the North and West Summer parts, and after they had trauersed many Woods and Mountaines, to winne the higher gounds of Pannonia, and to vn-intangle themselues from the Forrest Hyrcynia; they made their setled stay in Bohemia, where Cieko was the first Duke thereof.

Cieko the first Duke of Bohemia.

As for his Brother Leko, hauing got himselfe free from that great Forrest, which Plinie calleth Syluam incompertæ magnitudinis, according as we haue elsewhere said: He tooke the North-Starre for his guide and conduct, and found himselfe (at length) to be in the Champaine Fields of Polonia, where hee stucke downe his Staffe (as we vse to say in a common Prouerbe) establishing his principall abiding in a Marthie ground, seated very difficult for any accesse, about sixe miles from the Riuer of Vuarta. Laying the foundation of his purposed dwelling place, at the first stroake of the Pikaxe or Mattocke; was discouered A Nest of yong Eagles, with fine white downie feathers. And of this Nest, which in the Polish language is called Gnisdo, he would haue the Towne to be built, so named. But in time (which eateth and deuoureth all things) the word was corrupted into that of Guesno, turned by the Latines to that of Guesna.

Strange finding a Nest of yong Eagles.

By valour and force of his Armes, he conquered part of Vandalia, as also of Sarmatia, and caused to be builded a second Towne or Citie, vpon the borders or banks of Visurgis: to which Citie he gaue the name of Brisemia, but afterward called Bresmia. And to preserue the memorie of his first aboade and dwelling, in the forenamed place of Guasda, he tooke for Armes L'Escu du Gueulles à vn Aigle d'Argent.

Two Cities built by Leko in memory of his first Labrding.

It is a matter especially noated by the Naturalists, that Foules or Birds of blacke plumage (such are Eagles and Rauens) being come to their perfection, are all white at their new disclosing. And that Eagles expose their yong ones against the beames of the Sunne, to looke stedfastly vpon his light: and vnderstand by those meanes, whether they be their owne yong, or of other supposed Birds. In the same manner, the Rauens doe forsake and leaue their yong ones, for the space of nine dayes, to try whether they will be vnlike them or no. During which tearme of nine dayes, that these yong creatures are thus abandoned both by Father and Mother: God (who hath care of all his creatures) sendeth them Flies, which flying into their gaping mouthes, doth nourish and sustaine them, vntill their white white downie Feathers be changed, and turned blacke, and then they become acknowledged and nourished by their Parents.

A speciall obseruation of the Naturalists.

This is the Doctrine of the Rabbines, deriued from the eight and thirty Chapter of Iob, King of Edom, and mirrour of patience. Quis præparat Coruo escam suam, quando pulli eius clamant ad Deum, vagantes, eo quod non habeant cibos? Who prouideth for the Rauen his foode? when his yong ones cryeth vnto God, they wander for lacke of meate. Whereunto the Royall Psalmist giuing good respect, in his hundred forty and seauenth Psalme, saith, that the Diuine Prouidence Dat iumentis escam ipsorum; & Pullis Coruorum inuocantibus eum. He giueth to the Beast his foode; and to the yong Rauens that cry. Of this Leko, the Polonians were (for very long time) knowne by the name of Lekites; and Poland called the Prouince and Kingdome of the Lekites, yea, euen now at this day in Greece, Tartaria, Russia, and diuers other neighbouring Countries.

Poland called the Kingdome of the Lekites.

By the death of Leko, Father of twelue Sonnes, the Polonians, being not growne to agreement, which of them they should take for their Prince and Captaine solely by himselfe: liued vnder the command of those twelue, whom (in a full Assembly of their States, held at Guesna, they tooke for their chiefe Lords, and gaue them the name of Voiuodes, vulgarly called Vaiuodes, that is to say, Captaine of the Warre, and Conducters of Troupes: yet remaining with the Vaiuodes of Walachia, Transylvania, Moldauia and others: but at this day it is changed in Poland, to that of Palatine.

Leko his twelue Sonnes.

These Vaiuodes of Leko, to the number of twelue, gouerned Polonia, about two hundred yeares, when this Family, being quite ended: the Polanders would no longer haue so many Maisters to please and content. And therefore, about the yeare of Grace Seauen hundred, they elected for their Duke and Prince, one of their owne Nation, named Crao, who hauing accepted the charge, established his dwelling at a place of his owne Paternall inheritance, a Castle, very highly exalted on the point of a Rocke, called Vetuell: And at the foote was erected a small Towne or Citie, vpon the banke of the Riuer Vistula, giuing also this new built Citie his owne name, calling it Crauia, at this day the Capitall Citie in the great Kingdome of Poland. Within the hollow wombe and bowels of the Rocke Vetuell was the haunt and repaire of a huge and dreadfull Dragon (as to this denne) which deuoured all the men and beasts he could lay hold on. Vntill such time as the said Crao (valiantly resolued) to send daily into the mouth of the Caue three fleane Beasts, whose bellies he had caused to stuffed with a good quantitie of Pitch, Sulphure and small minced straw. So that within some conuenient time, these combustible matter taking fire in the Dragons entrailes, he dyed not very long after.

The first Duke of Poland after the Vaiuodes.

Duke Crao of whom the Citie of Crauia tooke name.

After this Crao succeeded his yongest Sonne Lech, second of the name, third Duke of Poland, slaine by his eldest Brother as hee rode on Hunting, to possesse himselfe of the Dignitie; from which he was expelled, and the Principalitie giuen to Leko the second, murdered by his elder brother.

Venda, Daughter to Duke Crao, and Sister to Leko the second: the Polish word Venda, signifieth a Hooke for a Fisher. This Princesse, shunning and flying from marriage, and thinking to bestow an acceptable gift on her Gods: threw her selfe headlong into the Riuer of Vistula, and by her death, the Polanders elected againe for their Commanders

Twelue Vaiuodes, in manner as before, whose Gouernment being wholly extinguished by the Polanders, as altogether tyrannicall and insupportable: In the yeare of Grace, Seauen hundred and threescore, they chose for their Prince and Lord, one of the worthiest among them, famous for valiancy, named Vaiuodes elected againe as Gouernours.

Premislaus, otherwise called Leko, third of the name, who being deceased without any issue, they elected for his Successour

Lech, fourth of the name, hauing out-run others in the race, wonne a limit prepared to obtaine the Polish Principalitie, whereto hauing attained; he gouerned very happily vntill his death, which happened in the yeare of Grace, Eight hundred and fiue. For he was slaine by Charles, Sonne to our King Charlemaigne, sent by his Father into Bohemia and Poland, to make head against, and to represse the Nations

Charles Son to King Charlemaigne slew Leko the fourth descending into Saxonie, which was conquered by the said Charlemaign. After which Leko succeeded his Sonne

Leko, the fift of that name, who (before his death) ordained Successour his eldest Sonne

Popiellus, called the Auncient, who vsed for his common Oath, and swore continually; That Rats might and should eate him. He liued but a short time, and left for his Successour his Sonne (being very yong)

Popiellus, second of the name, who was left in the Tutelage and Wardship of one of his Vncles by the Fathers side. But when he came to the yeares of capacity to Reigne, he caused them all to dye by poison, with the very chiefest Lords of Poland, which outrage and cruelty was reuenged by the hand of Heauen, in very strange and wonderfull manner. For, out of the dead empoysoned bodies; issued such a huge number of Rats; as violently intruded themselues into the Dukes Pallace, especially (contrary to their nature) by swimming ouer a great Meere or Pond of Water, in the very midst whereof Popiellus the Auncient had caused to be builded a goodly Castell and Dongeon, by him named Cruswicke. They fed vpon him, and deuoured him aliue, with his Children and Wife, by whose wicked counsell, he had put so to death the Lords of Poland.

A wonderfull iudgement of God inflicted on a cruell and bloudy Duke.

By this exemplarie death of him, happening in the yeare of Grace, Eight hundred twenty three; there was some time of Interregnum, which lasted so long, as till (by common consent) the Polacks elected for their Prince a poore man, named Poore Piastus & his decent Dukes of Poland for many yeares.

Piastus, whose descent gouerned Poland a long extendure of yeares, euen vntill the time of Casimire the second, Sirnamed the Great. This Piastus liued sixtcore yeares, and Reigned (almost) threescore of them, leauing for Successour his onely Sonne

Ziemouitius, who Reigned One and thirtie yeares, and left the State to his Sonn:

Leko, sixt of the name, Father of his Sonne and Successour.

Zemomislaus, Father of

The Polacks were Idolaters before their first Christian Duke Miecislaus.

Miecislaus, the first Christian Duke of Poland. Before whose Reigne, the Polacks had for their Gods the Sunne and the Moone, a Tree, a Serpent, or any thing whereupon they first fixed liking. But this man hauing espoused Dambrowca, Daughter to Boleslaus, Duke of Bohemia, who was a Christian: embraced Christianity in the yeare of Grace Nine hundred threescore and fiue. He established in his principality nine Bishopricks, two whereof were raised to be Metropolitane Sees and Archbishopricks, as namely Guesna and Cracouia. The first Archbishop of Cracouia, named Lambert, was sent to Pope Benedict, seauenth of the name, to render him due obedience, as vniuersall Father of the Christians, Successour to Saint Peter, and said to be chiefe Vicare to our Sauiour and Redeemer Iesus Christ on earth: And withall, to entreate his Holinesse, that he would bestow on Miecislaus, the name and title of King. But during the time of this voyage or embassie, the said Prince Miecislaus, chanced to dye, hauing reigned fiue and thirty yeares, in Anno Nine hundred fourescore and nineteene.

The first Archbishop of Cracouia.

Vnder this Duke, the Polish Nobilitie hauing embraced Christianitie, began the Custome, long time afterward exercised in Poland, to vn-sheath their Swords, and hold them aloft with their points vpward, when the Priest went to sing the Gospell, and put them vp againe into their Scabbards, after they had heard Gloria tibi Domine. This was thus done as a signe or token, that they were all readily prepared to fight, and spend their Blood to the very lateſt drop, for defence of the Christian Faith. Next after this Duke Miecesiaus, succeeded his Sonne.

A Custome long time practised in Poland, for defence of Christian Faith.

CHAP. V.

I. Boleslaus, first of the name, to whom the Emperour Otho, third of the name, and Sirnamed the Red (being gon on Pilgrimage to Guesna, to the Sepulcher of the Martire Saint Albert, Martyred in Prussia) gaue the Crowne Royall, as well for himselfe, as also his Successours and descendants. So that he was the first Crowned King of Poland, in the Cathedrall Church of Guesna, the yeare of Grace One thousand and one. Martinus Cromerus and other Historians haue written, that with the Royall title of King, the said Emperour gaue Boleslaus the first King: The Lance of the Knight and Martire Saint Mauritius, reserued and kept yet to this day, in the Cathedrall Church of Craconia. This Boleslaus deceasing in the yeare of Grace One thousand twenty and foure, succeeded his Son

II. Mieceslaus, the second Crowned King of Poland at Guesna, who dyed bereft of his vnderstanding, and vtterly disappointed of iudgement and reason; in the ninth yeare of his Reigne; Of Grace One thousand thirtie foure; and the foure and fortieth of his Age. After his death, there was an Interreguum, thorow the contending and vnderhanding of Pretenders to the Kingdome. And Casimire, Sonne to the King expulsed from Poland, for his madnesse, went priuately to studie at Paris, from whence he retired himselfe into the Abbey of Clugny, where he became a professed Monke and Deacon. The Polanders, after an agreement made among themselues together; withdrew him from Clugny, by permission of the Pope then sitting in the holy Chayre. But the condition was, to pay a pennie for euery head or Commander of a Familie in Poland, as an yearely Patrimonie to Saint Peter: And so

III. Casimire, Sonne to the Franticke Mieceslaus, was Crowned King of Poland at Guesna. He died in the yeare One thousand fiftie & eight, leauing for Successour his eldest Sonne

IIII. Boleslaus, second of the name, Sirnamed the Cruell, who for his bloudy and tyrannicall behauiour, was (after a full Consultation, held in the Generall Tearme time for Poland) dispossessed of the Kingdome. Among other of his notorious Assassinates and murders, was that of Saint Stanislaus, Archbishop of Craconia, Successour to Lambert. Boleslaus, despoyled of all his goods, was constrained to make his retreate into Hungarie, where he slew himselfe, and his body was giuen burial in the Churchyard of the Monasterie of Osoy in Carinthia; where yet is to be seene his Tomb, and on it the representation of a Horse, couered with a Foote cloath, and for a Legend round about it, these words. Rex Poloniæ Boleslaus, Occisor Sancti Stanislai Episcopi Craconiensis. After Boleslaus (expulsed from the Kingdome) in the yeare One thousand threescore & nineteene; succeeded next his Brother

V. Ladislaus, first of the name, in the yeare One thousand fourescore and two (who would not take on him the title of King, during the life time of his Brother) but stiled him Prince, Heire of Poland. By Prayers which he caused to be made in the Church of Saint Giles (whose body was buried in Languedocke, in the Citie bearing sometime name of a Countie, but to this day the title of that holy Hermite, a Native of Athens) he obtained a Sonne by Iudith his wife, Daughter to Ratislaus, Duke of Bohemia. He dyed in the yeare of Grace One thousand one hundred and two, leauing a legittimate Sonne, named Boleslaus and a Bastard, called Sbigneo, to whom he gaue Massonia, the higher Polonia, Pomeranica and Prussia: This was the first deuision made of the Kingdome of Poland.

VI. Boleslaus, third of the name, tooke the Title of Prince of Poland, as his Father ther before him had done. Sbigneo his Baſtard Brother, would needes exalt himſelfe againſt him; but he brought him to tearmes of ductie and obedience, leauing him but the Dukedome of Maſſouia, taking into his owne hands the higher Poland, Pomerania and Pruſsia. The Emperour Henry the fourth would haue made Poland tributarie to the Empire; but hee was ouerthrowne in a fought battaile: ſo that the Emperour was compelled to come to agreement, and to treate on Peace with the Polonians, which was combined by a double Alliance, as namely Adela the Emperours ſiſter, to marrie with Boleſlaus, a Widdower of his firſt Wife; and Chriſtina, Daughter to the ſaid Emperour, with Ladiſlaus, Sonne to the ſame Boleſlaus. Hee dyed in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand one hundred thirty nine. By his firſt wife he had but one Sonne, named

VII. Ladiſlaus, ſecond of the name, to whom the Father gaue for his lot and portion the Soueraignty of Poland, with the Seigneuries of Cracouia, Siradia, Lancitia, Sileſia and Pomerania. By his ſecond wife, Adela, he left Boleſlaus the Friſian, who had the Lands of Maſſouia, Dobrizin, Cuiauia and Culma.

Miceiſlaus, who was Lord of Gneſna, Poſnania and of Calaſsia: He was Sirnamed the Auncient, for his wiſedome and cunning.

Henry, Lord of Sandomiria, and of Lublina: And Cazimire, in ſwadling cloathes at his Fathers death, but he gaue charge to his Bretheren, to make him an equall part of their goods, when he ſhould come to yeares of gouerning his Eſtate. Thus were portioned the Sonnes of the ſecond Bed to Boleſlaus, after whoſe death Ladiſlaus his eldeſt Sonne, not well contented with thoſe proportions; following the counſell of his wife (a woman of a high and mounting ſpirit, by being Daughter and Siſter to Emperours:) made warre vpon his other Bretheren, who holding all louingly together, vanquiſhed his Armie, enforcing him to forſake Poland, as the like they did to his Wife and Children, who retreated themſelues to Conrad, King of the Romaines. So that in the yeare One thouſand one hundred fortie and ſixe, by conſent of the Brethren, and aduiſe taken at the Generall Tearmes.

VIII. Boleſlaus, fourth of the name, (called the Friſian, in regard his Haire was frizeled or curled) was elected Soueraigne of Poland: who after the death of Ladiſlaus, expelled from Poland, vſed courteſie towards the Sonnes that were his Nephewes.

Boleſlaus, Sirnamed the Haughtie.
Miceciſlaus; And Conrad, Sirnamed the Lame or Cripple.

Whom he cauſed to returne from Germanie into Poland, where he gaue them Sileſia for their maintenance. This Boleſlaus the Friſian was a valiant Prince, and in the yeare One thouſand one hundred threeſcore and foure, he compelled them of Pruſsia to burne their Idols, and to receiue the Faith of Ieſus Chriſt. But ſoone after they returned to their vomit againe, and ouerthrew the Army of Boleſlaus, whoſe Brother Henry was ſlaine in the Field, and deceaſing ſo without Children; his portion fell to Cazimire. Boleſlaus dyed in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand one hundred threeſcore and thirteene, leauing one onely Son, named Leko.

After the death of Boleſlaus, his Bretheren and the Princes their Nephewes of Sileſia, with the Generall Tearmes aſſembled together, elected for Soueraign Prince of Poland

IX. Miceſlaus, ſecond of the name, Sonne of Ladiſlaus the ſecond, and Brother to him dead; whoſe trackes and vertues he followed not, ſhining moſt gloriouſly in ſo good a Prince; becauſe he addicted himſelfe to all tyrannie, for which he was depoſed from his Principality at the General Tearmes, and in his place was aduanced his yonger Brother

X. Cazimire, ſecond of the name, who dyed by an impoyſoned drinke or amourous potion, which was giuen him by a Woman, of whom he would haue had his pleaſure, in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand one hundred foureſcore and twelue. By Helena his wife he left two Sonnes,

Leko. And

Conrad, Duke of Maſſouia and of Cuiauia.

The Generall Tearmes being held at Cracouia, they there elected for Soueraigne of Poland, the eldeſt Sonne of Cazimire

XI. Leko, ſixt of the name, Sirnamed the White and the Faire, by reaſon of his goodly Haire. He was ſlaine by Swantopolus, whom he had made Captaine of Pomerania, in the yeare One thouſand two hundred twenty & ſeauen. By his death

XII. Conrad, Duke of Maſſouia, Brother to him deceaſed, vſurped Poland, and got to himſelfe the Treaſures and perſon of XIII. Boleſlaus, called the Chaſte (Sonne to Leko the ſixt) fift of the name, who during the warre of the Tartares, found meanes to ſhield himſelfe from the guard of his Vnckle Conrad, and withdrawing to his Caſtles of Sandomiria, was receiued into the Caſtell of Cracouia. And therefore his Vnckle Conrad made ſharpe Warre vpon him, wherein he died, the yeare of Grace One thouſand two hundred forty ſeauen: And Boleſlaus gouerned the Kingdome of Poland the ſpace of thirty ſeauen yeares.

He was Sirnamed the Chaſte, becauſe he liued ſanctimoniouſly with his Wife Kungenda, Daughter to Bela King of Hungarie, a moſt deuout and Religious Princeſſe: but her Husband being deceaſed without iſſue, in the yeare One thouſand two hundred threeſcore and foureteene, the Gouernment of Poland came to

XIV. Henry, Sirnamed the Bearded man, deſcended of the Dukes of Vratiſlauia, who had for Succeſſour

XV. Leko, ſeauenth of the name, Sirnamed the Blacke, Sonne of Cazimire, eldeſt Son to Conrad, Duke of Maſſouia, who left foure Sonnes Cazimire.

Boleſlaus.
Miceſlaus; And Zemouido.

Cazimire eldeſt Sonne, was Father to Zemouido, Duke of Guiauia, and to Ladiſlaus, Duke of Poland.

Zemouido, Duke of Guyauia, was Father to

Leko; to Primiſlaus, afterward King; And to Cazimire.

Now, concerning Ladiſlaus, Duke of Poland, he was Father of Elizabeth, Queen of Hungarie: And of Cazimire, King of Poland.

Come we now againe to Leko, or Lesko the Blacke, who being dead in the yeare One thouſand two hundred foureſcore and nine:

XV. Boleſlaus his Brother, Duke of Maſſouia, ſixt of the name, ſucceeded him, being choſen to that charge at the Generall Tearmes. But bearing himſelfe (euen from the beginning) with ouer-head-ſtrong violence; he was depoſed and diſplaced from the dignitie, in which reſpect, he is not reckoned to hold degree in rancke, but his Predeceſſour and he are accounted but as one man. And then the Office was generally giuen to

XVI. Henry, Duke of Sileſia, ſirnamed the Honeſt-man. He dyed poyſonned by them of Sileſia, in the yeare One thouſand two hundred foureſcore and tenne. After whoſe death there was Interregnum fiue yeares in Poland: And then at the Generall Tearmes was elected by common voyce

XVII. Primiſlaus, ſecond of the name, formerly Duke of Pomerania, & of the higher Poland, who was Sacred and Crowned King of Poland, by Iames Sumca, Archbiſhop of Gneſna, in the Metropolitane Church of the ſaid place, in the Moneth of Iune One thouſand two hundred foureſcore and fifteene. His Reigne laſted no longer then ſeauen Months and eleauen daies, being on a day (in the Lent ſeaſon) ſurprized at his Table by the Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg and his own Nephewes, who brooked it enuiouſly, that the ſaid Primiſlaus had bin ſo preferred. After his death, at the Generall Tearmes was choſen to be their King

XVIII. Ladiſlaus, fift of the name, and Sirnamed Locktek, Brother to Lesko the Blacke, a Prince of faire hope: but ſeeing himſelfe exalted to the Royall Dignitie, he abuſed it greatly, wallowing in all kindes of vices, ſo that at the Generall Teames, aſſembled and held at Cracouia; the ſaid Ladiſlaus, was depoſed, who had Reigned no longer then three yeares, but not Crowned, neither neither had any other Title, then Heire to the Kingdome. And in his place, Anno, One thousand three hundred:

XIX. Wenceslaus, King of Bohemia was elected King of Poland, Sacred and Crowned at Guesna. He espoused Rixa, onely Daughter (to King Primislaus, slaine by his Nephewes, as you haue heard) and consequently Heire to the Kingdome of Poland. After they were returned backe to Bohemia, the deposed Ladislaus entred againe into Poland, and made himselfe Maister of some Castles there. As he purposed on further triall of his fortune, Wenceslaus chanced to dye in the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred and fiue, whose death serued him for a great aduantage, to make him Maister of Craconia. So that, as well in regard of his valiancie, as some good hope conceiued by the Polacks, of correcting his former depraued manners, the said

XX. Ladislaus was reseated in the Kingdome, and by the consent of Pope Iohn the two and twentieth, sitting then in Auignion; at the Generall Tearmes held at Craconia the twentieth day of Ianuarie, in the yeare One thousand three hundred and twenty: He was Sacred and Crowned King of Poland in the great Church of Craconia, where the Ornaments Royall, to wit, the Crowne, Sword, Scepter and Apple or Ball of Gold, were brought thither from Guesna. And after that time, the preferrence for Sacring and Crowning the Kings of Poland, was translated from Guesna to Craconia. This Ladislaus had a Sonne and a Daughter:

Elizabeth, who was Queene of Hungarie; And Cazimire.

Who being come to the age of sixeteene yeares, was married by his Father in Anno One thousand three hundred twenty and fiue to the Daughter of Gedemin, Duke of Lithuania, an Idolatrous Princesse. But after she had bin Cathechised and enstructed in the Christian Faith, by the Bishop of Craconia; she was Baptized, and named Anne. By the death of Ladislaus, happening in the Moneth of March, One thousand three hundred thirty and three, his Sonne

XXI. Cazimire, third of the name, called the Great, was Sacred and Crowned King of Poland, with his wife in the Church of Craconia, the fiue and twentieth day of Aprill, in the yeare before exprimed. His Reigne was seauen and thirty yeares, during which time, he heaped on Poland all wealth & happinesse, he made the Church of Royall structure; the Cities, Townes and strong places of the Land, notably witnessed the Greatnesse of this Prince, who neuer had his equall in Poland: and therefore after his death, he was (vpon good and iust cause) Sirnamed Cazimire the Great. He dyed in the moneth of Nouember, the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred threescore and ten, the sixtieth of his Age, and seauen and thirtieth of his Reigne: not leauing any masle childe begotten in lawfull mariage; nor had he but three Daughters, to wit

Heduiga, that is, Auoye

Elizabeth: And

Anne.

Wherefore, after his death, the Polanders were bandied and deuided into many factions a part. For some fauoured Lewes King of Hungarie, Sonne of Elizabeth, Sister to the late deceased King Cazimire. And this Faction finding themselues to be the strongest; hee was brought into Poland, whereof he was Crowned King, the very same yeare as Great Cazimire died.

Others tooke part with Voladislaus, Cousine in the third degree to King Cazimire that was dead, as is written by Martinus Cromerus, in the thirteenth Booke of his Historie, whom we follow in these our abbreuiations. And therefore it is necessary to obserue the Originall of this Voladislaus.

Cazimire, Father to Lesko the blacke, Duke of Poland, and to Zemouido, Duke of Guiania; And to Ladislaus Locktek, fift of the name, King of Poland.

Zemouido, Duke of Guiania had three Children.

Lesko.

Primislaus: And

Cazimire, Duke of Guyania and of Massouia, who was Father to Voladislaus, Sirnamed the white Duke: And to Elizabeth.

This

This is the same Voladislaus the White, with whom tooke part some Princes and Lords of Poland.

Now Cazimire the Great, seeing that he had none but Daughters, and that by the Law of the Kingdome of Poland, Daughters were excluded from it, and the neerest Prince masle (able to succeede in the Crowne of Poland) was this Voladislaus the white his Cousine: He bent himselfe directly against him, and deprined him of the Dukedomes belonging to his Father. So that this poore Prince was compelled to forsake Poland, and to seeke for shelter in Germanie. Where yet not finding himselfe in safety, he came into France, there to awaite the death of Cazimire his mortall enemy. But his long life, and very vrgent necessities, forced Voladislaus to become a Monke in the Abbey of the Cisteaux, in the Dioceese of Chalon, about three miles from Dijon, where he submitted himselfe, and was professt. But being vnable to endure the austerity of this Order, he was entertained among the Religious Conuerts, in the Abbey of Saint Benigne at Dijon. After the death of Cazimire the Great, the Lords of Poland sent to giue aduertisement at Dijon, concerning the death of his enemy, and that he was desired in Poland, whether he should come with all the speede he could possibly make.

The hard and dissastrous fortunes, whereto the Prince was driuen.

Voladislaus obtained of Pope Clement (being then in Auignion) a dispensation for his profession, and to be re-enabled, for holding rule in the Kingdome of Poland, whereunto he was trauailing the second time. But he dyed at Strasbourge in Germanie, and appointed by his testament, that his body should be carried to Saint Benigne at Dijon, where, in the midst of the goodly body of the Church, is to be seene the Monument of this Prince Monke. It is a great Tombe of Stone onely, exalted from the ground about three fingers in height, whereon is engrauen the Picture of this Prince, habited according to the manner of the blacke Monkes of Clugny, the Order of Saint Benedict, holding the very same of Saint Benigne. On his head is placed a Dukes Crowne, and on either side are the Escutcheons of his Armes: Qui sont ne Aigle party d'vn Lyon rempant, without any other Blazons. About the Tombe is engrauen this Epitaphe.

When hope had attained to the heighth, death disappointed all.

The Epitaph on the Tombe of Voladislaus.

Hic iacet vir illustris & deuotus Dominus Voladislaus quondam Dux Albus Poloniæ, Monachus huius Monasterij per plures annos existens: postmodum dispensatus per Papam, pro successione Regni Poloniæ, obyt in ciuitate Argentinâ hic eligens sepeliri. Anno Domini Millesimo Trecentesimo Octuagesimo Octauo. 1. Kalend. Marty. Anima requiescat in pace. Amen.

In the person of this Voladislaus ended the Ligne of Piastus, which had held the Crowne of Poland, for the space of fiue hundred and fifty yeares. And for better vnderstanding the hard aduentures of this miserable Prince: the reading of the Bull for his dispensation, will giue the best intelligence.

The Copie of the Bull of Dispensation, granted by Pope Clement to the Prince Voladislaus.

CLEMENS EPISCOPVS SERVVS SERVORVM DEI, dilecto filio Ladislao vocato Voladislao quondam Casimiri Ducis Cuyauiensis nato Militi, Voladislauo de Diocesi, salutem & Apostolicam benedictionem. Sedes Apostolica pia mater animarum, salutem desideranter affectans, personis sibi deuotis generosi sanguinis claritate fulgentibus, libenter fauet benignitatis gratiam impertitur, in illis præsertim per quas salus humana creditur promouenda. B. DE CVRIA CALVETI.

The Hiſtory of this Prince, is (as other of the ſame nature are) a Mirrour or depicted Table of humaine inconſtancie: whereto Great men are a thouſand times more ſubiect, then thoſe that are made of meaner temper, that climbe not, but walke contentedly on plaine ground.

After the death of Cazimire the Great:

XXII. Lewis King of Hungarie, his Nephew, by reaſon of Queene Elizabeth, Siſter to the ſaid Cazimire, was Sacred King of Poland in the Cathedrall Church of Craconia, the ſame yeare as Cazimire the Great, his Vnckle died, the Seauenteenth day of Nouember, by the Archbiſhop of Gueſna. Hee reigned Twelue yeares, and died in Anno One thouſand three hundred foureſcore and two, leauing behinde him but two Daughters:

Maria; And Haduiga.

After his death, there happened Interregnum in Poland, the Polonian Barons being deuided into three ſeuerall heads by themſelues: the firſt whereof fauoured the cauſe of Voladiſlaus the White (as wee haue already ſaid) but that ſide found it ſelfe to bee the weakeſt. An other ſide would needs mount to the Kingdome Sigiſmond, Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg; who had eſpouſed Mary of Poland and Hungarie, Eldeſt Daughter to King Lewes. And the Lords of the third ſide, were affected to the youngeſt Daughter Heduiga, whom the ſaid King Lewes had promiſed in mariage to William, (Sonne to Leopolde, Duke of Auſtria, as we haue formerly related to you) whom he had deſigned for King of Polonia, and entreated the Palatines of Polonia Kingdome, to receiue him as their King. Which they would not doe, as fearing not to finde ſufficient ſupporte from his houſe, to ſhield and defend them from their enemies. Neuertheleſſe, it fell out, that this third part preuailed; becauſe the Palatines (aſſembled at Siradia) reſolued to take for their Queene Heduiga, for whom they ſent (within a while after) into Hungarie, to demaund her of the Queene her mother. According to this reſolution at the Generall Tearmes, the Princes was conducted to Poland by Demetrius, Archbiſhop of Strigonia, and Cardinall with the title of foure Crownes; by John Archbiſhop of Chanadia, and many other great Lords of Hungaria: Shee was Sacred and Crowned at Craconia in the Moneth of October, One thouſand three hundred foureſcore and foure, by the Archbiſhop of Gueſna Bozenta, and gouerned (for ſome time) the Kingdome of Poland her ſelfe alone. King Lewes her Father had aſſured her to William of Auſtria to whom ſhe bare great affection: but the Polonians did not thinke well of the matche, and began to contemne the Gouernement of their Princeſſe: becauſe all men (euen by naturall inſtinct as it were) doe ill endure the commaund of a woman. For, they will be commaunded by their like, and not by a woman; whom all Lawes, both diuine and humaine, haue ſubiected to Man.

In the time of this diſcontent, Iaiellon, the great Duke of Lithuania, ſent his Brethren as Ambaſſadours into Poland, to preſent and offer himſelfe and his eſtates to the Polanders and their Queene; with Couenants and Conditions, to abiure Idolatry, and hee and his people to embrace the Chriſtian Religion, vniting alſo inſeparably (for euer after) to the Crowne of Poland, the great Dukedome of Lithuania, and the neighbouring Prouinces vnder his obedience.

Lithuania, is a Prouince of very long and large extendure, which hath limittes and confines Maſſouia, Pruſſia and Samogitia: On the Eaſt ſide it is bounded with with Moscouia, and on the South with Roxolania: her Capitall and Metropolitane Citty is Vilna, the Bishops See. All the Regions are seated vnder the North Starre, which is the Pole Artick. We formerly spake, concerning the mariage of the King of Poland Cazimire the Great, to the Daughter of Gedimin, the Great Duke of Lithuania, who left Seauen Children, the Eldest whereof named

Olgerdo, was Father to Iagellon, Skirgello,
Koribut,
Vigunt; And Borziſoh.

Who were Ambassadours for their Eldest Brother Iagellon, to the Polonians & their Queene Anna, to whom they came at Craconia, where being instructed and Catechised; he was with his Brethren Baptized in the Cathedrall Church of Cracouia, the Foureteenth day of February, Anno, One thousand three hundred foureſcore and sixe, by the Archbishop of Gneſna Bozenta, and held at the Font by John Bishop of Cracouia, the mariage being sollemnized the same day. Iagellon at his Baptisme was named Ladiſlaus, and his three Brethren Baptized with him, called in their Idolatry Skirgello, Koribut and Vigunt, were Christened, and named at the Font of Baptisme Boleſlaus, Cazimire and Alexander. In this manner were Kings of Poland

XXIII. Ladiſlaus, Sixt of the name, Sirnamed Iagellon, and his Queene & Wife Heduiga, or Auoya.

Who in the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred foureſcore and Seauen, causſed the Lithuanians to be Baptized, and built the Cathedrall Church of Vilna, in the very same place, where the Idolatrous Lithuanians maintained and worshipped the Fire, which they called Sacred. Queene Heduiga dying in Childebed, Ladiſlaus tooke in second mariage, Anne, Daughter to William Count of Cilia, and the youngeſt Daughter of Cazimire the Great, King of Poland: which mariage was celebrated at Cracouia in the yeare, One thousand foure hundred. And the same yeare he Instituted the Vniuerſity of Cracouia, causing Professours and Doctours Regents to come thither, from that of Prage in Bohemia.

By his second Wife he had a Daughter, named Heduiga, Wife to Frederick, Eldest Son to Frederick, Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg, Burgraue of Nuremberg.

Ladiſlaus in third mariage espouſed Elizabeth, Daughter to a Palatine of Poland, by whom he had no issue: but being maried the fourth time, he had Sophia, Daughter to Andrewe of Kiouia, whom he maried in the yeare, One thousand foure hundred twenty two, and in this mariage had three Sonnes.

Ladiſlaus, after King,
Cazimire, dying an Infant; And an other Cazimire, Gouernour of Lithuania.

Ladiſlaus died full of yeares, in the yeare of Grace One thousand foure hundred thirty and foure, hauing reigned Two and fifty yeares. He deuided the Armes of Poland with them of Lithuania, which are De Gueules au Chevalier armé d'Argent, a la rondele d'Azur chargé d'vn Croix Patriarchale d'Or: Which the Kings of Poland haue retained to this present.

XXIIII. Ladiſlaus, Seauenth of the name, came to the Crowne of Poland by the death of his Father Ladiſlaus Iagellon: he was likewise elected King of Hungarie. Hauing assembled a puissant Army, he would make warre vpon the Turke, and passing Romania, he came into Macedon, where he fought a furious Battaile against the Turke, whereof he had the honour and victory, returning laden with many spoyles, In the tenth yeare of his Reigne, he would aduenture vpon the Turke againe, and went to besiedge Nicopolis, called Schilltath, the Metropolitane Citty of Bulgaria, where he met with the Turke (who had foure times more men then he) at Varna: but was ouerthrowne by the Turkes in the yeare of Grace, 1444, in the one and thirtieth yeare of his Age, the Fourth of his Reigne in Hungarie, and tenth in the Kingdome of Poland.

After the Battaile hee could not be found either dead or a liue, for some haue written, that both his Horse and He were swallowed vp together in the Sea. But others say, that sauing himselfe by the helpe of his Spurres, hee went to spend spend the rest of his dayes disguised like a Pilgrim, wandring thorow the World: and that hee dyed at Ieruſalem, or else at Saint James of Compoſtella. But howsoeuer it was, hee dyed without Children: so that his Brother

XXV. Cazimire, Fourth of the Name, Gouernour of Lithuania, was King of Poland, Crowned in the yeere of Grace, 1447. the 25. day of June. In the yeere 1453. he tooke to Wife Elizabeth, Daughter to Albert, King of the Romans, of Bohemia, and Hungarie, Archduke of Austria: by whom hee had sixe Sonnes, and seuen Daughters.

The Sonnes were,

Ladiſlaus, King of Hungarie and Bohemia, Husband to Madame Anne of France.
John Albert,
Alexander,
Sigismond, sur named the Great, } All three Kings of Poland.
Cazimire, deceasing young; and
Frederick, Archbishop of Gneſna, Bishop of Cracouia, and Cardinal of Poland.

Concerning the Daughters, the eldest, named

Heduiga, was married to George, Duke of Bauaria.

Sophia was Wife to Frederick, Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg.

Anne, wife to Bogeſlaus, Duke of Stetina.

Barbara, Wife to George, Marqueſſe of Misnia.

Elizabeth, wife to the Duke of Leginis.

Iane
And } Both dying vnmaried.
Margaret

King Cazimire died of the Tisick, in the yeare of Grace, 1492. the 46. of his Reigne, and 81. of his Age.

His Second Sonne

XXVI. John Albert succeeded him in the Kingdome of Poland, Crowned the 27. day of August, in the yeare of his Fathers deceasse, and Reigning but nine yeares, died of an Apoplexi, in the yeare, 1501. He had for succeſſour his brother

XXVII. Alexander, Sacred & Crowned King of Poland by the Cardinall Frederick his Brother the 12. of December in the said yeare 501. His Reigne was of short continuance, and full of affliction to him, by reason he was falne into a long, lingring and incurable disease, and died without issue at Vilna in Lithuania the 19. day of August 506. the fift yeare of his Reigne; And then succeeded after him the Duke of Glogonia, his Brother

XXVIII. Sigiſmond, called the Great, elected King of Poland the Eighth day of December, in the said yeare, 506. Sacred and Crowned the 24. day of Ianuary following. He was sirnamed the Great, because he was endued with all those vertues, which make a Prince affected of his Subiects. He was married two seuerall times, his first wife was Barbara, Daughter to Count Stephen, Palatine of Transſiluania, and in this mariage was borne their only Daughter Heduiga, wife to the Electour Ioachim, Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg.

In second Mariage he espouſed Bonna of Millayne, Daughter to John Galeazzo Sforza, Duke of Millayne, and Isabell of Arragon, with whom hee liued Thirty yeares, and by her had foure Daughters, and one Sonne.

The Daughters were

Elizabeth, Wife to John or Ianuſius, King of Hungarie.
Sophia,
Anne, Wife to John, King of Sweden: and in this Marriage, was borne Sigiſmond, Third of the Name, King of Poland. And Katherine.

The Sonne was named

Sigiſmond, King of Poland, Second of the Name.

Sigiſmond the Great died aged foureſcore and two yeeres (hauing reigned fortie and two) in the yeere of Grace, 1548. the first day of Aprill: after whom succeeded his oncly Sonne.

XXIX. Sigiſmond Auguſtus, the nine and twentieth King of Poland, being aged tenne yeeres, and so Sacred, and Crowned in the life time of his Father; with whom hee reigned eighteene yeeres; and alone, foure and twentie yeeres. Hee had three Wiues: as namely, Elizabeth of Auſtria, eldest Daughter to the Emperour Ferdinand, King of Hungarie and of Bohemia, Brother to the Emperour Charles the Fift. The Second, was Barbara de Radzille, Daughter to a Count Palatine of Poland. And the last, was Katherine of Auſtria, Sister of his first Wife: but by them all three, hee had not any Issue. Hee died the seuenth day of July, 1572.

His sickenesse hauing beene of very long continuance, and iudged incurable, King Charles the ninth, and the Queene mother Katharine de Medicis, sent into Poland, Iohn Iacques de Monluc, Lord of Balagny (made Marshall of France in the yeare foureſcore and fourteene) to sound the Lords of Poland, and to worke so in the matter of Election, that fauour might be afforded for Monsieur Alexander of France, Duke of Anion, and brother to the King. There were many Princes, that aspired to this Election, as namely:

Princes that aspired to the Election of Poland.

Monsieur, Brother to the King.

The Archduke Ernestus (Sonne to the Emperour Maximilian) aged twelue or Thirteene yeares.

Sigismond, Sonne to Iohn, King of Sweden, and Anne, Daughter of Poland, aged but eight yeeres onely.

Basilius Ioannida, Great Duke of Moscouia.

The Duke of Saxonie.

The Duke of Prussia, Marqueſſe of Brandenbourge.

And the Waynode of Transyluania.

Ambaſſadors sent into Poland from the Chriſtian Princes and the Turke.

At the Assembly held of the Generall Tearmes, begun first at Varsouia the tenth day of Aprill, and afterward continued at Plosko; the Princes of Christendome, and the Great Turke also, sent thither their Ambassadours. Pope Gregorie the thirteenth then sitting, sent thither as his Ambassadour the Cardinall Commendon: He that came from the Emperour, was Dom Guillaume des Vrsins, Lord of Reemsbergue: The King sent thither Iohn de Monluc, Bishop of Valencia, and Guy de Sainct Gelais, Lord of Lanſac, Knight of the Order, and Knight of Honor to the Queene Mother. The King of Spaine, Dom Philip the second, had there for his Ambassadour Dom Pedro Fazardo, Marqueſſe de Veles: And the Great Turke sent thither one of his Chaus, with his Chiefe Physician: who were heard alone in the Assembly of the Polanders, to whom they said, that the Great Turke their Maister sent to let them know, that of the Pretenders to their Kingdome, there was not any one, whom he thought worthier to be accepted, then the Prince of France.

At the beginning of the Assembly at Varsouia, the Ambassador for Spaine demanded Precedency for the King his Master, against him for France, as wel in the Church as in the publique (as we haue shown in our second Booke, fol. 293.) And that to these ends he had audience before them from the Pope and the Emperour, & before them for France. The Lords of Poland adiudged yet the Precedency to the King, so that his Ambassadors had audience next to them from the Pope, & the Emperor Maximilian the second, and he from Spaine, who was admitted to speake next after them for France, not brooking any rebuke before so notable an Assembly of the Princes of Christendome, left off his Ambassage, and returned backe from Poland.

Consideration of the Ambaſſadors condition.

The qualities of these Ambassadors were commendable; as well in regard of their Masters, the most Illustrious Princes of Christendome; as of their own Houses in particuler. That of the Vrsines is knowne as well in France, as in Germanie and Italie, of whence they are originally descended, both of Naples & of Rome du Mont Iourdain. As for them of France, they were brought thither by one of their Vnckles, Messire Neapolin des Vrsins, Bishop of Mentz. The first was Peter Iuuenall des Vrsins, Father to Concerning the defect of the Vrſines.

Iohn Iuuenall des Vrsins, Aduocate in the Parliament, and Garde de la Preuoste des Marchans, for King Charles the sixt; afterward Attorney Generall in the Parliament of Paris, and Chancellour to the Dauphine Charles the seauenth. Which Iohn Iuuenal was Father to Messire Iohn Iuuenall des Vrsins, first Councellor, & Maister of the Requests to the said Dauphine Charles the seauenth, afterward King; and afterward Attorney Generall in the Parliament of Paris transferred to Poictiers; next Bishop of Beauuais, of Laon, & finally Archbishop of Rheimes, prime Peere of France: And of Peter Iuuenall des Vrsins, Patriarch of Antioch: Of William Iuuenall des Vrsins, Baron of Trainel in Champaigne, Chancellor of France. In the Church of Paris, in the Chappell of the Vrsins, is to be seene the Genealogie of the said Vrsines, on a great Table, fastened to the wall on the right hand, with those Armes which we haue obserued in the Order of the Holy Ghost. Armes which Volateranus in his Philologia writeth, to haue bin giuen by the Senate and people of Rome, to Primienus and Vrsinus, Sons of Caius Vrsinus, Captain of Spoletum.

Now,

Now, as concerning the House of Monluc, which commeth from Condomois in Gascogne; it hath produced a great number of valliant Captaines and learned Prelates: among whom was Iohn de Monluc, Bishop of Valencia, the best speaking man of all the Prelates in his time. He was brother to Blaise de Monluc, who hath sufficiently described himselfe (and in most liuely coullers) in his succinct and sweete Commentaries, written with his owne hand, euen as if he had fought like to an other Cæsar. He was also (for his valiancy) made Knight of the Order, and Marshall of France by King Henry the Third, in the yeare One thousand fiue hundred threeſcore and foureteene, at his returne from Poland.

Of the Family of Monluc.

The Armes of this House are D'Azur a vn Loup rampant d'Or, Eſcartele d'Or a vn Tourteau de Gueules: as I haue seene at Saint Peters of Condome, in the Funerall hearding of the Church, for buriying the said Bishop of Valencia, and Marshall Monluc. Which Blaise de Monluc in the last quarter of his Armes, in stead of a dogge or a three-Wolfe, placed a Birch or three-Wolfe of Gold, which are the Armes of the Citty of Siena, and which the people thereof tooke, to keepe in memorie the braue defence of the Siedge, which the Emperour Charles the Fift had laid thereto, engirding it with all his forces. All those of his defence, haue still retained the said Birch-Wolfe in the last quarter of their Armes. Iames de Monluc, Lord of Balagny, Prince of Carbonay, made Marshall of France by King Henry the Great, bare aboue all his Armes (such as Blaise de Monluc his Vnckle did) those of Cambray, which are D'Or a trois Lyons leans paſſants d'Azur coronnez de meſme, euglez & Linguez de Gueules. This was the same Lord of Balagny, that began the negotiation of Poland, for Monsieur Alexander Henry of France.

The Armes of Monluc.

The Armes of Siena in Italie.

The House of Saint Gelais, is issued of the Auncient and Illustrious House of Lusignan, the roote and stock of so many Emperours and Kings of Ierusalem, Cypres and of Armenie, as also of Constables of France. Ils portent Eſcartele Le Premier & Quatrieſme de Cinq pointz d'Azur, equipolez a Quatre d'Argent. Au Second & Troiſieſme d'Argent au Lyon de Gueules, coronne d'Or. Pour tenants et ſupports deux Griffons d'Or, & pour Cimier pellaſina: as wee haue formerly noated, in the Taste of the Knights of the Order of the Holy-Ghost.

Concerning the Famous House of Lusignan.

As concerning that of Fazardo, it is very highly renowned in Spayne, in the Kingdome of Murcia. The first dwelling of them of that Sirname, was in the Kingdome of Galicia, in the City of Sancta Maria de Hertigueira, that is to say of Hortia. And therefore they tooke Armes speaking thereof, and answering to the place of their auncient Mannour, to wit. Trois tiges de Hortie de Synople en Champ d'Or, chaqueige ayant ſept fueilles, plantees en eſtiences ſur trois Roches en mottes de Terre, ſortans de ſix ondes d'Argent, & d'Azur en pointe.

The descent of the House of Fazardo.

The first of this Linage was the Counte Dom Roderigo de Romaes, Lord of Monterroſo and Gallicia, who trauayling in the world, brought out of England a Princesse of the Royall House of England, with whom he came to dwell at Sancta Maria de la Hortis, the Princesse being named Milia. This Coun Dom Roderigo was Sonne to the Counte Dom Raimond, Son to the King of Leon Froila. Of this mariage of Roderigo and Milia, descended Houses and Families bearing sundry Sirnames, as of Fazardo, Zuera, Bahamon de Gallego, Monterroſo, Xutico, Segnorino, and of Lugo, all which beare the Armes of the Hertiaes formerly emblazoned; except the Bahamondes, who to conſerue the memory of their Mother Princesse of England: Portorent d'Azur à vne M. d'Or, Coronne de meſme, a la Bordure de Gueules, Orlee d'Or, charge de ſept Perſſons d'Argent.

Dom Roderigo de Romaes and his armes.

Houses descended of the said Roderigo and Milia.

After the Battaile Des Naues de Tolsa, the most part of these Families changed their Armes, to make knowne, that they were present at a day of so great Honour. Those of Gallego, retained still the Hertiaes Armes, and (in time) tooke againe the Sirname of Fazardo, as being that of the eldest House. Because Don Diego Perez de Gallego, Husband to Eſtenaueta de Bahabon, had a Sonne named

Most of these Noble Families presēt at the Battaile of Tolsa.

Suarez Dias Gallego, Husband to Degna Ignes Garcia de Sanabria, and of this mariage was borne Pedro Garcia de Gallego, Who had to Wife Degna Therese Ignez de Maldonado, Daughter to Nugno Perez de Maldonado, and Degna

Aldara Fernandez de Chuchukrano: And of this Marriage, issued three Sonnes and foure Daughters: Iohn de Gallego, slaine in the Kingdome of Naples, at the Battaile giuen by the King of Sicily, Charles of Aniou, against the Infant of Castile, Dom Henry. The second Sonne, was Dom Fernand Perez de Gallego, Great Master of the Order of Alcantara: And the third, was Stephen Perez de Gallego. The Daughters were, Ieane Perez de Gallego, Wife to Periagnez de Redonda: Maiora Perez de Gallego, Wife to Ferdinand Arias de Mera: the third, Theresa de Gallego (Wife to Pero Fernandez de Valuerdo) who hauing no Issue by him, shee was the second time married to Gonsalo Lopez de Ribera. The fourth Daughter, was Esteueneta Perez de Gallego, Wife to Adam Fernandez, one of the most renowned Knights of Gallicia. In this Marriage, was borne Dom Gonsalo Perez, Great Master of Alcantara, issued from the Count Dom Pero Fernandez de Traua, Lord of Trastamaro.

The Battaile fought in the Kingdome of Naples.

Iohn Gallego (Sonne to Pero Garcia de Gallego) slaine, as wee haue said, in the Kingdome of Naples, the yeere of Grace, One thousand, two hundred, threescore, and eight, left but one Sonne, aged then but foure yeeres, named Pero de Gallego, surnamed Faiardo, brought vp by his Vncle Fernando Perez, Great Master of Alcantara. After whose death, hee made his abiding with his Cousin Dom Gonsalo Perez, Great Master of the said Order, who died in the yeere One thousand, three hundred, and twelue.

Pero Gallego, surnamed Faiardo.

This Pero Gallego Faiardo had to Wife Dogna Blanche d'Aldana. And in this Marriage was borne Iohn Faiardo: who departing out of Gallicia, went into the Realme of Murcia, with the Count of Carrion, Dom Iohn Sanchez Emanuel, when he tooke possession thereof, after the death of the King Dom Pedro. Which Iohn Faiardo made himselfe famous by the death of fiue Moores, whom he slew himselfe with his owne hand, when they fought to hinder his drinking at a Spring, or Fountaine: as also, by the death of a Captaine Moore, whom hee ran thorow with his Lance, as hee had layd an ambush for him in a Wood. So, that in true acknowledgement of his Valour and Prowesse, the Count of Carrion gaue him the Citie of Labriche, and diuers other Lands in Murcia. Hee had a Sonne,

The Honourable and Knightly Valour of Iohn Faiardo.

Dom Alonso Iuannes Faiardo, who was Adelantado of the Kingdome of Murcia (vnder the Count Dom Iohn Sanchez Emanuel, Generall and Great Adelantado) and there hee performed Actions of Wonder, to defend the Lands of his Gouernment against the Moores of Granada, whom hee vanquished in a fought Battraile at Lorca. Hee was Father to Alphonso Iuannes Faiardo, and of Iohn Faiardo, Source and originall of the Lords of Lepe and Vandonia, of Dogna Beatrix, Wife to Dom Iohn Martinez de Sumaior, Commander of Arauaca; and of Pedro Lopez Faiardo, Commander of Cuuaca.

Dom Iohn Sanchez Emanuel, Great Adelantado of Murcia.

Alphonso Iuannez Faiardo, Sonne to the Adelantado, tooke to Wife Dogna Maria de Quesada, Daughter to Pero Viaz de Quesada, Lord of Garcies: of which Marriage, was borne Iohn Faiardo, slaine by the Moores; and Pedro Faiardo, Knight, in the Seruice of the King Dom Iohn, Second of that Name, who made him great Adelantado of the said Kingdome of Murcia; Husband to Donna Leonora Manriquez, Daughter of Dom Roderigo Manriquez, Great Master of the Order of Saint Iames. Of this Marriage issued a Daughter, named Louisa Faiardo, married by the Kings Catholique, Dom Ferdinand of Arragon, and Isabel of Castile, to Dom Iohn Chacon, Great Treasurer of Castile, Sonne to Gonzalo Chacon, Fauourite of the said Kings. This Iohn Chacon made an exchange with the said Kings Catholique, of the Citie of Carthagena, for the Lands and Seigneurie of Velez. And in this Marriage, was borne Dom Pedro Faiardo, the first Marquesse of Velez: In the Dignitie whereof, succeeded the Embassadour of Spaine (subiect of this Discourse) Dom Pedro Faiardo, Marquesse of Velez, and of Molena, Great Adelantado in the Kingdome of Murcia, Great Commander of Leon, and Great Master d'Hostel to the Queene of Spaine, Councellor of Estate to King Philip the Second, in his Councell of Warre, and held for one of the best iudgement, among all the men of his time.

Iohn Faiardo slaine by the Moores.

Dom Pedro Faiardo, first Marquesse of Velez.

Returne wee now againe to the Generall Tearmes of Poland: whereat, vpon the Day of Pentecost, in the yeere One thousand, fiue hundred, threescore, and thirteene, was elected and proclaymed for their King, Mounsieur, the Duke of Anion,

XXX. Henry,

XXX. Henry, Second of the name. On the morrow after this Election, the Posstes departed from Poland, who brought these tydings to King Charles the Ninth. Which was the cause of raising the Siedge at Rochell, and Peace graunted to the Protestants of France. Hauing left Rochell, and come to Paris, in expectation of the Lords from Poland: he made his entrance thereinto as King of Poland, at the Gate of Saint Anthony, about the midst of September, in the said yeare Threescore and thirteene. From Saint Anthonies Gate, vnder a Canopy of Clothe of Gold, he was conducted to the Church of Paris, and from thence to the Castell of the Louure, where magnificent Triumphes and Reuelles were prepared. At his entrance were erected many Triumphall Arches, but that which appeared of the best inuention, was a great goodly Shippe (which is the Armes of the Royall Citty of Paris, the richest in the World) erected in the midst of Saint Anthonies Streete, it being made of admirable greatnesse, Armed with Culuerines, fitted and furnished with Mastes, Sayles, Cables, Tackles and Marriners, Master, Mate and other Officers; as also with many Banners, Streamers, Pennons and Banderoles; made glorious with the Armes of France and Poland. But those thereto belonging (I meane of Poland) emblazoned D'Argent aux Aigle & Canalier de Sable, by grosse ignorance in the Herauldes and Kings of Armes, and the Painters of those times: were found to be much misliked, and of very sinister presage by the Lords of Poland, the most iudicious among them presaging thereby, that this Royalty would afford them but slender fruite. The outward shape of the Shippe was all of Siluer, and from the Poupe and Prow issued two Fountaines or Conduite pipes of White and Claret wine, with which licquors the Polanders and others well pleased themselues. From vnderneath the Shippe, as out of a flowing Sea (as his Maiesty passed along) arose a youth attired like a Maremaide, singing most sweetly, and with an amirable voyce extolling the prowesse of the King of Poland, in sundry Sonnets, Roundelayes and Vitelayes, all composed to his Honour, afterward turned into Latine by that learned Poet M. Iohn d'Aurat, and imprinted at Paris, with all the Ceremonies of the said entrance, In the Moneth of October following, the King of Poland departed from Paris; being conducted (so farre as to the Citty of Mentz) by the King his Brother, the Queene his Wife, Queene Mother, Monsieur the Duke of Alanson, and the King of Nauarre.

Henry of France chosen King of Poland.

On the day and Feaste of Pentecoste the yeare following One thousand five hundred, three score and foureteene, King Charles the ninth passed out of this life into an other much better, at his Castell Du Bois de Vincennes. Newes of his death was carried to the King of Poland Henry, by the Counte of Chemerault, who departing from Paris on the day of Pentecoste, at the ninth houre in the Euening: made such diligent haste, that in riding Post Thirteene dayes, he arriued at Cracouia. From whence the King departed secretly, and getting into the Emperours Countries, he trauelled Vrnolle, making his magnificent entrance into Venise, from whence he went to Padua.

By reason of his absence (without any hope of returne, nor any apparance of changing Dionedes and Glaucus) the Generall Tearmes were called, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand five hundred threescore and fifteene, and Election of a new King to be considered on. Some opinions passed in fauour of the Emperour Maximillian, Second of the name, but others stood for Stephen Battory, Vaiuode of Transyluania. The Polanders being disioynted in opinion, became vnited together by the death of Maximillian, happening in the yeare fiue hundred threescore and sixteene, so that the Kingdome of Poland remained peaceably to the Prince of Transiluania. Stephen Battory King of Poland.

XXXI. Stephen Bottory, who espoused the Sister to King Sigismond Augustus, the Princesse Anne of Poland, by whom he had no issue. Afterward, by the death of King Stephen, chancing in the yeare Fiue hundred fourescore and seauen, there were many Princes that presented themselues, to be elected King of Poland, as namely The death of Stephen Battory.

Rodolphe, second of the name Emperour, King of Hungarie and Bohemia.
The Vaiuode of Transyluania.
The Cardinall Bottorie.
The Duke of Ferrara.
The Duke of Parma.
The Palatine Zamolsky, high Chancellour of Poland.
Sigismond of Sweden, Sonne to John, King of Sweden, and the Queene Anne of Poland, Sister to King Sigismond Augustus: And Maximillian, Archduke of Austria, Brother to the Emperour.

The first fiue nominated were put by, and the two last stood for Election; but the contrary part to Maximillian preuailed, so that XXXII. Sigismond of Sweden, third of the name, was crowned King of Poland at Cracouia, the seauen and twentieth day of December, in the yeare Fiue hundred fourescore and seauen. And the fiue and twentieth day of Ianuary following, the Archduke Maximillian lost the Battaile, wherein he was surprized by the said King Sigismond; to whom he was compelled to release and acquit all his pretences to the Kingdome of Poland. By a Treatie of Peace, King Sigismond tooke to wife Anne of Austria, Cousine-germaine to the said Maximillian. Sigismond of Sweden Crowned King of Poland.

At what time the Order of Poland and of the White Eagle was Instituted, and by whom.

L'Ordre de Pologne dict de l'Aigle blanch

NOw, as concerning the Order of Polonia, otherwise called Of the White Eagle: It was Instituted by the King La Iettues, first of the name, Sirnamed Iokro; at the marriage of his Sonne Cazimire the Great, with Anne the Daughter of Gedimin, Duke of Lithuania, in the Moneth of February, the yeare of Grace One thousand three hundred twenty and fiue.

And because all Kings, Heralds and Pursuiuants of Armes, ought (of meere necessitie, and as an especiall Article of their abilitie) to know the nature of all Creatures, Trees, Plants and Floures, yea and of all things belonging to Nature, and concerned in Armes, from the Royall Eagle, so low as to the Ante, from the huge Leuiathan or Whale of the Sea, to the blinde Moale, and from the Ceders of Lybanus, to the humble Hisope, that they may yeelde the better answere to Kings and Princes, for emblazoning of apt Armes to newly ennobled Gentlemen. It cannot vary much from our purpose, to touch (as we walke on) the nature and properties of the Eagle. Whereunto we are the more willingly induced, in regard that the Armes of the Dames our Auncestours, Lords de la Mly-voye in Vermandois of their owne Race; and our Lady Rod Audlay; and of the Montils in Gastinois, by Alliance of Genouefue de Lisle (Daughter to Raymond de L'Isle, Qui portoit d'Argent à deux Lyons passants l'vn sur l'autre de Sable; And of Lane le Sommelier, Lady de la Chappelle d'Arablay, & des Montils, Qui portoit d'Or Escartele de Gueulles) next vnto our Great Grandfather Conrard Vrne, a Germaine Gentleman, borne in the Citie of Treuers (who came to be Hoathold Seruant to King Lewes, eleauenth of the name, being then Daulphine, after the Battaile of Busile, wonne by him against the Switzers in the Moneth of August, the yeare of Grace One thousand foure hundred forty foure) whose Armes are

It was an auncient Prouerbe vſed among the Grecians. That the Eagles flight is quite contrary to that of the Partridge; And the Hauke is ſharper ſighted then the Ant. Likewiſe the Romaines held it for an vndoubted Maxime, that Non generant Aquilæ Columbam.

The excellency of the Aegle beate all other Foules.

The Greekes and Romaines made vſe of theſe Prouerbs, thereby to expreſſe the excellencie of the Eagle. And the Poet Euripides, hath left vs in writing; That all Birds in generall are Heraulds and Meſſengers of the Gods: but the Eagle is the King, the Truchman and Interpreter of the great God Iupiter. In like manner, he participateth of the Diuinitie, according to the teſtimony of Ariſtotle, in the ſubtiltie of his ſight, beholding the Sunne fixedly; in the ſtrength of his Wings and Tallons; as alſo in diuturnitie of life, by a long and large time of yeares.

Aquilæ maximo honos, maxima & vis.

The blacke Eagle is beyond all other Colours.

And like as among the ſixe ſorts of Eagles, the moſt excellent is that which is the blackeſt in colour: euen ſo the Kings of Armes doe imploy in Armes this Sunnie Creature, with two Mettals, and foure colours, but the richeſt of all other in Blazon is L'Eſcu d'Or à l'Aigle de Sable: For the blacke Eagle is aboue all other kindes. He is called by the Greekes, Meneletos, and by the Romaines, Valeria, of leſſe corpulence then all the other, but endued with valiancie aboue the reſt, and ſinguler pietie towards his yong ones, becauſe he nouriſheth them carefully; being moreouer a Bird altogether truely Royall, peacefull, and without noyſe. Minima magnitudine, viribus Præcipua, colore nigricans. Sola Aquilarum fœtus ſuos alit; cætera fugant, ſola ſim clangore, ſine murmuratione, conuerſatur in montibus. Others chaſe away their yong ones, delighting to liue in lowe and waterie places, hunting after Fiſh, and feeding on Carrion. The black Eagle euermore maketh his abiding in the height of Mountaines, where he may come neereſt to the bright beames of the Sunne.

The Eagles proofe of his yong birds.

Our auncient French made triall of their Wiues honeſtie, by caſting their yong Infants vpon the Riuer of Rhine: the reuenger of a ſoyled marriage bed, as we haue already elſewhere ſaid. Euen ſo in like manner the Royall and Kingly Eagle, approueth his yong Birds by the Sunnes beames, to gaze vpon them with a fixed eye, which if they doe, he nouriſheth them kindely and carefully: but if they turne their heads aſide, then he reieɔteth them, and diſauoweth them to be his. Pullos ſuos etiamnum implumes percutiens ſubinde cogit aduerſos intueri Solis radios: & ſi conniuentem, & flentem animaduerterit, præcipitat è nido velut adulterinum, & degenerem. Illum cum acies firma contra ſteterit, educat.

An Eagles knowledge wonderfull.

If a yong Eagle may chance to be ſtolne out of the Neſt, it is no meane matter of wonder, to thinke of the knowledge, which he taketh of him that was his nurſe and foſterer, and which he will be ſure to recompence by hunting, or otherwiſe, as I haue ſeene the proofe thereof by experience, in one brought vp in the Biſhops Houſe of Menda in Geuaudar. Homer writeth of his Vliſſes, that being twenty yeares ſpace abſent from his owne Houſe; he could not be knowne, but by his Nurſe and his Dogge. But an Eagle knoweth his nurſing and foſter Father, among an infinite multitude of men: either by his voyce, whereof he taketh notice in ſome ſtrange manner, or by his walking, which he will be ſure to obſerue. This creature is endued with very ſinguler vnderſtanding, and admirable affection towards his Maiſter; being no way inferiour to the Dogge, the Symbole of faithfulneſſe.

A ſtrange Hiſtory of the Eagle of Seſtos.

Plinie, in the ſecond Booke and fift Chapter of his Naturall Hiſtory, reporteth meruailes concerning the Eagle of Seſtos, nouriſhed from his Neſt by a yong Maide, that kept him to ſport abroad on hunting. This faire Maide deceaſing, was brought to the pile of wood to be burnt, according to the auncient cuſtome obſerued by the Greekes and Romaines, in the manner of their Funerall Obſequies. The dead Maides body was attired all in white Linnen, ſoft, ſweete and delicate, her Head crowned with a goodly Chaplet of Floures, and her body thickly ſtrewed with Floures of all kindes. The Prieſts and the Inhabitants were cloathed in fine white Linnen Albes, tucked tucked vp vnder their girdles vpon their hippes, their Heads likewiſe crowned with Floures, bearing branches of Palme & other greene trees in their hands. The body being laid vpon the flaming Pile, perfumed with the pureſt Arabian Spices, the Eagle (hauing bin touring aloft all this while, houering and ſinning his faire Wingges ouer the Corps, euen as if he performed ſome Ayne Ceremonie thereto:) At length he deſcended gently downward, and lighted directly on the Damoſels Breſt, where he ſuffered himſelf to be burnt and conſumed, as bearing her faithfull company in death, euen as before he had done in life. Per celebris eſt apud Seſton urbem Aquilæ gloria. Educatum à virgine retuliſſe gratiam, Aues priùs, mox deinde venatus aggerentem. Defuncta poſtremo in rogum: acceſſum eius miccaſſe ſeſe, & ſimul inſtigraſſe. Our French Lucretius delighteth himſelfe vpon this admirable Hiſtorie (which deſerueth to be painted, after the auncient manner, on the Royall high wayes of the King) in the fift day of his firſt Weeke. Saying, that the Maide being brought to the Pile:

The words of Plinie as they are in his Hiſtorie.

The Engliſh.

.. .. Farre-off the Eagle followes;
And tearing forth in th'Ayre his bloudy entrailes,
With Conuoye honoreth two ſad Funerals.
No ſooner had his Vulcande-beake made way
For flowing bloudy ſtreames; And euery Spraye
Flaming about the Corps: But the louing Foule
(Lauiſh in blouds expence, life to controule;)
Moſt ſwiftly lights vpon the flaming Pile.
And though th'offended Prieſt ſtriues all this while

To

To beate him thence; yet to the thick'st hot fire
Boldly he gets, and singing his desire
To his lou'd Lady, to fill vp the Quire
There burnes himselfe, and blendeth happily
His bones with hers, that lou'd him tenderly.

Famine sooner killeth Eagles then age.

Plinie in the former alleadged passage hath written; That Eagles doe sooner dye by famine, then they can by age. Mens liues are growne to be very short, for their vnthankefulnesse, and lacke of knowing God aright, who hath giuen them their being: for, instead of following his Commandements, they doe the quite contrary, addicting themselues to all vices, so that he which liueth least time in the world, doth commit the lesse offences. Beasts and other Creatures, vncapable of reason, haue longer time of life, with meanes to conserue themselues as long therein, as the price and guerdon of their naturall innocency, so doth Hesiodus informe vs in this manner:

Neuf Hommes vid la Corneille criarde,
Le Cerf autant quatre fois vif se garde,
Le Corbeau noir si longuement vieillit
Que de trois Cerfs les vies il emplit;
Et le Phœnix de neuf Corbeaux egale
Les iours.

The same in English.

To nine mens liues attaines the bawling Crowe,
To foure as many liues the Hart doth grow.
The blacke bevde Rauen wins as long a date,
As these Harts fulfill in vtmost fate.
Nine Rauens liues the Phœnix equalleth
In length of dayes, &c.

Naturall properties in the Eagle.

The Eagle is likewise of very long life, as approaching neerest to the proprietie of the Phœnix, which reuiueth it selfe, and gaineth new being and subsistance, within the limits of a iust appointed Age; as we haue more at large discourst in our third Booke, in the Tract Of the memorable Order of the Holy Ghost. For Saint Augustine, (without equall in knowledge and learning) doth instruct vs, that from ten yeares to ten yeares the Eagle reuiueth himselfe, getting new Feathers, bathing himselfe diuers dayes in the Sea, or else in some Spring or Fountaine, onely to humect and moisten his body, to cast his inwards and old feathers, to be newly bedewed and sprinkled with fresh blood, warmed with the ardent heate of the Sunne, the Father and conseruer of naturall heate. So saith the Prophet Esay, speaking of good men, tormented in the tepestuous Sea of the world, yet reposing all their trust in God. Qui sperant in Domino mutabunt fortitudinem, assumerit pennas sicut Aquilæ.

That which is most discommodious and hurtfull to the Eagle, is the vpper part of his Beake, which so crooketh and intricateth it selfe ouer the nether iawe, as he cannot take in any ordenary sustenance. And that is the reason, why he knocketh, beateth and breaketh this excrescence of his Beake or Hawke like nose, with many strokes and blowes, redoubled against a hard Rocke, as beaten on an Anuile, thereby making it to be new and yong againe. For so say the Rabbines and Masserets, expounding the 102. Verse of the hundred and third Psalme, speaking of the man that putteth his trust in God. Renouabitur, sicut Aquilæ, Iuuentus Iusti; Making the [illegible] and hope as an Eagle. His age shall be more greene and flourishing, then the Spring time of him, that placeth his confidence in the decepts of the world

Hereby we may perceiue, how the Eagle helpeth and reuengeth himselfe, and after long Age, when he hath no more strength, to breake the vpper part of his re[illegible] Beake: Superiore in tantum accrescente rostro, vt aduncitas aperiri non queat, ejus tantum non fame, nec ægritudine, sed fame, so saith Aristotle and Plinius secundus. Beside all that hath bin said, this Foule is neuer smitten with thunder and lightning, whereto other Animals are subiect, according to the Naturalists: Negant enim [illegible]

Solum hanc alitem fulmine exanimatam. And this was the reason why (according to the Diuiners and Soothsayers of Tuscanie) the Romaines had the Eagle for their Colonell Ensigne and Cornet, which they carried alone in Warre. The other Standards and Banners of the Wolfe, the Minotaure, Horse and Boare, defending the Corps du Garde of the Romaine Legions; followed the appointment of Caius Martius, so saith the same Plinie, in the fourth Chapter of his tenth Booke.

The Colonell Ensigne of the Romaines.

God, speaking of himselfe, in a comparison which he made, rather taketh the Eagle, then he would doe any other Bird, promising to the people of Israel, that if they would walke in the paths of vertue: He would couer and beare them to Heauen, as on the wings of an Eagle, as you may reade in the nineteenth Chapter of Exodus. Vidistis vos ipsi quæ fecerim Ægyptijs, quomodo portauerim vos super alas Aquilarum, & assumpserim mihi. So that if there be any one similitude or comparison of excellency, throughout the whole Sacred Scripture: it is most plainely seene, that the Eagle beareth in it, the chiefe and eminent rancke of honour.

The Order of Denmarke, called of the Elephant.

CHAP. VII.

The Originall and Genealogie of the Kings of Denmarke.

The reason for the Countries name.

THE great extendure of this Country, which to this present is called Denmarke, in regard of Dan the first Prince thereof; was by auncient Geographers designed vnder the name of Chersonesus Cimbrica, a Peninsula or halfe Island, engirt (for the most part) with Mare Britannicum the Brittish Sea, and that of Germanie, and with the limitrophing firme Land of Saxonie. From thence it was that the Cimbrians came, with dreadfull multitudes of people, who after they had forradged the fruitfull Gaules, and concluding [illegible] performe as much in Italie; were ouerthrowne and vanquished by Caius Marius the Romaine Captaine, neere to Aix in Prouence. These are the same people, which the Poets name Cimerians, and feigne, that their auncient dwelling or biding, was veiled or couered with a darke and obscure night, not being at any time illumined with the Sunne, the worlds bright eye, by being seated vnder the North-Starre, where the Nights are sixe Months wholly, more or lesse, according to the approach or absence of the Sunne. And from thence came the fictions of Plutoes Mannour house, and the Cimerian Night, more obscure then that of Ægypt.

The people called the Cimbrians.

Illis Sol nunquam Phaeton sua lumina sparsit
Perpetua super Nox semper tenditur istis.

Diuersitie of names attributed to this Island, and peopling of it.

Some others haue called this halfe Island Scania, Scandinauia, Baltica and Basilia, which according to the testimonie of Ptolomie) was sometime inhabited by seauen seuerall kindes of People, as namely the Gothes, Lombards, Vandales, Danes, Aroerians and Tamans. Of all which, and the perticularities of these Northerne peoples dwelling, ample discription is made by Ioannes and Olaus Magnus, Vncle and Nephew, Archbishops of Vpsala, and Primates of the Realme of Gothia, tearmed Scandia in the Histories of the Northerne Regions: As also by Saxo Grammaticus, Albertus Krantzius, and others in the Historie and Description of the Kingdome of Denmarke. A part or parcell whereof is Iseland, which some haue taken to be the Ile of Thyle or Thule, and the same thought by the Spanish Poet Seneca, to to be the last, or vtmost of the World: prophetizing in his Medea, that which happened in the life time of our Fathers, and hath continued to vs, and so doth dayly, in the discouerie of a new World, and new Lands, farre beyond that of this Isle.

Denmark long time gouerned by Kings.

It is long time since this spacious Prouince hath beene gouerned by Kings, in regard that the most ancient of our Annalists, Saint Gregorie of Tours, in the third Booke and third Chapter of his Historie of France writeth: That a King of the Danes, named Cochilaicus, about the yeere of Grace, fiue hundred and nineteene, vnder the Reigne of the Sonnes of Clouis, our first Christian King, came with a mightie Nauall Armie, and Pyrated on the Coasts of Austrasia's Kingdome, robbing there a rich Towne, putting the Inhabitants into slauerie: And that Theodorick, vpon the reports of these Tidings, dispatched away presently Prince Theodobert his Sonne, who ouercame this Armie, as well by Sea as by Land, tooke and recouered back againe the Bootie, and the Captiues, slew Cochilaicus in the field, and put most part of his People to the edge of the Sword: nor had they afterward any desire to forrage the Gaules.

Cochilaicus King of Denmarke by the Prince Theodobert.

His itaque gestis Dani cum Rege suo nomine Cochilaico enecto Nauali per Mare Gallias appetunt, egressique ad Terras, Pagum vnum de Regno Theodorici deuastant, atque captiuant; oneratisque Nauibus tàm de Captiuis, quàm de reliquis spoliis, ad Patriam reuerti cupiunt, sed Rex eorum in litus residebat, donec Naues altum Mare comprehenderent, ipse deinceps sequuturus. Quod cum Theodorico renunciatum fuisset, quod subito Regio eius fuerit ab Exteris deuastata, Theodebertum filium suum in illas partes cum validò Exercitu, ac magno Armorum apparatu direxit; qui interfecto Rege, Hostes Nauali prælio superatos opprimit, omnemque rapinam Terræ restituit.

Marriages of France with Denmarke.

Our most Christian Kings haue many times contracted Alliance with them of Denmarke. That of King Philip Augustus, Second of the Name, called the Conqueror, and Gods-Gift, is very remarkable for the Antiquitie. This great King tooke to his second Wife Engelberga, Sister to Canutus, King of Denmarke, whom he espoused in the Church of Amiens, where shee was Crowned by the Cardinall with the faire Hands, William, Archbishop of Rheimes, in the yeere of Grace, One thousand, one hundred, fourescore, and thirteene. This illustrious Princesse patiently and sanctimoniously endured an infinite number of bitter griefes and anguishes, at such time as shee was diuorced by our Augustus, who yet afterward tooke her againe, at Soissons.

The words contained in this Sentence of Diuorce, doe import, that the King was diuorced from her, because shee was his Kinswoman, in the Degree prohibited by the Church for Contract of Marriage: Which sheweth, and plainely approoueth that (before this time) there had been Alliance and Affinitie of Kindred between the Kings of France and Denmarke, beside Alliances after renewed, according to the Occurrences.

Proofe of long continued Alliances.

I finde, that vnder the Reigne of the most happie, and mirror of Princes in Christendome, Saint Lewes, the King of Denmarke made him offer, to accompanie him with his Nobilitie, Crossed with the Red-Crosse (after the manner of the French) in his Voyage to the Holy Land. Whereupon the King gaue him Safe-conduct, Passport and Defray, for him and his Troupes, thorow the Lands of his obedience: as it is obserued by the Monke Matthew Paris, in his Historie of England.

To set downe here the Catalogue and List of the Kings of Denmarke, would aske a discourse for one of the longest breath to reade. We will therefore satisfie our selues to obserue onely the last Line, which reigneth now at this instant: and that shall be the subiect of our Relation.

The Catalogue of the Kings of Denmarke, beginning with the Second Ligne, and continuing to this present.

BY the death of Christopher Duke of Bauaria, King of Denmarke, Sweden and Norway, happening in the yeare of Grace One thousand foure hundred forty and eight.

I. Christierne, Count of Aldembourg and of Dalmenhorst, was crowned King of the said Realmes. He was Sirnamed the Riche, as well in regard of many vertues clearely shining in him, as also by the meanes hee had, not onely of his Stocke and Ligne, but likewise the accession of his Kingdomes. His Reigne continued foure and thirty yeares, and he died in the yeare of Grace One thousand foure hundred fourescore and one. By Dorothie his wife, daughter to a Prince of Russia, he left three Sonnes and one Daughter Olaus, that is Olaus, who died yong.

Iohn, Elected and Crowned King of Denmarke: And Fredericke, Duke of Schleswicke, and of Halstatia:

The Daughter was

Margaret, wife to the King of Scotland, James third of the name.

Christierne the Riche, in his owne life-time caused to be Crowned King of Denmarke, his eldest Sonne

II. Iohn, to whom he espoused Christiana, Daughter to Ernestus, Duke of Saxone, Prince Electour of the Empire, in the yeare of Grace One thousand foure hundred fourescore and eighteene, and in this marriage was borne a Sonne, named

III. Christierne, second of the name, who tooke to wife Isabel of Castile, Sister to the Emperour Charles the fift. For his tyranny he was deprined of those Kingdomes, which his Grandfather and Father had held, and himselfe expulsed out of Denmarke by his Brother

IIII. Fredericke, formerly Duke of Schleswicke and Halstatia, who was Crowned King of Denmarke, and caused to be put to death in prison at Sundebourg in Halstatia his Brother King Christierne the second; who by his wife Isabel of Castile had two Daughters, to wit:

Dorothie, wife to Fredericke Duke of Bauaria, Count Palatine of the Rhine; And Christiana, wife to Anthony, Duke of Lorraine.

Now Fredericke being dead in the yeare of Grace One thousand fiue hundred thirty and three, Fredericke Duke of Bauaria, pretending that the Kingdome of Denmarke belonged to him, in the right of Dorothie his wife, eldest Daughter to Christierne the second, and being ayded by the Emperour Charles the fift, Brother to the Mother of the said Dorothie; powerfully entred into Denmarke, but was thence expelled and driuen by the Lords of the Countrie, who elected for their King the very yongest Sonne of King Fredericke, who neuertheless could not be Crowned, because he was hindered therein by his eldest Brother

V. Christierne, third of the name, who being assisted by Gustane, King of Sweden, obtained the Kingdome of Denmarke. He had to wife Dorothie, Daughter to Magnus, Duke of the lower Saxonie, and by her he had

VI. Fredericke, second of the name, Father to Anne, Queene of Great Bretaigne: And to

VII. Christierne, fourth of the name, who Royally reigneth at this present.

But returne we now againe to Christierne, first of the name, called the Rich.

Valdemar, King of Denmark, deceasing in the yeare One thousand three hundred threescore and fifteene: the Kingdome of Denmarke fell to the Female kinde, in the person of

Margaret, the onely Daughter of Valdemar, who tooke to be her Husband Aquine, King of Norway; by whom she had one onely Sonne named Olaus, who dyed (without Children) in the life time of his Mother, the yeare of Grace One thousand three hundred fourescore and seauen. This Woman (during her life time) Gouerned the Realms of Denmark, Norway and Sweden, a Kingdome which shee had conquered (perforce) from the Son to Albert Duke of Mekelbourg, whom she vanquished in a foughten Battaile, and made him her war prisoner for the space of seauen years; vntill such time as he redeemed himselfe, by paying a great summe of money for his ransome. This couragious Queen, seeing her selfe to be without any issue, adopted as her Son

Ericke or Edricke, Duke of Pomerania, Crowned King of Denmarke, Norway and Sweden, according to the will of his putatiue Mother. He dying without Children, the yeare of Grace One thousand foure hundred thirtie and nine; his Nephew, Son to his Sister:

Christopher, Duke of Bauaria, was Crowned King of Denmarke, as already we haue said. And by his death in the yeare formerly noated, not leauing any issue by Dorothie his wife, Daughter to Iohn, Marquesse of Brandenbourge; the Crowne of Denmarke changed againe, to a new race or Familie.

Iohn Count of Aldemborg and Dalmenhorst, had a Sonne named Fredericke, who held those two Counties by the death of his Father. Fredericke left Theodoricke, who espoused Margaret, the sole & onely heire to Adolphe, Duke of Schlesswicke and Halsatia, and of this marriage was borne Christierne, first of the name, called the Rich, who carried these titles and qualities. Christierne, par la grace de Dieu, Roy de Dannemarc, de Suede, Nordwege, & de Gothie: Duke de Schlesswick, d'Holsace, de Stormar, & de Ditmarson, Comte d'Aldembourg & de Dalmenhorst. Christierne, by the Grace of God King of Denmarke, of Sweden, Norway and Gothia; Duke of Schlesswicke, of Halsacia, of Stormar, and of Ditmarson, Count of Aldemburg, and of Dalmenhorst: Titles which the King his Successors, and descended of his Lign, haue still retained.

The Institution of the Order of Denmarke, in the yeare of Grace One thousand foure hundred threescore and eighteene, by Christierne, first of the name, King of Denmarke, Norway and Sweden, &c.

CHAP. VIII.

HAuing so good occasion, to speake againe of this worthy Prince Christierne, first of the name; let me entreate you to take notice, that this is the same man, who Instituted The Order of Denmarke, called Of the Elephant, vnder inuocation of the Virgin Mary, the Mother of God; in regard that among the Knights of this Order, none could be admitted, but such as were Senators of the Kingdome. Each man wore about his necke a faire Collar or Chaine of Gold, at the end whereof (directly on the breast) hung an Elephant of Gold, enamelled with white; his backe couered with a Castle of Siluer, Masonned blacke, & the Elephant standing on a greene Hillocke, composed of Floures of sundry colours.

None but Senators of the Kingdome admitted into the Order.

The first Chapter of this Order of Denmarke, was celebrated in the Metropolitane Church of Lunde, the Capitall Citie of the Kingdome, and at the Mariage of Iohn Sonne to the said King Christierne, with the Daughter of Ernestus, Duke of Saxonie, in the yeare of Grace One thousand foure hundred threescore and eighteene. And since that time, this Order hath bin conferred by the Kings of Denmarke, Successors to Christierne the first; on diuers Princes, and Senators of the Kingdome, vpon the dayes of their Coronation.

The reason of the first Chapters Celebration

We haue in a precedent Chapter, as matter ministred occasion, obserued some properties of the Elephant; as his deuotion, piety & equity, with a further remembrance that (among the Aegyptians) he was the Symbole and Hieroglyphicke of Iustice. Whereto we may adde his prouidence and wisedome, because by hauing his blood cold and melancholly; he is held to be the very wisest of all other Beasts. According to the ordenary Aphorisme, which affirmeth Drought and Coldnesse, to be the causes of a good spirit. In the Indiaes, where Elephants goe in troupes together, they they haue this discretion and prouidence; that they giue the conduct of all the rest, to the most auncient among them, and he that is the oldest next to him, commeth in the rere, or lagge of all, as we vse to say; to firme and close vp the whole troupe. Elephanti gregatim ingrediuntur, ducit agmen maximus natu. Of the Elephants in Media.

Of the Elephant addicted to Loue.

This Beast is also a Symbole of Loue, whereto he is meruailously subiect: witnesse the Hearbe-woman or Nosegay-maker of Alexandria; the Mesmirian of Sarragossa in Scilie; and the Perfumeresse, whereof Plinie maketh mention in the fift Chapter in the eight Booke of his Naturall Historie. It is a Creature very capable of any instruction, and when generall wonder was made at Paris, to see the lauish expences bestowne on such as taught Horses to Dance, after the cadence of tunes distinguished by Trompets; yet I could neuer sufficiently admire the readinesse of Elephants, dauncing in the Romaine Theaters, whereof Plutarch maketh ample relation, in a Treatise which hee wrote, concerning what Creatures were the most aduised and considerate; those of the Land, or them of the Water. He is also the noate of valiantie and Militarie aptnesse, and therefore the Romaines prohibited the people of Greece and Asia, vnder their obedience; from making any Nauall Armies, and preparing Elephants to Warre. Natos habere, & Elephantos alere Romani deuicti populis prohibeant: So saith the same Plinie.

Now, as concerning the Armes of the Kings of Denmarke, they haue alwayes carried D'Or seme de Cœurs de Gueulles à trois Leopards de Synople. Armes common to the most part of the Polarie and Septentrionall Nations. For the Normans which came out of Norway, and ioyned (in one body) a Nauall Armie with the Danes, to scoure the Coasts and Maritime Townes of the Gaules: they bare likewise De Gueulles à trois Leopards d'Or, Armes yet retained to this present, by the Kings of England. The Armes of the Kings of Denmarke.

The Order of Swveden, called of the Name of Iesus, or of the Seraphins: Instituted in the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred thirty & foure; by Magnus King of Sweden, fourth of the name.

CHAP. IX.

The Originall and Genealogie of the Kings of Sweden.

Sweden, in Latine called Suetia, and Suessia, but by some Svevia, a Kingdome seated vnder the Arctick Pole, maketh part of Scandinauia, and containeth three seuerall Realmes; which caused the Kings of this leuell continent, to take for Armes D'Azur à trois Coronnes d'Or. The first of the said Realms or Kingdoms, is Sweden it selfe, the auncient Armes whereof were Couppe en Bande de Gueulles, & d'Azur à vne Gerbe d'Or, sur le tout, for her fertility in Corne & Graine. The second is the Kingdome of Gothia, deuided into Gvestregothia, and Vuistgothia. This Kingdome carried D'Argent à trois Ondes d'Azur en Bande au Lyon rempant de Sable sur le tout. And the third is that of Finlandia, whereto are ioyned Gronlandia, Laponia, with other frontiering and neighbouring Isles: as likewise are the Prouinces of Lappia, Finmarkia, Scrifinia, Pilapia, the high and low Biarmia, and other Regions, which are directly seated vnder the North Star, where the dayes and nights are of sixe Moneths durance, fiue, foure, three, two and one, according as hath bin Summarily obserued by Pedro de Mexia, in his Diuersitie of Readings, and in the Hexameron of Antonio de Torre-quemada, both of them Spanish Gentlemen, who haue abridged what was written by the Archbishops of Vpsala, in two great Volumes in Folio, and closely printed.

Three Kingdomes & the Armes belonging anciently to them.

Stockolme the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome

The Balticke Sea neighbouring and coasting part of the said Realme of Sweden, with the rich port of Angona, maketh the King thereof to enrich himselfe, by strange Merchandises. The chiefe and Capitall Citie is Stockolme, where the King keepeth his ordenarie abiding, seated within the Sea, according as Venice is; and the Metropolitaine is Vpsala, the Archbishops See of the Kingdome, which embraced Christian Religion about the yeare of Grace, One thousand, in the time of the Emperour Henry, by the often Preaching of the good Bishop Anscecharus; and about the yeare One thousand one hundred, Vpsala was become a Metropolitaine Church, and the Temple of the Fayries (whereof Saxo Grammaticus, and the two Archbishops of Vpsala doe relate no meane merualles) was dedicated and consecrated to God, in the time of King Stinkellus.

Kings succeeded Magnus of Sweden & Gothia

In the yeare One thousand two hundred and fiftie, Birgerus, first of the name, was King of Sweden and Gothia, Father to Valdemar, first of the name, and likewise to Magnus, who possessed himselfe of those Kingdomes, while his Brother Valdemar was in his voyage at Ierusalem. Magnus was Father to Birgerus, second of the name, Father to Magnus, second of the name, Father to Euicus or Edvicus; Father to Magnus third of the name: successiuely Kings of Sweden and Gothia. This Magnus the third, was likewise King of Norway, who dying in the yeare One thousand three hundred twentie and sixe; left these three Kingdomes to his Sonne Magnus fourth of the name, who had a Sister called Euphemia, wife to Albert, Duke of Meckelbourg.

Magnus was the Father to Aquine, King of Norway, and affianced to the Sister of the Count of Halsatia. But this Princesse being on the way to go marrie with her Husband in Swedē, was taken prisoner by the King of Denmark Valdemar, last of the name, who caused his onely Daughter and sole heire Margaret, to marrie with the same Aquine. Magnus not misliking the marriage of his Sonne in Denmarke, the men of Swede Sweden (instigated thereto by the Count of Halsatia) rebelled against him, calling to Commaund and Rule the Kingdome of Sweden.

Albert, Sonne to Albert, Duke of Meckelbourg, Husband to Euthemia, who helde (for some time) the Kingdome of Sweden; vntill he was ouerthrowne in a foughten Battaile by Queene Margaret, wife to Aquine King of Norway, and Mother to Olaus. By this her taking of Aquine, whom shee kept as her warre prize and prisoner the space of seauen yeares, as we haue before related: She held the Kingdome of Sweden all her life time. At the end of those seauen yeares, Albert and his Sonne Ericus (both prisoners) were set at liberty: conditionally, to pay for ransome within three yeeres tearme, Threescore thousand Markes of Siluer; or else to deliuer vp to the Queene, the Citty and Castell of Stockolme. But by not satisfiyng the one or other of these conditions; he should submit himselfe prisoner againe, and remaine in the power of Queene Margaret. By whose death, the Kingdome of Norwaye continued still ioyned and annexed to the Kingdome of Denmarke.

King Aquine kept prisoner seuen yeares and released at last vpon strict conditions.

But concerning that of Sweden, it had her perticuler Kings, of whom wee will heere set downe a briefe Reporte, and how they succeeded eche after other.

Of such Kings as followed successiuely in the Kingdome of Sweden.

Engelbert, a Lord of the Countrey, reuolted against Ericus of Pomerania, he adopted Sonne to Queene Margaret, and her Successour in the three Kingdomes of Denmarke, Norway and Sweden. After whom succeeded in the said three Kingdomes, Christopher Duke of Bauaria, and Prince Palatine. But he dying, they of Sweden elected for their King, a Lord of the same Countrey, named

Charles Canutus, who reigned but Seauen yeares, and was constrained to flye for his owne safety from the kingdome; because the Lords reuolted from him, and chose for their King, him of Denmarke and Norwaye, named Christierne, against whom in like manner the Lords of Sweden reuolted, when he had reigned about the space of seauen yeares ouer them.

Iohn, his Sonne helde some time of rest and repose in the Kingdome of Sweden: And after him was successour his Son

Christierne, Second of the name, King of Sweden in Title only, for the Kingdome was (in effect) gouerned by a Constable, called Steuo, a Natiue of the Land, who would neuer accept the name of King. After whose death, Christierne possessed himselfe of the Royall Citty of Holme, where he caused to be executed by Iustice, the very greatest Lords of the Kingdome, Bishops, Noblemen and the wealthiest Bourgesses, filling all places with blood and slaughter, the Citty pilde and powled, the Citizens put to the edge of the Sword, without sparing Maides and young Infants, murdered in their Cradles, and the body of Steuo the Gouernour left vnburied, yea, throwne vpon a common dunghill or Laystall, to serue as foode for Rauens, among other dead bodies. Within a while after these barbarous cruelties committed in Sweden:

Gostauo (Sonne to Ericus, issued of the blood Royall, and giuen for Hostage to Christierne by the Inhabitants of Stockolme) found meanes to get away from Denmarke in a disguised habite, and came into Sweden: whereof hee proclaimed himselfe to be Protectour, and expelled the Danes out of the Kingdome. Wherupon, by full consent of all the Estates, he was auouched to be King of Sweden, in the yeare of Grace, 1540. he gouerned the Kingdome long time in peace and tranquility, replanting Nauigation and traffick of Merchandises. After this Gostauo, succeeeded his eldest Sonne

Henry, who being deceassed without issue, left for his Successour in the Kingdome of Sweden, his Brother

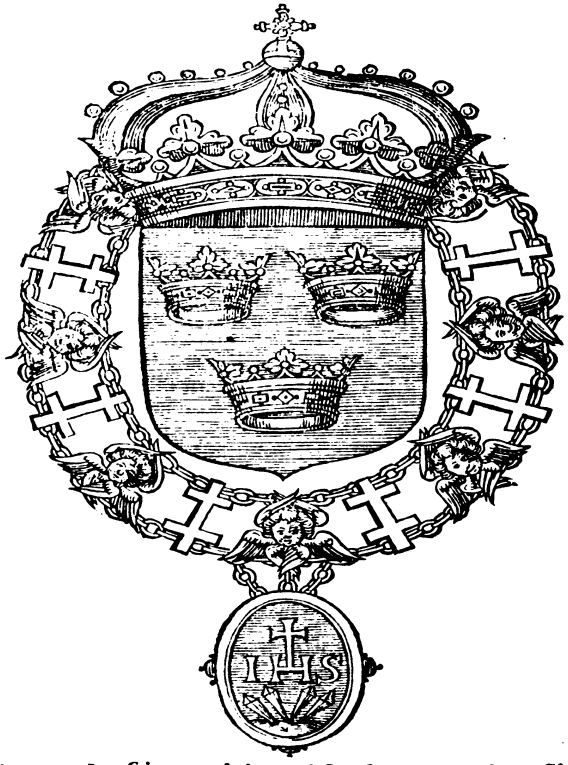
Iohn, who taking to Wife Katharine, Daughter to Sigismond, King of Poland, gouerned with great Wisedome, Loue and Honour. This Iohn died in the yeare, Fiue Hundred Fourescore and Ten, or Twelue: and then succeeded his only Sonne Sigismond, King of Sweden by Paternall succession, and of Poland by Election: against whom his Vnckle Charles made intrusion, and possessed the greater part of the Kingdome; wherein (by force of Armes) he maintaineth himselfe to this instant.



CHAP. X.

Concerning the Institution of the Order of Sweden, called Of the Cherubins.

The Collar or Cheine of the Order.

Magnus, King of Sweden, Fourth of the name, in the yeare of Grace One thousand three hundred thirty and foure; Instituted The Order of the Cherubins, otherwise Sirnamed Of Iesus. The Coller of this Order was composed of Cherubins (so saith Zieglius) and Patriarchall Crosses, in memory of the Siedge laid to the Metropolitane Citty of Vpsala; the Cherubins of Gold, enammelled with Red, and the Crosse of Gold without any enammelling. At the end of the Collar hung an Quall of the same, enammelled with Azure, bearing these three Letters combined together IHS. the name of Iesus, without enammeling, and placed en Fesse, and en pointe Foure Nailes, enammelled White and black, to declare the Passion of our Sauiour and Redeemer Iesus Christe, crucified and fastened to the tree of the Crosse with foure Nailes.

Of the Nailes wherewith Christ was Crucified.

For it is a popular errour, to figure or represent this incomprehensible misterie of our Redemption, and the Triumphe of the Sonne of Man, ouer death and Hell; by a crosse without an vnderfooting, or foot-stay, and the Quaternarie number of Nailes. One of which Nailes wee haue at Saint Denys in France, the Mausolus or buriall place for our Monarches of the Lillies. An other of them is at Rome, in the Church of Saint John Laterane, kept in the Sanctã Sanctorum. Which two nailes I haue seene, that at Rome is very like to that at Saint Denys, in length aboue halfe a foote, the point flatted, filed and made hallow: the head shap d like a vice, but more long and square. The third Naile is in the Church of Trcuers in Germanie: And is the Naile of the right foote. The Fourth was throwne by the Empresse Helena, mother of Constantine the Great, into the Gulffe of Sathalia, a very dangerous passage, formerly sirnamed the Dragon or Lyon of the Sea, being betweene Ierusalem, and the Gulffe of Cyprus, where Shippes ran alwayes in perill of wracking, but since then, it hath bin more milde and calme. This we vnderstand by S. Gregorie of Tours, in the sixt Chapter of his Gloria Martyrum. Clauorum Dominicorum quod quatuor fuerint hæc est ratio. Duo sunt affixi in palmis, & duo in plantis. Afterward, he yieldeth a reason of three Nailes which were kept by Saint Helena, applied to the Horses Bridle, and the Creast or Helmet of Constantine her Sonne, that famous Emperour.

Now

Now, concerning the vnderfooting stay, it is a matter without all question to the contrarie, that the Romaines obserued it as a custome, to crucifie Malefactours with foure Nailes, on Crosses made after the same manner: contayning fifteene foote in height, with a Title alofte, comprehending the names and crimes of those malefactours, fastened on the height of the Crosse, and at their feete a stay to support them, whereon their feete were seperately nailed fast: and not one foote vpon the other, as hath bin perfourmed by ignorant Caruers and Painters. The two theeues were crucified after the same manner, as the Lambe without spot or blemishe: otherwise it had bin easie for Saint Helena, to haue discerned the Crosse of the Worlds Sauiour, the Table of Innocency, from those of the Theeues. So then it may be said, that the Crosse was composed of foure pieces of different wooddes: as Saint Gregorie telleth vs in the passage before alleaged. In stipite erecto foramen factum manifestum est Pes quoque paruæ tabulæ in hoc foramen insertus est: super hanc vero tabulam, tanquam stantis hominis, Sacræ affixæ sunt Plantæ. And Pope Innocent in his first Sermon of Martyrdome. Fuerunt in Cruce Dominicâ ligna quatuor, stipes erectus, & lignum transuersum, truncus suppositus, & titulus superpositus.

Of the Crosses on which the Romains vsed to crucifie their malefactours.

In the Church of Paris yearelie on the first Fryday in the Moneth of August, is celebrated the Feaste for susception of the most Holy Crosse, and sollemne Procession made about the Church, and vnder a Canopy is caried the true Crosse. It was sent to the Church of Paris by Anselme, a Natiue of the Citty, and Clearke of the said Church, who bare such zeale and affection to the voyage for the Holy land, that he went along with Godfrey of Bologne, in the time of Pope Vrbane, Second of the name, and King Phillip the First. The Holy Citty being conquered by the Christians, this Anselme was made Chaunter in the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, where he found this Crosse, which he sent (as a most rare and precious gifte) to the Church of Paris, where it is kept at this present in all deuout reuerence. It is written, that it is made Ex Suppedaneo Veuificæ Crucis.

No man is bound to beleeue all this except he list.

Concerning the Title on the Crosse of our Lord, written in three Languages: I haue seene it (with other Reliques) in the Church of Sancta Croce of Ierusalem, at Rome: It was made fast with three small Nailes to the top of the Crosse, when it was exalted alofte. Saint Cyprian in his Treatise De Montibus Sina, & Sion. Pontius Pilatus impulsa mente à Deo accepit Tabulam, & Titulum scripsit tribus linguis: & in capite ligni clauis tribus Tabulam cum nomine Regis Iudæorum confixit. In the like manner, titles were fixed to the Crosses of the two Theeues. The highest and last of the Thirteene Hermitages, which are on the Mountaine of Our Lady of Montserrat in Catalogna: is that of the good Thiefe, called Saint Dismas. The other was named Gestas, as our Auncients haue credited by these riming verses.

Of the inscription or title on the Crosse of Christ.

Imparibus meritis pendent tria corpora ramis
Dismas & Gestas, in medio sedet ima potestas.
Gestas damnatur, Dismas ad astra leuatur.

And these verses written on a small piece of Parchment, being well dried, and scraped, bruised small in a Morter, then mingled with Wine or Aqua-uitæ, and giuen to such men as are condemned to torture or torments, maketh them insensible of any paine, seruing them as a charme of silence.

I neuer knew any that made proofe of this Charme.

As they crucified all malefactors with foure Nailes; so without all doubt, when they threwe lotts for his garments, they did it with foure dice, and not two or three, as ignorant Painters haue pleased to depict them.

Iace quatuor Talos.

So saith Plautus in an infinite number of places. And thus haue I caused it to be done (according to Antiquity and truth of History) in the Table of our blessed Lords Passion, on the Altar of Ierusalem in the Graye Friers at Paris, performed by the hand of a most excellent Painter (then liuing in Paris) named Ieronimo Franco, a Flemishe Gentleman by birth, whose auncient Predecessours were of the first Countes of Flanders, and gaue for their Coate of Armes: L'Escu d'Or au Lyon rempant de Sable Arme & Lampasse de Gueules, à vne des pattes de deuant couppee, et iettee en pointe à Cinq gouttes de Sang; Au Lyon naissant pour Cimier.

CHAP. XI.

The Originall and Genealogie of the Houſe of Cleues, or Cleue.

L'Ordre de Cleues, dict du Cygne.

THis Illuſtrious Houſe in Germanie, deriued Originall and Birth from a Romaine Senatour, named Curtius, the deſcendants of whom were inueſted with the Prouince of Cleue, aunciently called Sicambria in the time of Cæſar, and the auncient dwelling or abiding of the French, neere neighbours to the Menapians, whoſe Prouince at this preſent day is called Gueldres, or Guelderland.

Cleue called Sicambria in Cæſars time.

Theoderick or Thierry, Gouernour of Cleue.

Now, if wee pleaſe to take for currant payment, that which ſome Romancers haue written, reſembling rather of a fabulous diſcourſe, then otherwiſe: wee are tolde, that in the yeare of Grace, Seauen Hundred and Eleuen, according to the Authours of the Genealogie of this Houſe of Cleue; Iuſtinian, Second of the name, being Emperour; Childerick King of France, and Pepin Heriſtell Lord, Duke or Gouernour of Brabant, then was Lord ouer the ſaid Countrey of Cleue, one named Theodorick, vulgarly called Thierry, who deceasing, left (for Heire) his onely Daughter Beatrix, that made her ordenary abyding in a Caſtell called Neufbourg, neere to the Bourrough or Towne of Nimegen. After the death of her Father, the great Lords that were her neighbours; ſought how to poſſeſſe themſelues of her lands, ſhe being quite deſtitute of all humaine helpe.

Beatrix daily gazing at her Caſtell Windowe and whit ſight the ſame.

While ſhe was in this perplexitie and diſtreſſe, ſtanding (on a day) at a window of her Caſtle, full of heauines, & ſadly bemoaning her many miſaduentures; ſhe eſpyed floating on the Riuer of Rhine, a goodly Ship, vnder full Sayle, and on the Orelop or Hatches therof a comely young Knight, armed at all points, a faire Helmet on his Head, ſhadowed with Plumes and Feathers of foure ſeuerall Colours, Yellow, White, Greene, and Red; and vpon the Creſt of his Helmet was a white Swan, hauing her Head exalted and Crowned, with a Horne about her Necke, after hunting manner, bearing on her left Wing, Vn large Eſcu de Gueules, charge d'vn autre Eſcu d'Argent, ayant vn Tourteau de Synople, duquel departoient Huict Sceptres Pommettez, & fleuronnez d'Or, remplissans tout l'Eſcu, comme en forme de raix: And in her right Foot ſhee held a Sword of pure Gold.

The

The Ship came ſoftly accoaſting neere the Caſtle foot of Nimegen: which cauſed Beatrix inſtantly to deſcend, as well remembring, that ſhee had (ſome few dayes before) beheld in a Dreame ſuch another Knight, comming cloſe vpon her Land, and in the ſelfe-ſame furniſhment. Hee courteouſly ſtouped and kiſſed her Hand, offering her his ſeruice againſt her Enemies, making himſelfe knowne to her, vnder name of the Knight of the Swan. The Lady found the Knight to her liking, ſufficient both in yeeres and ſtrength to right her againſt her Enemies; and therefore in Marriage made him her Husband.

Cleualier au Cygne.

Afterward, hee obtained of the Emperour Theodoſius, the Inueſtiture in the Seigneurie of Cleue, vnder the Title of Counte, both for himſelfe and his Succeſſors. But at that time, and long before, the Roman Emperours had nothing more in the Gaules, but what the French had reduced vnder their obedience, as well as Cleue, Guelares, Guelich, and other neighbouring Prouinces: ſo that the beginning of this Genealogie is ſtuffe with Poeticall Fables, and Geſts of Romants. Further they ſay, that this Knight of the Swan named himſelfe Helias, originally deſcended from a farre remote Countrey, called Greaſt, like to a Terreſtriall Paradiſe; the entrance in, and returning backe againe whereof, were by chance and hazard.

Fabulous reports are not to be credited.

A Proceeding in the Lineall Deſcent of HELIAS, Knight of the Swan, and Madame Beatrix of Cleue, his Wife.

OF this Marriage, betweene the fore-named Helias, and Beatrix of Cleue (ſo ſurnamed of a Caſtle, which ſhee had cauſed to be built) iſſued three male Children: the eldeſt whereof, was named Thierry, to whom hee gaue the Shield of his Armes, and his Golden Sword. The ſecond was Godfrey, to whom hee gaue the Horne (others ſay, it was a Trumpet) and made him Counte of Lotier: and the laſt was Conrade, to whom hee gaue his Ring: but by Marriage, hee had the Landſgraviate of Heſſen. Helias hauing reigned one and twentie yeeres, with Madame Beatrix his Wife (Qui portoit d'Argent à vne Teſte de Bœuf de Gueules Accornee de Sable, au muſſle boucle d'Argent) left for Succeſſour his eldeſt Sonne.

II. Thierry, firſt of the Name, ſecond Counte of Cleue, in the yeere ſeuen hundred thirtie and one. Hee tooke to Wife the Daughter of the Counte of Henault: Qui portoit d'Or au Lyon rempant de Sable, qui eſt Flandres, Eſcartele d'Or au Lyon rempant de Gueules, & ſur le Tout d'Argent à Trois Cheurons de Gueules. Hee reigned fiue and twentie yeeres, and left his Sonne and Succeſſor

III. Renauld, firſt of the Name, in the yeere ſeuen hundred fiftie and eight. He eſpouſed the Daughter to the Counte of Ardenne: Qui portoit de Gueules au Lyon rempant d'Or. Hee reigned but eleuen yeeres, and then ſucceeded his Sonne

IV. Loët, or Lewes, firſt of the Name, who reigned the ſpace of twentie yeeres, and tooke to Wife the Daughter of Sigibert of Guienne, who was of the ſame Ligne as the Princes of Holland are deſcended of originally. The ſaid Sigebert bare de Gueules à deux Leopards d'Or: Loët began to reigne in the yeere ſeuen hundred threeſcore and eight, leauing for Succeſſor his Sonne

V. Iohn, firſt of the Name, the yeere ſeuen hundred foureſcore and eight. Hee had married the Siſter to the Emperour Michael, who was the laſt Emperour of the Romans in the Eaſt, before the Empire was transferred into the Houſe of France. This Infanta of the Emperour Michael, is ſaid to beare d'Or au Loup tourne de Sable. And this Iohn, Counte of Cleue, reigned but eight yeeres: after whom, ſucceeded his Sonne

The laſt Eaſterne Emperour.

VI. Robert, firſt of the Name, in the yeere ſeuen hundred foureſcore and ſixe, who reigned but eight yeeres. He tooke to Wife the Daughter of the Duke of Lorraine, whom they make to beare d'Or à la Bande de Gueules, chargee de Trois Alerions d'Argent. Yet it is ſuppoſed (for all this) that the Dukes or Lords of Lorraine raine Portoient d'Argent au Cerf de Gueules ſomme d'Or. And the Sur-tout or Ouer-all of Lorraine, at that time, was but the ſole Deuice of Godfrey of Bologne, Lord of Mentz and Bouillon, firſt King of Ieruſalem, in the yeere One thouſand, one hundred, as wee ſhall declare to you elſe-where.

VII. Baldwin, firſt of the Name, ſucceeded after Counte Robert his Father, in the yeere Eight hundred and foure. Hee married the Daughter of Prince Lewes of Prouence, who is ſaid to beare Seme de France ſans nombre, eſcartele d'Or, contre eſcartele de Gueules à la bordure engreſlee d'Argent. This Lewes of Prouence is made to deſcend of a Sonne of France, in regard, that his Father was the fourth Sonne of King Charlemaigne, and of Hildegarde, his firſt Wife: So that the Emperour Lewes the Debonaire was his Vncle, and great Vncle to this Counteſſe of Cleue. By whom, Baldwin her Husband begate three Sonnes: Lewes, who was Counte of Cleue after his Father: Euerard, likewiſe Counte of Cleue after his Brother; and Robert, who was Counte of Theyſterbant, a Countrey which at this preſent is called Bommelrewert, and the Countrey of Hueſden, and of Artenack. This Count of Theyſterbant changed the ancient Armes of Cleue, Et porta d'Azur, à Huict Sceptres fleuronnez d'Or. The firſt Lord of Hueſden had a Brother, Lord of Theyſterbant, and of a Caſtle and Village, called Hueſden, with the round neighbouring places; and nominated by the courſe of Time, The Seigneurie of Hueſden.

The firſt Lord of Artenack, was Brother to him of Theyſterbant, being ſo named of his Caſtle of Artenack: Which Land and Seigneurie belonged (as well as thoſe of Hueſden and Theyſterbant) to the ſaid Countes of Cleue, and which they held in Fiefe of the Biſhops and Chapter of Vtrecht, two hundred yeeres before the Seigneurie of Gueldres or Ghelres was erected into a Countie. And yet notwithſtanding, the Countie of Theyſterbant was not of any long continuance; becauſe in the yeere Nine hundred foureſcore and foureteene, Infundus, the eighteenth Biſhop of Vtrecht (who formerly had been Counte of Theyſterbant) brought this Countie into Mortmaine, by the Foundations which hee had graunted to his Church, and other Monaſteries, whereof hee was Founder, and Benefactor.

VIII. Lewes, ſecond of the Name, Sonne to Count Baldwin, ſucceeded him in the yeere Eight hundred and twentie. Hee reigned but foure yeeres, and dyed before he was married, leauing the Countie of Cleue to his Brother

IX. Euerard, or Edward, the yeere Eight hundred twentie foure, and reigned the ſpace of nine yeeres. Hee eſpouſed the Daughter to the Duke of Bauaria: Qui portoit Lozengie d'Argent & d'Azur en Bande. And by her he had two Sonnes, Luthard his Succeſſor, and Berengarius, who was Biſhop of Toul.

X. Luthard was Counte of Cleue in the yeere eight hundred thirtie and three, and reigned foure and fortie yeeres. Hee tooke to Wife Bertha, Daughter to the Emperour Arnoul, Qui portoit de Franc ſans nombre, party d'Or a Quatre Chevrons de Sable; becauſe this Arnoul was deſcended of the Houſe of France, both by his great Grandfather, & Grandfather Lewes of France, King of Germanie. In this Marriage, two Sonnes were borne: the firſt whereof, was named Baldwine; and the other, Richefordus, Biſhop of Vtrecht. Luthard and his Wife founded two Canonicall Churches: the one at Vuiſcel, or Weſele, in the County of Cleue; and the other at Nuiſſe, a Fiefe of the Houſe of Cleue, in the yeere Eight hundred thirtie and eight.

XI. Baldwine, ſecond of the Name, was Succeſſor to his Father Luthard, in the yeere Eight hundred threeſcore and ſixteene, reigning ſeuen and thirty yeeres. Hee eſpouſed the Daughter to the Count of Saxonie, Qui portoit Burele d'Or & de Sable a la Coronne de Rue de Synople pierr en Bande. And after him ſucceeded his Sonne

XII. Arnoul, firſt of the Name, in the yeere Nine hundred and thirteene, and reigned fiue and fortie yeeres. Hee tooke to Wife the Daughter to the Counte of Zutphen, Qui portoit d'Argent party de Deux Lyons rempants, l'vn tourne de Gueules, & l'autre de Sable, aux queuës noüees en Sautour.

XIII. Vichinan, Sonne to Arnoul, was the thirteenth Counte of Cleue, in the yeere Nine hundred fiftie and eight, reigning ſix and thirtie yeeres. Hee married the Daughter to the Landſgraue of Thu- inge, who bare d'Azur au Lyon rempant Argent. After him, ſucceeded his Sonne

XIIII. Conrad, firſt of the Name, the yeere Nine hundred foureſcore and foureteene. Hee reigned one and fortie yeeres: and his Wife was Daughter to the Counte Zeim; but it is to be diuined, whereof hee was Lord. Et portoit de Gueules au Lyon rempant d'Argent.

XV. Thierry, ſecond of the Name, Sonne and Succeſſor to Conrad, was Counte of Cleue in the yeere of Grace, One thouſand, thirtie fiue. Hee reigned three and fortie yeeres, and eſpouſed the Daughter to the Counte of Scombergh, Qui portoit d'Or au Coq de Sable. His Sonne, and Succeſſor, was

XVI. Thierry, or Dietherick, third of the Name, in the yeere One thouſand, threeſcore, and eighteene, reigning nine and thirtie yeeres. His Wife was Daughter to the Counte of Hennenberg: Qui portoit a la Bordure d'Argent endenchee au chef, & aux Flancs de Quatre pieces. Next him, ſucceeded his Sonne

XVII. Arnoul, ſecond of the Name, in the yeere of Grace, One thouſand, one hundred and eight, and reigned ſeuenteene yeeres. His Wife was Daughter to the Duke of Zubanes, Qui portoit d'Azur au Leopard d'Or, a la queue paſſee en Sautour. Hee had for his Sonne and Succeſſor,

XVIII. Thierry, fourth of the Name, in the yeere One thouſand, one hundred, fiftie, and fiue. His Wife was Daughter to the Duke of Bauaria, who bare as before hath beene declared. After him ſucceeded his Sonne

XIX. Arnoul, third of the Name, in the yeere One thouſand, one hundred, foureſcore, and foureteene, and reigned but tenne yeeres. He married Margaret, Daughter to Florent, Counte of Holland: who bare d'Azur au Lyon rempant de Gueules, Eſcartele d'Argent au Lyon rempant de Sable.

XX. Arnoul the Fourth, his Sonne, ſucceeded him in the yeere, One thouſand, two hundred, and three. He reigned thirteene yeeres, and tooke to Wife the Daughter of Adolphe, Counte of Monts: Qui portoit a'Argent a Trois Chevrons de Gueules. He had for his Sonne and Succeſſor

XXI. Thierry the Fift, in the yeere One thouſand, two hundred, and ſixteene. Hee reigned eleuen yeeres, and ioyned to his Countie of Cleue the Seigneurie of Diſlaquen, by meanes of his Wife, the onely Daughter to the Lord of Diſlaquen: Qui portoit de Gueules a Cinq Feſſes demy-vivrees d'Argent. Next him ſucceeded his Sonne

XXII. Thierry the Sixt, the yeere One thouſand, two hundred, twentie, and ſeuen, and reigned eighteene yeeres. His Wife was Iſabel, Daughter to Henry, Duke of Brabant: Qui portoit de Braban, qui eſt de Sable au Lyon rempant d'Or, Eſcartele de France ſans nombre; becauſe her Mother was Daughter to Philip Auguſtus, King of France: Wherein this Chronologie deceiueth it ſelfe, becauſe Madame Mary of France was but twice married: firſt, to Philip, Counte of Namur, Brother to the Emperour of Greece, Baldwine, Counte of Flanders: and laſtly, to Henry, Duke of Lorraine; but not to Henry, Duke of Louaine, which is Brabant.

XXIII. Thierry the Seuenth was Counte of Cleue, by the death of Thierry the Sixt, his Father, in the yeere One thouſand, two hundred, fortie fiue, reigning ſixteene yeeres. Hee married the Daughter of Otho, the ſeuenth Counte of Gueldres: Qui portoit d'Azur au Lyon rempant tourne d'Or, party d'Or au Lyon rempant de Sable. By her hee had Thierry the Eight, his Succeſſor, and Iſabel, who was Wife to Gerard, Counte of Gulich: And of this Marriage iſſued two Sonnes, William, Counte of Gulich, and Valeran, or Walran, Archbiſhop of Cologne.

XXIIII. Thierry the Eight began to reigne in the yeere One thouſand, two hundred, threeſcore, and one, reigning fifteene yeeres. Hee had to Wife the Daughter of the Counte of Luxembourg: Qui portoit d'Argent, au Lyon rempant de Gueules. Hee had for Sonne and Succeſſor

XXV. Thierry the Ninth, in the yeere One thouſand, two hundred, threeſcore, and ſixteene, reigning ſeuen and thirtie yeeres. Hee tooke to Wife the Daughter to the Duke of Auſtria, of Habſpourg, whom they make to beare d'Argent a la Feſſe de Gueules: but that is a falſe emblazon, in regard that the moderne Armes of Auſtria

Austria are de Gueules a la Fesse d'Argent, as we haue before made apparant to you. Of this Marriage, issued three Sonnes, all Countes of Cleue, each after other: and a Daughter named Elizabeth, Wife to the Lord of Perwis: And of that Marriage descended many great Houses.

XXVI. Otho, first of the Name, succeeded after Thierry the Ninth, his Father, in the yeere of Grace One thousand three hundred and thirteene, reigning sixteene yeeres. He had to Wife Adeleida, that is, Alix, Daughter to Engilbert, the eight Counte de la Mark: Qui portoit d'Or a la Fesse Eschecquee d'Argent & de Gueules de Trois Traicts.

Of this Marriage was borne one onely Daughter, called by the Name of her Mother, married to John, Lord of Arquel, of whom came Otho, Lord of Arquel, and many Daughters which had no Issue, and one named Ioane.

Otho, Lord of Arquel, left his Sonne John, Father to William, a young Gallant of Arquel: who dwelling in the Land of Gorchen, had to Wife the Daughter of the Lady of Gimonde; of whom, was borne Arnoul, Duke of Gueldres, and William de Gimonde.

Of Ioane, Daughter to the Lord of Arquel, Lady of Leana (this Genealogie is in this partie much hudled, and very ill distinguished) descended the Lords of Geneppe, of Heynsberg, of Brederodde, de la Vere, of Groeninge, of Drongelem, of Merunie, of Vlet, of Ostende, and many other in the Netherlands, in regard that this Lady had many Daughters.

Now, because by the Inuestiture made of the Countie of Cleue to the Knight of the Swanne, this County was made a fiefe of the Empire, and subiected to the Salique Law of the French; by the course whereof, Daughters were excluded from succession in the said Countie: the onely Daughter to Counte Otho the First, could not inherite the Countie of Cleue, by the death of her Father; but after him succeeded the second Brother

XXVII. Thierry, Tenth of the Name, who reigned eighteene yeeres, and had to Wife Mary, Daughter to the Counte Regnauld of Sister to the first Duke of Qui portoit d'Azur, au Leopard passant d'Argent. And of this Marriage issued but their onely Daughter, named who was Wife to Adolphe the Ninth, Counte de la Mark, whereby descended three Sonnes, as namely Engilbert, Counte de la Mark, who was Lord de la Mark; Adolphe, who was Bishop, Archbishop, and afterward Counte of Cleue, and de la Mark. Lastly, Thierry, a young Gentleman (as meaning a younger Brother) de la Mark, who was Lord de la Mark, and Lord of Eslaque, not hauing any legitimate Children, no more then Engilbert his eldest Brother.

But of the second Sonne Adolphe descended many Children, as wee shall see hereafter. And Thierry the Tenth dying without heire male, his yongest Brother

XXVIII. John, second of the Name, was Counte of Cleue, and held the said Countie fifteene yeeres. Hee tooke to Wife Margaret, eldest Daughter to Reynauld the first, Duke of Qui portoit d'Azur, au Lyon rampant d'Or. But of this Marriage came not any Issue.

Contention for the Countie of Cleue.

So that by the death of this John the Second, contention grew about Succession in the said Countie of Cleue, which (by right of Reuersion) returned to the Empire, whereof it was a Fiefe, according to the words of his Inuestiture, made to the Knight of the Swanne. For the Lord of Perwueis maintained, That although Elizabeth of Cleue (his Mother) was departed out of this life, yet notwithstanding, by representing his Mother (Sister to the three last Countes of Cleue) he ought to be preferred before any other. And ioyning deedes to words, by force of Armes he possessed himselfe of Cranenbourg, and of other places in the Countie of Cleue.

The Armes were made by the Counte de la Marke.

Engilbert, Counte de la Mark, defended against him, That the Countie of Cleue should (in right) belong to him, because his Mother liued still, who was the onely Daughter of Counte Thierry, and so (by consequent) much neerer then Elizabeth of Cleue, were she as yet liuing. Moreouer, that by the Lawes of the Empire (in cases of Successions) the Sonnes of Brothers ought to precede the Sonnes of Sisters. And hereupon he imployed his best endeuour, to make himselfe Master of the Countie of Cleue, as indeed he did, by being assisted with mighty forces, which his Brother Adolphe, Archbishop of Cologne, brought him, beside the powers of the Bishop of Munstere.

The third pretender to the said Countie of Cleue, was Otho, Lord of Arquel, in regard that his Mother (albeit then dead also) was the onely Daughter to Otho, Count of Cleue, Niece to John the last Count. And yet notwithstanding, most part of the Nobilitie, and the best Cities in Cleueland, would not accept any one of these three Pretendents; but rather desired to haue for their Count and Lord Adolphe, Archbishop elected of Cologne, enclining all to his side, because he was not yet restrained by the Churches Orders, being yong also, and very dexterious in Armes. Hereupon, Engilbert, Count de la Mark his Brother, and the Lord of Arquel, ioyned themselues with this Adolphe, to expell thence the Lord of Peruueys, which they did, & Prince Adolphe became Lord of the Countie of Cleue: resigning his Bishopricks (with consent of the Pope and the holy Seate) to Messire Engilbert de la Mark his Vnckle, then Bishop of Luge, and to the halfe-brother of the Lord of Arquel, who tooke part with him. He caused himselfe to be Inuested in the said Countie of Cleue, by the Emperour Charles of Bohemia: And so

All the three Pretenders refused and a fourth man chosen.

XXIX. Adolphe was Count of Cleue by a new Inuestiture, made in the yeare One thousand three hundred fiftie and seauen, & by Succession to his Brother Engilbert (deceasing without issue) he became likewise Lord de la Marke. And thereupon he tooke De Cleues party de la Mark. He reigned the space of two and twenty yeares, espousing Margaret Daughter to Gerard, Count of Monts: Qui portoit d'Argent à trois Cheurons de Gueulles; And by her hee had a plenteous linage, seauen Sonnes, and nine daughters.

The Sonnes were

Adolphe, Successour to his Father.

Gerard, Count de la Marke, third Sonne, and others.

The Daughters were

Margaret, wife to Albert Duke of Bauaria, and Count of Holland, Sonne to Lewes the Emperour, and other.

XXX. Adolphe, second of the name, was the thirtieth Count of Cleue, and the twelfth de la Mark, who reigned foure and fifty yeares, beginning in the yeare of Grace One thousand foure hundred & seauenteene. At the Councill of Constans this Countie of Cleue was erected to be a Duchie, by the Emperour Sigismond, in the person of Adolphe the second, who was the first Duke of Cleue, An. One thousand foure hundred and seauenteene, as by the Record appeareth:

Adolphe the first Duke of Cleueland.

He had two wiues, the first whereof was Agnes, Daughter to Robert, Duke of Bauaria, by whom he had no issue.

The second wife was Mary, Daughter to John Duke of Bourgongne: Qui portoit de Bourgongne Moderne, Escartele de la Vieille, & sur le tout de Flandre And by her he had three Sonnes and seauen Daughters. The eldest Sonne bare the name of John of Bourgongne; the second carried the name of his Father, and was Lord of Rauestaine, who tooke to wife the Daughter to the Duke of Coimbre, Brother to the King of Portugall, of which marriage issued a Son and a Daughter, Phillip and Louisa de Rauestein. The third Son was Engilbert, who dyed yong.

The issue of Adolphe by his two wiues.

The first of the Daughters was named Margaret, wife to William, Duke of Bauaria, in first mariage; and in the second, to the Lord of Wittemberg: The second was Katharine, wife to Arnoul, Duke of Gueldres. The third Isabel, wife to the Count of Zuuartenbroch: the fourth Agnes, who is said to be wife to a Prince, the eldest Sonne of Navarre and Arragon, whereof he bare the Armes, but quartered without any specifying: The fift Helena, wife to the Duke of Brunswicke; Qui portoit de Gueulles à Deux Leopards d'Or: The sixt Mary, wife to Charles, Duke of Orleans, to whom the ignorant Painter hath given De France sans Lambell. And the seauenth Daughter dyed yong, about seauen yeares of age.

The seauen Daughters, & their mariages

John, third of the name, Sonne of Adolphe, was the second Duke of Cleue, and Count de la Marke, who reigned fiue and thirty yeares. Hee married the Daughter to John, Count de Neuers, d'Estampes and de Rethell: whom (very simply) they make to bee De France de Trois Fleurs, & la Bordure componee d'Argent & de Gueulles. Hee had by her one Sonne, and fiue Daughters: But the eldest Sonne of John the third, was

Descent of the Dukes of Cleue

Iohn, the fourth Duke of Cleue, and Count de la Mark, who reigned forty yeares. He tooke to wife Mathilda, Daughter to the Landsgraue of Hessen: Qui portoit d'Azur au Lyon rempant d'Argent, tenant vne Hache de mesme. He had for Successour in the Seigneuries of Cleue and de la Mark, his Sonne Iohn the fift, who espoused Mary, the onely Daughter to William, Duke of Gulich and of Monts; by meanes of which marriage, he enioyed the said Countries and Seigneuries, and charged his Armes with them. Portant de Cleues party de Iulliers, qui est d'Or au Lyon de Sable party d'Argent au Lyon de Gueulles, tranchez, ou soustenus de la Mark, & de Monts. Of this Marriage issued three Daughters, the eldest whereof was named Sibilla, wife to Fredericke Duke of Saxonie; and of this marriage is descended the Duke of Saxon, reigning at this present. The other Daughters are no way materiall to this our Chronologicall discourse.

The House of Saxon at this present.

William, onely Sonne to Iohn the fift, was Successour to his Father. He had to wife Mary, Daughter to Ferdinand, King of Hungarie and Bohemia, King of the Romaines, yongest Brother to the Emperour Charles the fift. Portoit de Hongrie, Escartelé de Boëme, sur le tout party d'Austriche, & de Bourgongne ancienne. This William held the forenamed Seigneuries in the yeare One thousand fiue hundred and fiftie, where the Genealogie of the Counts of Cleue ceaseth, and proceedeth on no further: yet beginneth againe at Engelbert of Cleue, allied in the House of Bourgongne by Iohn, Duke of Neuers. But we will supply this defect, and finish the Ligne.

The Authors supplement where the Genealogy failed

This William of Cleue and of Gulich, was sometimes in seruice to King Frances the first, who to make him vnited to the Crowne of France by an vndissolueable bond: did then affiance vnto him Iane d'Albret, being then Princesse, and afterward Queene of Nauarre, Grandmother to our King at this instant reigning. But this inconstant Prince, intruded himselfe into pertaking with Charles the fift, who caused him to marrie his Niece, the Daughter to his Brother Ferdinand, as we haue already said. By this marriage the Emperour Charles compelled him to part with the Duchie of Gueldres, whereof he was before possessed. And by meanes of his wife Mary of Hungarie, the Principalities of Cleue, Gulich and Berghes were left to him, with the Counties de la Mark and of Rauenspourge in Algaw: the Duchie of Gueldres remaining annexed to the Nether-Lands, by the said Emperour Charles the fift; who auouched and maintained, that Charles the last Duke of Bourgongne had possessed, and annexed it to the Nether Lands.

The Duchie of Gueldres parted withal.

By Mary of Hungarie his wife, this William Duke of Cleue had a Sonne, bearing the names of his Grandfather and Father together; and foure Daughters beside, as namely Mary Elenora, Anne, Magdalen and Sybilla.

The issue of William Duke of Cleue.

Iohn William, the onely heire masse by the death of his Father, he was Duke of Cleue of Gulich and of Monts, Count de la Mark, and of Rauenspourg. Hee had to wife the Daughter of Lorraine, but no issue by her, he dying of a Feuer as he returned from Hunting, the fiue and twentieth day of March, One thousand fixe hundred & nine:

For Succession (after him) happened the like contention, as did after the death of Count Iohn, second of the name. For it was pretended, and laid claime to, as well by the descendants of Sybilla, Daughter to Iohn the fift, as by the Sisters to Iohn William, and others farre further off in this Succession: In regard that Charles de Gonzaga of Cleue, Duke of Niuernois & of Rethelois made his pretence; that the Countie of Cleue appertained to him, because he bare the Armes and Sirname of Cleue.

Another accident of contention happening about Succession in Cleue.

The Count of Maulenrier, his pretence was to the Countie de la Mark: because (of his owne naturall and legittimate Stocke) he carried the full Armes, and also the Sirname de la Mark.

The Duke of Saxonie, Son to Fredericke the Saxon Duke, and Sybilla of Cleue, eldest Sonne of Iohn the fift, pretended, that he had double right thereto, for his owne part. First of all, because he was descended of the said Sybilla, married to the Saxon Duke his Father, in the yeare One thousand fiue hundred twenty and sixe, by which contract of Marriage it was namely couenanted and concluded, that the said Iohn Duke of Cleue and Gulich, his children and descendants, happening to dye without heires masse; the said Sybilla should then be sole heire to the said Seigneuries, by exclusion of her other two Suters, whose Mariages were endowed with Money, and not Lands.

A double right of pretence pleaded by the Duke of Saxonie.

Secondly,

Secondly, that although the Contract of this had not bin set downe in expresse words, and made so cleare as the Sun at midday: yet he had another right, accumulating one vpon the other, to wit; That these Principalities were acquired by grant and donation of them, made to the Duke of Saxonie Fredericke his Father, and to his Grandfather, by the Emperours, if the Lords of them could chance to dye without heires Masles.

Against these Pretendants, came much neerer Heires to the defunct Iohn William, to wit, his Sisters and their Children. Mary Elenora the eldest Sister, had maried with the Duke of Prussia, Marquesse of Brandenbourg, Electour of the Empire: And of this mariage were descended many Daughters, the eldest whereof was married to Iohn Sigismond Marquesse of Brandenbourg, Elector, who in the right of his Mother (although deceased) pretended, that by the representation of his Mother, the Succession after the dead party, belonged to him onely.

On the contrary, Anne, the second Daughter, who was yet liuing, widdow to Philip Lodowicke, Count Palatine of Neufbourg, Father and Mother to Wolfang William, Count Palatine of Neufbourg, maintained, that this succession appertained to her; as being a much neerer heire, then the Childrens Children of her elder Sister, who was not of this world. Moreouer, that the Inuestiture of the Seigneuries in question, made by the Emperour Charles the fourth, King of Bohemia, in the yeare One thousand three hundred fiftie and seauen, to Count Adolphe, first of the name; the Inuestiture was made (for perpetuitie) to him & his heires, as well Females as Masles, Ordine seruato viuentium. And therefore, she was to be preferred before the Childrens Children of her Sister; as it was by the law of Nature due to her third Sister

Anne the second Daughter mis-pleaded against the childrens children of her eldest Sister.

Magdalen, widdow to Iohn Duke des deux Ponts Count Palatine, &c. & to her sister Sibilla, wife to the Marquesse of Burgaw.

The Emperour Rodolphe, second of the name, he stept in to be a party also, & pretended; that the said Duchies and Counties belonged to him, as being masculine Fiefes of the Empire, which neuer could fall to Females, or the distaffe: And therefore inuested in them one of his owne Brethren, named Lupold, or Leopold, Bishop of Strasbourg and of Passaw (which Bishopricke, called Episcopatus Patauiensis, is seated in the Duchie of Bauaria, neere to the frontiers of Austria, the Cathedrall Towne or Citie whereof, is named Patauia inter Danubium, Rhenumque sita) who stiled himselfe Archduke of Oenipont, and taking Poastage in a disguised habite, roade secretly from Prage to Gulich, whereof he possessed himselfe by Intelligence with the Gouernour, and so prepared with all dilligence, for gathering and leuying troupes of men, to obtaine all the rest, by vertue of his Imperiall command.

Rodolphe the Emperour a competitor in plea likewise.

The Count Palatine of Neufbourg, from the beginning of Aprill kept himselfe in field, to make head with an Armie, and vpon the meeting of the States of Cleue and Gulich held at Duisseldorpe, he accorded with the Elector Marquesse of Brandenbourg, and both of them were acknowledged in that meeting, to be the lawfull heires of their Vncle William; so that they made themselues Maisters of those Seigneuries, which appertained to the defunct, seated beyond the Rhine.

Two lawfull heires acknowledged in an open Assembly

Because on the hither side, where Gulich is placed; all that part swarmed with Armed forces, belonging to the Archduke Leopolde.

And thus became all Germanie moued and deuided, in fauouring and defending the right and quarrell of these pretending Princes. For the Emperour holding those parkings to be the worst, which had bin done without him; stood vpon his Imperiall Edicts and Commands, against the Elector of Brandenbourg, and the Palatine of Neufburg: who likewise maintained against him, that these Estates thus standing in quarell and contention, could be no Masculine Fiefes of the Empire, The Salicke Law being no where in force or effect (say they) but onely in the Kingdome of France.

Brandenbourg and the Palatine against the Emperor.

And to speake vprightly, this was the more iust and equall side, but that of the Emperors was the strongest; carrying along with him the whole House of Austria in generall, with all their well-willers, as well in Germanie and Italie, as elsewhere. Beside all these, the Princes of the House of Saxonie (though they pretended to haue a share lyke at the maine stake) yet they tooke part with the Emperour.

Now concerning the part of the Marquesse and Palatine, in outward apparance, it could could beare no body or subsistance, against so potent a part as the Emperors, being put into the Ballance, and compromising the merit of their cause, as (indeede) good right hath neede of as good helpe. Wherefore these Princes made their recourse to the Crown of France, who being the Chiefe, most potent and redoubted Monarch of Christendome (Henry of Bourbon, fourth of the name, King of France and Nauarre, the meere respect of his authority, might serue as an Adamant, to attract to him all the Iron or Steele of Germanie, and of any place else.

Succor sought for to the King of France

A great stocke of money, well spared by good Husbandrie, and strongly Coffred vp in the Bastile: An Arsenall of Armes and Artillerie, able to win passage through the best defenced places; A Thunderbolt of Warre, borne and bred vp in the very midst of Armies for fiftie and so many yeares: was more then sufficient, to shake with trembling, and to ballance the Iudgement of Europes Princes, to make them take part whersoeuer he pretended. Because the inuincible power of France, led and conducted by her Prince, was able to beare along with it a motion, though the contrary Orbes were opposed against it.

The Electors had their recourse to the King, to maintaine the iust merit of their cause. He welcommed their Ambassadours, in the Moneth of September, sixe hundred and nine, promising their Maisters all assistance and fauour. But yet with such conditions, that the States of Cleue and Gulich should conserue the free exercise of Christian Religion; because some disputes and arguings were then called in question, that might grow on to greater danger. Which being faithfully promised; the King gaue them assurance of his best meanes, and to be with them in person at the Spring time following sixe hundred and ten.

Ambassadors sent to the King and his acceptance of their cause.

Hereupon was prepared a puissant Armie of threescore thousand men, and the like number of Artillery, already gon vpon the Frontiers, awaiting onely for their Prince. But oh the misfortune of France! her sinnes, and the greedy desires of some, couting to fish in troubled waters: caused that good King to be murdered by a damnable villaine, long time incited on to this tragicall act, who killed him with three stabbes of his Knife: he being in his Carroche, in the sight and armes of the greatest Lords of the Kingdome, and in the very midst of the Citie of Paris, on Friday the foureteenth day of May, in the yeare One thousand sixe hundred and ten, betweene three and foure of the Clocke in the after noone. And thus was the Sunne of France Eclipsed

The businesse hindered by the Kings vntimely death.

QVo Mo Do per Ie tler Ia LILII.

This his disastrous death, so vnhappy to France, was yet no impediment, for sending to the said Princes the succour of twelue thousand men, conducted by Claude de la Chastre, Marshall of France, to the Siedge of Gulich, begun by the Count Maurice, about the ending of the Moneth of August. But the Towne being surprized by the Archduke of Occipent Leopolde, was yet so narrowly engirt, beaten and vnderminde; that they which held it, were enforced to yeelde vpon composition. Which was agreed on by a Treatie, containing thirteene Articles, the first whereof was in these words:

Ayant cy-deuant esté promis par Mesieurs les Princes au feu Roy de loüable memoire l'Inuincible Henry le Grand IIII. du nom Roy de France, & de Nauarre, qu'és Pais de Iuliers, Cleues, Berg, & autres appartenants, & possedez par lesdicts Sieurs Princes, qu'il ne se feroit aucun changement en l'exercice de la Religion Chrestienne, ains que ledit exercice fut permis à toutes personnes esdicts Pais: Lesdicts Princes promettent le faire ainsi garder, & obseruer. Seront toutes personnes Ecclesiastiques conseruez, & maintenus en leurs Priuileges, & Immunitez, & en la iouissance de leurs biens, rentes, & reuenus.

Hauing heretofore made promise be my Lords the Princes, to the late King of famous memory, Henry the Great, fourth of the name, King of France and Nauarre, that the Countreyes of Gulich, Cleue, Bergh, with others appertaining and possessed by the said Lords Princes, should not make any change or alteration in the exercise of Christian Religion; but the same exercise shall be still permitted to all persons in the said Countries: The same Princes doe promise to haue it still kept and conserued. And that all Ecclesiasticall persons shall be kept and maintained in their Priuiledges and Immunities, and in the enioying of their goods, rents and reuennues.

The other Articles doe concerne and respect the perticulers of the besiedged.

The Princes issued and descended of the House of Cleue, to preserue the memorie of the Knight of the Swanne: doe beare (to this day) the Swanne for their Order, Deuise, Crest and Supporters of their Armes; as we haue declared in the Tract of Orleans, and Knights of the Holy-Ghost.

The Crosse of the Teutonicall, Allemaigne or Germaine Order, called of Prusia; and Of the Table of Honour: Instituted in the Holy-Land, in the yeare One thousand one hundred fourescore and eleauen, and in the Moneth of Nouember.

CHAP. XII.

The Originall of the Order called of the Allemaignes Teutones or Germaines, and of Prusia, and also of the Table of Honor.

THis Order tooke beginning, during the Conquest of the Holy-Land, wherein an Allemaigne Gentleman (moued with deuotion) retired himselfe to Ierusalem, with his Wife and Familie, where he set downe his resolution, to entertaine, lodge and nourish, such as were of his owne Nation. For this effect and purpose, with his owne Moneyes he caused a small Hospitall to be built, and close ioyning thereto (by permission of the Patriarch) he procured an Oratorie to be erected, dedicated to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary, the Mother of God according to his Manhood. This worthy Allemaigne ioyned with diuers Gentlemen more of the same Nation, who contributing their goods and persons, to such a godly and charitable worke; imployed their care and paines there, to nourish and cure such Allemaigne Souldiours, as voyaged ouer the Seas, when hauing fully recouered and cured them, they were conducted to Ioppa, and their passage setled.

Teutones were people of Germanie called Alemaignes.

In the yeare One thousand one hundred fourescore and eleauen, the Moneth of Nouember, certaine good Citizens of Bresme and Lubecke in Allemaigne, very rich and abounding in goods, collecting a common purse together: ioyned themselues with them of this Hospitall of the Virgin Mary, and builded in the Citie of Acres (possessed then by the Christians) a magnificent Hospitall, and all of them together took the title, of knights Teutones or Almaignes, of the Hospitall of the Virgin Mary, of the House of the Teutones in Ierusalem, and the Rule of Saint Augustine, with the Roabe and Cloake white, and on the breast a plaine blacke Crosse, doubly potencee or batune. And afterward they had for Armes, D'Argent aus dites deux Croix vne sur lautre, whereunto the good King Saint Loüis, being then beyond the Seas, A diousta le chef de France, according as is obserued by Funccius.

Knights called Teutons or Alemaignes.

The habite & Armes of the Order.

They made profession, and vowed Pouertie, Obedience and Chastitie, before the Patriarch of Ierusalem Heraclius. They composed their Rule by the modell and externe of the Knights of Saint Iohn of Ierusalem, who healed the diseased? and likewise likewise by the Templers, who kept the high-wayes, to fight against the Sarrazens. This Almaigne Order of the Teutones, was confirmed by Pope Celestine the third, in the yeare of Grace One thousand one hundred foureſcore and fifteene: who gaue them charge to ſay daily two hundred Pater noſters and Aue Mariaes, with the Symbole or Creede of the Apoſtles, and as many euery night. Enioyning th m moreouer, to ſuffer their Beards to grow great, after the faſhion of Saint Auguſtines Hermites: Ordaining withall, that no man might be receiued into this Order; if he were not a Gentleman of race, and a native of the Almaigne Nation.

The Order confirmed by Pope Celeſtine the third.

The Almaigne Knights elected for their Gouernor a Great Maiſter, the firſt whereof was Henry de Valpot, a braue and valiant Knight, vnder whom was builded the Great Hoſpitall of Acres. He gouerned the ſaid Order the ſpace of twenty yeares, and died in the yeare One thouſand two hundred and ten, and had for his Succeſſour

The firſt Great Maiſter of the Order.

Otho de Kerpen, who Gouerned after him ſixe and twenty yeares: and after him

Herman Bart foure and twenty yeares. Theſe three Great Maiſters were buried in the Citie of Acres, which was taken from the Chriſtians in the yeare One thouſand two hundred foureſcore and eleauen, then being the fourth Great Maiſter

The Citie of Acres wonne from the Chriſtians.

Herman de Saltza, who Gouerned the ſaid Order the ſpace of eight and thirty yeares.

After the ſurprizall of Acres, the Great Maiſter and the reſt of the Knights Teutones, departed thence into Almaigne or Germanie, where the Emperour Fredericke the ſecond, returning from his voyage beyond the Seas, in the yeare One thouſand two hundred twenty and nine; had brought home with him ſome Knights of this Order. To them he gaue the Prouince of Boruſsia, afterward called Pruſia, the Inhabitants whereof were as yet Idolaters, and oftentimes rauaged Saxonie. Herman de Saltza practiſed by ſtrong hand to conquer it.

Now we are here to obſerue, that in the yeare One thouſand of our Saluation. Adelbert (that is Albert) Biſhop of Prage in Bohemia, a man of wonderfull holy life, reſolued to conuert thoſe poore Infidels of Pruſia, to the Faith of Ieſus Chriſt. And becauſe he had not ſo much as one pennie to proceede in this intent by way of Battaile; the Pruſian Idolaters gaue ſo many blowes with Staues to this good Biſhop, as had well-neere expired his life. Yet Albert deſiſted not from preaching ſtill to thoſe Idolaters, to diuert them from worſhipping the foure Elements, whereto they lent a deafened eare, and ſeeing him to be inueſted of a place on the Sea-ſhoare, neere to the Towne of Feſhauff: wounded his body with ſeauen gaſhes of an Aſagaye, and hung him vp vpon a Tree. Boleſlaus, Duke of Poland, hauing bin conuerted to the Faith by this good Biſhop; bought his body of them, which he cauſed to be honourably buried in the Church of Gneſna. Valdemar the ſecond, King of Denmarke, was the firſt that (by Sea) made warre on the Pruſians, onely for their Idolatry, compelling them to promiſe, that they would receiue the Faith of Ieſus Chriſt: but ſo ſoone as he had retreated his Armie from Pruſia into Pomerania, the Pruſians returned to their former Idolatry againe.

Albert a Chriſtian Biſhop of Pruſia martyred by the Idolatrous Pruſians.

Herman de Saltza, to whom this Prouince of Pruſia was giuen by the Emperour Fredericke the ſecond; ſent his Knights thither to make Conqueſt thereof. And the Croiſade hauing bin publiſhed againſt them throughout all Germanie, a puiſſant Armie was leuied, conducted by the Burgraue of Meidenbourg; who meeting with the Armie of the Pruſians, gaue them Battaile, and fiftie thouſand Pruſians were ſlaine in the Field. The firſt place which theſe Knights got poſſeſſion of in Pruſia, after they had paſſed the Riuer of Viſtula, was at an old goodly branched Oake, which they d d round engirt with good and ſtrong Bulwarkes; in forme of a well fl ncked and defended Caſtle, wherein they planted a powerfull Garriſon, by meanes whereof they became Maiſters of the Riuer, and ſo from thence began to ouerrunne and rauage Pruſia, vanquiſhing and ſubduing moſt part of the people, who were all vp in Armes, to Conquer the Rampierde Oake, and to ouercome their enemies.

Fiftie hundred Pruſians ſlaine in the field.

But

But they being ſuccoured by a number of Gentlemen, & very wealthy Almaigne Merchants: in ſhort time after builded a rich and mighty Citie round about the Oake, and erected there a magnificent Church, in honour of the euer bleſſed Virgin Marie, whoſe name alſo they gaue to their new Citie, calling it Mariebourge, which (ſince that time) was the chiefe place of their Order, and the principall Seate for the Great Maiſters thereof, who by force of Armes conquered all Pruſia, Liuonia, part of Lithuania, and the neighbouring Countries of Poland and Moſcouia, where they continued warre almoſt the ſpace of two hundred yeares. After Herman de Saltza the fourth Great Maiſter: ſucceeded the fift

Their firſt braue Citie called Mariebourg.

Conrad Landgraue, Brother of Lewes, Husband to Saint Elizabeth, whom they buried in the Church of Martſpourg, the Citie of his Order, whereunto he brought all his Fathers goods, and moſt great reuennues. The Princes of Germanie ſeconding the Knights of this Order, made a great Armie to march againſt the Pruſians, in the yeare One thouſand two hundred fiftie foure. The forces of this Armie belonged to Odoacrus, King of Bohemia, Otho, Marqueſſe of Brandenbourge, the Duke of Auſtria, the Marqueſſe of Morauia, the Archbiſhops of Cologne, and of Olmuntz, all of them marching perſonally in this Croiſſade, and entring about the ſtart of winter into Pruſia, ſurprized the people, whom perforce they cauſed to be baptized; And, to hold the ſtricter hand on theſe new compelled Chriſtians: Odoacrus King of Bohemia, and the other Princes of the Croiſſade, built a ſtrong Fortreſſe on the top of the Mountaine called Samogitia, and about it a faire and ſpacious Citie, where (at this preſent) is the ordenarie abiding of the Prince of Pruſia. This Fortreſſe was by the King of Bohemia called Kunisberg, which ſignifieth Montreall, in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand two hundred fiftie fiue; the Citie being built in the time of the ſixt Great Maiſter of the Order.

The Princes ioyne with the Knights of the Order.

Boppo d'Oſterne, who being with his Knights at the Conqueſt of Curon; the Pruſians rebelled againſt him, and at a certaine appointed day, abiured the Chriſtian Religion, burned the Churches, ſlew and maſſacred the Prieſts, and expelled ſuch as were Chriſtians out of Pruſia, beſiedging alſo the three ſtrongeſt Caſtles of the Order, Kuniſberg, Cruitzberg and Bartenſtein. This Great Maiſter was ſuccoured and aſſiſted by the Princes of Germanie, the Kings of France, and the Duke of Gulich, who in the yeare Two hundred threeſcore and twelue, ſent thither a puiſſant Armie, to warre vpon the Idolaters of Pruſia, one while vanquiſhed, and afterward victorious. At the length notwithſtanding, they were enforced to giue Hoſtages to the Great Maiſter, for continuing faithfull afterward.

The Pruſians rebellion abiure Chriſtian Religion.

But the madding furious people, without care or remembrance of their Hoſtages, kild and maſſacred (cloſely) ſo many of the Knights Teutones as they entrap or betray. Which being diſcouered, two paire of Gallowes or Iibbets were ſet vp before the Caſtle of Kunisberg, whereon thirty of the Hoſtages were hanged. Which moued the Pruſians to ſuch rage and furie, that they brought an Armie into the Field, ſlaying as many Chriſtians as they could finde or come by: forty of the Bretheren, the Great Maiſter, and the high Marſhall of the Order, which was then in ſuch extremitie, as the vtter ruine thereof was hourely to be expected. For the Pruſians had wonne the ſuccour and aſſiſtance (both in forces and munition) of Swandepolch, Duke of Pomerania, who, although hee had bin baptized, renounced Chriſtianitie, and fell againe to Idolatrie with the Pruſians; yet notwithſtanding, towards the ending of his dayes, hee became a Chriſtian againe, and one of his Sonnes, named Warteſlaus, entred into the Order of the Almaigne Teutones; as taking it to his high honour and credit, to make ſome part of amends for his Fathers wrongs to them, notwithſtanding his after conuerſion. And his Brother Sumbor gaue all his goods to the ſame Order, that he might remain among them all his life time.

Thirty Hoſtages of the Pruſians hanged.

Hanno de Sangerſhuſen was the ſeauenth Great Maiſter, who being deceaſed in the yeare One thouſand two hundred threeſcore and fifteen, had for Succeſſour

Herman de Heldringen, dying in the the yeare One thousand two hundred foureſcore and two.

Burckard de Schuenden was the ninth Great Maiſter, who being made Knight of Rhodes, had for his Succeſſour

Conrad de Fenſchawang. In the time of this Great Maiſter was the ſtrong Citie of Acres wonne from the Chriſtians; ſo that the Templers withdrew themſelues into France, where they had great ſtore of goods. The Knights of Saint John of Ieruſalem, they went thence into Cyprus, & afterward to the Iſle of Rhodes, which they conquered. And the Allemaigne Teutoned returned to Venice, where they continued for ſome time, and from Venice to Martsbourg.

Geofrey, Count of Holenbeck, was the eleauenth Great Maiſter; after whom ſucceeded Siegfroy de Feuchtwrig, who transferred the principall Seate of the Order from Martsbourg to Martelbourg. By his death, happening in the yeare of Grace One thouſand three hundred twentie two.

Charles Beffart of Treuers, was the thirteenth Great Maiſter, who cauſed to be built the impregnable Fortreſſe of Chriſtmimmell, on the banke of the Riuer called Mimmell, to courbe in the ouer-headſtrong Lithuanians, and hinder their inroades. He had for Succeſſour

Vernhier de Orſels, ſlaine with the cut of a Sword, by a Brother of his Order, and then ſucceeded him

Ludolphe of Brunſwicke, who cauſed to be built the Citie of Nembourg. By his death, happening in the yeare One thouſand three hundred thirtie two Theodoricke, Count of Aldembourg, was the ſixteenth Great Maiſter, who built the Towne at the foote of the Caſtle of Bartenſtein. After him ſucceeded

Ludolph, Sirnamed the King. And after him

Henry de Tuſemer: And next to him

Winrich de Knippenrodt. I his tim e wasvanquiſhed (in a fought Battaile) the King of Lithuania Kinſtut, ſixe moneths detained priſoner at Mariebourg: from whence he eſcaped in the night time to Maſouia. The twentieth Great Maiſter was

Conrad Zolner of Rotenſtein: next him ſucceeded

Conrad de Wallenrod: And after him

Conrad de Iungingen, ſlaine in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred and tenne, in the warre which he had againſt the King of Poland Ladiſlaus, Father to Cazimir, who wonne the Battaile, and the greater part of Pruſia: yet notwithſtanding, by the meanes of the Emperour Sigiſmond, the King of Poland was contented with a ſumme of money, to defraye the charges of his Armie, and ſurrendred Pruſia to the Bretheren Teutones, who elected for their foure and twentieth Great Maiſter

Henry Count of Plaen, depoſed by the generall Chapter, and kept priſoner at Gdan, and in his place was choſen

Michael Knichen: After whom ſucceeded

Paul of Ruſſe-dorffe: And next to him

Conrad of Ellerichshauſon, in whoſe time moſt part of the Townes in Pruſia, would needs withdraw themſelues from obedience to the Allemaigne Knights Teutones, being ſecretly fauoured by the King of Poland Cazimir. To whom the Great Maiſter made his complaint, of his intruding vpon his Conqueſt, to the preiudice of the perpetuall peace ſworne to his Predeceſſour. And yet notwithſtanding this complaint, Cazimir entred into Pruſia with a potent Armie, the Cities and Townes reuolting (to the number of fiue and fiftie) and yeelded themſelues to his obedience. He beſiedged Mariebourg, but the Great Maiſter, aided with ſuccour from the Emperour Fredericke (ſilently, and without making any noiſe) entred into the Campe of Cazimire, where he and his followers did cut the throates of three thouſand Souldiours; tooke an hundred and thirty ſixe Gentlemen priſoners, threw downe to the ground the Tents and Pauillions, and carried away the Horſes, Bagadge and Prouiſion for the Campe, ſo that the King was conſtrained to ſaue himſelfe by flight with two hundred Horſe. This Victory hapned in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred fiftie fiue, in the ſequell whereof, the Great Maiſter recouered againe the Townes and Holds that had bin taken from him, and namely the foure principall Townes, to wit Kniſperg, Thorn, Elbourg and Gdan, otherwiſe called Dantzike.

Now, notwithſtanding this worthy Conqueſt,

Conqueſt, the Captaines of the Caſtell of Mariebourg (corruptted by money) yeelded it to King Cazimire. After many loſſes and ſpoyles ſuſtained on either ſide, an agreement was made betweene the King of Poland and the Great Maiſter, whereby it was couenanted, that King Cazimire ſhould haue for his part, the Pomerehe, with all the Townes, Caſtelles and Holdes, as alſo Elbourg and Mariebourg. And the Great Maiſter ſhould haue for his ſhare, Sannogitia, Kuuiſperg, and the other places and Townes which he held; This accord or agreement was ſworne by both the parties, in the yeare, One thouſand foure hundred threeſcore and ſixe. The nine and twentieth Great Maiſter was

Henry Ruſſe: next whom ſucceeded

Henry de Richtenburg, who died in the yeare, One Thouſand Foure Hundred Threeſcore and Seauenteene, and had for his Succeſſour

Martin Truchſeſſe: And by his death happening in the yeare, One thouſand foure hundred foureſcore and nine, was choſen for Great Maiſter

Iohn de Tieffen, who died in the ſecular yeare, One thouſand fiue hundred. He had for Succeſſour

Frederick, Duke of Saxonie, and Marqueſſe of Miſnia: But by his death, happening in the yeare, One Thouſand Fiue Hundred and Tenne, was elected

Albert, Marqueſſe of Brandenbourg. Againſt which laſt Great Maiſter of Pruſia, the King of Poland Sigiſmond, Firſt of the name, made ſuch mighty warre: that he was conſtrained to requeſt a Truce for Foure yeares ſpace. But that time being expired, without any further hope of reſiſting againſt the Polonians: this Great Maiſter Albert ſubmitted himſelfe forthwith to the Crowne of Poland, vpon theſe couenants and conditions.

The Articles and Couenants, which paſſed betweenene Sigiſmond, King of Poland, and Albert, the laſt Great Maiſter of Pruſia.

Que de là en auant la Grand Maiſtriſe de Pruſſe ne ſeroit plus Electiue, mais Hereditaire en la perſonne dudict grand Maiſtre Albert, & aux Siens Maſles, qui tiendroient la Pruſſe, en Hommage lige de la Coronne de Pologne.

Que ledict Albert, & ſes Freres Georges, Caſimir, & Iean ſeroient receus par ledit Roy Sigiſmond comme Vaſſaux, & Seigneurs hereditaires dudict Pais de Pruſſe, par le preſent accord, erigee en Duchè.

Que ſi ledict Albert, & ſes Freres venoient à decceder ſans Hoirs Maſles, ledict Duché de Pruſſe, ſes appartenances, & dependances viendroient à la Coronne de Pologne, & y ſeroit vnie ſans en pouuoir eſtre puis apres ſeparee, à la charge toutesfois que le Roy de Pologne, lors regnant, marieroit les Filles dudict Duc de Pruſſe, ſelon la dignitè Ducale, & leur rang, &

Que la Pruſſe ſeroit regie, & gouuernee par vn Aleman Naturel, & non par vn Polonois.

1. That from this time forward, the Great Maiſters Office of Pruſia ſhall be no longer Electiue: but remaine hereditarie in the perſon of the ſaid Great Maiſter Albert, and to the Maſles of him deſcending; Who were to hold Pruſia in Liedge Homage, only of the Crowne of Poland.

2. That the ſaid Albert and his Brethren, George, Cazimire and Iohn ſhould be receiued by King Sigiſmond as his Subiectes, and Lords Hereditary to the Countrey of Pruſia: it being by this preſent agreement aduaunced to be a Dukedome. Pruſia aduanced to be a Dukedome.

3. Thirdly that the ſaid Albert and his Brethren, chaunting to dye without Heires Maſles, that then the Dukedome of Pruſia, with the appurtenances and dependances, ſhall come to the Crowne of Poland, and ſhall be thereto vnited, without any power of ſeparation afterward. Neuertheleſſe with this condition, that the King of Poland then reigning, ſhould marrie the Daughters to the ſaid Duke of Pruſia, according to Ducall dignity, and as their ranck required.

4. And that Pruſia ſhall be Ruled and gouerned by a naturall Allemaigne borne, and not by a Polonian.

This accorde being thus concluded on, in the yeare One thouſand fiue hnudred twenty fiue, Albert renounced and abiured the Order of Knighthood of the Allemagnes or Teutones, with other of the ſame Religion. And by the meanes of this renun- Albert renounced his Order of Knighthood.

renuntiation was inuested in the Dukedome of Prusia: And heere followeth the forme of the Inuestiture.

The Forme and Manner of Inuesting Albert in the Dukedome of Prusia.

Sigismond, King of Poland, being seated on his Throane Royall, in his chiefe City of Cracouia; Albert, cloathed in the garment, belonging to the Great Maister of the Teutonicall Order, and mounted on his Horse for Battaile, was in this equipage conducted by his Brethren and their traine before the Throane Royall, where being alighted from his Horse, and on his knees despoyled of his Knightly habites: He was attired with the Great Ducall Cloake of Crimson Veluet, Furred with Martins Zublines, and in that habite he perfourmed his Liedge Homage before the King, for the Dukedome of Prusia, taking the Oathe of Allegeance and fidelitie to the said Sigismond, and to his Successours the Kings of Poland: whom he promised to honor, serue and defend, to and against all, without any exception. Which being done, king Sigismond placed the Ducall Floury Wreathe on the head of Albert, and in his right hand the Banner of Prusia. It being of White Taffatie, charged with the Armes, Which Sigismond gaue to the same Albert, for him and his Successours, Dukes of Prusia, as namely Vne Aigle esployee de Synople, brizee en l'estomach d'vne Lettre S. d'Or (which designed the name of King Sigismond, Brother to the Mother of Albert and his Brethren) Coronnee, Lampassee & Armee de Gueules.

The Banner of Prusia, and the Armes.

He gaue him likewise L'Escu d'Argent a la dicte Aigle esployee, and Blazonned as before is said And the prime place on his left hand, at the Teames and Assemblies Generall of Poland.

A testimony of hereditarie Succesion in Place and Office.

While these Ceremonies of Inuestiture were thus performing, the Brethren to the said Albert, George Cazimire and Iohn, did set to their hands, as helping to support the Banner with their Brother Albert. Instructing thereby (as a testemoniall noate or signe) that their Brother Albert chauncing to dye without an heire masle, they were (in right) next called to Succesion in the Dukedome of Prusia. Albert espoused Dorothea, Daughter to the King of Denmarke Frederick, First of that name: And in this Mariage was borne Frederick, inuested in the Dukedome by King Sigismond Augustus, who put about his neck the Collar of the Order of Poland, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand fiue hundred threescore and eight.

An other Great Maister chosen of the same Order.

After this Acte of Inuestiture, the Brethren Teutones or Allemaignes elected for their Great Maister, an other Allemaigne Lord, named Albert de wolfang: who was constrained (with the Brethren of his Order) to depart out of Prusia, and withdrew themselues into Allemaigne or Germanie, where they enioyed such goods, as the Knights of the same Order doe yet possesse to this present. Maximilian of Austria, being now Great Maister of the same Order, bearing in Armes Le l'Empire, Escartele d'Austriche, & sur le tout la double Croix dudit Ordre, With whom are admitted and receiued, the youngest Sonnes of the Princes of Germanie, into the same Order.

The Great Maister at this present.

While the Greatnesse and Magnificence of this Teutonicall or Prussian Order continued; the Soueraignes, (that were Great Maisters therof) to acknowledge them that were of their Band and Company, who warred valiantly on their nighbouring Idolatrous enemies the Prusians, Liuonians and Tartares: established a prize of perticuler Honor and praise. For they instituted A Table of Honour, which they so named, after a former president Of the Round Table in England. At this Table were seated with the Great Maister, such as had made themselues famous by deeds of Prowesse and Valour, were they Strangers, or Brethren of the Order, for the seruice of Religion. Which maketh it selfe much more apparantly knowne, by the words contained in the Chronicle of the good Duke of Bourbon Lewes, Second of the name, yet Third Duke of Bourbon, the Three and Twentieth Chapter of the same Chronicle.

Declaration of the Table of Honour.

The Chronicle that speaketh of the Table of Honour.

Such as tooke leaue of the Duke of Bourbon, being at Chambery in Sauoye, to goe for Prusia, and to warre against the Infidelles there, were these.

Iohn Gondelin a Breton.

These were Knights of the Order of Bourbon.

These worthy Gentlemen and friendly Companions, tooke leaue of the Duke their Maister, who charged them, that, as they tendred and feared his displeasure: they should returne againe to him soone after Easter (it being the Feaste of All Saints when they departed.) And at their going, the Countesse of Sauoye, Sister to the Duke of Bourbon, gaue to each of these Gentelmen (bound for Prusia) a Diamond, which they accepted thankfully, because Ladies gifts were welcome to them.

The Queene of Bohemia, Aunte to the Duke of Bourbon.

From Sauoye departed these Companions, passing thorowe Lorraine and Germanie, and riding to Prage in Bohemia, where they saw the Queene of Bohemia, who was Aunte to the Duke of Bourbon, and who welcommed them graciously, bestowed great gifts on them. And in the Citty of Prage were many Knights, belonging to the Court of the King of France (Charles the Fifte, called the Wise) who were very ioyfull of their comming; because they iourneyed likewise to Prusia. The chiefest of them were Messire Hutin de Vermilles.

The Borgne de la Heuze.
The Bastard d'Aussy, with others

On they so long iourneyed, till they entred among the frozen Ices in the Paluds and Marshes of Prusia. And so holding on still in the yces (as is the custome here) they came at length to Mariembourg, the Grand Hostell of the knights of Prusia, where the High or Great Maister of the Order entertained them kindly. And there the Seruants to the Duke of Bourbon, met with Formerly called Marienbourg.

Messire Iohn de Roye.
Messire Patrouillart de Renty.
Messire Robert de Chalus.

Messire Iohn de Maingre, called Boucicault, who by his Chiualrie was afterward made Marshall of France, and (for his singular vnderstanding) Gouernour of the Citty of Geneuaye.

Messire Iohn Bonnebaut
Messire Gaucher de Passach.
Messire l'Hermite de la Faye.

And many more beside, of Nations which I konw not how to name, who met all together there, and so conueniently, that their arriuall seemed almost admirable.

The Pagan King Letho, called King of Lithuania.

For the King of Letho (that was Kinstut, named King of Lithuania, of whom we haue formerly spoken) a Sarrazin with which name of Sarrazin, they tearmed all Idolaters and Paganes of Liuonia, Tartaria, Lithuania, and the Prouinces placed vnder the North-Starre) had much laboured, to vanquish and conquer the Order of Prusia, and, to make his part the stronger, had ioyned himselfe with the King of Wingales (he would haue said Norway) who towards the Seacoaste warred on the Maister of Nifeland, defender of the Religion, and Protectour of Prusia, which is all one.

The Great Maister assisted with many nations.

The High Maister of Prusia, by helpe of the Knights, and Noble Gentlemen of sundry Nations, which were then in his companie, caried himselfe so valiantly; that he conquered from them the Castell of Endrach, and chased them from the great Forrests of Prusia, which containe in length aboue eight dayes iourney. And therein are the Beasts called Hermines, Letices, Gray and Martins Zubelines, whose rich Furres are transported throughout the World.

In such successfull manner prospered the Christians; that the Sarrazins were vanquished and Constrained, to get them gone thence to their owne Countrey. Vpon such such Order made, that the Sarrazins of Lethonna and Norgales, should robbe no more Churches in Christendome, nor burne them. In like manner, the Christian Knights of the Religion, as well of Prussia, as of Niffeland in their Countrey of Letho, or the bordering Maches, should not burne or desire the Holy Woodes, for so they called the Pine Trees, where they burned their dead bodies, and made their Sacrifices.

Conditions betweene the Christians and Sarrazins.

And the High or Great Maister of Prussia, beholding that all affaires had succeeded so well, and to his no meane Honour: On the Feast day of our Lady, commonly called Candlemasse, he feasted all his braue Caualerie very triumphantly, and for greater Honor of the day, diuine Seruice was accomplished in his Hostell of Marienbourg. Where he caused the Table of Honour to be couered, and commaunded to be seated at that Table, Twelue Knights of sundry Kingdomes.

Knights seated at the Table of Honor.

For the Kingdome of France were seated aboue at the Table.

Messire Hutin de Vermaisles; And Messire Tristram des Marguellers, whom they all allowed for very good Knights.

Of other Countreys Two and Two were seated, according to the Great Maisters appointment, to make compleate the number of Twelue. And they were serued according to the dignity of the Day, and as vnto their worth belonged.

Thankes being giuen to God, and the Twelue sitting deuising on the Table of Honour, and how it became established: One of the Brethren Knights of the Religion, gaue to each of them a Motto, written in Golden Letters vpon their Shoulders: Honor ouercommeth all things, And on the morrow, the Knights tooke their leaue of the Great Maister, returning euery man home to his Countrey.

A large fabulous History deuised on this Christian Warre in Prussia.

Vpon this voyage of the French Knights, in fauour of the Order of Prussia, was formed that fabulous conceit of the Romancers, by Iohn de Saintre. Yet remarkable in this, that he giueth Names and Armes to sundry Houses, Famous for valiance and Nobility, in the time of the said King Charles the Fift, all Noblemen, and of Three Thousand Archers: yet without naming those Lords, who (at their own charge) compleated aboue Two Hundred Launces, with men bearing Bowes. So that there was aboue Sixe Thousand Frenche at this Croisade.

Out of Twelue Prouinces and Gouernements in the Kingdomes of France, was chosen a certaine number of Lords, all of them bearing Banners, as namely.

The Lord of Moulins, qui portoit de Sable au Chef d'Argent chargé de trois Lozenges de Gueules; And cried Moulins.

The Lord of Rocqueby or Rugby: qui portoit d'Argent au Sautoire de Sable.

At the departure of this Royall Armie from the Citty of Paris, to ſet on for Pruſia, thus was the appointment.

The Royall Armies Marche towards Pruſia.

FIrſt of all went the Purſuiuants of Armes, Two and Two together, carying their Coates of Armes vpon their armes, the fore-part backward.

After them followed the Heraukles, wearing the Coates of Armes belonging to their Lords, in direct manner, as it ought to be, riding two and two together.

After them followed the Trumpets in great numbers, two and two together.

Next them came the Kings of Armes, of the Marches and Prouinces of France, wearing their Coates of Armes in right manner, two and two together.

Then came Montioye, King of Armes for France, ryding in his Coate Royall of Armes, and alone by himſelfe.

After theſe followed the Lord of Chaſtel freumont, who bare the Banner of the King: riding in the midſt betweene my Lords the Dukes of Anieu, and Berry.

Then came my Lord of Bourgongne, riding on the right hand, and Saintre, Generall of the Armie, on the left.

Next after Saintre, followed the three Chiefe Banners (and moſt auncienctly caried) by appointment from the King, according to relations made by the auncienteſt Bookes of the Montioyes, Kings of Armes in France, who from all times of Antiquity, were wont to take knowledge (by their viſitations in the Marches and Prouinces of the Kingdome) in ſuch caſes being accompanied with the other Kings of Armes of the Prouinces; for the keeping and maintaining Honour, as it eſpecially behoued; to auoide alſo iniuries, clamours, and idle conceites, deuiſed by wanton Ladies and Lords.

After thoſe three Banners, came the Lords to whom they appertained. And then The other Banners, and the Lords of them marching in order, Three and three together, according to Antiquity, and as the ſaid Banners were wount to be caried.

In Pruſia, the Royall Army met with that from the Emperour; whereof the Duke of Brunſwick caried the Banner: Qui eſtoit d'Or, a vn Aigle eſploye de Sable. The meeting of the whole Armie together in Pruſia.

That from the King of Hungary, whereof the Duke of Morauia caried the Banner. Qui eſtoit Faiſſe de Huict pieces de Gueules, & d'Argent.

The King of Behaigne (that is Bohemia, was there in person: Qui portoit de Gueulx a vn Lyon d'Argent, la queue nouee, fourchee, & Croisee, Coronne & Arme d'Or. And with him were the Duke of Saxonie (that is Saxon himselfe) the Marquesse of Brandenbeurg, the Count Palatine, with the Grands, Lords and Prelates of Germanie, to witt, of Gologne, Treuers, Magnuce, Passaw and Liege.

Saintre made Knight by the King of Behemia before the Battaile.

When the day of Battaile was come, after Masse had beene said in the Campe by the Archbishop of Cologne, and the Benediction giuen by the Cardinall of Hostia, Legate of the Croisade against the miscreants: Saintre mounted vpon his Horse for seruice, and riding to the King of Bohemia, there drawing forth his Sword; in the name of God, our Lady, and my Lord Saint Denys, required of him the Order of Knighthood.

An auncient Ceremony concerning Banners in Battailes.

The good King (who affected Saintre and all the Frenche) very ioyfully gaue him the Accollade and Order: desiring God to giue him therwith ioy and honour, such as his owne heart could wish for. And so thence forward he was called by them all, the Lord of Saintre.

At the time when hee was made Knight, hee aduanced his Banner: Both his and many Banners more beside were there raised, and cut with tailes, as the Pennes were.

This Auncient Ceremonie, was (to good purpose) obserued by the Angenin Romancer. For it is generally knowne, that the Enseigne for a company of Souldiours on Horseback, finisheth at the pointe with two tailes, as we vse to teatme them. The Gaidon likewise finisheth in Poincte, and hath but one taile only: But the Cornette is square, according as the Banner of France is, and those of the Barons and Knights Bannerets. And those Barons, which desire to haue the name and ranck of Knights Bannerets on dayes of Battaile: ought to present their Enfignes to the Generall of the Armie; who cutting the ends and points of them, maketh them square, which we call Banners. Whence came the common Prouerbe, giuen (by way of mockerie) to a poore Knight Banneret. The Knight with the Squared Flagge or Banner.

An example made good before the Duke of Bourgongne.

Oliuer de la Marche, in his History of Flanders, noateth this auncient fashion of bearing Banners, and saith: That the King of Armes presented to the Duke of Bourgongne (in a certaine expedition of warre) the Lord of Sains, who held the Penon of his plaine Armes on the end of his Launce, and said

Monseigneur Veez cy le Seigneur de Sains, qui est yssu d'Ancienne Banniere a vous subiecte; la Seigneurie principale est es mains de son Aisne, la Seigneurie de Sains est tenu de Banniere d'Ancienneté, il vous supplie le faire Banneret, et le releuer en Banniere, il vous presente son Penon, accompagne de Vingt Cinq Hommes d'Armes. Le Roy d'Armes bailla vn Coulteau au Duc, le Duc prit au tour de sa Main la queue du Penon, & de l'autre Main coupa ladicte queue auec le Coulteau, & demeura quarre en Banniere, qui auparauant estoit estendu a la pointe en queue.

My Lord, behold heere the Lord of Sains, Who is descended of an Auncient Mannr subiect to you; the principall Lordship is in the hands of his Eldest Brother, the Seigneurie of Sains is Banner Land from Antiquitie. Hee humbly entreateth you to make him a Banneret, and to raise it to a Banner; he presenteth you his Penon, accompanied with fiue and Twenty men of Armes. The King of Armes deliuered a Knife to the Duke, and the Duke tooke into his hand the tayle of the Penon, and by the strength of the other hand, cut the tayle with the Knife, and it remained a square Banner, which before was extended to the pointe in taile.

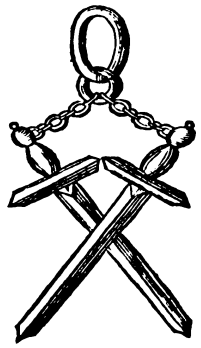
The Crosse of the Order of Liuonia; called of the Bretheren Sword-Bearers: Instituted in the yeare of Grace One thousand two hundred and three.

Croix de l'Ordre de Liuome, dict de Freres Porte-Glaiues.

CHAP. XIII.



The Institution of the Order of Liuonia: Called of the Bretheren Sword-Bearers.

The situation of Liuonia, & Paganisme of the people.

Iuonia is a Prouince seated very farre Northerly, shut vp on the one side with the Balthicke Sea: And pressed on the other by them of Prusia, Russia, Lithuania, Moscouia and Tartaria. The Inhabitants thereof had long time liued in Paganisme, and yet to this present, in those parts far remote from good Townes of the Countrey: they doe liue like bruite beasts, without any apprehension or knowledge of God, some of them adoring the Sunne and the Moone, and the other any Tree, that hath his head or top highest exalted. Some likewise honor the glorious Starres, as they voyage and passe from one Countrey to another: Others a Serpent, or the first creature they can meete withall after comming forth of their Cottages. In briefe, they are a very miserable and abiect kinde of people.

The Merchants of Breme ioyned traffick with the Liuonians.

In the time of Pope Alexander the third, and of the Emperour Barbarossa, it forrunned, that the Merchants of Breme were carried by a gale of winde, vpon the coasts of the Liuonian Sea: and there with the dwellers in the Iland, they made a contract of amitie, for further assurance of traffick, which they desired to haue afterward with them. These Merchants had some Priests among them, who, neere to that part of the Riuer Dune, where it swallowoweth it selfe in the maine Sea: they erected a little Oratorie therein to celebrate Diuine Seruice, so long as they should make their abiding there. And from that time forward, there was open Traffick betweene the Germaines and the Inhabitants of Liuonia.

Maynard the first Bishop of Liuonia.

In the yeare One thousand one hundred threescore and twelue, the Merchants of Lubek made a voyage thither, taking along with them in their company, a good and deuout Monke of the Abbey of Segeberge, named Maynard, a man of holy life, who mounted on the wings of zealous deuotion, and accompanied with one Seruant; concluded to learne the Countries language, to the end, that he might bestow his best endeauour, for conuerting those poore Infidels, to the diuine worship of one onely God. With Fagot-sticks they erected a poore Fielden Lodging, and ioyned likewise thereto a small Oratorie, in honour of the blessed Virgin, and there began to enstruct the Countrey Inhabitants. Within a while after, this good man Maynard was (by the Archbishop of Breme) Sacred the first Bishop of Liuonia.

He had for his Successour Bertholde, a Monke of Saint Paule in the Citie of Breme, and of the Cisteaux Order, who willingly imployed his paines, and laboured very industriously to winne the conuersion of those Idolaters. But perceiuing that milde and gentle courses sorted to no effect; he preached for a Croisade throughout Germanie against them, and marched himselfe the foremost man in the Christian Armie, carrying a Crosse very highly aduanced. But his Horse happening to be vnbrideled, vnbridled, ran with him mainely in among the enemies, who massacred and hewed him in numberlesse pieces. This vnfortunate death of his chanced in the yeare of Grace, One thousand one hundred fourescore and seauenteene, but proued to be the occasion of a generall Crosssade. Berthold had for Successour

Albert, a Monke of Breme likewise, to whom repaired two of his Kinsmen, Engelbert and Theorie of Tissench, with some other rich Merchants, men of good and sanctimonious life, who being Religiously moued and incited, to fight against the Infidels of Liuonia: renounced the world, with all his bewitching vanities, taking the Oath and Vowe of Obedience and Chastitie, in presence of the Bishop Albert. He prescribed them the Rule and Cloathing of the Cisteaux, a long white Cassocke, with a blacke Hood, hauing on the left side (neere to the shoulder) a Red Sword, with the Crosse Black. And directly on the breast two such Swords, made en Sautoir, with the points hanging downward, whereupon they were called: The Brotheren Sword Bearers.

The beginning and Forme of the Order.

Les Freres Porte-Glaiues

This Order was approued and confirmed by Pope Innocent the third: And the profession of this Military and Monasticall Order, became fully Instituted in the yeare of Grace One thousand two hundred & three: the first Great Maister whereof was Vinno, who was traiterously slaine by the Russians: He had for Successour Volquin, in whose time of Maistership, Albert caused a Towne to be builded, named Riga, and engirt it round with Walles. It was seated on the Riuer of Duno, in the very same place, where the good Bishop Maynard had erected his little Oratorie.

The first Great Maister of the Order.

After Bishop Albert succeeded Nicholas; and after Nicholas another Albert, who was made Archbishop of Riga the Episcopall See; which had formerly acknowledged for Metropolitane, the Archbishop of Lunde in Denmarke. By erection of Riga into an Archbishoprick; he had giuen him for Suffraganes and Dioceseanes, Curon, Sarbat and Oxilien.

The first Archbishop of Liuonia.

Volquin, second Great Maister of Liuonia, being basely slaine by them of Lithuania; the Brotheren of the said Order (being assembled together in their Generall Chapter, perceiued apparantly, that they were not in strength sufficiently seated and enabled, to resist against so many enemies, as lay heauily vpon them; as namely; those of Liuonia, the Lithuanians, Aescouites and Russians. Wherefore they ioyned themselues with the Almaygns or Teutones Knights, whose Rule & habite they tooke, knitting themselues into one Body with them, in the yeare One thousand two hundred thirtie and Seauen. So that by the meanes of this Vnion, the foure Bishoprickes of Prussia acknowledged for Metropolitane, the Archbishop of Riga: And the vnitie was made in the time of the Great Maister of the Teutones Herman de Saltza, who had for his Lieutenant in Prussia

Two Orders of Knighthood ioyned in one.

Herman de Valckion, made first Maister of Liuonia of the Order of the Teutones, in the same yeare before obserued. This Order was thus coniointly held by the Brotheren Teutones, vntill the time of the Great Maister Gaultier de Pletemberg, who by his valiant carriage brought all his neighbouring enemies to tearmes of duties: But more especially the Duke of Moscouia, enforced to purchase a Truce for fiue yeares.

The Duke of Moscouia purchaseth a truce

In his time the Great Maister of Prussia, Albert, Marquesse of Brandenbourg, embracing no longer the Romish Religion, but cleauing to that of the Reformed Church, in the very same yeare before remembred: the said Gaultier seperated the Order of Liuonia, from obedience and subiection to Albert, Duke of Prussia, paying therefore a summe of money.

By vertue of this disiunction, Gaultier was Great Maister of Liuonia, and made Prince of the Empire, possessing that charge, vntill the yeare One thousand fiue hundred thirty and fiue. And others after him (as is noated by Functius) haue held the Principalitie, and title of Great Maister of Liuonia, with great and full power: vntill the time of the Great Maister William de Fustemberg, vanquished in Battaile, and detained prisoner by the Duke of Moscouia, who seruing his owne turne with partialities and deuisions, moued betweene the Principals of this Order, and the Archbishoppe of Riga William of Brandenbourg, Brother to the last Great Maister

Two men of Great valour and Iudgement.

Maister of Prussia Albert: ouer-ran and rauaged (at his owne pleasure) all Liuonia and the neighbouring Prouinces, breaking (by this meanes) the Truce concluded with Gaultier of Pletemberg.

Finally, this Order of Liuonia (euen as the rest) hath bin forced to kisse the ground, vnder the last Great Maister thereof Gothard de Ketler, in the yeare One thousand fiue hundred threescore and one, when he became one of the reformed Church, yeelding himselfe Subiect and Liedgeman to the Crowne of Poland, in the presence of King Sigismond Augustus; who made him Duke of Curlandia, and other Seigneuries beside, reunited to the Crowne of Poland, according as the rights were belonging to the Archbishop of Riga.

Liuonia ouer-run by the Duke of Moscouia.

The auncient custome of the people of Liuonia (before they were illuminated with the Faith of Iesus Christ) was, to make merry banqueting among their dead, and drinking as well to them, as the liuing, throwing Goblets full of their Brennage vpon the Biere. Afterward, they would put them into the Pit or Graue, furnishing them with Meate and Drinke, and a Hatchet to make his Cabane withall: as also a piece of Coyne, for paying his passage into the other World, saying thus to him. Go, get thee into the other world, where thou maist command ouer the Teutones, as they did to thee in this World here.

A custome among the Liuonians before they were Christians.

The Order of the Beare, called of Saint Gall in Switzerland or Swetia: Instituted by the Emperour Fredericke, second of the name: In the yeare of Grace, One thousand two hundred and thirteene.

L'Ordre de l'Ours dict de Sainct Gal, en Suisse.

CHAP. XIV.

THis Order was Instituted by the Emperour Fredericke, second of the name, and in the yeare of Grace, One thousand two hundred and thirteene, when (moued by deuotion) he came on Pilgrimage to the Abbey of Saint Gall. In fauour of whom, and of his Abbot, as also the Noble men of the Countrey; he gaue thereto great Priuiledges, in acknowledgement of what kindenesse he had receiued from them, in exalting him to the Empire, by deposition of the Emperour Otho, fourth of the name. Whereupon he Instituted The Order of the Beare, giuing vnto the chiefest Lords thereof, Collers and Chaines of Gold, at the end whereof hung the Figure of a Beare of Gold, enamelled with Blacke.

It was his will and meaning, that this Order should be conferred and giuen, by the succeeding Abbots of Saint Gall. According to the Golden Bull of this Institution, the Knights ought to meete yearely (except some lawfull and iust excuse were the hinderance) in the Abbey of Saint Gall, at the solemnitie vsed for this Apostle of the Germanes, which is alwayes celebrated the sixteenth day of October, vpon which day, such Knights as were thereto appointed, should receiue this Order by the hands of the Abbot; as we learne by Walafridus Strabo, in his Ecclesiasticall History, and from the Monke of Saint Gall. Hoc die mos est, vt nocte præcedenti, Vigilys facis, gladys super manus Altare positis, & benedictis, post Vigilias, & Balneas, noui Milites ab Abbate, militari Cingulo, & Vrsi Torque Aureo decorentur, post obsequium Monasterio nostro & Abbati præstitum.

This Order always to be giuen by the Abbot of Saint Gall.

This Order of the Beare, was Instituted in the honour and memorie of Saint Vrsus, of the Legion of the Thebes, Martyred before the Temple, or Tower of the Sunne at at Soleurre; where the body resteth, vnder the high Altar of the Collegiate Church, in the same place: built by the Queene of France Bertha, with the great foote, wife to our King Charlemaigne. The Epitaphe for the Martyre hath these words

Conditur hoc Tumulo Sanctus Thebaidus Vrsus.

The reason of this Orders cessation.

And this Order held long time in full estimation, throughout all the Cantons of the Switzers, before they were deliuered from obedience to the House of Austria. But after their Common-wealth grew to be free, and the Castles and strong places of the Lords and Gentlemen of the Countrey, were raced and ruined: the memory thereof became altogether lost.

How they became so named.

The Switzers (called by Cæsar Heluctians) one of the most powerfull people among the Gaules; did take their name of Suits, one of the very least of the thirteene Cantons. And to vnderstand summarily, the estate and condition of this common-wealth (the onely warlike people of Christendome:) it is to be obserued, that they are deuided and distinguished in three seuerall parts.

The first is of thirteene Cantons allied together, which are numbred and counted in this manner.

The thirteene Cantons.

1. Zurich.	7. Zug.
2. Berne.	8. Glaris.
3. Lucerne.	9. Basile.
4. Vri.	10. Fribourg.
5. Smits.	11. Soleurre,
6. Vnderuall.	12. Schaffaushe.

13. And Appentzell.

Allies and Confederates

The second is of the Allies and Confederates to these thirteene Cantons. First of all. The Abbot of Saint Gall, a Prince Soueraigne: And the Citie of Saint Gall: The Grisons; The Bishop of Syon, a Prince Soueraigne, Spirituall and Temporall, of the higher and lower Valois: Mulhouse and Schaffaushe-Bienne.

Bailiwickes.

The last containeth the Bailiwicks gouerned, in common by the thirteene Cantons, to wit; Turgaw, Bada, Rhintall (that is to say Mountaines washed by the Rhine, and those Mountaines are called Rheguscos) Sargans, the Free Prouince, the Inhabitants of Lugano, Locarna, Mendrisi, and the Val-Madia. To which Bailiwickes are also annexed those of Bellizona, subiects to three small Cantons.

Cities and Townes.

The Cities and Townes of these three parts, are Zurich, Berne, Lucerna, Zug, Basile, Fribourg, Soleurre, Schaffouse, Sainct Gall, Cours (chiefest of the leagued Grisons) Syon, chiefest of Valois: Rotuille, Mulhouse and Brenne; the rest are big Boroughes and great Villages.

Situation of the Allies and Confederates

Basile is not in Swetia or Switzerland, but a Quarter apart by it selfe, the Inhabitants whereof haue bin (from all times) called Rauraques. Schaffouze is in Germanie beyond the Rhine. Those of Glarys and of Vri, doe hold of Italie, gently touching the Alpes and Grisons. In like manner the other Allies (Saint Gall excepted) are out of Swetia. For the Grisons, called Retians, and their chiefe Citie Curia Retorum; and those of Valois, sometimes called Veragri, and afterward Viberini, and Sedunenses, and their Capitall dwelling Sedunum Veragrorum, are within the Alpes. Rotuille is of Germanie; and Mulhouse a March of the Franche County. They of Rhintall and of Sargans, are Grisons: As Lugano, Locarna, Mendriza. Bellizona; and the Val-Madia, are Italians, both by language and Originall. The other Allies and Bailiwickes are in Swetia.

The Switzers naturally Soldiours and Martialists.

The auncient Annales of the Switzers doe declare, that our Kings Pepin and Charlemaigne, going to exterminate the Gothes and Lombardes of Italie; did make very beneficiall vse of the seruice of this people Mountainneeres, naturally Martiall and Warriours: gouerned and conducted by a French Lord, called Guy Marqueste, that is to say, Gouernour of the Frontiers of Italie. And that in consideration of their valiancie, Lewes the Debonnaire, Sonne to the said Charlemaigne, gaue them very great Priuiledges. But most certaine it is, and the Germaines themselues doe confesse as much, that our first Christian King Clouis, had all those Prouinces vnder his obedience. And as certaine also it is, that Charlemaigne gaue the Gouernment of the higher and lower Walais (in the yeare eight hundred and fiue) to Saint Theodore, Bishop of Syon. But those Bishops (as all else vse to doe) following the times courses, of plaine Gouernors, made themselues Lords Soueraignes.

Concerning Zurich originall.

Zurich, called in Latine Turegum, and Tigurum, was an Abbey of Sisters, founded and built by our King Lewes the Debonnaire, in fauour of his Daughter Luitguarda, who was there the first Lady Abbesse. The same King gaue in gift to the said Abbey, and to the Patroness thereof Saint Fælix and Saint Regulus, the Village of Vry (sometimes the dwelling of the Antuatiques of our Geographers) with her Churches appurtenances and dependances, Buildings, Innes, free Children, Masles and Females, Lands tilled and vntilled, Glades, Woods, Meadowes, Ponds and Riuers, according as is obserued by Iosias Simlerus, in his Annales of Switzerland.

The Kings bounty to the Abbey.

Saint Gall (in Latine Sanctus Gallus) a Gentleman of Scotland, Scholler to Saint Columbaine, the Tutelarie Patron of Swetia, after he had crossed France and Bourgongne, went into Germanie, and dwelt sometime neere to the Lake of Constance.

A briefe History of Saint Gall.

From

From whence, to shunne the worlds frequencie, he made his retreate to the Defert Mountaines; where yet (to this present) is to be seene the Abbey, and the Citie, honorized with the name of this holy man, who departed out of this life into the other, in the yeare of Grace Sixe hundred and fiftie.

Ten yeares before, our King Dagobert, (the Restorer of Saint Denys in France) in fauour of Saint Gall, and those which liued with him, sequestred from the Worlds vanities: caused a Lodging or goodly Farme House to be builded, for their liuing and maintenance, which was called Abbatis cella, and afterward (by corruption) Appenzel, now at this present one of the Cantons of the Switzers. The like was done by Sigebert, and other Princes of France, that the Hermitage of Saint Gal became changed into a rich and opulent Abbey: round about which (from the very beginning) were builded small Houses and Cottages, and so (in time) these pettie additions grew to make vp a great peopled Citie.

After the death of Saint Gall, the Religious Bretheren of this Monasterie, requested Count Bertrand, Gouernour of the Countrey, to giue them an Abbot; who sent to them a good Priest, named Audomarus, that is Omer; or Aymar, brought vp in the Colledge of Coire, who was the first Abbot of that place, vnder the Rule and profession of Saint Benedict, quite giuing ouer the name of Hermites. So is it auouched by the same Simlerus; who yet setteth downe confusedly, the dates of the seuerall Foundations.

The first Abbot of Saint Gall.

Soleurre, heretofore knowne vnder the names of Salaturum, Vicus Solodori, Solaturum, that is to say, Solis Turris; being no other heretofore, then a Tower, on the top whereof was niched The Idole of the Sunne (figured and presented, as we haue already declared in our second Booke of the first Tome) which was long time worshipped by the Countrey Inhabitants: & yet is to be seene that auncient Tower, in the midst of the Towne of Soleurre. Queene Bertha of France (sirnamed with the great Foote) wife to Charlemaigne, caused to be built in the same place, the great Collegiall Church, and the Castell thereof: since when, the fielden and solitarie grounds thereabout, are encreased to the greatnesse as now we behold them. Which may serue to shew, that (from all Antiquitie) this Countrey was subiect, and depending on the Crowne of France.

Soleurre, of Solis Turris.

But vpon the declining of the House of Charlemaigne, Iames, Duke and Gouernor of the Countrey, being become absolute Maister and Commander in his Gouernement: vsed the Inhabitants thereof ouer rudely, which caused their recourse to the neighbouring Princes, and namely to the Count of Habspourge Rodolphe, Authour of the House of Austria; to whom the dwellers in Zurich, Vri and Switz, (by the Geographers tearmed Antuatici, and those of the Countie of Aelen, Antuates) gaue some yearely engagement, as to their Protectour and defender, making Alliance, offensiue and defensiue with him, for maintaining them in their freedome and liberte. By the example of these men, the Inhabitants of Basile and of Strasbourg did the very same, and Rodolphe being established by all the Gouernours; came twise or thrice thither yearely, and surueighed all the Gouernments to render Iustice, and to terminate causes of suite, intended by the Inhabitants and against another.

The first beginning of oppressing the people.

Albert of Austria, Sonne to the said Rodolphe, would needes make himselfe absolute Maister of these defended Lands, and for his more mildely attaining thereto, he became Lord, as well by exchange and acquisition, as otherwise, of the Seigneuries of Glarys, Lucerne, Switz and of Vnderuald, of Murbach, the Hermitage, Interlach, Dizents and of other places, resoluing to haue all the rest by force.

He establ'ished then for Gouernour at Swits and Vri, a Knight named Grisler: and at Vnderuald another, called Pelerin Landberg, both of them remaining resident in their Gouernements, with good and strong Garrisons. Landberg sent one of his Seruants, to bring away a Yoake of Oxen, from one of the richest men of Vnderuald, called Henry de Melchtall; whose Sonne, named Arnold (offended at the fellowes saucie behauior) made him sure enough from any such further presumption, and sought for safety among his friends. Thorow want of answering the matter in the Court of Iustice, Landberg possessed himselfe of the Fathers person: whose eyes eyes he caused to be pluckt out of his head, and made confiscation of all his goods.

The Lieutenant or Deputie to the same Gouernour, enflamed with the beauty and good graces of the wife to an Inhabitant of Alzelen, named Conrade de Bonwrthen, and hauing found her about some Housewifely businesse in the field: commanded her to prepare a Bathe for him, which she did. And pressing her earnestly, to come into the Bathe to him; the modest Woman shutied for her honours safetie, and met her Husband returning from the Forrest; who slew the Lieutenant with his Hatchet, iustly thereby chastising his lasciuious incontinencie.

As for the Gouernour Grisler, to cut off all duetie from the Prince; before his owne Castell, called Altorffe, the place of his daily abiding, he caused to be erected a Pole, and on the top thereof placed one of his oldest Hats: whereto he commanded that all passengers should performe the like reuerence, as if himselfe had bin there in person, vpon cruell penalties and impositions, for such as durst denie his goodly appointment.

An old Hat to haue reuerence done to it.

And the same Gouernour making his iourney to Swits, saw there a House very finely built, belonging to a Gentleman of worth, named Warnheir Stouffacher, one of the wealthiest men in Swits: which he threatned to pull downe and vtterly deface, because it had bin built without his permission.

At Vri dwelt a Gentleman, named William Tell, who passing by the Gouernours Hat on the Pale; made no great account of yeelding any reuerence to it. He was accused before the Gouernour, who knowing, that this Gentleman was one of the very best Archers of the Countrey: sent for one of the youngest Sonnes of the Gentleman, that was about fiue yeares old (very dearely affected of his Father) and commanding him to be fast bound to a Tree, placed an Apple on his bare head, which he charged the Father (standing on an indifferent distance off) to cleaue in twaine with an Arrow, or otherwise to haue his head smitten off. The Father refused to draw his Bowe, offering much rather his head to the Gouernour, who with cruell threatnings enforced him thereto: whereupon, his hand being directed (doubtlesse) by power of the Omnipotent; he clefe the Apple, and touched not one haire of the Childes head, to the great contentment of all the beholders.

An Imposition of a meere Tyrannie.

The Hat is the Prince, to whom we owe honour (saith Lipsius.)

But the Gouernour hauing espied another Arrow, taken forth of the Quiuer, and hidden behinde vnder Tells doublet, pressed him very hardly to tell him, what he meant to doe with that other Arrow, whereto he bo'dly replyed. I meant to haue pierced thy heart with this Shaft, if I had wounded my Sonne with the other. Hereupon, the Gouernour caused him instantly to be fast bound and manacled, and put into a Barke or Boate, for passage ouer the Lake of Vri, and confining him a perpetuall prisoner in the Castle of Cusnach: The Gouernour with his Officers, and the manacked prisoner, being in the midst of the Lake: suddenly arose such a violent tempest, as the Gouernours people (being vtterly vnable to gouerne the Barke) and in despaire of their liues, were enforced to entreate Tell very kindely, for bringing them safely to shore by his helpe.

Tell hauing his hands at liberty, tooke charge of the Rudder, shaping his course directly towards Switz, and saued the Barke from wracking, by conducting it wisely vnder the Lee, neere to the shore. He being well acquainted with all the reaches of the Lake, and hauing possession of his Bow and Quiuer of Arrowes; suddenly leapt out of the Barke vpon the side of a Rocke, which (to this day) is called The Rocke of Tell, setting his feete and strength so mainely against the Barke, that the rough windes carryed it againe into the midst of the Lake. But as all extremities must haue an ending at last, so the Gouernour and his followers got safely to the Land, somewhat neere to the place where Tell had escaped from them, and couertly still watched what successe would betide them. Tell knowing all the tracks & passages which the Gouernor must take for bringing him to Cusnach; had ambushed himselfe in a place very conuenient, where directing his aime at the cruell Gouernor, he sent an Arrow from his Bow with such successe, that there immediately he fell downe dead; whence escaping by vnfrequented nookes and passages to Switz, he went to the abiding of Garnser Stouffacher, who likewise running the same perill of life, was not a little ioyfull, to meete with ſo honeſt a companion in miſery. There comforting and encouraging one another, they began to conſider with themſelues, how to get free from the inſolence and oppreſſion of theſe Auſtrian Gouernours: calling into their friendly aſſociation Arnoul de Meſchtall, Sonne to Henry de Meſchtall, who had his eyes pluckt out by the Gouernour.

The three Authours of the Switzers liberty.

These three men, ſending vp their ſolemne Vowes with ſighes to Heauen, and ſwearing Faith mutually each to other; were the firſt Authors of the Switzers freedome and liberties; who changing their auncient appellation of *Helueti*ans, tooke name of the Canton of Swits, in memorie of Garnier Stouffacher, the firſt mouer of ſo faire a buſines. This firſt Alliance of the three Cantons Vry, Switz and Vnderuald, was ſworn at a place called Grutly, neere to Vry, the ſeuenteenth day of October, the yeare of Grace One thouſand three hundred and ſeauen.

Poſſeſſion taken of the Gouernors Caſtles

It began to be put in execution in the Moneth of Ianuary following, when the men of Vnderuald poſſeſſed themſelues of the ſtrong Fortreſſes of Sarne and Rotzberg: by making an outward ſhew of bringing Newyeares gifts (the firſt day of that Moneth) to the Gouernours of them, according to the auncient cuſtome at all times vſed among the Gaules. Thoſe two Fortreſſes or Caſtles were raced downe to the ground, and the very ſame day Stouffacher of Switz did the like to that of Lucerts, built by the Lake, and the other at Vri, erected by Griſler, all laid leuell with the ground.

Remembrance of this freedome kept to future poſterity.

To continue (for euer) to poſterity, the memory of ſo famous an enterpriſe, and becauſe on the morrow after this expedition in common, the Inhabitants of the three Townes, Vry, Vnderuald and Switz made an Alliance together for ten yeares, ſworn and proteſted by the moſt ſolemne ceremonies and oathes that could be imagined) there were Anticke Medales made for the three Cantons, whereon, vpon the one ſide were ſtamped and figured the three Authors of the Switzers liberty, truely ſhaped ſhaped according to life, hauing their hands plighted and ioyned together, in ſigne of Alliance, both with their names and the Cantons alſo as a Legend. And on the other ſide, as a noate of confederacy, were two hands vnited and cloſed together, and for the ſpeaking part of this deuiſe, theſe words

Vnio Inſeperabilis.

In this manner among the Romaines, were two right hands ioyned together, as being the marke and Symbole of vnion and Alliance.

The noate of vnitie and Alliance.

Iungantur in fœdera Dextræ.

And by denying or refuſing the right hand to any one, was a ſigne of ill will, hatred and contempt.

In the firſt and fourth Bookes of the Æneidos.

Nec te noſter Amor, nec te data Dextera quondam,
Nec moritura tenet crudeli funere Dido.

The reproach of an inconſtant and faithleſſe louer. And the Romaines likewiſe had this cuſtome, to offer the right hand at meeting with any one; as a teſtimonie of good will, and true friendſhip without diſſembling.

A cuſtome obſerued among the Romaines.

The Emperours, when they tooke the Oath of Allegeance of the Romaine Legions, they began the Ceremonie with the Sacrifice of Beaſts, whereon the Captaines and chiefe Commanders laid their right hands, to the end of binding them, to keepe the Oathe ſo ſolemnely proteſted vpon the hallowed Offrings & Oblations. Which was begun in the time of Numa Pompilius, who ordained, that thoſe hands which were ſacrificed to Faith, ſhould be folded or enueloped to the fingers ends. And the right hand was held as the Symbole of Faith, as the left was of Iuſtice, as well among the Ægyptians as Perſians, and people of the Eaſt.

Cuſtome among the Scythians.

The Scythians, in their Swearing, vſed a Vowe and a Sword, as noates of Life and Death, contracting Alliances and confederacies, by conioyning their right hands, which they drew thorow Bloud; dipping therein a flake of Wooll, wherewith they bathed ſeauen Stones, vſing inuocations vpon Oratall and Alilat, whom they accounted as their Tutelarie Gods; taking them for witneſſes of their Alliances, and as ſeuere Reuengers: if they failed and infringed.

Concerning the Perſians and Medes.

Among the Medes and Perſians, and (to be briefe) thorow out the Eaſt parts, they contracted Alliances and Confederacies, by vniting and ioyning one right hand in another. Ioſephus in his Iewiſh Antiquities; Xenophon and Cornelius Tacitus, in the ſeauenth Booke of his Annales, ſpeaking of King Tiridates (who) Viſo Corbulone prior quo deſilyt, nec non contactus Corbulo, ſed pedes arreptque Dexteras Miſcuere.

* A King of Armenia.

The Gaules our Anceſtors, contracting Alliance, would ſtrip their right hand and arme ſtarke naked. Their very greateſt enemy Cæſar, in his ſeauenth Booke ſaith. Hæc vti ab latere Noſtris aperto, & ſimilitudine Armorum vehementer noſtros perterruerant, ac tametſi Dextris Exertis animaduertebantur, Quod apud eos Inſigne Pacis eſſe, Conſuetum, tamen id ipſum, ſui fallendi cauſa, Militesab Hoſtibus factum exiſtimabant. A paſſage confirmed by the Noble Writer Tacitus, ſpeaking of them of Langres, in the firſt Booke of his Hiſtories. Miſerat Ciuitas Lingonum, Vetere Inſtituto dona Legionibus Dexteras Hoſpitij Inſigne. And it was from thence, that the Romaine Legions had borrowed their manner of marking and ſtamping Pieces of Money, which carried for Deuiſe Two right Hands ioyned together; and gaue them as New yeares-gifts one to another, when they renewed the Militarie Oath.

The Gaules peopled Greece

Moreouer the ſame Gaules that peopled Greece, left there the print of this ancient Cuſtome. For the Greekes contracting confederacie with their enemies, gaue them their right arme and hand ſtript naked. And ſo did they of Lacedemon towards the Athenians, as it is obſerued by Thucidides, in the fourth Booke of his Grecian Hiſtorie. And the Gaules (our Anceſtours) neuer fought with their enemies; but with the right hand and right arme ſtarke naked, to ſhew their valiancie: And that with the ſame hand, which they vſed in actions of Armes, without any dread of wounding; they offered franckly and freely to their enemies, Alliance and Peace nakedly, without without any dissembling. And their whole intent was, to vse as much courtesie to such as they would make friendly proofe of; as rigour or extremity, to them that they did shun and auoide.

Parcere Subiectis, & debellare Superbos.

Custome among the Hebrewes.

The Hebrewes contracting Alliances, Confederacies and Couenants with their Friends: the Act and Instrument of this Alliance, was called Berith, deriued of the word Barath, which signifieth Deuided and Seperated in twaine. Because to answere this agreement, the parties thus contracting; offered certaine creatures, and deuided them equally in pieces, to make two distinct parts of them; leauing in the midst betweene them, a way or path, whereby the parties might passe to and fro. Ceremonies taken from the fifteenth Chapter of Genesis, where God making an eternall League with his Seruant Abraham; eleauen beasts were offered and deuided in two parts, a path being betweene them.

Applica coram me tres Vitulos, & tres Capras, & tres Arietes, & Turturem, & Filium Columbæ. Abraham obtulit coram eo omnia hæc, & diuisit ea æqualiter. Et posuit diuisionem vnam quamque è regione alterius. Aues vero non diuisit: Et descenderunt Aues super partes diuisas, abegitque eas Abraham. Et factum est cum Sol occumberet, somnus ingressit Abraham, factaque caligo, & ecce Clibanus Fumans, Et Lampas Ignis quæ Transibat per Diuisiones Illas: In Die Illa Ferijt Dominus Fœdus cum Abraham.

Bring before me an Heifer of three yeares old, and a shee-Goate of three yeares old, and a Ramme of three yeares old, and a Turtle Doue, and a yong Pigeon. And he tooke vnto him all these, and deuided them in the middest, and laied each piece one against another, but the Birds deuided not he. And when the Foules came downe vpon the carkeises; Abraham droue them away. And when the Sunne was going downe, a deepe sleepe fell vpon Abraham, and loe an horror of great darkenesse fell vpon him. And behold a smoking Furnace, and a burning Lampe that passed betweene those pieces. In the same day the Lord made a Couenant with Abraham.

The Prophet Ieremie, in his foure and thirtieth Chapter, speaking in the name of God, saith. Dabo viros qui præuaricantur fœdus meum, & non obseruauerunt verba fœderis quibus assensi sunt in conspectu meo, Vitulum quem conciderunt in duas partes, & transierunt inter diuisiones eius. Principes Iuda, & Principes Hierusalem, Eunuchi, & Sacerdotes, & omnis Populus Terræ, Qui transierunt inter Diuisiones eius, &c.

I will giue the men that haue transgressed my couenant, which haue not performed the words of the couenant, which they had made before me, when they cut the Calfe in twaine, and passed betweene the parts thereof. The Princes of Iudah, and the Princes of Ierusalem, the Eunuches and the Priests, and all the people of the Land, which passed betweene the parts of the Calfe, &c.

A custome among the Hebrew Kings.

When the Hebrew Kings would make a Muster or meeting of their People, for Marching vnanimately in Battaile against their enemies; they made a deuision of certaine creatures, as was put in practise by Saul, as we reade in the first Booke of the Kings, the eleauenth Chapter. When he would goe to fight against Naash, King of the Ammonites: He tooke a yoake of Oxen, and hewed them in pieces, and sent them throw out all the coasts of Israel.

Another custome among the Scythians.

Among the Scythians the manner was (into what parts soeuer they were retected) wholly common, and like to that of the Iewes. Because when they sought to contract confederacie with their neighbours; they would kill an Oxe or a Bull, taking and fleying off the skinne, which they cut into thongs and slips, distributing them to such as entred Alliance with them; as Lucian hath noated in his Toxaris, or Dialogue of Friendship. Which maketh vs to iudge (and vpon some good reason) that this Custome came from the Auncient Gaules, who vsed it in the same manner; and so saith the same Lucian, in describing our Gauliish Hercules.

The Hebrewes contracting Alliance with their enemies.

But concerning those Alliances, which the Hebrews contracted with their enemies, they carried themselues according to the quality of the persons. When the Patriarch Abraham gaue assurance to the King of Sodome, for passing thorow his Land, without doing him any iniurie; he did not then giue the right hand into his, being quite contrary to him in manners and beliefe. But he lifted his right hand vp to Heauen, as calling calling to his witnesse the God of truth, in Genesis the foureteenth Chapter. Leuo ego manum meam ad Dominum Deum Excelsum, Possessorem Cœli, & Terræ, quod à filo subtegminis, vsque ad corrigiam caligæ non accipiam de omnibus quæ tua sunt, &c. I haue lifted vp my hand vnto the Lord, the most high God, the Possessour of Heauen and Earth; That I will not take from a thred, euen to a shooe lachet, and that I will not take any thing that is thine, &c.

A custome among the meaner people to their superiors

Inferiour persons, seeking the good will and friendship of the worlds Grands, kissed their right hand, and laid it on the Thigh of such as they sued vnto, swearing vassailage and fidelitie. Seruants sware and promised something to their Maisters, kindly kissing the right hand (yet not laying it on the Thigh) but lower, in signe of submission and humilitie. In Genesis the foure and twentieth Chapter, the Patriarch Abraham, speaking to the most auncient and faithfull of his Seruants, said. Pone manum tuam subter femur meum, vt adiurem te per Dominum Deum Cœli, & Terræ, vt non accipias Vxorem Filio meo de filiabus Chananæorum inter quos habito. Put I pray thee, thy hand vnder my thigh: And I will make thee sweare by the Lord the God of Heauen, and the God of Earth; that thou shalt not take a wife vnto my Sonne, of the Daughters of the Cananites, amongst whom I dwell. Which the Seruant hauing promised to doe, did put his hand vnder the Thigh of his Maister. Posuit Seruus manum suam (in Scripture this is alwayes vnderstood of the right hand, and the same Thigh) sub femore Abrahæ Domini sui, & iurauit illi super sermone hoc. And the Seruant put his hand vnder the Thigh of Abraham his Maister, and sware to him concerning that matter.

Courtesie of embracing the knee

Among the Greekes and Romaines was no such submission made, neither aboue or beneath the Thigh; but embracing the Knée: As we reade in an infinitie of passages in Homer, and in Virgils Æneidos the third Booke.

Dixerat, & Genua amplexus, Genibusque volutans

The originall of the Switzers liberty.

Returning now againe to the Alliance of the Switzers, it appeareth; that the expulsion of their Gouernours, was the onely originall and beginning of their libertie, and of the hatred which they conceiued against the House of Austria. The Emperour Albert, Sonne to Rodolphe, was slaine in the pursuite of this quarrell. Leopold his Sonne, Duke of Austria, in the same manner terminated the honour of his conquests, by being ouerthrowne in a fought Battaile at Morgarten, the sixteene day of Nouember, An. One thousand three hundred and fifteene. And so (very aptly) speaketh our French Salust Phillip de Commines. That God hath giuen to euery one his opposite or contrary, to restraine him as with a Bridle, and serue as a Spur in his sides: in his hundred and eight Chapter.

De tout temps la Maison d'Austriche, & celle de Bauieres sont contraires. Celle d'Austriche en particulier a les Suysses. Et ne fut le commencement de leur diuision qu'vn Village appelle SVITS qui ne scauroit faire Six Cents Hommes, dont les autres portent le Nom, qui se sont tant multipliez, que Deux des meilleures Villes qu'eut la Maison d'Austriche en sont, comme Zurich, & Fribourg, & ont gaigne de grandes Batailles, esquelles ils ont tue des Ducs d'Austriche.

Austria alwaies contrary to the Switzers.

At all times the House of Austria and that of Bauaria are contraries. That of Austria in particuler to the Switzers. And there was no other beginning of their deuision, but about a Village called Switz, which could not make sixe hundred men, whereof the rest beare the name: who are so greatly multiplied, as two of the best Townes (belonging to the House of Austria) haue in them, as Zurich and Fribourg, and haue won great Battailes, wherein Dukes of Austria haue bin slaine.

At what time the Switzers were first seen in France.

The first of them that was seene in France, was at that time, when Charles the last Duke of Bourgongne (being then Count of Charolois) ioyned himselfe with Monsieur Berle, of France, and other French Princes and great Lords, armed and clouded with the faire seeming Cloake, of Louers of the weale publique, for making warre against King Lewes the eleauenth, his Liedge Lord. With this Count of Charolois, Chiefe in the faction of the reuolted Princes, was Iohn, Duke of Calabria, onely Son to the good King Rene of Sicilie, who brought nine hundred Horſe, and ſome Souldiours, among whom were fiue hundred Switzers; qui furent les Premiers qui veid en ce Royaume, cc dit Commines, & ont eſte ceux qui ont donne le bruit à ceux qui ſont venus depuis: Car ils ſe gouuernerent treſ-vaillamment en tous les lieux, ou ils ſe trouuerent. Who were the firſt (ſaith Commines) that euer had bin ſeene in this Kingdome, and were thoſe that gaue fame to ſuch as came afterward: For they Gouerned themſelues moſt valiantly, in all ſuch places as they came to. And this was the reaſon, why (after that time) the iudicious King Lewes the eleauenth, admiring their valiancy, bare affection to them. And the ſame Charles of Bourgongne, hauing, to ſmall purpoſe, awaked this warlike Nation (with whom, by reaſon of the Countries pouerty wherein they dwelt, nothing was to be had but blowes and wounds) loſt there his Riches, men and life.

The firſt alliãce of the French with the Switzers.

Neuertheleſſe, the firſt of our Kings, that made league or Alliance with them, was Charles the ſeauenth, & it beareth date the fourth day of Aprill, in the yeare of Grace One thouſand foure hundred fifty and three: made with the Communalties of Zerich, Berne, Soleure, Lucerne, Vri, Switz, Vnderuald, Zug and Glarys.

That of Lewes the eleauenth, his Sonne and Succeſſour, and with the ſame Cantons, was made in Ableuille, the ſeauen and twentieth day of Nouember, One thouſand foure hundred threeſcore and three, and the third of his Reigne. Which Alliance was renewed at Pleſſis lez Tours, the three and twentieth day of September, An. One thouſand foure hundred threeſcore and ten: made perticularly againſt the laſt Duke of Bourgongne Charles, their common hated enemie.

An annuall penſion paid to the Switzers by the French.

Another Conuention and League offenſiue, was made by the ſame King and Cantons, againſt the ſaid Duke of Bourgongne (proclaimed guilty of high Treaſon) paying a yearely Penſion of twenty thouſand pounds Tournois, and paiable at foure tearmes in the Citie of Lyons. Conditionally, that the ſaid King Lewes might at all times, when himſelfe thought good, leuey fixe thouſand Switzers, to March with him to and againſt all: the holy Seate, the Emperour, and the confederated Allies of thoſe Cantons excepted. And in this Leuey, euery Switzer was to be wadged with foure Florins and an halfe, each Moneth.

This declaration beareth date the fixe and twentieth day of October, in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred threeſcore and foureteene. Augmented with another more perticuler, which importeth: That the Agent and Conſuls of Berne, in name of the ſaid Cantons, ſtand obliged to certifie his Maieſtie with time and place, for the ſuccour of forces againſt the ſaid Duke of Bourgongne, or others whom he would warre on. And when his Maieſtie ſhall be diuerted or impeached elſewhere, without power of ſuccour of men; that then in this caſe, he ſhall be bound to furniſh them, with twenty thouſand Florins du Rhin, quarterly in the Citie of Lyons, beſide the former Penſion agreed on, of twenty thouſand Pounds Tournois euery yeare.

The often renewing of the Confederacies.

King Charles the eight, his Sonne and Succeſſour, renewed this Alliance, with the ſame couenants and conditions before expreſſed, according to the declaration of the ſaid Cantons, dated the fourth of Auguſt, One thouſand foure hundred fourteſcore and foure, confirmed by his Maieſtie at Vienna in Daulphine, the foure & twentieth day of Nouember the yeare following. He made beneficiall vſe of them, in his warre with Bretaigne; And afterward in his iourney to and from Italie, namely on the day at Fornoue, the very ſtrongeſt part of the vantguard for the King, conſiſting but of Three hundred and fiftie Horſe, and three thouſand Switzers, who were all the Hope of the Hoaſt, ſo ſaith Phillip de Commines.

Continuation of this League from time to time.

There was a continuation of the ſaid Confederacie, betweene his Maieſtie and the Cantons of Zurick, Berne, Vri, Vnderuald, Zug, Glarys, Fribourg and Soleure; Giuen at Lyons the eight day of February One thouſand foure hundred and ſixteene: confirmed by an other of the ſame afterward, dated on the day and feaſt of all Saints, or elſe three Moneths before.

King Lewes the twelfth, Father of his people, renewed this League, ſworne for ten yeares. He made good vſe of the Cantons leagued ſeruice, for recouering his Dukedome of Millaine, after which, Pope Iulius the ſecond (a Prince more Martiall) and and Warrelike, then Religious or Deuout) capitall enemy to the French: made a breach of this vnion (by meanes of the Cardinall Biſhop of Syon) to maintaine the Sforzes, who vſurped the Eſtate of Millaine againſt the Houſe of Orleans, and expelled the French out of Italie. This League of the Pope with the Switzers, was made by the ſaid Cardinall, in the yeare One thouſand fiue hundred and tenne.

A Souldiers like Pope.

Vnder King Frances the firſt, The Father of Learning and good Letters, the Switzers renewed the auncient Alliance, in the yeare One thouſand fiue hundred and ſixteene, which continued during his Maieſties life time, and a yeare after. All the Cantons of the Switzers (Zurich excepted) entred into this League; whereof here you may reade the principall Articles, according as they are ſet downe in the Record.

A Breuiate out of the Record, of the chiefe Articles of the League betweene King Frances the firſt, and Cantons of the Switzers.

THat all enmities, dissentions, warres and differences generally, shall remaine quenched and smothered: but concerning them in perticuler, which haue nothing in common with the affaires of warre; they shall bee compounded and termined loouingly, by persons thereto appointed by his Moste Christian Maiestie, and likewise the Confederates.

That all Prisoners, in what place soeuer they are kept or detained; shall speedily be set at libertie, without paying any ransome.

That if any one bearing Armes, haue processe or suite against his Maiestie, not for cause of warre: he may follow it, and plead against him, to be righted.

That such as, after the League renewed with the late King Lewes the Twelfth, and the Cantons allied with them and haue bin receiued into number of their Bourgesses: shall be comprehended within this Treatie, to enioy the benefit thereof. Only such excepted, as are without the limits of the Switzers, not speaking the Germaine language, and are not subiects to the Cantons.

That all Priuiledges, Franchises and Liberties, graunted by the Kings of France and their Predecessours, to Merchantes and Subiects of the Switzers, shall remaine fully confirmed.

To the end that the Switzers, may tast the fauour and liberality of the King: he shall cause to be deliuered them a reasonable Summe of money, as Pension for the charges at the Siedge of Dijon, and voyage of Italie.

To the end, that Peace may firmely be maintained on either parte, and the Friendship begun may continue perpetually; if any difference chaunce to be mooued on either side: whether the one or other shall take Armes, as seeking to haue any right thereby: but following the example formerly mentioned, shall require right by Iustice.

No one shall graunt passage or lodging to the others enemy, nor suffer their Subiects to go in Warre, for Princes or Common-Weales, that are enemies to France or the Switzers. But such as shall doe the contrary, must be called home to the Countrey, and punished according to their deserts.

All Merchants, Pilgrimes and Subiects French and Switzers, may voyage, traffick, go and come freely, both in France and Switzerland: without any outrage, or greuance by any new imposed subsidies or toules.

That the King shall giue yearely to each Canton, the summe of Two Thousand Poundes Tournois: As much to the Valasians, And

To the Grisons, that which was graunted by King Lewes the Twelfth, with the summe of Twenty Thousand Poundes Tournois.

To the Abbot of Saint Gall, his Subiects, and to them of Tokkembourg, the summe of Sixe Hundred Poundes Tournois.

To the Towne of Saint Gall Foure Hundred.

To Mulhouse Foure Hundred.

To them of the Countrey of Gruyere Sixe Hundred Poundes Tournois.

That

That the Auncient Priueledges, which the Inhabitants of Bellizona, Lugano, Locarna, and the Val-Madia had enioyed till then in the Dukedome of Millayne, should be continued and newly confirmed: to publish within a yeares space.

The King is to giue the choyce to the Switzers, whether they had rather keepe the Countrey and Castelles of Lugano, Locarna and the Val-Madia: or else release them to him for the summe of Thirty Thousand Crownes of Golde of the Sunne. And if they doe accept the said summe; the Grisons, those of the Vale-Telina, and of the Countie of Clauenna, are to haue their shares in this summe, as much as one of the Cantons. And

In doing this, good peace, Alliance and Amitie shall continue perpetuall and inuiolable, betweene the Kingdome of France and the Cantons. Therein shall remaine comprehended, on the part of his Moste-Christian Maiestie; Our Holy Father Pope Leo the Tenth; the Holy Seate, and the Romaine Empire; the Kings of Spayne, England, Scotland, Nauarre, and of Denmarke; the Dukes of Lorraine, Sauoye and of Gueldres; the Duke and Common-wealth of Venice, Laurens de Medicis, the House of Medicis, and the Common-wealth of Florence; the Bishop of Liege, and all other his Allies and Confederates. And on the part of the Cantons, Pope Leo; the Holy Seate; the Empire, Emperour and the House of Austria; the Dukes of Sauoye and of Wittemberg; the Familie and Laurens de Medicis; the Common-wealth of Florence; the Marshall of Bourgongne; the Auncient Alliances, with all their Allies and Fellow Bourgesses. This was agreed and sworne in the Towne of Fribourg, on Saint Andrewes day in the Moneth of Nouember, One Thousand, Fiue Hundred and Sixteene.

This Alliance was renewed by the same King Frances, in the yeare, One thousand fiue hundred twenty and one, by a Second agreement passed at Lucerne: wherby all the Cantons (Zurich excepted) and all their Confederates, were vnited with his Maiestie, and concluded.

Que si quelqu'vn, tel qu'il soit, fait la Guerre dans le Royaume de France, Duche de Milan, ou autre Pais appartenant a la Coronne de France deca & dela les Monts, sa Maieste pourra faire vne leuee de Suysses, selon, & quand bon luy semblera, a scauoir Six Mille pour le moins, & Seize Mille pour le plus, si non que les Seigneurs des Ligues le permettent Pourra choisir de tous les Cantons, & Confederez tels Colonels, & Capitaines que bon luy semblera, pourueu qu'ils soient gens de bonne renommee.

Les Seigneurs des Ligues ne donneront aucun empeschement ausdits Colonels, Capitaines, & Soldats; ne delayeront & ne mettront rien en aduant pour retarder leur acheminement, ains dedans Dix Iours apres la premiere iournee que le Roy aura requis secours, leur sera permis de marcher.

Demeureront au seruice du Roy, iusques a la fin de la Guerre, si bon luy semble, sans qu'ils puissent estre r'appellez par leurs Seigneurs. Le Roy aussi leur payera a tous les gages accoustumez. Et neantmoins cas aduenant que la Guerre fust en Suysse, & que pour ceste raison les Cantons ne peussent secourir le Roy, en ce cas ils seront quittes de leur promesse, & pourront soudainement contremander leurs gens, ausquels le Roy sera tenu donner congé.

Si le Roy veut faire Guerre a ses Ennemis, il pourra faire la mesme leuee de Six Mille Suysses pour le moins, & de Seize Mille pour le plus, choisissant des Colonels, & Capitaines gens de bien & de bonne renommee, qui seront Suysses, ou de leurs Alliez.

Le Roy ne pourra partir l'Armee des Suysses, ne la mettre par trouppes deuisees en Garnison en diuerses places, & ne s'en seruira sur Mer, ains sur Terre.

Pour la Solde de la Gendarmerie est accorde, que le Roy payera par Mois a chaque Soldat Suysse Quatre Florins & demy du Rhin. Que leurs gages commenceront au Iour qu'ils sortiront de leurs Maisons, & alors leur sera deu la paye de Trois Mois, encores que le Roy ne se serue si longuement d'eux, & auant que sortir du Pais de Suysse, ils toucheront la Paye du Premier Mois, & le reste pour les Deux autres Mois, en lieux propres, selon qu'ils en auront besoin.

Si apres les Trois Mois passez le Roy veut retenir les Suysses, il leur payera la mesme Solde tous les Mois, iusques au temps qu'ils se pourront commodement retirer en leurs Maisons.

Les Colonels, Capitaines, Enseignes, Ambassadeurs, & autres ayants charge es trouppes, seront payez en la maniere accoustumee, & selon que les Predecesseurs Roys de France ont faict parcy-deuant.

Si

Si quelqu'vn faict la Guerre aux Suysses, le Roy sera tenu de les secourir à ses despens, & leur enuoyer Deux Cents Hommes d'Armes, & Douze pieces d'Artillerie auec leur equipage, assuts, & hault le pied, à scauoir Six pieces de batterie, & Six Canons. Fournira aussi pour les fraiz de la Guerre: & si les Suysses l'ayment mieux, au lieu de Deux Cents Hommes d'Armes, le Roy leur donnera tous les Trois Mois la somme de Deux Mille Escus.

S'il aduient que par le moyen de la Guerre esmeue ca ou la les Suysses ne peuuent recouurer du Sel, ils en pourront acheter en France, & le fair emmener en leur Pais.

Si l'vne des deux Parties faict Guerre contre ses Ennemis, elle ne fera Paix que l'autre n'y soit comprise, & sera en la liberte de l'autre d'y consentir, ou non; si elle refuse la Paix, non obstant ce, pourra poursuiure la negociation d'icelle.

L'Vne des Parties ne pourra receuoir en sa Protection, ny donner Bourgeoisie aux Subiects de l'autre: ny loger, secourir, ou deffendre les Bannis, ou Ennemis de l'autre, ains suiuant les Articles de Paix les chassera, & empeschera.

Sa Majeste voulant faire paroistre son Amour, & Bien-veillance enuers les Suysses, outre les Vingt-Mille Francs qu'il leur promet payer par le Traicte de Paix, Promet payer tous les Ans à chacun des Cantons, tant que ceste Alliance durera, la Somme de Mille Liures Tournois; payera pareillement aux Confederez la moitié de la Pension qu'ils auoient auparauant.

That if any one (whatsoeuer he be) make warre in the Kingdome of France, Duchie of Millaine, or any other Countrey appertayning to the Crowne of France, either on this side, or beyond the Mountaines: His Maiestie may make a leueye of Switzers, according as himselfe shall thinke conuenient, to witt, Six Thousand at the least, and Sixteene Thousand at the most; except the Lords of the Leagues doe permit it.

He may also make choyce in all the Cantons and Confederates, of such Colonells and Captaines as he shall thinke meete: prouided, that they be men of honest and good fame.

The Lords of the Leagues shall be no occasion of hinderance to those Collonelles, Captaines and Soldiours, neither delay or vse any fore matters, whereby to tardy their going one: but within Tenne dayes after the first day, that the King sent warning for such succour, they shall be suffered to March away.

And they shall continue in the Kings seruice, vntill the ending of the warre if it be his liking, without any calling home by their Lords: the King likewise paying them their accustomed wages. And yet notwithstanding, if Warres happen in Swetia, and that (in regard thereof) the Cantons cannot assist the King: in this case, they are to stand discharged of their promise, and may giue sudden countermaund to their people, and the King is bound to giue them leaue.

If the King would make warre with his enemies; he may make the same leueye of Sixe Thousand Switzers at the least, and of Sixeteene Thousand at the most: chusing Colonelles and Captaines, men of faire and good fame, which shall be Switzers, or of their Allies.

The King may not sunder the Army of Switzers, nor place it by deuided troupes for Garrison in diuers places, and they shall not so serue, either by Sea, or on Land.

For the wages of the Gendarmerie, or Seruitours on Horseback, it is couenanted, that the King shall pay by the Moneth to eche Switz Soldiour, Foure Florins and an halfe of the Rhine. That their wadges shall begin on the day when they part out of their Houses, and then shall be due their Paye for three Moneths, although the King haue not so long bin serued by them. And before they go from the Countrey of Switzerland, they shall handle the first Moneths paye, and the rest for two other Moneths, at apte or meete places, according as they shall haue neede.

If after the Three Moneths be past, the King would still retaine the Switzers: he shall pay them the same hire euery Moneth, vntill such time as they may conueniently return home to their Houses.

The Colonels, Captaines, Enseignes, Ambassadours and others, hauing charge in the Troupes: shall be payed in the wounted manner, and according as the Predecessours, Kings of France haue formerly payed.

If any Warre be made vpon the Switzers, the King shall stand engaged, to succour them at at his owne charges, and to send them two hundred men of Armes, and twelue pieces of Artillerie, with their furniture and carriages for quickest speede: to wit, sixe Pieces for batterie, and sixe Canons. Moreouer he shall furnish the Switzers from three moneths to three moneths in the Citie of Lyons, with a certaine summe of money, for charges of the warre. And if the Switzers thinke it better; instead of two hundred men of Armes, the King shall giue them all the three Moneths, the summe of two thousand Crownes.

If it so happen, that by reason the Warre (moued here or there) the Switzers become destitute of salt: they may buy it in France, and cause it to be brought into their owne Country.

If either of the two Parties make Warre against his enemy; there shall be no peace concluded, except the other be therein comprehended, and it shall be in the free will of the other, to consent thereto, or no: if peace be refused, yet notwithstanding, the negotiation thereof may be followed.

One of the Parties may not receiue into his protection, nor giue Bourgeship to any Subiects of the other: Nor lodge, succour or defend the Banished, or enemies of the other: but according to the Articles of Peace, shall expell and hinder them.

His Maiestie, desiring to make his loue and good will knowne and appeare to the Switzers; ouer and beside the twenty thousand Francs, which he promised by the Treatie of Peace to pay them: maketh a further promise, that so long as this Alliance shall endure, he will pay yearely to each of the Cantons, the summe of a thousand pound Tournois. He will pay also to the Confederates, the moitie of the Pension, which they had before.

In this second League and Alliance, more strict and perticuler then the first; the King comprehended the same Princes, Estates and Common-weales before remembred: and the Switzers in like manner, with charge and condition, that if any of the Comprehendants make Warre against one of the Parties, either on this side or beyond the Mountaines: the other Partie shall giue succour without exception of person, according to the tenure of this Alliance, which ought to continue during the life time of King Frances the first, and three yeares afterward. The latter Alliance stronger then the first.

King Henry, second of the name, his Sonne and Successour, renewed this League with the Cantons, vpon the same conditions as his Father before had done, for continuance of his life, and fiue yeares after. It was couenanted at Soleurre by the Cantons, and their Allies (except Zurich and Berne, and their Confederates) in the yeare One thousand fiue hundred fortie and nine. To this Alliance were these Articles added.

Addition of Articles to the last League.

QVe l'Estat de Milan, & autres Terres vsurpees en Italie sur la Coronne de France du temps du Roy Francois Premier, pourroient estre recouurees par le Roy, sans que les Suysses fussent tenuz de luy donner Secours pour ce faire. Mais s'il les reconqueste à l'aide d'vne autre Armee, que pour la conseruation d'icelles, lesdicts Cantons luy fourniroient Gens selon sa volonte.

Si le Roy se veut trouuer en personne en quelque Guerre, il pourra choisir à son plaisir des Capitaines Suysses, & faire vne leuee de Six Mille hommes pour le moins.

Ne pourra desioindre & separer l'Armee des Suysses lors qu'il faudra donner Bataille, mais hors d'icelle, il pourra les mettre en Garnison par les Villes, & places fortes.

A ce que les Traictez d'Aliance des Annees Mil Cinq Cents Seize, & Vingt & vn demeurent fermes & perdurables, quant aux gages non payez, y a este pourueu comme ensuit. Le Demandeur aduertira du faict son Magistrat, auquel si la cause semble estre recitable, il s'adressera aux Ambassadeurs de sa Maieste, qui lors seront en Suysse: s'ils sont absents ledict Magistrat escrira au Roy, & requerra sa Maieste qu'il satisface à la Partie. Si le Roy se met à la raison, le Demandeur s'en deura contenter, mais s'il refusoit de payer selon l'Equite, le Demandeur pourra lors prier qu'on commette des Iuges & Arbitres deuant lesquels il debattra sa cause.

Si le Roy ne commet des Iuges de sa part, ceux de Suysse passeront outre en la cognoissance du faict, & ce quils ordonneront sera tenu pour ferme & valable par chacune des Parties, comme si les Iuges de part, & d'autre y auoient assiste.

Les Marchands Francois, & Suisses ne seront greuez d'aucuns Ports, Passages, ou Passages nouueaux. Sil s'esmeut Procez entre les Subiects de part, & d'autre, le Demandeur plaidera deuant le Iuge du lieu, ou demeure le Deffendeur.

THat the State of Millaine, and other Lands vsurped in Italie, against the Crowne of France, from the time of King Francis the first: may be recouered by the King, with out the Switzers binding to giue him aide in the doing thereof. But if he shall recouer them by the helpe of another Armie: then for the conseruation of them, the Cantons are to furnish him with men according to his owne minde.

If the King please to be personally present in any warre, he shall make choice (at his pleasure) of the Switzers Captaines, and make a leuy of sixe thousand men at the least.

No disioyning or seperation may be made of the Armie of Switzers when they are to giue Battaile: but out of it, they may plant them in Garrisons for Townes and strong places.

Because the Treaties of Alliance in the yeares One thousand fiue hundred and sixteene, and twentie one, continue firme and lasting, although wages were vnpayed: it is prouided as followeth. The Demander shall (in this case) aduertise the Magistrate, to whom if the case seeme to carrie equitie: He shall shape his course to the Ambassadours for his Maiestie, that then are in Swetia. But if they be absent, the Magistrate shall write to the King, and require his Maiestie to satisfie the partie. If the King doe yeelde to reason, the Demander is to rest contented; but if he refuse to pay according to equity: the Demander may then pray, to haue the case committed to Iudges and Arbitrators, before whom he may debate his cause.

If the King doe not commit his part to Iudges, the Switzers themselues may proceede to take knowledge of the fact, and that which they ordaine and appoint, shall be held for firme and valuable by either of the parties, as if Iudges (on the one side and other) had giuen assistance therein.

French Merchants and Switzers, shall not be iniuried at any Ports, by new Toules or Passes. If Suite be moued in Law betweene Subiects of either side: the Plaintife or Demandant shall Pleade before the Iudge of the place, where the Defendant dwelleth.

King Charles the ninth renewed this League vpon the same conditions as before is expressed, for the time of his Reigne, and of his Successour King Henry the third, of happy memory.

King Henry the Great, renewed it likewise, for the time of his Reigne, and of Monsieur the Daulphine, reigning at this present, and for sixe yeares after his death. It was determined and concluded at Soleurre, on Monday being the eleauenth of September, One thousand sixe hundred and one. And to see it sworne to the said King Henry the Great of endlesse memory. Two and fortie Deputies of the Cantons, Leagued Grisons, and other Allies, came to Paris the Moneth of October following. And the twentieth day of the same Moneth, this League was there sworne by his Maiestie, in the Church of Paris.

CHAP. I.

Concerning the Orders Militarie, which haue bin Inſtituted by the Popes of Rome.

The Pope Lord of Saint Peters Patrimonie.

VR purpoſe was not, to vſe any diſcourſe of Monaſticall Orders, but onely ſuch as were Militarie. Our moſt Holy Fathers the Popes, Soueraigne Princes Temporall, concerning the Patrimonie of Saint Peter, and the dependances thereon, to honour Princes and Lords their Subiects, in the extendure of the State, and their Ordenarie attending Officers: haue at ſundry times eſtabliſhed diuers Orders of Knights. The firſt whereof were them

Order of Ieſus Chriſt.

Of Ieſus Chriſt, Inſtituted in Auignion, by Pope Iohn, two and twentieth of the name, he being a Natiue of Cahors in Cahourcy, Anno One thouſand three hundred and twentie, the fourth yeare of his Pontificalitie. They did weare a Croſſe of Gold plaine, enamelled with Red, ſhut vp or encloſed within another Croſſe Pattee d'Or, of the ſame faſhion; but the enamelling differed from that order of Chriſtus in Portugall.

Of the Holy Ghoſt.

Of the Holy Ghoſt, acknowledged at Rome vnder the name of Bretheren of the Hoſpitall of the Holy Ghoſt; which was Inſtituted by Pope Paul, ſecond of the name, in the yeare of Grace One thouſand foure hundred threeſcore & eight, the fift of his Pontificalitie. And theſe Knights ware a Croſſe formie or pattee, White.

Of S. George.

Of Saint George, Inſtituted by Pope Alexander, ſixt of the name, in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred foureſcore and eighteene, the ninth of his Pontificalitie. They did carrie a Croſſe of Gold, entowred with a wreath made in forme of a Crowne, of the ſame

Of S. Peter.

Of Saint Peter, to warre and fight againſt the Turkes, and to guard and defend their courſes on the Sea-coaſts, for the State of the Church. It was Inſtituted by Pope Pius, tenth of the name, in the yeare One thouſand fiue hundred and twenty, the ſixt of his Pontificalitie. They did weare (within an Ouale of Gold) the Image of Saint Peter, at the end of a Tortis of Chaines of Gold. There haue bin ſeene foure hundred Knights of this Order, at one and the ſame time.

Of S. Paul.

Of Saint Paul, eſtabliſhed by Pope Paul, third of the name, in the yeare of Grace One thouſand fiue hundred and fortie, the thirteenth of his Pontificalitie. He made two hundred Knights during the reſt of his time of keeping the State.

Of the Pies.

The Pies, ordained by Pope Pius, fourth of the name, in the yeare One thouſand fiue hundred and threeſcore the firſt of his Pontificalitie, which continued but ſixe yeares onely. During which time, he made to the number of fiue hundred and thirtie fiue Knights. At Rome, or in any place whereſoeuer he was in perſon; he would haue them to goe before the Knights of the Empire, and of Malta. And they had the charge of carrying the Pope; at ſuch time as he roade abroade in publique.

Of Laurctum, or Lauretto, Inſtituted by the Pope Sixtus Quintus, in the yeare One thouſand fiue hundred foureſcore and ſeauen, the ſecond of his Pontificalitie; for whom he erected the Church of our Lady at Loretta, to be a Cathedrall and Biſhops Church. He made (during his time of keeping the Chaire) two hundred and threeſcore Knights.

All which (as well as the reſt) are called Cheualiers Dorez, hauing permiſſion to beare Armes, Au Tymbre tarre de front, the Sword and guilt Spurres: Honors which the Popes conferred a well to them there of the Sword, as of the long Robe, known: by the name of Counts Palatines, all being at Wadges and Penſions of the Popes, that granted their degrees of Knighthood. Giuing them alſo priuiledge, to create and aduance Doctors in all Faculties, of Scribes and publique Notaries, yea, and to Legitimate Baſtards, as the Emperours did.

The power and authority of theſe knights

At Rome likewiſe there are Knights Hoſpitaliers of Saint Anthony, and the moſt part of them French, who albeit they are of the Church; yet notwithſtanding, they ſtile themſelues Knights of Saint Anthony, the Chiefe of this Order is at Vienna in Dauphine. The Generall of this Order beareth the title of Abbot of Saint Anthony of Vienna, who hath vnder his obedience a great number of hoſpitals and Preceptories, beſide great goods in France, which are in the guard and protection of our Kings, whereof I haue ſeene the confirmatiue Patents from King to King, from Charles fift of the name, vnto King Lewes the thirteenth, now reigning; whoſe Patents beare date the third day of Iuly, in the yeare One thouſand ſixe hundred and eighteene, verified in Parliament in the moneth of September following, the ſame yeare.

The Hoſpitable Knights of S. Anthony.

By which Patents, our Kings carrie the qualitie of Daulphines of Viennois, of Valentinois and Diois. The Principals of this Order doe weare on their Gownes, Cloakes and blacke Caſſockes a double Saint Anthonies Croſſe, that is to ſay, two letters T. T. the one vpon the other, of Blew Sattin, whereby is ſignified Thanatos, Thanatos, Mors, Mors, the meaneſt perſons weare onely but one. The Holy Anchorites, liuing in the Deſarts of Thebes in Aegypt, and vnder the Rules of the Fathers of Hermites Saint Paul and Saint Anthony, went cloathed in Greene, that is to ſay, garments wouen of Palme tree leaues, the habites of Slaues and miſerable perſons; wearing on the breaſt the Croſſe of Saint Anthony, to declare, that they were dead to the World. The Greeke Calloyers, of the Order of Saint Baſile, were cloathed after the Friers Minimes, very obſcurely, and vpon their breaſt they wore the double Croſſe of Saint Anthony, the vppermoſt whereof was Red, and that vnderneath wholly Blacke; as we learne in the Grecian Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtory, and by Nicephorus Gregoras, in the life of the Emperour Andronicus, who was ſhorne a Monke. And heretofore, Abbots, carried no other Croſſe then a Staffe, the top whereof began in ſhape like to Saint Anthonies Croſſe.

In like manner, there are in ſome Cities of Italie, as at Bologna, Modena, & elſewhere, Knights of the Virgin Mary. The learned Carolus Sigonius, in his Booke De Regno Italiæ, maketh mention of this Order of Knights, Of the Virgin Mary, in obſeruing the firſt Founder thereof, and ſuch as were enrouled with him. In the yeare One thouſand two hundred thirty three, Brother Bartholmew, Biſhop of Vicenca, of the Order of the Friers Preachers, Inſtituted this Order, and cauſed it to be confirmed by Pope Vrbane, fourth of the name, in the yeare One thouſand two hundred threeſcore and two. The Knights of this Order followed the Rule of Saint Dominicke, wearing A white Caſſocke, and vpon the breaſt Vne Croix pattee Rouge, à Deux Eſtoiles en Chef de meſme, and ouer the Caſſocke, a Cloake of Aſhes Gray colour.

The intention profeſſed by this Order.

Their profeſſion was, to take perticular care of Widowes and Orphanes. And vnderſtanding of any houſhold variance, to happen betweene the Husband and his wife, about ſome perticular rancor or quarell: they endeauoured (ſo much as poſſibly they could) to plant peace & reconcilement, which is a work of charity, & by S. Paul often commended. They had neither Conuent nor Monaſtery, to liue there, but each dwelt an dwelt in his owne houſe, with his wife and Familie: and therefore (by way of hockerie) they were called The Bretheren of Ioye. They acknowledged to haue ouer them a Great Maiſter, to whom they were obedient.

CHAP. II.

The Inuenters of the Order.

About ſome fiue yeares ſince, three Gentlemen that were Bretheren, of Spella in Italie, named Pedro, Iohn Baptiſta and Bernardo, ſirnamed Petrignanoes, inuented a new Order Militarie of Knighthood, in the honour, and vnder the name of The moſt glorious Virgin Mary, called the Mother of God, and vnder the Rule of Saint Frances d'Aſſiſe. The memories thereof were by them preſented to our Holy Father Pope Paul, fift of the name, at his preſent ſitting in the Chaire of Saint Peter: who cauſed them to be ſeene in a full Conclaue of the illuſtrious Cardinals, and there they were found to be very reaſonable. So that in the Moneth of Iuly, One thouſand ſixe hundred and eighteene, his Holineſſe approued the ſaid Order: whereof his Holineſſe and his Succeſſors in the Sacred Seate, are to be the Great Maiſters.

The Authours opinion concerning the proofe of this Order.

This Order (then which, none wil be more famous thorow out all Chriſtendome) ſhould haue for Great Maiſter, ſome great Soueraigne Prince, that is endued with power and meanes, to maintaine it. His Holineſſe gaue to the ſaid Order, the Palace of Saint Iohn de Laterano, the beſt built, and the moſt ſpacious, and in the ſweeteſt ayre of all the Citie of Rome, there to haue their Conuent and ordenary abiding. And, to make their Arſenall of Gallies, the ſmall Citie and Port of Ciuita Vecchia, anciently called Centum Cellæ, ſeated on the Mediterranean Sea, which the Knights may fortefie. But it hath this diſcommoditie, that Cælo ſubiacet inimico, againſt which it is difficult to vſe any remedy. He gaue them likewiſe an Iſland, adiacent to the Port of Ciuita Vecchia, and the Gouernment of his Gallies.

The Popes bounty to this Order.

After that this Order had bin thus approued by the Pope, the Inſtitutours thereof came to the Court of France, & procured the Articles to be ſeene by the Moſt Chriſtian King Lewes, thirteenth of the name, who made them promiſe of his vtmoſt fauour. From thence they went to the Court of the Emperour Mathias, whence they made account to returne for Italie, and to hold within two yeares (at the leaſt) the firſt Chapter of the Order, in the Citie of Rome, there and then to elect a Great Maiſter. At this inſtant they haue aboue two Millions of promiſes for new Knights, whom they haue enrouled from all the Prouinces of Chriſtendome; namely, from France. And here you may behold the Articles of this new Order, to the number of ſeauen and thirtie.

The firſt Chapter to be held in Rome.

The Articles of the new Order of the Virgin Mary.

The cauſes of this Orders inſtitution.

1. THis Order, called The Order of the Virgin Mary, is Inſtituted for defence of the Chriſtian Faith, exaltation of the Catholique and Apoſtolique Church: and (perticularly) to repreſſe the audacious boldneſſe of the Turkes, who run ordenarily narily roauing on the coasts of the Mediterranean Sea, carrying away an vnspeakable number of poore Christians, whom they kill cruelly, or keepe them in perpetuall slauery, and in a condition, more miserable a thousand times then death, to the disgrace and shame of Christendome.

II. There is contained in it three kindes of Knights. The first is of Gentlemen Layicks, who are called, Knights of Iustice. Because, before their admittion and receiuing into the said Order, it is expedient for them, to make an exact search, and good proofe of their Nobilitie. In the second place Knights Gentlemen Priests, and Beneficed.

Knights of Iustice Laye-men

Next, Knights Chaplaines. For succour and seruice of which three Orders of Knights, are Seruants of Armes

Seruants of Armes.

III. The Knights Laye Gentlemen, are to make proofe of their Father and Mother, Grandfather and Grandmother, both Paternall and Maternall; that they are issued and descended of Noble Houses, capable and worthy to beare the charge and degree of Nobilitie: and in proceeding to the information of their life and manners, as also their extraction; to make mention, what dignities and degrees haue bin held by the Grandfathers and Fathers, as well by knowledge as authenticall Titles. Likewise, that they are bred and borne in lawfull Mariage: that they are not Bastards to Princes and Great Lords, in which case, they are to be priuiledged.

Of Nobilitie by descent.

IIII. That their Predecessours haue alwayes liued Nobly, without vsing or exercising any Mechanicall Trade or Occupation, vnworthy the title of Nobilitie. And concerning such Noble men, that meddle in Trafficke and Merchandise, as doe the Gentlemen of Florence, Geneway, Sienna and Luca: the Sonnes of such Gentlemen may be receiued among the Knights Gentlemen of Iustice; prouided, that they themselues haue not exercised the Trafficke of their Fathers, and can make publique appearance, of their good life and behauiour, and that they and their Ancestours are cleare from any noate of infamie, and were neuer called in question before any Seate of Iustice.

meddling in Trafficke and Merchandise, and Sons descended of the.

Moreouer, to iustifie the Nobilitie of their extraction, they stand obliged to make apparant proofe, concerning the Armes of their Houses, both by Father and Mother, which they are to emblazon by their Mettals and Colours, in the Booke and Register of Genealogies, approued by Knights of the Order, to be kept and remaine in the Treasurie of the Order. Whereinto shall none be admitted, that are issued or descended of Iewes, Moores or Sarrazens. The same proues, and in the same nature, is to be made by them that are Knights Gentlemen Priests and Beneficed persons.

V. And as for Knights Gentlemen Chaplaines, and Bretheren Seruants of Armes: they are to make proofe, that their Father and Mother are Noble by extraction, and haue liued Nobly, without the least infamous taxation.

Knight Priests Knights Chaplains and Seruants of Armes

VI. The Knights of Iustice and Seruants of Armes may be admitted and receiued into the Order, at what age soeuer: alwayes before hand prouided, that they be actiuely able, well formed of body, for managing Armes in the defence of Religion, and haue such meanes to maintaine them, according as the dignitie of a Knight requireth.

VII. Knights of Iustice, and Knights Priests and Beneficed, are bound to weare about their necks a Riband of Blew Silke, and a Crosse of Gold enamelled with Blew; in memory & respect of the Garment, worne by the most glorious Virgin Mary, which was of Blew Celestiall colour. And vpon the Cloake (on the left side) a Crosse of Blew Sattin, embrodered and curiously wrought with Siluer.

The Riband and Crosse.

VIII. Knights Priests Chaplaines, and the Bretheren Seruants of Armes: are to weare the Crosse of Blew Sattin (formerly spoken of) on the left side of their Cloaks, but may not weare it about their necke.

Varietie of wearing the Crosse.

IX. Knights of Iustice shall weare the Roabe of White double Taffatie, trayling along vpon the ground, with great sleeues, a long traine, Cordons, decked and garnished with Blew Silke; & on the Breast the Crosse of Blew Sattin before described.

X. Knights Priests and Beneficed, shall weare the like Roabe; onely it must be shorter shorter then that of the other Knights of the great Crosse.

XI. And as for those Knights Chaplaines, and the Bretheren Seruants of Armes: they must weare Roabes of White Serge, with strait sleeues and long, hanging downe to the ground. And the Crosse on the left side, with deckings, Cordons and garnishments of Blew Silke.

XII. The Knights of Iustice, who after the proofe of their Nobilitie, haue obtained the great Crosse: shall stand bound each man, to pay to the Religion a thousand Crownes for their entrance, and fiue and twenty Crownes for the expedition of their Letters.

Knights of Iustice their payment at entrance.

XIII. Each Knight of the great Crosse, entring into the Foundation of this Order; may freely grant the habite of a Knight of Iustice (and as freely also) to such a person as he shall name: Prouided, that he be a man of such qualitie, as is fit to enter the said Order, and can, or hath made proofe of his Nobilitie, in the manner before declared, of his foure Predecessors inclusiuely. In the doing whereof, he shall not pay any right for entrance; but onely fiue and twenty Crownes for the expedition of his Letters, and shall enioy all the Priuiledges, giuen and granted to the Order.

XIV. The Knights of Iustice, and Knights Priests Beneficed, shall pay to the Religion for their entrance, each man two hundred Crowns, and fiue and twenty Crowns for the expedition of their Letters.

Other payments at entrance.

XV. Knights Priests Chaplaines, and Bretheren Seruants of Armes, shall pay each man for his entrance an hundred Crownes, and twenty Crownes for the expedition of his Letters.

XVI. All these Knights of the Order (the Priests excepted) shall stand bound to pay to the Religion, each man twelue Crownes, for buying a paire of Armes, which shall be placed in the Arsenall of the said Religion.

XVII. All Knights of the Order, hauing receiued the habite, shall be bound to make their Caraueues, that is to say; to abide eighteene Moneths in the Gallies belonging to the Religion, and as many more in the Conuent thereof, which must be established in Rome. From which (neuertheless) Priests and Clearkes stand exempted, by making foure Moneths residence at Rome, during which time, they shall be lodged and maintained in the Conuent, at the expences of the Religion.

Duties to be performed by the Knights.

XVIII. Knights of Iustice, and Bretheren Seruants of Armes, being desirous to learne the Exercises, as managing Armes, riding great Horses, and vnderstanding the Mathematicks; shall learne them in the Conuent, at charge of the Religion, where (for the same purpose) shall be maintained good and skilfull Maisters. And they may continue in the Conuent, during the space of eighteene Moneths, for the apprehension of the said Exercises, being there lodged and nourished in the Conuent.

Exercises enstructed by the Religion.

XIX. Knights Layicks of this Order, may be married men, and may likewise marrie Widdowes, as well as Maides. And by the death of their first wiues, may be admitted to ioyne againe in second mariage, according as the holy Church hath ordained.

Liberty of Marriage.

XX. Which Knights, although they be married, yea, twise married; may yet haue and hold pensions on all kindes of Benefices, without being bound and restrained, from wearing the Clearkes habite, or any other, but that belonging to the Religion.

XXI. These Knights and their Seruants may weare all kindes of Armes; as Knights and Bretheren Seruants, of other Religions and Militarie Orders doe.

Wearing of Armes.

XXII. All sorts of Nations may enter into the Foundation of this Order; according to the Rules and conditions, which are formerly inserted.

XXIII. Knights Layicks are to make three vowes; as namely of Charitie to his neighbour, coniugall Chastity: and obedience to the Great Maister and his Successours.

Of Vowes.

XXIV. Priests shall vowe Charitie to Neighbours, and obedience to the Great Maister: And all them of the Order, shall liue conformably to the Statutes and Ordenances of the Religion.

XXV. Euery Knight shall stand obliged, to pay to the Priest Knight, that hath giuen him the habite of the Religion, two Crownes of Gold, three pounds of white Waxe, and a pound of Incense to serue in the Church.

XXVI. The

XXVI. The election of the first Great Maister, shall depend on the will of our holy Father the Pope.

XXVII. And for proceeding (afterward) to the election of the Great Maister; his Holinesse, and his Successours in the Holy Seate, shall nominate Three Knights of each Nation, whereof there are Knights in the Order, Knights of the Great Crosse, or of Iustice; and the Councell shall make choyce of one among them three.

XXVIII. All the Great Maisters, beginning with the very First, shall be bound (immediatly after their Election) to take the Oathe of Obedience, and of Fidelitie to the Holy Father then sitting, and to the Apostolike Seate.

Power & authority of the Great Maister

XXIX. The Great Maister of the said Order, priuatiuely, and before all other Iudges elsse, shall haue the knowledge of all causes ciuile, criminall, reall, personall and mixed, concerning all the Knights of the Order, of what nature or condition soeuer they be.

XXX. There shall be in euery Prouince, a Knight of the Great Crosse deputed, for administration of Iustice in all the foresaid cases, vpon the first instance: whose Office and Authority shall last but three yeares.

Concerning the Generall of the Army and his Title.

XXXI. The Generall of the Armie of the said Religion, shall be nominated and elected by our Holy Father the Pope, and his Successours in the Holy Seate, and taken from among the number of Knights of the Great Crosse: who shall haue and beare the Title of Marshall of the Religion.

XXXII. The charges and Offices of the said Religion, and of the Gallies thereto belonging, are to bee giuen and deuided to Knights of the Order, according to the rancke of their receiuing thereinto, as also their experience and capacitie in the Exercises.

Bondes and assurances due to the Order.

XXXIII. The Obligations of such as would enter into the said Religion, for assurance of their rights of entrance, and Armes and Learning belonging to the Order: shall be set downe in authenticall tearmes, and according to the forme, stile and custome of the place where they are to be placed. And the future Knights must be bound, by an expresse and perticuler clause, promising and couenanting on their behalfe, to make tender and payment of their dues, vpon commaund of one of the Lords Petrignanoes, Inuenters of the said Order.

Imployment of moneys for entrances.

XXXIV. Such summes of money, as shall arise by entrances of Knights and Seruants of the Order, shall be imployed in the acquisition of immoueable goods, which shall serue in the Prouinces, whence the monies doe come for such entrances, and not elsewhere, to serue as a foundation and endowment for Commanderies of the Order, whereto shall arriue Knights of the same Prouinces, according to the ranck of their reception. The Thirdes of the said Commanderies, Reuennues, reserued to the Religion.

XXXV. With the said moneys shall likewise be founded other Commaunderies, of lesser reuennues then those of the Great Crosse; for the Knights of Iustice, Priests Beneficed, Chaplaines, and Brethren Seruants of Armes, according to the ranck of their entertainement.

For receiuing the Orders Habite at Rome.

XXXVI. After deposte is made of the summes of money, promised by such as are nominated and retained, for entring into the said Order: the Knights shall receiue their habites at Rome, from the hands of him, as shall be thereto deputed and allowed by our Holy Father the Pope. And in the Principall Cities of euery Prouince, shall be deputed from the Holy Seate, some person (famous for dignitie) who shall deliuer the Habites to the new Knights: and who (vpon good and lawfull excuses) shall be dispenced withall from going to Rome, paying (for the Knight) to him that deliuereth the Habite, according as before is expressed.

The first Generall Chapter to be holde at Rome.

XXXVII. All which Knights, hauing receiued the habite of the Religion: the first Generall Chapter thereof shall be held in the Citty of Rome, by appointment of the Great Maister. At which Chapter, the Knights Laycks, Priests Beneficed, Chaplaines, & Brethren Seruants of Armes, shall stand bound to be personally present, vpon penalty of their Habites priuation. Except such as are vnder Eight yeares of age, or detayned by some lawfull cause or excuse; which must be made known to the Great Maister, and signed by such testimonie, as may be without reproofe.

Of

At this First Chapter shall be made and published, all the ordinances, Rules and Statutes, concernig the said Order.

Number of Knights at Rome and Loretto.

Of Knights of the Order, there shal alwaies remaine resident at Rome in the Court of the holy Father, fiue and twenty, hauing twenty Ducates by the Moneth, and the like number at our Lady of Loretto.

The Popes Armes.

Our Holy Father Paul, fift of the name, of the Familie of the Bourgheses, Soueraigne Great Maister, and Protectour of this Order: Porte d'Azur au Dragon ou Serpent aile d'Or, au Chef d'Or, chargee d'vne Aigle, simple de Sable.

The Inuenters Armes.

The Bretheren Petrignanoes, Institutours of this Order: Portent d'Azur au Lyon d'Argent estiue de dessus Trois Monts, ou Montagnetes d'Or, au Mezail Tarre de front, sans Cimier, & Supposts: Et sous le Tout de ces Armes, les beuts de la Croix dudit Ordre.

The moe all meant in the Orders Stile according to the perticulers declared.

Which (as we haue already said) is of Blew Celestiall colored Sattin, wholly couered and embrodered with Siluer, and without a Border of Gold. In the middest is a round Circle, wherein is composed like Cyphers, the Letters M. and S. Crowned with a Chaplet of Floures, and a Starre of Gold ouer the Cypher, as seeming to say Sancta Maria. Round about which is written this Deuise. In hoc Signo Vincam., and all that is releuated vpon the Sattin, is of Siluer Imbrodery. About the which Roundure, beside the foure Branches, which make the Crosse (as we will shew hereafter) are twelue Rayes or beames of Siluer, three tending to each side, as representing the twelue Apostles. Each Branch of the Crosse is composed of nine Tracts, which denoate or demonstrate the nine Orders of Angels. The finishing of the Branches, are fashioned as if they were Floures de Luces; yet not after the French, but in a strange manner, as testifying, that this Order is Instituted in the honor and inuocation on The Sacred Virgin, the true Lilie of the Vallies. At the ends of the Crosse, in Flourets are foure Starres, round engirt with beames, as figuring the foure Euangelists, who (with one hand) guided by the spirit of truth, haue described the Misteries of our Saluation, and the Genealogie of the Queene of Angels.

A further relation of the ninth Article.

For our better vnderstanding the ninth Article, it is to be obserued, that the Cloaks of honor, which we call of the Order, are tied vpon one of the sholders, as we see in France, and the other before, as in Italie and elsewhere. The Cordons being fastned before by diuers and sundry strings, are throwne vp afterward vpon the Knights shoulders; to the end that they may traine farre enough off behinde them, like to the Dalmaticks and Coapes of our Priests, which serue for Deacons & Subdeacons, without comparing any diuine things with humaine, Absit miscere Sacra Prophanis. And the Cordons of this Order are composed of white Silke, hauing the knots and Tassels of White and Blew Silke.

CHAP. III.

Of those Orders of Knighthood, which are in diuers Cities and Common-wealths of Italie.

The Order of S. Marke in the Citie of Venice.

OConcerning that of Venice, the most auncient and famous of Christendome, after that the Body of Saint Marke the Euangelist, was transported from forth of Alexandria in Agypt, into this rich Citie, the Queene of the Sea, and taken by her for her Tutelarie Angell and Guardian: was forthwith instituted, The Order of Knights of Saint Marke, figured and represented in their Armes, Banners and White Flagges, Par vn Lyon Aisle de Gueulles: And for the Legend or deuise Pax tibi Marce Euangelista meus. The Duke and the Seigneurie doe neuer grant this Order, but to such a person, as hath performed some famous Seruices for the Common-wealth. And the granting thereof carieth along with it, the title of Bourgesship, and a priuiledge withall, to beare for Crest ouer his Armes, Vn Musle de Lyon, in honour of Saint Marke. A priuiledge which they esteeme and hold in such honor: that (in former times) there were none but Princes their neighbors, that could haue the happinesse to enioy it.

Another Order for the yong Nobility of Venice.

To forme and fashion their yong Noble Gentlemen the same Common-wealth established another Order, called Della Galza, hauing the same Rules and Statutes, as that of the Band in Castile. But that there was deuised for directing yong Spanish Noble men, in well managing an Horse, and other Lands exercises: whereas this of Galza, was to fashion Noble men both by Sea and Land. This Order was renewed by the Duke and the Common-wealth, in the yeare One thousand fiue hundred threescore and two.

I could here set downe the names and Armes of two hundred and fiftie Lords, issued from Illustrious Families in the State of Venice, all Knights of Saint Marke: but I passe them ouer in silence, to shorten this discourse, and come

The Seigneuryof Geneway hath the Order of Saint George Kights.

To the Seigneurie of Geneway. It hath also an Order of Knighthood, called Knights of Saint George, who, with a Chaine of Gold, doe weare a plaine Crosse, enamelled with Redde: and (vpon their Cloakes) one in embroderie, but of the same colour.

This Common-wealth was highly renowned for Riches and great possessions, at such time as warres were in the Holy-Land, where it enioyed very large Seigneuries. It hath likewise (a long time) held by force vnder awfull obedience the Kingdome of Cyprus. And hath bin a fruitfull Garden plot, for yeelding men, as dexterious in Armes, as for Nauigation on the Seas. It was so plentifully peopled with Noble men, whose blouds were high and boyling for Armes, and (consequently) the more capable, of altering and troubling a calme State: that this Seigneurie was constrained in the yeare of Grace Fiue hundred twentie and eight (according to the testimonie of Augustino Iustiniano, in his Historie of Italie) to reduce all the Noble Families (for ease and quiet of the State) to eight and twentie onely, the most Illustrious of that Common-wealth. Ordaining withall, that the rest of the said Noble Families, should put themselues vnder the name and Armes of the elected, eight and twentie, so made choice of, onely for their Antiquitie. And here you may behold their proceeding in this matter.

But in the yeare of my birth, which was One thousand fiue hundred threescore and sixe (when the Ordenance was made by King Charles the ninth, for the yeares beginning the first day of Ianuarie, which began to be put in practise the first day of Ianuarie following, when they accounted threescore and seauen) the auncient subiected Families, thorow want of meanes of ioyning themselues with those eight and twentie; declared to the Seigneurie, that it was vnbeseeming, yea, very vnseasonable and against all equitie, to make them loose the honor and memory of Families, which in elder times had appeared in all Prouinces of the world and were allied to Emperours of Greece, Kings and Princes of Christendome. Whereupon it pleased the Seigneurie, to ordaine, that euery Family, were it poore or rich, should still hold and retaine the name and Armes of their Noble Ancestors. Becausse riches and possessions passed from one House to another, and such as to day are poore and naked of meanes, to morrow may be wealthie and abounding in goods.

Nor doth pouertie abate courage and desire in doing well, but contrariwise we see, that rich men are mounted vp to dignities, first by money, but no merit, hauing alwayes a vile minde, scraping in the earth, and sauouring rightly of the place of their extraction. It was then a most execrable transgression, to deface the memory of so great a number of Families, famous by the vertuous actions of their Noble Ancestours, such as were the Adornes, the Pisagnos, the Zacharias and Bocanegras, Dukes of Geneway, and Princes of the Seas, of whom some tender Slips and yong Plants, were of the Rhodes, against the powers of the Turke; was entreated by those Knights, to take for his Armes those of their Religion. And this was the reason, why he he forsooke the Auncient Armes of the Countes of Sauoye, who caried (after Hugh of Saxonie) D'Argent à l'Aigle esploye de Sable charge en l'Estomach de Gueules au Cheual gay tourne d'Argent; party de faisce d'Or & de Sable de Six pieces à la Coronne de Rue de Synople, perie en Bande: And tooke the Armes of the Religion of Rhodes, which are De Gueules a la plaine Croix d'Argent. The youngest Sonnes of Sauoye tooke (with the same Crosse) vne Bande Componnee d'Or et de Sable. With the said Crosse Amadis tooke this word, as a deuise, F E R T, euery Letter supplying the place of an intire word, to say Fortitudo Eius Rhodum Tenuit: His Power Supported Rhodes. He died in Auignion, whether was then transferred the Holy Seate, in the yeare, One thousand, three hundred, twenty and three: leauing for Successour his Eldest Sonne.

The Armes of Rhodes taken by Amadis, and his worde added.

XVI. Edward, Counte of Sauoye, Duke of Chablais and of Augusta. By Mary, Daughter to the Duke of Bourgongne; Qui portoit Bande d'Or & d'Azur de Six pieces a la bordure de Gueules: He left but one Daughter Ioane or Iane, Wife to the Duke of Bretaigne.

So that by death of the said Edward, happening in the yeare, One thousand, three hundred, twenty nine, his second Brother

XVII. Aymon was Counte of Sauoye, Duke of Chablays and of Augusta: Who by his Wife Yoland of Montferrat, had two Sonnes, and as many Daughters.

Blanche, Wife to the Duke of Millayne:
And Katharine.
The Sonnes were
John: And

XVIII. Amadis, Fifte of the name, called the Greene Counte of Sauoye, was Duke of Chablais and of Augusta by the death of his Father, happening in Anno, One Thousand, three Hundred, forty and three. By his First Wife Margaret of Cyprus, hee had no issue. By Bonna of Bourbon, Sister to the Duke of Bourbon, Authour of the Order of the Thistle, Lewes, he had two Sonnes

Lewes: And
Amadis the Sixt.

Amadis the Fift took delight to go alwayes attired in Greene, a couller best becomming amourous persons, and whereof he was sirnamed. This man was the Authour of the Order of the Annuntiation, Whereof we shall haue occasion to speake more heereafter. He died in the yeare, One thousand, three hundred, fourescore and three, leauing the Succession to his Sonne

XIX. Amadis, called the Red, Sixt of the name. It was to this man, that the Counte of Prouence engaged the County of Nice, which the Dukes of Sauoye haue kept to this present. The Armes of the Countie of Nice are D'Argent à vne Montagne de Sable à l'Aigle de Gueules esleue dessus. He tooke to Wife Bonna de Berry (Qui portoit de France à la Bordure engreslee de Gueules) Second daughter to Monsieur Iohn of France, Duke of Berry and of Auuergne, Brother to King Charles the Fift, & Iane, Daughter to the Count of Armaignack: and in this mariage was borne one Sonne and two Daughters.

Bonna, Wife to the Prince of Piedmont of Achaia, and of Morea, Qui portoit de Gueules à la croix plasne d'Argent à la Bande d'Azur: And Iane, Wife to the Marquesse of Montferrat.

The Sonne was

Amadis, Scauenth of the name, Count of Sauoye by the death of his Father, which happened on the day of All Saints, Anno, One thousand, foure hundred, fourescore and thirteene. He had to Wife Margaret of Bourgongne, Eldest Daughter to Monsieur Phillip of France, Duke of Bourgongne, called the Hardie, Qui Portoit Seme de France à la Bordure de Gueules, Escartele de l'Ancienne Bourgongne, qui estoit Bande d'Or & d'Azur de Six pieces à la Bordure de Gueules.

Of Counte, as formerly he was, he was made the First Duke of Sauoye by the Emperour Sigismond, who would needes make this erection in the Citty of Lyons, and on our King Land, who acknowledged none but God only for their Soueraigne in this Kingdome: but the Officers of his Maiestie, constrained the said Emperour Sigismond, to goe and vse his authority out of France, as we haue said elsewhere. This erection of the County of Sauoye into a Dukedome, was done in the yeare of Grace, One Thousand, foure hundred, and seauenteene.

At the age of sixe and fifty yeares, he lost his Wife, by whom he had foure Daughters, and fiue Sonnes.

Mary, Wife to the Duke of Millayne.

Margaret, who was not married. Another

Margaret, thrise married. First to the King of Naples and Sicilie, of the House of Anion. Secondly to the Duke of Bauaris: And lastly to the Duke of Wirtemberg, who haue D'Or a Trois Cornes de Cerf perie en Fesses de Sable.

The Sonnes were

Amadis, Prince of Piedmont.

Phillip, Counte de Genenois, Comes Genennarum, without any issue

Anthony the First, without issue.

Anthony the Second, issue-lesse also:
And Lewes, Duke.

Hauing thus lost his Wife, and seeing himselfe charged with Children, being now aged sixe and fifty yeares: he resolued to forsake the World, and therwithall, to surrender his Estates and Seigneuries, to the Gouernement of Lewis his Eldest Sonne, in the yeare, One thousand foure hundred, thirty and nine. He made his retreate to Ripaille, a solitarie place, a Priorie of the Order of Saint Maurice, formerly founded by his Predecessours, and by him rebuilte vpon the Lake of Geneua, about halfe a mile from the Towne of Tholon. It was the same Duke Amadis the Seauenth, that tooke the habite and cloathing of an Hermite, of the Order of Saint Maurice, as we will further relate, vsing the plaine wordes of Enguerran de Monstrelet, in his History of France.

Grise Robbe, long Mantel, & Chapperon Gru, courte Cornette d'vn pied ou enuiron, & vn Bonnet Vermeil: la Robbe ceinte de Ceinture doree, & par dessus le Mantel Vne Croix D'Or pareille à celle que portoient les Empereurs d'Alemagne. Pour le seruice de sa Personne, & de quelques Seigneurs qui s'estoient confinez auec luy, il retint Vingt de ses Seruiteurs, qui le traictoient mon de racines, & de claire eau de fontaine, viandes & breuuage des anciens Hermites; mais de viandes exquises, & de vins delicieux.

A Graye gowne, long Cloake, and Gray Hood or Chapperon, a short Cornet of a foote long, or thereabout and a Redd Bonnet. The Gowne was guirded with a Golden Girdle, and aboue on the Cloake was A Crosse of Golde, like to that which was worne by the Emperours of Germanie. For the seruice of his person, and of some Lords that were there confined with him, he kept twenty of his Seruants; who fed not on Rootes, and cleare water from the Fountaine, meate and drinke of Auncient Hermites: but on exquisite Viandes, and delicious Wines.

Vpon the life of this Duke Hermite, our Ancestours raised a Prouerbe, very frequent and common among vs Faire Ripaille, Ripaille Fare or Diet, to speake more plaine:

Such a Life as Gluttons desire,
To feede on good Fare, & haue a good fire.
Vie de Goulu,
Faire Gaude-chere, et beau Feu.

This Amadis was elected Pope at the Councill of Basile, (after the deposition of Eugenius the Fourth) and named Foelix the Fift, and maintained himselfe in that title for Nine yeares, Sixe Moneths and Seauen dayes; till forced by the Princes, vnited and assembled, to stifle the Hydra of the Three and Twentieth Schisme: he quitted the Papall dignitie to Pope Nicholas the Fifte, Canonically elected for the peace of the Church, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand, foure hundred, forty and seauen. And this Amadis contented himselfe with the title of Cardinall, Bishop of Sabina, and Legation during his life in Sauoye, and with this Condition, that the Cardinalles made by him, should remaine in that dignity. For this Session, was all Christendome very ioyfull, and in memorie thereof was made this Antique Rithme.

The Duke of Sauoye chosen Pope.

Lux fulsit Mundo, cessit Foelix Nicolao.

Hee died aged Threescore and Nine yeares, and in the yeare of Grace One thousand, foure hundred, fifty and two.

XIX. Lewes, Second of the name, Duke of Sauoye, of Chablais and Augusta, began to Reigne in the life time of his Father, One thousand foure hundred thirty nine. He had espoused in the City of Chambery (where his Father had established the Senate of Sauoye) Anne, the only Daughter to Iohn of Lusignan, King of Ierusalem, Armenia and Cyprus. And in this Mariage were borne Nine Sonnes, and Seauen Daughters, with whom we will beginne.

Anne, neuer Maried.

Charlote, Queene of France, Second Wife to King Lewes the Eleauenth: of whom the Portraites (made according to life) are to be seene in the Glasse windowe ouer the high Altar in the Church of the Sisters of Aue Maria at Paris.

Margaret, Wife to the Marquesse of Montferrat.

Bonna, Wife to the Duke of Millayne.

Agnes

Mary: And

Iane.

The Sonnes were

Iohn Amadis.

Phillip the second had (beside) a naturall Sonne

Rene, who made his fortunes in France, where he was Great Maister, Knight of the Order of Saint Michael, Gouernour of Prouence vnder King Frances the first, Count of Beaufort and of Villars. Of this Bastard Sonne of Sauoye, are descended the Houses of the Counts of Tendes, and Marquesse de Villars. Il portoit de Sauoye (which is of Malta) Escartele de Constantinople, qui est de Gueulles à l'Aigle esploye d'Or, Contre-Escartele de Tendes, qui est de Gueulles au Chef d'Or (in regard of Anne de Lascaris his wife, Counteesse of Tendes, descended from the last Christian Emperors of Constantinople) à la Bande en Cotice d'Azur brochant sur le tout. Before him there was dwelling in France

Phillip of Sauoye, Duke de Nemours, and Prince de Geneuois: who tooke to wife Charlote of Orleans, daughter to Lewes of Orleans, Duke of Longueuille: And of this mariage issued

Iames, Duke de Geneuois, and de Nemours: And Iane or Ioane, wife to Nicholas of Lorraine, who was Count of Vaudemont; Marquesse of Nomeny, &c.

And of this Marriage came

Louisa, Queene of France, wife to Henry the third, King of France, and of Poland of sacred memory.

Phillip Emanuel of Lorraine, Duke de Mercoeury, and of Pont-Teure, Peere of France, Marquesse of Nomeny, Knight of the Kings two Orders, and Lord Gouernour of Bretaigne.

N. wife in first mariage to Anne, Duke de Ioyeuse, Peere and Admirall of France: And in second Nuptials to Frances of Luxembourg, Duke de Pigney, and Peere of France.

In the yeare One thouſand fiue hundred and ſixteene, King Frances the firſt began to warre in Sauoye, and the Lands of Piedmont, which he auouched to belong to him, in the right of Madame Louiſa of Sauoye his Mother, who being of the firſt Bed, ought to ſucceede in the ſaid Seigneuries, by the death of Duke Phillebert his Brother, and to precede Charles the third, who was deſpoyled of the moſt part of the pretended Lands, and dyed at Vercellis, aged threeſcore and ſeauen yeares, Anno One thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and foure, leauing for Succeſſour (by the death of his Bretheren) his eldeſt Sonne XXVII. Emanuel Phillebert, nouriſhed (during his yonger yeares) in the Court of the Emperour Charles the fift, King of Spaine.

By the vnhappie Treatie of Peace, made betweene King Henry the ſecond, and Dom Phillip the ſecond, King of Spain at Chaſteau-Chambreſis, the third day of Aprill, One thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and nine, after the Feaſt of Eaſter: the King acquitted, rendered and releaſed to the King of Spaine, theſe places, Townes and Caſtels of Thionuille (Theodonis Villa) Marienbourg; Yuoy; Danuilliers; Mommedy; Heſdin and her Bailiwicke; the Countie of Charolois in the Duchie of Bourgongne, of the Homage and Iuriſdiction of the Crowne of France; the Citie of Valentia in the Dukedome of Millayne: with all the Fortifications which our Kings had made for Millaine, at vncredible expences. And the King of Spaine rendered to vs but Saint Quentins, Le Catelet and Hames.

To the Duke of Mantua, all the Marquiſate of Montferrat.

To the Duke of Florence, the Valley of Montalſin, and thoſe places which the King held in Tuſcanie, and in the Eſtate of Sienna.

By this miſerable Treatie, hurtfull to France, the King receiued into Grace, thoſe of Geneway, his mortall enemies, who had rebelled ſo oftentimes, and yet brought ſtill vnder our Kings obedience. Surrendring alſo to them, all the places which he held in the Iſle of Corſica, without demoliſhing any thing there.

Euery one well knoweth, that the Marquiſate of Saluces hath alwayes reſted on Daulphine, which belongeth to the Monarches of the Lillies, and is the title of their firſt borne Sons: and that to to Madam Louiſa, Great Mother to the ſaid King Henry the ſecond, appertained the Dukedome of Sauoye and Piedmont, wherof King Frances the firſt made himſelfe Maiſter, and the Poſſeſſion ſtill continued by the ſame King Henry the ſecond. But yet, thorow bad counſell, and notwithſtanding the proteſtations and remonſtrances of the Courts of Parliament; of the very greateſt Lords and Captaines of France; of the Gouernors of the places, as Montferrat, Tuſcanie, Millayne, Geneway, Piedmont, Saluces: Breſſia and Sauoye (which in thoſe times then were places of Honour, where the Nobilitie of France exerciſed their deſire of doing well, to faſhion and make themſelues apt for Armes) and which was then thought neceſſary (for the good of France) to yeelde recompence to the Duke of Sauoye, with Lands and Seigneuries ſeated in the midſt of France. Notwithſtanding all theſe Remonſtrances and proteſtations, the King (in a raſh and ruinating prodigalitie, and hurtfull for euer to France) ſurrendered to the ſaid Duke Emanuell Phillebert, three hundred as well Townes, as Caſtles & ſtrongeſt places in the Dukedome of Sauoye; the Counties of Breſcia and of Baugie; of Moriana, Tarentaiſa; the Vicariat of Barcelonetta; the Principalitie of Piedmont, and the Countie of Aſt, the auncient Patrimonie of the Houſe of Orleans. Nothing remaining to the Crowne of France, of all her famous Conqueſts in Italie, but onely fiue poore places, as namely, the Townes and Caſtles of Turine, Quiers, Pigneroll, and Ville-Neufue d'Aſt, with their Commands.

By which vnfortunate Treatie, the ſaid Duke Emanuel Phillebert tooke to wife Madam Margaret of France, onely Siſter to King Henry the ſecond; to whom was giuen for maintenance (during her life) the Duchie of Berry, and three hundred thouſand Crownes of ready Money at her Marriage; wherein was borne their onely Sonne

Charles Emanuel, Duke.

Phillip Emanuel dyed at Turine the thirtieth day of Auguſt, Anno One thouſand fiue hundred & foureſcore, leauing for Succeſſour his onely Son

XXVIII. Charles Emanuel, fourth of the name, a Martiall Prince and a Warriour, who in the yeare One thouſand fiue hundred foureſcore and fiue, tooke to wife the Infanta of Spaine, Katharine, Daughter to the King of Spaine Dom Phillip the ſecond, and Madam Iſabella of France, Daughter to King Henry the ſecond. And of this marriage are iſſued and deſcended nine Children

The ſame Duke of Sauoye, in the yeare foureſcore and eight, when France (by the practiſes of a furious madded League) ſaw it ſelfe on all ſides ſwarming with Soudiours, by an intelligence of the conſpiring purſuers, well wadged with Spaniſh Piſtoles, poſſeſſed themſelues of the Marquiſate of Saluces againſt the Crowne of France, with purpoſe to proceede for conquering Prouence, and make ſeizure on Daulphine. The eaſineſſe of inuading Saluces, made him ſtampe Moneyes of Ducates, with a new figure and Legend, on the one ſide his picture, and for a Legend round about, his name, titles and the yeare. On the other ſide was a Centaure, trampling his feete vpon a Crowne, with this word Oportune. When the troubles of the League ouerawed France.

King Henry the third, of holy memory, and Mirrour of good Princes, ſunke vnder the burden of ſo bloudy a conſpiracie, executed vpon his State & life, his Reigne full of troubles, and ſo was his Succeſſour King Henry the Great: all which gaue way and time to the Duke, both to maintaine and conſerue his Conqueſt. Vntill the Treatie of Veruines in Piccardie, made betweene his moſt Chriſtian Maieſtie, and the Catholique King, wherein the Duke entreated to be comprehended. Which Treatie beareth date the eight day of Iune, One thouſand fiue hundred foureſcore and eighteene, wherein was namely ſignified by the ninth Article. The Treatie at Veruins in Anno 1598.

Que pour la reſtitution du Marquiſate de Saluces, & autres differends entre le Roy, & le Duc; ils s'en remettoient au iugement & arbitrage de noſtre Sainct Pere le Pape Clement Clement Huictieſme, pour les iuger & decider dans vn An.

That for the reſtitution of the Marquiſate of Saluces, and other differences betweene the King and Duke: they ſhould commit them to the arbitrage and iudgement of the Holy Father the Pope, Clement the eight, to deſcide and iudge them within a yeare ſpace.

The Duke perſwading himſelfe, that he ſhould ſooner (and better) facilitate his affaires in perſon, came to the Court of France the thirteenth day of December, ending the yeare foureſcore and nineteene, and was lodged in the Hoſtell of Nemours at Paris, where he remained vntill the firſt day of March, being Aſhwednesday in the yeare One thouſand ſixe hundred. The Duke at his departure promiſed the King, that in exchange for the Marquiſate of Saluces, he would giue him the Counties of Breſcia and Baugie. Which being not executed within compaſſe of the time prefixed; in the Moneth of Auguſt following, the King iourned to Breſcia, and into Sauoye, whereof he poſſeſſed himſelfe within leſſe then ſixe weekes, not meeting with any to make reſiſtance. And perforce the Duke was conſtrained, by mediation of the Pope, and of his Legate in Sauoye the Cardinall Aldobrandine, to come to an agreement. And thereupon a Treatie was made betweene the King and Duke, in the Citie of Lyons the tenth day of Ianuarie, in the yeare One thouſand ſixe hundred and one; Where the Duke yeelded and tranſported to the moſt Chriſtian King, and to his Succeſſours the Kings of France, in manner and forme following.

The Duke of Sauoye his comming to Paris.

The Kings ſucceſſe in Sauoy.

A Breuiate of the Treatie at Lyons, betweene the King of France, Henry the Great, and the Duke of Sauoye.

Et que pour la commodité du paſſage du Pont de Grezin reſerué par le Duc, ledit Duc payeroit à ſa Maieſté dans ſa Ville de Lyon la ſomme de Cent Mille Eſcus, de trois Francs piece, monnoye de France, ou la valeur.

Moyennant ceſdites Ceſſions & Tranſports, & toute l'Artillerie, Poudres, & Munitions conquiſes, qui demeureront entierement à ſa Maieſté, ledit Sieur Roy ſe contente pour le bien de la Paix, delaiſſer & tranſporter au Sieur Duc, luy cede & tranſporte à luy ſes Heritiers & Succeſſeurs tous les Droicts, Noms, Raiſons, & Actions, & generalement tout ce qui peut eſtre pretendu par les Roys & Dauphins de France, à cauſe du Marquiſat de Saluces, ſes appartenances & dependances, enſemble ſur les places de Cental, de Mont, & Rocque-Sparuiere, uiere, ſans en rien retenir & reſeruer. Et a ledit Sieur Roy quitte & remis audit Sieur Duc toute l'Artellerie & Munitions qui furent trouuees eſdites places du Marquiſat de Saluces en l'Annee Mille Cinq Cents Quatre Vingts & Huict.

Sa Maieſté remet pareillement audit Sieur Duc les Places & Chaſteaux de Mommelian, & de Chambery, & tout ce qui a eſte pris ſur ledit Duc, depuis ladite Annee Quatre-Vingts & Huict, & en ce dernier Voyage par ſa Maieſté.

ALL the Countreyes and Seigneuries of Breſcia, Baugie and Veromey, and generally all that which appertaineth to him, ſo farre as to the Riuer of Roſne, and it ſelfe therein comprised: So that all the ſaid Riuer of Roſne, from the iſſuing forth of Geneua, ſhall be to the Kingdome of France, and belong to our Lord the King, and to his Succeſſours. The ſaid Countries are yeelded as aboue named, with all their appurtenances and dependances, as well in Soueraignty, Iuſtice, Seigneurie, Vaſſailes and Subiects; as alſo all rights, Names, Reaſons and Actions whatſoeuer, without reſeruing any thing, demoliſhing or retaining.

The ſaid Duke likewiſe relinquiſhed to his Maieſtie, and to his Succeſſours, the Baronnie and Baylinwicke of Gex, with all the appurtenances and dependances; and ouer and beyond the Roſne, the places, Lands and Villages Dayrie, Chauſſy, Pont-Darle, Seyſſell, Annully, Chaua, and Pont-Chaſtell, with their Soueraignties, Iuſtice, Seigneurie, and all Rights which he may or might haue in all thoſe yeelded places, and ouer the dwellers in them. All which ſurrendred places, ſhall be and remaine united and incorporated to the Crowne of France, they ſhall be reputed as Demaine and Patrimonie thereof; from which they ſhall not be ſeperated, by any occaſion or ſuggeſtion whatſoeuer.

The ſaid Duke ſhall reſtore to his Maieſtie the place, Worth and Caſtle-wicke of Chaſteau Daulphine, with the Tower du Pont, and that which is vſurped by the ſaid Duke and his people, dependants vpon Daulphine; without demolliſhing any thing, weakening or endamaging them in any ſort: and ſhall relinquiſh all the Artillerie, Powder, Bullets, and other munitions of warre, being within the places ſurrendred.

He ſhall deliuer the Cittadell of Bourg in Breſcia, with all the Pieces and munitions, without taking, demolliſhing and endamaging any thing: he ſhall cauſe to be demolliſhed the Fort of Beche-Daulphine. And that for commoditie of the paſſage from Pont de Grezin, reſerued by the Duke; the ſaid Duke ſhall pay to his Maieſtie within the Citie of Lyons, the ſumme of an hundred thouſand Crownes, of three Francs a piece, money of France, or the value of them.

Immediating theſe grants and tranſports, and all the Artillerie, Powder and conquerred Munitions, which ſhall remaine intirely to his Maeſty: the ſaid King contenteth himſelfe, for the good of Peace, to leaue and tranſport to the Lord Duke, he yeeldeth and tranſporteth to him, his heires and Succeſſours, all the Rights, Names, Reaſons and Actions, and generally all that may be pretended by the Kings and Daulphines of France, in regard of the Marquiſate of Saluces, her appurtenances and dependances; together with the places of Cental, de Mont, and Rocque-Sparuiere, without detaining or reſeruing any thing. And to our Lord the King is acquitted and releaſed by the ſaid Lord Duke, all the Artillerie and Munitions, which were found in the places of the Marquiſate of Saluces, in the yeare One thouſand ſiue hundred foureſcore and eight.

His Maieſtie alſo remitteth to the ſame Lord Duke, the places of Mommelian, and of Chambery, with all that which is taken from the Duke, ſince the yeare foureſcore and eight, and in this laſt Voyage by his Maieſtie.

This Treatie was ratified by the Duke at Lyons, in the beginning of the Moneth of March, in the ſame yeare ſixe hundred and one, and afterward at Turine by the ſame Duke, in the Moneth of September following: And by his Maieſtie in the Church of the Celeſtines at Paris, on Monday the ſecond of December, in the ſame yeare ſixe hundred and one. Since which ratification, our Kings and the Duke haue continued peaceable Lords and poſſeſſours of their enterchanges.

Confirmation of this Treaty on either ſide.

The King hauing in ſo ſhort a while conquered Sauoye, cauſed Coine to be ſtampt of Gold and Siluer: on the one ſide was his Image, name, titles and yeare for the Legend. And on the other a Hercules, trampling a Centaure vnder his feete, and exalting a Crowne with one of his hands: and for the ſoule of this deuiſe Opportunius, tunius, in exchange of that, forged and ſtamped by the Duke, in the yeare foure-ſcore and eight.

CHAP. V.

The Inſtitution of the Order of the Annuntiation.

Loue-lookes or Loue-bands

WE haue formerly made knowne to you, that Amadæus, fift of the name, called the Greene, Count of Sauoye, Inſtituted the Millitarie Order of the Sparres of Loue (afterward called of the Annuntiation) in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand three hundred fiftie and fiue. This Count hauing receiued of his Lady the fauour of a Bracelet, made of the treſſes of her Haire, and knit in Loue knots: eſtabliſhed thereon this Order of Knighthood. To celebrate the firſt Chapter on the Feaſt day of Saint Maurice (Patron of Sauoye) which fell the two and twentieth day of September, the ſame yeare of this Inſtitution, and ſo ſtill continually doth:

He compoſed it to conſiſt of fifteene Knights, comprehending himſelfe as chiefe and Soueraigne Great Maiſter, and his Succeſſours the Counts of Sauoye after him. The firſt Knights thereof were

The firſt Knights of the Order.

Amadis, Founder of the ſaid Order.
Amadis, Count of Geneua.
Anthony, Lord of Beaujeu.
Hugh de Chalon, Lord of Arlay.
Amadis of Geneua.
John of Vienna, Admirall of France.
William de Grandzon.
William de Chalamon.
Rowland de Veyſſy a Bourbonnois.
Stephen, Baſtard of La Baume.
Caſpard de Monmeur.
Earle du Foras.
Thennard de Menthen.
Amadis Bennard. And
Richard Muſard, an Engliſhman.

The compoſure of the Collar for the Order.

The Collar of this Order was compoſed of Roſes of Gold, enamelled with Red and White, ioyned togeather by Ties and Knots of Loue of Haire colour Silke, all theſe Colours and Deuiſes being dedicated to Madam Venus. Within theſe Loue-knots were enterlaced foure Letters F. E. R. T. a deuiſe and noate neceſſary for the Champions of Mars and Venus, whom the Painters (to this effect) haue coupled togeather, couered with ſoft and delicate Loue-knots, and in that manner expoſed to the view of the Gods.

The meaning of the foure Letters.

F. E. R. T. Frapez, Entrez, Rompez, Tout. But more honeſtly, this deuiſe is, and may well be vnderſtood, concerning the deuoire of a braue Knight, fighting in the Barriers, or in a Tournament, which our auncient French vſed to call Iouſts. At the end of the Collar, vpon the Breſt hung an Ouall of Gold, enamelled likewiſe with the Colours Redde and White; and in the Ouall, the Knight Saint Maurice on Horſeback.

Eſtabliſhed there-

Saint Eucherius, Biſhop of Lyons enſtructeth vs, that Maximianus, hauing bin aſſociated in the Empire by Diocleſian, came into the Gaules with a powerfull Armie, to reduce to termes of dutie and obedience the Gaules, called Bagaudes, people of the Woods, which had rebelled againſt the Romaine Empire, vnder the conduct of Amandus and Aelianus. Their principall Fortreſſe was in the place, which at this preſent is called Saint Mor des Foſſez, about two miles from Paris, a Monaſtery built vnder the Reigne of King Clouis the ſecond, on the auncient ruines of the Caſtle called Caſtrum Bagaudarum.

With the Armie of Maximianus was the Legion of Thebes, a Citie in Aegypt, conſtant conſtant and compoſed (as well as the reſt) of Sixe thouſand ſixe hundred threeſcore and ſixe Souldiers, ouer whom was Campe-Maiſter Mauritius, a braue and valiant Knight, and for Corps d'Eſquadre or Corporals Exuperius, Candidus, Victor, Innocentius and Vidalius, giuen for Councellours to Mauritius. This Legion was Chriſtian, and in that Faith confirmed by Pope Marcellus.

Maurice and his Legion leaue all the reſt.

The Romaine Armie hauing paſt the Citie of Lyons, and the Countrey of Valois, Maximianus cauſed a generall Muſter to be made, and after that, a generall Sacrifice to his pretended gods: Which being heard by Saint Maurice, and his Legion: they withdrew themſelues thence ſpeedily, higher vpon the Marches of Gaule, to the place called Agaunum.

The Countrey of Valois is about foure daies iourney in length, from the Weſt to the Eaſt, beginning from Mont de la Fourche, ſo farre as to Saint Maurice in Chablais. This generall Muſter of the Romain Armie was made on the Plaines of Syon, ſome few miles from whence, is the Bourrough Town of [a] Octodurum: whereat is a Caſtle with a Bridge made of Stone, vnder which runneth the Riuer of Roſne. In this place it is, where the Countrey of Valois encloſeth and ſhutteth vp it ſelfe, by meanes of the Gate of the Bridge, which hath no more but one Arche onely. Without which, the high-way forketh it ſelfe in twaine, the one Northward, leading to the Countie of Aelen, gouerned by the Canton of Bearne, and of which Countie the Inhabitants were heretofore knowne by the name of [b] Antuates. The other high-way conducteth onward on the left hand, and goeth directly into the Duchie of Chablois, the people whereof were in elder times named [c] Allobroges, whom we tearme Sauoyars.

[a] The Citie of Martinach in lower Valois.

[b] Antuates were people of Vaud in Sauoye.

[c] People of Prouence, containing Sauoy & Dauphine & in the nether Valois.

At the deſcending from this ſmall Stone Bridge, is the territorie and Lands of Agaunum, auncietly called the Bourrough of the Veragrians, [d] Vicus Veragrorum: And about a Stones caſt from thence, is the place where the Legion of Thebes endured Martyrdome, Saint Maurice and his Companions (chiefe Commanders of the Bands) being firſt decimated among the Tennes, and then to haue their heads ſmitten off, by the command of Mazimianus; who beholding their conſtancie in the Faith of Chriſt Ieſus, cauſed the whole Legion to taſte the edge of the Sword, by the groſſe multitude of his Idolatrous Armie. Which Martyrdome happened in the yeare of Grace Three hundred and fiue, the fiue and twentie day of September. The Riuer of Roſne, for the length of fiue or ſixe miles, and the Snowes on the Alpie Mountaines, were dyed and coloured Redde, with the Crimoſine Blood of thoſe glorious Martyres: And the Songs of ioy and reioycing vſed among them, in animating one another to endure death with inuincible courage; ſweetely reſounding from the hollowes of the Mountaines, aſcended vp as ſacred Incenſe to heauen.

[d] Vicus Veragrorum and all his Legion.

Hortantes ſe clade ſuâ ſic ire ſub Aſtra.
Alter in alterius cæde natauit Heros.

Audiuit rapidas Rhodani fons ſanguinis vndas,
Tinxit & Alpinas ira cruenta niues.

So ſaith the Biſhop of Poictiers Fortunatus, in his ſecond Booke and fifteenth Poeme De Sanctis Agaunenſibus. The King of Bourgongne Sigiſmond, cauſed to be cut and hewen within the Rocke, the Monaſterie called Saint Maurice, ſince then augmented by our Kings, and the Biſhops of France. But come we now to the Order of Saint Maurice. The Honor and the Statutes of this Order, were augmented and encreaſed by the firſt Duke of Sauoye Amadis, ſeauenth of the name, which was Pope Fælix: who inſtead of the name of the Order of Loue-Knots, would haue it to be called The Order of the Annuntiation of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, whoſe figure he fixed at the end of the Collar, in place of the Image of Saint Maurice. He changed likewiſe the Loue-Ties of Silke, into Chainets of Gold, charged with foure Letters, F.E.R.T. and gaue them the Interpretation, according to the Deuiſe of Amadis the Great, Fortitudo eius Rhodum tenuit. This alteration changed in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand foure hundred thirtie and foure.

The Monaſterie of S. Maurice cut in a Rocke.

How the Order came to be ſo called.

There are two Collars belonging to this Order. This Collar is worne on high Feſtiuals, and dayes of Ceremonies: But the common ſeruice for daily wearing. I haue ſeene them of my Lords the Dukes of Nemours and d'Aumale, and before his returne from Sauoye, thoſe of the Lord Iames Chabont, Count of Saint Maurice, Ambaſſadour of Sauoye, Knight of the ſaid Order: Qui portoit d'Azur à Trois Fleurs de Lys d'Argent 2 & 1. au Chef d'Argent au Lyon naiſſant de Sable.

Concerning the great Chaine or Collar of the Order.

The great Collar of the Order, containeth in weight two hundred and fiftie Crownes of Gold, or thereabout, in bredth two fingers and an halfe, compoſed with Roſes of Gold, ſome enamelled with Redde, and others with White. Among them are the Loue-knots of Gold, without enamelling, and all Cleched (for the Roſes are full and maſſie) and betweene the Loue-knots are enterlaced the Deuiſe F E R T. in olde Rubricke Capitall Letters, Cleched alſo, one enamelled with White, and the other Redde, as here you may behold the forme of them FERT.

The deſcription of Quall hanging at the Collar.

At the end of the Roſe, hanging directly vpon the Breaſt, are fattened three Chaines of Gold, carying an Quall Cleched in Knots of Loue, enamelled with White, and within the Quall is the Salutation of the Angell, holding a Scepter, and ſtanding vpright; but the Virgin kneeling and leaning on her Oratorie. Aloft in the Quall houereth a Doue, enamelled with White: but the two other Images are enamelled with all Colours.

The leſſer Collar is like a Gordget or Neck-piece, containing two fingers in bredth, of pure fine Gold, of the weight of an hundred Crownes, or thereabout, whereon in ſmall Letters (of the old faſhion) neere one another, is the ſame word, but not in Capitall Letters fert, releuated with White enammilling, but betweene each word is the Letter S. made firme likewiſe with white enammell, and vpon the Breaſt an Quall, like to that of the Great Collar of the Order. It is faſtened about the neck with a Claſpe and Pin of Gold

Now, as concerning the Armes of Sauoye, they are to be ſeene at Paris, on the great Gate of the Hoſtall of Nemours, the firſt and fourth whereof are altogether alike, as thus: De Gueulles au Cheual Gay tourne d'Argent, party de face d'Or & de Sable de ſix pieces à vne Coronne de Rue perye en Bande de Synople (which are the auncient and Moderne Armes of the Saxon Dukes) Ente en poincte d'Argent à Trois tuyts de fourreaux d'Eſpee de Gueulles 2 & 1. The ſecond Quarter of Chablais; which is D'Argent ſeme de Billettes de Sable au Lyon de meſme. The third of Auguſta, which is De Sable au Lyon d'Argent langue & arme de Gueulles, & ſur le Tout de Malta.

I haue ſeene ſome other much more charged, as that of the Kingdome of Cyprus, of Piedmont, Suze and Saluces (and of Counties & Seigneuries, exchanged by the Treatie of Sixe hundred and one, for the Marquiſate of Saluces) to wit

De Breſſe, qui eſt d'Argent à la Bande d'Azur, à Deux Lyons rampants de meſme, l'vn en Chef, & l'autre en pointe.

De Baugie, qui eſt de Gueulles au Lyon d'Ermines Coronne & Arme d'Or.

De Veromey, pale d'Argent & d'Azur au Lyon de Gueulles Coronne, Lampaſſe & Arme d'Or.

Bailliage de Gex, Qui ſont d'Azur à ſix Morailles d'Or liees d'Argent, au Chef d'Argent à Lyon naiſſant de Gueulles.

Which foure Counties and Seigneuries, are at this preſent of the Crowne of France, ſo conſequently are the Armes of them cut from the Eſcutcheon of Sauoye, the Creſt and Supporters, are the ſame borne by the Dukes of Nemours, formerly deſcribed.

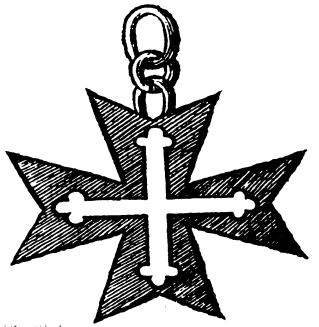
CHAP. VI.



The Inſtitution of the Orders of Saint Maurice and of Saint Lazarus in Sauoye.

Croix des Ordres de Sainct Morice & de Sainct Lazare en Sauoye.

VEr and beſide the Order of the Annuntiation, which is the Great & Principall of State in Sauoye, there hath yet bin known Knights of Saint Maurice and of Saint Lazarus, who carrie both the Croſſes together; and ſome other beſide, that weare their Croſſe ſeperate, and diſtinguiſhed by it ſelfe.

At what time the Order of Saint Maurice began.

As for them of Saint Maurice, their beginning was in the yeare One thouſand foure hundred and fortie, when the firſt Duke of Sauoye Amadis, ſeauenth of the name (afterward Pope Fælix) hauing made his retreate into the Deſart of Ripaille, heretofore obſerued; Inſtituted The Order of Hermites of Saint Maurice, as well to preſerue the memory of that valiant and couragious Knight (inuincible for Ieſus Chriſt and Tutelarie Patron of the Eſtate of Sauoye:) As of the Lance and Ring of the ſame Saint, the eſſentiall Roates of Knighthood; paſſing from hand to hand by the Kings of Bourgongne, in the Illuſtrious Houſe of the Princes of Sauoye.

The Habite worne by theſe Knights of S. Maurice.

The Knights of this Order were habited in the manner formerly obſerued. A Gray Gowne & Chapperon, a Caſſocke of the ſame, guirded with a golden Girdle, Sleeues and Sleeues of Red Chamlet, and on the Cloake or Breaſt, a Croſſe Pommettee of Taffatie or white Cloath, but the Generals was of Gold, or elſe in Embroderie. Such a kinde of Habite was giuen by the ſame Amadis to the Knights of his Court, that were retreated with him to the ſaid place of Ripaile, dedicated to the bleſſed Knight Saint Maurice, vnder the Rule of the Father of Religion Saint Auguſtine, a famous Doctour of the Church. And from that time forward, thoſe Hermites were acknowledged by the name, Of Knights of Saint Maurice; but the certaine number of them depended on the Chiefe of the Order.

Of the Order of Saint Lazarus, and antiquitie therof.

Now, concerning the Order of Saint Lazarus, it is of a very auncient Inſtitution. And that whereof ſpeech is vſed in Sauoye, was onely but renewed, in the yeare One thouſand fiue hundred threeſcore & fiue, during the Pontificality of Pope Pius, fourth of the name. For he being a Millainois, made Great Maiſter of this Order of Saint Lazarus, a Gentleman of Millaine (one of his kinſmen very well deriued, and endued with vertue, and of the Houſe, honored by Pope Celeſtine, fourth of the name; by two Cardinals, fiue Biſhops very famous Doctors, beſide Abbots, Commanders and Preſidents in the Senate of Millaine. Lords of Chaſtillon ſur Orona) of whom we ſhall ſpeake hereafter. The ſaid Houſe is ſo much the more renowned, by being built in a pleaſant place, and by the great and worthy Captaine Stilico, which Towne hath euer ſince conſerued the name of Caſtrum Stiliconis, very neerely ſeated to Angleria, renowned alſo by hauing Sourſe and Originall from thoſe auncient Lords of Millaine. This auncient Family of Chaſtillon, Porte de Gueulles au Lyon d'Argent portant de ſes pattes de deuant vn Chaſteau d'Or. Very Noble Armes, howſoeuer they ſpeake of the Sirname. For it is not alwayes an infallible rule, that Armes ſhould correſpond with the name; as Leon, Caſtile, Granada, Galicia and others in Spain, which are Armes f Kingdomes.

Armes of the Family of Chaſtillon.

Chaſteau-Pers, Chaſteau Roux, and a thouſand others in like manner of very Noble Families, are found as well in France, Italie, Germanie and elſewhere, all Armes very Noble, and richly emblazoned.

The ſame Pope Pius, fourth of the name, made (as we haue ſaid) Great Maiſter of the Order of Saint Lazarus in Italie:

Iannot de Chaſtillon, to whom, and to the Knights of the ſame Order, he granted all the auncient Priuiledges, which had formerly bin granted by the holy Fathers his Predeceſſours, to all the Militarie Orders, as well in the Holy-Land, as in Chriſtendome.

Priuiledges granted to the Order.

What Priuiledges were further granted by the Pope Pius Quartus, to the ſame Order.

THat all Benefices ſimple, being in Patronage, either by Foundation or Donation, they might make them Cõmanderies, & enioy them, without leauing their Habit.

That euery Knight of the Order, although he were married, might hold (with the Habite of the Order) a Penſion of fiue hundred Crownes of Gold of the Sun, or the fruites amounting to the like value. And

They were permitted, to retreate the places belonging to their Religion, into any part of Chriſtendome where they would be, amounting to more then a thouſand Hoſpitals, and to become Maiſters of them.

That into this Order no man might be receiued, except he were Noble by the Father and Mothers ſide, in two Races at the leaſt, begotten & borne in lawfull Matrimony, and deſcended of auncient Chriſtians, and not of Turkes or Renegad Apoſtates, nouell Chriſtians, whoſe beliefe was (commonly) wauering and doubtfull.

That he ſhould make proofe of his Nobilitie in the Country of his Birth, or of his Father and Mother, Grandfather and Grandmother Paternall & Maternall: that he is a Gentleman of name, Armes, and of honorable charge.

That he had two hundred Crownes in Rents at the leaſt, & liued Nobly, without medling in Merchandiſe or Yeomanrie, and that both his Predeceſſors and himſelfe are cleere from any noate of infamie.

That he married according to his qualitie, with a Daughter deſcended of a Noble Houſe, and not a widdowed woman.

That he ſhall neither be in his owne houſe, nor walke abroad in publique; without wearing on his Breaſt The Ancred Croſſe of Greene Taffatie or Sattin, worne with eight Points.

That he ſhall ſweare to the Great Maiſter Coniugall Chaſtitie and Monogamie.

That he ſhall haue eſpeciall care of Leaprous diſeaſed people, the point and principall ſubiect of his Order.

That he ſhall daily ſay a Roſarie in Honor of the Sacred Virgin, with fiue and twenti Pater-Noſters, and as many Aue-Maries.

That he ſhall abſtaine from eating fleſh on euery Wedneſday weekely: And Shall Faſt on the Friday or Saturday, as beſt himſelfe pleaſeth.

These Rules and Statutes were preſcribed by the Pope Pius Quartus, to thoſe Knights of Saint Lazarus, being now newly reeſtabliſhed. And their Great Maiſter Dom Iouannot de Chaſtillion being deceaſed at Vercellis, as he was trauailling to aſſiſt and found the building of his Order, in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand fiue hundred hundred threeſcore and twelue; the ſame yeare preſided in the Sacred Seate;

Gregorie, thirteenth of the name, who (before his election) was called Hugo Boncompagno, a Gentleman of Bologna, who bare in Armes De Gueulles au Dragon naiſſant d'Or. This Pope, being willing to maintaine this Order, by Inſtituting a Great Maiſter of the principall Houſe: gaue the Maiſterſhip to the Duke of Sauoye, Phillebert Emanuel, and to his Succeſſours the Dukes of his Stocke and Ligne, by his Buls bearing date in September One thouſand fiue hundred threeſcore and thirteene. In which yeare, and in the Moneth of Aprill, the ſaid Phillebert Emanuel, Duke of Sauoye, cauſed all the Knights of this Order of Saint Lazarus, to appeare at one meeting in the Citie of Nice in Prouence, where he made himſelfe knowne to be the Great Maiſter, taking the Oath of intire Obedience, and to keepe inuiolably the Rule of the Ciſteaux, which Pope Gregorie the thirteenth had preſcribed to this Order.

The Duke of Sauoye made Great Maiſter by the Pope.

He reformed the Statutes of the ſame Order or Religion, whereunto he gaue two Gallies, and diuers Brigandines, for clearing the Coaſts of Italie, being much peſtered with Rouers and Pirates. The Dukes two principall Conuents and Houſes of the Order, are at Nice, and at Thurine, the Capitall Citie for the State of Piedmont, and where the Prince maketh his ordenary abiding. Hauing alwayes for ſeruice of his perſon, the Knights of Saint Lazarus, as his Pages of Honor, Gentlemen of his Chamber, Eſquiers Caruers, Groomes or Quirries of his Stable, Maiſters of the Houſhold, Captaines, Colonels, and prime Officers of his State.

The two chief Houſes of the Order.

The ſame Duke of Sauoye obtained of Pope Gregorie the thirteenth, the vniting of the Religion of Saint Lazarus (vnder the Order of the Ciſteaux) with that of Saint Maurice. So that after this Reunion, both the one and other were acknowledged vnder the name, Of Knights of Saint Maurice and of Saint Lazarus together.

Vniting of the two Orders together.

And yet notwithſtanding, I haue ſeene in Piedmont and Sauoye, yea, and at Paris, when the peace of Vervins was ſworne, in Anno foureſcore and eighteene, and in the Secular yeare ſixe hundred, that Monſieur de Sauoye was there, and many Knights Sauoyans, who did weare on their breaſt and left ſide, the Great White Croſſe Pommettee of Saint Maurice alone, but without any noate of that of Saint Lazarus, whereof they carried not the name.

As for them of Saint Lazarus, vnited with that of Saint Maurice, inſtead of wearing (as they were wont) the Greene Croſſe, according to the faſhion of Malta: after this vnion, they charged in the hart or midſts thereof, another Croſſe pommettee white, to ſhow, that they were Knights of Saint Lazarus, and of Saint Maurice together. But then it is to be vnderſtood, that in Sauoye, the Greene Croſſe of Saint Lazarus had an Orle Blanche, inſtead of that of Saint Lazarus in France (before the Inſtitution of the Order of Mont Carmell, made by King Henry the Great of glorious memory) which was of Greene Taffatie or Sattin, in the ſame manner as that of Malta à vn Orle de Paſſement d'Or.

The Cloakes or Mantles of the Knights of Sauoye (otherwiſe tearmed of Saint Maurice and Saint Lazarus) are of Carnation Taffatie, lined with White Taffatie, and a Cordon with the Taſſell of White & Greene. And the Caſſock or Coate of Armes of Carnation Damaske, or Raſhe of Spaine, died of Scarlet colour, with the Croſſe of the ſaid Orders before and behinde.

The Habites belonging to the Order.

They are diſpenced withall, for eating fleſh on Wedneſdayes, and faſting on Saturdayes, and from daily ſaying the Chappelet of fiue and twenty Pater Noſters, and as many Aue Maries: For the Duke (inſtead thereof) hath giuen them an abridged Pſalter (like to that of the Order of Feſcamp, as we ſay in France) to ſay at euery Canonicall Houre an Antiphonall or Anteme, a Pſalme and a Prayer made for the purpoſe.

Diſpenſation from Faſting.

For direction and Gouernement of theſe Orders, there is a Counſell compoſed of eight auncient Knights, honored with the Titles of Greatneſſe: As Lieutenant Generall to his Highneſſe; High Admirall; Lord Great Chancellour of the Order; Great Conſeruator; and Great Treaſurer, who did all weare the great Croſſe, twiſe fare greater then the common: And the moſt part of theſe Great Commanders, might might be Marqueſſes, Counts and Vicounts. In generall, all theſe Knights carried the title of Dom, inſtead of Brother, which they of Malta ſtill retained. Vnder the Great Treaſurer are thoſe perticular perſons, which keepe receipts of the Leaper and Lazar Houſes, in the Eſtates of Italie and Spaine. For Pope Gregory the thirteenth, ordained by his Buls, that all the Commanderies of the Order of Saint Lazarus, being vnder the Eſtates of all Chriſtan Princes; ſhould be left freely by them to the ſaid Emmanuel Phillebert, and his Succeſſors the Dukes of Sauoye, whom he eſtabliſhed chiefe and Soueraigne Great Maiſters of this Order.

The Ordination of Pope Gregory the thirteenth.

According to this Bull, the ſame Duke Emanuel had the Inueſtiture and the Collation of the Commanderies of the ſame qualitie in Spaine, in the Kingdomes of Naples and Sicilie, in the Eſtate of Millaine, &c. held by the King of Spaine, and the Eſtates and Common-wealths of Italie. But the Duke thinking to doe as much ouer them in the Kingdome of France; King Henry the third, of famous memorie hindered the effecting of it. Becauſe the Chiefe Seate of the ſaid Order being in his Kingdome, the Great Maiſterſhip thereof (in right and equitie) appertained to him, rather then to any other Prince of Chriſtendome, as we haue already formerly approued.

The Interpoſition of the King of France

Now concerning the Vowe of Profeſſion, which was made by the Knights of Saint Maurice and Saint Lazarus, in preſence of the Great Maiſter, vpon the Euangeliſts and Canon of the Maſſe: Here followeth the forme in French, and afterward turned into Engliſh.

A forme of the Vowe.

I E. N. promets à vous Monſeigneur le Sereniſſime Charles Emmanuel Duc de Sauoye, Prince de Piedmont, Grand Maiſtre de la Religion de Sainct Morice, & Sainct Lazare, & à vos Sereniſſimes Succeſſeurs, que le plus deuotement qu'il me ſera poſſible, ie diray tous les iours en l'honneur de Ieſus Chriſt noſtre Redempteur, de la Glorieuſe Vierge Marie, de Sainct Mauriee, & de Sainct Lazare, & de toute la Cour Celeſte de Paradis, le Pſautier abregé, qui m'a eſte ordonne de dire; de ieuſner le Vendredy, ou Samedy, de garder Chaſteté coniugale: Charité, & Hoſpitalité enuers les pauures Lepreux; & tous les Statuts, & Ordonnances faictes & à faire de la Religion: que ie vous ſeray fidele & obeiſſant, & à voſdicts Succeſſeurs: Que ie n'alieneray aucuns biens appartenants aux Commanderies que ie poſſederay, tant par droict de Patronat, qu'autrement: Que ie ne les engageray, ne bailleray en Emphiteoſe, ou autre long-temps, ſans l'expreſſe permiſsion de voſtre Alteſſe, ou d'autre Sereniſsime Grand Maiſtre qui pourra eſtre apres vous, & du Conuent. Ainſi Dieu me ſoit en aide, & ſes Sacrez Euangiles. Amen.

I. N. promiſe to you my Lord the moſt Noble Prince Charles Emanuell, Duke of Sauoy, Prince of Piedmont, Great Maiſter of the Religion of Saint Maurice, and of Saint Lazarus, and to your Gracious Succeſſours, that the moſt deuoutly as is poſſible for me to performe: I will daily ſay (in honour of Ieſus Chriſt our Redeemer; of the glorious Virgin Mary; of Saint Maurice; of Saint Lazarus; and of the whole Celeſtiall Court of Paradiſe) the Pſalter abridged, which is appointed for me to ſay. That I will faſt on the Friday & Saturday; to keepe Coniugall Chaſtitie, Charitie and Hoſpitality for all poore Leapers; with all the Statutes and Ordenances made, and to be made of the Religion. That I will be faithfull and obedient to you, and to your Succeſſours. That I will not alienate any goods belonging to the Commanderies which I ſhall poſſeſſe, as well by right of Patronage, as otherwiſe. That I will not engadge them, nor giue them vpon improuement, or for any long time, without the expreſſe permiſsion of your Highneſſe, or ſuch Honourable Great Maiſter, that ſhall come after you, and of the Conuent: So God be my helpe, and his Holy Euangeliſts. Amen.

CHAP. VII.

A Briefe Diſcourſe, concerning the Originall and Genealogie, of the Dukes of Florence.

The Armes of Florence.

THe Great Dukes of Tuſcanie, whereof Florence is the Capitall Citty, and which beareth for Armes D'Argent à la Fleur de Lys eſpanouie, & ouuerte de Gueules: had their birth and beginning (according to Neſtor and Machiauell, with other Florentine Hiſtorians) from Eurardo de Medicis, a French, Kinght and ordenarie Chamberlaine to our Emperour Charlemaigne, whom he followed into Italie, to vn-neſt the Lombardes and other Strangers, that ouermuch commaunded at Baguetta. This French Knight was entreated by the Citizens of Florence, to deliuer them from the tyranny of a fierce and proud Giant, named Mugellus, whoſe bloody and cruell neighbourhood, made waſte and deſerte all the Countrey. The memorie of this Giant remaineth yet to this preſent, in a ſmall Territorie, ſeated neere to Florence; where the Great Dukes haue a goodly place of pleaſure, called Mugello.

Eurardo de Medicis a French Knight of whom came the Florentines.

Mugellus a cruell Giant ſlaine by Eurard of France in ſingle Combate.

This Giant caried vſually a great heauie Club of yron, whereat hung fiue or ſixe huge Balles of the ſame mettall, wherewith he ſmote downe all paſſengers, without extending any pitty: vntill he was manfully defied, and ſlaine in a ſingle Combate, by Eurard the French Knight, who, to conſerue the remembrance of his good ſucceſſe, obtained of the Emperour Charlemaigne (by an eſpeciall priueledge) L'Eſcu d'Or à Cinq Tourteaux de Gueules, 2. 2. 1. to ſignalize the Balles or Bowles of the Giants yron Club, all freſhly tincturde with his Blood: And from hence it is, that they are ſtill conſerued for Armes to the Illuſtrious Houſe of Medicis.

Some ſay Attila.

Some haue written, that this citty of Florence was builded by the Emperour Charlemaigne, which is contrary to all truth. For it was ruined vtterly by Totila, King of the Hunnes and Gothes, and deſerted by the Lombardes, vntill the time of Charlemaigne, who in the yeare of Grace Eight hundred and two, cauſed it to be engirt with Walls and Towers, and newly re peopled it. Thereto alſo he gaue the Armes formerly emblazoned; as yet is to bee ſeene in the Churches there builded by him, in Honour of Saint Marie, Sirnamed Del Campo, Saint Pedro del Eſcaragio, and others.

Stephanus Pighius, in his Hercules Prodicius, ſpeaking of the walling, and houſes of Florence, built vpon the Riuer of Arno, ſaith. Eas magna ex parte deiecit Totyla Rex Gothorum, Ciuibuſque magnopere incommodauit, deinceps verò à Barbaris aliis, & à Feſulanis admodum exagitata fuit, vt eam Habitatores dereliquerint: quo in ſtatu permanſit, vſque ad noſtræ ſalutis annos Octogintà duos, quo tempore Karolus Magnus Alpes tranſmittit, & eius ambitum cum amplificaſſet, muros eam auxit, in quibus Centum quinquaginta turres, in altitudine centum cubitorum extollebantur, inſtitque vt denuo reſtitueretur: & exinde ſemper euentibus rerum fœliciores experta eſt.

This Citty was named Fluentia, vntill ſuch time as Charlemaigne cauſed it to be re-builded and newe peopled. For then he aboliſhed the memory of her auncient appellation, and ordered, that it ſhould be called Florence, afterward tearmed the Florenza la Bella.

Fayre,

Fayre, by the goodly ſtructure of the houſes and Pallace. Goe we now againe to Eurard de Medicis, whoſe deſcente made their dwelling at Florence.

After the ſaid Eurardo ſucceeded Alemano de Medicis, Father to Siluestro the Gon-fannoniero, that is to ſay, the Captaine Generall of Florence; Father to Vieri, Father of Giacomo; Father of Bernardino; Father of Giouanni, who conquered Luca from them of Piſa; Father of Chariſſimo; Father of Eurardo de Medicis, Second of the name, called the Deuoute, Standard-Bearer of Florence in the yeare of Grace One Thouſand, foure hundred, twenty and three. This man left two Sonnes, that branched this houſe into two ſeuerall Stemmes.

Gonfalonniero de Fiorenza.

Coſimo; And Lorenzo.

Coſimo was called the Great for his vertues, and deſerued the title of Father of his Countrey: who gouerned the Common wealth of Florence during the ſpace of One and thirty yeares, after he had bin repealed from baniſhment. He liued threeſcore and fifteene yeares, and died in the yeare of Grace One thouſand, foure hundred, threeſcore and foure, hauing laid the foundation of the Greatneſſe of his houſe: After whom ſucceeded his Sonne, the true imitatour of his vertues.

When the Houſe of de Medicis began to be Great

Pedro de Medicis, who deceaſſed in the yeare One thouſand, foure hundred, threeſcore and twelue. By Lucretia his wife of Turnabony, he left two Sonnes:

Lorenzo, Sirnamed the Magnifico; And Iuliano, murdered in the Church of Saint Reſtitutus, euen in Maſſe time at the Elevation, in the yeare One thouſand, foure hundred, threeſcore and eighteene, partly contriued againſt him, by the factions of the Lords of Pazzy, Saluiaty and Bandini, the Principalles of the Eſtate of Florence.

This Iuliano was Father to Iulio de Medicis, Cardinall and afterward Pope, by the name of Clement the Seauenth, after the death of his Couſine Pope Leo, Tenth of the name.

Lorenzo the Magnifico, Eldeſt Sonne to Pedro de Medicis, by his Wife Clarissima Vrſini, had three Sonnes.

Pedro.
Giouanni, Cardinall, and afterward Pope Leo, Tenth of the name; And Iuliano de Medicis, Sirnamed the Magnifico.

The Father of theſe Sonnes was called Father of the Muſes, in regard of his intimate loue to Learning, and ſuch as made profeſſion thereof. He collected together an vnſpeakeable number of Greeke Bookes, from all the partes of Aſia, to his incredible coſt and expences. He died in the yeare of Grace One thouſand, foure hundred, foureſcore and twelue, leauing the Gouernement of Florence to his Eldeſt Sonne

A Louer of Learning and learned men.

Pedro, Second of the name, who followed King Charles, Eight of the name, in courſe of his fortunes, going with him to the Conqueſt of his Kingdome of Naples. After his death, he tooke part with King Lewes the Twelfth, who in acknowledgement of the Loue which he bare to the ſaid Pedro, would needes haue him to beare in the Chiefe of his Shield of Armes, Vn Tourteau d'Azur, à Trois Flaurs de Lys d'Or 2. 1. and not one and two, as they are repreſented by ignorant Painters and Engrauers. He and his Brethren were ſo deadly hated and deſpighted by the Florentines, that their heads were ſet at Port-ſale, their houſes, Goods and Libraries robbed and ſpoyled, which cauſed them to forſake the Citty of Florence. This Pedro died at the mouth of the Riuer Garillano, in the yeare of Grace One thouſand, fiue hundred and three, leauing by his wife Alſoncina de Vrſini a Poſthumus Sonne, who was named,

The Armes giuen to Pedro by King Lewes the Twelfth.

Lorenzo. And as for the Brother to this Pedro the Second, named Iuliano, he was brought againe into Florence, by the cunning practiſes and policies of Pope Leo the Tenth, his Brother. He was called the Manifico, in regard of his liberality, and the Magnificent buildings which he raiſed in Florence. By Philiberta of Sauoye, Daughter to Philobert, Duke of Sauoye, and of Nemours, he left one only iſſue: But had a naturall Sonne, named Hippolito de Medicis, who was made Cardinall, and Archbiſhop of Auignion.

How he came to be called the Magnifico.

Lorenzo, the only, and Poſthumus Sonne of Pedro, Second of the name, was created Duke of Vrbin by Pope Leo the Tenth, his vncle by the Fathers ſide; yet it was but in name only, and died in the yeare One thouſand, fiue hundred and nineteene. He tooke to Wife Magdalena, Second Daughter to Iohn of Bologne, and De la Tour, Count of Auuergne and of Lauregais, and of Iane of Bourbon, Siſter to the Count of Vendoſme.

Lorenzo duke of Vrbin.

This Houſe of Bologne caried the Sirname and Armes of De la Tour, which are Teme de France à la Tour d'Argent maſſonnee de Sable. And the Sirname of Bologne, was deriued from one of the Brothers of Godfrey (Sonne to Euſtace, Count of Bologne) the Firſt King of Ieruſalem. The ſame Duke of Vrbin, Father to Queene Katharine, left a naturall Sonne, named Aleſſandro de Medicis, made Prince and Lord of Florence by the Emperour Charles the Fift: by ioyning in mariage with him, his naturall Daughter Margaret of Auſtris. The erection of the Principalitie of Florence from a Seigneurie, was the Fift day of Iuly, One thouſand, fiue hundred, thirty and one. Which Aleſſandro, the Firſt Prince of Florence, reigned but fiue yeares, being murdred by his Couſine Iuliano de Medicis (Husband to Phileberta of Sauoye) returned to Florence, the ſixt day of Ianuary, One thouſand, fiue hundred, thirty ſixe, Iuliano becomming a fugitiue to Venice, died there without iſſue. Cosimo de Medicis, who liuing priuately, and without any Charge in his Pallace at Mugello; vpon tydings of the Assassinate, committed on the person of the Prince Alessandro: collected suddenly together friends of his auncient acquaintance, sleeling them secretly into Florence, and inuested the Pallace where the Senate was assembled, to the end, that they might proceede to the election of a Lord and Prince of the Common-wealth. So that, either by loue or power, he was named Grand Gonfaloniero of Florence, the Ninth day of Ianuary, One thousand, fiue hundred, thirty and sixe. He encreased the Estate of Florence, by the taking and conquest of the Cities of Pisa, Sienna, and the Isle D'Albe, which made it mighty and much feared both by land and Sea. And heereupon it was that the Emperour gaue him the title of Duke of Florence.

The great Priueledge of the House of Toledo.

He made also the mariage betweene him, and Dogna Eleanora of Toledo, Daughter to the Vice-Roy of Naples. This house of Toledo is of the Grandes, as they tearme them in Spayne, the descendants whereof (by antiquity of their Nobility) haue this prerogatiue: To stand with their heads couered in the Kings Chamber, if they be not speaking to him, The Duke of Alua could not attaine thereto, not withstanding all his great Seruices, performed in so many places for the Crowne of Spayne, which made him deserue other things, and to out-run the Court Prouerbe: That he had good legges to keepe him vpright, and his head well furnished with larum watches; as much to say as Coughes; giuing thereby to vnderstand, that he hath a weake or sickly head, whom the King suffereth to be couered in his presence.

Dom Roderick King of the Gothes in Spayne.

Since the time as Dom Roderick, King of the Gothes of Spayne, lost Toledo, vntill it was recouered by the King Dom Alphonso the Sixt (which Interuallum and distance of time was foure hundred yeares, or therabout) the Gothes remayning at Toledo, continued in the Christian Faith, so reporte the Histories of Spayne, and wherein they were as well maintained, as in their degrees and titles of Nobility, by the Moore Kings, to whom they payed yearely certaine duties. Among the Noble Lineages and Families of the Gothes continuing still at Toledo, vnder the State of the Affricans Moores, keeping possession in Spayne; there were eight principally, the most Illustrious and renowned for their Antiquity, and of whom are issued those that beare name of Tolledo: As de Palomequa; de Puerto-Carrero; de Gudielo; de Cernatos; de Roelas; and des Armildes: Families which managed the reduction of this City (the principall of Spayne) in obedience to Alphonso the Sixt.

Eight auncient Honorable Families of the Gothes.

Mozarabes Mixtes Arabes

The Archbishop Dom Roderigo Ximenes, in his History of Spayne, the third Booke, and One and twentieth Chapter, calleth them of these Families, Mozarabes, Mixtes Arabes, to whom the Moores left in Tolledo the Churches of Saint Marke, Saint Luke, Saint Sebastian, Saint Torquatus, Saint Iustus, and of Saint Eulalia of Merida, wherein to this day they celebrate Diuine Seruice, according to the Office of Saint Isidore, called the Gothishe and Mozarabe Office, on the Feaste dayes of the Patrones of the said Churches, which is still continued in the great Church of Tolledo, in the Chappell of the blessed Sacrament of the Altare, builded and founded by the good Archbishop of Tolledo, Fryer Frances Ximenes of Cisneros, a Graye Fryer, and Cardinall of Spayne, who caused the strongest Townes and places in the Kingdome of Navarre to be dismanteled. The same Gothishe Seruice is likewise perfourmed in other Churches of Spayne.

The Gothishe Seruice in many Churches of Spayne.

Let it not seeme then any matter of strangenesse, that these Families should conserue themselues, during the space of foure hundred yeares in puritie of the Christian Faith, and the degree of Nobility, among the impurity and barbarisme of Infidell Moores: considering it is apparant to all Spayne, that long time after, vnder the Reigne of the King Dom Iohn the First, there passed from Affrica into Castille, Christian Families called the Farfanes, Who (by a succession of Ages) had kept their Nobility Nobility and Christian Faith, and many times endured Martyrdome for it in the midst of Affrica.

The famous Families of Tolledo.

The most Illustrious then of these Eight Auncient Families, is that of Tolledo, which beare for Armes: Escheque d'Argent et d'Azur de Seize Poincts.

Two Dukes) contend for priority of Greatnesse.

Cosimo could not content himselfe, to haue the bare Title of Duke of Florence, because (in that quality) he had no other noat, nor any other ranck and sitting, but after Dukes of more auncient creation then he was. Whereupon he laboured the Court of Rome very seriously, to obtaine the Title of Great Duke of Tuscaine. Wherein he was opposed by the Duke of Ferrara, Alphonso d'Este, who maintained, that his predecessours had bin honoured with that Ducall dignity, before all the Princes and Potentates of Italie, the Dukes of Venice only excepted. For

First Dorso, Marquesse of Ferrara, was made Duke of Modena, and of Reggio (in Latine Mutina, et Regium Lepidi) and Prince of the Holy Empire by Frederick the Third,

Alphonso the Second, deceasing without issue in the yeare of Grace One thousand, fiue hundred, fourescore and seauenteene: This Alphonso debated and questioned the case of precedencie and Title, with this Great Duke Cosimo de Medicis. Who made him this Answere: That all the extendure possessed by the Dukes of Ferrara, was brought to a small footes breadth, and without Soueraignty, in regard that the Estate of Ferrara, was a meere Fiefe of the Church (by the donation of Pepin and Charlemaigne, Kings of France) and as for the Duchies of Modena and Reggio, they relied vpon the Empire.

The extendure of the Dukedome of Florence.

Contrariwise, that Cosimo himselfe, was an absolute Prince of his owne estate, whose lands extended aboue Two hundred miles in length, and Fifty miles in breadth in the narrowest passages. And concerning Citties, and townes, there was Florence, the very fairest of all Italie; Pisa; Pistoya; Volterra; Arezzo; the Bourrough of Saint Sepulcher; Cortonna, Mont pulciano; Sienna; Montalcino; Grossetto; Saona Pienca; Massa and Ligorne: beside many other places, Bourgades and Fortresses of no meane fame, with the Isle d'Elbe.

The Duke of Florence winneth the victorie.

Vpon these differences, Pope Pius, Fift of the name, declared by his Bull, that there was difference betweene Dukes of Citties and Townes, and those of Prouinces, to whom the Precedency ought (by right) to belong. And according to this Bull, Cosimo de Medicis was published Great Duke of Tuscane, and (in that qualitie) Crowned by the said Pope Pius Quintus with a wreath of Gold, with Floures and precious Stones most richlie embellished, to the value of Sixescore thousand Crownes of Gold; in the yeare fiue hundred, threescore and nine. In this Ring or Roundure of this Ducall Crowne, was grauen and enchased these words.

Alphonso the last Duke of Ferrara.

The Duke of Ferrara made his recourse to the Emperour Ferdinand, against this Bull of the Pope: by vertue whereof (neuertheless) Cosimo kept still the Title of Great Duke. And to strengthen him the more, within some fewe yeares after, Alliance was wrought betweene these two Dukes: Alphonso maried one of the daughters to Cosimo, and dying (without issue) the last Duke of Ferrara; the Great Duke of Tuscane Ferdinand, is left peaceable possessour in the title of Precedencie, aboue all the Princes of Italie.

Cosimo the Great, made sure the Porte of the Isle d'Elbe, and built a goodly City called Cosmopolis, after his owne name, The Citty of Cosimo, guarded by two Castles thought to be impregnable. And in the City of Pisa he erected a magnificent Arsenall. He was thought to be the very richest Prince of his time, and who at the day of his death (which happened in the yeare, One thousand, fiue hundred, three score and foureteene) left in his Treasury Tenne Millions of Gold in ready Coine, and Two Millions in Precious Stones. He had for Successour his Eldest Sonne, Mary, Queene of France, Wife to King Henry the Great; which Queene is Mother to our King now Reigning, and beareth De Florence, Escartele d'Austriche Moderne.

This Duke Frances being dead without any Heire Masle, in Anno, 1598, the Great Dukedome of Tuscanie came to his Brother,

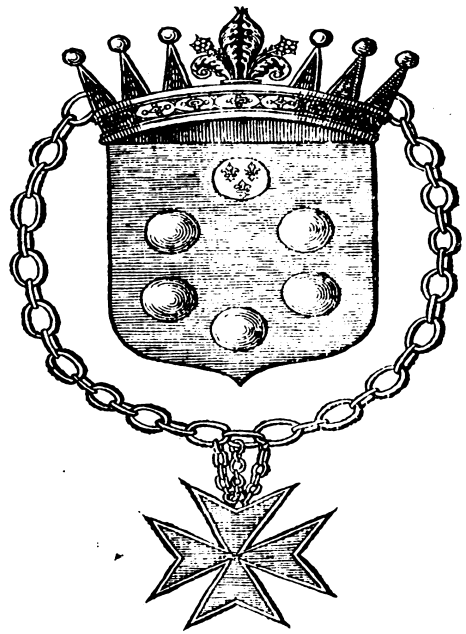
Ferdinand,



Ferdinand, who before was a Cardinall; but released and resigned to the Pope Pius Quintus, his dignity of Cardinall, by a sollemne Acte, celebrated in the Conclaue, the eight and twentieth day of Nouember, in the same yeare Fourescore and eighteene, by his Aduocates (done and grounded on especiall procuration) Nicholas de Tournabony, Bishop of the Borough of Saint Sepulcher, and John Nicholas. By his Wife Christina, Daughter to Charles, Duke of Lorraine, he left Cosimo, Second of the name, Husband to Mary of Austria, who Gouerneth at this present.

A Cardinalle dignity resigned for a Dukedome.

The Institution of the Order of Saint Stephen, for the Honour of Florence.

The time of the Orders Institution.

Cosimo, the first Duke of Florence, was Authour and Institutor of the Order of Saint Stephen, Pope, Ninth of the name, Tutelarie and Patrone of the Citty of Florence, which he Instituted in the yeare of Grace, One thousand, fiue hundred, threescore and one, confirmed by the Popes, both of one name Pius, fourth and Fift, by their Bulles, wherein were couched the Statutes, which ought to be kept and obserued, by the Knights of the same Order of Saint Stephen, vnder the Rule of Saint Benedict. By Confirmation of those Popes, they had the same Priueledges as belonged to them of Malta.

A Breuiate of the Articles.

NO man is to be admitted, and receiued into this Order, if he haue not first made proofe of his Nobility by Stock by Father and Mother, and borne in lawfull Mariage, and to be of the Christian Catholicke Religion, without any noate of infamy. Blasphemers, Concubinaries or Bastards, Players, Gamesters, Bouffones and Easters, are quite excluded out of this Society. And if any such happen to be entertained, before the discouery of their vices, they shall be very sucarely chastised.

They shall take the Oath of Charity, and Obedience towards their Soueraignes and Superiours, and also of coniugall chastity in the case of Mariage. Out of which estate, if they haue any issue by Concubines: they haue power to institute their Bastard Heires, both in their moueables and immouables, the Fourth part being reserued to the Order. Whereinto also may be receiued Bigamies, who (as well as they that haue bin but once maried) may hold two hundred Crownes Rent, on Benefices belonging to the State of Florence; as we haue said concerning them of Saint Lazarus in France and in Sauoye.

Of Pensions for Seruice.

These Pensions are giuen and graunted to such, as haue made their three yeares of Caravell approbation: that is to say, such as haue actually so long serued in the Galies of Florence, to cleare the Seas of Turkes and Pirates.

Each Knight is bound to say dayly an Hundred Pater Nosters, and an Hundred Aue Mariaes, but to double them on sollemne Feastiuall's, and the Rosarie at the death of a Brother of the Order, and the Office for the dead.

Seruice by Land and Sea

They stand obliged to serue so long on the Land, as on the Sea, at all times, and as often as it shall please the Soueraigne Great Maister, who is the Duke of Florence. To whom they are to take the same Oath, as they of Saint Lazarus doe to the Duke of Sauoye.

The Habite and Crosse of the Order.

They weare a long Gowne of White Chamblet, beautified with Red furniture; On sollemne Feast dayes, and on the left part of the Breast, a Crosse (like to that of Malta) of Red or Crimson Sattin, and on the Orle a Pasement Lace of Gold. Priests weare the Crosse of Red Taffatie, without Orle; and the Brethren Seruants the Crosse of Saint Anthony only, not hauing any thing aloft. The same Crosse is worne by the Knights dayly on their Cloakes, and about their necks at a Black Ribband or Cordon, or at a Chaine of Gold on Feastiuall dayes. In times of warre they weare the Crosse of the Order, vpon their Coates of Armes of Damaske, or of White Chamblet.

The principall Conuent of this Order is at Pisa, a pleasant Citty, with fayre plaine Fields, lined with the Riuer of Arno, about Eight miles from the Sea, adorned with a famous Vniuersity, and a goodly Arsenall.

CHAP. VIII.

The Genealogie of the Dukes of Mantua; And of Montferrat.

THat Passage of Father Ieronimo Capugnano, of the Order of the Preaching Fryers at Bologna la Grassa, in his description concerning the Citty of Mantua, enstructeth vs in the knowledge and foundation of this new Military Order. In pulcherrimo templo Sancti Andreæ Sanguis est Domini Nostri miraculosus, & Longini Martyris ossa. In the fayre and magnificent Church of Saint Andrew at Mantua, there is of our Lords Bloud, which worketh miracles dayly, and of the Bones of Saint Longinus the Knight, Martyred in the Citty of Cæsarea in Cappadocia. The most part of his Bones are in the Church of Saint Augustine at Rome, and some one or two of them in Saint Andrewes at Mantua. Among the rest, in the Shrine or Reliquarie which containeth the Relicks, are three drops of the Bloud of our Sauiour Iesus Christ, with a part or piece of the Spunge wherewith they gaue him Vineger and Gaule to Drinke on the tree of the Crosse. And this Longinus is said by some, to be the Centurion, that pierced with his Launce the side of our Sauiour.

This is said to be the blinde Knight that thrust his Launce into our Sauiours side.

The Institution of the Order.

In Honour of his Bloud, of such inestimable price, Vincentio de Gonzaga, Fourth Duke of Mantua, and Second of Montferrat; Instituted The Order of the precious Bloud of our Sauiour and Redeemer Iesus Christ: Of which Order he declared himselfe the Chiefe and Soueraigne to be Great Maister, and after him, the Dukes of Mantua and and Montferrat his Successours: And this Order is confirmed by Pope Paul, Fift of that name, sitting in the Holy Church at this present.

The first Ceremony of this Order, was performed on the day of Pentecost, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand, sixe hundred and eight, in the Dukes Chappell of the Palace: where the Cardinall of Mantua Ferdinand, Second sonne to the Duke, girded on his Fathers Sword, and put about his necke the Collar of the Order: In the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost. Which being done;

The first solemnity of the Order.

Vincentio, Duke of Mantua and of Montferrat, Founder and Soueraigne Great Maister of the Order; With great Ceremonie, in the Church of Saint Andrew in Mantua, made and created Fifteene Knights, namely;

Francis, Prince of Mantua and of Montferrat, his Eldest Sonne, newly maried to Margaret of Sauoy.

Iulius Cæsar de Gonzaga, Prince of the Holy Empire, and of Bozzolo, Marquesse de Sonsino, and Counte of Pamponasso.

Andrea de Gonzaga, Prince of the Holy Empire.

William d'Adorno, Marquesse of Pallauosin, and Counte of Syludano.

Iordain de Gonzaga, Marquesse, Prince of the Holy Empire, and Counte of Fogni.

Alexander de Benilaqua, Counte

Charles de Rosse, Lieutenant Generall to the State of Mantua.

Galeazzo, Counte de Caneosso, Marquesse of Cagliano.

Frederick de Gonzaga, Marquesse and Prince of the Holy Empire.

Frances de Bonsignato, Count.

Latino de Orsini, Duke.

Pyrrhus Maria de Gonzaga, Marquesse and Prince of the Holy Empire.

Ludouico de Gonzaga, Marquesse of Palazzolo.

The first Knighting of the Order made by the Duke.

The Collar of this Order is composed of Oualles of Gold, some extended in length, and other in breadth, enterlaced together by cleched Annelets of the same mettall. On the Oualles in length (enterchangeably) is raised in white enamelling these two words, Domini Probasti. On the other which are, En Pyramide en Poincte, are Flames of Fire enameled with Red, and vpon a Trimet, enameled with Blacke, a Chamblet or Goldsmiths melting or firing pot, enamelled Graye, full of small Rodus of Gold, without enamelling. At the end of the Collar within an Ouall, are two Angells standing vpright, wrought and enamelled according to life, holding a Chalice and Pixe Crowned, on the Table whereof, are three drops of Blood enamelled with Red, and about the Ouall this Legend Nihil. Esto. Triste. Recepto.

Concerning the Collar of the Order, and description thereof.

Nihil. Hoc. Triste. Recepto

The deuise of this Order, Domine Probasti, is taken out of the Hundred thirty eight Psalme, written by the Royall Prophet Dauid, which he speaketh and attributeth particularly perticulerly to our Redeemer, and not to wreched, fraile and mortall men, vessels full of iniquity.

And Golde, like to the flaming Fire,

Looke wether there be any way of wickednes in me: and leade me in the way euerlaſting.*

Let vs now proceede on to the Genealogie of the founder of this Order: whereof (to this day) I could neuer obtaine the Statutes and perticularities.

Monſferrat is one way as great as Mantua; but vneuen, rugged and drie, by reaſon of the Mountaines.

Vnder the Empires declynation, conquered by our Charlemaigne, the moſt part of the Gouernours of the Citties and Prouinces, poſſeſſed themſelues of their Gouernments, and became Maiſters (as we haue ſaid) of Saxonie, of Sauoye, and of the Duchy of Millayne vnder the Order of Orleans; the ſelfe ſame fortune befell the Eſtate of Mantua. For I finde that the Emperour Otho, Second of the name, made there Gouernour (in hereditarie Fiefe) Thetaldo, Count of Canoſſa, whoſe Ligne continued ſo long, as to the yeare One thouſand, two hundred and twenty, when Ezzelino of Padua, was expulſed by the Viſcounte of Goita, from whoſe race the Bonacoſſy got poſſeſſion of Mantua, and held it vntill the yeare One thouſand, three hundred and nineteene, when Paſſarino Bonacoſſy was deſpoyled of this Eſtate by Guido de Gonzaga, Lord of Lombardie.

Thetaldo Count of Canoſſa.

And heere we will begin, and ſo proceede on with the Genealogie of the Lords of Mantua.

THis Guido de Gonzaga, Lord of Lombardie, had a Sonne named

1. Ludouico de Gonzaga, who tooke the Title of Lord of Mantua, in the in the yeare of Grace One thouſand, three hundred, twentie and eight: And by his death

2. Guido his ſonne was Lord of Mantua. In this Genealogie we follow Guydo Coquillus, Lord of Romenay, who forgot to obſerue the Alliances or Mariages of the Princes of Mantua, one of the moſt eſſentiall perticularities belonging to an Hiſtorie: which we will labour to make amends for in our Second Impreſſion, if God vouchſafe life and health. Guido deceaſſed in the yeare One thouſand, three hundred, threeſcore and nine, leauing for ſucceſſour

3. Ludouico (whom we call Lewes in Frenche) Second of the name, and who died in the yeare One thouſand, three hundred, foureſcore and two, leauing the Seigneury of Mantua to his Son

4 Fran-

4. Franceſco. In whoſe time Coquillus ſpeaketh of a Famous Duello or Combate, betweene Galeoto de Gonzaga, a man of of Giant-like ſtature, and Bouchicault, of very meane forme and making, who being vanquiſhed, made a vowe, neuer to weare any Cuirats in warre or fight, but to be armed only with his Coate of Armes. This is the ſame Geoffrey Bouchicault, Sirnamed the Leane, the moſt wiſe and worthieſt Knight of his time, who was Gouernour of Geneway for the Kings Charles the Fift and Sixt; who had the Victory againſt Galeoto de Gonzaga in ſingle Combate, ſo ſaith John le Feron, who giueth him for Armes D'Argent a l'Aigle eſploye de Gueules, Armé & Lampaſſé d'Azur, briſé en l'Eſtomach d'vne Fleur de Lys d'Or. He was Marſhall of France, and in thoſe times then, there were but two Offices, the very greateſt of France, which were not giuen, but to perſons of great Seruice, and men of honeſtie, and not to ſtrangers, Cowardes and Cullions. The Sirname of Leane giuen to the ſaid Marſhall Bouchicault, approueth, that he was of meane Stature, and not Giant-like, and giuen him truely by Coquillus. By the death of Franceſco, happening the eight day of March One thouſand, foure hundred and ſeauen; his Sonne

5. John Franceſco ſucceeded him. He was created the firſt hereditary Marqueſſe of Mantua, and perpetuall Vicare of the Holy Empire, by the Emperour Sigiſmond, the two and Twentieth day of September, in the yeare of Grace One thouſand, foure hundred, thirty and three, in the Grand Piazza of Mantua, before the Cathedrall Church of Saint Peter. And for a noate of this Inueſtiture, he aboliſhed the auncient Armes of the Gonzagues, Qui portions de Sable a Trois Moutons d'Argent accornez & vnlrinez d'Or, Et leur donna d'Argent, a la Croix patee de Gueules, Cantonnee de Quatre Aigles de Sable, Armez & Lampaſſez de Gueules. They haue added thereunto Vn Eſcu en Abiſme de Gueules a vn Lyon d'Or, a Trois Feſſes de Sable. And conſequently, a mixture of Armes by Mariages, in ſtead of Armes Ieſſe charged, which alwayes are the beſt and faireſt. For when Armes paſſe Eight Quarters, and Foure in the bottome are Twelue, and come to Sixeteene, to Thirtie two (I haue ſeene to farre as to Threeſcore and Foure) this is diſorder, and foule confuſion. John the Firſt Marqueſſe of Mantua died the Three and twentieth day of September, One thouſand, foure hundred, forty and foure, leauing Foure Children,

6. Ludouico, Third of the name, Hereditarie in the Marquiſate of Mantua.

Charles, Lord of Bozzolo and of Gazuolo.

Alexander, Lord of Canedo, and of Rondodiſco; And John, Lord of Rodigo, and of Capriana.

Ludouico the Third died the twelfth day of Iune, in the yeare One thouſand, foure hundred, threeſcore and eighteene leauing Fiue Children,

Frederico, Marqueſſe,

Franceſco. / John Franceſco } Partaged at one Lot, with charge to ſucceed one another.

Rodolpho; / Ludouico } And Portioned as the two other, and with the ſame conditions.

7. Frederico, Marqueſſe of Mantua, tooke to Wife Margaret, Daughter to the Duke of Bauaria, Qui porte de Bauieres qui eſt Lozange d'Argent & d'Azur en Bande, Eſcartele du Palatinat, qui eſt de Sable au Lyon d'Or Coronne, Armé & Lampaſſé de Gueules, & ſur le Tout de Gueules à vn Monde Croiſé d'Or. Of this Marriage deſcended three Sonnes.

Franceſco.

Sigiſmondo, Cardinall: And John.

Frederigo, Standard-Bearer for the Church againſt the Venetians, vnder the Pope Sixtus Quartus, deceaſſed the Third day of Iuly, One thouſand, foure hundred, foureſcore and foure, and left for Succeſſour in the Eſtate of Mantua, his Eldeſt Sonne

8. Franceſco, Second of the name, who eſpouſed Iſabella, Daughter to Hercules d'Eſte, Second Duke of Ferrara: we haue already obſerued the Armes of this Family d'Eſte (Ateſtenſium Familia) by whom hee had three Sonnes and a Daughter;

Frederico.

Herculeo, Cardinall of Mantua.

Ferdinando: And

Eleanora, Wife to Francesco Maria de la Rouere, Duke of Vrbin., Lord of Pezaro, who bare in Armes D'Azur a vn Rouure, ou Chesne fourche d'Or.

Francesco was elected Gonfalonniero of Venice, that is to say, Captaine Generall for the Army of Potentates in Italie, against King Charles the Eight, returning to his Kingdome of Naples: who in the Battaile at Fornoue; trode the Honour of this Leagued Armie in the dust. Afterward, he was at the seruice of King Lewes the Twelfth, who (according to the testimony of Guichardine, in the Seuenth Booke of his Historie) did him the Honour, to beare the Standard of the Order of Saint Michaell, in the yeare, One thousand, fiue hundred and seauen, which no man had caried since the Reigne of King Lewes the Eleuenth. He died the nine and twentieth day of March, One thousand, fiue hundred, and nineteene, and then succeeded his Eldest Sonne,

9. Frederico, Second of the name, who tooke to Wife Margaret, Daughter to William Paleologus, Marquesse of Montferrat. Qui portoit de Constantinople, qui est de Gueules à la Croix plaine d'Or, Cantonnee de quatre B. que nous disons Fuzils adossez de mesme, Escartele de Montferrat. And in this marriage were borne Foure Sonnes and One Daughter.

Francesco. Gulielmo. } Dukes.

Ludouico, Duke of Neuers, and of Rethelois, maried in France to Madame Henrietta de Cleues: And of this marriage issued Charles de Gonzaga, Duke of Neuers and of Rethelois.

Frederico: And

Isabella, Wife to Ferdinand Daualos, Marquesse of Pescara. They of the House of Daualos, are descended of an Infant of Nauarre, Lords of Saint Foelix de Daualos, who bare first Escartele d'Or, & de Gueules: And afterward D'Azur au Chasteau d'Or, à la Bordure componnee d'Or & de Gueules. After Don Ruy Lopez Daualos, to whom the King of Castile Henry the Third, gaue the Castell of Gold for Armes, by making him Lord High Constable of Castile.

Frederico the Second, of Marquesse, was made the first Duke of Mantua, by the Emperour Charles the Fift, after One Thousand, Fiue Hundred and Forty, And after him succeeded his eldest Sonne,

10. Francesco, Third of name, Second Duke of Mantua; who by Katherina, Daughter to the Emperour Ferdinand, had not any issue, and drowned himselfe in the Riuer of Menzo, in the yeare One thousand, fiue hundred and fifty. By his death, his Brother

11. Gulielmo was third Duke of Mantua, and by the death of Margaret Paleologus his Mother, Marquesse of Montferrat: for which contestation was made by the Duke of Sauoye Emanuell Phillebert, who maintained before the Emperour Charles the Fift, that the Marquisate of Montferrat appertained to to him by three meanes.

First, that Charles, First of the name, Duke of Sauoye, espoused Blanche, Daughter to William Paleologus, Marquesse of Montferrat. And it was couenanted by the contract of this mariage, that if the Masculine Ligne of Paleologus, should fall to the Feminine or distaffe; that the Marquisate of Montferrat should then come to the House of Sauoye, and to the Heires of the said Blanche Paleologus.

The second meane, that by the same contract of mariage, this clause was expressely set downe: That if the dowry of an Hundred Thousand Crownes (promised in mariage with this Blanche) were not payed to the said Duke Charles at the time appointed; in case of such defayllance, the Marquisate should be deliuered to him.

Now, the third and last, that the Marquesse being bereft of his Marquisate by the Duke of Millayne, vpon whom he made warre; the said Charles of Sauoye (his Sonne in Law) raysed an Army, by meanes whereof, he re-seated the Marquesse his Father in Law in his inheritance. And to pay the wadges of this Army, he had furnished him with great summes of money, whereof he neuer had any repayment, being alwaies fed with hope of future enioying the Marquisate of Montferrat.

Not-

Notwithstanding all these reasons, Charles the fift adiudged the Marquisate to the Duke of Mantua, in fauour of whom, he had erected the Marquisate into a Dukedome. To conclude, this Duke Gulielmo marryed Leonora, daughter to the King of Romaines Ferdinand, Brother to Charles the fift. This Ferdinand Portoit au premier et quatriesme d'Austriche Moderne, au De xiesme de Bourgongne ancienne party de Moderne, et le Troisiesme de Boeme. And in this marriage was borne their only Son Vincentio, Duke of Mantua and of Montferrat, who in first marriage espoused Margareta Ferneze, daughter to Alexander Ferneze, Duke of Parma. The Fernezes carryed first in Armes, D'Or à Six Fleurs de Lys d'Azur 3. 2. 1. And after that they of this house were made Dukes of Parma, and Placentia, and became allied to the Bastard daughter of the Emperor Charles the fift. the Dukes of Parma then Porte l'Escu party en Trois. Au premier d'Or à Six Fleurs de Lys (disposed as we haue already said) Couppe d'Austriche moderne, party de Bourgongne ancienne, Le Troisiesme d'Austriche moderne, Party de Bourgongne ancien, couppe de Farneze, deserte que les Premier et Troisiesme parts sont Escartelez. And that in the midst De Gueules à vne lance d'Or sommee d'vn Ombelle et Pauillon d'Azur frange d'Or à deux Clefs d'Argent passees en Saulteir sur la Lance.

In second marriage he had Eleanora daughter to Frances the Great Duke of Tuscanie: and of this marriage are issued.

Francesco, who by Margaret of Sauoy his wife, hath left but one daughter. and it was for the marriage of this Frances and Margaret, that the Duke Vincentio instituted the Order of the Blood of Iesu Christ.

Ferdinando, first Knight of Malta, Prior of Barleta, and Cardinall, and at this present Duke of Mantua, and of Montferrat, by the death of his father, and of Francesco, dying in the life time of the Duke his father: And

N. Wife to Henry, Duke of Lorraine, and de Bar, Father and mother of one onely daughter.

Let vs now come to the house of Montferrat, which hath beene one of the most Illustrious and auncient in Christendome, and which tooke Source and Originall in the person of:

The Originall and Genealogie of the House of Montferrat.

Vigebert, who was Duke of Saxonie in the yeare of Grace, eight hundred and fortie. Heere may the Noble minded Reader, (at one motion, without making any more) obserue, that there is a High and Low Saxonie. Those of the higher Portoient de Gueules au Cheual gay tourne d'Argent, party de Face d'Or, et de Sable de Six pieces à la Coronne de Rue, perie en Bande de Synople, as we haue many time said already. And the Armes of the lower Saxonie are D'Or, seme de Cœurs de Gueules au Lyon rempant d'Azur.

Vigebert had two Sonnes, as namely Ludolphe Duke of Saxonie, father to Otho Duke of Saxonie; father to Henry the Birder, Emperour; father to Otho the first Emperour; father to Otho the second, &c. as wee haue declared in the Genealogie of Sauoy. The other Sonne of Vigebert was

Valbert, Duke of Angria, father to Vindo, Duke of Angria; Father of William, Duke of Angria, Father of

1. Aledramo, made and created first Marquesse of Montferrat, of Saluces; of Clues; of Sauona; of Turee; of Finall; and of Thurine by the Emperour Otho, second of the name, making marriages of Adelaida his daughter, with this Aledramo, to whom hee gaue for Armes De Gueules an Chef d'Argent. which hapned in the yeare of Grace nine hundred, threescore and eighteene. Of Aledramo and Adelaida of Saxonie his wife, were borne. The first Marquesse of Montferrat.

II. Boniface, second Marquesse of Montferrat by the death of his father, and dying vnmarryed in the yeare, nine hundred, foure score and fifteene, his Brother

III. William was third Marquesse of Montferrat, who tooke to wife (if wee may beleeue Coquillus) Helan, daughter to the Duke of Glocester in England, who was brother to Richard, King of England. Wherein the good man is grossely mistaken, because William the Bastard conquered not the Realme of England, vntill the yeare of Grace, one thousand thousand threescore and seauen, in the time of King Philip, first of the name, as we haue before shewen vnder the Order of England, Page 40. of the second Volume, and at the time of this William, Maquesse of Montferrat, Gloucester was but a Countie, and the Kings of England after Adulphe, vntill the time of William the Bastard, bare in Armes D' Azur à la Croix Fleurdelisee d'Or, Cantonnee de Quatre Merlettes, et vn en Poincte de mesme, as wee haue said in the place before alleadged. In this marriage was borne

IV. Boniface, second of the name, Marquesse of Montferrat by the death of his Father, hapning in the yeare of Grace, one thousand, fiftie and three. Coquillus giueth him to Wife, Mary, daughter to King Philip the first, wherin hee is deceiued; because that King had but two children by Queene Bertha his wife, daughter to Florent, Counte of Frieze and of Holland, to wit

King Lewes la Gros, sixt of the name:
And

Madam Constance of France, twice marryed, first to Hugh, the Count of Champagne; And secondly, to Bæmond, Prince of Antioch, eldest Sonne to Robert Guiscard, the Prince of Salerne, issued of the Dukes of Normandie.

The same King Philip, hauing (without any cause) diuorced his, Queene & entertained (to very euill example) Bertrada, the dissolute wife of Foulques Rechin, Count of Aniou, and in this Concubinage he had by her two Sons, Phillip and Henry, who had both bad ending; and one onely daughter named Cecilie, twice marryed. First to Tancred (Nephew to Bæmond, Sonne in Law to the same King Philip) Gouernour of the Principalitie, which is called in the Kingdome of Naples, and designed vnder the Order of Aniou. And in second marriage she espoused Pontius of Tripoly, Sonne to Bertrand, Count of Tripoly, issued from the Auncient Countes of Tolosa. Here are all the Children of Phillip, vnder whose Reigne was attempted that memorable Conquest of the holy-Land, by the French Princes. Without further contending, what, or who the wife of Boniface the second was; he is recorded to be the Father of three Sonnes, as namely of William, Marquesse of Montferrat.

Arditius, Father of another Arditius, dying without any issue; And of Henry, Father of Bernard, deceasing likewise without issue.

V. William, second of the name, Marquesse of Montferrat, marryed Maria, daughter to the Emperour Lotharie, second of the name; so saith Coquillus, who is therein mistaken. Because the Emperor Lothaire had but one onely daughter named Gertrude, wife to Henry, Duke of Bauaria, to whom she brought in marriage the Duchie of Saxonie. This William deceasing in the yeare of Grace, one thousand, threescore and fourteene, left for heire and Successour in the Marquisate of Montferrat:

VI. Raynier, who by Bonna of Sauoy his wife (her Armes are before often-times remembred) had

VII. William, third of the name, called the Aged, to distinguish him from other children bearing the same name: who was Marquesse of Montferrat by the death of his Father, which hapned in the yeare, one thousand, one hundred twenty and seauen. He had two wiues and no more; the first was Othina, daughter to the Emperour Fredericke, first of the name, surnamed Barbarossa, but by her he had no issue. The second was Iulia, otherwise called Iudith, who was wife to the Marquesse of Austria Leopolde. She bare in Armes D'Azur seme de Cailles d'Or sans nombre: for hee had ten in the moitie of his Armes, and it is accounted and said to be Sans nombre, when they exceede 16. By this 2. marriage he had an Illustrious and goodly issue, to wit, 4. Sons, and three daughters, which were Iourdana, who was Empresse.

Agnes, wife to the Lord of Mirandola in Italie: And Alexia.

The Sonnes in order were Conrad.
William.
Raynier: And Boniface.

Conrad, King of Ierusalem, in regard that as the Marquesse William the third, was one among the Principals in the Armie of the Christian Princes, which passed in the voiage ouer the Seas, when the Emperour of Greece Emanuell, poysoned the Meale which he furnished, to make the aduenture of the Latine Christians

Rians fruitlesse: euen so in the voyage attempted by the same Latine Christian Princes, for the holy Land, changed from Conquest of the Grecian Empire, (described at large by the Seneschall of Champaigne, Geoffrey de Villeharduin) Conrad of Montferrat and his Brethren went in the Croisiade of this remarkeable voyage. This Conrad was first Duke of Ascalon in Palestine, and afterward King of Ierusalem, in the right of his wife Isibel, sister to King Bauldwine the Meazeled or Leper, Fourth of the name, as we haue noted in our first Tome, and in the Order of Aniou, Page. 509. And in this marriage was borne their onely daughter Mary of Montferrat, wife to John de Brenne, a French man, the most valiant and aduenturous Knight in his time. Which Conrad bare for Armes De Ierusalem Escartele de Montferrat. Hee was murdered in the Cittie of Acres, by one of the Schollers of Le Vieil de la Montagne; Of Mary of Montferrat, and John de Brenne, wee haue formerly obserued the descent of two daughters, which the curteous Readers may see in the Page fore-mentioned, and them following.

VIII. William, Fift of the name, Marquesse of Montferrat, Sirnamed Long-Sword, who performed wonders beyond the Seas: he tooke to wife Sybilla, eldest Sister to Bauldwine the meazeled, in which marriage was borne Baldwine, King of Ierusalem, (Fift of the name) by the death of his Vncle: yet he reigned but eight Moneths, and dyed at the age of two yeares.

Raynier the third Sonne, espoused Laure Maria, daughter to Emanuell, and Sister to Alexis and Isaack, Emperors of Constantinople: Which Empire was wun by the French and Venetians, ioyned together for this common Conquest, the twelfth day of Aprill, One thousand two hundred and foure. By his wiues right he was King of Thessalie; and shee bare the Armes of the East, which are De Gueules a l'Aigle esploye d'Or, Brisé sur l'Estomach de Constantinople. Hee dyed without issue.

IX Boniface, Third of the name, and Fourth Sonne to William the third (Coquillus giueth him a fift Sonne, whom he nameth Otho the Cardinall, but I cannot finde him in the Germaine Chronicle, which mee thinkes should bee more certaine, then his iudgement) who after the Conquest of Constantinople, was made Duke of Candy, which Isle he sold to the Venetians. After the death of his Brother Raynier, hee styled himselfe King of Thessalie, and succeeded (by the death of his Father) in the Marquisate of Montferrat, and was the ninth Marquesse.

He espoused Margaret, daughter to the King of Hungary in second marriage (for by his first wife, youngest Sister to the Emperours Alexis and Isaack, hee had not any children) but in this marriage, he had two Sons and a daughter.

1. William, Marquesse of Montferrat.
2. Demetrius, King of Thessalonia, who by the daughter to the Dauphine of Viennois his wife, had no children.
3. Alexina, wife to Mainefroy, a Bastard, vsurper ouer Sicily. Their mother Margaret Portoit de Hongrie, qui est Face d'Argent et de Gueules de Huict pieces.

X William, Fift of the name, tenth Marquesse of Montferrat, tooke to wife, Mary daughter to Boniface, Marquesse of Saluces. By his wife, Qui Portoit de Gueules au Chef d'Argent, he had one Sonne.

XI. Boniface, Fourth of the name, Marquesse of Montferrat, Sirnamed the Giant, for his great stature: who by Agnes of Sauoye his wife, daughter to Amadis, Count of Sauoy, first of the name, had one Sonne and two daughters.

Beatrix, marryed foure seuerall times. The first was to the Daulphine of Viennois: The second to the Lord of Baugie: The third to the Lord of Geneua: And in fourth marriage to the Lord of Retheliu.

Alexina, who was neuer marryed.
The Sonne was

XII. William, Sixt of the name, who had two wiues. The 1. was Isabel, daughter to the Duke of Yorke, Qui Portoit d'Angleterre à la Bordure engreslee d'Argent, but by her he had no child. In secõd marriage he espoused Beatrix, daughter to Alphonso, King of Castille, tenth of the name, called the Wise: And in this marriage was borne

Margaret, daughter to Dom Iohn de la Cerda, last Son to the Infant of Spayne, Dom Ferdinando de la Cerda, eldest Son to Alphonso, called the Wise, King of Castille and Leon,

XIII. Iohn

John, sirnamed the Iust, last Marquesse of Montferrat of the masculine ligne, descended of Aledramo, the first Marquesse of Montferrat.

Alexina, married in the House of the Vrsini.

Yoland, called by the Greekes, Irene, Princesse of Peace, wife to the Emperour of Greece Andronicus Paleologus, to whom she brought in marriage the title of the Kingdome of Thessalie, and of whom, the race held very long time the Marquisate of Montferrat.

XIII. John, last Marquesse of Montferrat of the masculine descent, espoused Margaret, Daughter to Amadis, fourth of the name, Count of Sauoye, Duke of Chablais and of Augusta. He dyed without issue, in the yeare, one thousand foure hundred fourescore and twelue; ordaining by his will, and naming for his Heires in the Marquisate of Montferrat, and the appurtenances thereto, his Sister, the Empresse of Greece, and her Children. For whom he substituted Alexina his Sister, and the Vrsini her Children. And in defect of them, he called for his Heires the Children of his Sister Margaret, wife to the Infant of Castile, and their Children. All which failing, he called to this substitution Mainfroy of Saluces, descended of Boniface, Marquesse of Saluces, his Cousine by name and Armes. To which Mainfroy hee left the Gouernment of Montferrat, in the name of the Empresse his Sister, and for her Children.

In the Mariage of Andronicus Paleologus, Emperour of Constantinople, and the Empresse Yoland of Montferrat were borne many Children, among whom was

The race of Paleologus in the Marquisate of Montferrat.

XIIII. Theodosius Paleologus, who in the right of his Mother, was the thirteenth Marquesse of Montferrat. Porta de l'Empire d'Orient Brisé de Constantinople, Escartelé de Montferrat. In which House he hath left the Armes of the Empire of Greece, retained by them which are of her name and descent in the Sirname of Mantua. He passed from Greece to Montferrat, in the yeare One thousand three hundred and fiue, vnder charge and conduct of one of the principall Lords of Geneway, named Opicino Spinola, with whose Daughter Argentina hee married (the Armes of Spinola we haue before emblazoned.) And in this mariage were borne Yoland of Montferrat, wife to Aymon, Count of Geneway. And

XV. John, second of the name, Marquesse of Montferrat by the death of his Father: which was in the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred thirtie and eight. By his first wife Cecilie, Countesse d'Estrac, Daughter to the Count of Commenges (Qui portoit de Gueulles à Trois Oostelles d'Argent en Saultoir.) He left no issue. In second marriage he tooke to wife Dogna Isabella, Daughter to Dom Iaymes King of Arragon, sister to the King of Maiorica, named Dom Iaymes.

And in this mariage were borne three Children, successiuely Marquesses of Montferrat:

The Armes of Maiorica are those of Arragon; A la Bande de Synople brochant sur le Tout. The first Sonne of this mariage was

XVI. Secondotus, who left no issue by Yoland, Daughter to the Vicount Galeazzo, Duke of Millaine, and Blanch of Sauoye.

XVII. John, third of the name, deceasing in the yeare, One thousand three hundred threescore and eighteene: And XVIII. Theodorus Paleologus, Marquesse of Montferrat, who was by the Emperour Sigismona (in the yeare One thousand three hundred fourescore and one) established and ordained Vicar of the Empire. He had no issue by Margaret, Daughter to Lewes, Prince of Achaya. By his other wife Iane, daughter to Robert Duke de Bar, Qui portoit d'Azur aux Croix recroisettees au pied fiche d'Or à deux Bars (or Barbeaux) adossez de mesme; he had

Sophia, wife to the Emperor of Greece, John Paleologus: And

XIX. Iames John, who by his wife Iane, Daughter to the Count of Sauoye Amadis, Sonne of Aymon, had foure Sons and two Daughters.

John, Marquesse of Montferrat.

William, Marquesse of Montferrat.

Theodorus, created Cardinall by Pope Paul, second of the name.

Boniface, Marquesse of Montferrat.

The two Daughters were

Isabel wife to Lewes, Marquesse of Saluces: And Amadea, who married with John, King of Ierusalem, Armenia, and Cyprus.

XX. John Paleologus, Marquesse of Montferrat, fourth of the name, by Margaret, Daughter to Lewes Duke of Sauoye, he had no childe: And by his death, happening in the yeare, One thousand foure hundred threescore and foure

XXI. William, seauenth of the name, his Brother, was Marquesse of Montferrat who in first mariage had to wife Madam Mary of Nauarre, daughter to Gaston, who was Prince of Nauarre, Soueraigne of Bearn, Count of Begorre, and of Foix, &c. In this mariage was borne one onely Daughter, named Iane Paleologus, married to the Marquesse of Saluces Lewes, and by this contract of mariage it was couenanted namely, that she and hers should succeede in the Marquisate of Montferrat, if that Boniface Paleologus, her Vnckle, deceased without issue.

In second marriage, the said William the Marquesse espoused Elizabeth, Daughter to the Duke of Millaine, Frances Sforza, and by her he had a Daughter Blanch, married to the Duke of Sauoye, Charles, as we haue before declared.

XXII. Boniface fift of the name, was Marquesse of Montferrat by the death of his Brother William, deceasing without Heire masle. He was twise married; first to Mary, daughter to Stephen, King of Hungary, by whom he had one Sonne

William Paleologus, Marquesse of Montferrat.

In second marriage hee had Felicia, Daughter to George Castriot, called Scanderberg, King of Albania, Despot of Seruia. Qui portoit de Gueulles au Pal d'Azur (pour enquerir) charge de trois Chasteaux d'Or, Maçonnees de Sable l'vn sur l'autre, le dit Pal Cantonné de quatre Pals d'argent sur fond de Rouge. And to this Marriage was borne John George, Marquesse of Montferrat.

XXIII. William, eight of the name, was Marquesse of Montferrat by the death of his Father, which happned in the yeare One thousand foure hundred fourescore and thirteene. Hee had to wife Anne, Daughter to Rhene Duke of Alanson, Qui portoit de France à la Bordure de Gueulles chargee de Huict Bezans d'Argent. And in this marriage was borne a Sonne and a Daughter

Boniface, Marquesse of Montferrat.

Margaret Paleologus, Lady Marquesse of Montferrat, wife to Fredericke, second of the name, first Duke of Mantua. By the death of William, eight of the name, succeeded in the Marquisate of Montferrat, his Sonne

XXIV. Boniface, sixt of the name, who being at a Tournement, was beaten from off his Horse, and his body so grieuously buised thereby, that he died, being neuer married, and left the Marquisate to his Vnckle

XXV. John George, who deceasing likewise vnmarried, the Marquisate of Montferrat fell to his Niece, Sister to Boniface the sixt

XXVI. Margaret Paleologus, and by her the said Marquisate is melted into the Ducall House of Mantua, as we haue elsewhere said. The Capitall Citie of this Marquisate is Casilinum, a strong Towne, garnished with good Wals, and well accoasted.

CHAP. I.

A Summarie Discourse, Reporting the severall Voyages made into the East parts, by the Princes and Paladines of France.

The errours and false reports of some French Chroniclers.

THE Martinian Chronicles, stuffed with lyes and old wives tales (which the good honest man Nicholas Gyles, one of our Moderne Annalists, hath taken for currant Siluer, and money of the best allaye) doe recount vnto vs, that our first Christian King the Great Clouis, was in Ierusalem; and that (by his example) our King Clotis, second of the name (Sonne to Dagobert, Restorer of Saint Denys in France) made the same Voyage, for conquering the Holy Land, where he remained seauen yeares; during which time, he became Maister of the Holy Citie. Of the same temper as those Martinian Chroniclers, is the fabulous Romancer Turpin, Archbishop of Rheimes, perswaded by the same Nicholas Gyles, with a false and imagined Voyage beyond the Seas, of our King and Emperour Charlemaigne, who being misse-led in a Forrest of two dayes Iourney long, was holpen and brought into the direct roade-way, by Birds which spake French, like to the Parrat of Persia, that was wont (in the Greeke language) to salute the Romaine Emperour. These are meere trifling Tales, and we haue obserued in some one place of these Noble Recherches, that a passage of Saint Gregory of Tours (ill pointed, and worse vnderstood) yeelded subiect to all these idle bablings.

Turpin Archbishop of Rheimes.

Our Kings of the first and second Lignes, were neuer in the Holy-Land. S. Gregorie of Tours, his Continuer, the Monke Aimonius, and other Authours of those times, would not haue failed to noate it, as being one of the most important points in an History, not to forget Voyages of Princes, forth of their Estates & Kingdomes, which they would be sure neuer to vndertake, but vpon some especiall and signale subiect. Eginhard, who at large hath described the life of our King Charlemaigne, with all the circumstances and perticularities, maketh no mention of any such Voyage, no more then the other Historians haue done.

The Kings of France of the first and second ligne neuer went to the Holy Land.

The Monke of Aimonius, in his fourth Booke of the History of France, the seauen and fifth Chapter, following the continuer of Saint Gregorie of Tours, saith; That the Pope Saint Gregorie, sent to Charles Martell, Prince and Duke of the French (by a sollemne Ambassadour) The Keyes of the Holy Sepulcher, and some Linkes of the bonds and Chaines of Saint Peter, Prince of the Apostles, which happened in the yeare of of Grace seauen hundred thirty and fiue, as in the same history is more at large discoursed.

Moreouer, that in the yeare seauen hundred, foureſcore and nineteene, Thomas the Patriarch of Ierusalem, sent one of his Monkes to our Emperour Charlemaigne with many Reliques. And the yeare following, a little before hee was Crowned Emperour at Rome; Zachary, Chiefe Chaplaine of his Chappell, returned from the holy Land; for hee had carryed his Almes thither, as it is written in the fourth Booke of his Capitularies; among those memories which this Emperour wrote in his writing Tables, of things that he intended to doe (as well in publike as particularly) all the whole yeare.

Thomas the Patriarch of Ierusalem.

Among which memories, is to bee seene this which followeth in the fiue and thirtieth Article. De Eleemosyne mitten da in Hierusalem propter Ecclesias Dei restaurandas, in Proximo Natali Domini. According to which Article, hee had sent the said Zachary his chiefe Almoner, who at his returne from Ierusalem, came to meete him at Rome, accompanied with two Monkes of beyond the Seas, the one named Georg, Abbot of Mount Oliuet in Ierusalem, an Almaine Gentleman, and called Engelband before his profession; and the other was called Felix, Abbot of Saint Sabba in Bethelem. These two men sent from the Patriarch of Ierusalem, brought with them to Charlemaigne a part of the true Crosse, the Keyes of the holy Sepulcher, pieces of the Rockes and Mountaines of Oliuet and Caluarie, with the Gonfannon of Ierusalem (which was a Banner or foure square Flagge of Sendale, that is to say of white Silke, Tissue à vne Croix pattee, Cantannee de Quatre Croisettes plaines de Soye Rouge, pareillement Tissue, representing the fiue wounds of the worlds Sauiour) with a most ample declaration, how the Patriarch and Christians in the holy Land, both acknowledged, and tooke him to be their Prince, Protectour and Benefactor, to whom they heartily wished all honour, health and victorie.

Almes sent to Ierusalem by the Empreour Charlemaigne.

The Gonfannon of Ierusalem.

With those Abbots came Abdella, Ambassadour and Chiotes from Aaron, King of Persia (the Chronicle of Laureshеim Abbey in the Diocesse of Mentz, calleth him Amarumlus, and recordeth this to be done vnder the yeare eight hundred and one; but that of Saint Cibar in Engoulesme, speaketh of the yeare eight hundred and seauen) a Sarracen descended of the race of Homar, Nephew to the false Prophet Mahumet. This Aaron King of Persia and Ierusalem, hearing the renowne of one Charlemaigne, desired to haue his fauour and friendship, and for mediation thereof, hee sent this Chaous with diuers presents, to witte; an Elephant, which they called Abulabas, sent by Charlemaigne to be kept in his City of Aix La Chapelle, where this beast was liuing in the yeare eight hundred and tenne. He sent also costly Spices, Perfumes and sweete smelling Sauours, with sundry Silkes, a rich Pauillion of Gaza, beside Tents and Cabinets of vnspeakeable value, two Candlesticks of Massie Gold, and a Clocke of admirable Arte and workemanship, because the twelue houres of the night and day, were smitten by as many Bullets of Brasse, descending vpon the Clocke-Bell before the houres were smitten, giuing passage to twelue Armed Knights out at twelue windows, which by a kind of pleasing motion (after the houre was smitten) closed the windowes againe whereat they issued forth.

Presents sent to the Empereour Charlemaigne from the king of Persia.

With this Abdella came a Iewe, named Isaack, sent by the same Charlemaigne (foure yeares before) to the said Aaron, King of Persia, and to Abrahim, the great Miramomelin of Affrica, to obtaine of them more milde and gentle vsage of the poore Christians, dwelling in the Countries vnder their obedience, to whom this great Prince had sent very liberall Almes, for repayring the Churches, hallowed places, and relieuing their necessities.

Abrahim, the Miramomolin of Affrica.

About this time, to witte, in the yeare eight hundred and two, the Empresse of Constantinople Irene, sent to the same Charlemaigne, Leo, her Grand Spatharie, to confirme the peace betweene the French and Greekes, who (saith the Chronicle of Laureshеim) feared least Charlemaigne would intrude vpon those Lands in Italie, which were vnder their obedience. This Irene being a Widdow, and acquainted certainely with the death of Hildegarde, wife to Charlemaigne (who dyed and was buried at Tours, in the yeare eight hundred:) practised vnder hand (as wee vse to say) to ioyne in marriage with Charlemaigne. Hereupon she sent vnto him very rare presents, to witte, One of the foure Nayles, wherewith the Sauiour of the world was fastened to the Tree of the Crosse. The same Smocke, which the Blessed Virgine did weare, at such time as she conceiued the fruite of Life, after the Saluration deliuered by the Angell. One of the armes of Saint Simeon, who receiued our Sauiour in his Armes on the day of his Circumcision. The Cuppe wherein King Salomon vsed to drinke, and diuers other pretious Reliques, which Charlemaigne caused to be kept in his Chappell at Aix in Germany, from whence they were afterward taken and transported into France, by the Emperour Charles the Bauld, who hauing made choice of his buriall place at S. Denys in France (where yet it is to bee seene fairely raised of Brasse, within the Monkes Quire) there he gaue the Nayle, the Arme of S. Simeon, the drinking Cup of Salomon, and the rest of the Reliques, and there they remaine in the same Church to this day.

Diuers pretious Reliques sent to King Charlemaigne by the Empresse.

But concerning the Smocke of the Blessed Virgin, the said Emperour made a gift thereof to the Church of Chartres, the first that euer had beene builded in honour of the Virgin, by the wise Druides, fiue hundred yeares before the time of her birth. The second Church is that of Tentouze, at the Mount Libanus, so saith the Lord of Ioinuille, in the Life of the good King S. Lewes, and other Authours beside, who since then haue written on the obseruations in the Holy Land of Palestine.

Charlemaigne, to sweare peace with the Empereesse Irene, and to thanke her for so many rare gifts; send for his Ambassadours Iesse, Bishop of Amiens, and the Count Helgande. After which fore-noted time, our ancient Annalists make no mention, of any voyages to the holy Land, as well in regard of the troubles hapning in France, thorow the remissenes and negligence of Charlemaignes descendants; as also the warr then made in the East, which much molested and hindered the passage.

The gratitude of Charlemaigne to Irene.

For in the yeare of Grace, One thousand and twelue; vnder the Reigne of Hugh Capet, an accursed race of people, wilde, saluage, and cruell, knowne by the name of Turkes, issued from forth the deepes of Scythia, after they had embraced the doctrine of impious Mahomet, making their fury and barbarous nature felt in Ægypt, Syria, Palestine, and other places of Asia, where they put all to fire and Sword, no meeting with any one, that dared to make head against them: vntill such time as the Sarrazins, as awaked out of a deepe lethargie or found sleepe, vnder conduct of the Caliphe of Damas, and succoured also by the Tartares: expulsed thence these vpstart new commers, and made them retire into a corner of Asia, as it is recorded by Haytonius the Armenian, in his description of Tartaria.

The first knowledge of the cruell and barbarous Turkes.

In the yeare of grace, one thousand, forty eight, Daher, Sonne to the Caliphe of Ægypt, hauing made a Truce with the Emperour of the Easte Argipopillus; Nicephorus, Patriarch of Ierusalem, and the poore Christians, resting from the fury and cruelties of the Turkes, who had ruinated the sacred places: caused the holy Sepulcher to be newly built, as is written by the Chancellor of the kingdome of Ierusalem William, Archbishop of Tyre, in his first Booke of the warres in the holy Land, the fift an sixt Chapters.

The holy Sepulcher newly built by the poore Christians.

Fifteene yeares after, to witte, in Anno, One thousand threescore and three, Benezer Calyphe of Egypt, gaue the fourth part of the holy City, to the Patriarch and Christians of Ierusalem, to be inhabited separately by themselues; for (before) they liued mingled peste meste among the Sarazins. This fourth part was afterward assigned to the Prerogatiue and Iurisdiction of the Patriarch of Ierusalem, who had for Armes of his Patriarchie, L'Escu d'Argent a la Croix Patriarchale de Gueules, Cantonce de Quatre Estoiles de mesme, et vne en Poincte: As the Armes of the Patriarchs of new Rome, Constantinople, were D'Azur à vne Croix Patriarchale d'Or, à Deux Estoiles de mesme en Chef, et vn Croissant d'Argent en Poincte. By this donation of part of the City of Ierusalem, the Patriarches thereof came to bee acknowledged as Prince of the Christians, and from thence ensued, that the Military Orders (whereof we shall speake hereafter) confessed them for their Superiours from the beginning, and vntil such time, as they established Great Maisters ouer them.

The Patriarches Armes of Ierusalem, and Constantinople.

Fiue yeare after, to witte, in one thousand, three score and eight, the Turkes hauing vndertaken new forces, by sloathfulnesse of the Easterne Emperours Diogenes and Michaell Parapinacius: threw themselues vpon Asia the second time, ra[vaging] on so farre as to the gates of Constantinople, got possession of Ierusalem and Palestine, exercising vpon the poore Christians, all the most barbarous cruelties that could be imagined. Which violence they continued for the space of thirtie yeares, and vntill the first passage of our French Palladines, vnder the Reigne of Philip, first of the name, King of France. After which time, very few yeares past, but the French and other Nations, (the Spaniards excepted, who had worke enough to doe, in fighting against the Moores) made voyages still to the holy Land for conqueste thereof, till at an instant it was vtterly lost.

Another cruell insulting of the Turkes.

In the Reigne then of King Philip the first, who succeeded in the Kingdome of France, by the death of King Henry, first of the name, his Father, which happened in the yeare, One thousand threescore and one, this remarkeable voyage beyond the Seas fell into deliberation: in regard of the tyranicall vsage, wherewith the Turkes oppressed the Christians of Palestine, and such Pilgrimes as came to visite the holy Sepulcher.

The voyage vndertaken for reliefe of the Christians

Peter the Hermite Priest, a Gentleman and natiue of Amiens, who bare in Armes D'Azur à Trois Gerbes de Bled d'Or. 2. 1. (I know not whether Tristram the Hermite, Great Prouost of the Hostell to King Lewes the eleuenth, were of the same Race: but he bare D'Azure a ces Trois Gerbes d'Or, Escartele d'Argent à vne Teste de Cerf de Sable, Sommé d'Or) hauing visited the holy places beyond the Seas; was entreated by the Christians dwelling in Ierusalem, Antioch, and other Cities of Asia, miserably subiected to the insupportable thraldome and slauery of those Infidels and Miscreants; to declare to the holy Father of Rome, and to the Christian Princes, the miseries and afflictions which they were constrained and enforced to endure. The Hermite being an eye-witnesse thereof, faithfully discharged the trust then reposed in him, he came to Rome, deliuered his Ambassage to the holy Father Vrban, 2. of the name, and at ful declared to him the iust grieuances of Simeon, who was then Patriarch of Ierusalem. The same R[emon]strances he made also to the Kings & Princes of Christendome, iourneying fr[om] one Kingdome and Prouince to another.

Peter the hermite reporteth the afflictions of the Christians.

The Pope, who, as his Predecessours in the Sacred Seate had done, thought hee should gaine no greater support in this holy enterprize, then in France; trauelled suddenly thither, and assembled a Councill at Clermont in Auuergne, published the Croisade against the Infidels and summoned there all Christian Princes, who were to bee as quickly in the field from France, Germany, Italy, and England (onely Spaine was exempted, by being sufficiently impeached, in warring on the Africane Mores, swarming ouer plentifully in her owne bowels.) But France, among all other Christian nations, was she that had the honour of this holy enterprise, because she alone contributed thereto as many Princes and Souldiours, as all the rest together.

The Croisade intended for the Holy-Land, and summoned by the Pope.

Matthew Paris, in his history of England enformeth vs, that the Croisade (for this subiect) was in diuers coullers, as we haue formerly said in the Tract of S. Dominick; wherwith were Crossed the Princes, Prelates, and men of Warre, going against the Albigeois heretiques of France, and Lombardie. It was called Croisade, because such as were enrouled therein, for the voyage beyond the Seas, tooke and receiued from the hands of Bishops and Prelates, a Crosse of Ierusalem, made of Cloth or of Taffatie, which was sowed on their Garments on the left side, right against the hart. The Frẽch did weare it Red; the English White; the Flemings and those of the Low Countries Greene; the Germaines Blacke; and the Italians Yellow, so saith the same Paris.

Varietie of the Crosses Coullers, according to the Nations.

Monsieur Hugh of France, called the Great (Brother to King Philip) Count of Vermandois, was the first of all the Christian Princes, that took the Croisade & Enfigne of this long Pilgrimage. He was in the Armie of this Croisade, published in the yeare of grace, One thousand, fourescore and sixteene, to bee aged one and forty yeares, Portoit Eschiquettee d'Or, et d'Azur, Mettall and Couller of France, and therewith the Armes of the Countie of Vermandois, of which hee had espoused the heire. Next to him Crossed himselfe.

The names the worthy men in the Croisade, for recouery of the Holy-Land.

Godfrey of Bologne (Son to Eustace, Count of Bologne on the Sea) Duke of Lorraine and of Bouillon, by adoption of Godfrey, Duke of Lorraine, deceassed without issue. Qui Portoit de Lorraine d'Argent au Cerf de Gueules, Sommee d'Or sans nombre.

Eustace of Bologne; Qui portoit de Bologne d'Or à Trois Tourteaux de Gueules.

Bauldwine, of Bologne: Qui portoit Pale d'Argent & de Sable de Six pieces. But afterward hee bare De Bologne, Escartele du Gonfanon, of the Christian Army in the Holy Land, that is to say, D'Or au Gonfanon de Trois pendants de Gueules, frangez de Synople. Eustace and Bauldwine were Brethren to Godfrey of Bologne.

Robert the Frizon, Count of Flanders, the naturall Sonne to the King of England, and Duke of Normandie. This Robert bare Eschequette de Gueulles & d'Or.

Stephen de Chastillon Count of Blois and of Chartres, who bare then in this Voyage D'Or au Lyon de Gueules Arme, & Coronne d'Azur. But afterward, he and his Descendants, Sirnamed of Chastillon and Crecy, caried De Gueules a trois Paulx de Vair au Chef d'Or. The younger charged (in time) the Chiefe with Foure Martlets Gueules, with Mullets and Lyons Sable, and other Brisures according to their owne fancies.

Aymary of Poictiers, Bishop of Puy in Velay: Qui portoit de Poictiers d'Azur a Six Bezans d'Argent. 3. 2. 1. au Chef d'Or.

William of Mascon Bishop of Orenge: Qui portoit de Mascon, d'Argent a l'Aigle de Synople.

Hugh Aymon, Count of Tolosa Sonne to William, Third of the name, and Iane Daughter and heire to Raymond, Second of the name, Count of Tolosa, who because he would make one in this Voyage; engaged his County of Tolosa, to his Cousin Raymond Count of Saint Giles: Portoit de Gueules au Mouton d'Argent a corne d'Or, party de Gueules a la Croix clechee & Pomettee d'Or. He was made Duke and Prince of Antioch, where hee dyed very aged, and by his death the County of Tolosa remained to the Countes of Saint Giles.

Hugh Aymon dyed Duke & Prince of Antioche.

Raymond, Count of Saint Giles, and of Tolosa, Qui portoit de Gueules a Six Chasteaux ouuerts d'Or. 3. 2 1. Armes of the last Counts of Tolosa.

Boemond, Duke of Apuglia, Portoit de Gueules a la Bande Eschiquettee d'Argent, & d'Azur de deux Traicts.

Bauldwine, Count of Henault; who bare at his going in the Voyage, D'Argent a Trois Cheurons de Gueules: And at his returne from thence, he tooke De Flandres au Baston de Gueules brochant sur le Lyon de Sable: Escartele de Hollande qui est d'Argent au Lyon de Gueules.

Bauldwine, Count of Rethell; Qui portoit de Gueules a Trois Rasteaux, sans manche d'Or endentez de mesme.

William Count de Foreests: De Gueules au Daulphine passme d'Or.

Hugh, Count of Saint Paul. At his going forth in this Voyage, hee bare D'Azur a vne Gerbe d'Auoyne d'Or, lice de mesme. And afterward his Descendants carried D'Argent au Lyon de Gueules, a la queue nouee & passe en Saultoir.

Arnoull, Count of Guines: Portoit Barre d'Or & d'Azur, when he went in the Voyage: but his Descendants afterward carried Vaire, Contre Vair d'Or, & d'Azur.

Rotrou, Count of Perche: Escartele d'Or & d'Azur, going in the Voyage; but his Descendants afterward carried D'Azur a Quatre Lyons d'Or, Deux en Chef, & Deux en Pointe.

Aymar, Count of Soisons, who carried in the Voyage Burele d'Argent, & d'Azur de dix pieces. And his Descendants tooke D'Or, au Lyon passant de Gueules à la Bordure engreslee de mesme.

Eurard of Ponthieu, D'Or, a Trois Bandes d'Azure à la Bordure de Gueules.

Robert D'Aspremont de Gueules, à la Croix plaine d'Argent.

Bauldwine de Piquigny. Face d'Argent, et d'Azure de Six pieces à la Bordure de Gueules.

Ordinarily in Armes, Lyons are rampant, and shew but one of their eyes. Leopards beare their heads forward, and shew both their eyes, and ought to bee passant. If Lyons and Leopards are of any other posture; it ought to be declared, otherwise it is ignorance: as in vnskilfull Painters, that know not emblazoning by the words Lyon rampant, Leopard passant, which are the Principles in the Noble Science of Armes, and whosoeuer is ignorant in them, ought to goe to Schoole.

Instructions for such as are vnskilfull in the Noble science of Emblazon.

That which hath mooued vs to obserue here the changes of Armes, by these Crossed Princes in this first voyage; is an important point in the Antiquitie of our Histories, for notice and knowledge of so many Illustrious Families of this most Christian kingdome: whereof some are yet on foote, and the rest plundged in the gulfe of oblition, being fallen to the distaffe, without any hope of reuiuing, except by titlee and contracts of marriage, which we tearme Alliance and Substitution; in which cases, the Armes and Names of famous Families conserue themselues.

A reason for obseruing these changes of Armes.

And it is of this first voyage, and them following, wherein our Annalists haue set downe; that Dukes, Countes and high Barons tooke so many Lyons in Armes, of diuers Coullers and Mettalls.

Countes of Blois, and of Chartres, by the Sirname of Chastillon on Marne, and o Crecie in Brie, who tooke De Gueules à Trois Paulx vairez au Chef d'Or. Others o this Sirname in Nuernois, Portoient d'Or au Lyon de Gueules: who after the 1. voyage changed both Armes and Sirname, forsaking that of Chastillon, and taking anothe called Amas, of the Prouince Amasia, which they conquered at this first voyage in to the East, and bare D'Or a vne Croix de Gueules. The three Princes Brethren o the house of Couey, bearing the Sirname of Baylleull, who tooke Vaire, à Trois faces de Gueu les.

But two Furres allowed in Armes.

In Armes there are but two Skinnes or Furres, Hermines and Vaire, yet both o them represented in a Siluer Field; the first of Sable, the other of Azure. If they be composed with other Mettalls and Coullers, they must be emblazoned, because they exceede the common Rule and Order. Otherwise it sufficeth to say: Il porte d'Ermi nes, or Il porte Vaire, ou de Vair. Returne we now againe to our Palladines of beyond the Seas.

How men fitted themselues for so long a voyage.

They made vp an Armie of an hundred thousand men on horsebacke, and six hundred thousand foot Souldiours. To accommodate and furnish themselues at all points, according as so long a voyage required: Such a one sold his Dukedome Countie, Viscountie or Baronnie: Such a one his Lands, Meadowes, Milles, and Forrests, or else engaged them, vpon their returning euer or neuer.

Hugh Aymon engadged the County of Tolossa, to the Count of Saint Gylles.

Godfrey of Bologne sold the Dukedome of Bouillon, to the Bishop of Liege, and the City of Mentz to the Inhabitants thereof.

Robert engadged his Dukedome of Normandy, to his Brother William, King o England.

Herpin sold the Countie of Berry, to King Philip the First: And these were fol lowed by an infinite number more, that made money of all they had. Which Sale v as much more honorable to the sellers, then to the buyers: who were counted but as home-bred sluggards, white liuered and corageles droans, and to whom such as were Crossed for the voyage, sent Distaues and Spindles, in mockerie of thei Cowardise.

The parting of the Christian Armie.

At the departure of the Christian Armie, Pope Vrban, second of the name, gau them his blessing, Remission of their sinnes, and for the Watch word and Cry o Battaile. Dieu. Le Veult. God will haue it so.

By vniuersall consent of all the Princes and Lords, Godfrey of Bologne was cho sen Generall of the whole Armie, for his experience and good carriage, and they se onward the first day of Aprill, Anno, One thousand foure score and seauenteen setting setting Sayle for Constantinople, where being ariued, the Christians marched on into the lesser Asia, called Natolia, besiedged and tooke Nicomedia, and afterward Nicea of Bythinia, a very strong and powerfull Citty, which endured the Siedge the whole space of two and twenty dayes, at the end whereof, it was taken by Assault.

Their arriuall at Constantinople and great victories

This exploite was seconded by the surprizall of Heraclea, Lycaonia, Cylicia, Cappadocia, paphlagonia, Syria, Mesopotamia, Comagena, and other famous Townes and Cities, which our Palladines conquered in three yeares space from the Sultan Soliman, then Generall of the Turkes; who at the same time also, saw himselfe despoyled of the Citty of Antioch (Seate of the Patriarchall Church, and sometime of that of the Prince of the Apostles Saint Peter, before his arriuing at Rome, where he suffered Martyrdome. Tripoly of Syria was afterward taken, with the neighbouring Cities and Townes, which plained and hilde euen the way of Iudea, to make their victorious Armes shine before the holy City of Ierusalem (the maine eye and aime of this Religious enterprize) which they inuested, with firme and constant beliefe, to vnnestle the miscreants, that had so often prophaned, and dyed it with the Crimosine blood of poore Christians.

The Christian Armies comming before Ierusalem and surprizal therof.

For the space of eight and thirty dayes, the Siedge continued, at the end whereof the Cittie was taken the fifteenth day of July, at nine of the Clocke in the Euening, Anno, One thousand fourescore and nineteene: which date is made more remarkeable, by these foure Ryming verses, formed according to those times.

Virginis à partu Domini qui claruit ortu
Anno Millesimo Centeno qui minus vno
Quindecies Iulio, iam Phœbi lumine tecto,
Hierusalem Franci capiunt virtute potenti.

Godfrey crowned King of Ierusalem.

Now, as by common consent of the Christian Princes, Godfrey was named, and made Generall of the Armie: so in like manner, after surprizall of the holy Cittie, he was elected King of Ierusalem, and cloathed with the Royall Ornaments; onely the Crowne of Gold excepted, which he refused to take, and place vpon his head in the same City, where the Sauiour of the world had worne a Crowne of pricking thornes.

And because the Armes of the City of Ierusalem, and the Gonfanon or Banner thereof was white, and the Shield D'Argent à la Croix Potencee, accompagnee de quatre Croisettes de Gueules, the marke and Symbole of the fiue wounds of our Sauiour and Redeemer, and (as we haue already said) the Crosses were Red, which Godfrey, and all speaking French in the Christian Armie did weare: Euen so the Princes and great Lords appointed, that Godfrey and his Successours, Kings of Ierusalem, should beare the Armes of Ierusalem, but otherwise emblazoned then they were, to witte: D'Argent à la Croix potencee d'Or, Cantonnee de Quatre Croisettes de mesme (which is Mettall vpon Mettall, and falsitie in Armes, as is Coullervpon Couller, contrary to the ordinary Rule of Blazons.) Those Armes were so deuised, altogether for Enquiry, for a signe and note of his valiancy, and greatnesse of courage. For as much, as those Armes that are for enquiry, doe moouevs to make request and search, for some speciall Priuiledge therero belonging, or theron depending. My Manuscript of Blazons speaking in this manner.

The Armes for the succeeding Kings of Ierusalem.

Generalement toutes Armes qui sont de Metal sur Metal, ou de Couleur sur Couleur sont fausses. Exceptees celles du Roy de Hierusalem qui sont de Metal sur Metal, c'est à scauoir d' Argent à vne Croix potencee, & quatre Croisettes d'Or. Et toutefois ne sont elles pas fausses. Et la raison est. Car quand Godefroy de Billon eut tresfvictorieusement acquise la Terre Saincte, fut auise, & ordonne par les Vaillants, & Preux Princes qui en sa compagnie estoient, qu'en memoire, & recordation d'icelle victoire excellente, luy seroient donnees Armes differentes du commun cours des autres, afinque quand aucun les verroit, cuidant que fussent fausses, fust esmeu à soy enquerir pourquoy vn si noble Roy porte telles Armes. Et par ainst peust estre informe de ladite Conqueste.

A reason for the King of Ierusalems Armes

Generally, all Armes which are of Mettall vpon Mettall, or Couller vpon Couller, are false. Except those of the King of Ierusalem, which are of Mettall vpon Mettall, tall, that is to say D'Argent a vne Croix potencee, & Quatre Croisettes d'Or. And yet notwithstanding they are not false: And the reason is, Because when Godfrey of Bullen had most valiantly wun the Holy-Land; it was aduised and ordained by the Valiant and Courageous Princes, which were in his company, that in recordation and memory of the same excellent victory: he should haue giuen to him Armes, differing from the common course of other. To the end, that when any should see them, thinking them to be false: they might be moued thereby to make enquirie, wherefore so Noble a King should beare those armes. And by that meanes, be further informed of the said Conquest.

Somewhat in Honour of the Armes.

But let vs say something which is not common, in Honour of these Illustrious Armes (seeing that we beare them) and the emblazoning: as it it appeareth to purpose, by the thirteenth verse of the Threescore and eighth Psalme of Dauid. Si dormiatis inter medios cleros: Penna Columbæ deargentatæ, & posteriora dorsi eius in pallore Auri. Though yet haue lien among the potts, yet shall yee be as the wings of a Doue, that is couered with siluer wings, and her feathers like Golde.

The Armes of Ierusalem the Armes of the Church.

The Armes of Ierusalem are (to speake properly) The Armes of the Catholique Church. The Doue is the Symbole of the Church, and of her best beloued Children, as in the threescore and thirteenth Psalme, and in the Canticles of Salomon. Veni amica mea, & Columba mea, Veni coronaberis. The Doue is without spot or blemishe, and was imployed in the sacrifices of the olde Lawe, as the expiation for sinners. And afterward in the new Testament, afflicted with Torments and Martyrdomes, this Doue beholde her selfe as dead & entranced, her heart transpierced with the Sword of bitternesse, among the Scullienly potts, spits and dripping panns, of Indian and Turkish Infidels, soyled in the Furnaces of persecutions, in the Synagogues of Heretiques, smoaked and darkened with infernall doctrine. This Doue lay swouning Inter sortes Malignantium, inter medios cacabos, inter medias lebetes, inter medias ollas.

Nigrante sque casas, & tecta mapalia fumo.

The glorious appearing of the Church.

But suddenly and in an instant, you saw her come forth as white as Snowe. Her forefront and downe to the bottome of her brest, the Shield of power, and the Buckler of Strength. Scutum Fortitudinis, & Clypeus Fortium, is of fayre polished Siluer. Her passions, her woundes, and her Crosse appeares no more bloody: this Shield sets her forth with glory and magnificence, by the King of Mettalls, the perfect creature of Natures workes

Golde, like the fire flaming,
Aboue all treasure fayre shining.

Or & Azure Gueules, Azur Synople & Sable.

We haue said in our first Booke, that in Armes there be but two Mettalls Gold and Siluer, as also that there are but foure Coullers, Red, Blewe, Grëene and Black. It were ignorance then to make addition of a fift Couller, named Purple, Which is not any Couller, so affirmeth my Manuscripte of Blazons. For whosoeuer shall mingle an equall portion of the foure fore-named Coullers; that will be Purple, a Coulter compounded, and not simple, which ought not to be in armes. And by the same Pairie of Rules in the Noble Arte of Heraldry, Coulter vpon Coulter are Armes for Enquirie, which appertaineth to none but Princes.

Concerning the Vse of Coulter vpon Coulter.

And although Coulter vpon Coulter in Bordure or Labell bee not so exactly reiected: yet neuertheless, the vse or practise thereof should be so sparingly limitted, as it ought not to be imployed in the Armes of great Princes, who (in regard of their qualitie) are exempte from common rule. For so we see that the first Dukes of Orleans Portoient le Lambeau de Gueules, and not D'Argent, as they haue done since. And so the Dukes of Bourbon, and them of their stocke and descent, beare, and haue borne Le Baston de Gueules: They of Berry, La bordure Engreslee de mesme: They of Valois, Anjou and Alanson, La Bordure plaine de Gueules, like them of Bourgongne. All Princes of the Bloud, whose Title is the subiect, cause and motiue for Enquiry. And Princes are not wount to graunt Priuiledge to their Seruants and Subiects, to beare one Mettall vpon an other, and one Coulter on an other, in Armes, or in deuise.

In this First voyage to the Holy Land, King Phillip the First had inconsiderately made a vowe, to march Armed at all points in the head of the Armie. He was dissuaded, not to leaue his Kingdome depriued of his presence. And yet neuertheless (to

(to acquite himselfe of his vowe) he sent thither one of his Chamberlaines Eudes the Maire, Lord of Chalo Saint Mard (that is Medard) Castillian and Captaine of the Royall Castell D'Estampes, who performed the said Voyage Armé de Pied en Cap. At his returne after the surprisall of Ierusalem, he gaue very great priuiledges to the said Eudes le Maire, Lancelot his Sonne, and fiue Daughters of his, whose Children he had accepted into his Noble keeping, during the absence of their Father. And they of this Family had enioyed (very neere the space of Fiue hundred yeares) the same Priueledges, which began first to be minced piece meale away, and afterward quite cut off by enuy. There remained no more Honour to them, but To beare armes for Enquirie, These of Godfrey of Belogne, Quartred with them of the said Eudes le Maire, which are De Gueules a la Bordure d'Or, chargee en Abisme d'vn Escusson d'Argent a vne Fuelle de Chesne de Synople.

The rash vowe of King Phillip the first.

What cannot time and enuie doe.

During the Siedge of Ierusalem, Godfrey (afterward King) letting flye an Arrowe on the Battelments of the Tower of Dauid, at that one shoote killed three Birdes: which serued him for a deuise afterward, and for the Assaylants and defendants, his brethren (as well Masles as Females) in Armes richly emblazoned, D'Or a la Bande de Gueules, chargee de Trois Alleyons d'Argent, sole Armes for long time, and afterward, Sur le Tout for them of the Illustrious House of Lorraine, enriched with their Alliances, to wit, of Foure Kingdomes, Hungarie, Sicilie, Ierusalem and Arragon; supported with Foure Dukedomes, Anion, Gueldres, Gulich and Barre.

The Armes of Godfrey of Buden, and the House of Lorraine.

The Second Voyage to the Holy-Land, was made by our King Lewes the younger, Seaueth of the name, who Crossed himselfe in the Generall Parliament, held at Vezelay in Bourgongne: And the King departed from Paris with a potent Armie, the Fifteenth day of May One thousand, one hundred, forty and seauen, leauing the Regency of the Kingdome to Suggerius, Abbot of Saint Denys in France; Queene Alienor, Wife to the King, followed him in so long a Voyage. They tooke the way of Germanie and Hungarie, to iourney for Constantinople, where they met with the Emperour of the West Conrad, Third of the name, who trauayled also to the Holy-Land, with an Army consisting of Threescore Thousand men, Germanes and others, passing in company the Bosphorus of Greece safely and with out perill.

The Second Voyage to the Holy-Land.

But the Voyage of these two Monarches of France and Germanie, brought little or no benefite at all to the Christians beyond the Seas, being constrained to discampe from the Siedges of Damas, and the Citty of Acres. Likewise they were basely betrayed by the Emperour of Greece Manuell, Brother in Law to the Emperour Conrad (for they had Married two Sisters) because they continued a yeare (or thereabout) beyond the Seas, without performing any great businesse, by reason of the mortality in the Christian Army, occasioned by the wickednesse of Manuell, and his Grecques (deadly enemies to the Latines) who had mingled a kind of Morter or Plaister among the Meale, wherewith they furnished the Christian Armie. So that both these Princes were enforced to returne home to their Kingdomes.

The trechery of Manuell Emperour of Greece.

This Voyage of the French into the Easte, is amplye described by the Archbishop of Tyre, in his History of the Holy-Warre: and by the Abbot of Saint Denis Suggerius, in the Life of the said King Lewes the younger, where he maketh relation of the particularities. Affirming, that this great Croisade was made, by the Preaching of the Great Abbot of Clareuax Saint Bernard, of Noble descent, but much more Noble in Vertue and Holinesse of life. We haue formerly obserued the place of his Birth, and the Armes of his House. And that Pontius, the Abbot of Vezelay, caused a Church to be builded (famous afterward by multiplicitie of miracles) in the same place, where the meeting was made for the Croisade, at the same Vezelay.

Saint Bernard Abbot of Clerauax, of Noble extraction.

He further saith, that the Commons of Sens, hauing murdred Hebert, Abbot of Saint Pierre le Vif: the King (before his departure) caused exemplary Iustice to be executed on the Authors and Complices, being cast headlong downe from the top of an high Tower vpon the pauement, where they had perpetrated and committed the murder, and the rest beheaded at Paris. Rex ad pœnas sceleris vltionem accinctus, portem Homicidæ arumnæ ab altitudine Turris ad Terram præcipitat, & aliorsecus Parisys decollare.

The Iustice of the King before his going in the Croisade.

At the same Vezelay, King Lewes, and his Wife Queene Alienor of Aquitaine Crossed Crossed themselues. Rex primus prosiliens, cum magno deuotionis ardore signum sanctæ Crucis assumpsit, & post ipsum Regina Alienordis uxor sua, mouentes per exemplum, ut sic Prælati facerent, & Barones.

King Philip Augustus vndertooke the Third Voyage to the Holy-Land.

The Third Voyage beyond the Seas, was perfourmed by King Phillip Augustus Second of the name, called the Conquerour, and Gods Giste vpon the same subiect. Notwithstanding the serious affaires in the Holy-Land; yet a Truce was taken between the Christian Princes, and Saladine the Calyphe of Egypt and Syria. But it was soone soone broken, because in the interim of this composition, Reynaud de Chastillon made seizure on the Mother of Saladine, as she was iourneying to Damas. Vpon refusall to render her, and the furniture taken from her, by councell of the Counte of Tryply: Saladine vanquished in open field the Army of the Christians Princes, which consisted of more then twenty thousand able fighting men, Salaladine making such a fierce and cruell assault vpon them, that the most part of them were put to the edge of the Sword. A Truce taken, but quickly broken.

For spoyles of his victory, he had the King of Ierusalem Guye of Lusignan, who before was Count of Iaffa, Husband to the Queene of Sicilie, Sister to Bauldwine the Meazeled; with the true Crosse, which the Bishop of Ptolomais caried in this Battaile. The Christian Army was betrayed by the Counte of Tripoly, descended of the Countes of Tolosa, who (in sted of fighting) threwe the Royall Standard at his feete, and forsooke his owne side. Which ouerthrow happened the fourth and fift of the Nones of Iuly, in the yeare of Grace One thousand, one hundred, fourescore and seauen. The ouerthrow of the Christian Armie.

Saladine pursuing his victory, sent King Guye, the true Crosse, and all his prisoners to Damas, and tooke from the Christians the Citties of Tiberias, Ptolomais and Ierusalem the Holy Citty, wherein were Foureteene thousand persons of all sexes. These Cities were thus surprized the Second day of October, One thousand, one hundred, fourescore and seauen: Afterward, he became Maister of the Citties in Galilee, and of all the Holy-Land, the Citties of Antioche, Tripolye and Tyre, some fewe Castells and strong places excepted, The Citties conquered by Saladine.

Vpon report of these sad tydings in France, King Phillip Augustus resolued on a Voyage to the Holy-Land, for the recouery thereof once more. But in regard that King Henry of England, and he wadged sterne warre each against other; an enterviewe was made of these two Princes, and they had conference together betweene Tue and Gisors: at which place (by miracle, and contrary to all humaine hope) the two Kings made a Truce and a cessation from warre for tenne yeares space. Moreouer, they Crossed themselues both for beyond the Seas, by the hands of William of Champaigne, Archbishop of Rheimes, Vncle to the King, and William, afterward Archbishop of Tyre, and Chauncellour of the Kingdome of Ierusalem, Legate for the Pope in this Holy Croisiade. Truce betweene the Kings of England & France

Holy-Field where the Enter-view was made.

The place of this Enter-view was called Holy-Field. Sanctus Campus, where was erected a great Crosse of Wood, and the Kings gaue money to build a Chappell there, in honour of the Holy Crosse, whereon suffered the Sauiour of the world, and for foundation of Diuine Seruice, to continue as a memory to posterity. All this was done in the yeare One thousand, one hundred, fourescore and seauen.

In the yeare of Grace One thousand, one hundred, fourescore and eight, the Moneth of March, and during the Lent time, the King held his Generall Parliament in the Bishops Haull of Paris, and in that time, a wunderfull number of persons Crossed themselues: Prelates, Barons, Priests, Souldiers, Cittizens and Villagers. COncerning Tenths or Tithes, it is decreed, that all (which haue not the Crosse, whatsoeuer they be) shall giue this yeare the Tenth at least, of all their moueables, and of all their Reuenewes; Except those which be of the Order of the Cistercians, Carthusians, and of Fonte Eurauld; Leprous persons also are excepted, so far as to their owne peculiar appertaineth.

No man shall lay hand vpon any Colledges or Communities, except the Lord, to whom the Colledge belongeth. Also what manner priuiledge any one had (before time) in any of the Colledges, the like priuiledge he shall haue still.

He that hath the great Power and Authority ouer any Countrey, shall haue the Tithes of the same Countrie.

And it is to be noted, that those who are to giue Tenths or Tithes, shall giue them of their whole moueables and reuenewes, not withdrawing first from thence their debtes: but rather the whole Laitie generally, as well Knights and Souldiers, as others, after the free gift of their Tithe, shal pay their debts out of the remainder, by their oath taken vnder a Curse. The Clergy also shall pay their Tithes, vnder the penalty of Excommunication.

A Knight and Souldier, hauing not the Crosse, shall paye Tithe to his Crossed Lord (whose Liege man he is) of the Fee which he shall hold. But if he shall hold no Fee of him, he shall giue Tithe to his Liege Lord of his owne proper Moueables: Yea he shall giue Tithe of his Fees to euery particular Lord, from whom he shall held. And if he hath no Liege Lord, hee shall giue Tithe vnto him, in whose Fee he shall abide vprising, or downe lying.

If any man taking Tithe of his owne land, shall find in his land, as well the goods of another Mans land, as of that which he ought to take Tithe of, and he (whose goods they be) can lawfully proue them to be his; The person Tithing shall haue no power (by any meanes) to retaine them.

A Knight or Souldier, hauing the Crosse, who is lawfull Heire, Sonne, or Sonne in law to a Knight and Souldier (which hath not the Crosse) or to any Widdow, shall haue the Tithe of his Father, or Mother.

No man shall lay hands vpon the goods of Archbishops, Bishops or Chapiters, or of the Churches which hold of them in Chiefe, except they be Archbishops, Bishops, Chapiters, and the Churches which hold from them.

If the Bishops thereof shall gather the Tithes, they shall giue them to whom they ought to giue them.

Whosoeuer, hauing the Crosse, ought to giue Tallage, or Tithe, and will not giue them; let him be apprehended of him, to whom he oweth his Tallage or Tithe, that he may heerein doe what he pleaseth. And that person, who for this cause shall apprehend him, shall not be excommunicated.

He that deuoutly, and lawfully, and without constraint, shall giue his Tithes, shall haue his recompence from God.

Hence it is, according as some haue written, that the impropriations of Tithes or Tenths in France, deriued their birth and originall. And of these Saladines Tenths, King Phillip made a great banck or stock of money, as well for the Holy warre; as that which he had afterward, vpon the Truce broken by Richard (King of England after Henry) against the same Richard: who afterward did Homage to King Phillip, for Lands which he held of the Crowne, and tooke to wife the said Kings Sister Madame Alix of France, whom he after repudiated, to marry Madame Berenguela of Nauarre, as we haue more at large declared in the Tracte speaking of the Order of England.

The Truce broken by King Richard of England.

All they which were Crossed for this Voyage, had Letters of respite and intermission for three yeares space, for payment of their debts, paying the third part yearely at the Feast of All Saints, and to receiue the fruites and reuenues of their Lands. But if they had no Lands or reuenues: they stood bound to giue gadges or payable Cautions to their Creditours, who could not compell them to pay, but at the appointed times, vnder paine of being excommunicated by the Ordenaries and Metropolitanes, vpon complaint only. And such summes as were due, caried no payment of interest, from the day as they tooke the Croissade; but beginning on that day, the Crossed persons could not be called before any bench of Iustice, vntill their returne from beyond the Seas, vnder paine of Excommunication, and paying the expences, damages and interests of such suits. In a word, such as were Crossed for the Voyage, had so many exemptions and priueledges: that it was no wonder, if the Armies for beyond the Seas, consisted of Two or three hundred thousand men.

The priueledges of such as went in this Holy Croisade.

Ordenations for those Voyages.

At the same Generall Parliament also, were registred the Royall Ordenances which should be kept in those Voyages to the Holy-Land, either by Sea or Land. And them I coppied out of the Parliament Register of the same yeare, as they were published in all parts of the Christian Army, at the departure of the same from Vezelay in Bourgongne, the Moneth of Iuly 1190.

Orders appointed to be obserued in the Christian Army.

Philippus. D. G. Francorum Rex semper Augustus. Nouerint Vniuersi Christo Domino nostro militaturi, &c.

5. If any one offend his fellow by outragious words and villainous behauiour, or blaspheme the name of God: as many times as he hath done so, as many ounces of Siluer shall he be condemned to paye.
6. Such as are accused and conuinced of Theft in the Army; shall haue his head couered with boyling Pitch, to the end, that he may be noated and knowne from the rest, and shall be set on shoare, at the first land the Shippe shall come to.

The setting forth of the seuerall Fleets to Sea.

Augustus hauing left the Regencie of the Kingdome, to Queene Alix of Champaigne his Mother, and to his Vnckle, Brother to his Mother, William of Champaigne Archbishop of Rheims, Cardinall and Legate in France, called with the White-Hands, went to take Shipping at Geneway, and King Richard of England at Marseilles. From which Ports the seuerall Fleets set forth, sayling towards Messina in Sicilie, where they arriued at the Feast of Christmasse after their embarking, and were well entertained by Tancred, King of the Prouince.

Some Shipps and vessells there were in the Kings Fleete, that suffered wracking; but to recompence the Princes and Lords of France, that had receiued damage there-by, the King gaue to the Duke of Bourgongne, a Thousand Markes of Siluer: to the Counte of Neuers Sixe hundred Markes: to William des Barres Foure hundred Markes: to William de Marlo Foure hundred Ounces of Siluer: to the Bishop of Chartres Three hundred: to Mathew de Montmorency, Three hundred: to Dreux de Mello Two hundred: to diuers other Lords Two hundred, and to some other lesse, according to their qualities. And at Messina it was, that the bad intelligence began betweene the two Kings of France and England, about the diuorcement of Madame Alix of France.

Bounty giuen by the King toward soldiers maintained.

From Sicilie the King went to take landing before Acres, which the Christians had beseiedged the winter before: And the Citty of Acres was taken in the Moneth of Iuly, One thousand, one hundred fourescore and eleauen: after which surprizall, the King fell into a grieuous Sickenesse, and was constrained to prepare for his returne.

Sickenesse the cause of the Kings returne.

He

He tooke but three Gallies, conducted by one of Geneway, called Le Rousseau de la Volte, who brought him to land in Apuglia: from whence the King went to Rome, to kisse the Foote of Pope Celestine, after whose blessing receiued, he came into France, where he kept the Feaste of Christmasse at Fontaine-blaude, in the yeare One thousand, one hundred, fourescore and eleauen. He left his Army to the Duke of Bourgongne for succour of the Christians, and his Prisoners to exchange and redeeme captiued Christians.

King Richards reuenge for Saladines periurie.

King Richard perceiuing that Saladine made no reckoning of satisfying the composition, which was, to render back the true Crosse, and those Christian prisoners, which he had in the parts vnder his obedience: caused to be brought forth of the City Sixe thousand Sarrazins, or thereabout, whose heads were all smitten off, and drew great ransoms from some of the better Prisoners.

Now, concerning the fourth Voyage beyond the Seas, and attempted by the Pallatines of France: it was in the yeare One thousand, one hundred, fourescore and eighteene, in which expedition were Crossed as followeth.

Of the Fourth Voyage to the Holy-Land.

THibault, Count Palatine of Brie and of Champaigne, Second of the name, Nephew to King Phillip Augustus.
Lewes, Count of Blois and of Chartres.
Stephen, Count of Perche.
Simon, Count Montfort l'Amaury.
The Marquesse of Montferrat.
Renuld de Montmiraill.
Regnier, Bishop of Troyes in Champaigne.
Neuelon, Bishop of Soissons.
The Count of Bricanne.
Guy de Coucy.
Bauldwine, Count of Flanders and of Henaulte.
And Henry his Brother.
Thierrie of Flanders, their Nephew.

With many other Princes, Lords and Knights, perticulerly named in the Historie of this Voyage, written by the Marshall of Champaigne Geoffrey de Villehardouyn, Lord of Ioinuille and of Vaucouleurs, Gentleman of Commercys, who was one of the foremost in this Holy enterprise, According to some, he bare D'Ermines au Lyon de Gueules.

The Venetian and French Armies ioyned together.

The French, ioyned their Army with that of the Venetians, and Shipped themselues at Venice, vnder conduct of the Duke of Venice Henry Dandolo. In Company together they beseiedged the Citty of Constantinople, and became Maisters thereof.

By common consent of the chiefe and principall Lords of the Army, Bauldwine, Count of Flanders and of Henault was elected and Crowned Emperour of Constantinople, by the Latine name, in the great Patriarchall Church of Saint Sophia. Constantinople was Conquered on the Thursday before Palme-Sunday, in February, Anno One thousand, two hundred and Foure.

Constantinople conquered by the French and Venetians.

As for this Bauldwine, he reigned no longer then one yeare. For some haue written, that he was taken in Battaile by Ioanniza, King of the Bulgarianes, a barbarous and most cruell Prince, who hauing kept him some few Moneths in Prison at Turnobium; this bloudy Bulgare caused his Armes and Leggs to be cut off, and threw the rest of his body in a Valley, where this great Prince remained three whole dayes liuing, to fight with death and rauenous Beasts, which rent him in pieces. But life being expired, he commaunded his head to be cut off, and of the scull or braine-pan he made a Cupp, and dranke therein dayly very sollemnely.

But the Historyes of Times speake farre otherwise, for Mathew Paris in his History of England, vnder the yeare One thousand, two hundred, twenty foure, reporteth, that the said Emperour Bauldwine, after a long and tedious imprisonment, by penitence and wearisome Pilgrimage; returned into his owne Countrey of Flanders, where he was knowne (though wholly chaunged in his countenance) by many of his Subiects and Seruants, who acknowledged him for their Lord, and did him homage,

The vnnaturall dealing of a daughter against her owne Father.

But the Countesse, that had long time held the dignities of her Father, made her complaint to the King of France her Soueraigne Lord against this Bauldwine, whom she tearmed an Imposture, and not her Father. So that to be briefe, He was hanged with all shame and ignominie, in the middest betweene two olde filthie stincking Dogges. Procurauitque vt prædictus Pater suus ignominiosè suspenderetur, nam hinc & inde secit duos Canes Veteres, scilicet mirgos suspendi.

Knighthood the maine matter of a mans life.

I haue seene the Interrogatories concerning this man, made to the Commissioners, deputed by the Parliament Generall of France, and part of the Articles; wherto he did not answere much amisse, though to some other ambiguously, and as it were by defect of memory. But when it came to the point, Who had made him Knight, and in what place it was done? He knew not then how to answere any thing in such an action, the most sollemne that he had in all his life time; which made him iudged, to be but a false, and a supposed Bauldwine.

The History according to the report of Mathew Paris

Yet notwithstanding, Mathew Paris, who liued no long distance of time, from that which concerneth this History; he maintaineth him to be the true Bauldwine, brought to this extremity of affliction, as some say that heard his owne confession (these are the words of Mathew Maris) for a most haynous sinne by him committed. For, hauing bin very long time kept in prison, he was deliuered by the pollitick meanes of a young Maide, vpon sollemne promise: that so soone as he should bee landed on any coast belonging to the Latine Christians, he would procure her to be baptized, and then take her as his true and lawfull wife. But being deliuered, and seeing himselfe safe in a Country of assurance: he caused her to be strangled before she was baptized, and thereby heaped three grieuous sinnes one vpon an other, for expiation whereof, the Pope sentenced him with an austere kinde of penance, proportionable to such notorious transgressions. Moreouer, that all such as had bin his assistants in this execrable murder, ended their liues in deserued, but most miserable manner, whereof Paris relateth the seuerall examples.

The Battaile Bouuines against the Flemings.

After the taking of Bauldwine, his Brother Henry was chosen the second Latine Emperour of Constantinople; He tooke to Wife Agnes, Daughter to Boniface, Marquesse of Montserrat, crowned King of Thessalonica (as we haue before said in the Genealogie of this House) One thousand, two hundred and sixe. Henry reigned but tenne yeares, and died the same day as King Phillip Augustus wunne the memorable Battaile of Bouuines, against the rebellious Flemings, the fiue and twentieth day of Iuly, in the yeare of Grace One thousand, two hundred and fifteene. By Agnes of Montserrat his wife, he left but one daughter, named Yolande, Wife to Peter de Courtenay, Count of Auxerre, a Prince of the Blood of France, descended of Peter of France, Sonne to King Lewes le Gros, Sixt of the name, and of Alix, Daughter to the Count of Morienna, at this present called Sauoye.

Peter de Courtenay crowned Emperour of the East at Rome.

Peter de Courtenay, proclaimed Third Latine Emperour of Constantinople, departed from France for iourneying thither. He first went to Rome, where he was Crowned Emperour of the East by Pope Honorius, Third of the name. From thence he came to Ottranto, where he embarked his Wife and Robert de Courtenay his Sonne, sending them before to Constantinople. But he directed his course toward Durazzo, to possesse himselfe of that strong place, whether came Theodorus Lascaris, a Prince of Greece, and deadly enemie to the Latines. He came to proffer the Emperour Peter his seruice, and promised him his assistance, for conducting him safely into Thessalie, and to Thessalonica, the chiefe City of the Kingdome, held by the Marquesse of Montserrat. Lascaris Shipt the Emperour and his people in Vessells of deepe bottome, and then guided him thorow such intricate passages; that they which followed, were diuersly dispersed. So that he made seizure on his person, and shut him vp in an obscure prison, where he kept him for the space of two whole yeares: at the end whereof, the poore Emperour left his head to his enemy, in the yeare of Grace One thousand, two hundred and seauenteene.

The treachery of Lascaris against the Emperour.

Robert de Courtenay his Son, was Fourth Emperour, who perceiuing his affaires in Greece in no good fashion, but holding on from bad to worse: made a voyage into Europe

pe for supply and succour, wherewith returning into Greece; he died in Achaia, and then succeeded his Sonne

The last Emperour of the Latine name.

Bauldwine, Second of the name, Fift and last Emperour of Greece of the Latine name. He married Martha of Lusignan, youngest Daughter to Iohn de Brenne, who brought him (in mariage) the imaginarie title of King of Ierusalem. A mariage ill made for Bauldwine, hauing refused his aduancement, in marying a Wife of the Countrey.

A Citty of Thrace built vpon the River Hebrus.

The wicked Alexis, expelled from Constantinople by the French, had maried the Daughter to Theodorus Lascaris (who wrought the death of Peter de Courtenay) retreated to the Citty of Adrianopolis, retayning alwayes the Title of Emperour of Constantinople. At the same time also, an other Lascaris tooke the same title of Emperour of Constantinople, establishing his Imperiall Seate at Trebisonde, vsurping (for his part) Cappadocia and Cholcis. And thus the Empire of Greece was deuided into Europe and Asia. Theodorus (by his death) left the part of his vsurpation, to his Sonne in Law Batazis, after whom succeeded his Sonne Theodorus. He of Trebisonde, named Iohn Lascaris, had one only Daughter, whom her Father offred in mariage to Bauldwine the Second: young, and very ill aduised he was, in refusing such an aduantageable party, which would haue made him a peacefull possessour of the Empire; but he would needs marry with Martha of Lusignan.

Iohn de Brenne Exarcate of Rauenna, and Generall for the Church.

After the mariage was consummated at Constantinople, Iohn de Brenne (whom Pope Gregorie the Ninth had made Exarcate of Rauenna, and Captaine Generall of the Church, against the excommunicated Emperour Fredericke the Second, and against whom, Iohn de Brenne valiantly defended Romania) gaue councell to his Sonne in Law Bauldwine, to make a step into France, aswell to renew his auncient acquaintance, and get succour thence against Lascaris: as also to visite those Lands which he possessed in France, Flanders and elsewhere. So that Bauldwine went into France, in Anno One thousand, two hundred, forty and fiue. Returne we now agayne to the Voyages of the Holy-Land.

Yearely voyages of the French beyond the Seas.

It was an ordenary exercise of the French, to Crosse themselues euery yeare for beyond the Seas, as well for the great Pardons which they had thereby, honour and reputation; as for the large exemptions, that the Crossed derined from those Voyages. And heercupon, the Officers for the King, the Lords of Fiefs, and others beside, would labour for these Croisades on the one side, and the Crossed on the other (willing to extend their franchises longer, then otherwise they could) had their Processe from the Court, and vpon these contestations of the parties, enquirie was made by the Bishops of Paris and Senlis, Councellors of the Court, & Commissioners nominated by them, for composition of the enquiry. After which, came the decree of the Iudge and Lords of the Enquest, expressing regularly the Exemptions of the Crossed, and establishing them afterward effectually in those cases, wherefore the decree beareth in title the words, which are contained in the Court Registers, for the establishment of the Crossed: as heare you may reade the tearme of the Courts decree, giuen in the Easter Parliament, One thousand, two hundred and foureteene.

Stabilimentum Cruce-signatorum.

PHILIPPVS Dei Gratia Francorum Rex semper Augustus. Noueritis Quod nos per dilectos, & fideles nostros P. Parisiensem, & G. Syluanectensem Episcopos, ex assensu Domini Legati fecimus diligentèr inquiri, qualiter sancta Ecclesia consueuit defendere Cruce-signatos, & ipsorum Cruce signatorum libertates; qui facta inquisitione, pro bono Pacis inter Regnum & Sacredotium vsque ad instans Consilium Rothomum, ista volumus obseruari.

Primo Quod nullus Cruce-signatus Burgensis, vel Rusticus, siue Mercator fuerit, siue non, primo Anno quo Crucem assumpsit, Tallietur; nisi Tallia fuerit imposita prius, quam Crucem assumet: & si primo Anno imposita fuerit, immunis erit secundo Anno, nisi ali- quid accipatur pro Exercitu. Tunc autem Talliam esse impositam intelligimus, quando denuntiatum est alicui, vel Domui suæ, quantum debeat soluere, vel ponere in Tallia.

Quia vero constat de Consuetudine hactenus obtenta in Regno Franciæ quod Crucesignati debeant Exercitum, nisi per speciale Priuilegium Domini Regis sint exempti: Dicimus quod in Exercitu quilibet Cruce-signatus de prædictis dare tenetur, siue Cruce signatur ante Citationem, siue post, si tamen debeat Exercitum.

Si Rex viderit expedire quod Villa mittat in Exercitum Seruientes, potius quam illi qui sunt de Villa vadant; poterit Rex accipere de Exercitu de Cruce-signatis competenter: Sed habebunt de cetero Cruce-signati electionem eundi in Exercitum, si voluerint: vel ponendi portionem suam in prisia, pro redemptione Exercitus facta; & si grauati fuerint de prisia, ad Diocesanum Episcopum, vel eius Officialem habebunt recursum.

Si vero Cruce-signatus habeat possessiones quæ debeant Talliam, reddet Talliam quasi non esset Cruce-signatus: & si neget possessiones debere Talliam, probetur coram Diocesano Episcopo, vel eius Officiali.

De Cruce-signatis manentibus in Communijs dicimus, quod si a Communia aliqui accipiant propter Exercitum Regis, vel clausuram Villæ, vel defensionem Villæ ab Inimicis obsessæ, vel Communiæ debitum factum & iuratum reddi, antequam Crucem assumerent; partem suam ponent in prisia, sicut & alij non Cruce-signati: De debito vero contracto a Communia, post Crucis assumptionem, immunis erit Cruce-signatus vsque ad presentem morain, & quandiu erit in Peregrinatione.

Si Bailliui Domini Regis aliquem Cruce-signatum deprehinderint ad præsens forefactum, pro quo debeat membris mutilari, vel Vitam amittere, secundum consuetudinem Curiæ Secularis; Ecclesia non defendet eum, vel res eius. In alijs autem leuioribus, & minoribus forefactis, pro quibus non debeat membris mutilari, vel Vitam amittere, Baillinus non debet corpus Cruce-signati, vel res eius capere, vel captum retinere, quin reddat absolute ipsum, & res suas Ecclesiæ requirenti cum pro iure faciendo.

Si autem in forefacto conuictus fuerit de tali forefacto pro quo debeat iuxta Iudicium Secularium consuetudinem membris mutilari, vel Vitam amittere; Ecclesia nec ipsum, neque res eius amplius defendet. De alijs conuictus, in foro Ecclesiæ, secundum consuetudinem Villæ, emendet Leso.

Quod si Dominus Rex alicui Burgo, vel Ciuitati, vel Castello concesserit immunitatem Exercitus, si petat Rex aliquid de eis pro Exercitu, Cruce signati primo Anno nihil ponent.

De Feodis autem, & Censuis, respondeat Cruse-signatus coram Domino Feodi, vel Censiue, & si grauatus fuerit, retractet se ad Episcopum, vel eius Officialem.

Si vero Cruce-signatus conueniat quemcumque Christianum super debito, vel iniuria corporali sibi illata, vel a Christiano conueniatur super præmissa, electionem habeat conueniendi eum sub Iudice Seculari, vel Ecclesiastico, sub quo maluerit.

Nullus Cruce-signatus tenetur respondere in foro Seculari, sed in Ecclesiastico, exceptis Feodis, & Censuis, de quibus litigabunt coram Dominis Feudorum, & Censuarum.

De possessione quam pacifice tenuerunt per Diem, & Annum, obseruentur prædicta, donec Cruce-signati perfecerint Peregrinationem suam.

Si autem super negotio Cruce-signatorum aliquæ nouæ dubitationes emerserint, ad dictos prædictos Episcopos recurratur.

Ista pro bono Pacis per totum Domanium Domini Regis, de Cruce-signatis pro Terra Hierosolymitana, vsque ad Concilium volumus obseruari, Saluis iure, & Consuetudinibus Regni Francorum, & auctoritate Sacro-sanctæ Romanæ Ecclesiæ per omnia.

Actum Parisijs in Parlamento Anno Domini Millesimo Ducentesimo Decimo Quarto Mense Martio.

An Establishment of the Crossed.

PHILLIP by the Grace of God King of France euer Augustus &c. Know ye that we by our beloued, and faithfull Bishops P. of Paris, and G. of Senlys, with the assent of the Lord Legate, haue caused diligent inquirie to bee made, how the holy Church hath bin accustomed to defend the Crossed, and the liberties of the Crossed; Who for the good of the Peace betweene the Kingdome and Priesthood, doe will these things to be obserued, vntill the next Romain Councell.

First,

First, that no Crossed Burgesse or Husbandman, whether he be Merchant or no, shall bee taxed the first yeare, wherein he hath taken the Crosse, except the Taxe be imposed before he shall take the Crosse: And if it be imposed the first yeare, he shall be free the second (except somewhat be taken for the Armie). We vnderstand a Taxe then to be imposed, when knowledge is giuen to any one, or left at his house, how much he ought to pay, or put on the tallie.

And because it is manifest according to the Custome held in the Realme of France, that the Crossed do owe and are engaged to the Army, except they be exempted by the speciall priuiledge of our Lord the King. We signifie that euery Crossed in the Armie is bound to giue, according to the premises, whether he be Crossed before summons or after, if so be that he owe sth dutie to the Army. Debeant Exercitum.

If the King shall see it expedient, that a Towne or village send forth seruants into the Armie, rather then they of the Towne should goe themselues, the King may take conueniently of the Armie, and of the Crossed: But otherwise the Crossed shall haue their choice of going into the Army (if they will) or of putting their portion in the prisage, made for redemption of the Army; And if they be grieued about the said prisage, they shall haue recourse to the Bishop Diocesan, or to his Officiall.

But if a party Crossed hath possessions which owe Tallage, he shall pay Tallage, as if hee were not Crossed. If he deny his possessions to owe Tallage, let it be tryed before the Bishop Diocesan, or his Officiall.

Concerning those Crossed, that abide in Communities or Colledges: We say, that if any of the Colledge, either for the Kings Army, or for the inclosing of a Towne, or for the defence of a towne besiedged by the enemy, or of a Colledge shall receiue a debt made, and sworne to be repaide, before they did assume the Crosse, they shall lay their part in the prisage, as others that are not Crossed. But concerning a debt contracted of a Colledge, after the taking of the Crosse; the Crossed shall be free for the present time of his staye, and as long as he shall be in his voyage. Communitz.

If the Kings Baylieffs shall take any Crossed for a present offence, or act committed abroad, for the which he ought to haue his members maimed, or to loose his life, according to the custome of the secular Court; The Church shall not defend him nor his goods. But in other lighter and lesse offences, or Acts committed abroad, for the which he ought neither to bee dismembred, nor loose his life, the Bailiffe ought not to take the body, nor goods of the Crossed, nor retaine them being taken; but absolutely restore him and his goods to the Church, requiring him for the doing of Iustice.

But if in the fact, he shall be conuicted of such an offence, for the which hee ought according to the custome of secular Iudges, to be maimed in his limbs, or suffer death; The Church shall no more defend him nor his goods. But being conuicted of other crimes, let him make good the hurt in the Ecclesiasticall Court, according to the custome of the Towne.

If our Lord the King haue granted to any Burrough, Citty, or Towne Freedome of the Army: If the King demand any thing of them for the Army, the Crossed shall lay downe nothing the first yeare. Castello.

Concerning Fees and Fines, let the Crossed answer before the Lord of the Fee or Fine; and if he find himselfe too much burthened, let him repaire to the Bishop, or his Officiall.

If a man Crossed conuent any Christian, vpon a debt or corporall iniury offred vnto him: or by a Christian shall be conuented about the premisses; let him choose whether hee will call him before a secular, or an Ecclesiasticall Iudge, which he will.

No man Crossed is bound to answer in a secular, but in a Court Ecclesiasticall. (Fees and Fines being excepted) concerning which, they shall commence suite before the Lords of the Fees and Fines.

Concerning possession, which they haue peaceably held for a day and a yeare; let the premisse be obserued, vntill the parties Crossed haue accomplished their Pilgrimage.

But if about the affaires of the Crossed, any new doubts doe arise; let them haue recourse to the two foresaid Bishops.

Wee commaund these things to bee obserued, for the good of Peace through all the Dominion of the King, concerning those that are Crossed for the holy Land, (the rites and customes of the Realme of France, and the Authority of the Romaine Church in all things kept vnviolated.

Made in Parliament at Paris in the yeare of our Lord. 1214.

Such

Such were (in those times) the Franchisses, Freedomes, and Exemptions of the Crossed, who after their death, if they were Crossed, that is to say, dyed after they had taken the Croisade, and had not gone in the holy Voyage, or after it carryed Palmes: had yet the honour to be carryed to the Graue Armed, and haue Their Legges Crossed one ouer the other. In this fashion, and no otherwise were they figured on Tables, Tombes, flatte Graue Stones, or raised by Caruing; as yet is to be seene in the Cloysters of Ancient Monasteries of France, Flanders, and in diuers other places else.

The Buriall obserued for them of the Croisade.

In the yeare, One thousand, two hundred and sixteene, a great Croisade was made in France and Italy, for going to succour the Christians beyond the Seas. Saladine, their Potent enemy was dead at Damas, hauing left two Sonnes, the one Caliphe of Ægypt, and named Meralit, and the other of Syria and Ierusalem, whom they called Affadine, who gouerned then, when the Christian Armie (whereof wee now speake) tooke landing in Palestine.

The death of Saladine at Damas.

In this Armie were present, Prelates of France; the Bishops of Paris, of Autune, and of Lysieux.

Of Italy, the Bishops of Millayne, of Rhegium, of Fauenca, and of Brescia, with other Prelates beside, and threescore thousand Souldiours.

At the landing of this great Armie, which shaped her course to besiedge the City of Damieta in Ægypt; the Sultane Affadine desired peace with the Christian Princes, as well for himselfe, as the Sultane of Ægypt his Brother. In the doing whereof he promised that he would deliuer to the Princes, the holy Crosse, taken from them by his Father Saladine, and yeeld vp the City of Ierusalem into their power: Which offers the Christian Princes accepted, as the greatest aduantage that could happen to them: and now so much the better, in regard that it was so freely tendered.

Peace required by Affadine of the Christian Princes.

Against which offer, was opposition made in a brauery, by Pelagius, a Spaniard by Nation, Legate for the businesse of the Crosse in the Armie, who was possessed with a strange opinion, as many more of his Countrey were beside; concerning a Prophesie then rumoured abroade, fondly noysed, and idlely vnderstood: That at this very time, the Lawe of Mahomet should bee quite ouerthrowne by a Spanyard, which he supposed to be himselfe, and so sent backe the Sultanes Deputies, without effecting any thing. This deniall was the cause, that the Sultane (in despight of the Christians) raced and spoyled the very godliest places in Ierusalem.

Damieta was surprized in the assault by the Christians, in the yeare of Orace, one thousand, two hundred and nineteene, the fifteenth day of Nouember.

The Christians take Damieta by assault.

This surprizall did so mount the Legate Spanyards courage, that contemning Military Order and Discipline; he auanced on the Christian Armie, to besiedge Grand Cairo. The Sultane suffered this great Armie, to run it selfe in out of breath, consisting yet of more then threescore thousand men, which (euen in a very short moment of time) saw it selfe famished, and afflicted with diuersitie of deadly diseases: so that more then halfe part of them being dead, and the rest very sickely languishing: he was glad to buy a Retreate, and for it to surrender to the Sultane Damieta, which had cost so much in the taking. This reddition was done in September, One thousand two hundred, twentie and three. So the Legates glory vanished into smoake, himselfe hated and detested of the Christians; whose misfortune hee had caused, and ruinated the affaires of the Holy-Land.

A grieuous mortalitie in the Christian Armie.

In the meane while, the King of Ierusalem, Iohn de Brenne, obtained of the Sultane Affadine, a Truce for the space of eight yeares, by meanes whereof he had leysure to leaue Syria, & passe into Europe, to request the succor of the Christian Princes. Going into Italie, he married his eldest daughter Yolande to Fredericke, King of Sicilie, afterward Emperour, second of the name: who deceassing without children, the Title and Right in the Kingdome of Ierusalem, went to her Sister Martha, wife to the Emperour Truce taken for eight yeares space with the Sultane.

Bauldwine, second of the Latine name, according as we shall now come to relate: for thus was the State of the Kings of Ierusaleem.

Concer-

Concerning the Kings of Ierusalem, in their succeeding each after other.

I. Godfrey of Bologne, chosen the first King of Ierusalem, seauen dayes after the holy City was taken: he reigned but one yeare, and leauing no issue, hee had for Successour his Brother

II. Bauldwine, whose Reigne continued eighteene yeares: And after him succeeded his Cousine Germaine

III. Bauldwine, second of the name, who (before) was Count of the Isle in Flanders, and of Edessa in the Easte, Sonne to the Count of Rethell, who reigned thirteene yeares, or thereabout. He dyed in the yeare of Grace, One thousand, one hundred, thirty and one, and dying, left the kingdome to his Eldest daughter Millesena, wife to IIII. Foulques, Count of Anion, who in regard of his wife, was the Fourth King of Ierusalem. His Reigne lasted eleauen yeares, and dying in the yeare of Grace, One thousand, one hundred forty and two, left for King his eldest Sonne

V. Bauldwine, third of the name: who dying in the yeare, One thousand, one hundred, threescore and three, left the Kingdome to his Brother

VI. Amaury, who deceassed in the yeare, One thousand, one hundred, threescore and thirteene; and left for Successour his Sonne

VII. Bauldwine, Fourth of the name, who reigned but Eight moneths onely: so that by his death, the Crowne of Ierusalem came to his Mother

IX. Sybilla (Sister to Bauldwine the Meazeled, wife to Guy of Lusignan) Sonne of Hugh le Brun, Count of Lusignan, and de la Marche, Ninth King of Ierusalem. Vnder whose reigne Raymond descended of the Auncient Countes of Tolosa, Count of Tripoly (of whom we haue formerly spoken) denyed the Christian Faith, and was Circumcised according to the false Lawe of Mahomet, yeelding himselfe to take part with Saladine: thereby betraying King Guy and the Christian Armie. Which wicked deede, gaue a great checke to the Christian Princes, and no meane hope to the Sultane Saladine, to chase them quite out of Palestine, and out of al which they possessed there beyond the Seas.

The Count of Tripoly denyes his Christian Faith, and the harm s ensuing thereon.

And thereupon, the Truce being broken, as we haue already said, by surprizing the Mother of Saladine, and the bad intelligence of Raymond of Tripoly: Saladine ouerthrew a puissant Armie, and besiedged the strong City of Acres, otherwise named Ptolomais, then held and commanded by the Knights of the Temple, and the Hospitallers of Saint Iohn of Ierusalem, to whom the King of Ierusalem Bauldwine had giuen it. The Christian Armie was vanquished in a fought Battaile (when the Count of Tripoly played the Traytour, as before you haue heard) and tooke prisoner King Guy, with the true Crosse, and a great number of spoyles, rich in value.

The City of Acres called Ptolomais.

By this surprizall of the holy City, the Kingdome of Ierusalem ceassed, and tooke ending, when it had beene held by the Latine Christians fourescore and eight yeares. And the descendants of Saladine, Sultanes of Ægypt, held it three hundred and thirty yeares; when the Great Turke Selim (growing mightie in Armes) conquered from the Sultanes of Ægypt the City of Ierusalem, which the Turkes (in the Arabian language) call Godsbarich, and by an other name Cuzumobarech, which signifieth A Holy Cittie, and which they left in such estate, as they conquered it from the Mammelukes: not in regard of any deuotion, but for the great taxations and tributes which they had by Christian Pilgrimes, to whom for benefite they granted accesse and entrance.

The ending of the Kingdome of Ierusalem held by the Latine Christians.

Now although King Philip Augustus, and his youngest Sonne Saint Lewes King of France, King Richard of England, the Infidells terror and affright in his time, and the Emperours of Germany, made infinite voyages for recouery of the Holy Land: yet notwithstanding, their attempts haue beene without vigour, for any way helping the holy City, which the Miscreants haue held euer since Saladine became Maister thereof, in the yeare, one thousand, one hundred, fourescore and seauen.

All the Christians forces haue failed of recouering Ierusalem.

After the taking of Guy of Lusignan, last King of Ierusalem in effect: the Christians were wholly expelled out of the Holy City, and had not any more command there.

King

King Guy, and the Great Maister of the Templers, at the end of two yeares, by paying the price of a great ransome, were deliuered out of prison. By the death of Queene Sybilla and her children; during the Siedge of Ptolomais; the Crowne of Ierusalem fell to Isabell, who was Sister to Queene Sybilla.

IX. Isabell had fiue husbands, Emfroy, Conrad, and in third marriage shee was Wife to

X. Henry, Count Palatine of Champaigne and Brie, who was not Crowned King of Ierusalem: after whose death, she espoused in fift mariage

The Issue of Isabell Queene of Ierusalem.

XI. Amaury of Lusignan, Brother to King Guy. Queene Issabell deceasing, the Crowne departed from the house of Lusignan: By her first Husband Emfroy, Counte of Toron, she had not any Children: By her second Husband Conrad, Marquesse of Montferrat, she had but one Daughter named Mary, Queene of Ierusalem: By Henry of Champaigne her third Husband, she had two daughters; Alix, Queene of Cyprus, and Phillip, Wife to Ayrard de Brenne, who contended for the Countie of Champaigne, and thereupon ensued the decree which we haue obserued, speaking of the Peeres of France. By Amaury of Lusignan her fift Husband, she had a Sonne that died young, and two Daughters, Sybilla, Wife to Leo, First King of Armenia, and Melizena, Wife in second mariage to Boemond, third Prince of Antioche. After the death of Queene Isabell, the Crowne of Ierusalem came to her Eldest Daughter Mary, Wife to Iohn de Brenne, and in this mariage were borne two Daughters, Yoland and Martha.

Yoland was wife to Frederick, King of Sicilie, who had no Children by his Wife; and yet notwitstanding, his Successours in the Kingdomes of Naples and Sicilie, haue caried the title and Armes of Kings of Ierusalem, euen to this day.

The other Daughter was

Martha, Wife to Bauldwine, last Latine Emperour of Constantinople, as hath beene said already.

Iohn de Brenne was in France to craue succour, when King Phillip Augustus departed out of this life to the Kingdome of Heauen, in the Citty of Mante, the yeare of Grace, One thousand, three hundred twenty and three, in the Ides of Iuly. The Masse for his Obsequies and Funerall, was said and celebrated by Conrad; Bishop Du Port, Cardinall and Legate to the Sacred Seate, for the warre of the Abbigenois Heretiques; with William, Archbishop of Rheimes, Cardinall of Saint Sabina, both singing together, and in one keye or noate, at two Altares one neere the other, to whom answered two Bishops, Priests and Monkes.

The death of King Phillip Augustus, in Anno, 1223.

Missam exequialem celebrarunt simul Portuensis Episcopus, & Remensis Archiepiscopus Vna Voce ad duo Altaria propinqua, ceteris Episcopis, cum Clericis & Monachis, quorum aderat multitudo, assistentibus, & eis respondentibus, sicut Vni. Intér quos adfuit, & Ioannes Illustris Rex Hierosolymitanus, qui in Franciam venerat, pro negotijs, & necessitatibus Terræ Sanctæ, So saith Rigordus.

The liberall bounty of King Phillip Augustus.

The said King Phillip Augustus (by his will and Testament) Legacied for the affaires in the Holy-Land, Three hundred thousand Parisian Poundes: To the said King Iohn de Brenne, One hundred thousand: To the Order of the Templers, One hundred thousand: And to that of the Hospitable Knights of Saint Iohn of Ierusalem the like summe of an hundred thousand Pounds of Paris.

He attempted a Voyage beyond the Seas, in the time of the King Saint Lewes, to re-obtaine the Holy-land; wherein were these Chiefe men.

An other Voyage for the Holy-Land.

THibault, King of Nauarre, First of the name, Count Palatine of Brie and Champaigne, Fift of the Name.
Peter Maucler, Duke of Bretaigne.
Henry, Count de Barre.
Amaury, Count de Montfort.
Richard de Chaumont.
Lancelot de l'Isle.

And

And many great Lords of France, Nauarre, Germany, and other places. The King of Nauarre, beeing chosen Chiefe, and Captaine Generall of this holy enterprise: left the Gouernment of his Kingdome to Queene Margaret of Bourbon his wife, and to the Bishop of Pampelona Dom Pero Ximenes his Chancellour, and they vndertooke the voyage in the yeare of Grace, One thousand, two hundred, thirty and eight.

The King of Nauarre Generall of the Armie.

The Christian Armie desiring to Embarke at Geneway, for their more speedy passage into the East; were delayed for a time, and afterward vtterly denyed by the Geneways. So that they were enforced to take a further way about, by Germany, Hungary and Thrace to Constantinople, and from thence to passe the Bosphorus, as also the Straite at Mountaine Taurus, where the Sarrazins were met together in huge multitudes, to hinder the passage of the Christians. And now to speake the truth of their Armie, after they had sustayned infinite annnoyances, & miserable scarsitie of victuals; it came to Antioch, but so rent and shaken, that they which were left remaining, could not performe any great act of Armes in the Holy Land. Onely through bad intelligence of the Christians; diuided among themselues; by the secret practises and plottings of the second Emperour Fredericke, a deadly enemy to the French, and pertaker with the Infidells.

The Christian voyage vtterly disappointed.

So that King Thibault, the Princes, Lords, and Knights which were left of the Armie, cut and squared into two parties: were compelled to take the Seas, and passe home againe into their Countries.

Their returne heme againe.

In the yeare of Grace, One thousand two hundred forty and eight, the King Saint Lewes vndertooke a voyage ouer the Seas, to recouer the Holy Land, and succor the poore Christians, ill entreated by the Sarrazins.

We haue before reported, that Bauldwine, second of the name, Fift and last Emperour of Constantinople, made a passage for France in the yeare, One thousand, two hundred and forty, onely to obtaine ayde, for better furnishing the occasions, greatly disioynted and out of frame: they of Lascaris hauing their ascendant vpon him. Bauldwine continued in France aboue three yeares, and during his voyage, hee had giuen the Gouernment of his Empire, to the King Iohn de Brenne his Father in Law. For succour of the Frontiers or borders, and (in some measure) to defray the charges of his iourney; he engadged to the Venetians, all the Reliques in Constantinople, which yeelded him great summes of money.

Iohn de Brenne Gouernour of the Empire in the absence of Bauldwine.

The King Saint Lewes released their engadgement, and caused them to be brought to the Chappell Royall in his Pallace at Paris, by him newly builded of admirable structure, vpon the old foundation of the Chappell Royall, belonging to King Robert, Sirnamed the Deuoute, called Our Lady of the Starre. Euery yeare, the last day of September, is celebrated the receiuing of those Reliques in the same holy Chappell, where Diuine Seruice is said on the Eeue and day by the Mendicants, and in other Monasteries of Paris, and it is reported, that S. Lewes sent part of the Crowne of Thornes, and of the true Crosse, to the Cathedrall Churches of Pampelona and Tolledo.

By the engadgement, or rather forcible carrying away of so many precious Reliques from Constantinople, hauing bin there so long time carefully kept; a great rumour arose among the Inhabitants: which was much furthered by the absence of Bauldwine, and death of Iohn de Brenne, whose wise conduct and vigilancy, held a seuere restraint vpon all insolent presumption. After his death, the Lescaris of Adrianople and of Trebisonde began to appeare, at which sad tydings, Bauldwine passed presently into Greece, where being arriued, his credit was so lost, and such a sad face set on all affaires for him: that no hope being left of any comfort in this case, he deliuered his Son (but very young in years) to certaine Merchants of Bruges, to be sent away for Flanders, with all his money and Iewells.

Murmour in Constantinople for losse of the Reliques, and troubles ensuing thereon.

The Lescaris, Father & Son in Law, dying in the interim of these molestations; Michael Paleologus, Tutor to the Sons of young Theodor Lascaris, awaked all his Familiars and acquaintance; and by the death of the Children in their minority, he caused himselfe to be nominated for Emperour of Greece. In a fought Battaile, he tooke William, Prince of Antioch, Prisoner, who was enforced (for his redemption) to yeeld him the strong City of Epidaurus in Achaya.

The rising of Michael Paleologus to the Empire.

Paleo-

Paleologus so well managed his victory, that soone hee shewed himselfe before Constantinople, where the French, beeing vnable to hold that potent Citty by their strength, and the people therein beeing their mortall enemies: Bauldwine the Emperour, Iustinian the Patriarch of Constantinople (with all the Latines) left the City, returning backe againe into Europe. So that without striking a stroake, Paleologus gaue ending to the Latine Empire, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand, two hundred, Fifty and nine, the French hauing held Constantinople fiue and fifty yeares onely.

The ending of the Latine Empire in Bauldwine.

As for the Christians in Palestine, they had a litle strength and courage left them, notwithstanding their hard handling by the Sultanes of Damas and Ægypt. Whereupon the good King Saint Lewes, seeing himselfe deliuered from all his enemies, his Kingdome in quiet, hauing a wise mother and a wife that dearely affected him, with a number of godly children, and himselfe in the prime and floure of his age, he determined to crosse the Seas.

He tooke the Croisade, Scrippe and Pilgrimes Staffe, at the hands of the Bishop of Paris, his Curate: And with him were Crossed as followeth.

With a great number of Abbots, and men of the Church.

This Religious King Saint Lewes departed from the Citty of Paris, to passe away on this voyage beyond the Seas, on Fryday after Pentecoste, In the yeare of Grace, One thousand, two hundred forty, and eight, hauing for Legate in the Christian Armie Eudes, the venerable Bishop of Tuscula, sent by Pope Innocent the Fourth to Lyons, to which place he was withdrawne by his permission, to shun the fury of the Emperour Frederick the Second.

The setting on o the Christia Armie.

From Lyons, the King went to take Shipping at Marseilles, the fiue and twentieth day of the Moneth August, the same yeare, One thousand, two hundred fortie eight. This embarking was not done at Aiguemortes, as some great Chroniclers haue written, who haue followed the words of another William of Nangis, Monke of Saint Denys, in the Life of the said King Saint Lewes. Wherefore hee is to correct his passage in the foure and twentieth Chapter. Tandem Rex ad portum Aquarum mortuarum perueniens, and say, Portum Massilienſium. And in the same Chapter, where he speaketh of Saint Lewes his arriuall in Cyprus. Rex a portu recedens, & duce Dunuigans die Iouis ante festum Sancti Mathei Apostoli de nocte in Cypro Nimotitum applicuit. He should say Nemosium, a Porte of the Sea, built by Guy of Luzignan, first King of Cyprus, and called at this present Lemisso.

The Anny tooke Shipping at Marseilles.

Wee haue sayde, that in the Voyage of Phillip Augustus, at the taking of the strong Citty of Acres, there were two Admiralls Prisoners, the one of them beeing named Karacux, by whose councell and aduise (as they beyond the Seas were perswaded) the Sultane Saladine had conquered the great Estates which hee possessed. Phillip hauing commaunded, that hee should bee brought before him, at the first sight, despised the pouerty of his outward appearance. But hauing vnderstood by the Latine Lords, dwelling there beyond the Seas, what excellency of spirit was in this Miscreant; he entreated and coniured him by his honour, to giue him true and faithfull aduise and councell, in such matters as he would then demand of him.

Karacus, one of the Admirals taken by the Christians.

The Sarrazin answered, that there was no neede of praying and supplicating, to cause and winne aduise from him by way of Councell: because quoth hee) the name of Counceller carryeth along with it, an obligation of speaking and Councelling the Truth, and giuing his iudgement in soundnesse of conscience. For the name of Counceller is so sacred of it selfe, as hee that beareth Title thereof: ought to haue his word and fayth inuiolable, and in much greater commendation, then the title of an honest or wise man. And therefore Sir, saide hee, I will freely giue you mine aduise, in such demands as you can vse to mee. Hauing thus spoken, hee caused a Basin of cleane water to bee brought: and after hee had therewith washed his face, hands and feete, according to the Lawe of the Prophet Mahomet: hee bowed his body downe towards the ground, adoring Heauen, by exhalting his hands vp thereto. Then the King made this demaund to him.

The Sarrazins answere to King Phillip Augustus.

What meanes may the Christians vse, whereby to make themselues Maisters of the Holy Land: And to keepe and defend it against the Sarrazins?

The demand of K. Phillip.

Karacux much astonished at such a demand, first crying out aloud, returned this answer to our Conquerer.

The Answere of Karacux to the Demaund of King Phillip Augustus: First as it is Recorded in French, and then Englished.

Sachez que ce Iour sera la cause de la ruine totale de nostre Nation; & puis qu'il est impossibile d'Aller contre la Prescience Diuine, & que par icelle ie suis force d'en predire ce qui en aduiendra quelque Iour, Ie vous Dis, que quand vous auriez acquis cette Terre que vous appellez Saincte, & que l'eussiez entourree d'vne forte muraille de Fer, ou de Diamant, & remplie de Soldats indomptables (comme vous en auez) pour la garde d'icelle, il vous est impossibile de vous y maintenir, sans auoir au prealable acquis, & Conqueste l'Egypte. Vous autres Chrestiens estes les plus fortz sur la Mer, & abondez en Vaisseaux, & Hommes experts au faict de la Marine, il vous est fort facile de vous en rendre Maistres. Toute l'Egypte depend du Nil, c'est sa Murraille, sa Barriere, & sa Mere-nourice: la Mer la borne d'vn coste, rendez-vous en les Maistres, vous n'aurez plus de besoin de mandier les moyens de garder le Royaume de Hierusalem. Vos Princes les Premiers Rois d'Iceluy, se rendirent Seigneurs, auecques peu de forces, d'Alexandrie, & de Pelouze; s'ils les eussent gardees, nostre Religion, long temps, a seroit exterminee: Priuez les Egyptiens des Commoditez du Nil, & de la Mer, & leur ostez la Nauigation, la grande Vile du Caire & toute l'Egypt vous tendront les Mains. Faictes autant ou plus de'stat d'vne Armee Maritime, que d'vne Terrestre, c'est le plus seur Conseil que ie vous peux donner.

Know therefore, that this day will be the cause of the totall ruine of our Nation; And seeing it is impossible, to goe against the Prescience or Diuine foreknowledge, and thereby am forced to foretell that which shall one day come to passe: I tell you Sir, that when you haue wun this Land, which you call Holy, and shall haue engirt it with a strong wall of yron, or Diamond, and filled it with vnconquerable Soldiours (as you haue done) for the guard thereof; it is impossible for you to maintaine your selfe here, vntill you haue first of all wunne and conquered Ægypt. You Christians are the strongest on the Seas, and abound in shipping and men expert in the Arte of Naugation: it is very easie for you to become Maisters. The Ægypte dependeth vpon Nilus, that is her wall, her Barricadoe, and her Nursing Mother. The Sea boundeth it on the one side, and maketh you Maisters, you haue no needs to craue any better meanes, for keeping the Kingdome of Ierusalem. Your Princes the first Kings thereof, made themselues Lords (with few forces) of Alexandria, and of Pelouze: If they had kept them, our Religion had beene here long time since quite exterminated. Deprive the Ægyptians of the commodity of Nilus, and of the Sea, and take away their Nauigation: the great Citty of Cayro, with wholly all Ægypt, will shake hand with you. Make as much, or rather more account of a Nauall or Sea Armie, then of a Land; and this is the very sure Councell that I can giue you

Saint Lewes could credite this councell giuen to his Grandfather, and departing from Cyprus, descended thence to Damieta, which the Sarrazins forsooke in feare and frightment. He concluded to besiedge Babylon, the Capitall City of Ægypt, he ouerthrew his enemies in two foughten Battailes; the first at Massorre, where was slaine his Brother Robert, Counte of Artois; the other at Rexill. After which the Pestilence beeing dispersed in the Christian Armie, the King resolued of his returne to Damieta. Vpon his retreate, the Sarrazins possessed themselues of the passage, and the King beeing sicke, and very soare wounded; was taken prisoner at Cazell.

Babylon, the chiefe Citty of Egypt, it is now called Bayalerk.

The ransome of his person, was the reddition of the Citie of Damieta to the Sarrazins: And for his Armies ransome, the summe of foure hundred thousand pounds, which was weighed by Ballances, tenne thousand pounds in the Scale. Word was brought to the King, that tenne thousand pounds were faued in the first payment, by miscounting one Ballance weight to the Sarrazins. Whereupon the King commaunded Phillip de Montfort (who had the charge of the payments) to render backe the summe miscounted, and not to depart thence, till he saw it payed.

The worthy and Royall minde of the King S. Lewes.

Which condemneth their folly and rashnesse, who haue written, that the King gaue in pawne to the Sarrazins, the holy Sacramentall Hoast, for want of the pr... mis...

mised payment. And the proofe of the contrary appeared, in that King Lewes (after his deliuerance) continued fiue yeares beyond the Seas, where while he soiourned; he caused to be newly engirt with walles, the Citties of Sidon, Iaffa and Cæsarea, which droue the Sarrazins to no meane amazement, at the greatnes and Riches of the King, and of the Realme of France.

Saint Lewes, before his returne into France, made a Truce with the Soldane of Ægypt and of Damas for tennne yeares, and left great store of money with the Christians beyond the Seas, for repayring the Citties of Tyre, of Tripoly, of Syria, and the Citty of Acres, which was then the Seate Royall in the Holy Land: And wherein made their residing, the Patriarch of Ierusalem; the Great Masters of the Templars, Hospitallers of Saint Iohn, and other Orders of Religion, ordained in the East.

The City of Acres the Seat Royall of the holy Land.

The Truce of tenne yeares being expired, the Soldane of Babylon besiedged Tripoly, wherinto he entred forcibly, in the yeare one thousand, two hundred, fourscore and nine. Those of Tyre, Sydon and Baruth were taken the yeare before: None remained but the strong Citty of Acres, the dongeon and defence of the poore Christians, which were remaining beyond the Seas.

Tripoly and othe Citties wun from the Christians.

Mulech Sapherapes, Sonne to Helpis, Soldane of Babylon, who had conquered Tripoly planted Siedge before this Cittie, in the yeare, One thousand, two hundred, fourescore and Eleauen, and tooke it perforce, putting to the edge of the Sword, Twelue thousand Christians, which he found therein, racing it downe quite to the ground, and transporting the ruines thereof into remote countries, and leauing desolation where it stood.

The woefull Massacre of twelue thousand Christians.

Et Seges est vbi Troia fuit.

In this manner ended the holy Warre, and Conquest of the Idumean Lands by our French Princes, who had possessed them about two stundred yeares, to wit, from the yeare, One thousand, fourescore and nineteene, vntill the taking of Acres: And the holy Citty had no more Patriarches of the Latine name. At such time as Saladine became Maister thereof; he permitted all Christians to dwell there (the Latines excepted) according as yet they doe.

No more Patriarchs of the Latine name.

Phillip de Valois, King of France, Sixt and last of the name, obtayned of the Soldane of Babylon Karlatey, about the yeare of Grace, One thousand, three hundred, thirty Sixe, that the Gray Friers of the Latine Church might be lodged in Ierusalem, and preferred with the other Religions, to haue the Holy Sepulcher in perticuler keeping, which is obserued to this day. So that from three yeares to three yeares, of the same Family is sent to Ierusalem, that is to say, a certaine number of Religious Graye Fryers, of the Latine tongue. The Guardian whereof hath power and Authoritie, to weare the Crosse and Miter; to absolue sins, reserued to the Holy Seate, and to create Knights of the Order of the Holy Sepulcher, as sometimes formerly did the Patriarches of the Latine Church there at Ierusalem.

Gray Fryers sent euery three yeares to Ierusalem.

The Order of Cyprus, and of Luzignan: Called, Of the Sword. Instituted in the yeare, One thousand, one hundred, Foureſcore and Fifteene, by Guye of Luzignan, King of Ierusalem, and of Cyprus.

L'Ordre de Cypre et de Luzignan, dict de L'espee

CHAP. II.

The Originall and Genealogie of the Kings of Cyprus, and of Armenia.

HE haue heeretofore obserued, in speaking of the voyage made beyond the Seas, by Phillip Augustus, King of France, and Richard, King of England; that these two Princes beeing arriued in Sicilie, a quarrell and contention grewe betweene them, for the diuorce done by the same Richard, to Madame Alix of France,

Sister to King Philip. In ſtead of whom, King Richard tooke to Wife Madame Berenguela, or Berengaria of Nauarre, daughter to the King of Nauarre Sancio, Seauenth of the name, called the Wiſe. Which repudiation (vpon no ſubiect) was the cauſe of great Warres betweene both the Kingdomes, and that the Engliſh were diſpoſſeſſed of whatſoeuer they held in France.

Berenguela, or Berengaria Wife to King Richard of England.

Philip parted firſt from the Iſle of Sicilie, and went to Ptolomais. Richard celebrated his new Nuptialls in Sicilie, where while he ſoiourned; there landed his Sister Ioane or Iane of England, Widdow to William, Second of the name, King of Sicilie, who was then returned from the Holy Land. She related to him, that the violent Tempeſt hauing throwne her on the coaſte of the Iſle of Cyprus, the Duke thereof named Iſaacke Comnenes, laboured to make ſeizure of her Shippe, and to carry her away for fulfilling of his luſtfull pleaſure: ſo that ſhe was compelled (for ſafetie of her honour) to aduenture on the Sea againe, notwithſtanding the extremity of the Tempeſt. This Widdow Princeſſe was very beautifull and young, and in her ſecond Marriage, ſhe had Count Raymond of Toloſa, Father to the laſt Count Raymond, Father in Law to Monſieur Alphonſius of France, Count of Poictiers.

Richard of England, Sirnamed Coeur de Lyon for his valiancy, in ſtead of ſayling towards Ptolomais, went and tooke landing in Cyprus, where he ſhewed ſuch ſteame behauiour, that ſpoyling and ranſacking the whole Iſland: he lead away thence priſoners in Triumph with him, the Duke Comnenes, his Wife, and their onely daughter. And as for the Iſle of Cyprus, he ſold it to the Knights Templers, paying the ſumme of fiue and twenty thouſand Markes of money. This Sale was done in the yeare, One thouſand, one hundred foureſcore and tenne, according as Rigordus hath noated in the life of our King Philip Auguſtus. Richardus Inſulam Cypri quam ipſe in tranſitu ſuo ceperat, Templerij pro viginti quinque Millibus Marcarum Argenti vendidit. Poſt modum vero ab ipſo ablatam Guidoni quondam Regi Hieroſolimitano perpetuo habendum ſecundo vendidit. The Templers going to take poſſeſſion, and to enioy the Iſland as their owne: found ſharpe reſiſtance, ſo that after ſome few Battailes, and much expence of blood on either ſide; they would haue no more medling with the Greeks, coniured and deadly enemies to the Latins, but redeliuered the Iſle of Cyprus into the power of King Richard of England, who ſolde it the ſecond time to Guy of Luzignan, for the ſumme of an hundred thouſand Crownes of Gold, forty thouſand payed downe in ready money, and threeſcore thouſand remaining, payable at a certaine time agreed on betwçene them.

King Richard his reuenge for his Sisters wrong.

King Richard ſold Cyprus to the Templers, and afterward to Guy of Luſignan.

This is the ſame Guy of Luzignan, of whom we ſpake before, that had bin King of Ieruſalem, by meanes of his wife Sybilla, Sister to Bauldwine the Leaper, Queene of Ieruſalem after the death of his Sonne Bauldwine, Fift of the name. And this Guy of Luzignan being priſoner to Saladine, was redeemed by Queene Sybilla his wife; Who dyed of a diſſenterie, with foure children of hers and her husband Guy, at the Siedge of Ptolomais, taken from Saladine by the ſaid Guy of Luzignan, being aſſiſted by the Kings of France and England.

A further relation of Guy of Luzignan.

By meanes of the death of Queene Sybilla, the Crowne of Ieruſalem fell to her Sister Iſabell, the wife of five Husbands. From Emfroy, Count of Thoron, ſhe cauſed her ſelfe to be ſeperated vpon no occaſion, by the cunning deuiſes of Conrad of Monferrat, who would needes be a King; whereupon he marryed her, and of this marriage enſued a daughter, obſerued in our precedent diſcourſe. Emfroy, wholly tranſported with rage and fury, made a bargaine with two Aſſaſſines, to murder Conrad. The buſines being performed, and the promiſed payment deferred: the ſame murderers (in like manner) killed their Merchant. So by the death of Conrad, Queene Iſabel marryed three other Husbands afterwards, each in their due place, according as wee haue before declared, and all of them bearing the title of Kings of Ieruſalem.

Queene Iſabel the Wife of five Husbands.

Guy of Luzignan, in the yeare, One thouſand, one hundred, foureſcore and twelue, bought the Iſle of Cyprus of Richard, King of England, for the ſumme of money before mentioned: And the yeare following, he landed there, to take poſſeſſion as Lord thereof. He eſtabliſhed his Court in the Citty of Nicoſia, which King Richard of England deſtroyed, and cauſed to be rebuilded the Olde Lemiſſo (the very neereſt Port of of Cyprus to the Holy Land, ruined by King Richard) and he gaue it the name of Neapolis, which the Monke of Saint Denys in the life of Saint Lewes, calleth by the name of Nimothium.

At his comming to Cyprus, he brought in Company with him thither his Brother Aimery, or Amaury of Luſignan, Conſtable of Ieruſalem, and hee made him the firſt Conſtable of Cyprus; alſo he was afterward King of Ieruſalem, and of Cyprus. He procured the ſaid Iſland to be peopled with fifteen thouſand perſons, brought from the Cities and Townes beyond the Seas, of the Latine Tongue. Among which company were three hundred Knights, and two hundred Eſquires, all Gentlemen of good fame, and of France, who had parted from their Countrey at ſundry Croiſiades: Among whom alſo hee diuided the whole Iſland of Cyprus, giuing to the Eſquires the Title of Lords, and to the Knights the honour of High Barrons. Among the reſt he proportioned good Lands, where they might addict themſelues to Tillage and Husbandry, by meanes wherof, the Iſland (which before was deſart and barren) began to ſhew a more magnificent countenance.

Amaury of Luzignan, Conſtable of Ieruſalem and the firſt of Cyprus, Brother to King Guye.

In the yeare, One thouſand, one hundred, foureſcore and fifteene, hee made the Aſſiſes of Cyprus: ſo ſaith Georgius Buſtronius in his Hiſtory of that Iſland: This he did, for gouerning the people in times to come, according to the Cuſtomes of France; which ſome tearme Ordinances or Eſtabliſhments, and are by the Regiſters of Paris called Stabilimenta.

Lawes and Orders for gouernment of the people.

Godfrey, Duke of Lorraine, Firſt King of Ieruſalem, ordained and eſtabliſhed theſe Aſſiſes, and appointed, that ſuch as were conquered people, ſhould thence forward be ruled and ordered by Aſſiſes and Benches of Iuſtice, anſwerable to the maners of France. The City of Ieruſalem was taken by the Sultan Saladine, the ſecond day of October, One thouſand, one hundred, foureſcore and ſeauen, from Guy of Luzignan, laſt King thereof in full effect. And hee deſiring to encreaſe his Kingdome of Cyprus, would haue it to be pollicied and ruled by the ſame Ordinances, as Ieruſalem was before her ſurprizal, which Aſſiſes were ſtill kept in Cyprus, from the yeare, One hundred, foureſcore and fifteene, vntill the yeare, One thouſand, fiue hundred, threeſcore and tenne, when the Turkes poſſeſſed themſelues thereof.

The firſt Ordainer of thoſe Aſſiſes.

In the ſame yeare, One thouſand, one hundred, foureſcore and fifteene, the ſame Guy of Luſignan, King of Ieruſalem and of Cyprus, tooke ſuch Order: that the ſame Title remained to his Succeſſours in that Kingdome, with addition alſo of the King of Armenia, and carrying the Armes of thoſe Kingdomes.

The Titles remaining to him and his Succeſſours.

The Inſtitution of the Order.

Moreouer, the ſame yeare, & in remembrance of ſo happie a beginnning, preſaging all all fortunate ſucceſſe to follow; He Inſtituted the Order of the Sword, the Collar whereof was compoſed of round Cordons of White Silke, wouen and twined into Loue-knots, enterlaced with the Leters S. and R. of the fineſt Gold. In the middeſt hung a cleſched Ouall of Gold, wherein was figured a Sword, the Blade all enamelled with Siluer, and the Hilt Croſſed and Floureddeluced of Gold. About the Ouall was engrauen this Legend in Latine: Securitas Regni.

The compoſition of the Collar.

The first Knights made of this Order.

He gaue this Order with his owne hand to his Brother Amaury, Conſtable of Ieruſalem and Cyprus, and to three hundred Barons, which hee had eſtabliſhed in his new Kingdome. And the day of Ceremony, was the Feaſt day of the Aſcenſion, in the Church of Saint Sophia, the Cathedral of Nicoſia, and there he made before them this remarkeable Oration in French.

Harangue de Guy de Luzignan, Roy de Hieruſalem et de Cypre.

Que tout Eſtat & Royaume eſtoit comparage au corps humain, dont le Roy faiſt la Teſte, la Nobleſſe le Bras droict; la Iuſtice le Gauche & le Tiers Eſtat le reſte. Qu'apres Dieu il mettoit l'aſſeurance & conſeruation de ſon nouueau Royaume en la Vaillance de ceſte genereuſe Nobleſſe, qui pour acquerir gloire auoit mis ſoubs les Pieds, le repos & plaiſirs d'vne vie otieuſe en leur Maiſon Paternelle au doux air de la France, pour courir la fortune & perils de la Mer, & viure en tout vn autre Element parmy des Natiõs incognues. Qu'il leur donnoit le Collier de l'Ordre de l'Eſpee, ayant telle eſperance, qu'ils employeroient la leur pour la manutention del'Egliſe Catholique, Apoſtolique & Romaine, le Seruice du Roy, Confort de la Iuſtice, Protection & defence des Veufues & Orphelins, & la Tranquilite du Peuple. C'eſt pourquoy il les exhortoit tous d'eſtre vnis & ioincts enſemble en Amour & Concorde, au nom de celuy qui eſt la meſme Paix, la Pere, le Fils, & le Sainct Eſprit.

The Oration of Guy of Luzignan, King of Ieruſalem and of Cyprus.

Euerie Eſtate and Kingdome, is aptly compared to the Bodie of Man; Whereof the King is the head, the Nobility the right arme; Iuſtice the left; & the third Eſtate of the people, all the reſt. And next vnder God, I place the aſſurance and conſeruation of this my new Kingdome, in the Valiancie of you my Generous Noblemen, who to winne glorie and renowne, haue trampled vnder your feete, the eaſe and pleaſures of a ſlothfull life, in the Houſes of your Fathers, and the ſweete ayre of France; to run the fortunes and perills of the Seas, and to liue whollie in an other Element, among vnknowne Nations. And I giue you the Collar of this Order of the Sword, as being poſſeſſed with hope, that it will be imployed for maintenance of the Catholique and Apoſtolique Churche, the Seruice of your King; the Comfort of Iuſtice; Protection and defence of Widdowes and Orphanes; as alſo the tranquilitie of the People. Wherefore I exhort and entreate you all, to be united and knit together in loue and concord: In the name of him that is the ſame Peace, the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt.

This was the Oath of the Barons of Cyprus, Knights of the ſaid Order; which by the appointment of the ſame King Guy, ought to bee giuen by the Conſtable of the Kingdome, or in his abſence, by the moſt Auncient Baron Knight who ſoone after ſent the ſame Oathe to the new made Knight, to bee Regiſtred in the Treaſure Chamber. At giuing the Oath, the ſame Ceremonies were obſerued, as are in France.

How the oath of the Order ſhould be giuen.

King Guy reigned but 3. yeares in Cyprus, and dying without iſſue (becauſe he was not re-marryed) in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand, one hundred, foureſcore and ſixteene, he left for Succeſſour in the Kingdome of Cyprus, his Brother Amaury of Luzignan, formerly Conſtable of Ieruſalem and Cyprus. But before we enter into the Liſt or Succeſſion of the Kings of Cyprus, by the Sirname of Luzignan; let vs peruſe ſomewhat concerning the Originall.

The death of King Guy and ſucceeding of his Brother.

Concerning the aduancement of Aquitaine into a Kingdome, by the Emperour Charlemaigne.

We haue obſerued in our ſixt Booke, and in this latter Tombe. Fol. 107. What Offices Charlemaigne eſtabliſhed, at ſuch time as he aduanced Aquitaine to be a Kingdome, in fauour of his Sonne Lewes the Debonnaire, the yeare of Grace, ſeauen hundred, dred, threeſcore and eighteene, when Seguin was Count of Bourdeaux, Thier of Auuergne, Athon of Poictou, and Turſin of Toloſa.

This Turſin was deſcended of the Houſe of Bourgongne, which Seigneurie was giuen to Sampſon, Couſine to the ſaid Turſin, both of them being Minnions and Fauourites of Charlemaigne: For, to ſay and title them his kinſemen (as indeed they were) were to commit Treaſon againſt the Maieſty of Kings, who haue none but Gods to their Kinſemen. And yet neuertheleſſe, as the fauours of Princes are not made faſt with Nayles of Diamonds to men whom they affect: ſo Turſin was deprined of his charge, giuen to William of Bourgongne, Brother to Sampſon. But after his death, if we may giue credit to ſome:

Turſin of the Houſe of Bourgongne.

Iſaurus, Sonne of Turſin, was reſeated in the Gouernement of Toloſa. And yet notwithſtanding, in the Regiſters of our Courts, where are ſet downe all the Genealogies of the greateſt houſes in France, according as Du Tillet hath brought them to light: there is not any mention made of this Iſaurus, the Sonne of Turſin or Curſon; but immediatly follow after William, Berengarius, and Bernard, in fauour of whom, Charles the Baulde adioyned to the County of Toloſa; Carcoſſonna and Rodez.

Iſaurus Sonne to Turſin, Gouernour of Toloſa.

This Bernard by his Wife Dhuodania, had William, who was Counte of Toloſa, after whom ſucceeded Pontius, that cauſed to be builded the Abbey of Saint Poncede Tumieres, betweene Pezenas and Carcaſſonna. Pontius was Father to Amery; Father of Raymond; Father of William (who entitled himſelfe Count and Duke of Toloſa, Albigeois, Quercy, Perigort, Carcaſſonna, Agenois, Aſtrac and Rodez) and of Bertrand, who was Count of Saint Gilles, Father of Raymond, Count of Saint Gilles, to whom Hugh Raymond pawned the County of Toleſa, for his going to the Holy Land with Godfrey of Lorrayne. This Genealogie maketh nothing to this diſcourſe, but only in this, that ſome will haue Brother to this Bertrand, Count of Saint Gilles, one named Girard, who (they ſay) had bin Count of Poictou: but that is further to be queſtioned.

William Count and Duke of Toloſa.

And the Chronicle of the Abbey of Monſtier-neuf in Poictiers, holdeth an other manner of relation, and ſaith: That Charlemaigne, ſeeking to aduance the Brethren of Sampſon, Duke of Bourgongne; made Ranulphe Duke of Aquitaine.

Charlemaigne, his aduancing the Brethren of Sampſon.

Albane Count of Poictou, Father to Albane, Second of the name, Count of Poictou: who by Atilda (Sirnamed Manberionna) his wife, had two Sonnes.

Girard, Count of Poictou: And Arnauld, who eſpouſed Ioane or Jane, the onely daughter to Rodolphe, Lord of Sanzay (at this preſent a County, and by making mariages, his deſcent tooke the Sirname and Armes of Sanzay, which is Eſcheeque de Gueules & d'Or. And by this mariage enſued many Children, the youngeſt whereof was named Thierry de Sanzay, who tooke to wife Ioſſelina, Daughter and only heire to the Houſe of Ventadour, whereof his deſcent tooke the Sirname, and retained L'Eſchiquier for their Armes: as yet is to be ſeene at this preſent Sur le Tout of thoſe of the Duke of Ventadour, a Peere of France, named Lewes, Knight of the Order of the Holy-Ghoſt, of whoſe Armes we haue made obſeruation in the Catalogue of them.

The Noble Houſe of Ventadour.

The youngeſt Sonne to the ſame Thierry de Sanzay, hauing ioyned in mariage in Picardie, neere to Heſdin, with Isquelina d'Auch, or Auxi (for we pronounce the X. for ch, Aux, Auch, Auxi, Auchy, as the Spanyards doe Xerez, Cherez, and ſo of other words) la Caſtell: the aduenturers in theſe mariages, tooke the Sirname of Auchy, and yet kept ſtill the Armes of Sanzay.

Girard, Count of Poictou, tooke to Wife Mathilda, daughter to Pepin, King of Aquitaine, Brother to King Charles the Bauld: who made the ſaid Girard Duke of Aquitaine after the death of William, Sonne to Ranulphe, Vncle by the Mothers ſide to Girard: And in this mariage was borne one only Sonne, named Mathilda, Daughter to the King of Aquitaine Pepin.

Ebles, but ſome ſay Eudes, Duke of Aquitaine, and Count of Poictou, who by the commaunde of King Charles the Baulde, his Vncle, cauſed to be ſhorne Monkes (the olde Chronicle adds thereto the word guelded) his Couſins by the Mothers ſide, Pepin and Charles, the Sonnes to Pepin, King of Aquitaine. Ebles had in Mariage Mathilda, the eldeſt of the foure Daughters to Henry, Duke of Saxonie, afterward Emperour, Firſt of the name, otherwiſe called the Birder. So that ſhe bare De Gueu- leg

les au Cheual tourne d' Argent, and Mathilda, Mother to Ebles, bare of the Kings of Aquitaine, which was as we haue already saide in a more conuenient place, Fuzele d'Or, & d'Azur. In this Mariage of Ebles of Poictou, and Mathilda of Saxonie, were borne three Children, Ebles, Arnoull; And

In the first Tome Chap. 11. Fol. 143.

Thietberga, a Wife and vertuous Princesse, Wife to Lothaire, King of Austrasia, whom he forsooke, to entertaine Waldrada, a bold shameleſſe Strumpet, and both of them dying excommunicated by the Holy-Church.

Arnoull, Castillian of Touars, tooke the title of Viscount, and in a brauery (to goe as a peere and equall with the Countes of Paris and Aniou, Predecessours of Hugh Capet) would needes beare De France, and tooke D'Or, seme de Fleurs de Lys d'Azur au Canton (droit) de Gueules, Armes retained by them of his descente, Viscountes of Touars, wasted into the House of Trimouille.

The Viscounts of Touars consumated into Trimouille.

Ebles, Second of the name, Duke of Aquitaine, and Count of Poictou, had to Wife Adela de Thuringe: Qui portoit d' Azur, au Lyon, tournesse d' Argent, & de Gueules. And in this Mariage was borne,

William Hugh, Duke of Aquitaine, and Count of Poictiers, who by Bonna his Wife, Daughter to Roollo, Duke of Normandie (whose Armes are knowne) had three Sonnes, to witt

William (Sirnamed Stuste-head, or Dull of Vnderstanding) Second of the name, Successour in the Seigneuries of his Father.

Ebles, Bishop of Limoges: And

Hugh, Lord and Count of Luzignan; the Subiect of this Genealogie.

The first Lord and Count of Luzignan.

William (Stuste-head) Second of the name, had two Wiues: By the first came no issue. His second Wife was Agnes de Sanzay, Daughter to Saldebrueill de Sanzay, who was the Foundresse of the Monastery of Nostre Dame de Xainctes, and of the Priorie of Saint Nicholas in Poictiers, and left great goods to the Abbey of the Trinitie in Angiers. In this Marriage was borne Guy of Poictou, Duke of Aquitaine, and Count of Poictiers: He was father of William Geoffery, Third of the name, who was maried twise, his first wife was Gista, Daughter to the Duke of Normandy, by whom she had a Sonne and a Daughter.

Mary of Poictou, of whom we shall speake hereafter, who (some say) ioyned in Mariage with the Count of Auuergne, which is false. For after Tthier, made the first Count of Auuergne by our King Charlemaigne; the Counts of Auuergne are named linealy in their Genealogie, in the Registers of the Parliament Court. So that they are meere fables, to deriue Countes of Auuergne, from the race of the Countes of Poictiers, descended of Albane, Brother to Sampson, Duke of Bourgongne.

The first Count of Auuergne being made by Charlemaigne.

The Sonne was William, Fourth of the name, Count of Poictou, and Duke of Aquitaine, Fift of the name.

William Geoffery had in his second mariage Constance, by others called Ioane or Iane, and they make her the only Daughter to Raymond, First of the name, Count of Tolosa: And of this mariage issued Raymond first of the name Count of Tolosa.

Hugh Aymon (some doe reckon two Brothers, wherein Du Tillet is mistaken) Count of Tolosa, who engaged his County to the Count of Saint Gylles his Cousine, as we haue said in our precedent discourse. The first Counts of Tolosa bare in Armes and Banners De Gueules, au Belier, ou Agnus Dei. And yet to this present, they of the Citty of Tolosa doe beare in Armes, De Gueules au dict Agnus Dei d'Argent portant vne Croix Clechee et Pommettee d'Or. Which are Armes borne by the last Countes of Tolosa, by the Sirname of Saint Gilles, in memory of Hugh Aymon Crossed for the Voyage to the Holy-Land: Escartele de Sainct Gilles de Gueules a Six Chasteaux d'Or Cantonne du Chastel Narbonnois d'vn coste, et del Eglise de Sainct Sernin de l'autre: le tout d'Argent, massonne de Sable, au Chef de France.

The Armes of the Counts of Tolosa.

William, Fourth of the name, Count of Poictou, and Duke of Aquitaine, Fift of the name; according to the relation of some, had to Wife Iane, Daughter to the King of Scots, a milde and peaceable Prince at the beginning of his rule: but plunged himselfe selfe afterward, into the gulfe of all vices, as Luxury, Auarice and Rapine. But principally he tooke delight, in doing iniury to men of the Church, and to Churches themselues, which he robbed and spoyled of their Ornaments and riches. And when Saint Bernard (who liued in his time) had many times written to him, to alter him from such vicious courses: He wrote to him againe, that he should correct the abuses of Prelates and men of the Church, as he endeauoured to doe. And much better was it, to imploye the Treasures of the Church, in maintayning Souldiours and men of Armes: then to be wasted vpon Priests, prostituted to all villanies, and who triumphed in nothing more, then consuming the Churches reuennues in Luxurie, rioting, superfluity of Garments, and belly-cheare.

A great abuse of Churches and men of the Church.

This Letter was the subiect of so many exhortations, which this worthy man of God Saint Bernard made, for correcting the riotous excesse of Prelates, and caused him to declame in these words.

Famous Saint Bernard liued in this mans time.

The Declamation of Saint Bernard.

Miramur, & de Prælatis nostri temporis quærimus, cuius Ordinis sint. In aggregatione Temporalium sese habent vt Laici: in apparatu vt Milites; in Vestitu vt Mulieres. Et tamen non laborant vt Laici; non militant vt Milites; non pariunt vt Mulieres. Ergo cuius Ordinis sunt? Nullius. Et quia nullius ordinis sunt, ibunt in locum vbi nullus ordo, sed sempiternus horror inhabitat,

We wunder, and enquire after the Prelates of our times, of what Order they are. In Temporall occasions they carry themselues like Laye-men: in Gallantrie like Knights, in Garments like Women. And yet notwithstanding, they labour not like Laye-men: they warre-fare not like Knights: neither doe they trauayle like Women. Wherefore, of what Order are they? Of none. And because they are of no Order, they must goe into the place where no order is obserued; but euerlasting and continually horror dwelleth.

The learned Remonstrances of this great Prelate (in his time the Mirrour of Nobility, for vertue and sanctity of life) brought backe this straying Prince of Aquitaine into the way of saluation. Immediatly he abandoned and forsooke the world, and went directly to Clerueaux, there to take on him the habite of a Monke. But Saint Bernard made him deniall of it, aduising him rather, to perfourme some works of true penitencie in his owne Countrey, to the end; that thereby he might giue example to his owne people, in repayring such faults as he had committed, and restoring to the Churches of God, such things as he had vniustly taken from them. This refusall made William resolue, to goe in the Croissade beyond the Seas, setting downe his will and Testament, in this manner.

The Prince reclaimed by the exhortations of Saint Bernard from his former bad courses of life.

The Will and Testament of William, Count of Aniou, and Duke of Aquitaine, before his going to the Holy-Land.

IN Nomine Sanctæ & indiuiduæ Trinitatis quæ est vna Deitas. Hoc est Testamentum quod ego Vuillelmus Dei gratia Comes Pictauiæ, & Dux Aquitaniæ, cum Domino Vualdino Episcopo, facio in honorem Saluatoris Mundi, & beatorum Martyrum, & omnium Confessorum, & Virginum, & maxime Virginis Mariæ, cogitans de meis innumerabilibus peccatis, quæ, suadente Diabolo, temere perpetraui: & timens tremendi Iudicij diem, videns bona, quæ tenere videmur, sicut fumum in aere, inter manus nostras euanescere; nosmet etiam in hac peregrinatione, sine peccato, vna hora non posse viuere, & satis paruo tempore manere, & omnia, quæ putamus possidere, esse caduca, & suis possessoribus grauamen; Commendo me Deo, quem relictis omnibus sequi volo. Filias meas in Regis Domini mei Ludouici protectione relinquo; Leonoram collocaturam cum Domino Ludouico Regis filio (si Baronibus meis placuerit) cui Aquitaniam, & Pictauiam in dote relinquo. Petronillæ vero filiæ meæ possessiones meas, quas, vt proles Gerardi Ducis Burgundiæ possidet, relinquo. Itaque ne videar degenerare, sed imitari vestigia Parentum meorum in bono opere, & commendare me Deo, & Sanctis eius, & in bonis operibus, societatem Seruorum Dei, & benedictionem accipere merear, Do omnibus Monasteriis Dominationis meæ Mille Libras Terræ distribuendas, prout Baronibus meis placuerit. Et quicumque hoc nostrum Testamentum disrumpere tentauerit, Excommunicatus à Deo, & Hominibus existat: Qui vero in hoc Testamento complendo fuerit Coadiutor, sit in omnibus bonis, & præmijs particeps. IN the name of the Holy and indiuidiall Trinity, which is one Diety. This is the Testament which I William Earle of Poictou and Duke of Aquitane, together with my Lord Willam, Bishop doe make, to the Honour of the Sauiour of the World, and of blessed Martyrs, and of all Confessors, and especially of the Virgin Mary, poudering mine innumerable sinnes, which vnaduisedly (by the perswasion of the Deuill) I haue committed: and trembling at the fearefull day of Iudgement. Seeing all those goods, which we seeme to inioye, doe vanish away from betweene our hands (as it were smoake in the aire) and that we our selues are not able to liue one hower without sinne in this our Pilgrimage, that we abide heere but a short tyme, and that all things (which we thinke are in our full possession) are fading, and a great burden to the possessors of them; I commend my selfe vnto God, whom (all other things set apart) I desire to seeke. My Daughters I leaue in the tuition of my Lord the King Lewes. Leonara, who will bestowe hir selfe with my Lord Lewes the Kings Sonne (if my Barons shall thinke it conuenient) on whom I confer Aquitaine and Poictieres for hir Dowry. But to my Daughter Petronilla I leaue my possessions which I enioye, as Offspring to Gerrard Duke of Burgondy. And also that I may not seeme to degenerate, but to imitate the footesteps of my Parents in this good worke, and to commend my selfe to God and his Saints, and that in good workes I may deserue the fellowship of the Seruants of God, and receiue his blessing: I giue to al Monasteries in my Dominion One thousand pounds land, to be distributed as it shall please my Barons. And whosoeuer shall goe about to breake this my Testament, let him be excommunicated both by God and Man. And let him that shall be an assistant in the ratifying of this my Testament, bee partaker of all good prayers. Amen.

The Seale of William Duke, & the Seale of Leonora, the Seale of the Counte of Auuergne, of the Lord of Thoarice, of Richild Baron of T. of the Rock Cauerd, of B. Count of S. Pontius.

This Testament finished, William left his two Daughters Eleanora and Peronnella at Bourdeaux, vnder the charge and custody of the Bishops and Barons of the Countrey, and the Tutelage of King Lewes le Gros. Afterward, he tooke the way to our Lady of Mont-Serrat, and thence to Saint Iames in Galicia, from whence he passed into the Holy Land: which hauing visited in an vnknowne habite: He returned backe to Rome, with three of his auncient Seruants, companions in his wearisome Pilgrimage, who with their Lord and Maister, tooke the habite of Hermites neere to Castillon in Thuscanie, and in this deuout intention were followed by many worthy persons more.

He becometh an Hermit at Castillon

Duke William (very farre aduanced into yeares) dyed at the same Hermitage, called The Inne or Lodging of Rhodes, Stabulum Rhodis, in the Territory of Sienna, afterward tearmed, Male Vaux, Mala Vallis: Where is to be seene the place of his buriall, and some part of his Reliques. The most part of his body is in the Church of Saint Iohn Baptist at Castillon, a Towne distant about three miles from Male-Vale. He deceased about the yeare of Grace One Thousand, one hundred, fifty and sixe, or threescore. For his Holynesse of Life and miracles, he is placed in the Catalogue of Saints, and his feast celebrated in Italie the tenth day of February, and in France the tenth of Ianuary. He was Authour of the Hermites, called Guillemins after his name, and at Paris White-Cloakes, where is to be seene the Figure of this Holy man bearing a Standard of his Armes, which are D'Azur a six Bezans d'Argent, 3. 2. 1. au Chef D'Or.

The death of Duke William at Stabulum Rhodis.

The Hermits Guillemines, or White-Cloakes.

According to the appoinment in the Last Will of Duke William, his eldest Daughter Eleanor was maried to King Lewes the younger, Seauenth of the name. And Peronella espoused Raoull, who was Count of Vermandois, youngest Sonne to Monsieur Hugh of France, called the great Count of Vermandois. In second mariage the said Peronella enioyed Stephen, King of England: We haue obserued their descente, in the Tract of the Orders of England.

By the death of Eleanor of Aquitaine, Queene of England, ended the ligne and descente cent of the Counts of Poictou, with their name and Armes of Bourgongne and Poictou. She gaue for Armes to the Citty of Poictiers, L'Escu d'Or a Trois Bandes d'Azur a la Bordure de Gueules: Whereunto they of Poictiers added Vn Chef Eschiquete de Chasteaux d'Or, & de Gueules, to preserue the memorie of their first Armes, which were De Gueules a Trois Chasteaux d'Or, 2. 1.

End of the descent of the Counts of Poictou.

Sauary de Mauleon, Gouernour of Poictiers and Poictou during the warres of King Phillip Augustus, against the Princes of the House of England; caused the Inhabitants of Poictiers to leaue their first Armes, and made them to take D'Argent au Lyon de Gueules, a la Bordure de Sable chargee de Huict Bezans d'Or.

Sauary de Mauleon Gouernour of Poictiers.

Very credible it is, that in those times then, they of Poictiers caried those Armes in Honour of their Gouernour, or else to gratifie him: because they of this auncient House of Mauleon, descended of Poictou, and whereof there are of the same name in Gascoigne: Portoient de Gueules au Lyon d'Or. Armes well emblazoned, howsoeuer they answere to the Sirname Maulcon, Malus Leo.

The Armes of Poictou were (as we haue elsewhere said) answerable to them of Bourgongne: a House which the last Duke William, in the expresse words of his Testament saith, to be descended from Girard of Bourgongne.

And as for them of the Duchie of Aquitaine, they were different from them of Poictou, and the diuersity iustifieth it selfe by the Treaty of Peace, made by our King Saint Lewes, with Henry King of England, who had giuen succour to Hugh of Luzignan, Sonne to Hugh of Luzignan, Counte of Luzignan, de la Marche, and of Engoulesme, and who refused the Homage of his Lands to the Kings Brother.

Peace betweene the Kings Lewes, and Henry of England.

Monsieur Alphonsius of France, Count of Poictiers, by whom (as William of Nangis, in the Life of Saint Lewes, and the Registers of Parliament doe enstruct vs) the most part of the Homages of the said Duchie were annexed to the Crowne of France; and the name of Aquitaine quite extinct and abolished, with the auncient Armes thereof, which were Lozengees de Gueules, & d'Or. The name of Guienne remained in title of a Duchie, composed only of foure Seneschalships, for the Countries of Agenois, Limosine, Perigort and Querey. And the same King Saint Lewes ordained, that the Duchie of Guienne should beare for her Armes De Gueules, au Lyon passant d'Or. The first Ligne of Poictou being thus expedited and runne thorowe; let vs come to the Second, that of Luzignan.

The Duchie of Guienne & her Armes.

A Briefe Discourse concerning the Second Ligne or Race, namely of Luzignan.

WE haue before told you, that William Hugh, Count of Poictou and Duke of Aquitaine, had three Sonnes, William the Second, called (by a nick-name) William with the Stuffed head, Count of Poictou and Duke of Aquitaine;

William Hugh Count of Poictou & his three Sonnes.

Ebles, Bishop of Limoges; And

Hugh of Poictou, made Count of Luzignan (about sixe Miles from Poitiers) for his portion and parte, in the yeare of Grace Nine hundred, threescore and tenne. And that in the yeare of Grace one thousand, he espoused Mary, Lady of Mesle, or Mesles in Poictou: But others say of Scotland, and auouch this Lady to be Daughter to the Earle of Albanie by Sirname, and by the Armes of Scotland. In this Mariage was borne their only Sonne

Hugh, Sirnamed Bruno, in regard that his Father caused two names to be giuen him at the Fonte of Baptisme: his owne, which had bin giuen him by Hugh the Great, Father to the King Hugh Capet: and that of Saint Bruno, the Founder of Clugny. And from hence it is, that some Historians haue deceiued themselues, who, not vnderstanding the Originall of this second name of Bruno, and (by abbreuiation) Brun; haue made on Sirname of two imaginary Families, and so (consequently) haue feigned fantastick Armes for them.

Saint Bruno, Founder of the Abbey of Clugny.

Those of this Illustrious and Royall House of Luzignan, haue borne (for the most part) conioyntly together these two names Hugh-Brun. And as the Counts of Poictou, with the eldest Sonnes, did beare the Metalles of France, emblazoned with Bourgongne, as often times we haue repeated to you: Euen so Hugh the First, Count of Luzignan, to shew that he was the youngest Sonne, tooke for his Armes,

and

and for them of his Ligne and descent; Burele d'Argent et d'Azur de Dix pieces. And the Lyon de Gueules, was not added thereto, but long time after, at the Voyage to the Holy-Land, to be discerned from other Families, which bare the same Armes: as we haue more at large declared in the precedent discourse before this.

Of Hugh le Brun, the first Count of Luzignan and Mello.

Hugh le Brun continued an Orphane in young yeares, during which time, he was wisely gouerned by his Mother, a very vertuous Princesse, who wun herselfe great honour by his education: for he was thereby become a Prince (the best enstructed and the most compleate in all perfections) of his time. Of the Seigneurie of Luzignan, of Count Hugh, First of the name, and of that of Mello belonging to his wife, the Romancers haue formed the name of Meluzina; whereon they haue wrought wonders, and darkened the glory of the vertuous Princesse Mary of Albanie, with the title of a Sorceresse and Witche, yea, and haue made her a Sinck of all vncleanenesse. Where in those Romancers, and namely they that haue Romanted of Meluzina, and Geoffrey with the great Tooth, compacted and filled with lies and fables about the yeares One thousand, three hundred, fourescore and eight, or nine; haue very grossely mistaken themselues, especially in the date of the yeares, as we shall shew heereafter, For the Lady of Mello and of Luzignan, Mother to Hugh Brun, deceassed in the yeare, One thousand, forty and two: And Geoffrey Count of Luzignan, Sirnamed with the great Toothe (because he had in his vpper iawe a Tooth, which was greater then the rest, and hung somewhat downeward, liued in the yeare of Grace, One thousand, one hundred, foure score and tenne, eleauen, twelue, thirteene, foureteene, and so on.

The Romancers wronging the Lady of Mello.

Heereupon it was, that some Historiographers of Poictou, baptized with this name of Meluzina, or Meluzina, not the Mother of Hugh le Brun (because they had no apparance for it, by the date of Time:) but Mary of Poictou, Daughter to William Geoffrey, Duke of Aquitaine, and Count of Poictou, Third of the name, and of Gista of Normandie his first Wife. They make this Mary to haue bin maried, not to the Count of Auuergne, because they could not iustifie it: but to a Lord of Bretaigne, named Raymondin du Troisshic, or Croisshic in Bretaigne, neere to the mouth of the Riuer of Loire, who made his abyding at the same place, called at that time then Succinio. Further they say, that this Raymondin was Count de Foreest; which was the Firme Island, at this present called L'Isle de Ruys, which the said Raymondin and his Wife caused to be enclosed and engirt with walles, and ioyning thereunto this Castell of Succinio, they erected there a Monastery, in Honour of the Trinitie, wherein they were both buried after their death.

Errour in the Historiographers of Poictou.

Raymondin de Troisshic in Bretaigne.

Those Historiographers doe adde heereunto, that the world (in those times then) was so ignorant and grossely conceired, that throughout the whole extendure of a very spacious Countrey, were very rarely to be found two or three men, that knew how to write their owne names: So that those dayes afforded very little knowledge among men, and therefore the lesse gouernement and ciuility. Now, whereas (say they) Meluzina was most beautifull, vertuously honest, very ciuille, and extraordinarily well learned, appearing (in those times) as an Oracle of the Gods: Their wisedomes and capacities haue further commented thereon, concerning the greatnesse of her house and descent, as being of most Auncient and famous extraction, beside the power and authority of her Husband.

The ignorance and simplicity of elder times alledged.

They make her to be much dreaded and feared of the people, as an admirable creature, farre exceeding vulgar apprehension, yea, meerely wundred at; honoured and sought vnto by the Greatest Grands of those dayes; among whom she tooke delight to let her person be seene, contemning the frequency of people made of meane temper. But Raymondin her Husband, he was a man of more earthy and grosser composition, farre inferiour to the exaltation of spirit in his wife; couering his head with a Cappe of Iealousie, and complayning of his wiues too familiare priuacie. Which made him (thorowe his owne muddie imagination) to scratch his head with a Cuckoldes clawes, and to emblazon his Armes with a Coquelichin, releuated vpon the Creast of Acteon: for he would (though somewhat sparingly) tell his friends and familiars, that he had seene his Wife very conuersant with Serpents.

Wounde full reportes concerning Meluzina.

Now,

Now, the ignorant and blockishe vulgare, that neuer knew the auncient manner of Baptizing with the name of Serpents, such as caused the head-ake in a house, by casting in the kernells of Dioscorides his Apples: they forthwith imagined, that their Lady and Mistresse was halfe a woman, and halfe a Serpent. A populare errour, which serued as a copious & plentifull argument for fabulous Romancers, to feigne marrers of nouelty and wunder: creating her a Fayrie, capable of infinite meruailes, farre aboue the reach of nature, like to them reported by Saxo Grammaticus, in his History of Denmark.

The vulgare imagination of Meluzina in her shape.

And so farre preuayled the credit of those Romants, that (euen to this very day) the Families issued and descended of the Illustrious house of Luzignan, doe beare for the Creast of their Armes: Vne Dame nue dedans vne Baignoire a la facon d'vne Sirene, qui d'vne main peigne et agence ses Cheueux esparpillez sur ses Espaules, et de l'autre elle tient vn Miroir, la moitie du Corps representant celuy-la d'vne Femme d'admirable beaute, et l'autre moitie du Corps faicte en facon de Giure.

The Creast of the Armes belonging to the House of Luzignan.

A Lady naked in a Bathing-tub, after the manner of a Sirene or Maremaide, that with one hand Kembeth and trimmeth her locks of Hayre, dispersed vpon her shoulders: And in her other hand she holdeth a Looking-glasse. Halfe of her body representing a Woman of admirable Beauty, and the other halfe of her body formed like to a Serpent. And so haue I seene it many times painted at the Castell of Partenay, where lodged Monsieur de Malleoms, Gouernour of Poicton: with whom I continued, during the rebellion of the Citty of Poictiers, on behalfe of the League.

Moreouer, they giue to this Meluzina a great List or traine of Children, whom they make to be all renowned for prowesse and valiancie, she hauing so fashioned and ordered them with her owne hands, and endued them with so many rare perfections: that the meaner sorte of people, verily beleeued them to be Gods and Goddesses, newly descended from Heauen heere vpon earth, to worke many miracles. They auouch them to haue voyaged thorow all the Prouinces of the world, and namely to the Holy-Land, which was the walking Gallery of the French Paladines.

The Children of Meluzina reputed to be Gods and Goddesses.

They present Vrian to be her eldest Sonne, who landing in the Isle of Cyprus; found the Princesse of the place to be warred on by her subiects, who delighting to fishe in troubled waters, abused her minority in yeares. He vnder tooke her defence, and reduced them to tearmes of duty and obedience: marying the young Princesse, in the right of whom he became King of Cyprus. He ordered matters in such sort, that his Second Brother was King of Armenia: and their posterity Kings of Ierusalem, of Cyprus, Armenia, Candie, and of diuers other great Kingdomes and Prouinces beside, in painting.

Her eldest Sonne Vrian King of Cyprus.

They tell vs further, that her third Sonne espoused the Heire of Luxembourg: the true Ligne whereof being fayled, their descent hath held the Kingdome of Bohemia, and the Empire of Germanie.

The Fourth Sonne maried the Heire de la Marche, and because he was blacke and swarthie of complexion, he was Sirnamed Le Brun. Risum teneatis Amici. Are not these braue discourses for our Historians?

Holde on laughter, and spare not, my honest friends.

The Fift Sonne was Lord of Luzignan, and had the Sirname, with the great Tooth.

The Sixt was Lord of Partenay, tearmed by them of the Countrey.

Where falshood is wrought;
And nothing comes thence, till first it be brought.

It is likewise built vpon a Mountaine cleft in twaine, as many other are in France.

The Seauenth was a Religious Fryer at Mailleſais, at this present a Bishoprick.

The Eight was of monstrous forme, and Sirnamed the Horrible: but he was stifled and smothered by his Mother, and buried in the little Cloister of Monstier-neuf at Poictiers. I am wearied with these old Wiues Tales: let vs take againe the thred of our History.

Leauing off fables, we returne to our Chronicle.

Hugh Brun, Second of the name, Lord of Luzignan, had to wife Adela, Daughter to the Count of Tolosa, Raymond, First of the name, and by her he had three Sonnes: we will begin with the last or youngest.

Rodolphe or Raoull of Luzignan, Baron of Yssoudon, who in the yeare of Grace one thouthousand, one hundred and nine, founded a Priorie in honour of Saint Galais, Bishop of Poictiers: to whom he was so much tendeared in deuotion, that he gaue the Sirname of Saint Gelaise to his eldest Sonne Hugh. Of him are descended the houses of Saint Gelais, Lords of Lansac (whom some will haue to descend of Mahauld of Lusignan) and of Saint Seuerin at Poictiers.

Saint Gelasius Bishop of Poictiers.

Iohn of Luzignan, Baron of Couhe, who had one only Sonne named Hugh; that tooke part with the Kings of France, against the Englishmen, in the yeare one thousand, one hundred, fifty and two: And Hugh, called the Great, Third of the name, Count of Luzignan, and Count de la Marche in regard of his Wife: Hauing ended a difference with William, Count of Engoulesme, who contended with him for the County de la Marche: He went in the Voyage beyond the Seas in the yeare One thousand, one hundred and two. He had at his pay and attendance, Eight hundred men on Horseback, with whom he gaue succour to Baudewine, King of Ierusalem, and the Count of Tripoly, his kinsman by the Mothers side. He returned back, and died in France, leauing Foure Children, two Sonnes, and as many Daughters.

The Great Count of Luzignan and his seruice in the Holy-Land.

Beatrix, Wife to Ambrose, Lord of Viuonna.

Poncetta, who maried with Vulgrin, Second Count of Engoulesme.

The Sonnes were

Hugh le Brun; And

Henry, Count of Luzignan and de la Marche, who caused the strong Castell of Luzignan to be built, and namely the great Tower thereof. He died, being neuer maried; And by his death, his Brother

The great Castell and Tower of Luzignan.

Hugh le Brun, Fourth of the name, was Count of Luzignan and de la Marche, who went in the Voyage to the Holy-Land with Geoffrey Martell, Sonne to the Count of Engoulesme William. He was long time prisoner to Noradine, King of the Sarrazins: but being deliuered, returned into France, and left Sixe Children, to witt Doubt and question about the certainty of his name.

Gylles, otherwise named Rodolphe, and (by some other) Bertrand, Count of Partenay, and of Dammartin on behalfe of his Wife. He was Constable of France vnder King Phillip Augustus, Anno One thousand, one hundred, fourescore and tenne: And Feron (very aptly) giueth him De Luzignan, Burelé d'Azur et d'Argent au Lyon de Gueules, Armé, Lampassé, & Coronné d'Or sur le tout: But he forgot a Bordure Engrailed with Gueules, which the Constable caried for Brizure in his Armes. Of him are issued and descended the Families of Partenay; of Soubize the Archbishop, and of Saint Vallier, by the Sirname of Poictiers.

Raymond, a Monke professed in the Abbey of Malesais, of the Order of Saint Benedict.

Geoffrey, Sirnamed with the Great Tooth, vpon the occasion before alleadged, Count of Luzignan.

Amaury, King of Ierusalem and of Cyprus.

Guy, King of Ierusalem, and first King of Cyprus; And Hugh, Fift of the name, Count de la Marche (by the death of his Father) who tooke to Wife Isabell, daughter and heire to the Count of Engoulesme. She was caried away by Iohn Without-Land, King of England (as we haue reported in the Tract of England) but after the death of King Iohn; she returned and liued with her Husband Hugh, by whom she had many Children. All her life time she bare the title of Queene, and of her it is, that the Lord of Ioinuille speaketh so often times in the Life of Saint Lewes, which was the cause of Warre made by the said King Saint Lewes, against the same Hugh Count de la Marche, who disdained to doe Homage for his Lands, to Monsieur Alphonsus of France, Count of Poictiers.

This Isabell was maried to King Iohn of England.

Mathew Paris in his History of England.

It is of this Isabell, Countesse of Engoulesme, and Queene of England, that the fabulous Romant of Melusina was composed: which the Monke of England Mathew Paris emblazoneth with wunderfull Coullers. The Romancers (to disguise her birth) make her Daughter to the Duke of Albania; to cloud and veile her quality of Wife to King Iohn, they tearme him King of Albion, the auncient title to the Realme of England. They haue likewise coullored the name of Hugh of Luzignan her Husband, vnder the borrowed epethite of Raymondin: who was greatly subiect to the head head sickenesse, yet more in earnest, then in iest. As for her ligne and issue, shee had indeed as many as the Romancers gaue her, which was Nine in number, as we will set them downe in order.

The Issue of Isabell Countesse of Engoulesme, and Queene of England, according to the truth of Chronologie.

Hugh le Brun.

Guy, Baron of Coignac, of Merpin, and d'Archiac, deceasing without any issue.

Geoffery, Baron of Iarnac, and of Chasteau-Neuf.

Amaury, Baron of Couhe and of Valences: And afterward Bishop of Winchester.

William, Baron of Montignac, Balack, and of Champagnall in the County of la Marche, and Lord of Valences, Father to William; Stemme of the Houses of Valences and of Montignac.

Agatha, wife to the Baron of Chauigny.

Isabell, Wife to Godfrey, Lord of Ranon, of Paron, and of Thillebourg.

Margaret; Alix. And } not Married.

Hugh le Brun, Sixt of the name (Eldest Sonne) was Count de la Marche and of Engoulesme: likewise Baron of Fougieres in Bretaigne, by meanes of his Wife Yoland, Daughter to Peter Mauclerc, Duke of Bretaigne. Hee went in the Voyage beyond the Seas with our King Saint Lewes, and died aged about Forty yeares, in the yeare of Grace One thousand, two hundred and threescore. He left Fiue Children, and these be they in Order.

Hugh.

Guy, Fift Baron of Coignac (by the death of his Vnckle Guy) deceasing without issue.

Guy, Second of the name, Sirnamed de la Marche, a professed Monke.

Aimary, or Aymar, Bishop of Winchester in England, by the resignation of Aymar his Vnckle, and his Godfather.

Ioane, Wife to the Baron Morteimer in England.

Hugh le Brun, Seauenth of the name, eldest Sonne to the Count de la Marche, of Engoulesme, and of Luzignan, Baron of Fougieres, left foure Children.

Hugh le Brun.

Guy, Viscount de la Roche-Foucand, de Rupe Fucaldi; Land wunne by the Viscount of Limoges, Legatarie to his Vnckle Guy, Baron of Coignac, for an hundred and fifty Markes of Gold, to goe in the Voyage to the Holy-Land, when an Army was conducted thither.

Yoland, Wife to Godfrey, or Geoffrey, Count of Pons, And Mary, Wife to the Count of Sancerre.

Hugh le Brun, Eight and last of the name, by the death of his Father, happening in the yeare of Grace One thousand, two hundred, fourescore and two: was Count of Luzignan, de la Marche, of Engoulesme, and Baron of Fougieres. By his Wife Beatrix of Bourgongne hee had not any issue; but died in the yeare of Grace One thousand, three hundred and three, and by his death, his Brother

Guy was the last Count of Luzignan, de la Marche, and of Engoulesme, which Counties he gaue by testament to King Phillip le Bell, Fourth of the name, to remaine annexed to the Crowne, and serue as Appanage or portion to the Sonnes of France at all times after. Let vs now take the descent of Hugh le Brun, Fourth of the name, Fift Count of Luzignan, who had Sixe Children: Among whom (as already we haue said) was very famous.

Geoffery, tearmed by his great Tooth, who being somewhat madly distracted, because his Brother Raymond (without any consent) was taken to be a professed Monke in the Abbey of Malesais: did set it on fire, and consumed it into Ashes, very badly abusing the Monkes: which firing is counted vnder the yeare One Thousand, two Hundred and Thirty. But most certaine it is, that Geoffery (recouering more setled sense and stability of minde) made a iourney to Rome, to craue absolution, which he obtained. Conditionally, that he should newly build the said Monastery, where-to he left great goods. I finde also, that this Geoffery with the great Tooth had a Sonne, named Guy (whose Issue and descente I could neuer obtaine) that on the day day of his Fathers death, made a Legacie to the said Monastery of Melesais, the place of his Fathers buriall, and his Legacy was in these words.

In Nomine Domini Amen. Ego Guido de Lisignano Goffridi Filius ex Testamento Patris mei Do vobis Abbati, ceterisque in Maleasensi Monasterio Deo seruentibus, vbi corpus Patris mei sepultum est, Ducentas Libras Terræ ad Larmenum sitas, vt memoriam nostri habeatis, in supplementum Penitentiæ, ne ira Domini nos supplantet. Hæc autem Carta facta est ea die, qua Pater sepultus est, præsentibus Clero, & Comitatu funebri dicti Patris Goffridi. Signum Guidonis. Sig. Monasterij.

Heere wee take the Ligne, leading to the Chronologie of the Kings of Cyprus, Ierusalem, and Amenia, beginning with Guy of Luzignan.

Geoffery before named, was long time beyond the Seas, in assistance of the Kings of Ierusalem, whether he went in company of his Brothers

1. Guy, and Amaury of Luzignan, which Princes continued there dwelling beyond the Seas, without returning any more to France. And Guy being first King of Ierusalem, and afterward of Cyprus, (as wee haue before declared) chaunced to dye without any issue; his Brother

II. Amaury was Second King of Cyprus, who by his Wife Ciue d'Iblin, Daughter to Bauldwine, Count of Rama, had three Sonnes, and three Daughters, whom we will set downe Ordine præposlero.

VI. Hugh, Third of the name, Prince of Antioche, King of Cyprus, Sonne of Iohn of Luzignan, and Isabell of Cyprus. By Anne d'Iblin his Wife, Daughter to the Prince of Baruth; he had a plentifull Ligne of Children, as here you may behold them in order.

1. Iohn, King of Cyprus and Ierusalem. } dying without issue.
2. Henry King of Cyprus and Ierusalem. }

3. Bœmond, a Religious Monke, of the Order of the Preaching Fryers, who renounced his Principality of Galilee, for the seruice of God.

4. Camerino, Constable of Cyprus, died without issue.

5. Guy, Constable of Ierusalem, Husband to Louisa de Zimblet: Father and Mother to Hugh and Isabell of Cyprus, Wife to Iudes de Dampierre, Constable of Ierusalem.

6. Amaury, Lord of Tire and Sidon, Husband to Isabell, Sister to the King of Armenia: Father and Mother of Hugh, King of Armenia, First of the Latine name.

7. Chelius, Wife to Theodorus, King of Armenia.

8. Louisa, Wife to Balian d'Iblim, Prince of Galilee.

9. Mary, Wife to a King of Arragon.

10. Marietta, or Mariana, Wife to Hayton, King of Armenia, Brother to Theodorus, King of Armenia.

During the Reigne of Hugh the Third, Conradine, calling himselfe King of Naples and Sicelle, hauing put to death (by commaund of Monsieur Charles of France, Duke of Anion, King of Naples) Hugh, King of Cyprus: caused himselfe to bee Crowned King of Ierusalem (in Cæsaria) and ordained, that his Successours, Kings of Cyprus, at their comming to the Crowne; should first be Crowned Kings of Cyprus at Nicosia, and Kings of Ierusalem, at Famagusta, which was afterward kept and continued. By the death of Hugh the Third, his two Sons.

VII. Iohn. } Were Kings of Ierusalem & Cyprus, & dying without issue succeeded their Nephew
VIII. Henry. }

IX. Hugh, Fourth of the Name, King of Cyprus and Ierusalem: who by his Wife Louisa, or Alex de Zimblet, had Fiue Sonnes, and Three Daughters.

1. Peter. }
2. James. } Kings.

3. Guy, Constable of Cyprus, who had had to Wife Mary, Daughter to Lewes, First Duke of Bourbon, and by her had not any Childe.

4. Thomas, who died without issue, and bare the name of Saint Thomas of Aquine, a bright splendor of the Church, and Prince in the Kingdome of Naples: allied to the House of France, and the King of Cyprus Hugh, Fourth of the name, to whom he dedicated his Booke De Regimine Principum. This man, commonly called Thomas Aquinas among Schollers, was of the House of the Dukes of Atrye, in the Kingdome of Naples, and Portoit d'Or au Lyon d'Azur; Armes, Langue, & membre de Gueules: Party d'Argent au Lyon de Gueules, Coronne d'Or, brise sur l'Espaule d'vn Lambeau d'Azur seme de Fleurs de Lys d'Or sans nombre. Concerning Saint Thomas of Aquine.

Iohn, Prince of Antioche, who by Anne, de Zimblet his Wife, had two Sonnes; Hugh, that died in Hostage at Geneway, & Iames, that was Count of Tripoly, who espoused his Cousine Germaine Mariana, Daughter to King Peter. In which Marriage were borne foure Children.

Peter, Count of Tripoly, who Married his Cousine Germaine Isabell, Daughter to King Iames, and died without Children: Iohn; Eleanor and Ciue.

The Daughters to Hugh the Fourth were Isabell, dying young.

Ciue, Wife to Ferdinand of Arragon, King of Maiorica. Anne Wife to the Marquesse of Montferrat Theodor Paleologues.

Mariana, Wife to Gaultier de Dampierre.

X. Peter, before Counte of Tripoly, was King of Cyprus and Ierusalem after his Father: whose vertues he followed not, but for his whoredomes and cruelties, was slaine by his subiects. He was long time in Italie, Gouernour of the Churches Patrimony, as well as King Hugh his Father, and Petrino his Sonne, they all three being in Italie. He tooke to Wife Alianora, Niece to the King of Arragon, and by her had three Children, one Sonne, and two Daughters.

XI. Petrino, King of Cyprus and Ierusalem after his Father, and tooke to Wife Valentina of Millaine, Daughter to Barnabie the Viscount, Duke of Millaine, and by her he had these Daughters Or little Peter, in regarde of his stature.

Ciue, who was not married: And yet neuertheless, the Histories of Italie giue her to Husband Peter, Duke of Bourbon, Sonne to Lewes, First of the name; and say beside, that the descendants of the same House of Bourbon; Porterent Escartele au Premier de Bourbon, la Second de Hierusalem, le Troisiesme de Luzignan, & le Quatriesme de Cypre, qui est d'Argent au Lyon de Gueules, with the title of Kings of Cyprus. Which Kingdome belonged to them, in regard of Ciue of Luzignan, their Grand-Mother, to whom, after the death of King Peter (called the Little-man) her Brother, appertained the Kingdomes of Cyprus and Ierusalem.

Marietta, or Mariana, Wife to Iames, Count of Tripoly, Sonne to Iohn, Prince of Antioche. At the Sacring and Crowning of little King Petrino, the Ambassadours of Venice and Geneuaye were present in assistance; and because the Precedency was giuen to the Venetians: the Geneuayes entred into fury, and to reuenge themselues on Petrino, conspired against him, being fauoured therein by the Mother of Petrino. The treachery being discouered, all the Geneuayes perished by the edge of the Sword. And yet notwithstanding this reuendge, the Mother to King Petrino, made the Geneuayes Maisters of the City of Famagosta, which they ouerawed for the space of Threescore and tenne yeares. And with this Capitall Citty of the Kingdome of Cyprus, they had for Hostages the Vncle by the Mother side to Petrino, named Iames, afterward King of Cyprus, and the Sonnes to Iohn, Prince of Antioch, the eldest whereof died at Geneuaye. By the death of Petrino, deceassing without issue, and by the Fauour and Forces of the Geneuayes:

The Geneuays perished in a conspiracy for precedency.

XII. Iames of Luzignan (their Hostage) was made King of Cyprus and of Ierusalem: He was likewise King of Armenia, by the death of his Nephewe Leo of Luzignan, King of Armenia. By Ciue de Zimblet (Daughter to the Prince of Baruth) his wife, he had a copious linage.

Ianus of Geneway (so named, because he was borne in the Citty of Geneway in Lombardie, his Father and Mother being prisoners there.)

Hugh, Cardinall of Saint Andrewe, Archbishop of Cyprus, who died in Sauoye.

Phillip, Constable of Cyprus.
Eudes, Seneschall of Cyprus.
Guy, Constable of Ierusalem.
} dying without issue.

Henry, Prince of Galilee, Husband to Louisa de Zimblet, Lady of Cerines, Father and Mother to many Children the most part of them being slaine at the taking of Cyprus by the Turke, yet some of them dwelling at Venice.

The Daughters were

Agnes, who was not maried, although some doe report, that she was Wife to Lewes, he being Count Palatine of the Rhine.

Mariana, Wife to Lancelot, King of Naples, and also of Hungaria.

Isabell, Wife to Peter, Prince of Tripoly, who deceassed without any issue.

Ciue, neuer maried.

XIII. Ianus of Geneway, so named (as we haue tolde you) by reason of his birth in Geneway; succeeded after King Iames his Father, Sacred in Nicosia King of Ierusalem and Armenia, and likewise of Cyprus, in one and the same day, and same Ceremony: because the Geneuayes holde Famagosta, the chiefe City of Cyprus, where the Luzignans were wont to be Crowned Kings of Ierusalem. Hee had to Wife Charlote of Bourbon, Daughter to Iames of Bourbon, Count de la Marche, by whom he had two Sonnes, and as many Daughters.

Anne, Wife to Lewes, Duke of Sauoye, in which Marriage was borne Charlote of Sauoye, Second Wife to King Lewes the Eleauenth, and Mother to King Charles the Eight. This was the man, that made good expression of his true Valour: For hee conquered the Kingdome of Naples at twenty yeares of age, and wunne also the memorable Battaile of Fornoue or Forca-Noua, in Hetruria.

Iames, Seneschall of Cyprus, dying without issue.

Mary, Wife to Lewes of Bourbon, Sonne to Charles of Bourbon.

And

XIIII. Iohn, Second of the name, who (after the death of his Father) was King of Cyprus, Ierusalem and Armenia; of which Kingdome the Armes were d'Or au Lyon de Gueules brize d'vne Croisette d'Or sur l'Espaule gauche. He was twise maried: in his first Nuptialls. He espoused Isabell of Montferrat, Daughter to Iohn Iames Palæologus, Marquesse of Montferrat, and the Sister of Amadis, First Duke of Sauoy, but by her he had no children.

In second estate of Wedlocke, hee had Helena Paleologus, Cousin to his first Wife, and daughter to Theodorus Paleologus, Despote de la Morea, that is to say, Lord of Peloponesus; who was Brother to Constantine, the last Emperour of Constantinople. And in this Marriage were borne two daughters:

Charlote, Queene; And
Cleopatra, who dyed young.

He had likewise a naturall Sonne, named

Iames, Bishop of Nicosia, who vsurped the Kingdome of Cyprus against Queene Charlote.

XV. Charlote, after the death of King Iohn her Father, was Queene of Cyprus, Ierusalem, and of Armenia in the life time of her Father. She was marryed to Iohn the Infant of Portugall (Sonne to Dom Pedro, Duke of Coimbre, Sonne to the King of Portugall, First of the name) Prince of Antioche, who deceassed in Cyprus without any Children, in the life time of King Iohn, his Father in Law.

In second Marriage shee was matched with her Cousine Lewes, Count de Geneuois, Sonne to Lewes, Duke of Sauoye, and Anne of Luzignan. Charlote was Crowned (at Nicosia) Queene of Cyprus and Ierusalem; and on the same day of her Coronation, returning from the Cathedrall Church of Saint Sophia; the white Palfraye whereon she was mounted, suddenly starting and rising: the Crowne fell from off the Queenes head; which the Cypriots tooke for an ominous presage, and signe of some euill towards their Queene. And indeede, within a very short while after, both shee and her husband were expulsed from Cyprus, by her Bastard Brother.

XVI. Iames, Second of the name, Subdeacon, and afterward Bishop of Nicosia, who vsurped the Kingdome of Cyprus, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand, foure hundred, threescore and two: beeing assisted in this vsurpation, by the Venetians, and the Sultane of Cayre, to whom he yeelded himselfe Tributary. He tooke to wife Katharine Cornari daughter to Marino Cornari, a Gentleman of Venice, and in this marriage hee had a Sonne that was a Posthumus.

XVII. Iames, Third of the name, who dyed when he was two yeares old, and his Mother Queen Katharine retreated her selfe to Venice, there to spend the remainder of her life: hauing (before hand) put the Venetians in possession of the goodly Isle of Cyprus, which freely she gaue them, not taking any recompence for it, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand, foure hundred, fourescore and nine.

Pope Pius, Second of the name, gaue a dispensation to Iames the Bastard, that he might be marryed: howbeit before, at the earnest poursuite and request of Queene Charlote, he had thundered Ecclesiasticall censures against him, and proclaimed him to be both a Tyrant, and vsurper of the Kingdome of Cyprus. Queene Charlote beeing refuged at Rome (where she continued the rest of her life time, and at the Popes pension) adopted for her Sonne the Prince of Sauoye Amadis, her Cousine; and Sonne to Charles, Duke of Sauoye, First of the name; to whom she gaue, granted and transported, the right which she had in the Kingdome of Cyprus, and dyed in the yeare, One thousand, foure hundred, fourescore and fiue.

The ending of the Kingdome of Cyprus.

And so tooke ending the Kingdome of Cyprus, held by the most Illustrious Family of the Luzignans three hundred yeares intirely. The Great Turke Selim, Second of the name, wunne possession of this Island from the Venetians, in the yeare of Grace One thousand, fiue hundred, threescore and ten; and the Turkes haue held the possession of it euer since. Now in this traine falleth a very conuenient place, to obserue the Kings of Armenia, which were of the same name and Armes of Luzignan.

The Kings of Armenia, that carryed the Armes and name of Luzignan, from the beginning.

1. Armenia beeing diuided into the Greater and Lesser, the first King thereof was named Linonius, otherwise called Leonus, who receiued the Crowne Royall from the Emperour of the West, Henry, Sixt of the name, by the hands of his Chancellour Henry d'Hyperbolee, about the yeare One thousand, one hundred, fourescore and seauenteene. This Liuonius, and his Succeſſours Kings of Armenia (vntill ſuch time as the Kingdome fell to the Luzignans) Portoient d'Azure à Trois Teſtes de Roynes d'Argent, Coronnees d'Or. Liuonius had to wife Sybilla, daughter to Amaury of Luzignan, Second King of Cyprus, and to the Queene of Ieruſalem, Iſabell his Wife, by her he had two daughters.

Iſabell, Wife to Iohn de Brenne, King of Ieruſalem, deceaſſing immediately after the King her Father. And

Mary, Wife to

II. Coſtus (that is to ſay Conſtantius) Baron of Armenia, and King, in regard of his wife: By whom he had foure Sons and two daughters.

Haitonus, King.

Brabatus } These two reuolted from their eldeſt Brother, who ouercame them in a fought Battaile, made them his priſoners, cauſed their eyes to be pluckt forth, and then ſent them in exile to Conſtantinople.
Coſtus. }

Sinebaldus, Conſtable of Armenia.

The daughters were

Sybilla, Wife to Andronicus Commenes, afterward Emperour of Conſtantinople, who kept his two Brethren priſoners ſo long as they liued: And

Iſabell, Wife to Amaury of Luzignan, Lord of Tyre and Sidon Sonne to

Hugh, Third of the name, King of Cyprus and of Ieruſalem, Father and Mother of Hugh, King of Armenia, Firſt of the Latine name.

III. Haitonus, eldeſt Sonne to Coſtus and Mary, King and Queene of Armenia, tooke to Wife Mariana of Luzignan Daughter to Hugh, Third of the name, King of Cyprus and Ieruſalem. In this Marriage were borne Liuonius, that is Leo, King.

Sinebaldus, ſlaine in fighting againſt the Soldane of Ægypte, in the yeare One thouſand, two hundred, threeſcore and ſixe.

Theros, that is Theodorus, King.

Haitonus, Baron of Armenia, who renounced the world, and yeelded himſelfe a Monke of the Order of Premonſtre: of which Order we haue ſpoken in the Hiſtory of Tartaria, Imprinted with Nouus Orbis; but mine is of the Impreſſion at Baſile, in the yeare, One thouſand fiue hundred, thirty ſeauen. His worke was written in French, in the Cittie of Poictiers, in the yeare of Grace One thouſand, three hundred and ſeauen (according as the ſame Haitonus, Prince of Armenia hath dictated) and by him offered and preſented to Pope Clement the Fift, and to the King of France and Nauarre Phillip le Bell, Fourth of the name, beeing in the Citty of Vienna in Daulphine, and afterward it was turned into Latine.

IV. Leo, 2. of the name, fourth Chriſtian King of Armenia, and of a ſtrange language, was Succeſſour to King Haitonus his Father, in the yeare One thouſand, two hundred, threeſcore and foure. This man, by the exhortations of his Maternall Vncle Boëmond of Luzignan, being (when he was of the world) Prince of Galilee, and afterward of the Order of the Preaching Fryers: became a Monke of the Order of Saint Baſile, and was named Macharius; for the ſeruice of God, hee left his Kingdome to his Brother.

V. Theodorus, Fift King of Armenia, who had two wiues. The firſt was Erikaton, Daughter to Caſſanus, the Great Cham of Tartaria, by whom hee had no iſſue. The Great Chams of Tartaria carried in Armes L'Eſcu d'Or, à vn Hibou de Sable. In memory of their firſt Emperor Cangis Cham, ſaued by the meanes of an Owle, as it is reported by the Monke Haitonus the Armenian, in his Chronicle, which hee entitleth his Tartaria, the ſixt Chapter.

In ſecond Marriage he eſpouſed Chelluis, Siſter to Henry, King of Cyprus. Theodorus dying in the yeare One thouſand three hundred; left the Kingdome to his onely Sonne

VI. Leo, Third of the name, who by his Couſine Agnes (Daughter to Amaury of Luzignan, and Iſabell, Siſter to his Father Theodor) had three Children, ſlaine with their Father and Mother by the Grand Cham of the Tartares. So that by his death in this manner, the Kingdome of Armenia came to his neereſt heire and Couſine

VII. Hugh of Luzignan, Sonne to Amaury, Lord of Tyre and Sidon, Brother to the King of Cyprus Henry, who was he Firſt Latine King in the Realme of Armenia. He had three Sonnes.

Iohn,

Iohn, King.

Amaury, Conſtable of Armenia, Father to Leo, King of Armenia: And Leo, King.

VIII. John of Luzignan, Second Latine King of Armenia, hauing held the Royall Authority ſometime: abandoned the world to become a Gray Fryer, reſigning his Kingdome to his Nephewe, the Sonne of his Brother Amaury.

IX. Leo, Fourth of the name, Third Latine King, who maintained his Kingdome valiantly: which (by his death) fell to his Vncle.

X. Leo, Fift of the name, and fourth Latine King, who gouerning with ouermuch ſloth and negligence; his Brother King Iohn the Gray Fryer, came foorth of his Monaſtery, and rayſed a powerfull Army, which he conducted with King Leo his Brother againſt the Tartares (who hauing before beene Chriſtians, became plundged againe in the depth of impious Mahomets falſe doctrine) that vanquiſhed the Chriſtians, and ſlew both the Kings. So that by their death

XI. Leo, Sixt and laſt of the name (ſeeing the Fift Latine King) ſucceeded in the Realme of Armenia. He was Son to Leo the Fift, and Irene, Daughter to Phillip, Prince of Tarentum, Brother to Robert, King of Naples, and Charles, King of Hungary. He reigned but a ſhort time in Armenia, which was ſoone inueſted with Tartares and Sarrazins, who expulſed or martyred all the Chriſtians of Armenia, as well in the Greater, as Leſſe. So that King Leo was enforced to flye into Cyprus, to procure ſuccour from the little King Petrino his Kinſeman: who had worke enough to do, to defend himſelfe againſt the Generayes, that greatly troubled his Kingdome of Cyprus.

From thence hee iourneyed to Rome, to England, and then into France to King Charles, ſixt of the name, who entertained him humainely as his Kinſeman, and kept his Court then in the City of Paris. There hee dyed with conceit of griefe, hauing made ſo many iourneyes to and fro, to reconcile the Chriſtian Princes: in hope of recouering his Kingdome, loſt in a moment, with his wife and children. Soone after he made his Will and Teſtament, in the yeare One thouſand, three hundred, fourſcore and ten, wherby he elected his buriall place in the Quire of the Celeſtines at Paris, to whom he left a certaine ſumme of money, for the maintenance of three ſmall Celles of Religious perſons, that they might there pray to God for his Soule, & his Princely Predeceſſours of the Houſe of Luzignan. He had Penſions from the Kings of England, France, Nauarre, Arragon and Caſtille.

His Monument is yet to bee ſeene of White Marble, on the right hand of the Celeſtines Quire in Paris, with his picture lying along vpon it, of very faire White Marble. In his right hand hee helde a Scepter, which is new broken, and his Gloues in the other hand. Round about the Tombe is engrauen this Epitaphe.

Cy giſt treſnoble & excellent Prince Lyon de Luzignan, Quint Roy Latin du Royaume d'Armenie, qui rendit l'Ame à Dieu à Paris le Vingt-neufuieſme Iour de Nouembre, l'an de grace Mille trois Cents Quatre vingts treize. Priez Dieu pour luy.

Here lieth the moſt Noble and excellent Prince Lyon of Luzignan, Fift Latine King of the Kingdome of Armenia; who rendered his Soule to God at Paris the Nine and twentieth day of Nouember, in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand, three hundred, foureſcore and fourteene. Praye to God for him.

For the Citty of Ierusalem, having beene conquered from the Emperours of Greece by the Sarrazins: the keeping of the Holy Sepulcher, and the Mount of Caluarie, were left by the same Sarrazins, to a certaine number of Chanons Reguler, of the Order and Cloathing of Saint Augustine, gouerned by the Patriarch; Bishop of the same place.

The keeping of the Sepulcher and the Mount of Caluarie.

Godfrey of Bologne, First King of Ierusalem of the French Nation, gaue great goods to those Chanons Reguler, and to their Patriarche; especially by his last Will and Testament, whereby he ordained and appointed: That both himselfe and his Successours Kings of Ierusalem, should bee buryed in their Cathedrall Church, which was ioyning to the Holy Sepulcher. And that the Patriarche should be the man, by whom his Successours the Kings of Ierusalem, must bee Sacred and Crowned.

Buriall for the Kings of Ierusalem.

Baudarme, First of the name, Successour to his Brother Godfrey, made those Chanons Reguler (of being Monkes before) Men of Armes, and Knights of the Holy Sepulcher. Ordayning withall, that they should still retaine their White Habite, wheron they must weare vpon the breast (fastened with a Gordon and Blacke Riband) Vne Croix potencee, et Cantonnee de Croissettes de mesme, sans aucun esmaill. Such as the Kings of Ierusalem bare in their Armes, as a noate of excellency and prerogatiue. And a like Crosse of yellow embroderie, sowed or made fast on the left side of their White Roabe or Cloake. He appointed for their Chiefe and Great Maister, the Patriarch of Ierusalem, to whom hee granted power, for conferring the said Order, and receiuing the Vowe made by the Knights; which was of Obedience, Chastity, and Poverty, not hauing any thing in proper or perticuler, but liuing in common.

Knights of the Holy Sepulcher and their Crosse.

The Patriarch Great Maister

He gaue also perticulerly to the Patriarch, Priuiledge to seale all Expeditions and Letters of the said Order, and with White Waxe, as King Godfrey, Bauldwine and their Successours had done, and did. For the Knights Templers sealed with Red Waxe: The Hospitallers of Saint Iohn of Ierusalem, with Blacke Waxe: They of the Order of Saint Mary of the Teutones, in the same manner: Those of Saint Lazarus with Green Waxe: Of Saint Thomas the Apostle, with Blew Waxe. And those of Saint Katharine of Mount Sinay, with Red Waxe.

Prerogatiue for Sealing.

Is it not then any matter of meruayle, that those Monkes should manage Armes, in stead of their Breuiarie, because in that season, and so long as the Voyages beyond the the Seas continued; men of the Church which trauayled thither, of what degree or dignity soeuer they were, mooued and prouoked with zealous deuotion, to warre vpon those wicked Miscreants: enstructed and tutoured their owne hands, in as actiue manner, as they that made profession of Armes. As is to bee seene in the Histories of the Holy-Lands Warres, written by Guillaume de Saumur, Archbishop of Tyre; John de Villehardouin, Lord of Ioinuille, in the Life of Laint Lewes, and other Historians.

The forced departure frō the holy Land.

These Knights of the Holy Sepulcher encreased (in an instant) both in Number, Honour and Wealth, as well as any of the other Orders: vntill such time as by the Conquest of the Holy-Land, and namely of the Holy Citty, by the Caliphe and Saltane Saladine, in the yeare before remembred; thy were enforced to leaue Palestine, and passe into Italy, where they made choice of their dwelling (for some time) at Perugia, enriched with great store of booties, not only in Italy, but likewise in France, in Spayne and in Sicilie,

Two Societies of Knights vnited into one, but soone dissoynted.

Pope Innocent, Eight of the name, by his Bull bearing Date, Anno, One thousand foure hundred, fourescore and foure, the first of his Pontificalitie, vnited and incorporated these Knights of the Holy Sepulcher, with the Knights and Hospitallers of Saint John of Ierusalem, remaining then in the Isle of Rhodes, as being of one and the same Vowe and Rule; he gaue them the goods also of the Knights of the Holy Sepulcher, by consent of the Christian Princes. But this vnion was not of any long continuance, because the Knights hauing breathed a while on liberty, changed their vowes, to a Wife and her traine, which are Children and House-keeping.

Whereupon Pope Alexander, Sixt of the name, in the fourth yeare of his Pontificalitie, and of Grace One thousand, foure hundred, fourescore and sixteene, transported to the Holy Seate and himselfe, all power of conferring this Order of the Holy Sepulcher, publishing himselfe and his Successours Popes, to bee Chiefe and Soueraigne Great Maisters thereof. Giuing power to his Vicar Generall, the Guardian of the Holy Sepulcher (who is alwayes of the Rule of Saint Frances de Assise) to conferre this Order vpon Pilgrimes and voyagers to the Holy-Land, marryed or vnmarryed: prouided, that they take their Oath vpon the Holy Sepulcher, to be Noble by extraction, or vocation, and to haue sufficiency of goods for their maintenance, without dealing or medling in traffique and merchandise, for the raysing of shamefull and dishoneſt gaine. Likewise, to goe in Armes to the Holy-Land, or wadge a man sufficient for it at their expences, when the Christian Princes shall bring an Armie into the Field, for their recouery of the Holy-Land.

The Guardians power that keepeth the Holy Sepulcher.

But it hath come to passe, through the necessitie of the Family of Gray Fryers, belonging to the Holy Sepulcher, that the Guardian conferreth and bestowesh this Order, on whomsoeuer doth require it; without any exact enquest, or authenticall testimony of Nobility in him then present, paying thirty Sequins of Gold, which is giuen to the Conuent. So that the most part of these Knights of the Holy Sepulcher now are Yeomen and Merchants, which begin their Knighthood with a falle Oath through lacke of vnderstanding Latine, and that the Guardian maketh not their Enquest in French; for I speake of none, but such as are made Knights thus of out Nation.

The Knights of the Sepulcher in these times.

And here I thought good to set downe the Ceremonies, which are there obserued to this present day, & obserued in the writings and voyages of our French Pilgrim Bartholmewe de Salignac, of Lorraine; Anthony Regnault, a Parisian, and Iames de Villamont, a Gentleman Breton. If the Pilgrime which presenteth himselfe to be made Knight, haue a Sword (which happeneth very rarely; because the Turkes permit not any Christian Trauailer to carry any Sword, in the Lands vnder their obedience) then the Guardian blesseth it in this following manner, vpon the Holy Sepulcher of our Lord.

Hallowing or blessing the Sworde vpon the Holy Sepulcher, and Creation of a Knight.

Adiutorium nostrum in nomine Domini.

Qui fecit Cœlum & terram.

Oremus.

EXaudi quæsumus Domine preces nostras, & hunc Ensem, quo se Famulus tuus hic cingi desiderat, Maiestatis tuæ dextra dignare benedicere, quatenus possit esse defensor Ecclesiarum, Viduarum, Orphanorum, omniumque Deo seruientium, contra sæuitiam Paganorum, atque sibi insidiantibus sit terror, atque formido, præstans ei equæ persecutionis, & iustæ defensionis effectum. Per Christum Dominum nostrum Amen.

Oremus.

BEnedic Domine Sancte, Pater Omnipotens, æterne Deus, per inuocationem Nominis tui & per Aduentum Christi Filij tui Domini nostri, & per donum Spiritus-Sancti hunc Ensem, vt hic Famulus tuus qui Hodierna die, tua concedente pietate præcingitur, visibiles, & inuisibiles inimicos posternat, & conculcet, Victoriaque potitus maneat semper illæsus. Per Christum Dominum nostrum. Amen.

Then is sung very low and softly (because the Turkes will not suffer the Christians to sing Psalmes with loud voyces, as they do in our Churches) the whole Psalme following, presented heere in part.

BEnedictus Dominus Deus meus, qui docet manus meas ad prælium, & digitos meos ad bellum, &c.

Gloria Patri & Filio, & Spiritui sancto.

Sicut erat in principio, & nunc, &c.

Saluum fac seruum tuum Domine.

Deus meus sperantem in te.

Esto ei Domine Turris Fortitudinis.

A facie inimici.

Domine exaudi orationem meam.

Et clamor meus ad te veniat.

Dominus vobiscum, & cum Spiritu tuo.

Oremus.

DOmine sancte, Pater Omnipotens, Æterne Deus, qui cuncta solùs ordinas, & recte disponis, qui ad coercendā malitiam & malorum improbitatem, & tuendam Iustitiam, ensem Gladij in Terris Hominibus tua salubri dispositione permisisti, & Militarem Ordinem ad Populi protectionem instituì voluisti, quique per bestium Ioannem Militibus ad se in Deserto venientibus, vt neminem conculerent, sed propriꝭ contenti essent stipendiis, dici fecisti: Clementiam tuam supplices exoramus, vt sicut Dauid puero tuo, Goliath superandi largitus es facultatem, & Iudam Machabæum deferitate Gentium nomen tuum non inuocantium triumphare fecisti: ita & huic famulo tuo N. qui nouiter iugo Militiæ colla supponit, pietate cœlesti vires & robur ad Fidei, Spei, & Charitatis augmentum, & tui timorem pariter, & amorem, humilitatem, perseuerantiam, obedientiam, & patientiam, cunctaque in eo recte disponas, vt Neminem cum gladio isto, vel alio iniuste ledat, & omnia cum æquitate, & recta defendat, & sicut ipse de minori gradu, ad nouum Militarem prouehitur honorem, ita veterem Hominem deponens cum actibus suis, nouum induat Hominem, vt te timeat, & recte colat, per fidorum consortia vitet, & suam in Proximum Charitatem extendat, Præposito suo in omnibus recte obediat, & suum in cunctis iuste officium exequatur. Per Christum Dominum nostrum. Amen.

The manner of the Guardians making a Knight of the Sepulcher.

This is the last Acte of these Ceremonies, saiuing to guirde on the Sword about the Knight, after the Guardian hath giuen him three stroakes with the Sword on the shoulders flat long. And this is the beginning thereof.

After Procession is performed in all the places of deuotion, within the Holy Sepulcher at midnight, and High Masse celebrated vpon the Sepulcher of our Sauiour (capable of receiuing fiue or sixe persons at the most) the future Knights, or they that are to be made, after receiuing the Holy Communion, enter into the Sepulcher, and present themselues to the Father Guardian, Vicar Generall to our holy Father the Pope, who (for the performance of this Ceremonie) is cloathed thed in his Bishops habits, inuoking the grace and assistance of the blessed Spirit, and singeth this Hymne.

VEni Creator Spiritus. out at length.
Emitte Spiritum tuum, & creabuntur.
Et renouabis faciem Terræ.
Domine exaudi orationem meam.
Et clamor meus ad te veniat.
Dominus vobiscum, & cum Spiritu tuo.

Oremus.

DEus qui corda Fidelium Sancti Spiritus illustratione docuisti, &c.

And the Guardian (questioning the future Knight) demandeth thus of him.

Quid quæris? What seekest thou?

He answereth, humbly being on his knees before the Holy Sepulcher.

Quæro effici Miles Sanctissimi Sepulchri Domini nostri Iesu Christi. I desire and seeke to be made a Knight of the most Holy Sepulcher of our Lord Iesus Christ.

To other demaunds the future Knight ought to make answer, according to the forme following.

I. Cuius conditionis es? He ought to answer without lying.

R. Nobilis Genere, & Parentibus generosis natus.

I. Habesne vnde honeste manu-tenere possis statum, & Militarem dignitatem, absque mercimonijs, & arte mechanica?

I. Habeo Dei gratia bonorum sufficientem copiam.

R. Es ne paratus corde, & ore iurare pro virili, Militaria Sacramenta, eaque seruare quæ sequuntur?

Primo. Miles Sanctissimi Sepulchri omni die, opportunitate habita, Missam audire debet.

Secundo. Cum necesse fuerit bona temporalia, & Vitam exponere debebit, scilicet, quando est bellum vniuersale contra Infideles, & venire in propria persona, vel mittere personam idoneam.

Quarto. Debet iniusta bella, turpia stipendia, & lucra, Hastilludia, Duella, & huiusmodi (nisi Militaris exercitij gratia) omnino vitare.

Quinto. Debet Pacem, & Concordiam inter Christi Fideles procurare: Rempublicam exornare, & augere: Viduas, & Orphanos protegere: Iuramenta execrabilia, Periuria, Blasphemias, Rapinas, Vsuras, Sacrilegia: Homicidia, Adulteria, Ebrietatem, Loca suspecta, Personas infames, cæteraque Carnis vitia vitare, & tanquam Pestem cauere: & se apud Deum, & Homines irreprehensibilem exhibere, ac etiam verbo, ac facto dignum Honore Militiæ se demonstrare, Ecclesias frequentando, & cultum diuinum augmentando.

The Guardians questions and the Knights answers.

I. Of what condition art thou?

R. Of Noble race or descent, and borne of Gentlemanly parentage.

I. Hast thou wherewithall to maintaine honestly the degree and dignity of a Knight; without medling in buying and selling and mechanicall arts?

R. I haue (God be thanked for it) store of goods sufficient.

I. Art thou prepared in heart, and with thy mouth manly to sweare Sacramentall Warre sare, and to obserue these matters that follow?

The future Knight is taught and enstructed.

The Articles of the Knights Oath and charge.

First; To heare Masse dayly, except he shall be hindered by some lawfull let or excuse.

Secondly; to expose his meanes, and his owne person, at all times, and so often as any vniuersall warre shall be made against the Infidels and Sarrazins: Or else to wadge and pay a capable and sufficient person, for the doing thereof.

Thirdly; To defend the Church, and Ministers thereof, with all his might and power: And to set them at safe deliuerance, from all such as afflict and persecute them.

Fourthly; To detest and abhorre all vniust Warres; all sordid and dishonest Gaines, Traffiques or Merchandises, vnworthy and vnfitting Noble mindes: All Duelloes, Iousts, Tourneys and Tournaments: If they bee not Exercises Worthy and becomming a Noble nature, nature, and free from offending his Neighbour.

Fiftly, to procure and worke peace and concord among faithfull Christians, being at harsh or vnbefitting intelligence one with another: To contribute for the adorning and encreasing the State: To sustaine and defend the Widdowe and Orphane: To shunne and detest (as a Plague or Leprosie) all execrable Oathes and Swearing, against the Diuine and Sacred name of God, and the blessed Virgin Mother: To hate all Periuries, Blasphemies, Rapines, Vsurets, Sacrileges, Murders, Adulteries, keeping Concubines, and Drunkennesse: To auoide all suspected places, infameus Persons, as are Panders, Baudes, Drunkards, Tiplers, Tauerners, and Swaggerers, (now tearmed and Sirnamed Academistes) Counterfeites of the Hostell of Bourgongne, and people of the like deplorable liues: To shunne and flye from all such vices, as darken, disgrace and soyle the soule. And (in brieffe) to be such a one in effect (and not in outward appearance) towards God and men, as a Christian ought to be, honoured with this title of Honour, of being a Knight of Iesus Christ, aduancing his Seruice to your vttermost power.

The future Knight hauing promised to keepe and performe all these things, hee sweareth vpon the Holy Sepulcher, in this forme and manner.

His Oath vpon the Sepulcher.

Ego N. profiteor, & promitto Deo Iesu Christo &, Beatæ Virgini Mariæ hæc omnia pro viribus obseruaturum.

I. N. Professe and promise to God, Iesus Christ, and the blessed Virgin Mary, all these things faithfully to obserue.

The Oath done, the Father Guardian layeth his hand on the head of the future Knight, saying.

Et tu N. esto fidelis, strenuus, bonus, & robustus Miles Domini nostri Iesu Christi, & Sanctissimi eius Sepulchri, qui te cum Electis suis in gloria sua collocare dignetur. Amen.

And thou N. be a faithfull, courragious, good and strong Knight of our Lord Iesus Christ, and of his most Holy Sepulcher, that among his elect, he may worthily call thee into his eternall Glory. Amen.

The girting on of his Spurs.

Afterward the Guardian causeth his Golden Spurres to be put on his heeles, and deliuereth him the naked Sword into his hand, saying.

Accipe N. Sanctum gladium in nomine Patris ✠ & Filii ✠ & Spiritus Sancti ✠ Amen: & vtaris eo ad defensionem tuam, & sanctæ Dei Ecclesiæ, ad confusionem Inimicorum Crucis Christi, & Fidei Christianæ: Et quantum imbecillitas humana permiserit, eo nemini iniuste lædas. Quod ipse præstare dignetur qui cum Patre, & Spiritu Sancto regnat Deus per omnia sæcula sæculorum, Amen.

Delivery of the Sword.

Receiue N. this Holy Sword, in the name of ✠ the Father, and of the ✠ Sonne, and of the ✠ Holy Ghost ✠ Amen. And vse it in thine owne defence, and for the Holy Church of God: to the confusion of the enemies to the Crosse of Christ, and of the Christian Faith. And in as much as humaine weaknes will permit; hurt nor wound any man therewith vniustly. Which hee vouchsafe to grant, who with the Father and the Blessed Spirit reigneth God, world without end. Amen.

And then the Sword is guirded about him by the Guardian, who pronounceth these verses of the Prophet Dauid.

The guirding it on by the Guardian.

Accingere gladio tuo N super femur tuum potentissime, in nomine Domini nostri Iesu Christi: & attende quod Sancti non in gladio, sed per Fidem vicerunt Regna.

Guird thee N. with thy Sword vpon thy thigh, O thou most mighty, in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ: And learne to know, that the Saints, not by the Sword, but by Faith doe winne the kingdome.

The Knight boweth downe his body, and layeth his head vpon the Sepulcher, and then the Guardian giueth him three stroaks flatlong with the Sword vpon his shoulders, saying.

The maner of his Knighting.

Ego constituo, & ordino te N. Militem sanctissimi Sepulchri Domini nostri Iesu Christi in nomine Patris ✠ et Filii ✠ & Spiritus sancti ✠ Amen.

I constitute and ordaine thee N. a Knight of the most Holy Sepulcher of our Lord Iesus Christ: In the name of the ✠ Father, and of the ✠ Sonne, and of the ✠ Holy Ghost, Amen. Making three times the signe of the Crosse. He kisseth him afterward, and putteth on the Chaine and Crosse of Gold about his neck. Which being done, the Knight, & they with him (if there be any more created) do sing Te Deum laudamus, in making a Procesſion; And the Guardian ſingeth the Hymne of reioycing, which being ended, the Prayers follow.

I. Speciosè forma præ filiis Hominum.
R. Accingere gladio tuo ſuper femur tuum potentiſſime.
I. Domine exaudi orationem meam.
R. Et clamor meus ad te veniat.
I. Dominus vobiſcum. R. Et cum ſpiritu tuo.

Oremus.

DA Eccleſiæ tuæ miſericors Deus, vt Sancto Spiritu congregata, Hoſtili nullatenus incurſione turbetur:

OMnipotens ſempiterne Deus ſuper hunc N. famulum tuum (vel famulos tuos, if there be many to be Knighted) qui eminenti mucrone Militiæ circumcingi deſiderat, gratiam tuæ benedictionis infunde, ✠ eumque Dexteræ tuæ virtute munitum, ſac cunctis aduerſantia cœleſtibus armari præſidiis, quibus in hoc ſeculo nullis bellorum tempeſtatibus exturbetur Per Dominum noſtrum Ieſum Chriſtum qui, tecum viuit & regnat Deus per omnia ſecula ſeculorum. Amen.

I. Thou art fairer then the children of men.
R. Guird thee with thy ſword vpon thy thigh, O thou moſt mightie.
I. O Lord heare our prayer.
R. And let our cry come vnto thee.
I. The Lord be with you.
R. And with thy Spirit.

The Ceremonies being finiſhed, the Guardian, the Religious Brethren, and the Voyagers thither, doe kiſſe and embrace the new made Knights.

Conclusion of the Ceremonies.

It is reported, that Saint Lewes gaue great Exemptions and Priuiledges to the French voyagers beyond the Seas, for defence of the Holy Land, which are more at large related by the forenamed French Authours. But becauſe I haue found nothing in the Court Regiſters, nor in the Chamber of Accompts, and haue ſeene the great Seale denied, concerning the expeditions for the voyages of Sens, and of other places in France: I let them paſſe vnder ſilence. And to referre the Originall of thoſe Priuiledges to our Kings Charlemaigne, Lewes the Seauenth, and Philip Auguſtus: I ſhould take it to bee an abuſe. Becauſe (without all queſtion to the contrary) they would be found in the Regiſters of Court, or in the Requeſts of the Kings Houſe, or thoſe of the Franchiſe of Chalo S. Marã, where ſuch Commiſſion cauſes and Charters are Regiſtred effectually.

The Authors care for auoiding vnfruitfulnes.

Dom Philip, Second of the name, King of Spayne, in the Lands vnder his obedience, and namely in Flanders, laboured to ſet on foot againe this Order of Knights of the Holy Sepulcher of Ieruſalem, declaring himſelfe to be Great Maiſter thereof. And (indeed) I haue ſeene his Pancarte, dated in the yeare One thouſand, fiue hundred, fiftie and eight: but it prooued to no effect, for ſome reaſons which we ſhall ſhew hereafter.

Seeking to raiſe vp the Order againe

In the yeare, One thouſand, ſixe hundred and fifteene, Charles de Gonzaga of Cleue, Duke of Neuers, and of Retelois, Soueraigne of Charle-Ville, deſcended of the moſt famous houſe of Mantua, would haue giuen life againe to the ſaid Order of Knights of the Holy Sepulcher of Ieruſalem, with a new Collar of the Order, whereof I haue ſeene the ſhape or portraite: which I haue not ſet downe in this Booke: becauſe his intent ſorted to no effect, no more then the purpoſe which hee had in the life time of the late King Henry the Great (who is with God) for reeſtabliſhing the Order of the Swan proper and perticuler to the houſe of Cleue.

The Order of the Swanne ought to bee reuiued.

As this Prince purſued theſe diſpatches at Rome, and to our Holy Father the Pope Paulus Quintus, ſitting at this preſent in the Holy Chayre Apoſtolicall; the Great Maiſter of Malta Aloſ de Vignacourt (of the French language and a Piccard by Nation) ſent to the moſt Chriſtian King Lewes the Thirteenth for Ambaſſadour extraordinary, Dom Louis Mendez de Vaſconcellos (of the Spaniſh Language) Baillife d'Acre. Hee had audience in the Caſtell of the Louure at Paris, in the Moneth of June, One thouſand, ſixe hundred and ſixteene, where he declared, that the Great Maiſterſhip of the Order of the Holy Sepulcher at Ieruſalem, with al the goods belonging to the ſaid Order, in what place ſoeuer they were in Chriſtendome, had bin, and was reduced and ioyned to that of Malta, by the Bull of Pope Innocent the eight (as wee haue alreãdy formerly obſerued) dated the eight and twentieth day of March, in the yeare One thouſand, foure hundred, foureſcore and foure.

Knights of the Sepulcher ioyned with them of Malta

And that the late King of Spayne, Dom Phillip the Second, hauing purpoſed to make himſelfe knowne, for Great Maiſter of the ſaid Order of the Holy Sepulcher of Ieruſalem: the Great Maiſter which then was in authority, made it euident to his Catholique Maieſtie, that the vnion was paſt of this Ordrr, with the other of Malta, and to it was then forborne.

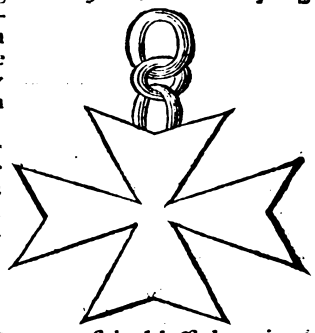
By theſe and other remonſtrances to his moſt Chriſtian Maieſty, it plainely appeared, that as at the requeſt of the ſaid Catholicke King, Pope Pius, Fourth of the name, had giuen his Bull confirmatiue, for annexing the Order to that of Malta: euen ſo he entreated in the name of the Great Maiſter, and of the Ordrr of Malta, to doe the like for the Commanderies and goods, being in the Lands vnder his obedience. Which was granted, and the Bull obtayned of the Pope Paulus Quintus, at the purſuite of the Marquiſſe de Trainell des Voſins, Knight of the Kings Orders, and Ambaſſadour at Rome for his moſt Chriſtian Maieſtie.

The vniting of the two Orders confirmed by the Popes Bulles.



The Croſſe of the Order of Malta, called, Of the Brethren Hoſpitallers of Saint Iohn Baptiſt of Ieruſalem. Inſtituted in the yeare of Grace, One thouſand, one hundred and foure: By Baldwine, Firſt of the name, King of Ieruſalem.

Croix de l'Ordre de Malte, dite des Freres Hoſpitaliers de Sainct Iean Baptiſte de Hieruſalem.

CHAP. V.

SOme fewe yeares before the Voyage of our French Paladines beyond the Seas, for conqueſt of the Holy Land; there were Italian Merchants of Malphi or Melphi, in the Kingdome of Naples, who viſiting the places of the Holy Citty, honoured with the Sacred Miſteries of our Redemption; obtained of the Caliphe of Ægypt, paying a yearely Tribute (as the Turkes make the Chriſtians to doe, for raiſing their Cafares, which they augment (as themſelues thinke good) by infinity of Vanies, that is to ſay calomnies and vile ſpeeches, which dayly they impoſe vpon the poore Chriſtians) a little Cote or Lodging, to haue ſome ſhelter in the Holy Citty, as well for themſelues, as thoſe of their Nation which aduentured in the Holy Voyage.

Merchants of Malphi firſt beginners of this Brotherhood.

According to this permiſſion, they lodged themſelues directly before the Patriarchall Church of the Holy Sepulcher, by erecting there a ſmall houſe, and as ſmall an Oratory, vnder inuocation on the Sacred Virgin, there to celebrate Diuine Seruice in the Latine tongue. Moreouer, they cauſed to come from their Countrey of Naples, Religious Hermites, of the Order of Saint Auguſtine, conducted thither by an Abbot, who after compaſſing more time, cauſed to be built there a much greater Oratorie, dedicated in honour of the bleſſed penitent woman woman, Saint Mary Magdalen.

The great resort of charitable Pilgrims

The extent of deuotion in this Abbot, and his Religious Brethren, prooued to be the cause, that numberlesse troupes of Pilgrimes of their Nation passed ouer the Seas; by whose Almes and charitable reliefe, they encreased both in multitude of men, and store of wealth. When the Pilgrimes perceiued, what good entertainement was extended to them by these Monkes; such as had liberty and disposition to doe it, tooke the habite of their Religion, offering their willing paines and diligence; to helpe and cure diseased Pilgrimes, so that in regard of their louing Hospitality: they were named and called Brethren Hospitallers of Saint Iohn Baptist of Ierusalem. For they had procured a Church to bee builded, in honour of the Precursor or fore-runner of the Sauiour of the World, with an Hospitall close ioyning thereto. Now, ouer and beside their bounteous Hospitalitie, they conducted the Pilgrimes, to keepe and defend the wayes and passages, against the Sarrazins.

The reason why they had such a name giuen them.

When the Holy Citty was conquered by our French Princes, King Baudwine, First of the name, confirmed these Brethren Hospitallers in so Holy an Office, and gaue them great goods. Especially he permitted them to manage Armes, according as the Chanous Reguler did, that were Gardians of the Holy Sepulcher. Whereupon he Instituted them, to be Knights of Saint Iohn, to entertaine, lodge, and comfort Pilgrimes that came to the Holy Land, of what Countrey or Nation soeuer they were, to cure and heale them, in all causes of sicknes and distresse: which was the fourth Article of the Vowe they made, beside them of Obedience, Pouerty and Chastity. The Institution of this Order was in the yeare of Grace One thousand, one hundred and foure, in which yeare they made the forenamed Vows, in presence of the Patriarch of Ierusalem, whom they acknowledged (at the first) to be their chief Commander and Great Maister.

Their Institution in Knighthood, and the Vowes they made.

For their better distinguishing, from them that were Knights of the Holy Sepulcher; they tooke the Blacke Habite of the Hermites of Saint Augustine, and aboue on the left side of the Breast, wore a Crosse of the White Cloath, made as Ankred, and with eight points, for representation of eight heauenly Beatitudes. In warre, for appearing the more dreadfull to the Miscreants, they wore a Crimosine or Redde Coate of Armes, with the White Crosse vpon it, as you see it here presented: but in their Monasteries, and on the day of their Profession, they did weare the Blacke Garment onely.

The manner of their Habit and Crosse in Warre and otherwise.

Being multiplyed both in men and reuennues, they elected and chose a Great Maister of their owne Body, and the first was a French Gentleman, named Gerard de Sainct Didier, a Piccard by Nation: which Gerard, beeing of the House and Sirname of Sainct Didier, Portoit d'Azur au Lyon d'Argent. And his Successors, for their good and faithfull seruices yeelded to the Crowne of France, added thereto La Bordure de Gueules, chargee de huict Fleurs de Lys d'Or, which is the Quarter of Ioyeuse, allied in the Royall House of Luzignan, and afterward into that of Bourbon, which now ruleth and commandeth.

The first great Maister and his Armes.

After Gerard de Sainct Didier, succeeded Brother Raymond, of the House of Poulignac in Auuergne, at this present a Viscountie: the Lords whereof Portent Fesse d'Argent, et de Gueules de huict Pieces. Of this Illustrious and Ancient House, was the Lord Sidonius Apollinaris, the learned Bishop of Auuergne, a Romaine Senatour, and Sonne in Lawe to the Emperour Auitus. And of this house (the chiefest in Auuergne) was issued and descended Armentaria, Wife to Florentius, Father and Mother to Saint Gregory, Bishop of Tours, the most Auncient Annalist of France: the Armes of which house were De Gueules à vn Mouton d'Argent, and so I thinke they are still.

Raymond of Poulignac (second Great Maister).

After the Conquest of Ierusalem, performed by Saladine (as we haue already declared) vnder the King Iohn de Brenne, who was the last Crowned King thereof; the Knights Hospitallers, as well as they of the Holy Sepulcher, and other, retreated themselues to the strong Cittie of Acres, called Ptolomais, which was partitioned and deuided among the Christians. For each Prince and Order of Knights, had their Quarter separate by it selfe, where they had their Iustice, Weight, Measure, and Ptolomais or Acres deuided among the Christians.

and taxations, without subiection one to another. And by the multitude of Courts, and Iurisdictions of so many seuerall people, as would not obey one another: in this great Citty were committed infinite murders, thefts and adultries. For when any one had offended in wicked and abusiue manner in one Iurisdiction, he would flye and shelter himselfe in another, by meanes whereof, many great and grieuous delicts escaped vnpunished.

The seuerall Courts and Iurisdictions, which were in the Great Citty of Acres.

THe First Court was that of the Kings of Ierusalem, who were Crowned in this Citty (after the surprizall of Ierusalem) held by the Kings of Cyprus.

The Second was that of the Kings of Naples and Sicilie, who bare the name and Armes of Kings of Ierusalem, and contested against them of Cyprus.

The Third belonged to the Prince of Antioche: who bare for Armes D'Or a vne Croix plaine de Gueules escartele de France, so saith the Lord of Ioinuille.

The Fourth belonged to the Count of Iaffa: Qui portoit d'Or a la Croix pattee de Gueules, so saith the same Lord of Ioinuille.

The Fift appertained to the Patriarch of Ierusalem, with his Knights of the Holy Sepulcher, of whose Armes we haue before made declaration.

The Sixt was the Court of the Legate for the Pope in the Holy-Land: Qui portoit de Gueules a deux Chefs d'Or en Saultoir.

The Seauenth was the Court of the Counts of Tripoly, bearing Sirname of Tolosa: Qui portoient de Gueules a la Croix Cleehee, et Pommettee d'Or.

The Eight appertained to the Princes of Galilee: Qui portoient de Luzignan, Escartele de France a la Bande de Gueules.

The Ninth belonged to the Great Maister of the Templers.

The Tenth belonged to the Great Maister of the Hospitallers.

The Eleauenth belonged to the Great Maister of the Brethren of the Virgin Mary, of the Order of the Teutons.

The Twelfth belonged to the Great Maister of Saint Lazarus.

The Thirteenth was the Court of the Common wealth of Venice: Qui porte d'Argent au Lyon de Gueules.

The Foureteenth was for the Common-wealth of Geneway.

The Fifteenth was for the Common wealth of Pisa.

The Sixteenth was for the Common-wealth of Florence: D'Argent a vne Fleur de Lys espanouie de Gueules.

The Seauenteenth was the Court for the King of Armenia.

The Eighteenth was the Court for the Prince of Tarentum in Sicilie: Qui portoit de France sans nombre, Escartele de Gueules à la Croix plaine d'Or, Cantonne de Quatre Besans d'Argent, chacun charge d'vne Croix de Synople, Sur le Tout vne Cottice d'Argent.

And the last was that which belonged to the Duke of Athens: Qui portoit Cinq pumets de Gueules, equipolez à Quatre d'Ermines.

We haue obserued in our former discourse, how this Olde Bulwarke of Christendome, was taken and rescued by Assault from the Sarrazins; by the Kings of France and England, Phillip Augustus and Richard Coeur de Lyon: noate now heere the reprisall of it againe, by the Sarrazins.

The Citty of Acres the olde Bulwarke of Christendome

In the yeare One thousand, two hundred and tenne, the Soldane of Egypt hauing raised on foote a puissant Army; got into his possession the Citty and County of Tripoly, and tooke also from the Christians the Cities of Sidon, or Sidonia, Tyre, Baruth, and the whole Principality of Antioche, except the strong Citty of Ptolomais. Hauing thus swept all the way before him, he concluded a Truce for Fiue yeares with the Christians of Ptolomais. This Citty being filled with so many people, the Horsemen of all the fore-remembred Courts, and Foureteene Hundred Horse beside, which Pope Nicholas maintained there: dearth and scarsity of Victualls constrained the most part of them to issue forth, to seeke for prouision elsewhere. And

A Truce taken for fiue yeares with the Christians.

namely

namely the Soldiours for the Pope, who came forth of the Citty, to liue in the open Field. The Soldane of Egypt named Helpy, tooke this for a breach of the Truce, and therefore denounced warre against them of Ptolomais: which he besieged foone after with his Army, commaunded by his Lieutenant Generall, the Amirant Melesat.

But foure Courts remaining in the Citty.

Soone after, most part of the people forsooke the Citty, so that there remained in it but Foure Courts only, to witt; that for the King of Cyprus; that for the Patriarch; that for the Great Maister of the Templers; and that for the Great Maister of the Knights Hospitallers, yet all of them at deuision one with an other, such rancour and spleene was among the Christians.

Ptolmais taken and all the people slaine.

The King of Cyprus immediatly left the Citty, to goe for the defence and keeping of his owne Island, which Helpy threatned to take from him. The Patriarch (within a few dayes after) did as much, and made his retreate to Cyprus: so that there remained now none for the defence thereof, but the Knights Templers and Hospitallers, with Twelue thousand men, the most part of them soare wounded with Arrowes, and languishing with extremity of famine. Whereof the Soldane hauing intelligence, and that the Great Maister of the Templers was mortally wounded by an impoysoned Arrowe: he made a generall assault vpon the Citty, whereinto he forcibly entred, and put all the people to the edge of the Sword, vtterly racing all downe to the ground, as elsewhere hath bin related to you.

Rhodes taken by the Knights Hospitallers, by a singular stratagem.

As for the Templers, they withdrew themselues thence into Italie, Spayne and France, where they had great store of goods. But the Knights Hospitallers, they were long time shut vp in their Wodden Townes, that is to say, their vessells and Shipps, floating on the Seas of Egypt and Greece, Vntill in the yeare One thousand, three hundred and eight, they surprized the Porte and Citty of Rhodes (the most famous of the East) by an admirable Stratagem of Warre.

..... Et olim meminisse iuuabit.

The chiefe Leaders of this selected Squadron, garmented and disguised like Sheepheards, shewed themselues at the Porte on the Land-side, with ten or twelue flocks of Sheepe, among which were a number of vndauntable Souldiers, creeping vpon their hands and feete, and couered with the skinnes of Sheepe. Proceeding on, they first got possession of the porte; and afterward of the Citty from the Sarrazins, who hoping to secure themselues at their Porte: were inuested with the Sea Army of the Hospitallers, who had seized the Porte, and a great number of Shipps ryding therein. In this manner they became Maisters of that goodly and rich Citty, and soone after of the whole Isle of Rhodes, with the fiue little Ilands which enguirte it.

Dolus, an Virtus quis in Hoste requirat?

Rhodes one of the most famous Cities of Greece.

It was (in elder times) one of the most famous Townes and Cities in Greece, wherein was an excellent Accademie of Learning and good Letters, and namely of Philosophie, where Cicero, Cæsar and the greatest persons of Rome had made their studies, as Cicero himselfe writeth in many passages. It was likewise much renowned, in regard of an admirable Colossus (reckoned among the Seauen Wunders of the World) erected on the Porte of the same Citty of Rhodes, in honour of the Sunne, who was held for the Tutelary God and Guardian thereof, as we learne of Petronius Arbiter;

Est tutela Rhodos beata Solis.

The huge Colossus of Rhodes.

This Colossus was of very great and dreadfull stature. One of his feete stood fixed on the shoare of the Hauen, and the other vpon the further side of the Peere, so that the very greatest Shipps (with their Sayles openly displayed) sayled and passed betweene his leggs, to enter into the Roade and Porte. His height consisted of threescore and tenne Cubites, being the workemanship of Chares the Lydian, an excellent Image-maker and Caruer, who in the space of twelue yeares fully effected it: hauing payed vnto him the price of Three hundred Talents, for the making of it, which amounteth to an Hundred and Fourescore thousand Crownes of our money.

A famous Carver, Scholler to Lysippus.

In one hand he held a Pike or Iaueline, and in the other a Sword; vpon his Breast was was fixed a great Mirrour or Looking-Glasse, wherein such as inhabited the Island, were able to discouer (a farre off) what Shipps came to arriue in the Porte. By reason of the huge massinesse and weight of his structure, he continued standing but Fiue and Fifty yeares, being broken to pieces by a sudden trembling and shaking of the earth. The greatest and mightiest man of these times, was not able to embrace the Tombe of this Statue, whose fingers exceeded the height and bignesse of any naturall man.

The Colossus broken in pieces by an earthquake.

Some yet are of opinion, that he stood firmely One thousand, three hundred and threescore yeares, and vntill such time as the Persians and Sarrazins, vnder conduct of their Grand Mirammolin Azoman, became Maisters of part of Affrica, Europe, Rhodes and the adiacent Isles. And then they brake into morsells and pieces this Colossus, and with the Copper and Brasse, which was imployed to cimment and knit the ioynts and parts thereof together, they loaded Nine Hundred Cammells.

Other opinions of this Colossus.

In this Citty of Rhodes, they did beate and stampe money of Siluer, in bignesse somewhat neere to an halfe Teston of France, but yet much thicker, and the figures thereon more embossed then ours are. These pieces of Siluer, are like to the halfe Sickle of the Iewes, or the Didrachma of the Romaines; but they be more worth. There is a Tradition, that the Thirtie Pence, for which the Saviour of the world was sold, and deliuered to the Iewes by the traytour Iudas; were of this kinde. And in very deede, in the Church of the Holy-Crosse of Ierusalem at Rome, is to be seene one of those Thirtie Pence, which is wholly like to that in the Church of the Temple in the Citty of Paris. It is enchased in a Shrine, and is to be seene but thorow a Christall Glasse, and on the side which may be noated, appeareth nothing but a head.

The Teston in value XVIII. d.

One of the Pence that Christ was sold for.

The learned Gulielmus Budeus, the Honour of our Citty of Paris, and of all France (whose descendants both by name and Armes, Portent d'Argent à trois Grappes de Raisin d'Azur. 2. 1. au Chevron de Gueules) in the remarkable Tract which he wrote De Asse, affirmeth, that he had seene the Pennie of Siluer in the Temple at Paris, and that on it was represented a head, as in truth there is. But concerning the other side, neither the learned Cardinall Baronius, nor Budeus doe speake any thing else, then of the weight of those Siluer Pence, which the Euangelists tearme Argenteos. One of those Siluer Pence of Rhodes, I haue, and both the sides thereof, in this manner I shew to you.

The Authours comparing all the three Pence together.

I Haue confronted and compared it, with the sight of that Pennie at Rome, and the other in the Temple at Paris, and they are all three alike, both in the visage, and in the Circumfernce. Mine is in weight two Groates, a halfe pennie lesse of Siluer, which commeth to twelue Sols and one Liard. On the one side it hath the visage of the Sunne, like to the fashion of a young mans face, without a Beard, with long locks of heyre, as heere it is figured, and as Poets haue feigned. On the other side is a Blowne Rose, higher & greater then ours are, & which commeth somewhat neere in resemblance to the Rose which we tearme of Iericho, and which are brought from the Holy-land. Vpon this Pennie, the Rose hath on eche side a Button, the one wherof beginneth to blome, but not the other. Aboue the Rose, on the ring of the piece, is formed in Capitall Greeke Letters POAION, Rhodion, which signifieth, and would say, (if it could) A Rose: At the foote whereof is this Sillable Ey. It is generally knowne, that the Citty of Rhodes Portoit d'Argent a cette Rose, accompagnee de ses Boutons de Gueules, a la tige de Synople, and these were the Armes of Rhodes.

The Pennie of Rhodes in shape and proportion.

In stead of a Legend about it.

So that Thirty Pence of this Money, amounteth not altogether, but to the summe of Eighteene Poundes, Seauen Shillings and Sixe Pence of our money, and seemeth a very very ſmall ſumme, for buying a piece of Ground or Land, which the Euangeliſts call Acheldemach, The Potters Field, ſo neere to Ieruſalem, peopled with more then a Million of men, ſolde for an offence, and with condition, that it ſhould neuer be redeemed; in regard it was deſtenied for the buriall place of Pilgrimes, which came to Ieruſalem at the Solemne Feaſts there held.

Acheldemach the Potters Field.

In what maner the Iewes made ſale of their inheritances.

And euery one well knoweth, that (amongſt the Iewes) inheritances were ſold more or leſſe, according as the venditions were made, either neere, or further off from the yeare of Iubilie, which they feaſted from fifty yeares to fifty yeares; a feaſt ſo ſollemnely obſerued among them, that the ſellers did then reenter into their ſold inheritances which they poſſeſſed againe freely, and without any charge, or paying any arrerages according as it was ordained by their Law, in the fiue and twentieth Chapter of Leuiticus.

The Tribe of Leui aſſigned to the deuotion of the Iewes.

But it may be, that this Potters Field was (in parte) bought with thoſe Thirty pence, and the other part, might be the Almes and gifts of the Proprietaries or owners, both in the Temple of Ieruſalem, and publikely, for ſo good a ſubiect, as the buriall of Pilgrimes and poore Strangers. For ouer and beſide the Offerings and Tribute money, which the Iews offered and payed to the Treaſurers in the Temple, for maintaining the Tribe of Leui (the deſeruing Miniſters thereof, who at the diſtribution and diuiſion of the Land of Promiſe to the Iewiſh people, had not any lot or partage, but were aſsigned to the Iewes deuotion) Inheritances might be legacied to them, which falling into Mortmaine: could not be redeemed by any cuſtome of kinred, whatſoeuer Iubilie might be alleadged, or ſelling, or alienating, as it is written in the Seauen and twentieth of Leuiticus. And ſuch an enheritance was called Ager Anathematis; A Fielde wholly dedicated and conſecrated to God: And which from thence forward, might fall no more into any ſecular or prophane hand.

The Knights Hoſpitallers become Knights of the Rhodes.

After that this Iſle of Rhodes was thus in the power of the Knights Hoſpitallers; they tooke the Sirname and title of Knights of the Rhodes, and bare (as yet they doe to this preſent) for Armes De Gueules à la Croix plaine d'Argent. And this is a matter very remarkeable, that (after this time) ſuch of the Nobilitie of France, as were accuſed and attainted of any capitall crime, which deſerued death: they were relegated and baniſhed (for time, or perpetuitie) to this Iſle of Rhodes, according to the weightineſſe of the offence; to the end, that they might finiſh their dayes there in the ſeruice of God, againſt the Infidells for the ſupport of Religion. In this manner Anthony de Chabanes, a worthy and famous Lord, by decree of the Court of Parliament at Paris, Anno, One thouſand, foure hundred, threeſcore and three, the twentieth day of Auguſt, Signed H. Aligret: all his mooueables and immooueables were taken and confiſcated to the King, and himſelfe (for euer) baniſhed to the Citty of Rhodes. This houſe hath produced Marſhals of France, Qui portoient de Gueules au Lyon d'Ermines, Armé, Lampaſſé, et Coronné d'Or, Eſcartelé ac face d'Argent, et d'Azur de Six pieces, à la Bordure de Gueules.

A matter deſeruing obſeruation.

And theſe Knights Hoſpitallers poſſeſſed the ſaid Iſle of Rhodes, vntill in the yeare of Grace One thouſand, fiue hundred, twenty and three: when the Great Turke Soliman tooke it by force, through want of ſuccour from the Chriſtian Princes: For a time they retreated themſelues in Sicilie. The beſiedging of the Citty of Rhodes was admirable, hindered by a ſmal handfull of inuincible Chriſtian Knights, encouraged and conducted by their Great Maiſter Phillip de Villiers, of the Iſle Adam, a French Gentleman: againſt Soliman in perſon, engirt with an Armie of two hundred thouſand men. This famous houſe of Villiers, Lords of the Iſle Adam, betweene Paris and Rouen: Portoit d'Azur au Cheſ d'Or, charge d'vn Dextrochere (that is to ſay a right arme and hand) reueſtus et habillez d'Ermines, au fanon de meſmes deſcendant ſur le Tout frange d'Argent: Eſcartele de Clermont (afterward called De Neelle, et d'Offemont, Houſes moulten into that of Montmorency, as wel as that of the Iſle Adam) qui eſt de Gueules à deux Bars adoſſez d'Or ſeme de Treſles de meſme.

The Iſle of Rhodes wun by the Turkes from the Knights.

After the loſſe of this Iſle of Rhodes, and in this manner wun from the Knights; the Emperour Charles the Fift, gaue them that Iſland of Malta for their abiding, which in Latine is called Melita by the writings of Saint Paul, the Doctour of the Gentiles, Gentiles, in deſcribing his voyage of Rome, ſeated vpon the Mediterranean Sea, containing Thirty miles in all, or thereabout, to witt, Two and twenty in longitude, and about Twelue in latitude. At that time it was barren, and almoſt vn-inhabited; but at this preſent fruitfull and husbanded, adorned with ſtrong and beautifull places, and furniſhed with couragious and valiant men. So that at this day, it is the Rampiar of Europe, to ſhelter Sicilie, and guard the coaſts of Italie, the dreaded terrour of the Turkiſhe Empire.

Melta beſiedged by Soleman, and valiantly defended by the Knights to his foyle and ouerthrowe.

It was immediatly beſiedged by the Emperour Soliman, in the moneth of May 1563. with a Nauall Armie, conſiſting of an hundred and threeſcore Gallies of Turkiſh Souldiours, and an hundred other Veſſells, carying Victualles and Munitions. The Siedge was brauely ſuſtained for the ſpace of Foure whole Moneths together, by the force and valiancy of the Knights of the Order, and the diſcreete conduct of the Great Maiſter John de Valete Gentleman. Whereby the enemy was compelled to diſcampe, and leaue (for recompence) Thirty thouſand of his people behind him, as alſo the moſt part of his Artillery, the Eight day of September in the ſame yeare, One thouſand, fiue hundred, threeſcore and three: vpon which day, is yearely made a generall Proceſſion at Malta, in thankfull acknowledgement for this deliuerance. The Great Maiſter by the Sirname of Valete, called Pariſot, of the language of Prouence, in the yeare One thouſand, fiue hundred, threeſcore and Sixe, cauſed to be built the new Citty of Malta, called by his owne name Malta Valete: Qui portoit de Gueules, au Perroquet, à la Patte droict leuee d'Argent.

New Malta built by the Great Maiſter Valete.

This Order was compoſed of eight Nations, tearmed ſo many ſeuerall Tongues or Languages.

The firſt was that of Prouence, the prime or Chiefe whereof was called the Great Commandatory: And in this language are accounted the Great Priories of Saint Gylles, and of Toloſſa.

Auuergne is the ſecond Language: the Chiefe whereof hath the title of Marſhall of the Order, who hath the Great Priory of Auuergne.

Marſhall of the Order.

France is the third, and the Chiefe hath the title of Grand-Hoſpitaller of the Order. In and vnder him are the Great Priories of France, Aquitaine and Champaigne: The Bayliffe Capitularie of Morea, and the Bayliffe Capitulary, Generall Treaſurer of the Order.

Great Hoſpitaller.

Italie is the fourth, the Chiefe whereof is Admirall of the Order, which containeth the Great Priories of Rome; of Lombardie, of Venice, Piſa, Barletta, Meſſina and Capua.

Admirall of the Order.

Arragon is the fift Language, comprehending the Kingdomes of Nauarre, Arragon, and the Counties of Cathalogna, Rouſſillion and Cerdagnia: The head or Chiefe man whereof hath the title, of Great Conſeruatour of the Order. And in that Language is the Great Caſtillian of Ampueſta.

Great Conſeruator of the Order.

England is the ſixt Language, the Chiefe whereof is named Le Grand Turcopolier de l'Ordre, that is to ſay, Great Colonell of the Cauallerie. In him is comprehended the Great Priories of England, Scotland and Ireland.

Great Colonel of the Horſe.

Germanie is the ſeauenth, the Chiefe whereof is named High Bayliffe of the Order: And vnder this Language are compriſed the Kingdomes of Hungarie, Bohemia, Poland, Denmarke, Sweden, and all the Eſtates of Germanie.

High Bayliffe of the Order.

Caſtille is the laſt, and the head thereof is tearmed High Chauncellour of the Order. And this Language comprehendeth the Kingdomes of Leon, Caſtille, Portugall, the Algarues, Granada, Tolledo, Gallicia, and that beſide of Andalouſia.

High Chauncellour of the Order.

Admittance and receiuing into this order.

The meanes of admittance and receiuing into this Order, is, by making proofe of Nobility by foure Races, as well by the Fathers Parentage, as the Mothers likewiſe. To be eighteene yeares of age, and borne in lawfull Mariage; except the Baſtards of Kings, Princes, and other Great Lords of Chriſtendome, who for the ſplendour of their houſe, and of whence they be auouched, are not ſubiected to make thoſe prooſes. Likewiſe, they may be receiued as Knights, at eight or nine yeares of age, if they be deſcended of Princes, or Pages to the Great Maiſter: who hath the Title of Prince of Malta and of Gaza, and weareth the Crowne belonging to a Prince. And thoſe Great Maiſters may be made Cardinalles of the Holy Romaine Church, holding holding the ſame dignity conioyntly with their Great Maiſterſhip.

And this is to be ſufficiently proued, that this Order, from the firſt Inſtitution thereof, hath bin conſerued in renowne and honour; being as a fruitfull Garden or ſeed-plot, for yielding plenty of braue Captaines and valiant Souldiers, Knights for the ſeruice of Ieſus Chriſt. Of which Order, at this preſent, the Prince Soueraigne and Great Maiſter is Aloſ de Vignacourt, a Gentleman Picard, formerly Bayliffe Capitulary and Generall Treaſurer of the ſame Order: Qui porte d'Argent a Trois Fleurs de Lys au pied nourry de Gueules, au Lambeau de meſmes. And it is generally to be knowne, that the Armes of the Great Maiſters are thoſe of the Religion, Quartered with them of their houſe, Vne Coronne a pointe, & le Chapellet de Patenoſtres, & d Aue Maria, d'Argent au lieu d'Ordre.

The Great Maiſter of the Order at this preſent.

Of thoſe Ceremonies kept and obſerued, in the giuing of this Order.

CHAP. VI.

The maner of preſenting at the Altar.

AFter the proofes of Nobility are made, he which preſenteth himſelfe to be admitted into the Order, and to make profeſſion thereof; commeth before the Altar, clothed with a Caſſock of black Serge, without any Girdle, holding in his hand a weighty Taper of White Waxe, and ſuch a piece of Gold or Siluer as himſelfe pleaſeth, faſtened to the ſaid Candle, receiuing their Holy water, and vſing the accuſtomed prayers. Hauing drawne forth his Sword firſt, he layeth it vpon the Altar: where it is bleſt and hallowed, in ſuch forme and manner as we haue formerly elſewhre obſerued.

The Profeſſours appearing before the Receiuer.

The Receiuant (I meane the man appointed, to make acceptation of this nouell Profeſſour) ſitteth in a Chayre, within the encloſure of the Altare, and after ſolemne Benediction made; he cauſeth the Profeſt to come before him, to vnderſtand what he is to demaund, As, whether he hath receiued the Order of any other Prince, or ſuch perſon as might giue it him? Vpon the anſwere No; the Receiuant ſheweth him, what a good and wholeſome action it is, to be helpfull to the Poore of Ieſus Chriſt; to exerciſe the workes of Mercy; to vowe his perſon to Gods diuine Seruice, for the maintenance of the Chriſtian Catholique Faith, and the protection of Widdowes and Orphanes.

How the Order of Knighthood ought to be giuen.

Further he declareth, that the Order of Knighthood hath bin wiſhed, requeſted & demaunded many times, by men of quite oppoſite diſpoſition, and farre vnfit for ſo great a grace. Becauſe it is not to be graunted or giuen but to ſuch as are famous by Nobility of extraction, or ſuch as haue deſerued it by their owne merit, vertues and ſignale Seruices. Wherefore, whoſoeuer preſented himſelfe to that end and intent, hauing made vndoubted proofe of his extraction, his willing inclination to doe well, and to encreaſe in vertue: ſhould receiue the Order, vnder condition of promiſing and performing theſe Clauſes following.

The Articles are in diuers of the precedent Orders.

To auoyde prolixity, and becauſe the Articles haue in other Tracts bin formerly repeated: we make ſpare of them in this place, and after they haue bin preſented to the Profeſt and he making promiſe to performe them; the Receiuant cauſing him to riſe, ſpeaketh thus to him.

Other Ceremonies paſſing betweene the Receiuant and Profeſt, in giuing the Order of Knighthood.

The charge at deliuering the Sword.

TAke this Sword into your hand. By the cleere and bright glittering Blade, it enſtructeth you to ſhine in Faith, and to enflame you with conſtant embracing it, according to the deuiſe of our Order; Qui porte vne Eſpee nue flamboyant, entouree de flambes de feu, ces trois mots pour legende: Pour La Foy: The Point denoateth Hope, and the Croſſed Hilt Charitie. You are to vſe and ſerue your ſelfe therewith, firſt, for your owne defence, next for the Chriſtian Catholique Religion, and laſtly for poore Widdowes and Orphanes: for you neede not feare, to expoſe your life to all perils and dangers, vpon ſo gobd and ſolid ſubiects. Becauſe the famous Order of Knighthood receiued her prime Inſtitution, onely to recompence vertue; to preſerue publique Societie in vnion and concord; to maintaine the Church and Iuſtice; to defend the Orphane and Widdow from all oppreſſion; and for exerciſing the workes of Mercie to all people indifferently. It is that which rectifieth the ſoule to God, and the body to hazards and perils of this world: thorow the zeale of moſt perfect Charitie, wholly tending to the ſeruice of God. Afterward, he commanded the Profeſt, to rub the Sword vpon his arme, for more cleanely putting it vp into the Scabbard, and then ſaid.

The reaſon of the Order of Knighthoods inſtitution.

Like as you returne that Sword neat and cleane into the Sheath; euen ſo haue you an eſpeciall care, for ſoyling and polluting it, by drawing it forth vniuſtly, to offend or ſtrike any one therewith. But onely imploy it for the ſeruice of God; for defence and augmentation of the Chriſtian Catholique Faith; and protecting of Widdowes and Orphanes from wrong. God giue you the grace to doe what is enioyned you. Amen.

At putting vp the ſword into the Scabbard.

The Profeſt being all this while vpon his knees, holding the Sword in the Scabbard; the Receiuant guirdeth it to his ſide, ſaying. I guird you with this Sword, and place it on your ſide, in the name of God All mightie, of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, and of the glorious Saint George, the Patron of Knights: in honour of whom, I will giue you the Order of Knighthood, to the end, that as by his patience and true faith, he was victorious againſt his enemies; euen ſo you may imitate him in all your actions, that he may obtaine for you the grace of well doing.

At guirding it vpon his ſide.

Afterward, the Receiuant commandeth the Profeſt, to draw the Sword forth againe out of the Scabbard, and to make offer of ſtriking three ſtroakes aloft in the ayre, as if it were to threaten the enemies of the Faith: And then he ſpeaketh theſe words to him.

Of three ſtroak s ſmitten in the ayre.

You haue ſhaken your Sword aloft three ſeuerall times, in the name of the bleſſed Trinitie, thereby defying all the enemies of the Faith; God grant you hope of victory, Amen. Then he wipeth it vpon his arme, and the Profeſt putteth it vp againe in the Sheath, which being done, the Receiuant deliuereth to him theſe Enſtructions.

Concerning thoſe perfections which ought to be in a Knight.

THe firſt perfection which ought to be in any Knight, is to be Honeſt, for vpon Honeſtie dependeth foure principall vertues: As namely Prudence, whereby you ſhall know all things, and preſeruing them in memory, which are paſt; you will the better prouide for them preſent, and thoſe that are to come.

Honeſtie begetteth Prudence.

The ſecond is Iuſtice, who is the Princeſſe and Queene of all the other Vertues: It is ſhee that conſerueth all things, in the equall Ballance of Reaſon and Equitie.

Iuſtice.

The third is Fortitude, who will make you wholly animated with Courage and valiancie, againſt all your enemies whatſoeuer. And Fortitude.

The fourth is Temperance, who will moderate all your actions. You muſt be cloathed with all theſe foure Vertues, to haue them walke alwayes along with you; if you deſire to win the renowne of a braue Knight indeede.

Temperance.

When theſe words are thus ſpoken, the Receiuant taketh the drawne Sword from the Profeſt, and giueth him three ſtroakes therewith vpon the Shoulder, in ſpeaking of theſe words.

I make you a Knight, in the name of God, of the Virgin Mary, and of my Lord Saint John Baptiſt, and in the honour of my Lord S. George; vigilant and peaceſull for the ſeruice of God, and the honor of Knighthood. Which being ſaid, the Receiuant putteth vp the Sword, and looking ſtedfaſtly vpon the Profeſt, he giueth him gently a blow on the cheeke, and then ſaith to him.

Rouſe vp your ſpirits, and dreame no longer on the Worldes affayres; but be watchfull in the Faith of Ieſus Chriſt. And diſpoſe of your ſelfe ſo, as if you were euen at the laſt aſſront, and the very lateſt iniury you were to receiue, in marching vnder the Croſſe of our Lord.

The Receiuant proceedeth on, taking the guilded Spurres, and vſeth theſe words to the Profeſt.

Concerning the Guilded Spurres.

You ſee theſe Spurres are Guilded, whereby you are to vnderſtand, that as the Horſe is feareſull of them, becauſe he is Prickt with them, for his better direction on the way: In like manner be you feareſull, for going forth of your rancke, and breaking the rules of your Vow, by committing any diſhoneſt action, or vnfitting for a Knight. And they are alſo (thus guilded) faſtened to your feete, to the end, that you ſhould preſerue Honour before Gold, or all the Riches of the world.

Then are the Spurrs put on the Heeles of the Profeſt, when the Receiuant (rayſing him from his knees) ſendeth him to his place, to heare the Goſpell and the reſt of the Maſſe, ſtill holding the lighted Taper in his hand. But when he goeth to receiue the Sacrament of the Altar, his Spurres and Sword are taken from him.

What is done after the maſſe is ended.

Maſſe being finiſhed, the Profeſt commeth againe, to preſent himſelfe vpon his knees before the Receiuant, alwaies keeping the Taper lighted in his hand, and when he hath put on his long Robe, to whom the Receiuant ſaith.

What demaund you?

The Profeſt anſwereth.

I deſire to be admitted and receiued, into the Company of the Religious Brethren, of the Order of Saint Iohn Baptiſt of Ieruſalem.

Then ſaith the Receiuant.

You deſire that which hath bin denyed to a great many of men, becauſe they were not worthy to be receiued into our Company. But hauing confidence in your Nobleneſſe, as alſo your ſufficiencie and courage: they are motiues to vs for graunting your requeſt. For our hope is firmely perſwaded, that you will exerciſe the workes of mercy with zealous Charity, and that you will wholly imploye your ſelfe, acceptable to the ſeruice of this Religion, and not only to the Holy Seat Apoſtolique; but likewiſe to all the Kings and Princes of Chriſtendome, withall other vertuous perſons beſide.

The meanes of graunting the Knights requeſt.

Our Order hath encreaſed, and bin enriched in goods, Wealth, Honors, Exemptions, Liberties and Great titles, to the end, that all of vs (ſeruing for the Warrefare and Hoſpitality of the Order) ſhould be enflamed with the true fire of Loue, and perfect Charity in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. And as this burning Taper hath bin deliuered into your hand; you are thereby to learne and vnderſtand, that you ought to be ardently kindled with the Diuine Fire of Charity, which is the true perfection of this wretched and tranſitory life. And this I dare affiure you, that if you will exerciſe a Zealous Spirit, for defence of the Faith of Ieſus Chriſt againſt his enemies; he will call you the more eaſily into his Kingdome.

The meaning of caryng the lighted Taper

And to the end, that you ſhall not excuſe your ſelfe thorow ignorance: I ſtand bound to ſignifie vnto you before this Noble Aſſiſtance, that if you haue a perfect and ſetled will to follow our rule; theſe are your Iniunctions.

Iniunctions deliuered by the Receiuant to the Profeſt.

Depriuation of Will.

FIrſt of all, you muſt prepare your ſelfe from this inſtant houre, to enter into the paines and troubles, which you are to vndergoe in the ſeruice of our Religion. You muſt depriue your ſelfe of your owne will, to reſigne and ſubmit it (this very day) into the hands and power of your Superiours, whoſoeuer they be thereto elected: Commaunding you to obey them, in any faſhion and manner whatſoeuer it be, in regard that you are contented, to rob your ſelfe of your liberty.

And as this Waxe-Candle ſuffereth it ſelfe to be handled, and made into forme, euen ſo muſt you doe.

More-

Moreouer let me tell you, that you will be conſtrained to Faſt, when you haue the greateſt appetite to Feede; to watch, when you would gladly Sleepe; ſuffering and enduring many other paines, contrary to your pleaſures and liberties. Wherefore I doe aduiſe you, that if you haue a full ſetled will, to diſpoſſeſſe your ſelfe thereof, and to reſigne it into the power of the Superiours of our Religion: that you ſpeake it boldly and freely. Whereunto the Profeſt ought to anſwere thus.

Faſting and watching.

Sir, I haue depriued my ſelfe thereof, and doe reſigne it wholly into the hands of my Superiours: I renounce all my pleaſures and liberties, deueſting and deſpoyling my ſelfe of them, with all my heart.

Pleaſures and Liberties.

Whereunto the Receiuant preſently thus replieth.

Seeing you haue ſo freely diſpoſſeſt your ſelfe of your liberty and will, heere in my preſence, and before all theſe Noble Aſſiſtants: I giue you to know and vnderſtand, that being thus heere ſo freely diſpoſſeſſed, I ſummon you to tell me, and freely to confeſſe the trueth, in all ſuch queſtions as I ſhall propound to you, vpon paine of being reputed culpable, and puniſhment inflicted according to your deſeruing in this caſe.

The receiuants demands.

Firſt I demaund of thee, if thou haſt made vow of any other Religion?

If thou haſt not conſummated Mariage, or bin affianced to any woman?

If thou ſtandeſt not bound, to pay ſome ſuch ſumme of mony, as exceedeth thy power, and more than thy beſt faculties can ſupport to ſatiſfie?

If thou art not of ſeruile condition, and of the quality of vulgare Ruſticity?

If thou haſt not bin preuented by Iuſtice?

Whereto the Profeſt ought to anſwere. In all theſe things which you demaund of me. I am not any way faulty. The Receiuant then ſaith.

The receiuants final & dreadfull petition.

Becauſe thou muſt not be deceiued and abuſed, I doe now declare vnto thee, that at all times, and ſo often as it ſhall be diſcouered, that thou art attainted with any of the fornamed matters: thou wilt be inſtantly depriued of our Company, with great ſhame and all ignominie; yea, thou ſhalt be deliuered into the hands of them, who haue power to chaſtiſe thee moſt ſeuerely. Aduiſe thy ſelfe therefore well, that thou art ſo cleane and free, as thou ſaiſt: Whereunto the Profeſt muſt anſwere.

Well Sir, I am ſo: then the Receiuant proceedeth.

Seeing thou ſaiſt and confeſſeſt thy ſelfe to be ſo, and art determined, prouided and reſolued, to be a defender of the Church of Ieſus Chriſt, to ſerue the poore of the Hoſpitall, receiued in by our Religion: we entertaine thee withall our hearts, according to the forme of our eſtabliſhment and Cuſtome, but not otherwiſe. And we will promiſe thee nothing elſe, but onely a pittance of Bread, Water and Salt, poore ſimple Garments, paine and trauaile. Then the receiuant commandeth the Miſſale to be brought, and cauſing the Profeſt to lay his hand vpon the Canon, willeth him to pronounce theſe words.

His receiuing into the Order.

The forme of his Vowe and promiſe.

I make my Vowe and promiſe to Almightie God, to the glorious Virgin Mary, and to my Lord Saint Iohn Baptiſt our Patron, that by aſſiſtance of his grace, I vowe and promiſe to obſerue true Obedience, to him that ſhall be commanded me by God and my Religion. I promiſe likewiſe to liue henceforth in paine and trauaile, and to obſerue Chaſtitie, as it behooueth all Catholique and Religious perſons to doe.

After the ſweuring of theſe Vowes, the Receiuant (beholding the Profeſt mildely and louingly in the face) ſaith:

Now we acknowledge and confeſſe thee, to be one of the Defenders of the Catholique Church, and a Seruant to the Poore of the Hoſpitall of Saint Iohn. And to the end that thou muſt begin with Obedience: I command thee to bring hither the Miſſale, to lay it vpon the Altar, to kiſſe the Altar, and then to carrie away the Miſſale. Which the Profeſt hauing accompliſhed, the Receiuant ſheweth him the habite, and firſt of all the Croſſe of White Cloath, hauing eight points; ſaying,

The manner of deliuering the Croſſe and Habite.

This Croſſe was thus ordained white to vs, in ſignification of Puritie, which we ought alwayes to haue both within the Heart, and without; free from any ſpot or blemiſh whatſoeuer.

The eight points wherewith this Croſſe is compoſed doe ſignifie; and are thus made; in remembrance of Eight Beatitudes, which we ought alwayes to haue within vs.

Eight Beatitudes.

Whereof the First is, Spirituall Contentation.
The Second is, to liue simply, without maliciousnes.
The Third, to liue in all humility.
The Fourth, to mourne for thy sinnes and transgressions.
The Fift, to loue Iustice and true dealing.
The Sixt, to be mercifull.
The Seauenth, to be pure and cleane in heart and minde.
And the Eight, to suffer and endure afflictions and persecutions for righteousnes sake.

All which vertues thou must striue to engraue and fixe in thy heart, for the conseruation of thy Soule.

And therefore I commaund thee to weare this Crosse, openly made fast to thy Garment, right against thy heart vpon the left side; to the end that thou mayest be memoratiue, and thy heart alwayes remember the former Eight Beatitudes, and neuer to forsake them. The Receiuant must afterward cause the Profest to kisse that Crosse, and then to put the Cloake vpon his shoulders, saying.

Putting on of the Habite.

Take this Habite, in the name of the Blessed Trinity, in whom thou shalt finde saluation for thy Soule: if thou labour for the augmentation of the Christian Faith, and defence of all Christians; dedicating thy selfe wholly, to the seruice of the Poore of Iesus Christ. And that thou maist doe this:

I place this Crosse heere on the left side, neere to thy heart, that thou maist loue it to thy vtmost power, and defend it with thy right hand: commanding thee neuer to leaue or forsake it, because it is the true Ensigne and Banner of our Religion; and neuer to wander from the association of thy Brethren which beare thee company, whatsoeuer perill or danger may ensue thereon. Otherwise, thou must be debouted from our Society, with great shame and reproch, cast off as a putrified member, and a transgressour of thy vowes and promises, conformably to our establishment.

The signification of the Habite.

This Cloake wherewith we haue cloathed thee, is in remembrance of the Cammells Skinne, wherewith our Patron Saint Iohn Baptist was cloathed in the Wildernesse. And because in taking this Garment, thou renouncest all the pleasures, pompes and vanities of this World; I commaund thee, to weare it at all requisite times; and thou must procure and enioyne, that after thy death, thy body may be buried therein, that so thou maist the better remember, to imitate and follow our Patrone Saint Iohn Baptist. And thou must fixe all thy hope, to haue remission of thy sinnes, by the death and passion of our Lord and Redeemer Iesus Christ.

Who is figured by this Corde thy Girdle, wherewith he was fast bound by the Iewes.

The seuerall attributes of fitting him in his Habites.

This is the Crowne of Thornes.
This is the Lance, wherewith his side was pierced.
This is the Spundge, wherewith they gaue him Gaule and Vineger to drinke.
These are the Buffettings, wherewith he was smitten.
This is the Crosse, whereon he was Crucified.

And I lay it vpon thy shoulder, in remembrance of his Passion, vnder which thou shalt finde rest for thy Soule, because his yoake is very pleasant and sweete. Wherefore, I put this Bond & Cord about thy neck, to make thee remember the seruitude, which thou hast vowed and promised. And in the vertue of all these, I make thee pertaker of all the spirituall blessings that are, and belong to the name of our Religion throughout the world, desiring God to comfort and assist thee therein.

His dayly inunctions, and other seruices besides.

Thou standest obliged, to say dayly an Hundred and Fifty Pater Nosters; or else the Houres of our Lady, or the Vigiles of the dead.

Thou art likewise bound, to say for euery one of thy deceased Brethren, one of the three Seruices thereto especially appointed.

Thou must be alwayes bare-headed, vntill such time as the Great Maister, or his Licutenant shall commaund thee to put on.

Thou

Thou shalt salute and embrace familiarely, all such as thou meetest, wearing the Crosse of our Religion; in token of loue and Brotherly dilection.

If thou wert at Malta, thou must fetch thy Bread, Salte and water at thine Inne: Insted whereof, I commaund thee to doe so heere: whatsoeuer commeth beside, thou must accept, because our Order doth promise there nothing else.

And now that thou art receiued into our Company, I will shew thee the Coate of Armes or vpper Garment, which thou art to weare ouer thine Armour, at all such times as thou Marchest in Warre against the enemies to our Faith: to the end, that thou maist neuer abandon thy Brethren, or the Enseignes of our Order, which beare the same noates. And what accident soeuer shall happen, thou must neuer turne thy back vpon thine enemie.

These things being thus ended, were said the wounted Prayers required in such cases, according to the Statutes and Customes of the Order, newly imprinted at Paris, and put forth by a Knight of the Order, Iacques Fumee, Commaunder of Castro, an Auncient Family at Paris, that beare in Armes D'Azur, a deux Faces d'Or, et Six Besans d'Argent. 3. 2. 1.

CHAP. VII.

THE Order of the Templers tooke beginning vnder the Reigne of Bauldwine, Second of the name, Third King of Ieruſalem, about the yeare of Grace One thouſand, one hundred and nineteene. In which yeare nine Gentlemen, conducted by Hugues des Payens, and Godfrey de Saint Omer (whoſe Armes it is impoſſible for me to diſcouer, but ſuch as knowe them, ſhall doe me a great pleaſure to enſtruct me in them, for the Second Impreſſion, if God will vouchſafe to let me liue ſo long) vrged thereto by zealous deuotion, paſſed beyond the Seas, and preſented themſelues before the Patriarch of Ieruſalem, named Guarimond: in whoſe preſence they made ſollemne vowes, to liue Religiouſly, in forme and manner as did the Chanons Reguler, of the Order of Saint Auguſtine. Nine whole yeares they liued together in that number, without encreaſing to any more, and King Bauldwine gaue them permiſſion, to build a Lodging, within the circuit and encloſure of the Temple of Salomon in Ieruſalem: whereby they became to be acknowledged, and called by the name of Templers.

The first men that began the Order.

In the yeare One thouſand, one hundred, twenty and eight, they began to encreaſe, by the affluent reſorte of Pilgrimes from beyond the Seas; ſo that by conſent of the Patriarche of Ieruſalem (whom they acknowledged to be their Superiour) they imployed their paines, in guarding the high wayes and moſt daungerous paſſages, as being guydes and ſafe conducts for Pilgrimes to the Holy-Land. By theſe charitable actions, they grew acceptable to the Kings of Ieruſalem, and to the Princes and Lords of Europe, who were very bountefull in Almes-deedes towardes them: becauſe they caried the Title Of Poore Soldiours of Ieſus Chriſt, and of the Temple of Salomon. Pauperes Commilitones Chriſti, & Templi Salomonis appellabantur.

The first imployment of the Templers, by fauour of the Patriarche of Ieruſalem.

In the ſame yeare One thouſand, one hundred, twenty eight, there was held a Generall Councill in the Kingdome of France, at the Citty of Troyes in Champaigne (as I haue read in william of Tyre, in his Twelfth Booke and Seuenth Chapter of the Holy warres, where it is called Concilium Cretenſe, thorow the fault of Printers, for it ſhould be read Concilium Trecenſe) wherein were preſent

At this Councill it was, where the firſt Great Maiſter Hugh preſented himſelfe, being attended on by ſome Brethren of this Order, among whom were by name, Brother Godfry; Brother Payen de Montdidier, Brother Goralli; Brother Geoffrey Biſoll; & Archambald of Saint Amand: who brought to the Councill the Letters of Pope Honorius, and of Steuen Patriarch of Ieruſalem, with ſome Articles and memories of Vowes, concerning the Rules, which were propounded to them to obſerue and follow.

The first great Maiſter of the Templers vrelent at this Councill.

The Fathers in this Holy Councill at Troyes, gaue commaund to the Reuerend Abbot Saint Bernard, to haue the peruſing of thoſe Rules and Vowes; granting to write them (vnder him) the Scribe of the Councill, named Ioannes Michaelenſis. Saint Bernard did ſet downe the Rules of this Order in Latine, anſwerable to his owne elegant ſtile, with an exhortation to the ſaid Hugh, Knight and Great Maiſter of this Order, which is to be read in the Workes of that worthy man Now, concerning the Rules belonging to the Templers, becauſe they were rare and neuer found heretofore Imprinted: I haue ſet them downe at large in the end of this diſcourſe, though not by the due Folios of Pages, or Signature, which ſhould follow in the forme of Printing, yet ſufficiently enough for all men of vnderhanding.

Ioannes Michaelenſis Clearke or Scribe of the Councill.

In preſence of the Patriarch of Ieruſalem, they made profeſſion of the Order of Saint Benedict, and ſware their vowes of Obedience, Pouertie and Chaſtity, acknowledging him to be their Superiour, and al the Patriarches after him. He granted their habite to be White, and thereupon Vne Croix Patriarchale, in the ſame forme as you behold it to be here Figured.

The Templers of S. Benedicts Order.

They encreaſed in numbers of men, and great Riches, becauſe they were ſo couragious as poſsibly men could be; for a ſmall troupe of them, could kill and ouercome an Army of Sarrazins. Here you may obſerue what is written by William the Archbiſhop of Tyre, Iacques de Vitry, and all them that haue written concerning the Holy-Warre.

Erant Templarii Commilitones ita formidabiles Fidei Chriſti aduerſariis, quod vnus perſequebatur Mille & Duodecim, Millia Duodecim: Non quot eſſent, ſed magis Vbi eſſent, dum ad Arma clamaretur, interrogantes. Leones in bello; Agni manſueti in Domo, in Expeditione Milites aſperi; in Eccleſia velut Heremitæ, & Monachi; inimicis Chriſti duri, & feroces, Chriſtianis autem benigni, & mites Vexillum bipartitum ex Albo, & Nigro, quod nominant Beau-Seant quaſi Gallica lingua Bien ſeant præuium habent, eo quod Chriſti amicis candidi ſunt, & benigni, inimicis ſeuo terribiles: atque nigri.

These Knights of the Temple were ſo dreadfull and terrible, against the aduerſaries of the Faith of Chriſt, the Sarrazins and Miſcreants; that one man alone of them, would fight with a Thouſand, and Twelue would vanquiſh Twelue Thouſand. So that at the inſtant when they marched to the Field; where they purpoſed to fight; the Scoutes and Spies of of the Sarrazins, would lurke in corners vpon the wayes (as surprized with feare and terry pangs of death) not couting to know what number they were, but to what place they marched. For being Lambes in the Conuent, they were As so many angry Lyons in the Warre: Inuincible Souldiours in the Fielde affayres, but in the Church Nouices and Hermites: Cruell and Terrible to the enemies of the Faith, but softe, milde and benigne to Christians. They carryed to Warre their Banner, halfe White, and halfe Blacke, which Fayre-seeming, Well-becomming. they called Beau-Seant, which we in French tearme Bien-Seant: because they were and shewed themselues wholly White and fayre towards Christians, but Blacke and Terrible to them that were Miscreants.

Fifty yeares after the establishment of their Order by the Learned Saint Bernard; they met in a Chapter of their Order, to the number of three hundred Gentlemen, & as many Brethren Seruants, most part of them belonging to the Kingdome of France. At this Chapter, they began to elect a Great Maister among themselues, by example of the Knights Hospitalers of S. Iohn of Ierusalem, & the first Great Maister of the Order, The first great Maister of the Order, chosen among themselues. and chosen at this Chapter held in the Holy-Land, and in the Sacred Citie it selfe, about the yeare of Grace, One thousand, one hundred, fourescore & two; was one named Richard de Rilefort, who was slaine at the Siedge of Acres, by the Sultane Saladine, after that he had gotten possession of Ierusalem. By this meanes, they exempted themselues from obedience to the Patriarch of the Holy Citty, and made a Band by themselues. Namely, they changed their Crosse, reiecting the Patriarchall, and taking one Blacke with eight Points; like to that of the Hospitallers of Saint Iohn, with an Vrle and Bordure White.

The Pride and insolence of the Templers. As Time proceeded on, so these Templers grew to be so powerfull and Rich, that they became insupportable, and ouer-arrogant towards the Christians, which resorted thither from beyond the Seas. And as William, the Archbishop of Tyre writeth: Conuersi sunt in arcum prauum, et neglecta humilitate, Patriarchæ Hierosolymitano se substraxerunt, Obedientiam ei, quam Prædecessores eidem exhibuerant, denegantes. Sed et Ecclesiis Dei Decimas, et Primitias subtrahentes, vt eorum indebite possessiones turbando, facti sunt valde molesti. All things were lawfull to them; they commanded at Bagueta against Kings and Princes beyond the Seas, by meanes of their Pride and Ambition: And they onely were the cause, that the Christians lost the Holy-Land, hauing ouer-much correspondency with the Sarrazins.

Obseruations of the Templers abuses. The Lord of Ioinuille obserueth their behauiour, in describing the Voyage of our King Saint Lewes, to whom (saith hee) they shewed very bad offices. They hindered (saith the same Authour) the Conuersion of Le Viel de la Montaigne, who would haue embraced (with all his people) the Faith of Iesus Christ, if hee might haue beene eased of the Taxes and Tributes, which hee payed to to this Order. Suspected they were, of imploying the Subiects of the same Olde Wizzard, treacherously to reuenge their passions and spleenes, by quarrelling with the Christian Princes abiding in the Easte. Facti sunt in arcum prauum. They made themselues by their riots, superfluities, arrogancy and pride) shamefull and contemptible to all creatures. Notoriously were they addicted to drunkennes, for there is a Prouerbe of them, remaining yet fresh among vs; He drinkes like a Templer. Sodomie and blacke Magick were their frequent exercises: their Euen-songs and Meditations, were nocturnall Sacrifices to the diuell, whom they adored as their Maister, and sacrificed to him young Infants, borne of their owne seed, and begotten in the incestuous embracings of their very neerest kinred. Like to the Magi of the Persians, reported by Catullus and Lucane.

Belike the Templers, were Lustie Drinkers.

Cui fas implere Parentem, quid rear esse nefas?

The Generall Councell at Vienna against the Templers. And this was the reason, that beeing attainted and conuinced of so many enormous crimes, and foule offences, they were (iustly and deseruedly) wipte out of the Booke of the liuing, at the fifteenth Generall Councill, assembled at Vienna in Dauphine, the yeare of Grace One thousand, three hundred and Eleauen, by Pope Clement, Fift of the name (a Natiue of the Cittie of Poictiers, so report our Great Chronicles) who Presided there, where also were present in person.

Philip le Bell, King of France, and of Nauarre.
Edward. King of England: And Ferdinand, King of Arragon.
The two Patriarches of Antioch and Alexandria.

Three hundred as well Archbishops, as Bishops, and a great number of Abbots and Doctours, from all the Prouinces of Christendome. In this Councill, the Religion of the Templers was vtterly ouerthrowne and abolished, and the Knights and Brethren thereof executed, yea, burned publikely. Such is the report of our great Chronicles, out of which I coppied this with mine own hand, because I would relate nothing by harr, or heare-say. And so much the rather, in regard there are diuers ignorant writers, who haue blamed the Pope for this condemnation; done (say they) at the inciting of the King of France, Philip le Bell, only to haue the wealth and goods, which this Order possessed in the Kingdome. The Templers publiquely executed and burnt.

In the yeare of Grace One thousand, three hundred and seauen, Lewes, eldest Sonne to the King of France Philip le Bell, as King of Nauarre was Crowned at Pompelona. And this yeare likewise, all the Templers in the Kingdome of France, by command of the same King Philip le Bell, with grant and consent of the Soueraigne Bishop Pope Clement, vpon Fryday after the Feast day of Saint Denys (euen at the instant of one houre) in regard of their horrible, infamous and damnable crimes; were all taken throughout the Kingdome of France, and shut vp close in sundry prisons. All the Templers in France imprisoned.

And in the forenamed yeare, the King of France departed, to ride towards Poictiers, to conferre with the Pope and Cardinalls, where were many things consulted and agreed on by the Pope and King: but (aboue all else) the apprehension of the Templers. And the King sent to the Maisters of the Hospitall and of the Temple, who were Soueraignes beyond the Seas: that (expressely) they should make their personall appearance before him, at a certaine time appointed at Poictiers. Which command the Maister of the Temple performed: but the Maister of the Hospitall was hindered therein, by reason of the Sarrazins in the Isle of Rhodes, so that he could not come at the time appointed: but he sent diuers messengers to pleade in his excuse: yet it came so to passe, that at length, the Isle of Rhodes was recouered: and then the Maister of the Hospitall went to Poictiers, to speake with the Pope. The chiefe Great Maisters of the Hospitall and Temple summoned to their appearance.

And in the yeare of Grace following, One thousand, three hundred and eight, the King determined his iourny to Poictiers, chiefly, About the busines concerning the Templers; for there the Pope kept his Court, and there the King sent a summons throughout his Kingdome, that Noblemen, and such as were not Noble, should be present at Easter at Tours, whither he brought also a great multitude with him. But when the king was with the Pope, matter of great importance passed betweene them. Afterward, by the Popes command, The Great Master General of the whole Order of the Templers, came thither, and with him diuers other, who seemed to bee men of greatest noate in the Templers Order.

In the end, it was concluded and fully determined, that each man (by himselfe) should instantly be imprisoned. And then, in name of the Church, and power from the See of Rome, it was resolued; that there should be no further proceeding, eyther for their enlarging, deliuerance or punishment in any manner; without the command and appointment of the Apostolicall Seate. But concerning their goods, whereof the King (in right) ought to haue the disposition; they were left to him: yet to supply their necessities competently, vntill the Generall Councill. The Great Maister and his attendants imprisoned.

Also in the same yeare Pope Clement, being then at Poictiers, by councell and aduise of his Cardinalls, for affaires of the Holy-Land; for reformation of the whole Church, and namely for The offences of the Templers, which were very enormous and abhominable: the Councill which should haue beene Generall in the Calends of October at Poictiers; was repealed, and from the last of the Calends of December, vntill two yeares precisely ordained. And throughout the Realme of France, by his Letters Patentes to Archbishops, Bishops and Inquisitours for heretiques, commaund was straitely giuen, to send their opinion and meaning speedily, how farre and neerely their persons might be touched, wherein they should require the aduise of the most learned and iudicious, that these matters might the better bee brought to end by the said Councill. Notwithstanding all these proceedings, the Generall Great Maister of the Repealing of the Generall Councill intended at Poictiers to a further time.

the Order, and some other of the Greatest; were reserued to further time of correction, and examination by the Seate of Rome, vpon certaine knowledge in euery point.

In the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred and nine, fiftie and nine Templers, and diuers other beside, as well at Paris, towards Moulin a Vent Sainct Antoine, as also at Senlis and other places (after the Prouinciall Councils for these occasions, there celebrated and performed) were burned, and their flesh and boanes consumed into ashes. Fiftie foure of the said Templers, vpon the Tuesday after the holy feast day of Saint Nicholas, were burned together at the said place of Moulin a Vent. But although so many of them were to suffer that punishment; yet in their destruction, they would not acknowledge or confesse any thing: for which, their soules (by generall opinion of the people) were cast into perpetuall damnation, for they drew the meaner people into most great and grieuous errors.

Execution performed on diuers of the Templers.

After this exemplarie worke of Iustice; vpon the Eeue of the Ascension of our Lord Iesus Christ, the rest of the Templers condemned, were burnt in the same place, and their flesh and bones consumed to ashes: whereof one of them was Almoner to the King of France, that had so high an honor in this world, yet would he make no acknowledgement of his grieuous transgressions. And on the Monday following, was burned in the same place, a woman Templer, a learned Nunne, named Margaret Poree, who had (thorow her too much ouer-weening opinion of her owne iudgement and sufficiencie) wrested and peruerted the diuine Scriptures, and the Articles of the Faith, speaking dangerous and preiudiciall words against the Sacrament of the Altar: for which, by learned and expert Doctors in Diuinitie, she was condemned to that death.

A learned Nun a woman Templer burned.

And because the offences of the Templers (for which they were condemned vpon good proofes made against them, and confessed by some in the time of their imprisonment) ought not to be hid from the world; these are they that follow.

The Articles confessed and approued by the Templers, for which they suffered death in diuers places.

Making of a new Templer.

THe first Article was, that they did not stedfastly beleeue in God, and when they made a new Templer, it must not be knowne to any, in what manner they sacred and sanctified him; but it might be seene, when his garments were giuen him.

The second Article, when the new Templer was apparelled in the cloathing of the Order; soone after he was led into a darke Chamber, where the new Templer (by his hard fortune) denyed God, and trampled vpon the Crosse, spitting vpon the figure hanging thereon.

Worshiping an Idole.

The third. After this was done, he went presently to adore a false Idole, which Idole was in a skinne sweetely embalmed, and daintily polished. On this vile thing must the Templer fasten his beliefe, constantly beleeuing in him. In the hollow cauernes of his eyes, were two shining Carbuncles, shewing so cleare as Heauen. And that he might stedfastly beleeue in him; he must tearme him his Soueraigne God, adoring him with all his heart. And this Idole was very monstrously misshapen, hauing halfe a beard on his face, and the other halfe in his backe parts: yet must the new Templer honor him as his God, and all this was done in the despight of our Lord and Sauiour Iesus Christ.

Guiltie of Treason.

The fourth. It appeared plainely, that they were acquainted with the Treason against the King Saint Lewes in the Holy Land, when he was taken and put in prison. And the great Citie of Acres was betrayed thorow their misprision.

Buying and selling the Christians.

The fift. That when Christian people came neighbourly and louingly into those parts beyond the Seas: they made such couenants and contracts with the Soldane of Babylon, that the Christians were meerely bought and sold, thorow their perfidious dealing.

Abusing the Kings Treasure.

The sixt. That such riches and treasure as the King had giuen to some particularly, were by them in quite contrary manner disposed and bestowed; which proued very hurtfull and damageable to the kingdome of France.

The

Heresie, Hypocrisie and Sodomie.

The seauenth. They acknowledged the sinnes of Heresie and Hypocrisie: They dealt with one another carnally. So that it was thought wonderfull, that God permitted such horrible and shamefull sinnes, to escape so long vnpunished, who (in meere compassion) suffereth much euill, to be done.

Dying in their Idolatrie.

The eight. If a Templer chanced to dye in their maintained Idolatrie; they caused his body to be burnt, and the powder of him was giuen in foode to the new Nouiced Templers, to confirme them the more strongly in their lewde beliefe and Idolatrie. And vtterly they contemned the true Body of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Addicted to Mahomatisme

The ninth. Not any Templer, but must be guirt with a strong Belt of Leather, after the order obserued in Mahumetrie: whereby it was the meanes of knowing their heathenish disposition, and that their Faith was wholly affected and enclined that way.

Roasting of Infants.

The tenth. Moreouer, they sinned more grieuously, for an Infant new borne, begotten by a Templer on any Damsell or Strumpet; it was boyled and roasted with fire, that the Fat thereof might be gathered, and that Fat being hallowed by them, their Idole was annointed therewith.

No Baptising of Infants.

The eleauenth. That none of their Order ought to baptize an Infant, nor suffer it be brought to the Font of Baptisme; so long as by any meanes they could withstand it But what else they might doe to a woman lying in childebed, is too detestable and shamefull to be spoken, and therefore thought fit to be buried in silence.

For these, and diuers other horrible crimes and offences, whereof all the world (well nee.e) cried shame: they were by the Soueraigne Bishop Pope Clement, and many other Bishops, Archbishops and Cardinals condemned.

The boanes of a long buried Templer burned.

And the same yeare, the boanes of a Templer, that a great while before had bin buried, he being named John de Tur, and found by the Inquisitors, that the said John had bin an Heretique in his life time: his boanes (I say) were for that cause burnt into ashes. The same John had bin Commander of the Temple, and in his life time he caused to be built the Tower of the Temple at Paris.

A Generall Councill held at Vienna.

In the yeare One thousand three hundred and eleauen, a generall Councill was held in the Citie of Vienna, and there were assembled an hundred and foureteene Mitred Prelates, beside the rest that were not Mitred, and beside such as made excuse by Procuration. There were two Patriarchs, that is to say, he of Antioche, and he of Alexandria, for which two Patriarches, were two seuerall Seates made in the midst of all the rest, and before the prime or chiefe Seate, sate the Pope, who, before any of the rest sat downe, enioyned them to say priuate Masses, and to fast three dayes. It began the first of the Octaues of my Lord Saint Denys, and the Pope began (as vsually he was wont to doe) with Veni Creator Spiritus, and afterward tooke his Theame. In consilio Iustorum & Congregatione, that is to say: In the Counsell and assembly of the Iust, the workes of the Lord are great. Afterward the Pope propounded three causes, for which he had commanded that Generall Councill. The first was, for the cause of the horrible offences committed by the Templers. The second was, for succouring of the Holy-Land. And the third was, for reformation of the vniuersall Church. Then he gaue his blessing to the people, and euery one returned to his place.

Three causes of the generall Councils meeting.

The second sitting of the Councill.

In the yeare One thousand, three hundred and Twelue, on the Munday after Lowe Sunday, or next Sunday after Easter was the second sitting of the Council, in the great Citty of Vienna celebrated. And thither came King Philip le Bell with his Brethren and Sonne about mid-Lent, attended with a great company of Barons and Noble-men. He sate on the right hand of the Pope, higher then any of the rest, but yet he was much lower then the Pope. And the Pope took his Theame: Non resurgunt impii in Iuditio, that is to say: The wicked shall neuer arise in Iudgement. Then Pope Clement, with the the Generall Councill, the Order of the Templers, not by way of definitie sentence, as already fully controuled: but by way of prouision and purueyance from the Sea Apostolicall, for euer altogether disanulled there, The Order of the Temple.

And in the yeare One thousand, three hundred and thirteene, in the Moneth of March

The Great Maister of the Templers and the Visitour burned.

March or Lent time, the Maister after him in the Order, as one would say the Visitour: at Paris, in the Isle before the Augustines, were burned, and their bones consumed into ashes; but would make no acknowledgement of their offences.

You behold here, what is recorded in our great Chronicles, concerning the behauiour of the Templers, executed at Paris (and not at Vienna, before Pope Clement, and King Phillip le Bell: whom they summoned before God the same yeare, and throwe downe their Gloue before the King and his Sonne, as gage of Battaile, to maintaine their innocency) a most fabulous and lying discourse, to blemish the memory of the said Pope Clement, the vniuersall Councill, and King Phillip, a very good and generous Prince, and who was endued with many of the vertues of the Holy King S ant Lewes his Grandfather. And our great Chronicles are much more exact and certain, concerning matters among vs: then can be the Histories of Italy, Spayne, and England, which touch the businesse of the Templers, in speaking nothing but after others, and meerely by heare-say; whereas our Chronicles are written de Visu, and the eye-witnesses.

Iaques de la Maule, last Great Maister of the Templers.

The last Great Maister of the Templers, executed at Paris, was of the Duchie of Burgongne, named Iaques de la Maule, whose portraiture is yet to be seene in many places at Paris. But he hath no other Armes, Que la Croix Noir Octogone de son Ordre, à l'Orle et Porsi d'Argent And as for the Maister Visitor, which bare him company in death, he is named by some, Brother Daulphine, without any other addition.

Here now followeth the Rules, which the Learned Saint Bernard prescribed to the said Templers, and other Military Orders (instituted in his life time) and long while after him, in Italy, Spayne, and other places.

REGVLA PAVPERVM COMMILITONVM TEMPLI IN Sancta Ciuitate.

CAP. I.

Qualiter Diuinum Officium audiant.

VOS quidem proprijs voluptatibus abrenuntiantes, atq; alij, pro Animarum salute vobiscum ad terminum cum Equis, & Armis Summo Regi militantes, Matutinas, & omne seruitium integrum, secundum Canonicam institutionem, ac Regularium Doctorum Sanctæ Ciuitatis consuetudinem, pio, ac puro affectu audire vniuersaliter studeatis. Idcirco vobis (Venerabiles Fratres) maximè debetur, quia præsentis Vitæ luce despecta, contemptoq; Vestrorum Corporum cruciatu, seuientem Mundum pro Dei amore vilescere perenniter promisistis, Diuino cibo refecti, ac satiati, & Dominicis præceptis eruditi, & firmati, post mysterij Diuini consummationem, Nullus pauescat ad Pugnam, sed paratus sit ad Coronam.

CAP. II.

Quod Orationes Dominicas, si audire nequiuerint, dicant.

CÆterum si aliquis Frater negotio Orientalis Christianitatis fortè remotus, quod sæpius euenisse non dubitamus, & pro tali absentia, Dei seruitium non audierit, pro Matutinis, Tredecim Orationes Dominicas, ac pro singulis horis Septem, sed pro Vesperis, Nouem dicere collaudamus, ac libera Voce vnanimiter affirmamus. Isti enim in salutifero labore ita directi non possunt accurrere hora competenti ad Diuinum Officium: sed si fieri potest, horæ constitutæ non præcreantur ante institutum debitum.

CAP. III.

Quid agendum pro Fratribus defunctis.

QVando vero quilibet Fratrum remanentium, Morti (quæ nulli parcit) impendet, quod est impossibile auferri, Capellanus, ac Clericus vobiscum ad terminum charitatiue Summo Sacerdoti seruientibus, creditum Officium, & Missam solemniter pro eius Anima, Christo animi puritate iubemus offerre. Fratres autem ibi adstantes, & in orationibus pro Fratris defuncti salute pernoctantes, Centum Orationes Dominicas, vsque ad diem Septimum, pro Fratre defuncto perseluant; Ab illo die, quo eis obitus Fratris denuntiatus fuerit, vsque ad diem prædictum, Centenarius numerus perfectionis integritatem, cum Fraterna obseruatione habeat. Adhuc nempe diuina, ac misericordissima charitate deprecamur, atque Pastorali auctoritate iubemus, vt quotidie, sicut Fratri in Viuis agenti debatur, & debetur: ita quod est necessarium sustentationi huius Vitæ in cibo, & potu tantum, cuidam Pauperi ad Quadragesimum diem impendatur. Omnes enim alias oblationes, quas in morte Fratrũ, & in Paschali solemnitate, cæterisq; solemnitatibus Domino pauperum commilitonum Christi spontanea paupertas indiscrete reddere consueuerat, omnino prohibemus.

CAP. IV.

Capellani Victum, & Vestitum tantum habeant.

ALias vero oblationes, & omnia Fleemosynarum genera, quomodo fiant, Capellanis, vel aliis ad tempus manentibus, Vnitati communis Capituli reddere pernigili cura præcipimus. Seruitores itaque Ecclesiæ Victum, & Vestitum secundum auctoritatem tantum habeant, & nihil amplius habere præsumant, nisi Magistri sponte, & charitatiue dederint.

CAP. V.

De Militibus Defunctis qui sunt ad terminum.

SVnt namque Milites in domo Dei, Templique Salomonis, ad terminum misericorditer Vobiscum degentes; vnde ineffabili miseratione vos rogamus, deprecamur, & ad vltimum obnixe iubemus, vt interim tremenda potestas ad vltimum diem aliquem perduxerit, diuino amore, ac fraternâ pietate, Septem dies sustentationis pro Anima eius, quidam Pauper habeat.

CAP. VI.

Vt nullus Frater remanens, oblationem faciat.

DEcreuimus, vt superne dictũ est, quod nullus Fratrum remanentium aliam oblationem agere præsumat; sed Diu, Noctuque mundo corde, in sua professione maneat, vt Sapientissimo

* Propheta.

Prophetarum in hoc aquipollere valeat. Calicem salutaris accipiam, & in morte mea mortem Domini imitabor. Quia sicut Christus pro me Animam suam posuit: ita, & ego pro Fratribus Animam ponere sum paratus. Ecce competentem oblationem, ecce Hostiam viuentem, Deoque placentem.

CAP. VII.
De immoderata statione.

QVod autem auribus nostris verissimus testis insonuit, videlicet immoderata statione, & sine mensura stando, Diuinum Officium vos audire, ita fieri non præcipimus, imo vituperamus; sed finito Psalmo Venite exultemus Domino, cum Inuitatorio, & Hymno, omnes sedere tam Fortes, quàm Debiles, propter scandalum euitandum, nos iubemus. Vobis vero residentibus vnoquoque Psalmo finito, in recitatione Gloria Patri de sedibus vestris ad Altare se humiliando, ob reuerentiam Sanctæ Trinitatis. Sic etiam in recitatione Euangelij, & ad Te Deum laudamus, & per totas Laudes, donec finito Benedicamus Domino stare adscribimus; Et eandem regulã in Matutinis Sanctæ Mariæ teneri iubemus.

CAP. VIII.
De Refectione Conuentus.

IN vno quidem Palatio, sed melius dicitur Refectorio communiter vos cibum accipere credimus: Vbi, quando aliquid necessarium fuerit, pro Signorum ignorantia, leniter, ac priuatim quærere oportet. Si omni tempore, quæ vobis necessaria sunt, desunt; quærenda sunt, cum omni humanitate, & subiectione reuerentiæ potius ad Mensam, cum Apostolus dicat Panem tuum cum silentio manduca, & Psalmista vos animare debet, dicens, Posui ori meo custodiam; id est, Apud me deliberaui, vt non delinquerem; id est, Lingua; id est, custodiui os meum, ne male loquerer.

CAP. IX.
De Lectione.

IN Prandio, & Cœna semper sit sancta Lectio recitata. Si Dominum diligimus, salutifera eius verba, atque præcepta, aure intentissima desiderare, & audire debemus. Lector autem Lectionum, vobis indicat Silentium.

CAP. X.
De Carnis refectione.

IN Hebdomada namque, nisi Natalis dies Domini, vel Pascha, vel festum Sanctæ Mariæ, aut Omnium Sanctorum euenerit, Vobis ter refectio Carnis sufficiat, quoniam assueta Carnis refectio, intelligitur honorosa Corporum corruptio. Si vero in die Martis tale ieiunium euenerit, vt esus Carnium retrahatur, in Crastino vobis abundanter impendatur. Die autem Dominico, Militibus remanentibus, necnon Capellanis, duo fercula in honorem Sanctæ Resurrectionis impendi bonum, & idoneum indubitanter videtur. Alij autem, videlicet Armigeri, & Clientes, vno contenti, cum gratiarum actione permaneant.

CAP. XI.
Qualiter manducare Milites debeant.

DVos & Duos manducare generaliter oportet, vt soleter Vnus de Altero prouideat, ne asperitas Vitæ, vel furtiua abstinentia in omni Prandio intermisceatur. Hoc autem iustum iudicamus, vt Vnusquisque Miles, aut Frater æqualem, & æquipollentem Vini mensuram pro se solum habeat.

CAP. XII.
Vt alijs diebus Duo, aut Tria Leguminum fercula sufficiant.

ALijs diebus, videlicet Secunda, & Quarta Feria, necnon & Sabbatho, Duo, aut Tria Leguminum, aut aliorum ciborum fercula, aut, vt ita dicam, cocta Pulmentaria, Omnibus sufficere credimus, & ita teneri iubemus; vt forte, qui ex vno non poterit edere, ex alio reficiatur.

CAP. XIII.
Quo cibo Sexta feria reficere oportet.

SExta autem feria cibum Quadragesimalem, ob reuerentiam Passionis, omni Congregationi, remota Infirmorum imbecillitate, semel sufficere a festo Omnium Sanctorum, vsque in Pascha: nisi Natalis dies Domini, vel festum Sanctæ Mariæ, aut Apostolorum euenerit, collaudamus. Alio vero tempore, nisi generale Ieiunium euenerit, Bis reficiatur.

CAP. XIV.
Post Refectionem semper Gratias referant.

POst Prandium vero, & Cœnam, semper in Ecclesia, si propè est; vel si ita non est, in eodem loco, Summo Procuratori nostro, qui Christus est, gratias, vt decet, cum humiliato corde, referre stricte præcipimus. Famulis, aut Pauperibus fragmenta (Panibus tamen integris reseruatis) distribuere fraterna charitate debent, & iubetur.

CAP. XV.
Vt Decimus panis semper Eleemosynario detur.

LIcet Pauperta tis præmium, quod est Regnum Cœlorum, Pauperibus procul dubio debeatur; Vobis tamen, quod Christiana Fides de illis indubitanter fatetur, Decimum totius panis quotidie Eleemosynario vestro dare iubemus.

CAP.

CAP. XVI.
Vt Collatio sit in arbitrio Magistri.

CVm vero Sol Orientalem Regionem deserit, & ad Hibernum descendit, audito Signo, vt est eiusdem Regionis consuetudo, omnes ad Completas oportet incedere vos, ac prius generalem Collationem sumere peroptamus. Hanc autem Collationem in dispositione, & arbitrio Magistri ponimus, vt quando voluerit de Aqua, & quando iubebit, misericorditer ex vino temperato competenter recipiatur. Verum, hoc non ad vitiam satietatem oportet fieri; sed parcius, quia vino apostatare etiam Sapientes videmus.

CAP. XVII.
Vt finitis Completis Silentium teneatur.

FInitis itaque Completis ad Stratum ire oportet. Fratribus igitur à Completorijs exeuntibus, nulla sit domo licentia data loqui in Publico, nisi necessitate cogente; Armigero autem suo, quæ dicturus est, leniter dicat. Est vero seruatum, vt in tali interuallo Vobis de Completorijs exeuntibus, maxima necessitate cogente, de Militari negotio, vel de statu domus vestræ, quia dies ad hoc Vobis sufficere non creditur, cum quadam Fratrum parte, Magistrum, vel Illum, cui domus dominium, post Magistrum est debitum, oporteat loqui. Hoc autem ita fieri iubemus; & ideo quia scriptum est, In multiloquio non effugies peccatum, & alibi mors, et vita in manibus linguæ. In eo colloquio scurrilitatem, & verba otiosa ad risum mouentia omnino prohibemus; & Vobis ad Lectulos euntibus, Dominicam Orationem, si aliquis quid stultum est locutus, cum humilitate, & puritatis deuotione dicere iubemus.

CAP. XVIII.
Vt Fatigati ad Matutinas non surgant.

FAtigatos nempe Milites, non ita, vt Vobis est manifestum, surgere ad Matutinas conlaudamus: sed assensu Magistri, vel Illius, cui creditum fuerit à Magistro, eos quiescere, & Tredecim orationes constitutas sic cantare, vt ueens ipsorum voci concordet, iuxta illud Propheta, Psallite Domino sapienter: & Illud. In conspectu Angelorum Psallam tibi; Vos vnanimes collaudamus. Hoc autem in arbitrio Magistri semper consistere debet.

CAP. XIX.
Vt Communitas Victus inter Fratres seruetur.

LEgitur in Diuina pagina Diuidebatur singulis, prout cuique opus erat. Ideo non dicimus vt sit Personarum acceptio, sed Infirmitatum debet esse cõsideratio. Vbi autem, qui minus indiget, agat Deo gratias, & non contristetur. Qui vero indiget, humiliter, pro Infirmitate, non extollatur pro Misericordia, & ita omnia membra erunt in pace. Hoc autem prohibemus, vt nulle immoderatam abstinentiam amplecti liceat, sed communem vitam instanter teneant.

CAP. XX.
De qualitate, & modo Vestimenti.

VEstimenta autem vnius coloris semper esse iubemus, Verbi gratia, Alba, vel Nigra, vel vt ita dicam Burella. Omnibus autem Militibus professis in Hieme, & in Aestate, si fieri potest, Alba vestimenta concedimus: vt, qui tenebrosam vitam postposuerint, per limpidam, & Albam suo Conditori se conciliari cognoscant. Quid enim Alèdo, nisi Castitas integra? Castitas, & Mentis securitas, & Corporis sanitas. Et nisi Miles vnusquisque castus perseuerauerit, ad perpetuam requiem venire, & Deum videre non poterit, testante Paule Apostolo: Pacem sectamini cum omnibus: & castimoniam, sine qua nemo videbit dominum. Sed quia huiusmodi indumentum Arrogantiæ, ac Superfluitatis æstimatione carere debet, talia habere omnibus iubemus, vt solus leniter per se vestire, & exuere, calciare, & discalceare valeat. Procurator huius ministerij, peruigili cura, hoc vitare præsumat, ne nimis longa, aut nimis curta, sed mensurata ipsis vtentibus, secundum Vnuscuiusque quantitatem suis Fratribus tribuat. Accipientes itaque Noua, vetera semper reddant in præsenti, reponenda in Camera, vel vbi Frater, cuius est ministerium, decreuerit; propter Armigeros, & Clientes, & quandoque pro Pauperibus.

CAP. XXI.
Quod Famuli Alba vestimenta, id est, Pallia non habeant.

HOc nempe quod erat in domo Dei, ac suorum Militum Templi, sine dilectione, ac consilio communis Capituli obnixe contradicimus, & funditus, quasi quoddam vitium peculiare amputare præcipimus. Habebant enim olim Famuli, & Armigeri Alba vestimenta, vnde veniebant damna importabilia. Surrexerunt enim in vltramontanis partibus quidam Pseudofratres, & Coniugati, & alij dicentes se esse de Templo, cum sint de Mundo. Hi nempe tantas contumelias, totque damna Militari ordini adquisiuerunt, & Clientes remanentes plurima scandala oriri inde superbiendo fecerunt. Habeant igitur Nigra, sed si talia non possunt inuenire, habeant qualia inueniri possint in illa Prouincia, qua degũt; aut quod vilius vnius coloris cõparari potest, videlicet Burella.

CAP. XXII.
Quod Milites remanentes tantum Alba habeant.

NVlli ergo concessum est Candidas Chlamides deferre, aut Alba Pallia habere, nisi nominatis Militibus Christi.

CAP. XXIII.
Vt pellibus Agnorum vtantur.

DECREVIMVS communi Consilio, vt nullus Frater remanens per Hyemem, pelles, aut pelliciam, vel aliquid tale quod ad vsum Corporis pertineat, etiamque Coopertorium, nisi Agnorum, vel Arietum habeat.

CHAP. XXIV.
Vt vetusta Armigeris dentur.

PROCVRATOR, vel Dator Pannorum, omni obseruantiâ, Veteres semper Armigeris, & Clientibus; & si Vetustiores, Pauperibus, fideliter, æqualitérque erogare intendat.

CAP. XXV.
Cupiens optima, Deteriora habeat.

SI Aliquis Frater remanens, ex debito, aut ex motu Superbiæ, pulchra, vel optima Pallia habere voluerit; ex tali præsumptione, procul dubio, Vilissima merebitur.

CAP. XXVI.
Vt quantitas, & qualitas Vestimentorum seruetur.

QVantitatem, secundum Corporum magnitudinem, Largitatémque Vestimentorum obseruare oportet. Dator Pannorum sit in hoc curiosus.

CAP. XXVII.
Vt Dator Pannorum, in primis æqualitatem seruet.

LOngitudinem, vt superius dictum est, cum æquali mensurâ, ne vel Susurronum, vel Criminatorum oculus aliquid notare præsumat, Procurator, Fraterno intuitu consideret, & in omnibus supradictis, Dei retributionem humiliter cogitet.

CAP. XXVIII.
De superfluitate Capillorum.

OMnes Fratres remanentes principaliter ita tonsos habere Capillos oportet, vt Regulariter, Antè, & Retro, & ordinate considerare possint. Et in Barbâ, & in Genis eadem regula indeclinabiliter obseruetur, ne Superfluitas, aut Facetiæ vitium denotetur.

CAP. XXIX.
De Rostris, & Laqueis.

DE Rostris, & Laqueis manifestum est esse scindile: & cum abominabile hoc omnibus agnoscatur, prohibemus, & contradicimus, vt aliquis ea non habeat, imo prorsus careat. Alijs autem ad tempus famulantibus Rostra, & Laquea, & Capillorum superfluitatem, & Vestium immoderatam longitudinem habere non permittimus, sed omnino contradicimus. Seruientibus enim Summo Conditori munditia interius, & exterius valde necessaria est, eo ipso attestante qui ait, Estote mundi, quia ego mundus sum.

CAP. XXX.
De numero Equorum, & Armigerorum.

VNicuique vestrorum Militum Tres Equos habere licet, quia domus Dei, Templique Salomonis paupertas eximia non permittit amplius in præsentiarum augere, nisi cum Magistri licentiâ.

CAP. XXXI.
Nullus Armigerum gratis Seruientem feriat.

SOlum autem Armigerum singulis Militibus eadem causâ concedimus. Sed si gratis, & charitatiue ille Armiger cuiquam Militi seruierit, non licet eidem eum verberare, nec etiam quilibet culpa percutere.

CAP. XXXII.
Qualiter ad tempus remanentes recipiantur.

OMnibus Militibus seruire Iesu Christo animi puritate in eadem domo ad terminum cupientibus, Equos in tali negotio quotidie idoneos, & Arma, & quidquid eis necessarium fuerit, emere fideliter iubemus. Deinde vero ex vtraque parte æqualiter seruata, bonum, & vtile appretiari Equos iudicauimus. Habeatur itaque pretium in Scripto, ne tradatur obliuioni. Et quidquid Militi, vel Equis eius, aut Armigero necessarium erit, adiunctis & ferris Equorum secundum facultatem domus, ex eadem domo, Fraterna charitate impendatur. Si vero interim Equos suos in hoc seruitio aliquo euentu Miles amiserit, Magister, & facultas domus hoc exigit, vt alios administret. Aduenientе autem termino Repatriandi, medietatem pretij ipse Miles diuino amore concedat; alteram vero ex Communi Fratrum, si ei placet, recipiat.

CAP. XXXIII.
Quod Nullus iuxta propriam voluntatem incedat.

CONuenit his nempe Militibus, qui nihil sibi carius Christo existimant, propter seruitium, secundum quod professi sunt, & propter gloriam summæ Beatitudinis, vel metum Gehennæ, vt Obedientiam indesinenter magistro teneant. Tenenda est itaque, vt mox diximus, vbi aliquid imperatum à magistro fuerit, vel ab illo, cui magister mandatum dederit, sine mora, acsi Diuinitus imperetur, vt moram pati nesciant in faciendo. De talibus enim ipsa Veritas dicit. Ob auditu auris obediuit mihi.

CAP. XXXIIII.
Si licet ire per Villam sine iussu Magistri.

ERgo hos tales Milites propriam voluntatem relinquentes, & alios ad terminum seruientes deprecamur, & firmiter eis iubemus, vt sine Magistri licentia, vel cui ereditum hoc fuerit, in Villam ire non præsumant, præterquam Noctu ad Sepulchrum, & ad Stationes, Quæ intra muros Sanctæ Ciuitatis continentur.

CAP. XXXV.
Si licet cum ambulare solum.

HI vero ita ambulantes non sine Custode, id est, Milite, aut fratre remanente, nec in Die, nec in Nocte iter inchoare audeant. In Exercitu namque, postquam hospitati fuerint, nullus Miles, vel Armiger, aut Famulus per Atria aliorum Militum, videndi causa, vel cum aliquo loquendi, sine iussu, vt dictum est superius, incedat. Itaque consilio firmamus, vt in tali domo, ordinata à Deo, nullus secundum propriam voluntatem militet, aut quiescat; sed iuxta Magistri imperium totus incumbat, vt illam Domini sententiam imitari valeat, quæ dicit Non veni Facere voluntatem meam, sed eius qui misit me.

CAP. XXXVI.
Vt Nullus nominatim, quod ei necessarium erit, quærat.

HAnc propriæ consuetudinem inter cæteras adscribere iubemus, & cum omni consideratione, ob vitium quærendi, teneri præcipimus. Nullus igitur Frater remanens assignatus inter, & nominatim Equum, aut Equitaturam, vel Arma querere debet. Quomodo ergo? Si vero eius Infirmitas, aut Equorum suorum debilitas, vel Armorum suorum grauitas, talis esse agnoscitur, vt sic incedere, sit damnum commune, veniat coram Magistro, vel cui debitum est ministerium post Magistrum, & causam vera fide, & pura, ei demonstret, Inde namque in dispositione Magistri, vel post eum imperantis, vel Procuratoris, res se habeat.

CAP. XXXVII.
De Frenis et Calcaribus.

NOlumus, vt omnino Aurum, vel Argentum, quæ sunt diuitiæ particulares, in Frenis, aut Pectoralibus, vel in Calcaribus, vnquam appareat, nec alicui Fratri remanenti emere liceat. Si vero charitatiue talia vetera instrumenta data fuerint, Aurum, vel Argentum: taliter coloretur, ne splendidus color, vel decor cæteris arrogantia videatur. Si noua data fuerit, Magister de talibus, quod voluerit, faciat.

CAP. XXXVIII.
Tegmen in Hastis, & Clypeis non habeatur.

TEgmen autem in Clypeis, & Hastis, & Furelli in Lanceis non habeantur. Quia hoc non proficium, imo damnum nobis omnimodis intelligitur.

CAP. XXXIX.
De licentia Magistri.

LIcet Magistro cuiquam Equos, vel Arma, vel quamlibet rem cui libet dare.

CAP. XL.
De Mala, & Sacco.

SAculus, & Mala cum firmatura non concedantur, nec habeant absque Magistri licentia, vel eius cui post eum domus negotia creduntur. In hoc Capitulo præsenti, Procuratores, & per diuersas Prouincias degentes non continentur, nec ipse Magister intelligitur.

CHP. XLI.
De Lectione Literarum.

NVllatenus cuiquam Fratrum literas a Parentibus suis, neque a quoquam Hominum, nec sibi inuicem accipere, vel dare, sine iussu Magistri, vel Procuratoris. Postquam licentiam Frater habuerit, in præsentia Magistri, si ei placet, legantur. Si vero & a Parentibus ei quidquam directum fuerit, non præsumat suscipere illud, nisi prius iudicatum fuerit Magistro. In hoc autem capitulo Magister, & Domus Procuratores non continentur.

CAP. XLII.
De fabulatione propriarum culparum.

CVm omne Verbum otiosum generare peccatum agnoscatur, quid ipsi iactantes de propriis culpis ante districtum Iudicem dicturi sunt? Ostendit sanè Propheta; si à bonis eloquijs, propter taciturnitatem, debet interdum taceri. Quanto magis a malis verbis, propter pœnam peccati, debet cessari? Vetamus igitur, & audacter contradicimus ne aliquis Frater remanens fabulationes, vel vt melius dicam stultitias, quas in Sæculo, vel in Militari negotio tam enormiter egit, & Carnis delectationes miserrimarum mulierum, cum Fratre suo, vel aliquo alio, vel de alio, commemorare debeat. Et si fortè talia referentem quemlibet audierit, obmutescere faciat, vel quantocius poterit cito pede Obedientiæ inde discedat, & fabularum Venditori aurem cordis non præbeat.

CAP.

CAP. XLIII.

De quæstu, & acceptione.

VERVMENIMVERO, si aliquares sine quæstu cuilibet Fratri data gratis fuerit, deferat Magistro, vel Dapifero. Si vero aliter fuus Amicus, vel Parens nisi ad opus dare voluerit, hoc prorsus non recipiat, donec à suo Magistro licentiam habeat. At cui res data fuerit, non pigeat illum, si alteri datur. Imo pro certo sciat, quia si inde irascitur, contra Deum agit. In hac autem prædicta regula Ministratores non continentur, quibus specialiter hoc ministerium debetur, & conceditur de Malâ, & Sacco.

CAP. XLIV.

De Manducarijs Equorum.

VTilis res est cunctis hoc præceptum à nobis constitutum, vt indeclinabiliter amodo teneatur. Nullus autem Frater facere præsumat manducaria linea, vel lanea Idcirco principaliter facta, nec habeat vllus excepto Cofinello.

CAP. XLV.

Vt cambiare, vel quærere Nullus audeat.

NVnc aliud restat, vt Nullus præsumat cambiare siue Frater cum Fratre, sine licentia Magistri; & aliquid querere, nisi Frater Fratri, & sit res parua, vilis, non magna.

CAP. XLVI.

Vt Nullus Auem cum Aue capiat.

QVod Nullus Auem cum Aue accipere audeat, nos communiter iudicamus; non conuenit enim Religioni, sic cum Mundanis delectationibus inhærere, sed Domini præcepta libenter audire, orationi frequenter incumbere, mala sua cum lachrymis, vel gemitu quotidie in oratione Deo confitere. Cum Homini quidem talia operante cum Accipitre, vel aliâ Aue, Nullus Frater remanens hac principali causâ ire præsumat.

CAP. XLVII.

Vt Nullus Arcu, vel Balista percutiat.

CVm omnem Religionem ire deceat simpliciter, & sine risu, humiliter; & non multa verba, sed rationabilia loqui, & non in voce clamosa; specialiter iniungimus, & præcipimus omni Fratri professo, ne in Bosco cum Arcu, & Balistâ iaculari audeat; nec cum illo qui hoc fecerit ideo pergat, nisi gratiâ eum custodiendi à perfido Gentile; nec cum Cane sit ausus clamare, vel garrulare; nec Equm suum; cupiditate accipiendi Feram, pungat.

CAP. XLVIII.

Vt Leo semper feriatur.

NAm est certum, quod vobis specialiter creditum est, & debitum pro Fratribus vestris Animam ponere, atque incredulos, qui semper Virginis Filio minitantur, de Terra delere. De Leone nos hoc dicimus, quia ipse circuit quærens quem deuoret, & manus eius contra omnes, omnium que manus contra eum.

CAP. XLIX.

De omni re super vos quæsita, iudicium audite.

NOuimus quidem persecutores sanctæ Ecclesiæ innumerabiles esse; & hoc qui contentionem non amant, incessanter, crudeliusque inquietare festinant. In hoc igitur concilii sententia serena consideratione pendeat, vt si aliquis in partibus Orientalis Religionis, in quocunque alio loco super vos quæsierit rem aliquam; vobis per Fideles & veri Amatores Iudices audire iudicium, præcipimus; & quod iustum fuerit indeclinabiliter vobis facere præcipimus.

CAP. L.

Vt hæc regula in omnibus teneatur.

HAc eadem regula in omnibus vobis, vobis immerito ablatis, perhumaniter iubemus, vt teneatur.

CAP. LI.

Quod licet omnibus Militibus professis Terram, & Homines habere.

DIuina, vt credimus, prouidentiâ, à Veli in sanctis locis sumpsit initium hoc genus nouum Religionis, vt videlicet Religioni Militiam admisceretis, & sic Religio per Militiam armata procedat, & Hostem sine culpâ feriat. Iure igitur iudicamus, cum Milites Templi dicamini, vt ipsos ob insigne meritum, & speciale Prebitatis donum, Terram, & Homines habere, & Agricolas possidere, & iustè eos regere. & institutum debitum vobis specialiter debetur impendi.

CAP. LII.

Vt male habentibus cura peruigil habeatur.

MAle habentibus Fratribus super omnia adhibenda est cura peruigil, & quasi Christo eis seruiatur, vt illud Euangelium Infirmus fui, & visitatis me, memoriter teneatur. Hi etenim diligenter, ac patienter portandi sunt, quia de talibus superna retributio indubitanter adquiritur.

CAP.

CAP. LIII.

Vt Infirmis necessaria semper dentur.

PRocuratoribus vero Infirmantium omni obseruantiâ, atque peruigili curâ præcipimus, vt quæcunque sustentationi diuersarum infirmitatum sunt necessaria, fideliter, ac diligenter iuxta dominium facultatem eis administrent, Verbi gratia, Carnem, & Volatilia, & cætera, donec sanitati reddantur.

CAP. LIV.

Vt Alter Alterum ad Iram non prouocet.

PRæcauendum nempe non modicum est, ne Aliquis Aliquem commouere ad Iram præsumat, quia Propinquitatis, & diuinæ Fraternitatis tam Pauperes, quàm Potentes summa Clementia æqualiter adstrixit.

CAP. LV.

Quomodo Fratres coniugati habeantur.

FRatres autem Coniugatos hoc modo Vobis habere permittimus, vt si Fraternitatis vestræ beneficium, & participationem petunt, Vterque sua substantiæ portionem, & quidquid amplius adquisierint, Vnitati communis Capituli post Mortem concedant; & interim honestam vitam exerceant, & bonum agere Fratribus studeant; sed veste candida, & Chlamyde Alba non incedant. Si vero Maritus antè obierit, patrem suum Fratribus relinquat, & Coniux de altera vita sustamentum habeat & excedat. Hoc enim iniustum consideramus, vt cum Fratribus Deo castitatem promittentibus, Fœminæ eiusmodi in una, eademque domo maneant.

CAP. LVI.

Vt amplius Sorores non coadunentur Maribus.

SOrores quidem amplius periculosum est coadunare, quia antiquus hostis fœminco consortio complures expulit à recto tramite Paradisi. Itaq; Fratres charissimi, vt Integritatis flos inter vos semper appareat, hac consuetudine amodò vti non liceat.

CAP. LVII.

Vt Fratres Templi cum Excommunicatis non participent.

HOc Fratres, valde cauendum, atque timendum est, ne aliquis ex Christi Militibus Homini excommunicato nominatim ac publicè aliquo modo se iungere, aut res suas accipere præsumat, ne Anathema Maranatha similiter fiat. Si vero Interdictus tantum fuerit cum eo participationem habere, rem suam charitatiuè accipere non immerito licebit.

CAP. LVIII.

Qualiter Milites Seculares recipiantur.

SI quis Miles ex magnâ perditionis, vel alter Secularis, Seculo volens renunciare, vestram Communionem, & Vitam velit eligere, non ei statim assentiatur; sed iuxta illud Pauli, Probate spiritus si ex Deo sunt, & si ei ingressus concedatur. Legatur igitur Regula in eius præsentiâ, & si ipse præceptis expositæ Regulæ diligenter obtemperauerit, tunc si Magistro, & Fratribus eius recipere placuerit, conuocatis Fratribus, desiderium, & petitionem suam cunctis, animi puritate, patefaciat. Deinde vero terminus probationis in consideratione, & prouidentiâ Magistri, secundum honestatem vitæ Petentis, omnino pendeat.

CAP. LIX.

Vt omnes Fratres ad secretum consilium non vocentur.

NOn semper omnes Fratres ad consilium conuocare iubemus, sed quos idoneos, & consilio prouidos Magister esse cognouerit. Cum autem de maioribus tractare voluerit, vt est dare communem Terram; vel de ipso Ordine disceptare; aut Fratrem recipere, tunc omnem congregationem, si Magistro placet, conuocare est competens; auditoque communis Capituli consilio, quod melius, & vtilius Magister considerauerit, illud agatur.

CAP. LX.

Quod cum silentio orare debeant.

OMnes Fratres, prout Animi, & Corporis affectus postulauerit, stando, vel sedendo tamen summâ cum reuerentia, simpliciter, & non clamosè, vt Vnus alium non conturbet, communi consilio iubemus.

CAP. LXI.

Vt Fidem Seruientium accipiant.

AGnouimus nempe Complures ex diuersis Prouincijs tam Clientes, quam Armigeros pro Animarum salute, animo feruenti, ad terminum cupientes in domo nostrâ mancipari. Vtile est autem, vt Fidem eorum accipiatis, ne forte Veternus Hostis, in Dei seruitio aliquid furtiue, vel indecenter eis intimet, vel à bono proposito repente exterminet.

CAP. LXII.

Vt Pueri, quamdiu sunt Parui, non accipiantur inter Fratres Templi.

Quamuis

QVamuis Regula Sanctorum Patrum Pueros in Congregatione permittat habere, nos de talibus non conlaudamus vnquam vos onerare. Qui verò Filium suum vel Propinquum in Militari Religione perhumaniter dare voluerit, vsque ad Annos, quibus viriliter armata manu possit Inimicos Christi de Terra Sancta delere, eum enutriat. Dehinc secundum Regulam, in medio Fratrum, Pater, vel Parentes eum statuant, & suam petitionem vinctis patefaciant. Melius est enim in Pueritia non vouere, quam posteaquam Vir factus fuerit enormiter retrahere.

CAP. LXIII.

Vt Senes semper venerentur.

SEnes autem, pia consideratione, secundum virium imbecillitatem, supportare, ac diligenter honorare oportet. Et nullatenus in his, quæ Corporis sunt necessaria, districtè teneantur, salua tamen auctoritate Regulæ.

CAP. LXIIII.

De Fratribus, qui per diuersas Prouincias proficiscuntur.

FRatres vero qui per diuersas Prouincias diriguntur, Regulam, in quantum vires expetunt, seruare in Cibo, & Potu, & cæteris studeant, & irreprehensibiliter viuant; Vt ab his qui foris sunt, bonum testimonium habeant. Religionis propositum nec Verbo, nec Actu polluant, sed maxime omnibus, quibus se coniunxerint, Sapientiæ, & bonorum operum condimentum, & exemplum præbeant. Apud quem hospitari decreuerint, fama optima sit decoratus; & si fieri potest, domus Hospitis in illa Nocte, ne careat lumine, ne tenebrosus hostis occasionem aliquam, quod absit, inferat. Vbi autem Milites non excommunicatos congregare audierint, illuc pergere, non considerantes tam temporalem vtilitatem, quam externam Animarum illorum salutem, iubemus. Illis autem Fratribus in vltra Marinis partibus spe subiectionis ita directis, hac conuentione eos, qui Militari Ordini perhumaniter sese iungere voluerint, recipere collaudamus, vt in præsentia Episcopi illius Prouinciæ vterque conueniat, & voluntatem Petentis Præsul audiat: Audita itaque petitione, mittat eum Frater ad Magistrum, & ad Fratres qui sunt in Templo, quod est in Hierusalem, & si vita eius est honesta, talique consortio digna, misericorditer suscipiatur, si Magistro, & Fratribus bonum videtur. Si verò interim obierit pro labore, & fatigatione, quasi vni ex Fratribus totum beneficium, & Fraternitas Pauperum & Commilitonum Christi ei impendatur.

CAP. LXV.

Vt Victus æqualiter omnibus distribuatur.

ILlud quoque congrue & rationabiliter mouendum censemus, vt omnibus Fratribus remanentibus victus secundum loci facultatem æqualiter distribuatur, non enim est vtilis Personarum acceptio, sed Infirmitatum necessaria est consideratio.

CAP. LXVI.

Vt Milites Templi Decimas habeant.

CRedimus namque relictis affluentibus diuitiis, vos spontaneæ Paupertatis esse subiectos, Vnde Decimas vobis communi Vita viuentibus iuste habere, hoc modo demonstrauimus. Si Episcopus, Ecclesiæ cui decima iure debetur, vobis charitatiue eam dare voluerit, assensu illius Capituli de illis Decimis, quas tunc Ecclesia possidere videtur vobis tribuere debet. Si autem Laicus quilibet adhuc illam ex Patrimonio suo damnabiliter amplectitur, & seipsum in hoc valde redarguens; vobis eandem reliquerit, ad nutum eius qui præest tantum, sine consensu Capituli, id agere potest.

CAP. LXVII.

De leuibus, & grauibus culpis.

SI aliquis Frater loquendo, vel Militando, vel aliter aliquid leue deliquerit, ipse vltro delictum suum satisfaciendo Magistro ostendat. De leuibus, si consuetudinem non habeant, leuem penitentiam habeat. Si vero eo tacente per aliquem alium culpa cognita fuerit, maiori, & euidentiori subiaceat disciplinæ, & emendatiori. Si autem graue erit delictum, retrahatur à familiaritate fratrum, nec cum illis simul in eadem Mensa edat, sed solus refectionem sumat; dispensationi & iudicio Magistri totum incumbat, vt saluus in die Iudicij permaneat.

CAP. LXVIII.

Qua culpa Frater amplius non recipiatur.

ANte omnia prouidendum est, ne quis Frater Potens, vel Impotens, Fortis aut Debilis volens se exaltare, & paullatim superbire ac culpam suam defendere, indisciplinatus remaneat; sed si emendare voluerit, ei districtior correptio accedat. Quod si pijs admonitionibus, & fusis pro rationibus emendare noluerit, sed in superbia magis ac magis sese erexerit, tunc secundum Apostolum, de pio eradicetur grege: Auferte malum ex vobis; necesse est vt à societate Fratrum fidelium, Ouis moribunda remoueatur. Caterum, Magister, qui Baculum, & Virgam manu tenere debet, Baculum videlicet quo viriam imbecillitates aliorum sustentet; & Virgam, qua vitia delinquentium Rectitudinis Zelo feriat, Concilio Patri- archæ, & Spiritali consideratione id agere studeat, ne vt ait Beatus Maximus, aut solutior lenitas cohibentiam Peccantis, aut immoderata seueritas à lapsu non reuocet Delinquentem.

CAP. LXIX.

Vt a Paschali solemnitate, vsque ad festum Omnium Sanctorum, vnam Camisiam lineam tantum sumere habeat.

INterea, Quod nimium ardorem Orientalis Regionis misericorditer consideramus, Vt à Paschali festiuitate, vsque ad Omnium Sanctorum solemnitatem, Vnicuique Vna Camisia linea tantum, non ex debito, sed ex sola gratia detur: Illi dico, qui ea vti voluerit. Alio autem tempore, generaliter omnes Camisias laneas habeat.

CAP. LXX.

Quot, & quales Panni in Lecto sunt necessarij.

SIngulorum quidem non aliter per singulos Lectos Dormitorium esse, nisi maxima causa, vel necessitas euenerit, communi consilio cellaudamus. Lectualia, vel Lectisternia, moderata dispensatione Magistri Vnusquisque habeat. Credimus enim prorsus Saccum, Culcitram, & Coopertorium Vnicuique sufficere. Qui vero ex his vno carebit, Carpitam habeat, & in omni tempore tegmine Lineo, id est Veluso frui bene licebit. Vestitu autem Camisijs, & femoralibus semper dormiant. Dormientibus autem Fratribus iugiter vsque Manè, nunquam desit Lucerna.

CAP. LXXI.

De Vitanda murmuratione.

ÆMulationes, Inuidias, Liuorem, Murmur, Susurrationem, Detractiones, diuina admonitione vitare, & quasi quandam pestem vobis fugere præcipimus. Studeat igitur Vnusquisque Vestrum, Fratres charissimi, vigilanti animo, ne Fratrem suum clam culpet, aut reprehendat; sed illud Apostoli studiosè secum animaduertat. Ne sis criminator, ne susurro in Populo. Cum autem Fratrem liquide aliquid peccasse cognouerit, pacifice, & Fraterna pietate iuncta Domini præceptum, inter se, & illum solum corripiat. Et si eum non audierit, alium Fratrem adhibeat. Quod si Vtrumque contempserit, in Conuentu, publice obiurgetur coram omnibus. Magnæ etenim cæcitatis sunt, qui se a Liuore minimè custodiunt, vnde in antiquam Hostis versuti nequitiam demerguntur.

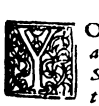
Vt omnium Mulierum fugiantur oscula.



Caput Vltimum.

PEriculosum esse credimus omni Religioni, Vultum Mulierum nimis attendere: et ideo nec Viduam, nec Virginem, nec Matrem, nec Sororem, nec Amitam, Vllamque Fœminam aliam aliquis Frater oculari præsumat. Fugiat ergo Fœminea oscula Christi Militia, per quæ solent Homines persæpe perclitari; Vt pura conscientia, et Vita secura, in conspectu Domini perenniter valeat conuersari.

The Order of the poore Fellow-Souldiers of the Temple in the Holy Citty.

CHAP. I.

How they are to heare Diuine Seruice.

OV renouncing your owne pleasures, and others, who for the safety of Soules, are militant with you for the time to the great King with Horses and Armes, are vniuersally to endeauour to heare Mattins with a Godly and pure affection, and all the whole seruice, according to the Canonicall Institution and custome of the Regular Doctors of the holy Citty. And this (venerable Brethren) is the rather to be done by you, because you despising the light of this present life, and contemning the torments of your owne bodies, haue promised perpetually to diseteeme the world for the loue of God: that being refreshed and satiated with the heauenly food, instructed and established with heauenly precepts, after the consumation of the diuine Mystery none might be searefull for the fight) but forward for the Crowne.

CHAP. II.

That they are to say prayers, if they cannot come to heare them.

BVt if any Brother chaunce to bee remoued or goe abroad vpon the affayres of Christianity in the Easterne parts (which we make no doubt may often come to passe) and by reason of his absence cannot come to heare diuine seruice, we doe enioyne him with one consent, for Mattins to say ouer thirteene Pater Nosters, and for euery hower seauen, but for the Vespers nine. For they that are imployed in so gracious a worke, cannot keepe their competent howers of comming to diuine seruices but yet so far forth as may, let not the apointed howers be past ouer before the inioyned taske.

CHAP. III.
What is to be done for the Brethren that are dead.

WHen any of the Brethren that remayne among you draw neere vnto death, which is so impartiall as it spares none, and so impossible as none can escape it, The Chaplaine and Clerke; with those that serue with you for the time vnder the High Priest, we inioyne them to performe their entrusted office, and in the purity of their spirit, solemnely to offer a Masse vnto Christ for his soule. The rest of the Brethren that stand by, to spend the whole night in prayers for him, when he is dead saying, ouer a 100. Pater nosters till the seuenth day. And from that very day wherein his death was aduertised and made knowne to them, till the day prescribed the foresaid number of 100. containing the integrity of perfection, to be had in a Brotherly obseruation. Moreouer we deprecate by the Diuine and most mercifull charity, and recommaund by our pastorall authority, that euery day what was giuen and belonging to that Brother whiles he was aliue, so much as is necessary for the support of life in Meat and Drink, be bestowed vpon some poore man till the fortieth day: altogether forbidding all other oblations, which the voluntary pouerty of the poore fellow-souldiers of Christ was vsually accustomed indiscreetly to bestow at the death of their brethren, and Easter solemnytie, or other feasts.

CHAP. IIII.
The Chaplaines are onely to haue food and rayment.

ALl other oblations and almes of what kind soeuer, we carefully commaund the Chapleynes and others for the time remayning, to render to the vnity of the Common Chapter. The Seruitors therefore of the Church, are only to haue food and rayment according to authority, and let them not presume to take more, vnlesse the Maister doe freely and charitably giue it vnto them.

CHAP. V.
Of the Knights that dye, who are for the time.

THere are Knights in the house of God, and of Salomons Temple, liuing with you for the time vpon meere mercy, wherefore we earnestly entreat you, and beseech you, and finally commaund you, that when the fatreame power shall bring any of them to their last day of life, in loue vnto God and brotherly charity, some poore man may haue seuen dayes of sustentation for his soule.

CHAP. VI.
That none of the Brethren remayning among you, may make an oblation.

WEe haue decreed (as is aforesayd) that none of the Brethren remayning, doe presume to make any other oblation, but day and night that in this he may be like vnto the most wise Prophet. I will take the cup of Saluation, and in my death imitate the death of the Lord. For as Christ laid downe his life for me, so I am ready to lay downe my life for the Brethren. Behold a competent oblation, behold a liuing sacrifice, pleasing vnto God.

CHAP. VII.
Of immoderate standing.

THat which wee haue heard related by a most true witnesse, to witt, that you stand to heare Diuine seruice immoderately, and beyond measure, we haue not so enioyned, nay wee find fault with: but at the end of the Psalme. O come let vs sing vnto the Lord, with the Inuitatory and Hymne, wee commaund all (as well strong as weake) to sitt, for the auoyding of scandall. Thus sitting at the end of euery Psalme, in saying, Glory be to the Father, we commaund you to stand, humbling your selues from your seates towards the Altar, in reuerence of the blessed Trinity. The like is to bee done at the reading of the Gospell, and at We praise thee O God, and in all praises, till the end of Benedicamus Domino. And wee commaund the same order to bee obserued in the Mattins of the blessed Mary.

CHAP. VIII.
Of the repast of the Couent.

IN one Court, or rather in one common Hall, we will you to take your meat together, where whatsoeuer shall be necessary to bee demaanded, if you cannot vnderstand it by signes, you are to aske it very softly and priuately. And at any time, whatsoeuer you want that is necessary, you are to seeke it with all humanity and subiection of reuerence vnto the table, for so much as the Apostle sayes, Eate thy Bread in silence, and the Psalmist ought to encourage that, saying, I haue set a watch before my mouth, that is, I haue deliberated with my selfe, that I would not offend, that is, in my tongue; that is. I haue kept my mouth, that I would not speake euill.

CHAP. IX.
Concerning reading.

CHAP.

AT Dinner and Supper let there alwayes bee some sacred reading. If we loue the Lord, we ought most earnestly to desire and heare his wholesome words and precepts. The Reader he is to inioyne you silence.

CHAP. X.
Concerning the repast of the Body.

THrice in a weeke let it suffice to take repast, vnlesse it bee Christmas, or Easter, or the feast of the blessed Mary, or of all Saints: because the accustomary feeding of the flesh, is the necessary corruption of the body. If such a fast happen vpon the Tuesday, that the eating of flesh is restrained, the morrow you may take it in abundance. But vpon the Sunday we thinke it fitting and expedient, that two Messes be allowed to all the Knights and to the Chaplaines, in honour of the holy Resurrection. The rest, to witt, Esquires and Retayners, let them rest themselues contented with one, with Thanksgiuing.

CHAP. XI.
How the Knights ought to eate.

GEnerally 2. and 2. ought to eat together, that one may carefully haue an eye to the other, least either austerity of life, or stolne abstinence be intermixed in euery meale, And this we iudge iust, that euery Knight or Brother haue an equall and indifferent measure of wine vnto himselfe.

CHAP. XII.
That other dayes 2. or 3. dishes of rootes or Pease shall be sufficient.

VPon other dayes, to witt, Munday and Wensday, & so vpon Saturday, we iudge 2. or 3. dishes of rootes or other meate boyld pottage, or water-gruell, to be enough for all, and so we enioyne it to be obserued, that whosoeuer happely cannot eat of the one, may feed vpon the other.

CHAP. XIII.
What food is be vsed vpon the Friday.

WE commend the Lenten food vpon the Fryday, in reuerence of the passion, to the whole congregation, still excepting them that be weake, and we iudge it to be enough to take it but once a day, from the Feast of all Saints vntill Easter, vnlesse it happen to be Christmasse day, or the Feast of Saint Mary, or of the Apostles, or other times, vnlesse a general Fast fall out, they may feed twice.

CHAP. XIIII.
After repast, they must euer giue thanks.

AFter Dinner and Supper wee peremptorily command, thanks to be alwayes giuen to Christ, who is our Purueyer and prouider, with an humble heart, either in the Church if it be neare, or if it bee not, in the same place: and the fragments to be destributed to the seruants, or to the poore, out of brotherly charity, alwayes excepting and reseruing the whole Loaues.

CAP. XV.
That the Tenth Loafe be alwayes giuen to the Almoner.

ALthough the reward of Powerty, which is the Kingdome of Heauen, be doubtlessely due vnto the Poore, yet we command you; that you dayly distribute the tenth of your bread vnto the Almoner, which Christian faith doth assuredly allow of

CAP. XVI.
That the Collation be at the arbitrement of the Maister.

WHen the Sun leaues the Easterne parts, and descends into the West, at the ringing of the Bell, as is the custome of that Country, you must all goe to the Complyne. But first we wish you to take a generall Collation, which Collation we leaue to the disposition and arbitrement of the Maister, that when he pleaseth, you may haue water, and when he commands, you may haue a competent mixture of wine with your water. But this must not be too too much saticty, but sparingly, because we see wise men to fall away by wine.

CHAP. XVII.
That after Complyne, silence be kept.

THe Complyne being ended, you must to bed. After the Brethren are once departed out of the Hall, there is no liberty giuen to speake in publike, vnlesse it be vpon vrgent necessity. And what he speakes, he must speake it softly, vnto his Esquire. It may chaunce that in that distance, whiles ye are going out of the Hall, vpon some great necessity, the Maister, or he to whom the Gouernment of the house is concredited, next after the Master, may speake of some Military matter, or concerning the state of your House, with some part of the brethren, because the day is not sufficient for you to doe this: This therefore shall be done in this maner, In all such speach, we altogether forbid scurrility and idle words moouing laughter: and this the rather because it is written, In many words, thou shalt not auoyd sin; And in another place, Life and death are in the hands of the Tongue. And when ye goe to bed, if any one haue vttered any foolish word, we enioyne him to repeat the Lords Prayer, with al humilitie and due deuotion.

CHAP. XVIII.
That they that are weary, may not rise to Mattins.

THe wearied Souldiers, we allow not to rise to Mattins, as you must, but they may take their rest with the assent of the Master, or of him to whom the Master will giue credence, and then they must sing Thirteene appointed Prayers, their mind agreeing and going with their voyce according to that of the Prophet: Sing wisely vnto the Lord, And againe, I will sing vnto thee in the sight of the Angels. But this we leaue to the arbitrement of the Master.

CAP. XIX.

That there be a community of Commons kept among the Brethren.

IT is recorded in the holy writ; There was diuided vnto euery man according as he had neede: therefore we doe not say that there should be acception of persons, but yet there ought to be consideration of infirmities: Where, he that stands lesse in need, let him giue God thanks, and not be grieued, And he that stands in more need, let him be humbled, because of his infirmity, not extolled because of mercy, and so euery member shall bee in peace. But this we forbid, that it shall not bee lawfull vnto any, to giue himselfe to immoderate abstinence, but euermore follow a common life.

CAP. XX.

Concerning the quality and manner of Apparrell.

WE command that the garments bee euer but of one colour, for example, White or Blacke, or as it may be Burrell: especially white for al the Knights in winter & in summer, if it may be: That they who haue laide aside a darke life, may learne to reconcile themselues to their Creator by a white. For what is whitenes but perfect chastity? and chastity both the security of the soule, and the sanity of the body. And except euery Knight continue chaste, he can neither come to perpetuall rest, nor see God, as the Apostle Paul witnesseth, Follow peace with all men, and chastity, without which no man shall see God. But yet that this kind of garment may bee free from the suspicion of arrogancy and superfluity, we command it to be such, that euery man alone by himselfe may cloth or vncloth himselfe, put it on, or put it off. He that is the factor for these affaires, must carefully labour to beware, that it be neither ouer long nor ouer short, but a meete measure with him that vses it, according to euery mans seuerall size. And they that receiue new garments, must alwayes render and restore backe their old, to bee laid vp in the chamber, or where hee shall appoint who hath the office, for the vse of the Esquires and retayners, and sometimes for the poore.

CAP. XXI.

That the Seruants are not to haue White garments, that is Mantles.

THis that was in the house of God, and of his Knights of the Temple, without the discretion and counsell of the common Chapter, we doe vtterly contradict, and earnestly command to cut it off, as a very speciall and peculiar fault. For in times past, the Seruants and Esquires had white garments, from whence grew insupportable losses. For there arose vp certaine false brethren in the parts beyond the Mountaines, and marryed men and others, affirming themselues to bee of the Temple, when they are of the world. These haue brought many contumelyes and great losses vnto the Military Order, and the retainers haue hereupon raysed many scandals by their pride. Let them therefore haue blacke, and if they cannot finde such as are to be found in that Prouince wherin they liue, or some such of one colour as is more base. viz. Burell.

CHAP. XXII.

That the Knights remaining, are onely to haue White.

IT is granted vnto none to weare White habits, or to haue white cloaks, but to the named knights of Christ.

CHAP. XXIII.

That they may vse Lambs Skinnes.

WE haue decreed by a common Counsell, that no brother remaining in winter, haue any other skinnes or hides, or such like belonging to the vse of his body, Cassocke and all, but of the skinnes of lambes or rammes.

CHAP. XIV.

That the old be giuen to the Esquires.

THe prouider or giuer of the Cloth, is with all obseruancy to keepe this custome, to giue the olde alwayes to the Esquiers and retainers, and if they be very old, to the poore, faithfully and indifferently.

CAP. XXV.

He that is ambitious after the best, is to haue the worst.

IF any brother will haue the fairest and best robes, either as of due, or out of pride; by such his presumption, hee shall deserue the very worst.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXVI.

That the quantity and quality of garments be obserued.

THere must be obseruation of garments concerning the quantity, according to the proportion and bignesse of the body. He that is the giuer of the cloth, ought to be curious herein.

CHAP. XXVII.

That the giuer of the cloth ought especially to obserue equality.

LEt him that prouides with a brotherly eye, consider the length, as is aforesaid, with equall measure, that neither the eye of the whisperer nor accuser can noate any thing, and in all things aforesaid, let him humbly meditate Gods reward.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Concerning superfluity of hayre.

ALl the brethren ought especially so to cut their haire, that they keepe regularity, and order, both before and behind. And the same is diligently to be obserued both in the beard and cheeke, that there be neither superfluity nor curiosity.

CHAP. XXIX.

De Rostris & Laqueis.

COncerning Rostra and Laquea, it is manifest, that it is a Heathenish thing, and for as much as this is abhominable vnto all men, we forbid it, and contradict it, that no man haue them. Likewise wee permit not others that serue for the time, but absolutely forbid them to haue Rostra and Laquea, and superfluity of haire, and immoderate length of garments. For to them that serue the most high Creator, Cleanlines is necessary both within and without: witnes himselfe saying, Be ye holy, for I am holy.

CHAP. XXX.

Concerning the number of Horses and Esquires.

IT is lawfull for euery Knight to haue three Horses, because the singular pouerty of the house of God, and of the Temple of Salomon, doe not admit for the present to augment, vnlesse it bee by the leaue of the Master.

CHAP. XXXI.

No man may smite an Esquire that serues freely.

FOr the same cause we grant vnto euery Knight one Esquire: but if that Esquire serue any Knight gratis, and vpon charity, it is not lawfull for him to smite him, or strike him for euery cause.

CAP. XXXII.

How that they that remaine for a time are to be receiued.

WE enioyne you faithfully, to buy for all the Knights, seruing Iesus Christ in the purity of their soule in the same house, Horses fitting for such a businesse, and Weapons, and whatsoeuer shall be necessary for them. Moreouer we iudge it good and profitable, to haue the horses prized on both parts equally, which price let it bee kept in writing, least it bee forgotten. And whatsoeuer shall be necessary for the Knight, or his horses, or his Esquire, adding also the furniture of the horses; let it be bestowed in brotherly charity, according to the ability of the house, out of the same house. If in the interim, the Knight by any euent loose his horses in this seruice, the Master and the goods of the house requires this, that he supply others. But the time comming of doing this, the Knight himselfe for Gods loue, is to pay one halfe of the price, the other (if he please) he may receiue from the Community of the brethren.

CHAP. XXXIII.

That none is to walke according to his owne will.

IT is fitting and conuenient for these Knights, who thinke nothing dearer to them then Christ, for the seruice according to which they haue professed, and for the glory of the sacred Trinity, or feare of hell, that they continually yeeld obedience vnto the Master. Therefore it is to be held (as we said before) when any thing is enioyned by the Master, or by him to whom the Master hath giuen command, without delay, as if it were enioyned from heauen, that they will brooke no delay in doing of it. For of such the Truth it selfe sayes. In the hearing of the eare he hath obeyed me.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Whether it bee lawfull to goe through the Towne, without the command of the Master.

There-

THerefore wee desire these like Knights who haue left their owne will, and serue others for a time, and we firmely command them, that they presume not to go into the Town without the leaue of the Maister, or to whom this is concredited, vnlesse it be By night vnto the Sepulchre, and to the Stations, which are contained within the walls of the holy City.

CHAP. XXXV.

Whether it be lawfull to walke alone.

LEt not these men dare to begin a iourney, eyther by day or night, without a kecrer, that is, a Knight or a Brother. For in an Army, after they are intertained, no Knight, or Esquire, or Seruant may walk by the Atrium of other Knights to see them, or to speake with them, without command, as is aforesaid. Therefore we earnestly confirme it, that in such a house ordeined of God, no man warre according to his owne will, or rest, but wholly betake himselfe ta the will of the Maister, that so hee may follow the saying of the Lord, I came not to doe mine owne will, but his which sent me.

CHAP. XXXVI.

That no man may seeke what may be necessary for him by name.

VVE command to write this custome amongst the rest, and we enioyne it to bee obserued with all diligence. No Brother particularly, and by name ought to seeke tforse or Furniture, or Armour. How then? If his owee infirmity, or the weakenes of his Horses, or the Weight of his Armour be knowne to be such, that it is a common losse to goe so; Let him come before the Maister, or to whom the Ministery is assigned after the Master, and let him truely and faithfully demonstrate the cause. For from thenceforth the businesse shall rest at the disposition of the Master, or of him that commands after him, or of the Steward.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Concerning Bridles and Spurres.

VVE will haue no Gold or Siluer, which are particular riches, to be seene at any time in Bridles or Breastplates, or Spurres; neyther may it be lawfull for any Brother to buy such: But if such things be charitably bestowed vpon them, the Gold or Siluer is so to be coloured, as the brauery or beauty may not bee censured arrogancy. If they be giuen new, the Maister may do with them what he will.

CAP. XXXVIII.

No couering to be had vpon Speares or Shields.

THere may bee had no couering vpon Shields and Speares, nor Furelli vpon Launces, because this is not conceiued to be any profit, but losse vnto vs all.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Concerning the power of the Master.

IT is lawfull for the Master, to giue Horse, or Armes, or any thing to any man to whom hee will.

CHAP. XL.

Concerning Male and Budgets.

BVdgets and Males with locke and key, are not granted, neither may they haue them without the Masters licence, or his to whom the businesses of the house are trusted. In this present Chapter, the Stewards, and they that liue in diuerse Prouinces, are not comprehended, nor the Master himselfe.

CHAP. XLI.

Concerning the reading of Letters.

IT is no wayes lawfull to any Brother, eyther to receiue to himselfe Letters from his parents, or from any other, nor to send Letters, without the command of the Master, or Steward. After that the Brother haue leaue, if he please they may bee read in the Masters presence If any thing bee directed to him from his Parents, let him not presume to receiue it, vnlesse it bee first told vnto the Master. But in this Chapter, the Master and the Stewards of the house are not contained.

CHAP. XLII.

Concerning the speaking of their owne faults.

SInce euery idle word is knowne to beget sinne, what can they say for themselues before the strict Iudge, that boast and bragge of their owne faults? The Prophet shewes truely: If wee ought sometimes to hold our tongues from good words for taciturnity, how much more from euill words for the punishment of sinne? Therefore we forbid and boldly prohibite, that no Brother make commemoration what hee hath done amisse in the world, or in Military affaires, either wioh his Brother, or with any other, and what delights of the Flesh he hath had ouer miserable women. And if he chance to heare any other relating such things, he is to make him silent, or at least as soone as he can depart from him, and not lend an eare to him.

CHAP. XLIII.

Concerning gaine and receiuing.

IF any thing be bestowed freely on any brother, without gaine; he is to beare it to the Maister or Steward. If otherwise, his friend, or Parents would giue it, but to vse, he may not receiue it, till he haue leaue from the Maister. But to whomsoeuer it is giuen, let it not grieue him, if it be bestowed on another. Yea let him know assuredly, that if he be angry at it, he striues against God. But in this foresaid Order, ministrators are not contained, to whom this ministerie is specially made ouer and granted, concerning Male and Budget.

CHAP. XLIIII.

Concerning the Bits of Horses.

IT is a profitable thing vnto all, that this precept appointed by vs, be infallibly obserued of all. Let no Brother presume to make Manducaria linea vel lanea. Idcirco principaliter facta, nec habeat vlla, excepto Cofinello.

CHAP. XLV.

That none doe dare to exchange or seeke.

NOw another thing remaines, that none presume to exchange his goods, one Brother with another, without the leaue of the Maister, nor seeke any thing, vnlesse one brother to another, and it be a small base matter, not a great.

CHAP. XLVI.

That none catch one Bird with another.

WE giue our common iudgement, that none should dare to take one Bird with another. For it is not agreeable vnto Religion, to be so addicted vnto worldly delights, but willingly to heare Gods precepts, constantly to frequent Prayer, daily to confesse his sinnes with sighes and teares. Let no Brother presume to goe with such a man, doing such things, either with a Hawke, or with any other Bird.

CHAP. XLVII.

That no man strike with a Bow, or with a Gunne.

FOr as much as it becomes all Religion to goe simply, and without laughter, humbly, and not to speake many words, but reasonable, and not in any loud clamorous tone: we specially command and enioyne euery professed Brother, that he doe not dare to shoote in a Bowe or Gunne, nor goe along with him that shall doe this; vnlesse it be to keepe him from the perfidious heathen, nor that he dare euery with a Dogge, or prase, nor spur his Horse in desire to take the Beast.

CHAP. XLVIII.

That the Lyon is alwaies to be strucken.

FOr it is certaine, that it is specially concredited to you, and due from you, to lay downe your life for your Brethren, and to take from the earth the incredulous, who are euermore menacing the Son of the Virgin. We speake this of the Lyon, because he goes about seeking whom he may deuoure, and his hands are against euery one, and euery ones hands are against him.

CHAP. XLIX.

Heare iudgement of euery thing that is asked of you.

VVE know that the persecutors of the Church be innumerable, and that they labour incessantly and cruelly, to disquiet them that loue not contention: Let this therefore be taken into due consideration, that when any man shall aske any thing of you, concerning Religion in the Easterne parts, or any other place; we command you to heare the iudgement and opinion of it by faithfull iudges, and such as are true louers of truth, and then we enioyne you to doe without partiality, whatsoeuer shall seeme iust vnto you.

CHAP. L.

That this Order be obserued in all things.

VVE courteously command, that this Order be obserued in all things, which are vndeseruedly taken from you.

CHAP. LI.

That it is lawfull for all professed Knights, to haue Lands and Men.

VVE doe beleeue, that this kinde of Religion had its beginning in holy places from you, by diuine prouidence, to wit, that you waxe warfare with religion, and so religion to be defended by warfare, and fight the enemy without sinne. Therefore we rightly adiudge, since you are styled Knights of the Temple, that for your renowned merit, and especiall gift of godlinesse; you haue Lands and Men, and keepe vnder you Husbandmen, and iustly gouerne them, and the appointed duetie to be particularly due vnto you for it.

CHAP. LII.

That there be a watchfull care had of them that be sicke.

ABoue all, there is a watchfull care to be had of the Brethren that be sicke, and that there be seruice done to them, as it were to Christ, that, that of the Gospell be had in memorie, I was sicke, and ye visited me. For these are carefully and patiently to be borne, because of such there is purchased a heauenly recompence.

CHAP. LIII.

That things necessary be alwayes administred to them that be sicke.

VVE command the ouerseers of them that be sick, that with all diligence and watch-full full care, whatsoeuer is necessary for their seuerall infirmities, be faithfully and diligently administred to them, according to the abilitie of the houses, V. F. flesh and foules, & such like, till they be restored vnto health.

CHAP. LIIII.
That one prouoke not another vnto wrath.

IT is no small thing to be tooke heede of, that no man presume to prouoke another vnto wrath, because the heauenly clemency hath equally obliged as well the poore, as the rich, in propinquity and holy brotherhood.

CHAP. LV.
How the Coniugated brethren are to be held.

WE permit vnto you, to haue coniugated brethren, in this manner, that if they desire the benefit and participation of your Fraternity, both of them shall giue after their death their portion of substance, and whatsoeuer they get more, to the vnity of the common Chapter: And in the interim, they must exercise an honest life, and labour to doe good to the brethren, but they may not goe in a white garment or habit. If the Husband dye first, he must leaue his portion to the brethren, and the wife to haue her maintenance out of the other. For this wee iudge to be vniust, that such women should abide in one and the same House with the Brethren, that promise Chastity vnto God.

CHAP. LVI.
That Sisters be no more ioyned with Men.

IT is a dangerous thing to assemble or ioyne together Sisters, because the auncient enemy hath drawne many from the right path of Paradise by the company of women. Therefore deare Brethren, that the floure of integrity may alwaies grow among you, it shall not be lawfull to vse this custome any longer.

CHAP. LVII.
That the Brethren of the Temple may not participate with such as be excommunicate.

THis (Brethren) is very much to be auoided and feared, that none of the Souldiers of Christ presume to ioyne himselfe with such as be excommunicate by any meanes, or to receiue their goods, least he be made Anathema Maranetha in like manner. But if he be interdicted onely to participate with him, it shall not vnworthely be lawfull for him to take of his goods by way of charitie.

CHAP. LVIII.
How secular Knights are to be receiued.

IF any Knight from out the masse of perdition, or any other secular man, willing to renounce the world, will chuse your kinde of life, and commonion, you may not presently assent vnto him, but according to that of Paul, Proue the spirits whether they be of God; and if so, you may grant him ingresse. Let the Order therefore be read in his presense, and if he will diligently obey the precepts thereof, then if it please the Maister and Brethren to receiue him, the brethren being called together, let him lay open his desire to them all in the sincerity of his soule. And then the time of probation is altogether to rest in the consideration and prouidence of the Maister, according to the honesty of the life of the petitioner.

CHAP. LIX.
That all the Brethren are not to be cald to secret Counsell.

WE doe not command to call all the Brethren alwayes vnto Counsell, but whom the Maister knowes prouident and fitting for it. But when he will deale with greater matters, as to giue common land, or to dispute of the Order it selfe, or receiue a Brother, then it is fitting to call together all the congregation, if it please the Maister, that so hearing the counsell of the common Chapter, he may doe that which he iudges to be best and most profitable.

CHAP. LX.
That they ought to pray with silence.

WE command by common Counsell that all the brethren pray with all reuerence, simply, and not clamorously, that one doe not hinder another, whether it be standing or sitting, as the affection of their minde and body requires.

CHAP. LXI.
That they take Faith or Allegiance of their seruants.

WE haue knowne many out of diuers Prouinces as well retainers, as Esquires, most earnestly desiring (for a time) to be admitted into our House, for the saluation of their soules: but it is expedient that you take faith of them, least happily the old enemy suggest something in Gods seruice, by stealth, or otherwayes vnseemely, and so suddenly driue them from their good purpose.

CHAP. LXII.
That children, so long as they be little ones are not to be receiued among the Brethren of the Temple.

THough the order of the holy Fathers permit to haue children in the congregation, yet we will not burden you with any such. But he that will courteously giue his owne sonne or kinsman, to Militarie religion, let him bring him vp till he come to yeares, that he be able manfully, to driue away the enemies of Christ out of the holy Land, with an armed hand. Then according to the Order, the father or parents are to set him in the midst of the brethren, and to open his petition vnto them all. For it is better not to vowe in childehood, then afterward foutely to fall away, when he is grown a man.

CHAP. LXIII.
That old men be alwayes honored.

YOu must piously support old men, according to their weakenesse, and dutifully honour them. And let them not be kept short, in any such things as are necessary for their body, the authority of the Order alwayes preserued.

CHAP. LXIV.
Concerning the brethren which passe through diuers Prouinces.

LEt Brethren which are to passe through diuers Prouinces, obserue order in meate and drinke, and in others things, so farre forth as they haue power, and let them liue vnreprouably, that they may haue good testimonie, euen of them which are without. Let them not pollute their purpose of religion, either in word or deede, but especially let them giue example of wisedome and of good works, to them with whom they are more familiarly conioyned. Let him be a man of the best report with whom they lodge, and if it may be, let not the house be without light for that night, least the darke enemy (which God forefend) finde some opportunitie. But where they shall heare of Knights meeting together, which are not excommunicate, let them haste thither, not so much considering temporall profit, as eternall safety of their soules. And those Brethren which are in the parts beyond the seas, in hope of conueyance directed thither; we wish them to receiue to them at this meeting, whosoeuer will courteously take vpon them the Militarie order: that both of them may meete in the presence of the Bishop of that Prouince, and the Prelate may heare the desire of the petitioner: which petitioner being heard, the Brethren is to send him to the Master, and to the Brethren which are in the Temple that is at Ierusalem. And if his life be honest and worthy such a fellowship, let him be courteously receiued, if it so seeme good to the Maister, and to the Brethren. If in the interim he dye; in recompence of his labour and trauell, the whole benefit and fraternity of the poore and fellow-Souldiers of Christ, is to be bestowed vpon him, as vpon one of the Brethren.

CHAP. LXV.
That foode be equally distributed vnto all.

WE thinke this also to be very fitting and reasonable, that foode be distributed to all the Brethren equally, according to the abilitie of the place. For acception of persons is not profitable, but respect of infirmities is necessary.

CHAP. LXVI.
That the Knights of the Temple haue Tenths.

WE beleeue that you (leauing the wealth of this world) are subiect vnto voluntary pouerty. Wherefore by this meanes it is manifest, that you haue Tenths duely belonging to you. If the Bishop of the Church to whom the Tithe is due, will giue it vnto you by way of charitie, by the assent of that Chapter, he ought to giue it of those Tithes which the Church then enioyeth. But if any Lay-man doe damnably withhold it out of his patrimony: he shall leaue the same to rot at the locke of him who is the Gouernor onely, without the consent of the Chapter.

CHAP. LXVII.
Of light and great faults.

IF any Brother shall offend in any small thing (in speaking or fighting, or otherwise) let him confesse of his owne accord shortly his offence vnto the Maister, by way of satisfaction. If they haue no custome concerning light things, let them haue light penances. But if he holding his peace, any other man make knowne his fault, he is subiect to great, and stricter and seuerer discipline. But if it be a great offence, let him be separated from the familiarity of the Brethren, and not eate with them at the same table, but take his repast alone. The whole matter is at the disposition and discretion of the Maister, that he may be saued in the day of iudgement.

CHAP. LXVIII.
For what fault a Brother may be receiued no more.

BEfore all things it is to bee prouided, that no Brother potent or impotent, strong or weake, willing to exalt himselfe, and by degrees to grow rond and dispond his fault, remaine vnchastened: But if hee will not amend, let him be checked more sharply. If he will not amend by godly admonitios, and harty praiers made for him, but grow greater and greater in pride; then according to the Apostle, let him bee rooted from the flock. Take away euill from you

It is necessary that a dying Sheep be remoued from the society of faithfull brethren. But the Maister, who Ought to hold the staffe and the rod in his hand, to wit, the staffe to support the infirmities of the weake, and the rod to correct the defaults of delinquents, with the zeale of rectitude: let him labour to doe it with the counsell of the Patriarch, and with spirituall consideration, least, as blessed Maximus saith, either loose lenity doe not keepe vnder the sinner, or immoderate seuerity do harden him in his sinne.

CHAP. LXIX.

That from the solemnity of Easter, till the feast of All Saints, you must haue but one linnen shirt Surplice.

MOreouer, because we pittifully consider the extraordinary heate of the Easterne region, we ordaine that from the festiuity of Easter, til the feast of all Saints, one linnen Surplisse only be giuen vnto euery one, not of debt, but of meere grace, to euery one I say that will make vse of it: but at other times he is generally to haue Surplices all woollen.

CHAP. LXX.

How many and what manner clothes are necessary in bed.

VVEE command by common Counsell, that euery mans sleeping place should be by himselfe, vnlesse there happen some especiall cause to the contrary, or great necessity. Let euery man haue his bed and bedcloathes at the disposé of the Maister. We suppose a Sacke, a Mattresse, and a Couering to be enough for euery one. He that wants one of these, let him haue a Carpet; and it shall be lawful at all times to haue a linnen couering. And they must sleepe alwayes cloathed with shirts and breeches, and sleeping continually til the morning, they must neuer want a candle.

CHAP. LXXI.

To auoide murmuring.

VVE admonish you to auoide emulation, enuie, spite, murmuring, whispering, detractions; and we command you to flye from them as from the plague. Therefore deere Brethren, let euery one of you carefully labour, that he doe not priuily slander his brother, or accuse him, but let him consider that of the Apostle, Be not thou an accuser, or a whisperer among the people. When he shall manifestly know that his brother hath offended, let him correct him peaceably and louingly, according to his commandement of the Lord, betweene himselfe and him. And if he will not heare him, let him take to him another Brother: if he contemne both, let him publikely be reproued in the assembly before all. For they are much blinded, who cannot keepe themselues from spite, by which they are ensnared in the auncient wickednesse of that subtill aduersary.

CHAP. LXXII.

That they are to shun all kissing of Women.

VVE hold it dangerous to all Religion, to looke too much on the beauty of women, and therefore let no brother presume to kisse either Widdow or Virgin, or Mother or Sister, or Aunt, or any other woman. Let the warfare of Christ shun feminine kisses, by which men are many times brought into danger; that with a pure conscience and secure life they may walke continually in the sight of God.

CHAP. IX.

HEretofore we haue spoken somewhat of this Order, the most Auncient of all Christendome, according to the testimonie of Saint Gregorie Nazianzene, who in the Life of the great Doctour Saint Basile; attributeth to him the birth and originall thereof. This Order was so much the more famous thorow Christendome, by how much the subiect was mercifull and charitable, as namely; taking care of diseased people, infected with such an vncurable infirmity, as was fled and shunned of all, vnfit for the frequencie of men, and making them seeme as dead to the world. Pope Damasus, first of the name, approued this for a good and commendable worke, and commended it to all the Churches of Christendome.

The Originall of this Order.

Iulian the Apostata, sworne enemy to the Christians, possessed himselfe of the Houses, which were assigned and giuen by the Church, for the relieuing of such miserable people. The Emperours, his Successours in power (but not in vaine and idle worshipping of Idols) did reestablish this worke of Charitie, and the Popes tooke a perticular care of it. This Order was brought into her auncient lustre, vnder the Kings of Ierusalem, that were Successours to Godfrey of Bologne. For we finde by the testimonie of William of Tyre, Chancellour of Ierusalem, and other Authors beside, that tooke paines in writing the Voyages and Conquests of our famous French Paladines, in those parts beyond the Seas; that the Kings of the holy Citie Bauldwine, Amaury and Bauldwine, as also the Queenes Theodora and Melisinda, gaue very great gifts to this Order. Which (as all the rest were) was gouerned by a Great Maister; and we obserued heretofore, that this Order had her Court, Iustice and Demeanes perticularly, as well in Ierusalem, as in the Citie of Acres.

Care for the reestablishing of this Order.

The Order gouerned by a great Maister.

Moreouer, the Knights of this Order, although they had especiall care of diseased Leaprous people; yet were they not negligent likewise, in skilfull handling of their weapons, and going to war against the Miscreants. And their deuotion made them so admired, and fauoured by King Lewes the yonger, called the Deuout; that at his returne from the Holy-Land, he brought along with him home into France, Twelue Knights of this Order, whom he appointed to be directors and Gouernors of the Hospitals in his Kingdome.

He established their chiefe Colledge and principall dwelling at Boigny in the Diocesse of Orleans, where this good King kept his Court most part of the yeare, by the example of King Lewes le Gros his Father. These twelue Knights serued as a Seed-plot or fruitfull Orchard, to all the Prouinces of Christendome, for from them Princes deriued Administrators, for exercising the work of Charity on Leaprous people, and it came to passe (by meanes of this Exercise) that all Prouinces acknowledged for

The chiefe Conuent of their abiding at Boigny.

Chiefe of the Order, the House of Boigny; where at the end of euery three years was held their generall Chapter, by the Priors of Italie, Sicilie, England, Germany & Spain.

Establishment of the Order at Boigny.

The establishing of this Order of Saint Lazarus at Boigny, vnder King Lewes the Deuout, is recorded in the Court Registers, in the yeare One thousand one hundred fifty and foure. And as well beyond the Seas, as in France, and other places of Christendome, the Bretheren of this Order made profession, of the Rule of Saint Augustine.

To slender purpose was it then, that the first originall of this Order should be attributed to certaine Italian Gentlemen, who passing into the Marches beyond the Seas; shaped their modell and patterne, by the Hospitallers of Saint Iohn of Ierusalem, endeauouring themselues in the curing of diseased Leaprous people, and nourishing them vpon such Almes as were giuen to them.

Concerning certaine Italian Gentlemen supposed the founders of this Order.

But it may be, that those Gentlemen Italians did reestablish this Charitie, for vsing care to diseased persons, afflicted with this incurable maladie; & that by example of the Knights Hospitallers, & them also of the Holy Sepulcher, they kept the passage waies, for safe guiding of Christian Pilgrims, to guard & defend them against the Sarrazins.

So then, seeing themselues encreased and augmented in number, they submitted to the Order of Saint Benedict, and tooke the long blacke Gowne, and (more to despight the Sarrazins) La Croix Verde à Huict pointes, bordee de Blanc. They made the vowes of Obedience, Pouertie and Chastitie, before the Patriarch of Ierusalem, called William, vnder the Reigne of Baldwine, fift of the name, King of Ierusalem, about the yeare of Grace, One thousand one hundred and fiftie.

Greene the onely delightfull colour of Mahomet.

In discoursing on the Order of the Ship, we obserued, how the Turkes doe hold a firme belief; that their great Prophet Mahomet tooke no meane delight, to goe clothed in Greene, and that his descendants, and the Othomans onely, might perticularly weare this Colour in the Sultane garments and Turbants. Which priuiledge was not permitted to any (whatsoeuer they were) except they could approue themselues of the Stocke of the Othomans, or of the race of that famous Imposture. It is the Colonell of the Turkish Empire, and Liuerie of the Great Turke; who when he will honor his fauourites with any perticular respect, he giueth them a golden Staffe, & a Greene Cornet; notes of absolute command in Iustice, and in the Warres. As did in Anno One thousand sixe hundred and foure, the Grand Seigneur Hamet, first of the name, to the Bascha of Hungarie, named Hasan Vuzir.

Great priuiledges giuen to this Order by Popes, and confirmed by other Popes.

The Popes Innocent, third of the name (the most learned Prelate that had bin before his time) Honorius the third, Gregorie the ninth and Innocent the fourth, gaue to this Order of Saint Lazarus very great Priueledges, and tooke them into their perticular protection. Which Priuiledges were after confirmed by the Popes Alexander the fourth, Nicholas the fourth, Clement the fourth, Iohn the two and twentieth, Gregorie the tenth, Paul the second, and by their Successours in the Holy Seate. The Buls of these Popes doe testifie the antiquitie of this Order of Saint Lazarus. And that vpon this occasion, Pope Pius, fift of the name, a native of Alexandria in Lombardie, by his Buls giuen in the second yeare of his Pontificalitie, and of Grace One thousand fiue hundred three score and twelue, the seauenth of the Calends of February, and third of the Ides of the moneth of August, called it Antiquissimum Charitatis & Militiæ Christi Ordinem. The Picture of this Pope is to be seene (very neerely resembling life) in one of the Glasse-windowes of the Vestrie of the Iacobines at Paris, and his Armes by him, which are Bande d'Argent, & de Sable à six Pieces, and vnder them is written. Pius Quintus Papa, Alexandrinus, Ordinis Fratrum Prædicatorum.

The Pope testifieth much to this Order.

The wealthie possessions of this Order.

This Order possessed great store of goods in France, vnder the Reigns of our most Christian Kings Phillip Augustus, Saint Lewes, and Philip the Hardie, Son to S. Lewes. And the Kings, Phillip le Bel, Phillip le Long, Iohn the Vnluckie, Charles the Wise, Charles the Victorious, Lewes the eleauenth, Charles the eight his Son, King of France, Naples and Sicilie; Lewes the twelfth, Father of the People, and King Frances, first of the name, all bestowing great gifts on this Order, or confirming those Priuiledges which they had. But in time (which bringeth all things to an end) the Kings of England, Germanie & of Spaine, and likewise the Estates of Italie, possessed themselues of the goods belonging to this Order, euery one in his place of power & Iurisdiction: So that the chiefe House thereof, established at Boigny by King Lewes the eleauenth, saw most most of her limbs lopped off, & quite pared away, without any hope of reuiuing again.

And as for those goods, which they enioyed & possessed in France, they were carried away by the Knights of the Rhodes, by vertue of a Bull sent from Pope Innocent, eight of the name, in the yeare One thousand foure hundred fourscore & ten. Which Bull ioyned these Knights of S. Lazarus, & their Goods (in whatsoeuer parts of Christendome they were seated) to the said Order of the Knights of Rhodes, who maintained themselues in France, vntill the time of King Henry the Great, when Brother Aymar de Chates, Knight of Malta, and Gouernor of Diepe in Normandie (Qui porroit d'Azur, à vne Fleur de Lys d'Or, Escartele de Gueulles à vne Clef d'Argent, au Chef de Malte) forsooke the Title of great Maister of the Order of S. Lazarus, giuen afterward to Philebert de Nereslang, as we haue formerly said in the third Booke.

This Order ioyned to that of Rhodes.

And therefore I am enforced in this Chapter, to check and reproue what hath bin said in the former cited third Booke, printed in France: because the Compositor of that Worke, growing forgetfull both of himselfe and me, transposed many lines in the Pages 700. and 701. where he hath made Saint Lewes to be Author of this Order at Boigny; insted of his great Grandfather Lewes the yonger (tearmed the Deuout or Pittifull) seauenth of the name.

An Error committed in the French Impression.

CHAP. X.

Croix de l'Ordre de Sainct Catherine du Mont de Sinai.

The Crosse of the Order of Saint Catharine of the Mount of Sinai.

Saint Cyprian, in the Treatise which he wrote De Montibus Sinai & Sion, declareth the excellencie of those holy Mountaines, whereof the one is fortified in the holy Citie, honored with the misteries of our Redemption; and the other is planted in the confines of Ægypt, & deserts of the Rockie Arabia. On the top whereof, God gaue to the Prophet Moyses, the Tables of the Law, written by his own finger in Saphire Stone: so say the Rabbines, expounding the twentieth Chapter of Exodus. This Mount of Sinai, was the place where God pleased to speake face to face with Moyses, appearing to him in the forme of a burning Bush, or of a fluming Furnace, as it is said in the nineteenth Chapter of Exodus. Totus Mons Sinai fumabat, eo quod descendisset Dominus Deus super eum in Igne, & ascenderet fumus ex eo quasi de fornace, erat que omnis mons terribilis. Mount Sinai was altogether on a smoake, because the Lord God descended vpon it in Fire: And the smoake thereof ascended as the smoake of a furnace, and the whole Mount quaked greatly.

The Mountain where God conuersed with Moyses.

As much is said of the Mountaine Horeb, very neere to that of Sinai, where God appeared to Moyses, keeping the Sheepe of his Father in Law Raguell, the Priest of Madian. Venit ad montem Horeb, apparuitque illi Dominus in flamma Ignis de medio Rubi. He came to the Mountaine Horeb, and the Angell of the Lord appeared vnto him, out of the midst of a Bush. Moyses transported with admiration, to see the Bush wholly flaming, and yet not consuming it selfe by the long continuance; would haue approached neere to it, to vnderstand the cause. But God commanded him to put off his Shooes, and to goe barefoote vpon that Holy ground. Ne appropinques huc. Solue calceamentum de pedibus tuis: locus enim in quo stas Terra Sancta est.

Where Saint Katharine endured Martyrdome.

Vpon this Mount of Horeb it was, where the Angels tooke vp from the Citie of Alexandria in Ægypt, the Body of the holy Virgin Saint Katharine, named by the Greekes Accatherine: who had suffered Martyrdome in Alexandria, vnder the Empetour Maximinus, and not vnder the other Tyrant Maxentius.

In honor and reuerence of these holy Mountaines, Pilgrimes were very desirous to see them; after they had visited the holy places in Ierusalem, and of the holy-Land. I haue read all the Authors, & seen the Maps or Tables of them, that haue described the condition & estate of these Mountaines, the ground-plot whereof they touch not, but on one side onely, as do diuers Italians & French, and namely Petrus Belonius of Mans, in his Obseruations, and Iacques de Villamont, Knight of the Order of Ierusalem, a Breton Gentleman. Qui porte en Banniere d'Argent au Lyon de Gueulles tenant vne Fleur de Lys de mesme, au Chef de Hierusalem. I haue a great Manuscript in Folio, and the Maps of the Holy Land, with other Prouinces in those East parts, traced and figured by the hand and penne of my late Vncle by the Mothers side, Brother to my any Mother) and my Godfather Maister Andrew Gallus, Parisian, who (in his life time) was Councellour to the King, in his Court of Parliament at Tolossa (Deane of the Professours in the Vniuersitie of that place, the chiefest and most renowned of Christendome) the skilfullest and learnedst men of these times. Hee bare d'Argent à trois Bandes de Gueulles à vn Aigle de Sable, Coronne d'Or pour Cimier sur son Timbre.

There are represented the two sides of these two Mountaines Sinai and Horeb, with all the particular Stations made by the Patriarch Moses, while hee kept the Sheepe of his Father in Law: and likewise of the Children of Israel, after their admirable deliuerance from the bondage of Ægypt. The places of deuotion prepared by Christians, after our Sauiour and Redeemer Iesus Christ, are there likewise noated. In that part behinde the Mountaines, are the deserts of Arabia, and the Sea Erithræum, that is the Red Sea, otherwise called the Arabian Gulfe. Betweene the Mount named Sinai, and that of Horeb, this Sea maketh a Lake, and a Port or Haven of good receite, neere to a small Towne called Raithu, inhabited with Moores, Turkes and Christians: where sometime stood an hundred and fiftie Houses, with a faire Monasterie, framed by Calogers of Mount Sinai. There it was, that the Children of Israel found the twelue Wells, and the threescore and ten Palmes, whereof mention is made in the fifteenth Chapter of Exodus. At the beginning of the Red Sea, is the Towne and Port of Suez, with a strong Castell, built by the Great Turke Sultan Soliman, and where he prepared a Fleete, to goe against the Portugals, who were become Masters of the Ile of Ormus, and of the East Indiaes.

Religious men of diuers sorts in the Mountaine of Horeb.

In elder times, the Monasterie of Saint Katharine of the Mountaine Sinai where reposeth the body of that holy Virgin, behinde, or vnder the high Altar, was stored with a good number of Monkes, whom they called Caloyers, after the manner of the Grecians: but now at this present (thorow necessitie) it is all, if there be two or three there ordinarly. The Pilgrimes of Ierusalem, going to the Mountaine Sinai, were entertained by these Caloyers of Saint Katharines Monasterie, and after Masse, and receiuing the holy Communion, the principall or chiefe Caloyer, made them Knights of the Order of Saint Katharine, vpon her Sepulcher or Tomb; vsing the same Interrogatories, Demands and Ceremonies, as those performed at the Holy Sepulchre in Ierusalem, which you haue heard already

The Monasterie of Saint Katherine of Mount Sinai.

The Habite and Cloake worne by these Knights of this Order.

These Knights ought to weare Cloakes, and on the left side, aboue the Crosse of Ierusalem, the markes of the Martyrdome of Saint Katharine, to wit; Ambecle pierced with six Spokes of Gueules, mailled with Siluer. Vne Roue percee à Six Rais de Gueulles clouee d'Argent. Like as it is here figured, by one of the same forme, which heretofore was giuen me by the deceased Messire Claude Daubray, who (in his life time) was Knight of both the said Orders, Of the holy Sepulcher of Ierusalem, and of Saint Katharine of Mount Sinai, Councellour, Notarie and Secretarie to the King, House and Crowne of France, Baron de Bruyeres le Chastean and Lord Maior of the Citie of Paris, a man of much honor and singular experience. With him I haue diuers times conferred, concerning his Voyages and obseruations, as well at Constantinople, where he had sojourned very long time, as to other Prouinces in the East parts; and namely in Aegypt, which he had past quite thorow, euen from the Port of Suez, so farre as to Ierusalem. To preserue the memorie of him to posteritie, we will describe his Armes, and the Genealogie of his Children. Il Portoit d'Argent à Trois Trefles de Sable, deux en Chef, & vn en pointe, & vn Croissant de Gueulles en Abisme.

A Crosse like vnto that which is worne by the Knights of this Order.

By Madam Mary l'Alemant his wife, Qui portoit de Gueulles au Cheuron d'Or, à Trois Roses d'Argent, Deux en Chef & vne en Pointe, he hath left two Daughters & one Son.

Peter

Peter Daubray, who (meerely in deuotion) forsooke the World, and Riches of his house, to become a Chartreux Monke, and is Proctour de Bourfontaine.

The Daughters are named

Dame Mary Daubray, Wife to Messire Louis de Cirier, Lord of Neufchelles, Du Plessis sur Autueil; de la Ville neufue, Pisselen, Truine, Sainct George, and Baron de Bruyeres le Chastean, by meanes of his Wife. The same Le Cirier Porte d'Azur à trois Licornes d'Or, Cimier Vne corne naissante d'Or.

And the other Daughter is Dame Margaret Daubray, Wife to Messire Francois Pot, Lord of Rhodes, and of Chemaux, Knight and Pronoist of both the Orders, Great Maister of the Ceremonies of France, Prime Enquire Carter, and Bugle-Bearer to the King: whom we haue said to beare Pot de sable Vuide d'azur au Lambeau de Gueulles. It is impossible, but that a good Tree should bring forth good fruite, and a worthy man, to haue Children that shall follow his stepps.

Beatus ille vir qui non iuit in consilium impiorum, & cum societate Deriſorum non sedit. Sed in lege Domini voluntas eius, & in lege eius Nocte Die que meditabitur. Erit tanquam Arbor quæ plantata est super riuos Aquarum, cuius fructus maturi sent in tempore suo, folia eius non defluant, & omne germen eius quod germinat, grana sert, & proficit. Non sic impij, sed sicut pulueris quem proijcit Ventus. Propterea non consistent impij in die Iudicij neque Peccatores in societate Iustorum. Quoniam manifesta est via Dominus viri Iusti, & Via Impiorum perdet.

Blessed is the man, that hath not walked in the Councell of the vngodly, nor stand in the way of sinners, and hath not sit in the seat of the scornfull. But his delight is in the Law of the Lord, and in his Law will hee exercise himselfe day and night. And he shall be like a tree planted by the waters side: that will bring forth his fruit in due season. His leafe also shall not wither: and looke whatsoeuer he doth, it shall prosper. As for the vngodly it is not so with them: but they are like the chaffe, which the winde scattereth away from the face of the earth. Therefore the vngodly shall not bee able to stand in the iudgement: neither the sinners in the Congregation of the righteous. But the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, and the way of the vngodly shall perish.

The feare the Blessings, which it pleased God to bestow vpon a good man, and to multiply his race vpon the face of the Earth.

CHAP. XI.

Of other Militarie Orders, that were in the Holy Land.

Autres Ordres Militaires de la Terre-Sainde.

I Finde, that vnder the first Latine Kings of Ierusalem, there were many other Orders of Knighthood: which are vtterly lost, as well as the rest, and there remaineth no more but an obscure memory of them. Vnder the Reignes of the second and third Kings, two Castells were built, which caried one and the same name of Monte-Ioye. The First was betweene Ramah and the Holy-Citty, on the pointe of the Mountaine, from whence the Pilgrimes doe discouer the Citty of Ierusalem: And there they dismount from their Horsses, putting off their Hose and Shooes, and descend downe bare footed so farre as to the Conuent of the Cordeliers, or Gray Fryers.

Of two Castells in the Holy-Land.

The first Castell.

The other Castell was on the Mountaines of Iudea, aboue the Citty of Dauid, called Bathleem, otherwise named Ephrata, neere to the Tower of Ader, where the Angell deliuered the tydings of Ioy and Reioycing to the Sheepheards, concerning the Birth of the Worlds Sauiour. At the same place where the Angels appeared, the first Christians erected there an Oratorie, and place of deuotion, which they named Ad Tres Pastores: in memory of Three Sheepheards, which went to worship the King of Kings, in a Stable hewen out of a Rocke. You heare what is said by the Learned, Cardinall Baronius, in the First Tome of his Ecclesiasticall Annales.

The second Castell.

Knights Warriours against the Arabes, nam'd Brethren of Mont Ioye. De Monte Gaudio.

In these two Castels were (for defence against the courses of the Alarbes) Knights, who had the name of their Garrison, wearing red Cloakes, & on their Breast a white Star with fiue Rayes or beames. This Order was approued by Pope Alexander, third of the name, who gaue them the Rule of Saint Augustine, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand one hundred and fourescore.

Names giuen according to the places where they dwelt.

Being driuen out of Syria (as well as the other were) they obtained dwelling in diuers Prouinces of Europe; and namely in the Kingdomes of Castile, and of Valentia la Grande, where they were acknowledged vnder diuers appellations, answerable to the places where they dwelt. In Castile they were called The Knights of Monfrac, by reason that the place so named was giuen them by King Ferdinand, tearmed the Saint, in the yeare of Grace One thousand two hundred twenty and one. In Castile likewise they were named The Knights of Trugillo, a Citie which was giuen by the King of Castile, Alphonso the ninth, in the yeare of Grace One thousand two hundred twentie and eight, with the Lands of Sancta Cruz, Zuferola, Cabana, Albata, and other more beside.

Their first name in the Holy-Land.

In Arragon and Valencia they possessed Lands likewise, but were there called by their auncient denomination: Los Freyles de Mongoia; Brethren of the Mount of Ioye. In Spaine there is a memory of a great Maister of this Order, named the Count Rodrigo Goncales. Maestre de Monfrac de la Orden de Monte-Gaudio. The Templers possessed themselues of those Lands which they had in Arragon, and in Valencia. In following time, the Brethren of Monfrac, ioyned themselues with the Brethren of the Order of Calatrana, and they of Trugillo, with them of the Order of Alcantara, by which meanes the memory of this Order is lost; onely we haue some noates left in the writings of Hieronymus Romanus, in his Common-wealth; and by Franciscum Radez d Andrada, in his Chronicle of the Order of Alcantara. Next to the Order of Mont-Ioye, march them of

The Knights of Saint Iohn of Acres.

Saint Iohn of Acres, who at the beginning (euen as the other did) imployed their paines in curing diseased Pilgrimes, who, after they had recouered health, they kept them with them, to guard and defend the insultings of the Infidell Alarbes. They followed the rule of Saint Augustine; had Saint Iohn Baptist for their Patron, ware a Black Habite, and a White Crosse Pattee. After the taking of Acres, they arriued in Spayne, in the time of Alphonso the Astrologer, who gaue them (for abyding) diuers places in Castille. The Learned Tostatus, in his Commentaries vpon Iosuah, the Sixteene and Nineteene Chapters, obserueth their arriuall, decadence and ending: but concerning the birth and originall of this Order, it is vncertaine and doubtfull.

Knights of the Order of Saint Thomas, Instituted by King Richard of England, the first.

The Order of Saint Thomas, that was Instituted by the King of England, Richard Sirnamed Cœur de Lyon, after the surprisall of Acres. And being of the English Nation, they held the Rule of Saint Augustine, wore a White Habite, and a full Red Crosse, charged in the midst with a White Scallop. They tooke for their Patrone (as I haue heard) the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Metropolitane of England, Thomas Becket, who suffered Martyrdome (as his fauourours say) vnder the King of England Henry, Second of the Name, the Nine and Twentieth day of December, in the yeare of Grace One thousand, one hundred, threescore and fifteene. He bare for Armes De Sable a vn Lyon d'Argent, and his successours, dwelling at Rouen and at Paris (after the taking of Pontoise against the Englinsh, vnder King Charles the Seauenth and Victorious:) caried D'Azur a Trois Tours d'Or Massonnes de Sable, Deux en Chef, et vne en Pointe, as we haue said in our Historie of Nauarre.

Knights of Sainte Gerion.

The Order of Saint Gerion, who suffered Martyrdome at Cologne in Germanie, with Three hundred and eighteene in his Company, during the Persecution of the Church, excited by the Emperour Maximianus. It was Instituted by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa: but others say by Frederick the Second, and composed only of Gentlemen of the Germaine Nation. The Knights of this Order, held the Rule of Saint Augustine; wore a White Habite, and a full Black Crosse.

Knights of Saint Blaze.

The Order of Saint Blaze, Bishop of Armenia, Martyred vnder the Emperour Diocletian. It was at the height, when the Kings of Armenia, of the Illustrious House of Luzignan, kept their Court and Iurisdiction in the Citty of Acres. And the Knights of

of this Order, were Officers and Seruants to the Kings of Armenia, knowne to be of their traine and House; by their habite of Skye-Couller, and a Crosse of Gold worne vpon their breasts, which serued as a Brizure to the Lyon of Armenia, caried by them of Luzignan, as we haue said: in stead of the Auncient Shield, belonging to the Kings and Princes of Armenia, which was D'Azur a Trois Testes de Roynes Amazones d'Argent, Coronnees d'Or. 2. et. 1.

CHAP. XII.

Orders of the East: And likewise of the East and West Indians.

Ordres du Leuant, Indes Orientales, & Occidentales.

THE Lord of Ioinuille in Champaigne, obserueth in the Three and Thirtieth Chapter, of the life of the Great King Saint Lewes, that the Soldane of Babylon, and of Syria, otherwise called Syria; had Knights that were named De la Halequa, that is to say, Knights of the Chamber of Honour. These were the strength of the Soldanes, as are the Gemissaires, or Gingissqueres of the Great Turke. These were children (issued and descended of Slaues brought from the East, and solde in Egypt) whom the Soldanes caused to be nourished and carefully educated, and from their tender youth, to bend Bowes, and shoote in them: And according as they grew and encreased in strength and yeares, so they were inured to stronger Armes. Being in the floure of their time, they were enrouled among the Knights of Honor and admitted to guard the Body and person of the Soldane: and then they were called Les Baboris du Souldan, who made them Knights.

Knights of the Chamber of Honour created by the Soldane of Babylon.

The Souldanes or Sultanes, and Tsultans (that is to say Seigneurs) of Babylon and of Syria, beare in Armes, L'Escu d'Or, au Chef de Gueules, a Deux Faces de mesme: La Premiere Bretesse du coste du Chef seu'ement; et Autre Haut et Bas.

The Armes of the Soldanes.

The Knights de la Halequa Portoient tous l'Escu d'Or: But it was distinguished from that of the Grand Seigneur, by diuers Charges and Brizures. As namely by Bendes, or by Barres of Gueules: Or by Fowles, Roses, Griffons or other Creatures, according as they were deuised.

Concerning the East Indians.

Of the great Kingdome of China.

IN the East Indians is the mighty Kingdome of China, the scituation whereof is very great, vnder the Tropick of Cancer, the one side thereof extendeth it selfe to the North-East, and to the South-East, the length of Foure hundred miles. It is limitted or bounded on the Meridionall or Southside, with the Kingdome of Cochinchina; On the West or Sunne setting, it hath Tartaria and Persia. Ptolomie acknowledgeth this flourishing Kingdome, vnder the name of Sinarum Populi, in imitation of Geographers that went before him. And they more moderne, haue comprehended this Kingdome of China (the best pollicied and gouerned in the World) to be properly named the Kingdome of Mangi, vnder the name of Cathay, common (by ignorance) to Tartaria, at such time as the Chinchis Cham had in his power and command, the Realmes of Persia, and of Prester Iohn, wholly exterminated (in his time) from all memory and reuiuing againe. For it is a populare errour, to say that there is such a State in the World, confounding it with the Great Negus, Lord of Athiopia, where the Grand-Cham of Tartaria neuer came to set footing.

The Chinchis Cham Gouernour of Persia, &c.

The Kingdome of China, deuided from Tataria by a List or threading of Mountaines, containing Fiue hundred miles in length (the places of accesse and passage being enclosed with walls) and containeth Fifteene Prouinces, as namely Fuquiem, Olam, Sinfay, Susan, Vansay, Oquemain, Aucheo, Huna, Quanton, Quicheo, Chequeam, Saxi, Aynson, Tolanchia, and Paquia. The first Thirteene of these are eche one gouerned by a Vice-Roy, the two beside, they haue no other Gouernour then the King: in regard that these two last Prouinces Tolanchin and Paquin, are Frontiers to Tartaria, the Great Chams whereof haue heertofore conquered, yea, and gouerned China, in the time of Tamberlaine, King of the Parthians, and Son in Law to the Great Cham.

The fifteene Prouinces of China.

The

Knights Warriours against the Alarbes, named Brethren of Mont Ioye De Monte Gaudio.

In these two Castels were (for defence against the courses of the Alarbes) Knights, who had the name of their Garrison, wearing red Cloakes, & on their Breast a white Star with fiue Rayes or beames. This Order was approued by Pope Alexander, third of the name, who gaue them the Rule of Saint Augustine, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand one hundred and fourescore.

Names giuen according to the places where they dwelt.

Being driuen out of Syria (as well as the other were) they obtained dwelling in diuers Prouinces of Europe; and namely in the Kingdomes of Castile, and of Valencia la Grande, where they were acknowledged vnder diuers appellations, answerable to the places where they dwelt. In Castile they were called The Knights of Monfrac, by reason that the place so named was giuen them by King Ferdinand, tearmed the Saint, in the yeare of Grace One thousand two hundred twenty and one. In Castile likewise they were named The Knights of Trugillo, a Citie which was giuen by the King of Castile, Alphonso the ninth, in the yeare of Grace One thousand two hundred twentie and eight, with the Lands of Sancta Cruz, Zuferola, Cabana, Albata, and other more beside.

Their first name in the Holy-Land.

In Arragon and Valencia they possessed Lands likewise, but were there called by their auncient denomination: Los Freyles de Mongoia; Brethren of the Mount of Ioye. In Spaine there is a memory of a great Maister of this Order, named the Count Rodrigo Goncales. Maestre de Monfrac de la Orden de Monte-Gaudio. The Templers possessed themselues of those Lands which they had in Arragon, and in Valencia. In following time, the Brethren of Monfrac, ioyned themselues with the Brethren of the Order of Calatrana, and they of Trugillo, with them of the Order of Alcantara, by which meanes the memory of this Order is lost; onely we haue some noates left in the writings of Hieronymus Romanus, in his Common-wealth; and by Franciscus Radez d Andrada, in his Chronicle of the Order of Alcantara. Next to the Order of Mont-Ioye, march them of

The Knights of Saint Iohn of Acres.

Saint Iohn of Acres, who at the beginning (euen as the other did) imployed their paines in curing diseased Pilgrimes, who, after they had recouered health, they kept them with them, to guard and defend the insultings of the Infidell Alarbes. They followed the rule of Saint Augustine; had Saint Iohn Baptist for their Patron, ware a Black Habite, and a White Crosse Fattee. After the taking of Acres, they arriued in Spayne, in the time of Alphonso the Astrologer, who gaue them (for abyding) diuers places in Castille. The Learned Tostatus, in his Commentaries vpon Iosuah, the Sixteene and Nineteene Chapters, obserueth their arriuall, decadence and ending: but concerning the birth and originall of this Order, it is vncertaine and doubtfull.

Knights of the Order of Saint Thomas, Instituted by King Richard of England, the first.

The Order of Saint Thomas, that was Instituted by the King of England, Richard Sirnamed Cocur de Lyon, after the surprisall of Acres. And being of the English Nation, they held the Rule of Saint Augustine, wore a White Habite, and a full Red Crosse, charged in the midst with a White Scallop. They tooke for their Patrone (as I haue heard) the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Metropolitane of England, Thomas Becket, who suffered Martyrdome (as his fauourours say) vnder the King of England Henry, Second of the Name, the Nine and Twentieth day of December, in the yeare of Grace One thousand, one hundred, threescore and fifteene. He bare for Armes De Sable a vn Lyon d'Argent, and his successours, dwelling at Rouen and at Paris (after the taking of Pontoise against the Englinsh, vnder King Charles the Seauenth and Victorious:) caried D'Azur a Trois Tours d'Or Massonnes de Sable, Deuxen Chef, et vne en Poinéte, as we haue said in our Historie of Nauarre.

Knights of Sainte Gerion.

The Order of Saint Gerion, who suffered Martyrdome at Cologne in Germanie, with Three hundred and eighteene in his Company, during the Persecution of the Church, excited by the Emperour Maximianus. It was Instituted by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa: but others say by Frederick the Second, and composed only of Gentlemen of the Germaine Nation. The Knights of this Order, held the Rule of Saint Augustine; wore a White Habite, and a full Black Crosse.

Knights of Saint Blaze.

The Order of Saint Blaze, Bishop of Armenia, Martyred vnder the Emperour Diocletian. It was at the height, when the Kings of Armenia, of the Illustrious House of Luzignan, kept their Court and Iurisdiction in the Citty of Acres. And the Knights of

of this Order, were Officers and Seruants to the Kings of Armenia, knowne to be of their traine and House; by their habite of Skye-Coullor, and a Crosse of Gold worne vpon their breasts, which serued as a Brizure to the Lyon of Armenia, caried by them of Luzignan, as we haue said: in stead of the Auncient Shield, belonging to the Kings and Princes of Armenia, which was D'Azur à Trois Testes de Roynes Amazones d Argent, Coronnees d'Or. 2. et. 1.

CHAP. XII.

Orders of the East: And likewise of the East and West Indiaes.

Ordres du Leuant, Indes Orientales, & Occidentales.

THe Lord of Ioinuille in Champaigne, obserueth in the Three and Thirtieth Chapter, of the life of the Great King Saint Lewes, that the Soldane of Babylon, and of Suria, otherwise called Syria; had Knights that were named De la Halequa, that is to say, Knights of the Chamber of Honour. These were the strength of the Soldanes, as are the Gemissaires, or Gingisqueres of the Great Turke. These were children (issued and descended of Slaues brought from the East, and solde in Egypt) whom the Soldanes caused to be nourished and carefully educated, and from their tender youth, to bend Bowes, and shoote in them: And according as they grew and encreased in strength and yeares, so they were inured to stronger Armes. Being in the floure of their time, they were enrouled among the Knights of Honor and admitted to guard the Body and person of the Soldane: and then they were called Les Bahoris du Souldan, who made them Knights.

Concerning the East Indiaes.

Of the great Kingdome of China.

IN the East Indiaes is the mighty Kingdome of China, the scituation whereof is very great, vnder the Tropick of Cancer, the one side thereof extendeth it selfe to the North-East, and to the South-East, the length of Foure hundred miles. It is limitted or bounded on the Meridionall or Southside, with the Kingdome of Cochinchina; On the West or Sunne setting, it hath Tartaria and Persia. Ptolomie acknowledgeth this flourishing Kingdome, vnder the name of Sinarum Populi, in imitation of Geographers that went before him. And they more moderne, haue comprehended this Kingdome of China (the best pollicied and gouerned in the World) to be properly named the Kingdome of Mangi, vnder the name of Cathay, common (by ignorance) to Tartaria, at such time as the Chinchis Cham had in his power and command, the Realmes of Persia, and of Prester Iohn, wholly exterminated (in his time) from all memory and reuiuing againe. For it is a populare errour, to say that there is such a State in the World, confounding it with the Great Negus, Lord of Athiopia, where the Grand-Cham of Tartaria never came to set footing.

The Chinchis Cham Gouernour of Persia, &c.

The Kingdome of China, deuided from Tataria by a List or threading of Mountaines, containing Fiue hundred miles in length (the places of accesse and passage being enclosed with walls) and containeth Fifteene Prouinces, as namely Foquiem, Olam, Sinfay, Susan, Vansay, Oquemun, Aucheo, Hona, Quanton, Quicheo, Chequeam, Saxi, Aynan, Tolanchia, and Paquia. The Armes of the Kingdome.

The Cit y of Quinzay contayneth in length, so much ground as a Knight (well mounted) can ride ouer in a day. And the greatnesse thereof is described by Marcus Paulus Venetus, in the Threescore and Fourth Chapter of his Second Booke: And by Ioannes Gonsalez de Mendoza, and others beside, who haue written on the wonders of this mighty Kingdome. Not forgetting our Frenche Lucretius, William de Saluste, Lord du Bartas, in the ending of the Fourth day of his First Weeke.

And passe in all her goodly crossing wayes,
And statelie streetes, fronted with sumptuous Bowers;

Becausse this Citty is built vpon a Lake, after the same manner as is Venice, and other the like Citties.

Now, becausse Latine is not familiare to euery vnderstanding; as my Authour hath bestowed a Frenche version of it, so haue I done the like in English.

The words alleadged by Marcus Paulus Venetus.

There are Fiue dayes iourney of ground in distance, betweene the Citty of Singuisu, so farre as to another famous and renowned Citty, which is called Quinzai, that is to say, The Citty of Heauen. It is of such great extendure, that men doe verily beleeue, there is not the like of it in this World. I speake it, becausse I haue seene it from the one end to the other, and obserued the behauiour and manner of life of the dwellers therein: Wherefore I will briefely and faithfully make report, of that which I haue knowne. The Circuite or Guirdling thereof, is an Hundred Thousand paces (allowing Foure Thousand paces to a Mile, it would be fiue and twenty miles about) It hath Twelue Thousand Bridges of goodly Stone, the Arches whereof are mounted so high; that Shippes, doe easily passe vnder them, with full spread Sayles. The Plantation or seating is in a Marish, like to that of Venice. From this Citty bending towards the East, there are Fiue and Twenty Thousand paces, so farre as to the Ocean Sea, on the shoare whereof is seated the Citty of Canton fu (the names of the Citties of China, haue euermore their ending in this Sillable Fu, which signifieth a Citty in the Chinoise language) garnished with a goodly Porte or Harbour: And therefore shippes of Persia, Ormus, Goa, Cochin, Cananor, from the Phillippies, Iapan, Sian, and from other places of the East Indiaes, laden with all kinds of goods, doe arriue there in plentifull manner. From Quinzay runneth a great Riuer, and commeth to discharge it selfe at this Hauen of Canton fu: by meanes whereof, shippes and other Vessells (laden with Merchandises) doe come to Quinzai.

Shippes

All the Cities of China haue their Vniuersities, flourishing with Learned Professours; who doe teach all the partes of Philosophie and the Mathematicks. And their last Studie is the Lawes and Customes of the Countrey, the best gouerned of any in the world. Mechanicall Artes are there in full perfection; the whole world trauaileth thither, and no idle or slothfull person is to be seene there begging for sustenance, vpon paine of death.

Flourishing Vniuersities in the Cities of China.

The degrees of Honor, are the dignity of Doctours and Licentiates, some in Philosophie, and others in the Mathematicks: but the greatest degree of all, is to be Doctour of the Lawes, the most honored in China, next after the Mandarins.

Concerning degrees of Honor.

The Doctours are named Loitias, who sit and are caried in Seates, couered with Veyles and Canopies of Silke, embrodered and wouen with Gold and Siluer. And looke how farre these Doctours haue proceeded in Learning and Knowledge, so much the more are they aduanced in Honour and dignity: For (according to their capacity) they attaine to the Gouernment of the Prouinces, and are made Manadarins, that is to say, Knights to the Lord.

The dignity of Doctours.

Knights of the Segnorie.

Out of the number of these Loitias, the most skillfull of them are commanded to the Court, where the King giueth them the title of Knights, and the noate of Mandarins that is appointed Hatt or Bonnet of red silke, faced with rich Hermines or Martins zublins, whereon is fastened a Star of Golde, with six Rayes or Beames, which is the marke and noate of Knight-hood. Vnder this Bonnet is a vaile of crimsen silke broched with Gold and Siluer, which descendeth downe vpon the shoulders, and at the poynt of this Hood or Chaperon of the Knight, is a great Tassell or button of Golde, the longe Robe traileth downe to the foote, being of fine costly Silke, and bordered beneath with Limbes of Gold and Siluer: the rest is embrodered with all kindes of Creatures and flowers, shaped according to life. And a great Girdle of Gold, curiously set with precious Stones, which Girdle commeth three times about the body, and (in stead of Stockings) Guilded Buskins.

The Bonnet and Habite of Knighthood.

The King, in giuing his Order of the Starre to these Loitias, maketh them thereby Mandarins, that is to say, Counts, Gouernours and Vice-Royes of Prouinces (beside that of their birth) where they haue their Palace Royall. In the Hall of Presence, is the Image or Picture of the King, before which the Mandarin falleth on his Knees, and prostrateth himselfe with all reuerence, and before he presumeth to sit downe in the Seate of Iustice. Such Honor and Reuerence is giuen to these Loitias and Mandarins; as no man speaketh to any of them, but vpon his knees, and Requests are made to them by writing, as they vsed to doe to the Romaine Emperours. When they passe thorow the Streetes, all the people withdraw themselues aside, to make them passage, and humbly fall vpon their knees. Let vs now crosse the Ocean Sea from the Porte of Cantonfu, and sayle to the coast of Malabar, in the East-Indiaes.

The Kings Order of the Starre to his Loitias and Mandarins.

Malabar extendeth it selfe from Barcelos, so farre as to the Cape of Commorino, and in this extendure are the Kingdomes of Cananor, Montingue, Badara, Tananour, Cochin, Colan, Commorino, and of Calecut, which is the principall Kingdome, and the King thereof beareth the title of Samorin, that is to say Emperour, in the vsuall language of Malabar.

Concerning Malabar and her seuerall Kingdomes.

These Indiaes are inhabited by three kinds of people; the Bramenes (in the Auncient Geographers called Brachmanes) which are Priests, of the most Noble and Auncient race in these East Indies. They abstaine from the vse of any Wine, and from all things that hath life; sustaining themselues with Fruits, Hearbs and Whitemeates, and drinking nothing but cleare Water. They neuer make alliance or medling with any, but such as are Bramenes, and marry not, but once in their life time. They goe habited in cloth of Cotton, with White Turbants on their Heades, and weare Red Shoes vpon their Feete.

Three seuerall kinds of people inhabiting these Indiaes.

Of the Bramenes or Brachmanes.

The

Their distinguishing from other people.

The only marke or noate, which maketh them to be discerned from other people; is a Cordon of three twisted Cotten Threads, which they weare about their naked bodies, like to the Knights of the Bande in Spayne. This Scarffe or kind of Bauldrick, is as an Order, which is giuen to them in their Temples and Pagodes, with great expences and solemnity.

Degradation from Nobility.

The greatest despight or iniurie, that can be done to a Bramene; is to breake his Scarffe or Cordon, the outward noate of his Nobility. He must then haue an other giuen him, with the selfe same Ceremony as the first was. He being attainted and conuinced of any Crime, punishable with a noate of infamy: is to haue his Scarffe and Cordon taken from him, as degrading him from Nobility; this is first done vnto him, before he be banished from the Company, and declared to be but a Coman or Clowne.

The Male children of these Bramenes, hauing attained to the Age of Seauen yeares; are brought to the Pagode, where the Chiefe High Priest putteth vpon their naked skinne, a Scarffe or Belt of two fingers breadth, made of the hide of a wilde Asse, which in their Indian and Malabar language, they tearme Cressuamengam. Before the receiuing of this Ceremony: they are not permitted to feede on [b] Betell: And from this time forward, they are knowne to be Sonnes of the Bramenes, and then they are enstructed to manage Armes, or to attend on the seruice and worship of their Idolls, because they haue no other imployment, but one of these two vocations, howbeit some haue written, that they addict themselues to Merchandise.

[b] An Indian Sallad herbe resembling the Gilliflowre plant, or hartland Pepper.

How they deale with their young Squires.

The young Squires doe weare this Belt or Scarffe, crossing the body vnder the left Arme, vntill the age of foureteene yeares, and then they are made Bramenes, with infinite sounding of Trumpets and Solemnities; taking then from them the Leather Belt, to put on the Scarffe of three Cotten Threads.

Concerning the Samorin.

The Samorin is of the Bramene race, & weareth this Cordon, as Chiefe of this Order, which they hold to be the most Noble in all the World, as also that Race, which hath continued aboue Twelue Thousand yeares, if we please to beleeue their Annales.

Crowes held in great reuerence.

The Kings of Calecuth beare for Armes, L'Escu d'Argent seme sans nombre de Cornilles de Sable Birdes which they hold in such reuerence (as being the Symbole of very long life) that they are fed and nourished, with the releeses and recisions of the Samorins Table (who feedeth on nothing but Fruits) by the hands of the Bramenes, who performe this seruice themselues.

Nayres the second sort of people.

The Second condition of the Inhabitants in Malabar, are the Nayres; all of Noble Extraction, and meddle in no alliance but among themselues. They giue themselues wholly to Armes, and haue not any other exercise: being alwayes imployed in the Kings seruice, neere about his person, or else in his Warres. The Heads and Principall men of these Nayres, are honored by the Samorin, giuing them a great Bracelet of Gold vpon the right Arme, which is the noate of the Second Order of Knighthood in the East Indiaes. They weare their hayre very long, neuer cutting it, but tressed and twined about their heads, because they doe not vse any Turbant.

The second Order of Knighthood.

Poulias and Moneoys the third sort of people.

The last condition is of the common popularity and Mechanicall persons, whom they call Poulias, and Moncoys, which is no matter of our subiect. Concerning the perticularities formerly spoken of the East Indiaes, discouered and possessed by the Portugalles: they are taken out of the writings of Ieronimo Osorius, Bishop of Sylues in the Algarues; And Edouardo Barboza, a Portuguize; The Nauigations of Ludouicus Romanus Patritius; Hugo de Linscote Hollander; And (of fresher date) those of Frances Pyrard de Lauall in Bretaine. Now proceed we to the West Indies, possessed by the Spanyards.

Concerning the west-Indiaes.

Creation of Knights in the West Indies.

THe Ingas Kings of Perou, create their Knights with many Ceremonies, on the principall day of their Feast, which they celebrate yearely in December. Vpon which day, the Sonnes of the Ingas and Caciques, that is to say, the Chiefest and principall men of the Countrey, newly made Knights; doe weare Scarffes of most odoriferous Flowers, stretching from the right Shoulder, vnder the left Arme. They are boared or pierced thorow the Eares, to the end, that they should be manifest and and remember the day whereon they were created Knights. And the Papas, which in the language of the Countrey, is tearmed the High Priest, maketh vpon their foreheads a streake of Bloud, of the Beastes offered in Sacrifice, extending from the right Eare to the left, and causeth them to sweare: that they shall bee (all their life time) Faythfull and Loyall Knights of the Inga. As we learne by Iosephus Acosta, in the Eight and Twentieth Chapter of the Fift Booke, of his Naturall History of the Indiaes.

The Office and Ceremonie of the Papas to the new Knights.

Concerning Mexico.

THe Kings of Mexico, whose power was quite quayled and exterminated, by the valiant Spanishe Captayne Ferdinando Corteze (for vertue is to bee honoured where soeuer it is found) had among them diuers Orders of Knighthood: so saith the same Acosta, in the Sixe and Twentieth Chapter of his Sixt Booke.

Many Orders among the Mexicanes.

The most Honorable was of them, who wore their Haire tied vp like a Crowne (being thereby stiled) with a Red Riband, and on the top thereof a great Plume, the Lambrequins whereof shadowed and couered the shoulders, with Roules or Wreathes of Red Silke in the same manner, and in the fashion of curled locks of Haire: They vsed to weare so many Roules and Lambrequins, as they had bin present in foughten Battailes, and Actions of Warre.

Knights of the Crowne.

The Second Order of Knights, was of them that were tearmed Knights of the Eagles.

Knights of the Eagles.

The Third Order was that of Lyons and Typres, being all valiant and worthy persons, that made themselues knowne and famous by Warre: going Armed and cloathed in the skinnes of Tygres, of Lyons, and of other wilde Beastes, which serued as a noate of their Armorie.

Knights of Lyons and Tygres.

The meaneste Order of all, was of them which were called Graye Knights, who had their Hayre cut round aboue their Eares, as it were with a dish, as was a great obseruation (in elder times) among Kings and Princes. These men were properly Esquiers, Armed very lightly, only to the Girdling; whereas the other were Armed from head to foote.

Graye Knights

All which Orders of Knights had this aduantage and prieledge, to weare both Gold and Siluer in their apparell and garments; to bee serued at their tables in vessells of Gold and Siluer enamelled; and to weare Stockings of Honour, as namely Red Buskins, thickly powdred with flowers of Gold and Siluer. For the common people, they had no vse at all of Stockings, neither had any other seruice, but in Vessells of Earth, neither might garment themselues, but with Nequen, that is to say Bourras, course Hempen and Hurden cloth.

Prieledges belonging to these Knights.

Eche Order of these Knights, had their being and lodging at the Pallace Royall, the Portall or principall entrance whereof, was figured with the Armes and Enseignes of the Order.

The Knights Lodgings.

The First, was called The Hostell of Princes.
The Second, was of Eagles.
The Third, of Lyons and Tygres: And
The last, Of Graye Knights.

In the First Booke of these Noble Recherches, wee haue obserued the Armes, which were caried by the Ingas of the West-Indiaes.

The End of the Ninth Booke.

The Tenth Booke is deuided into seuerall Tracts.

1. Of the Nine VVorthies of the VVorld.
2. Of Duelloes and Single Combats at the Sharpe, and to the vtmost extremitie of Life.
3. Of Iousts, Tourneyes and Tournaments.
4. Of Military Paynes and punishments.
5. Of Degradation of Noblemen.
6. Of Funerall Pompe for Emperours, Kings, Princes, Knights of Order, and meaner Persons.

A House for the Harbour of Man.

Mercurie (the Sophiſter, and gentle Meſſenger of the Gods, with the Golden Beard) defended a Houſe, rather then any thing elſe, which gaue harbour and couerture to a man, to exempte and ſhield him from the Ayres iniuries, and furious violences of Beaſtes. He alleadged withall, that in former times, Men liuing altogether in the open fields, had nothing but Woodes for their Houſing; Leaues of Trees for their Bed and Bolſter; and hearbs for their foode and diet.

Sylua Domus erat: Cibus, Herba: Cubilia, Frondes.

Mercurie ſaid to be the Inuenter of Building.

But he had inuented the manner of buylding and Carpenting Houſes, to erect and ioyne them together in number and quantity, which proued to be the fourſe and firſt birth of vnity among Men: whereby this vaunting Doctour promiſed himſelfe, to haue the Honour of the cauſe, and made the reckoning without his Hoaſte. But then ſtept vp.

The Allegations of Minerua concerning Man.

Minerua, the Goddeſſe of Sciences, a Virgin engendred in the Braine of Iupiter, proclaimed to be King of the Gods and Men: Shee very well liked and allowed, that Fire, Water, Husbandry, Townes and Cities were (in trueth) neceſſary, conuenient and beneficiall for men. Yet notwithſtanding, alleadged, that the Gods had ſome other aime and end, then the Temporall condition of Man, and for his body only. For, he was made to mounte, and pierce much higher; in regard, that a ſparke of the Diuinity was breathed into him, to animate, conduct and mould his ſpirit: To know what was paſt: To guide and order the preſent: And to diuine of things to come. Diuerſity of Times, the knowledge whereof was attained vnto by Learning or Letters, that is to ſay: By reading in the Breuiarie of the World, that is Concerning the Honor and Maieſty of Hiſtory.

Hiſtorie, the Science of Sciences; the Lanterne to Humaine Life; the faithfull Regiſter of Honour and Blame; the Schoole of good and euill; the Iudge, the Raſor, and the Touchſtone of Kings and Princes, yea, and of men. And, to ſpeake all in one word, the Grauing Inſtrument, that works in the Table of Immortality. This opinion was admired, and much commended in the venerable Conſiſtory of the Gods in generall: And the Precedency adiudged to the Learned Pallas.

Exercises beſt beſeeming a Noble or Gentleman.

To you then (Braue and Generous Noblemen) doth this diſcourſe preſent it ſelfe, that it may enſtruct you, to imploye the moſt part of thoſe Houres, which remaine to you, next after the ſeruice of God, wherewith you are to begin the day:) The offer of your perſons to the King, and the exerciſes of Honour, and to the Reading of Hiſtorie; is that which can only make you capable, of ſeruing and benefitting the Common-wealth. What other Houres are remayning, ſhould be imployed in the reading of Books, which tend to profit, and aime at the end of making you the wiſer. Shunne and deteſt all ſuch Books, as offend or wound the Soule, and may be molleſtuous to the minde: Such as are Amadis de Gaule, and other fabulous Romanciers. Hiſtorie appertaineth to a Noble-Man: It ought to be his principall Study, by example of Alexander the Great, who (by the reading thereof, conquered all the World. For which cauſe, Hiſtorie hath rancked him among the Valiant men of the World, whom Fabulous Romancers haue called the Nine Worthies, giuing to them this Order and Armes.

Compariſon of Alexander the Great.

Iudas Machabeus, to whom they giue diuers Armes. First D'Or, a vn Basilic de Sable, membre, & Coronne de Gueules. And then afterward D'Or, a vne Roche en Montagne de Sable, chargee d'vne Ancre d'Argent en Pal, & sur la Stangue d'icelle, ce mot Hebreu רחוח de Gueules.

Iulius Cæsar, whom they make to beare D'Or a vne Aigle esploye (that is to say, with two Testes de Sable, aux Diademes, Langues & Armes de Gueules. Quite against all trueth, because euery one knoweth, that the said Iulius Cæsar, and his Successours the Emperours of Rome: Porterent de Gueules a vne seule Aigle d'Or. Constantine the Great, hauing planted his Imperiall Throane at Bizantium (which after his name was called Constantinople, & new Rome) was the first that tooke the Eagle displayed. Therby to shew, that the Romaine Empire comprehended both the East and West: Armes still retained by the Emperours his Successours, as well in the East as West.

Constantine gaue first the displayed Eagle, and his meaning thereby.

King Arthur, who bare (by their saying) D'Azur, a Treize Coronnes d'Or. 4. 4. 4. 1. A meere Fable.

The Saxon House altered the Armes of Europe.

Godfrey of Bologne, First King of Ierusalem, Armed (according to Trueth) D'Argent a la Croix potencee d'Or, & Cantonnee de Quatre Croisettes de mesme. Heere you see what, and whom those Romancers haue made to be the Nine-Worthies, alwayes mingling fabulous Tales, among their most serious writings. For, to place Iason, Hector of Troy and Arthur of Bretaigne, among the valiant and famous men of the worlde, are meerly follies: But to make a true Historie, you must ranck them in this manner.

The true ranck of the Nine Worthies

Iosuah, Gedeon, Sampson, Dauid, Iudas Machabeus, Aleander the Great, Iulius Cæsar, Charlemaige: And Godfrey of Bologne.

And, not to stand vpon Blazons and Deuises, giuen them by fabulous Romancers, and most part of them falsely: eche of them ought to be Armed according to truth, from the foote of their owne braue actions in Armes. And because we know not what were the perticuler Armes of Iosuah, Gedeon, and Sampson, beside those Generall of the Tribes and Linages, of whence they were issued and descended, which we haue obserued in the first Booke and Chapter of these famous Antiquities: we may lawfully giue them deuises, rather then Armes proper, and (by Example) Armes proper and pertinent to the persons.

Dauid,

Dauid, the King and Prophet, Hee bare as we haue said in the First Booke and Chapter, according to the Doctrine of Rabbi Abraham, in his Historicall Cabala, D'Azur, au Lyon d'Or. Armes borne by the Kings of Iuda and Israel, his successours, in their Pennons, Standards and Banners of Warre, and likewise on their moneys, with this deuise and Legend: Vincet Leo de Tribu Iuda.

Iudas, Sonne of Mattathias, Prince of Modon, Sirnamed Macchabeus, because in all the Enseignes of Warre, he caried this deuice written in Hebrue Letters, Tu in Dyis, vel Fortibus Domine. A Sentence taken from the Fifte of Exodus, and which being written in Foure Letters, formerly noated in the Staffe of an Anker, the people read (by abreuiation) Macchabias, a Sirname which remained to the said Iudas of Modon, and to his Brethren, as is reported by Rabbi Isaack Bens-hola. These Princes of Modon carried the Armes of their Family, which were De Synople, au Maure Arme, & Frette d'Argent, and their deuise in the Sayles. Armes which were exalted vpon the Tombes and Sepulchers of Prince Mattathias; Iudas his Sonne and Brethren: as wee learne in the First Booke of the Macchabees, and the Thirteenth Chapter.

Originall of the name of Machabeus, and their Armes.

Now, concerning the Armes of Alexander the Great; we haue said elsewhere, that he bare D'Argent, au Lyon de Gueules: As in like manner we haue obserued, speaking of the true Armes of Iulius Cæsar, Charlemaigne and Godfrey of Bologne, in such fashion and manner as they seuerally ought to be.

Of Nine Worthy Ladyes: Added to these Nine Famous and Worthy Men of the World.

THe same Romanceers haue added, or coupled with these Nine worthies, Nine other as Worthy and Illustrious Women, Ladyes of High deseruing, whom the Poets tearme Women Warriours, and by the name of Amazones; of whom you may heere behold the Armes and Names, according as I find them to be by them recorded.

And infinite other. But to make their Writings more sublime in worth, and likelier to truth: they should haue graced their History with these Ladies of immortall memory, obserued in the Sacred Scriptures, as Debora, Hester, Iudith and such like, whose Heroycall deeds and manlike actions; would haue giuen a much much more luminous Subiect, and engendred a deuise of farre fayrer hope and expectation.

The Curious may heere inserte some Leaues of white Paper, and make an addition of Blazons and Deuises, of such Heroes and Princes; as serued themselues in person, at the three most memorable attempts of Asia.

The three most famous enterprises of Asia.

I. The Siedge of Troye, described by Diuine Homer, Dyctis Cretensis, Dares Phrygius, and John le Maire of Belgia, in his most renowned Romancer, concerning the Illustration of the Gaules.

II. The Conquest of the Golden Fleece by Iason and his Associates, obserued by Apollonius Rhodius, in his Argonautes, and the more then mernaylous performance of all.

III. And the Siedge of Thebes with the Hundred Gates, described at large (with all the particularities) by the Sophister Philostratus in his painted Plates; Lucian and the like Authours, telling as much trueth, as the Romancers did. But now after our Nine Worthies, let vs come to discourse of Duelloes or Combates: For now adayes, the valiancy and courage of our mad-headed Courtiers, is much sooner seene in the subiect of a common Strumpet; then any Seruice for their King.

CHAP. II.

Of Duelloes, Fights and Single Combates, performed at the Sharpe, and to the extremitie of Life.

A Combate betweene Neptune and Minerua.

AFter the building of Athens, the most famous and renowned Citty for all Sciences; there was a Challendge and Combate, betweene the God of the Sea and Waters Neptune, and the Wise Minerua; who should baptize or giue name to this newe Citty. Neptune, Armed with his Trident or Forke with three Teeth, appeared in the place appointed for Fight, disposed, and ready to Combate within the Railes or Lists, for his owne aduantage.

The appearing of Minerua in the Field

Minerua, without making any rash or indiscreete haste, shewed her selfe at the end of the Lists, Armed with a shining and polished Corselet, well nayled, not wanting any Buckle; a Helmet on her head, ouer-shadowed with rich Lambrequins and Plumes of fayre Eastrige Feathers, a Lance in her right hand, and Target in the left, made of fine Siluer, whereon was figured (not the two Citties of Peace and Warre, represented in that of Achilles, fabricke by the Armourer Vulcane) but a frightfull Head of Gorgon and Meduſa de Sable, a la Gueule ouuerte et Beante de Gueules; the Trophee of Minerua. As expressing, thereby, that Gentlemen which addict themselues to the Study and knowledge of Letters: are more capable to be Captaines, and commaunde in Armies; then such as are badly educated, who call Ignorance Nobility, and Knowledge Husbandry.

Au Poil & a la Plume.

Iupiter would not permit this Combate, rather for sauing the Honor of Neptune, God of the Fishes, the Symbole of Ignorance; then any feare he had of his deare Minerua, whom he knew to be a Generallist, and fit for any imployment, as apte for the Lance, as the Pen. Answerable to the deuise borne by skilfull Captaines: Et Marti, et Mineruæ: As prompt for the one, as ready for the other.

Iupiter compounded the contention.

To compound this difference amiably, and make knowne to men, that he affected not Duelles and Fights, howbeit, Honour would thereby haue bin proued in good earnest: he appointed, that which of these two Contendants, by smiting the Earth with their Armes, could make some such thing to issue forth thereof, as should be most necessary for Man; that party should haue the preferment, to impose a name vpon this new Citty.

The Masterpiece of Neptune.

Neptune, swelling with rage and fury, smote our common Mother with such violence, that after it had quaked an indifferent while: there bounded forth a furious Horse, snuffling and stamping, the Instrument or Symbole of Warre.

---------- Bellum, O Terra hospita, portas:
Bello armantur Equi, Bellum hæc armenta minantur.

This

This is that which Virgill saith, speaking of the birth and originall of the Horse, engendred by the Trident of Neptune.

.. .. Tuque O, cui prima furentem
Fudit Equam magno Tellus percussa Tridenti,
Neptune

The trophee and victorie of Minerua.

As for the learned Lady and Warrioresse Minerua, she, hauing softly toucht the ground with the smaller end of her Lance: immediately rose vp a verdant Oliue-Tree, laden with Leaues and Fruite, for the nourishment and health of Man, and being the Symbole of Peace, declaring, that a man learned, is capable for actions of War, and likewise to manage Peace, when neede requireth.

Oleaque inuentrix Minerua.

The Latine Poet obserueth this debate and contention, at the beginning of his Georgicks.

Athens the Citie of debate or strife.

And because Peace, the bountifull and rich gift of Heauen, is highly to be preferred before warre: Iupiter adiudged the preferrence to Minerua; who baptized with her name the Citie of debate, by naming it Athenes.

This Mythologie or Morall meaning, shall serue vs for a Preludium, and entrance into the Lists of Duelles and Combats, and will sufficiently shew, that it was the Custome of our auncient French, to vndertake the hazard of Armes and Combat, to iustifie themselues in an Accusation, fordged against their honour and good fame; and to sustaine the truth of some iust cause, whereof the proofes were doubtfull, yea, wholly hid and concealed.

His entrance for the enfolding of the matter.

The Accuser or Plaintiffe, through defect of Litterall proofes or Testimonials, auouched before the King: that his aduerse Partie was a Traitour, periured and false lyar, offering to iustifie what he said, by Armes and Combat one to one, his owne person against that of the accused, or some other for him, if (by age) he might be dispensed withall from the Combate.

The Plaintifs accusation before the King.

As a Gage for himselfe, he would throw his Gloue down vpon the ground, which the Accused, or some other for him, was to take vp: And the Field of Battaile, the day, and the Armes for the Combattants, were to be assigned by the King; for, without his permission, Duelloes or Combates durst not be vndertaken. In absence of the King, the Parliament appointed it; not finding any other meanes of remedy, whereby to agree the Parties.

The Gage cast downe and taken vp.

This manner of deliuering or casting the Gloue as a Gage, seemeth to come from the Orientals or Easterne People, who in the vendition and yeelding vp their Lands, or Paiment of Debts; did giue the Gloue to the Buyers, by forme of confignation, and taking of possession. Which the Romans did, by the tradition of a greene Sodde or Tuft of earth. And our auncient French, by deliuery of a Rushe or Feskue, Per Festucam in our Salique Law, and a thousand thousand other places

Originall of giuing the Gage.

We haue an example of deliuering the Gloue, in the Historie of Ruth, the fourth Chapter, where it is said, that the auncient Custome obserued in Israel, betweene the neerest kinred of one and the same Linage, if any one yeelded or surrendred his right to another: he did put off his Gloue, and gaue it to the purchaser. And this was a testimonie of the yeelding, and transport of buying an inheritance in Israel.

An auncient custome obserued in Israel Ruth. 4. 9.

Well know I, that the common Translation beareth a Shoe, and not a Gloue; but the Chaldean and Syriacke Paraphrase, which serues me better for interpreting some passages of the Sacred Scriptures, beareth the Gloue, and not the Shoe. Dixit Redemptor ipsi Boos, in possessionem venito, tibique possideto: Tunc tulit Boasus Thecam Dexteræ illius, & in possessionem venit.

Comparison of the Shoe and Gloue.

Widdowes were maried by the Brethren to their Husbands, being deceased without issue, to the end, of raising seede to their Brother. And the widdow might then adorne to the gate or doore of the Citie, the neerest kinsman to her dead Husband, to the intent of marrying with him. Vpon his refusall to doe it, she taketh the Shoe from off his right foote, and spetting in his face, saith; So shall it be done vnto that man, that will not raise seede to the house of his Brother, according as it is written in the fiue fiue and twentieth Chapter of Deutronomie. This was done by the widdow with the Shooe, in meere contempt.

But if it were a man, that ſummoned or cited another man before the face of Iuſtice, when the Iewes ſate at the Citie gates, or in ſome eminent place of their Townes; as an action of honeſtie, they would plucke the Gloue from off the right hand, which they deliuered as a Gage of aſſurance, for any thing giuen or granted to ſage of the hundred and eight Pſalme of Dauid: In Idumæam extendam calceamentum meum: I will lying and reduce the people of Edom vnder my power: I will take poſſeſſion, as hauing won it by true and iuſt title.

The manner of challenging and accepting the Combat among the French.

In like manner among our French, he that tooke vp the Gloue, ſignified by that action, that he accepted the Combat or Challenge: and, by the ſame kinde of ceremonie, pluckt off his Gloue from the right hand, and threw it on the ground, to be accepted and taken vp by him that had challenged him. Promiſing one to another, to preſent himſelfe in furniſhment, after the manner of Combat; on ſuch a day, and at ſuch a place, as the King, or his Parliament ſhould appoint. If the man accuſed of perfidie and treaſon, preſented himſelfe before the King, and, maintaining his innocence in the crimes oppoſed againſt him; threw downe his Gloue, as offering the Combat againſt his Accuſer, who neither preſented himſelfe in perſon, nor any one for him, to the end that he might take vp the Gage: The Accuſed was accepted, and credited vpon his owne Oathe, that he was innocent of thoſe crimes obiected againſt him. And theſe manners of behauiour was common with the French, Germains, Gothes, Lombardes, Spanyards, and other people liuing in the weſterne parts.

Of other proues beſide Combat.

All which Nations, ouer and beſide the Duello or ſingle Combat, for knowledge of the truth, in matters of vncertaine and doubtfull prooſe: had recourſe to taking an Oathe, vpon the dead bodies of holy Martyres and Confeſſours. And proofe by burning Fire, and Water fiercely boyling, or cold.

Oathe made on dead bodies of Martyres & Confeſſours.

In France, ſuch Oathes were ordinarily made by the Accuſed, on the Bodies of Saint Denys in France, of Saint Germain des Prez les Paris; and of Saint Martin at Tours. Saint Gregorie of Tours, in his fift Booke, and two and thirtie Chapter; And (after him) the Monke Aymonius reporteth in his Hiſtorie of France, that a Burgeſſe of Paris, being iealous of his wife, accuſed her, to be ſhorter heelde then ſhe ſhould be. The Parents and friends of the Husband and Wife, concluded together, that this difference ſhould be diſcided by Oathe, taken on the Body of Saint Denys, Apoſtle of the Gaules. They on the Wifes ſide, aſſuring themſelues of her honeſtie, ſware that ſhe was innocent. The Husbands kinred maintained the contrary, ſo that from words, they fell to blowes and effuſion of bloud. Hereupon, Diuine Seruice was transferred to another place, vntill the parties had done Penance, and receiued the holy Communion: when the Church was reconciled by Ragnemodus, the twentieth Biſhop of the Citie of Paris, and Succeſſor to Saint Germanes; the Wife being hanged or ſtrangled, becauſe ſhe had forfeited her faith and honor. This happened within a while after the death of our Great King Clouis.

An example happening at Paris.

Vnder the Reigne of Clothaire the Great (Father to Dagobert, firſt of the name, reſtorer of the ſame Church of Saint Denys in France) Godin, Sonne to Garnier, who was Maire of the Pallace of Bourgongne; made prooſe of his fidelitie (called in queſtion) on the Bodies of Saint Medard at Soiſſons, of Saint Germain at Paris, of Saint Aignan in the Citie of Orleance; and of Saint Martine at Tours.

Prooſe of Godin Sonne to Garnier.

Gentlemen receiuing Armes.

Taſſelon, Duke of Bauaria, and his principall men of Fiefe (called Leudes in our Salique Law, and in our Capitularies) after he had taken the Oathe of Vaſſalage and fidelitie, and laid his hand on them of King Pepin le Bref, being then at Compeigne: was ſent from thence to ſweare the ſaid Liedge Homage to King Pepin, and to his Sonnes, vpon the Bodies of Saint Denys in France, Saint Germain at Paris, and Saint Martine at Tours: So ſaith the ſame Monke Aimonius, in the fourth Booke of his Hiſtorie of France, the threeſcore and fourth Chapter.

Swearing Liedge Homage.

After the death of the ſaid Pepin le Bref, the French carried ſuch honor and reuerence to his Memorie: that they referred all differences among them (in caſes of vncertaine vncertaine and doubtfull prooſe) to Oathe made on the Roabe of the ſame Pepin. Which when King Charlemaigne vnderſtood, he prohibited and forbad the cuſtome, by his Ordonance and Pragmaticall Sanction, Regiſtred among our French Lawes, in the Fourth Booke of our Capitularies. Vt non admittantur teſtimonia Super Veſtitu-ram Domini noſtri Regis Pepini.

Proofe by burning Iron.

Long time before his Reigne, The iudgement of God (ſo ſpeake the auncient French) made it ſelfe knowne by prooſe Of hot or burning Iron, that is to ſay, A Plough Share or Coulter, brightly burning: whereon the Accuſed, or the Teſtimonies for him, walked barefooted, or held it betweene their hands. Charlemaigne at the Title De Homicidys Clericorum, by him added to the Salique Law, the fift Paragraphe, Si negauerit illum ſe occidiſſe, ad Nouem Vomeres ignitos iudicio Dei examinandus accedat.

Proofe by boiling Water.

By that of Hot Boyling Water, Per Aquam Feruentem, wherein the Accuſed or his Witneſſes were to waſh their hands.

By Colde Water, in a Pond or running Riuer, whereinto (faſt bound both hands & feete) they were to be throwne, to trie if they would ſincke to the bottome, or not, as ſometimes they made triall of Witches, and Sorcerers. And laſtly;

By the Croſſe.

By the Croſſe, whereon they were ſtrecht forth, faſt bound and mannacled; like to the Cupid of Troyes in Germanie, ſo much renowned by Auſonius, the Burdelois Poet: In Cupidine Crucifixo. This laſt prooſe was prohibited by our King Charlemaigne, in the firſt Booke of our French Lawes, the hundred and ſecond Chapter. Sanctum eſt vt Nullus deinceps quamlibet examinationem Crucis facere præſumat, ne Chriſti Paſſionem quæ ſpes ſalutis eſt, cuiuſlibet temeritate contemptui habeatur.

To whom the Iuſtice of Combat appertained.

Noblemen, and ſuch perſons as were of free condition, to whom the vſe and carrying of Armes onely belonged; had this infernall cuſtome, to diſcide their quarrels and other Actions, by Iuſtice of the Duello or ſingle Combat, and eſpecially at ſuch time, as the cauſe depended vpon ſome ſucceſſiue right. For we reade in our auncient Annaliſts, vnder the reigne of Lewes of Beyond the Seas, King of France, there was a Proceſſe or Suite attempted, to know: If the Nephew ſhould ſucceede after his Vnckle, deceaſing without Children, with his other Vnckles, the Brethren to his dead Father. If this had bin in France, and in the time of our old Cuſtome of Paris, not admitting the repreſentation in the collaterall ligne, Inter Fratres, Fratrumque filios, this caſe had bin eaſie in the clearing.

A cauſe tried in the King of Germanes Court for ſucceſſion.

But the cauſe was pleaded in the Court of the King of Germanie Lewes, who, vpon the irreſolution of his Counſell; ordained, that the deciſſion thereof ſhould be committed to the prooſe of Combat betweene two Champions. The Combat being affigned, the Nephew had the honor thereof againſt his Vnckles, or the Champion for them. And ſince that time (as the Germaines ſay) it was fully concluded: That Nephewes ſhould pertake and deuide the goods of their deceaſed Vnckles, with them that were liuing, by the repreſentation of their Father.

Abbots, Fryers, Monks & Churchmen.

Men of Main-morte, and of ſeruile condition, not hauing the prooſe of Armes, but onely by them of burning Iron, and Waters: theſe trials were perticuler to them, as we learne in our French Lawes, and vnder our Capitularies, in the fift Booke, at the third Paragraphe, De Veneficijs, where it is ſaid, that ſuch as remaine vnquiſhed, to wit; Men Free in the Duello, and the other, by their other proues; ſhall be puniſhed with Death.

A famous triall made for the King of Germany by thirtie men.

Yet notwithſtanding this, Noble perſons, yea, Kings and Queenes, diſdained not to ſubmit themſelues to the Iudgement of burning Iron, and boyling Water. Aimonius, in the fift Booke of his Hiſtorie of France, and the foure and thirtieth Chapter, reporteth, that the King of Germanie Lewes (of whom we ſpake ſo lately before) for to maintaine the truth of his owne right, ſent to King Charles the Baulde, King of France and Emperour, his Vnckle: his Ambaſſadours, and with them thirtie men. Tenne of them made prooſe by burning Iron or Plow-ſhares: tenne more of them by hot boyling Water; and the other tenne by being caſt into the colde water, and all of them departed thence, without any harme or offending.

The Germaines doe report, that Chunegonda, daughter to Sigefroy, Count Palatine of the Rhine, made prooſe of her Virginitie (in contempt of a bolde accuſation made againſt against her) in the presence of the Emperor of Germanie, Henry the second, her Husband; passing bare-foote ouer twentie Coulters, extraordinarily burning hot.

At the end of our Capitularies, are to be seene the proceedings and prayers, which are vsed at the consecration of those Irons, and the hot and cold waters, as also what perticular Masses were said to that effect. And oftentimes hath euidently beene seene, that lewd persons, haue felt the iustice due to their wickednesse, by the exabats of one man against another; such shames as should haue bin inflicted by Iustice, the Church, and Ordenances of our Kings, haue bin abrogated and repealed by those proues.

Lewdnesse punished by being ouerbold.

Ladies accused, to haue made forfeit of their honor, or else accusing some Knight, to haue immodestly attempted her good fame: might present their Champion of Battaile, either to sustaine their innocencie, or to proue that their accusations were true.

Erioldus King of the Lombards, had espoused Gondeberga, a French Princesse, endued with singular beauty of body, and admirable wisedome. At his seruice attended a Lombard Gentleman, who was named Adalulphus, a man of good meanes, and comely feature of body, much respected by the Queene, for his seemely parts and faithfull seruice. This glorious Sot, swolne big with the winde, that blowes no where ordenarily but in Court; grew so audacious and ouer-saucie, that he offered her Loue-seruice, and craued amourous acceptance: Gondeberga, scorning such presumption; spet in his face, and expelled him out of her Court, according as he iustly deserued. This bold Companion, fearing least these newes should come to the King by the Queene: to preuent her, he went to the Lombard King, and told him, that not many dayes since, Taso, who was Gouernour of Tuscanie, had secret communication with the Queene; to imprison him, possesse himselfe of the Kingdome, and to marrie her afterward.

The Historie of Gondeberga Queene of Lombardie.

The King beleeuing this accusation ouer-lightly, caused the Queene, (suddenly) to be shut vp close prisoner, and in a very strong Castle of Italie, which was then called Amello. Clothaire, last of the name, King of France, to whom the Queene was a neere kinswoman, as being descended from the Kings of Austrasia, of the House of France: Sent his Ambassadours to the King of Lombardie, to tell him plainely, that he had (too rashly) imprisoned the Queene his wife (being a Princesse of the Bloud Royall of France) without causing her to be conuinced of the crime, wherewith she was accused.

A great error oftentimes in Princes.

Vpon answer from the King of Lambardie, that she had deserued that punishment, and farre greater; Lancelot, one of the Ambassadours for France, summoned the Lombard King, to grant power to some one of the Seruants, belonging to the imprisoned Queene, to appeale in the Duello or single Combat, Adalulphus that was her Accuser. Which the King allowing to be but iust and reasonable; Aribert, Cousine to the imprisoned Queene, offered his Gloue as a Gage of Battaile, to maintaine; That the Queene was falsely and wickedly accused by Adalulphus. Who being strictly constrained to take vp the Gage: Erioldus the Lombard King assigned the day, and the Field for Battaile. Wherein he was vanquished, and hanged by the necke, and the vertuous Queene deliuered, after three yeares of wrong imprisonment. This Historie is reported by the Monke Aimonius, in the fourth Booke and tenth Chapter, of his Historie of France.

The French Ambassadors aduise to the Lombard King

The Annals of Aniou, written by Maister John Bourdigne, doe recount vnder the Reigne of our King Lewes the Stammerer, who was Emperour, that a Countesse of Gastinois, wife to Ingelger, and Godmother to Engelger, Count of Aniou; was accused by the kinred of her Husband (found dead in the Bed by her) that she had caused his death, and made forfeit of her honor, whereby (consequently) she was capable of no pleading, but ought to be punished with death.

The Historie of the Countesse of Gastinois.

Gontran, the very neerest kinsman to the partie deceased, was the Accuser: to whom, and to the Countesse of Gastinois accused, The King assigned a day of Pleading by the Sword, and at Chasteau-Landon.

Pleading by the Sword.

At the day appointed, the Parties appeared cloathed in mourning. The Accuser persisting persisting in his accusation, maintained it still, and offred his Gage of Battaile, against such a Champion as the Countesse should produce. But she (on the contrary) offred to purge her selfe, and to iustifie her innocencie by Oathe, so farre as any woman could doe.

The King hauing consulted with his Counsel, found the offence to be so great and grieuous, in regard of the Husbands so strange death; that the Countesse must needes furnish her cause with a Champion. But the truth appearing so vncertaine, and the case very much mistrusted; it seemed vtterly impossible for her (among so great a number of friends and seruants, as she thought she had) to finde one for her Champion. So that being thus left forlorne, forsaken, and brought euen to the doore of despaire; shee stood vpon the point, of loosing honor, goods and life altogether. When suddenly Ingelger, Count of Aniou, her God-Sonne, being aged onely sixteene years, appeared before the King, and offred to Combat with Gontran, the most renowned Knight of his time, to whom he threw his Gage of Battaile. It was accepted, and the Combat performed before the King and his Court, at the said Chasteau-Landon. Gontran had his head smitten off by his enemy, the Countesse of Gastinois deliuered from death: And she gaue to the Count Ingelger her God-Sonne, the Seigneurie belonging to the Castell of Landon, with the Fiefes and moueables thereon depending.

Nothing sooner friends more then miserie, and then they strue to be least seene.

Froissard, in the second Chapter of his third Volume, describeth a Iouste at the Sharpe, or vtmost extremity, that is to say, a Duello or Combat, performed at Paris, in La Culture Saincte Catherine: betweene John de Carouge, Knight, Lord of Argentel on the Frontiers of Perche; and Iacques le Gris, Knight also, and both of them of the Court of Peter, Count of Alanson. At returne from a Voyage beyond the Seas, done by the Lord of Carouge; his wife aduertised him, that during the time of his absence: she had bin abused (that is to say, forced) by this Iacques le Gris; who denied the fact, and neuer would confesse it, no, not to the death. The deadly Field was ordained by decree of the Court, and the Husband was the Champion for his Wife, against Iacques le Gris.

The Champions comming into the Field of death, were armed at all points, and each man seated in his Chaire. The Count of Saint Paul gouerned the Lord of Carouge: but Iacques le Gris was gouerned by people belonging to the Count of Alanson. They performed their Armes (according to appointment) in presence of King Charles the sixt, and all the Princes of the Bloud, and great Lords as well of France, as of the neighbouring Marches, to see this Combat at the Sharpe, which was euery where bruited abroad, and the victory whereof fell to the Lord of Carouge. And here you may behold the perticularities of the Combat, as they stand Registred in the Court Record; as being essentiall, and fitting to this discourse of ours.

The Champions comming in the Field.

The performance of the Combat.

Obseruations set downe in the Court Registers, concerning the Combat.

Quand le Cheualier de Carouge deut entrer au Champ de Bataille mortelle, il vint à sa femme qui la estoit en vn Chariot couuert de Noir, & luy dict ainsi: Dame, par vostre information, & sur vostre querelle, ie vois aduanturer ma Vie, & combatre Iacques le Gris, vous sçauez si ma cause est iuste, & loyale. Monseigneur, dict la Dame, il est ainsi, & vous combatez tout seurement, car la cause est bonne. A ces mots le Cheualier baiza la Dame, & la prit par la main, & puis se seigna, & entra au Champ.

La Dame demeura dedans le Char couuert de Noir en grandes Oraisons enuers Dieu, & la Vierge Marie, en priant tres-humblement qu'à ce iour par leur grace, & intercession elle peust auoir victoire selon le droict qu'elle auoit. Et vous dy qu'elle estoit en grande tristesse, & n'estoit pas asseuree de sa Vie: car si la chose tournoit à desconfiture sur son Mary, il estoit sentencié, que sans remede on l'eust arse, & son Mary pendu. Et en suite de quel ques lignes.

Messire Iean de Carouge combatit si vaillamment qu'il enuoya son Aduersaire à Terre, & luy bouta l'Espee dedans le corps, dont il l'occit au Champ, & puis demanda s'il auoit bien bien faict son deuoir ? On luy respondit qu'Ouy. Si fut Iacques le Gris deliure au Bourreau de Paris, qui le traina à Montfaucon, & la fut pendu. Messire Iean de Carouge remercia le Roy, & les Seigneurs (de ce qu'il luy auoit faict deliurer comptant Mille Francs, & l'auoit retenu de sa Chambre a deux Cents Liures de Pension par An durant sa vie) & se mit à genoux, puis il vint à sa Femme, & la baisa, & puis ils allerent à l'Eglise Nostre Dame faire leur Offrande, & puis retournerent en leur Hostel.

The English.

When the Knight de Carouge should enter into the Field of deadly Battaile, he went to his Wife, who was there in a Chariot couered with Blacke, and spake vnto her thus. Lady, by your information, and vpon your quarrell, I am come to aduenture my Life, and to fight with Iacques le Gris: You know if my cause is iust and loyall. My Lord, said the Lady, it is so, and you shall Combat most assuredly, for the cause is good. Vpon these words, the Knight kissed his Lady, and tooke her by the hand, and afterward signed himselfe, and entred into the Field.

The Lady remained in the Chariot couered with Blacke, vsing deuout Prayers to God and the Virgin Mary, beseeching them most humbly, that that day, and vpon her intercession, she might (by their grace) haue the victorie, according to the right she had. And I tell you, that she was in great heauinesse, & had no assurance of her Life: for if the case turned to the discomfiture of her Husband, sentence was past, that without any remedy; she should be burned, and her Husband hanged. And within a few lines after following;

Sir Iohn de Carouge Combatted so valiantly, that he laid his Aduersarie vpon the ground, and thrust his Sword into his body, whereby he slew him in the Field; And then he demanded, whether he had performed his duetie, or no? Answere was made, that he had done it. So was Iacques le Gris deliuered to the Hangman of Paris, who dragged him to Montfaucon, and there he was hanged. Sir Iohn de Carouge humbly thanked the King, and the Lords (because his Maiestie had commanded to be giuen him in ready money, a thousand Francks, and accepted him to be of his Chamber, with two Hundred Pounds of yearely Pension, during his life) for which hee fell on his knees before him. Afterward, comming to his Wife, he kissed her, and then went to the Church of our Lady, to present their Offering, and then returned home to their House.

The relation of this Combat by another Author.

The Lord Iuuenall des Vrsins, in the Historie of Charles the sixt, setteth downe this Duello or Combat at the Sharpe, auouching it to be fought in the yeare One thousand three hundred fourescore and sixe. And in describing the Historie, he saith, that Iacques le Gris fell, and then Carouge mounting vpon him with his Sword drawn; requested him now to tell the truth. And hee returned him this answere. That before God, and vpon perill of the damnation of his soule, hee had neuer committed the act wherewith he was charged. And yet for all that, Carouge, who verily beleeued his Wife; thrust his Sword through his body, and so he dyed: which was much to be pitied.

The words of the Lord des Vrsins.

For afterward, it was certainely knowne, that he had neuer committed the offence. But that another had done it, who dying of a grieuous disease in his bed: in the very agonie of death, confessed before diuers people, that he was the man that did it.

Behold the miserable condition of Duelloes and Combats, where the danger falleth vpon the innocent, as here is plainely proued to you. And therefore this manner of triall hath bin worthily prohibited, because on which side soeuer this infernall chance falleth: it is alwayes to losse of the Body, and oftentimes of the Soule too, of one or other of the parties. For by the Law of Combats, if the Champion prouided by the partie accused, fall in the Combat: he is to be punished with death, and with him his partaker. So the same lot was afforded to the Accuser, and to his Combatant, if he happened to be surmounted. As Froissard obserueth in the Historie formerly reported.

The Law of Duelloes and Combats.

.. .. Nec enim lex æquior vlla est
Quam necis Artifices arte perire sua.

And yet neuertheless, it was a firme beliefe, liuely imprinted in the soules of the auncient French: That Duello or Combat, being permitted by the Prince, was and is the Iudgement of God. We haue a Tract very remarkeable to this purpose, in the Historie of France, written by Saint Gregory of Tours, in his seauenth Booke and foureteenth Chapter.

A Historie alleadged to the same effect

After the massacre committed on King Chilpericke, the Ambassadours sent from King Childebert of Austrasia, came on behalfe of the King their Maister, to moue and entreate the King of Bourgongne and Orleans Gonthran, to deliuer them the Queene Fredegonde, suspected of this murder, as also the miserable and disastrous death, of most part of the Princes of the Bloud, to the end that Iustice might be executed. In number of the Ambassadours sent from King Childebert, were Gilles a Bishoppe, Gonthran Boson, Sigisalde and other faithfull Councellours to King Childebert.

King Gonthran had a secret malicious spleene against Gonthran Boson, whom he accused, to haue fauoured the part of the pretended King Gombaud (surprised and dispatched at Saint Bertrand de Commenge) whereunto Boson made him this answere.

Tu Dominus, & Rex in Regali solio residens, & nullus ad ea quæ loqueris, audens est respondere. Insontem enim me de hac causa profiteor. At si est aliquis similis mihi, qui hoc crimen impingat occulte, veniat nunc palam, & loquatur. Tu O Rex pyssime ponnes hoc in Dei iudicio, vt ille discernat, cum nos in vnius campi planitie viderit dimicare.

Thou (O my Lord and King) sittest on thy Royall Throane, and no man dare be so bold, as to make answere to those things whereof thou speakest. I protest, that I am innocent in this matter. But if there be any, that doth secretly lay this Accusation against me: Let him come forth now in publique, and speake it. Thou (O most Religious King) committest this matter to the Iudgement of God, that he may determine it, when he shall behold vs fighting in the open plaine Field. Duelloes therefore were not permitted, but by Kings.

Combat for windfals in Forrests.

The same Author, in the tenth Booke and tenth Chapter, obserueth the Combat, performed by the command of King Gonthran, for the winde-fals of Wood, and of a wilde Bull, by him found in the Forrests of Vange; as we said in our Treatise Of the Offices of the Crowne of France. It is the first Duello that I haue read of, performed vnder our Kings of the first Ligne, but other are to be found in Aimonius.

Combats vnder the second Ligne.

Vnder them of the second Ligne, are to be found few enow. Our King and Emperour Charlemaigne, hauing reduced vnder his obedience the Cities of Barcellona, Cathalogna, Cordagnia and Roussillon from the Moores of Affrica, who had possessed themselues of diuers Pouinces in Spaine: gaue their gouernment in title of a Counte, to one of his loyall followers, named Bera (and not Bernard) who in time of the Sonne to Charlemaigne, Lewes the Debonnaire our King and Emperour, was accused before him, to haue intelligence with the Affricanes of Spaine, and seeking to betray their Soueraigne Prince.

A Combat before King Lewes the Debonnaire.

Vpon this denuntiation, Bera, to purge himselfe, went into Germanie before the Debonnaire, at his place of Aix la Chapelle, where the King then held his Parliament. The Accusers threw downe The Gage of Battaile. Bera tooke it vp, and cast downe his owne, with the Lye in their throate, and that he was neither Traitour, nor perfidious. The Combat was fought on Horseback, and Bera being vanquished, was forced to confesse his fault. His Shield with the heeles vpward, was broken into small morsels and pieces: but life was giuen him by the Debonnaire, and he confined to Rouen, there to spend the remnant of his dayes. Our Annales of times speaketh thus.

Mense Ianuario, DCCCXX. Aquisgrani conuentus est habitus, in quo Bera Comes Barcinonæ, qui iam-diu, fraudis, & infidelitatis à vicinis suis Comitibus infimulabatur, cum accusatore suo equestri pugna confligere conatus, vincitur. Cumque vt reus Maiestatis, sententia damnaretur, Armis effractis parsum est ei, misericordiâ Imperatoris, & Rotomagum exilio proscriptus est.

Aquisgrane in Germanie.

In the Moneth of Ianuarie, Anno DCCCXX. A Sessions was held at Aquisgranum, wherein Bera, Count of Barcellona, who had long time bin accused by the neighbouring Counts of falsehood and disloyaltie. He attempting to answere his Accuser in a Combat on Horseback; was ouercome and vanquished. And hauing receiued sentence of condemnation, as guiltie of Treason; was pardoned, his Armes of honor were broken, according to Order. And

(by the mercie of the Emperour) he was proscribed, and sent in exile to Rouen.

Bernard had the goods and gouernments of the vanquished.

The goods and Gouernments of Bera, were giuen to Bernard, issued of the Bloud Royall, God-sonne and neere kinsman to the Debonnaire; as we are informed by Theganus, Archbishop of Treuers, in the Historie of his time. And in this quality of a Prince, this King the Debonnaire made him Great Chamberer or Chamberlaine, of France (anciently these were two Soueraign Offices of the Kings House; but that of Great Chamberer hath bin suppressed, as we haue showne in our Treatise of the Crowne Officers.) This Office requiring residency in the Court; enuious enemies to Bernard (Authors of a bloudy League, against the Debonnaire & his State) accused the Count of Barcellona Bernard, to haue ouerfamiliar priuacie with the Empresse Iudith, wife to the Debonnaire.

A challenge of Combat without acceptance

He holding his Parliament at Nimegen, on the Riuer of Vahall; Bernard there presented himselfe, and maintained that he was falsely accused, threw downe his Glous as Gage of Battaile: which no one (in the troupe of his Accusers) expressed any will or forwardnesse to take vp. So is it obserued by the same Theganus, to checke those Spanish Authors, who haue not forgot to set downe this calumnie in writing, against the honor and modestie of Queene Iudith.

Ludouicus in palatio Theodonis (saith Theganus) erat, cum Filijs suis Lotario, & Ludouico; & Ibi supradictus Bernardus purificauit se, de obiecto stupro, postquam Nullus inuentus est, qui ausus fuisset cum armis iam dictam rem ei imponere.

Lodowicke was in the Pallace of Theodon, with his Sonnes Lotharius and Ludouicus: And there the aboue named Bernard, acquitted himselfe of the action obiected maliciously against him. After that there could be none found, that durst (by way of Armes) auouch the said matter laid to his charge.

And yet notwithstanding, Duelloes and Combats at extremitie (which all our Romancers called The Field of Death) were quailed and abolished in France, by the Testamentarie Ordenance of the Father to the Debonnaire, our King Charlemaigne, in the yeare of Grace Eight hundred and sixe.

Si Causa, vel intentio controuersiæ talis inter Partes propter terminos, & confinia Regnorum orta fuerit, quæ Hominum testimonio declarari, vel definiri non possit; tunc voluntas vt ad declarationem eius rei dubiæ, iudicio Crucis Dei voluntas, & rerum Veritas inquiratur. Nec vnquam pro tali causa, cuiuslibet generis pugna, vel campus, ad examinationem iudicetur.

If an occasion or intention of such a controuersie shall arise betweene parties, concerning the limits and bounds of Kingdomes, which cannot be made manifest, or defined by the testimonie of men: Then we will, that for the declaration of this doubtfull matter; the will of God, and the truth of things be enquired after, by the doome or sentence of the Crosse. Nor at any time (for such like causes) may Combat or fight of any kinde, or the Field be granted, for searching out of the same.

He rather affected, to leaue the triall to the Crosse, that is to say, To Racking and Tortures; then to diside such cases by Duello, or Combat at the Sharpe. Which the same Emperour would haue to be vtterly suppressed, and admitted the triall of the Crosse, which he had before abolished, as already hath bin said.

Extremitie of euils grow with the times

Vnder the third Ligne of our Kings (which God hath conserued vnto vs, and blessed in infinite Ages, euen to this present, and it (alone) hath endured longer then both the other together) we haue yet noated the aduantage or excesse, of this rage and infernall furie in reuenge and Combat, to take his full course in France.

This rauenous Wolfe, fleshed with the bloud of our French Nobilitie, made intrusion long time after the changing and succession of the said third Ligne to the Crowne of France: had not the happy fortune of Hugh Capet; the wisedome of Robert his Sonne and Companion; the iudgement of King Henry the first; and the peacefull Reigne of Phillip, first of the name, preuented it by better order. After long Warres, these Wolues entred boldly into Cities and Townes, to make themselues drunke with humaine bloud, as during all the time of the Warre. The very same courses got footing in France, at declyning of the stearne tempests, in the vnfortunate Reigne of Charlemaines Sonnes: when all went to confusion, prey and bootie, euery one liuing as themselues listed, without either feare of God, King or Iustice, and especially in those Prouinces, which were farre off from the Kings abiding.

Great men serued as shadowes, couertures and retreates, for all the wicked rascalitie of the Kingdome, by whose meanes, Counts and Gouernours of Prouinces (cut off from the Kings) were at defiance one with another; to the end, that they might haue some subiect, to reuenge their quarrels by Combat, or in Troupes, pilling and robbing the plaine Countries, and taking Prisoners, euen as in time of open Warres. For, after the word of Challenge or defiance was sent out (which lasted commonly foureteene dayes:) they would runne violently one vpon another, cutting mens throates, as if they had bin bruite beasts, or else surprizing them vpon paiment of ransomes.

Great mens countenance is none of the encouragements.

The Gallicane Church sought meanes to hinder the Duelloes, Encounters, courses and Robberies of the Nobilitie, done with such extremitie one against another. The Churches arme being not strong enough, to hinder the progression of these disorders: recourse was made to God, by Fasting and Prayer; Spirituall Armes, which worke more effectually, then all the power of earthly Princes can doe.

Spirituall armes exceed those of Princes.

The Bishops of France being assembled together, made these Decrees.

Vt Arma quisque non ferret: Directa non repeteret: Sui sanguinis, vel cuiuslibet Proximi minimè vltor existens. Percussoribus cogeretur indulgere. Ieiunium in Pane, & Aquæ omni Sexta Feria seruarent. In Sabbatho à Carne, & Liquamine abstinerent; soloque hoc contenti Ieiunio, in omnium peccatorum remissionem, nullam sibi ferrent aliam subeiendam pœnitentiam, si prædicta seruare sacramento firmarent. Quod qui nollet, Christianitate priuaretur; & exeuntem de seculo Nullus visitaret, nec Sepulturæ traderet.

Not any one should beare Armes, or should require to haue them againe, being taken from him, as being (by no meanes) a reuenger either of his owne bloud, or the bloud of any of his kinred. But should euery Friday keepe his Fast with Bread and Water; He should abstaine from Flesh and fat meates vpon the Sabaoth day. And being so satisfied with this Fasting onely, should learne to know; that no other kinde of penance shall be imposed vpon him or them, for the remission of all their sinnes; if they haue bound themselues by the Sacrament, to obserue and keepe all the premises. Which things whosoeuer shall refuse to doe; they are to be depriued of Christianity, and at his departing out of this world, he is not to be visited by any one, nor allowed to haue Christian buriall giuen him.

That euery man for his owne part, should desist from bearing Armes, and surceasse from robbing, spoyling or destroying any thing. Nor should pursue reuenge, to cause any bloud spilt, either for friend or Kinsman: but contrariwise, to pardon his enemies. That they should Fast euery Friday with Bread and Water, and on the Saturdayes should abstaine from feeding on flesh, or on any thing wherein was fatnesse. That performing thus abstinence, without any other penitence; all the sinnes of them were pardoned, that tooke Oathe, to keepe and obserue those things which were ordained by the Church. But whosoeuer dared to doe otherwise, should remaine excommunicated, cut off as a rotten member from the Communion and Prayers of the Church, and chancing to dye so, should be depriued of buriall.

This is thus recorded by Sigebert in his Chronicle, vnder the yeare of Grace One thousand thirtie and two.

When fraile hope is weakest, Gods arme is strongest.

This was one inducement, of bringing the poore people to peace, and that the Great men among them, made a cessation from Armes: a cessation, which happened euen as it were by miracle, quite contrarie to all humaine hope. And therefore it was honored with the name of Treuga Dei, The Truce of God, confirmed in the yeare of Grace One thousand fortie and one, by an abstaining from Warre, betweene the Kings, Princes and Great Lords, Noblemen and Yeomen: who pardoning all receiued wrongs, with free and chearefull hearts, embraced one another, eate, dranke and conuersed together in securitie; which neuertheless was of no long continuance.

Because, as the same Sigebert, and our great Chronicle informeth vs, that the two Counts, named Raymonds of Toloſſa and of Saint Gilles, and the King of Arragon, warred stearnely each against other, without any apparance or likelihood of agreement. But it is said, that our Lord appeared to a poore simple man, named Durand, a Carpenter by his trade (which in Languedocke they call Chapuis) dwelling in the Citie of Puy in Auuergne. To him he gaue a Letter sealed, and in it was imprinted the figure of the Sacred Virgin, seated in a Chaire, holding her Sonne vpon her knee, And as a Legend about the same Seale, was engrauen these words: Agnus Dei, qui tollis peccata Mundi, dona nobis pacem.

An apparition to be beleeued as men are thereto affected.

When the newes of this apparition was published abroad; the Counts of Tolosa and of Saint Gilles, with all the people of the neighbouring Countries, went in order of Procession together and Pilgrimage, to Nostre Lame du Puy, vpon the day of Ascension, according to the auncient custome. All the people being assembled, the Bishop of the Citie of Puy tooke the same William Durand, who was naked, and a poore Carpenter (these are the words of the great Chronicle) and placed him in the midst of all the Congregation, to tell the command giuen him by our Lord.

A relation out of the great Chronicle of France.

When he perceiued, that they were all bent with serious attention to heare him: he began to deliuer his Message, and boldly commanded them from our Lord, that they should make peace among themselues. Then all began to cry, sigh, shed teares, and to praise the pittie and compassion of our Lord. And the two Princes, who before had so sharpely contended in Warre, as no peace could be listned to: did instantly sweare it on the Text of the Euangelists, with chearefull hearts, and conformable wils, promising to our Lord; that they would euer after liue in Loue and Concord one with another. And in signe of a testimonie, of this reconciliation made by them; they caused to be imprinted in Tinne, the Seale belonging to the Scedule, and the whole Image of our Lady, which they caried thence with them, fastened vpon their white Hoods or Chapperons, being shaped after the manner of Scapularies, worne by Religious men in Abbeyes.

A louing reconciliation betweene the two displeased Princes.

And yet a much greater wonder happened, for such as wore those Signes or significations, were thereby so safly secured and warranted, that if it happened by accident, that one man had slaine another, and should meete with him that kild the Brother of him dead, and well knew him to be the deathsman of his Brother; all malice was by him forgotten and forgiuen, he would kindely respect him, enfold him in his armes, yea, kisse him, in signe of Peace and Loue with sighes & teares, take him home to his House, seating meate and drinke before him, and supplying all his other necessities. And this Peace was made in Puy by Durand the honest simple man, who liued long after: and this is recorded in our Chronicles.

A wonder somewhat difficult to be credited.

And so, for some space of time these Duelloes and Combats at the Sharpe ceased. But the Diuell raised them vp againe in fresh forme and fashion, for his owne sporting, vnder the Reignes of Phillip Augustus, his Sonne Lewes the eight, and the good King Saint Lewes. It was a lamentable thing to behold, that Bishops of France would themselues permit Duelloes, and take (to their owne benefit) the fines and confiscations. In the Registers of our Court of Parliament, is inserted the agreement made, betweene Richard King of England, in name, and as Count of Anion and Bertholmew, then Archbishop of Tours, and done by consent of our King Phillip Augustus, their Soueraigne Lord. Among other Articles is namely couenanted that for the Field of Battaile.

Duelloes and Combats permitted by Bishops, for their owne benefit.

Duella tam de Marchaio, quàm de Cainone (de Marchais, & de Chinon) sunt Archiepiscopi, si fuerint inter Homines suos; & solent fieri in Espaulo apud Cainonem, & Praesentia, & Campus sunt Archiepiscopi, & poterit eos ducere Archiepiscopus quando voluerit. Et si Duellum fuerit inter Hominem Comitis, & Hominem Archiepiscopi, tale Duellum fiet apud Cainonem, nec Archiepiscopus, nec Comes tale Duellum extra Castellariam Cainonis faciet fieri. Vterque autem de proprijs Hominibus Duellum faciet fieri vbi voluerit. Verum si Homo Archiepiscopi conquestus fuerit de Homine Comitis, & Duellum adiudicatum fuerit, Duellum erit Comitis: Si vero Homo Comitis conquestus fuerit de Homine Archiepiscopi, & Duellum fuerit adiudicatum, Duellum similiter erit Archiepiscopi.

Duelloes and Combats, as well concerning the Marchais, as the Chinon, belong to the Archbishops. If they shall happen betweene their men, and are wont to be performed in the Espaulo at the Chinon: both the Presence and the Fields are the Archbishops, and the Archbishop may want and giue them when he will. But if the Combat shall happen betweene tweene a Counts man, and an Archbishops man: then such a Duello must be done at the Chinon. Nor shall the Archbishop or the Count cause such a Combat to be done, without the Castell of the Chinon: But either of them, concerning their owne seuerall men, shall cause the Combat to be performed where they please. But if the Archbishops man shall be Plaintiffe against the Counts man, and the Combat be granted; then the Combat is to be the Counts. And if the Counts man be Plaintiffe against the Archbishops man, and the Combat adiudged; the Combat in like manner shall be the Archbishops.

At the Prouinciall Councill of Normandie, held at L'Isle-banne (by permission of the said King Phillip Augustus) set downe likewise in the Registers of the Parliament Court; is to be read an Article, wherein is said; That Priests may not fight in Combats, without the permission of their Bishops. You see how the Diuell sowed his seedes among some Priests, of medling in the furious exercise of Armes.

Priests allowed to fight in Duelloes and Combats.

Duelloes and Combats had their course likewise, vnder the most happy Reigne of the good King Saint Lewes, and especially there was one assigned before him. Mathew Paris reporteth in his Historie of England, that in the yeare One thousand two hundred fortie and three, the Count de la March, Hugh of Luzignan, called Le Brun (whose Armes and Genealogie we haue obserued in the precedent Booke) was accused before the King Saint Lewes, and his Brother the Count of Poictou, Monsieur Alphonsus of France) of perfidious dealing, treason, and many other enormous crimes, by a French Knight. Whereupon the said Count was arrested prisoner, and committed to safe custodie for further proofe.

A Historie out of Mathew Paris.

Now, although the Count denied it strongly and constantly; yet notwithstanding, the Knight (according to the auncient custome of the French) threw downe his Gloue as a Gage of Battaile. Licet Comes Marchiæ constanter inficiaretur, statim Miles supradictus, More Francorum Chirotecam ei porrexit, se offerens, and offering to maintaine, that what he had said, was true, by the Combat of his body against the Knights, before the Court, desiring to the same end, that the day might be assigned, and the Field of Battaile, according to the auncient Lawes of the French, at all times approued. The Count tooke vp the Gage, and promised to defend his innocencie against the Appellant.

The Knight threw downe his Gloue and the Count tooke it vp

The Sonne to the Count de la March, vndertooke the action for his Father, humbly entreating the King, that he might be admitted the Combat for his Father, albeit vnequall in yeares to the Appealant. Which was hindered by the Count of Poictiers, who said, that the Count onely was to fight the Combat. Which being so agreed on, and the day of Battaile appointed; the Appealant, and the Appealed withdrew themselues for their owne preparation, and fitting all things necessary for the Combat.

Isabel, wife to the Count de la Marche (who formerly had bin wife to John without Land, King of England, and bare yet the qualitie and title of a Queene) hauing heard of these newes, and that the crimes wherewith her Husband was accused, were his ordenary trickes of behauiour, she fled immediately, to conceale her selfe in a secret Chamber, belonging to the Abbey of Font-Eurald. Where yet (neuertheless she was discouered by the French and Poicteuins, who hated her to the death for her diuers vngracious behauiours; and in regard whereof, the Poictinins called her Iezabell.

This is the same Lady, in more fitting place before remembred.

And yet notwithstanding, this Combat was delayed and hindered, at the earnest solicitings and entreaties of the Lords of the Court: yet rather in fauour of the children to the Count de la Marche, then for any respect to himselfe. And let it be admitted (saith Mathew Paris) that the foyle had falne on him; his goods being gone with him, and confiscated (according to the custome of France) the Children should haue bin in most miserable condition. So that by the meanes of friends, the choller of the King, and of the Count his Brother was appeased, the Knight Appealant satisfied and contented,, and the Count had his life saued, and his faults couered.

The Combat hindred and neuer performed.

The same King Saint Lewes, desiring neuertheless, to ouerthrow the vse of

The words of the Decree.

Duelloes and Combats, made this Ordenance, reported by Aufrerus, President of Tolossa, in the stile of the same Parliament. We prohibite (throughout our Kingdome) Battailes, in all causes whatsoeuer: And insted of Battailes, we appoint proofes to be made by Charters and Witnesses. It's set downe in the Court Regisiters of Parliament at Paris, vnder the yeare One thousand two hundred and threescore, and was kept so long as King Lewes liued.

Combats often suppressed and as often reuiued.

But vnder the Reigne of Phillip the Hardie, his Sonne, and third of the name, this infernall & hellish custome of Combats recouered new strength. So that France was (on all sides) full of bloud and slaughters of the Nobilitie, who massacred themselues, by cutting the throates of one another, as this furious monster, and the meanest thwarting word, serued sufficiently to cause a Challenge and defiance. Whereupon, he gaue command to Mesire Phillip de Beaumanoir, Knight, the very learnedst Ciuile Lawyer (of his time) in France, he hauing bin first Bayliffe in the Countie of Clermont in Beauuoisis (for Monsieur Robert of France, Count of the said Clermont, and Sonne to Saint Lewes) and afterward Bayliffe of Senlis: He gaue charge (I say) to him, to set downe in writing, the cases which concerned Duelloes and Combats. As accordingly he did, writing the Customes obserued in Beauuoisis, in threescore and ten Chapters, whereof, the threescore and first Chapter, containeth the matter of Combat. Which Treatise (saith he himselfe) was made in the yeare One thousand two hundred fourescore and three, the third yeare of the Reigne of the said King Phillip the Hardie.

Here followeth the Chapter Threescore and one, written by Mesire Phillip de Beaumanoir, Knight: Which discourseth on Appeales: And how a man ought to forme his Appeale: And in what cases he is to Appeale: And with what Armes he is to Combat.

CHAP. III.

Seuerall arguments obiected by the Author in cases of this nature.

MAny times it commeth so to passe in Laye Courts, that Suites and differences fall vnder the Gage of Battaile, wherein it is the purpose of the one, to call the other by name of a Villaine, before the Bench of Iustice. Whereforeit is very expedient, that we should make a Chapter proper and peculiar thereto, which will instruct; in what case a man may Appeale, and how he ought to forme his Appeale; as also the perils betweene such Appeales, and which Lords ought not to suffer. Moreouer, that such as will Appeale, should know, how they ought to maintaine the Plea of Gages: and the end whereto they will arriue, if they fall into such manner of Plaint.

A man may appeale in all cases of crime.

In all cases of Crime, a man may Appeale, or come to Gages, if the Accuser will make the Accusation, according to that which the Appealed must doe. For it is conuenient, that he which is appealed, should defend himselfe, or else he must remaine attainted of the fact. But yet there is another way, then by direct Appeale. For the Appeale may be so made, as he that appealeth will haue it to be. He may deliuer to the Iudge, that the offence was committed, in the view and knowledge of so many worthy persons, as it could no way be concealed. And hereupon, he ought to deale as becommeth a iust Iunge, and to make direct enquirie; in regard that the partie would not be called in question. If he doe finde the offence to be notorious and apparant, he must doe iustice according to the offence. For it were a wicked thing, if a man should kill my neerest kinsman at an open Feast, or before, or in the presence of great store of good people: if I should not enter the Combat in his cause, to haue due reuenge executed for him. Hereupon, and in such cases as are apparant, a man may step forth by way of denomination.

Informations deliuered to the Iudge.

He that will rightly appeale, if the case concerne murder, he ought to deliuer his minde minde thus to the Iudge. Sir, I am to speake to you of such a man (and then he ought to name him) who hath wickedly and by Treason murdered such a person (and then hee must name the partie dead:) who was my Kinsman, and the deede was done by his meanes, and by his act, and by his procurement. If he doe acknowledge it: I require you, that you would deale with him as with a Murtherer. If he doe denie it, I will approue it with my body against his; or by a Man that may or shall doe it for me, against him that auoideth it by Excuse. As I will apparantly shew, vpon Time and Place appointed. If he doe appeale the partie, without any other Auoucher then himselfe: then he is to Combat in his owne person, and afterward can haue no other Auoucher.

The complaint vrged in case of murder.

If the Appeale be made in any other case then Murder, as killing accidently, Manslaughter, or any of the forenamed cases, wherein appeale may be made: he must declare the case whereby he appealeth, and tell the manner of the fact: he must offer to approue it, if it be denied by the other partie, or any other man for him, as before hath bin said

Concerning Manslaughter, &c.

He that is Appealed, ought not to depart from before the Iudge, vntill he haue answered the Appeale. And if he haue any reasons, whereby he can say, that he ought not to be so appealed: he is to propound them, and to demand right vpon euery reason, as if they had bin proposed in their seuerall degrees. Affirming, that if Law doe not allow his reasons to be good, why Gages may not be granted, in such a villainous detection imposed on him: then he may denie the fact wherewith he is charged, and offer defence in his owne person, or by another man to doe it for him; as craning Essoigne, to be further testified at Time and Place. Then the Iudge is to take the Gages of the Appealer, and the Appealed, as satisfied with the reasons of the partie appealed.

Need pawne from the Iudge till the appeale be answered.

If he that Appealeth or is Appealed, would haue a friend or Aduoucher that is to Combat for him: he must shew his Essoigne and excuse, when the Battaile shall be adiudged. And there are many Essoines, whereby, or by some one of them, a man may haue an Aduoucher for him. One of these Excuses is, if he desire to haue an Aduoucher, he must shew, that he is defectiue or wanting in some of his members, by reason whereof, it is euident and apparant, that his body is so much the weaker. A second excuse is, if he exceede the Age of threescore yeares. A third, if he haue any auncient or wonted disease, which happeneth suddenly vpon him: As the ioints-Goute, the Vertigo or Dizzinesse in the Braine, the Falling-Sickenesse, and such like. The fourth is, if hee be subiect to a Feauer Quartane or Tertian, or any other disease openly knowne, and without fraude. The fift Essoine is, if a Woman appeale, or is appealed: because a Woman cannot Combate.

Liegers or excuses for an Aduoucher to fight for the partie.

The Excuses allowable in the seuerall degrees.

If a Gentleman doe Appeale a Gentleman, both the one and other being Knighted, they are to Combat on Horseback, armed with all such Weapons as they please; except a sharpe pointed Poniard, and massie-Battaile-Axe. Nor ought any man to haue more then two Swords, and his Lance; but if they be Esquires, they are to haue also two Swords and a Lance.

Concerning such Gentlemen as are Knights.

But if the Knight or Squire Appealeth Homme de Poeste (that is to say, a Yeoman or Francklin, Alienæ potestatis subditus, whom Boutillier calleth a Custommarie man, in his Somme Rurall. The Custome of Bar le Duc, Articles ten and twelue, Terre de Poie, Articles Seauenteene, and the Hundred and Eighteene, Terre in Roture, Hee is to Combate on Foote, Armed in the fashion of a Champion, and likewise as a man De Poeste or Yeaman. For in regard he abased himselfe, to appeale so base a person; his dignity is reduced (in that case) to such Armours, as hee that is appealed ought to haue by right. For it were a very cruell admittance, that if a Gentleman should appeale a Yeoman or Peazant; to suffer him therefore to haue aduauntage of fighting on Horse back.

Men subiect to the command of others

When men abuse themselues by their Appeales.

But if a Yeoman or Francklin doe appeale a Gentleman, hee is to Combate on Foote, in the manner of a Champion; but the Gentleman on Horseback, Armed with all his Armes. For in the case of defending himselfe, it is very conuenient, that he should vse his owne aduauntage.

If one Yeoman or Francklin, doe appeale an other of the same quality and condition;

Of Yeomen appealing one another.

dition; the Combate is to be performed on Foote. And such is the quality of the Champion to a Gentlewoman, if shee appeale, or be appealed, as before the Law hath deuised.

Priuiledges of the Soueraigne.

The Horse and Armour, of such as come into the Soueraignes Court to Combate, belong to the Soueraigne, whether Peace be made or not: neither can Peace bee made, or quite disclaymed eche of other, without consent of the Soueraigne. But if they fight the Combate, and the Horses be slaine, and the Armes defaced; the Soueraigne can haue no restorement. But hee that is vainquished, looseth his Body, and whatsoeuer he hath, or holdeth of any Lord, the forfeiture comming to eche Lord of whom he holdeth: his moueables, House or Castell also, returne to the Lords vnder whom they are found to belong. In this manner, whosoeuer proueth to be thus condemned, by the same action he looseth his body; his moueables and inheritances are left in such sort. And the Lords which enioy them (by reason of forfeiture) stand not bound to pay any thing; for hee so condemned, hath discharged any such debt.

The lands and goods of the vanquished.

Euery day, when Gentlemen come to the Court for Gadges, or to countermaund dayes, which may bee countermaunded; for the first dayes fine or amends Tenne Shillings must be paid; the second day Twenty; and the third day Forty Shillings. All these dayes must be assigned by Iustice, or prolonged by consent of the Party, for which euery dayes fine is to bee doubled. But the Battaile graunted to a Yeoman, or Francklin; the fine for the first dayes delay is Fiue Shillings; the second Tenne, and the third day Twenty, euermore doubling in that manner.

Fines for prolonging of dayes.

If the Battayle be in Court betweene men of the County, about Moueables and Goods, or for Inheritance of Yeomens Lands: the vanquished party looseth the Quarrell, for which the Gadges were giuen and graunted. And the Fine to the Lord, in whose Court (soeuer) the Battaile was wadged, is Threescore Shillings. But if the Battaile be of Gentlemen; He that is vanquished looseth the Quarell, and the Fine to the Lord is Threescore Poundes.

Battaile for Goods, Lands or Inheritances.

By the Custome of Clermont, in Gadges for Goodes or Lands, eche Party haue his Aduoucher or Vndertaker for him, if he doe require it; bee it that hee haue Essoine, or none at all, and the Champion vanquished hath his hand cut off. For were it not in regard of the Maime hee beareth, some by Cousenage and cheating might counterfeite for the recompence, or proclaime himselfe to bee vanquished coullorably. Wherefore his Maister is to beare the Domage and disgrace, and he shall cary away the money: in which respect the iudgement of Maiming is good.

Losse of hand to the vanquished Champion.

It is expedient for him that will Appeale an otherman, or many persons in a case of villainous crime: that he take heede how he doeth appeale them. For if he would appeale two, three or more, and throwe downe Gadges against them: hee should appeale one of them only in person, and haue there ready some such of his Friendes, as may appeale the rest eche man personally. For if hee appeale them all in his owne person, and offer defence against them all: the Law requireth it necessarily, that he alone must fight the Combate, against all them that hee hath appealed. And concerning this Case, you shall see what ensued (not long since) in the Kings Courte.

Of Appealing diuers persons with Gadges.

A Knight appealed three other Knights of a Man-slaughter, done by Treason and wickedly. And if they confessed the fact, he requested, that they might be punished as such offenders deserued. But if they denied it; he offered to approue it by himselfe, or by others, with Gadges of Battaile. Whereunto the other three made answere, that they denyed the fact, and offered to defend themselues against him, who had there instantly appealed them. But because he had said, that hee would proue it by others with him, and they were not named in the Appeale: they would not allow, that he should deliuer Gadges for any other with him; but required, that he, as he had himselfe alone appealed them all Three, and in a case of villainous wrong, which they themselues were there ready to defend and answere: so he might Combate alone in person against them all three, without any other ayde or helpe with him, and heereupon the Law resolued.

Of one knight that appealed three other Knights.

For it was adiudged, that the Knight who had made his Appeale, should Combate bate in person against them all Three: because no person may be appealed, that is not present. So the day of Battayle was assigned, and before the appointed day came, one of the three Knights died. The other two came into the Court Armed, and he likewise that had appealed them. After the Oathes were taken; in regard there wanted a Party, by meanes whereof they might not goe together: Peace and agreement was made betweene them. By this Iudgement you may perceiue, that when any man will accuse, and offer Gages for diuers persons in a Case of Crime: eche man must bee there present, and named, in regard of the perill thereon ensuing.

Sentences and Iudgements of the Court.

A Caueat for forming the Appeale.

He therefore that will wisely Appeale, and pursue it in discreete manner, if hee will Combate with no more the one man only: when hee perceiueth the Iudges prepared to giue sentence, before they deliuer a word; he is to speake to the Lord that holdeth the Court, in this manner.

Sir, I am to haue heere a Iudgement this day, and I require, that you would cause it to be pronounced by one of these men, as in case of a Iury, and that the Iudgement pronounced by him, you would demaund of the next man following him, and so of eche man by himselfe leasurably: that I may perceiue, if the Iudgement be against me, and who will appeale, that Iudgement may follow.

The forme of discreet and wisely proceeding.

And the Court ought to graunt him this request. And when Iudgement is pronounced by one of the men, and the second man following: he need attend no longer for making his Appeale, but should call to the next Man, and say in this manner to the Iustice.

Sir, I say that this Iudgement which is deliuered against me, and whereunto P. hath condescended, is false, wicked and disloyall, and for such will I make it against the said P. (who is consenting to the Iudgement, by my selfe, or by a Man that may and shall doe it for me, as hee that hath Essoyne, which I will shew in place conuenient, euen in this Court heere, or in an other, Whether Law may bring me, by reason of this Appeale.

When he shall haue so said: he that is Appealed, must make answere, saying.

The Iudgement is good and Loyall, and I offer in Law to approue with him, or an other for him, that may do it in regard of his excuse or Essoine, either in this Court heere, or else where Law shall bring me.

And then he should request, that it may be demaunded of all the men, if they be agreed vpon this Iudgement: because his defence is the fayrer, when they all haue graunted agreement thereunto.

The Iudges to demaund Gadges.

And then is the Iudge to receiue the Gages, and to take good Security of him that Appealed, for the pursuite of his Appeale. But he that followeth the Iudgement, he needeth not to giue any surety: in regard that he is the Man, who if he bring not the Iudgement to good effect; he shall loose the Iudgement, and must pay Threescore Pounds to the Lord. But for him that Appealed, if the Iudgement fall foule on his side: he is to pay Threescore Pounds Fine, and to him against whom he made the Appeale, Threescore Pounds more. And if he Appeale many men, he must make amends to euery man by himselfe, and the amends to each man is Threescore Pounds; in which respect it is very requisite, that he deliuer good Security for pursuing his Appeale.

Of 60 s. and Fines to be paide.

When Gages are giuen in a Case of Crime, or vpon a false Iudgement: the Parties may not make Peace, without the agreement of the Lord.

Thus you see what we haue learned from the Lord of Beaumanoir, wherein are many other things well worthy the obseruation, which I let passe vnder silence, to haste the sooner to my iourneyes end. Only let me tell thee Gentle Reader, that from these Gages of Battaile, hath proceeded the custome, of condemning in Fines the Parties Appellant, as well in matters Ciuile, as Criminall, Fines applicable as well to the King, as also to the Parties, according to the nature of the causes, which are mooued by Appeale in the Court of Parliament, and other subalternate Courts, for which (heeretofore) the Apellants stood bound to deliuer Caution: which were no more to be done, if the Appellants be naturall Subiects borne, and dwelling in the Kingdome.

The Custome of condemning in Fines.

Phillip le Bell (Sonne and Successour to King Phillip the Hardy) King of France and Nauarre, Prohibition of Duells and Combates.

Nauarre, by his Ordenance in the yeare One Thousand, Three Hundred and three, prohibited Duelloes and Combates to his Subiects, vpon paine of being punished, as in the case of High-Treason.

But about three yeare after, he was constrained to reuoake this Ordenance, and to permit Combates againe, to auoyde worse occasions: with certaine modifications and restraints in those Combates, which the Court permitted in foure cases only, to wit.

Foure Cases for admission of Combats.

First, when the delict propounded against any one, deserued to be punished with death: As Murder, which Mathew Paris calleth Crimen pessimum, speaking of. Iohn Without-Land, who stabde (with his owne hand) his Nephewe Arthur of Bretaigne.

Second, when an acte was perpetrated and committed so closely and cunningly; as it could not be proued by witnesses, presumptions and other meanes.

Thirdly, when the party accused was called to the Combate, as being suspected to haue committed the Crime, by apparant Indices and presumptions: And Fourthly, Quando constabat de Cadaucre, when it was euidently notorious, that the Crime had bin done and committed.

In these Cases only, the Duell and Combate was permitted by the King, and by his Court of Parliament, and not otherwise.

Now heere we will set downe this Ordenance of Combate, in the Foure cases before remembred; with such Ceremonyes as were vsed in those singular Combates, perfourmed in the yeare of Grace One thousand, three hundred and sixe.

The Ordenance consulted and agreed on, concerning Duells and Combates: And the Ceremonies, to bee obserued and Kept, in Combates at the Sharpe and vtmost extremity.

CHAP. IIII.

A Coppy of the Kings Letters Patents.

PHILLIP, By the Grace of God, King of France and of Nauarre, to all such as shall see and reade these our Letters Patents, Greeting. We make knowne, that as heeretofore, for the common benefit of our Kingdomes, wee did generally prohibite to all our Subiects, all manner of warres, and all Gadges of Battailes, whereby many malefactors put forward themselues, by strength of their bodies and false engines, to commit Homicides, Treasons and all other offences in great excesse, because when they had done them couertly and closely, they could not be conuinced by witnesses, and so the offence remained as countenanced. Now in regard that what we haue done, is not only for the common profit and good of our Kingdome, but likewise to take away from euill doers, all meanes whereby they may in such manner offend: Wee haue qualified our former prohibition in such sort, that where euident apparance may be discerned, of Homicide, Treason, or other grieuous violences and vile actions (only Theft excepted) whereby paine of death ought to follow, yet the transgressions are so closely carried, that the committing of them, and hee that therein hath offended, cannot be conuinced by Testimonies, or other sufficient meanes. It is Our will, that in such occasions of defaytance, hee, or they, that by Indice or Presumptions neerlie leaning to the trueth, concerning the deede done, vpon such facts suspected, shall bee cited and appealed to the Gage of Battaile, and in such cases, the Gage of Battayle ought to take place. And because in this kinde of Iustice onely, wee purposed our former prohibition, forbidding places and times for such Gages of Battayle: it is not now our meaning, that the same prohibition shall be repealed, nor extend to any cases formerly past, nor after the date of these Our present Letters, whereby condemnations, absolutions or enquiries should bee made: to the end that it may be iudged, absolued or condemned according to the fact, as in such cases is required, and thereto plainely appertaineth.

In Witnesse whereof, we haue caused our Great Seale to be affixed to these presents.

Giuen at Paris on Wednesday ---------- In the yeare of Grace, One thousand, three hundred and sixe, and of Our Reigne the one and twentieth.

Concerning those Foure things. necessarily appertayning to bee done, before the Gage for Battayle may be adiudged.

I. FIrst of all it is Our will and ordenation, that deed the shall be notorious and euidently certaine, that the euill acte hath happened, and the same acte to appeare plainely: whether it be, Murder, Man-slaughter, Treason, or the like offence by euident suspition. Apparance of the deed to be done.

The Second is, whether the case be such, that death ought to follow thereon, or no: The case of Theft onely excepted, wherein no Gage is to be allowed; and the cause to be signified, what payne of death ought to follow thereon. No Gage in case of Theft.

The Third is, that no man is to be otherwise punished, then by way of Gage, and it is to be signified in the case of concealed Treason, if he that hath committed the acte, cannot defend himselfe but by his body. In case of priuy Treason.

The Fourth, that the party which should be appealed, must be defamed of the fact, by apparant signes, or presumptions likely to be true, and then to signifie the cause of those signes and presumptions. Signes and Presumptions.

How the Defendant should come to present himselfe before the Iudge, Without Summons or Warning.

II. WE will that in Gage of Battaile, euery man, (that tearmeth himselfe a true man,) in honesty ought to render & present himselfe, without being cited or summoned, if he know himselfe to be accused. But otherwise, delay may be giuen him, to haue the aduise of his friends: And then if he appeare not without admonition; yet is not this right thereby impaired, or his Honour any iot impeached. Appearing without summons.

That no Gage is to bee graunted for Theft or Robbery.

III. ITem we will and ordayne, according to the text of Our said Letters Patents, that considering, in the case of Theft and Robbery, the payne and penal y of death is due iustly thereto: therefore, in Theft and Robbery, no Gage of Battile is to be allowed, according as it is ordered in the case of Theft. Of Theft and Robbery.

How the Appellant is to propound his Case before the Iudge, against the party Appealed.

IIII. ITem we will and ordaine, that when the Gage of Battayle is propounded, and what paine of death is to follow vpon the deed (the case of Theft excepted, as hath bin said) It shall suffice when the Appellant saith, that the party Appealed hath committed the acte by himselfe, or by some other, suppose that the Appellant is not named heere, nor nameth any. Sufficiency in the Appellant.

Item if the case be supposed in generall tearmes, as to say. I say this, and will say, maintaine and defend, that such a one hath trayterously slaine, or caused to be slaine such a one: We will and ordaine, that such a kind of proposition shall not be sufficient, but vnworthy any answere, according to the stile of our Court of France. For it behoueth him to declare the place where the wicked deede was done, the time and the day; also the name of the party dead, or of the Treason committed. Notwithstanding, information concerning the offence may be of such condition; as there shall be no need of telling the houre nor the day, because the case may be obscure, and very difficulte to be knowne. Insufficiencie of the Appeale in generall tearmes.

Item we will and Ordaine, that if the Iudge allow the Gage or Combate, contrary ry

No Iudge to goe against the Letters Patents.

ry to the Customes contained in our said Letters: whatsoeuer shall be done to the contrary, may lawfully be repealed.

Duties of the Appellant to perfourme.

Item we will and ordaine, that the Appellant or demaunder of Iustice, must say, or cause to be said by an Aduocate for him, his minde before vs, or some other competent Iudge for vs: against his aduerse party, he being present. And he is to be very respective, that he doe not vrge any villainous speeches, but what may tend to the quarrell only. Further, he ought to conclude with this request, that if the Appealed Party or defendant, doe confesse the matters by him propounded, to be true: that then he may be condemned, as hauing forfeited and confiscated his Body and goods to vs, and to be punished with answerable paines, as our Lawes, Customs, and the matter requireth.

The Gage to be giuen in presence of the King.

But if the Defendant or appealed Party doe denie it; then the Appellant is to say, that although he cannot proue the matter by Witnesses, or otherwise; yet neuertheless he will auouch it, by his owne body against the others, or by one to auouch it for him: In an Enclosed Field, as a Gentleman and Honest man ought to do, in our presence, as their Iudge and Soueraigne Prince. And then he is to cast downe his Gage of Battaile, and afterward to retaine his Counsell, for Armes, Horse and all other things, necessarily belonging to the Gage of Battaile. And then in this case, according to his Nobilitie, or other condition appertaining to him, the protestations following are required. Which Protestations, Appellations and Ordenances, shall be registred downe in our Court of France, and not elsewhere, to iudge if there bee a Gage, or no.

The Appellants speeches to the King.

And first of all he is to say: Most Excellent and most Christian Prince, our King and Soueraigne Lord. But if they be not of our Kingdome, in stead of Soueraigne Lord, he is to say. Most Excellent and Most-Christian Prince, our competent Iudge, for bringing a finall end to such matters as haue bin spoken and propounded bee mee: I protest and maintaine, that by lawfull Exoine of mine owne Body, I will haue a Gentleman (instead thereof) this day to auouch the case for me, in my presence if I can, or else in mine absence, who by the helpe of God, and of our Lady, shall perfourme his Loyall deuoyre, at my perill, costs and charges, as reason requireth, at all, or as many wayes as you please, and likewise with Armes and Horses, as if it were my selfe in person, and according as to such a case belongeth.

How the Defendant is to make answere in the Kings presence.

We also will and ordaine, that the defendant (if he will) may speake the contrary vpon his perill, and request, that the iniuries spoken against him by the Appellant, may be requited with such amends and punishments, as he ought to suffer in the said case. And that the said Appellant (the Honour of Our Maiesty reserued, or of his competent Iudge) hath falsely and maliciously lyed, and wicked and false he is to speake it. And that in defence of himselfe, by the helpe of God, and of our Lady, with his body, or his auoucher for him, without any Essoyne, if it be said and iudged to be a Gage of Battayle, he will be ready at the day and place, which by the King, as Soueraigne, or his competent Iudge shall bee appointed.

When he is to take vp the Gage.

And then (but not before) he is to take vp the Gage from the ground, and afterward make his protestations in manner before said; as also to request his Auoucher for him, in case of a lawfull excuse or Essoyne. Then he may demaunde, and haue his Councell, Armes, Horse and all other things necessary, answerable to the Gage for Battayle; either according to his Nobility, or whatsoeuer condition he is of else beside, as before is expressed. Which words, protestations, and defences, wee will and commaund to be likewise recorded and registred, to vnderstand, whether he may haue Gage, or no, and for Amends making each to the other, according as Iustice shall ordaine.

Oath for personall appearance at the day, houre and place appointed.

In this case, each of them shall sweare, promise and stand bound, to appeare at the day, houre and place to them assigned, as well on the day, to know if the Gage be there, as on that of Battayle, if Battayle be graunted, according to the information of the Processe; which must be seene and carefully respected, by notable wise and honest Men, Clearkes, Knights and Esquires, without bearing fauour to either party. Which Gage, or no Gage, shall be before them adiudged at the day and place, as hath hath bin said: on paine of being taken and reputed for a Recreant and Conuicted person, in whom the default shall be made. And we further will and commaund, that they shall bee arrested and stayed, if they doe not deliuer good and sufficient Pledges, and not departing without our leaue and licence.

For deliuering Pledges.

What is to bee done on the Kings behalfe, if either of the Parties doe depart without taking leaue.

V. WE will and ordaine, that if any of the Parties doe depart, without leaue and licence of our Court, after the Gages are throwne downe and taken vp: He so departing without our leaue; we will and ordaine, that he shall be taken and proclaimed, to be a Recreant and conuicted villaine.

Of the Appellant and Defendant entring into the Field.

And because it hath bin, and is the custome, that the Appellant and Defendant, entring into the Field, should come in such due forme as Law hath ordained: Wee order and determine, that they must bring with them all the Armes and Weapons, wherewith they intend to offend one another, and for their owne defence. They shall depart from their Houses and Lodgings on Horseback; their Horses couered with Foote clothes, and garnishments of their Armes; the Viser or sight of their Helmets put downe; their Shields about their necks; their Launces in their hands, their Swords and Daggers guirded to them, yea, in all such fashion and manner, as they purpose to fight the Combat, be it on Horseback, or on foote. For, if they cause their Armes and Weapons to be caried by any other, and beare the Visers of their Helmets exalted or open, without our licence, or leaue of the Iudge: it will bee such preiudice to them, as they must bee constrained to Combate in that manner as they entred into the Field, and according to the present custome.

A qualification of the former ordinance.

But because this custome appeareth to vs, to be somewhat iniurious for the Combattants: by our said Letters, and our present Chapters, wee quallifie the same, willing and ordaining; that the Combattants may depart from their Lodgings, mounted and Armed as hath bin said. The Visers of their Helmets lifted vp, and causing to bee caried before them their Shields, their Launces and other Armes, reasonable and fitt for Combating in such a case. Moreouer, to make it openly knowne, that they be true Christians, at departing from their Lodgings so leysurely as may bee: With their right hands they shall Crosse themselues, or beare a Crucifixe in them, or Litle Banners, whereon shall bee portrayed, our Lord, our Lady, the Angels, he Saints or she Saints by them made choice of, and to whom they are perticulerly deuoted. With which Crosses or Banners they shall not part, vntill they alight within their Pauillions.

Shewes that the Combattants be Christians.

Heere followeth the First of the Three Cries, and the Five Prohibitions, which the King of Armes, or Herauld ought to make, at all Gages of Battayle or Combate.

VI. FIrst of all, the king of Armes, or Herauld ought to come on Horseback, to the Gate or entrance of the Lists, and there hee is to Crye once, before the comming of the Appellant.

Secondly, hee is to Crye an other time, when the Appellant and Defendant shall be entred, and shall haue made their presentations before the Iudge.

And Thirdly, when they shall be returned from making their last Oaths; according to this forme following, and crying with a loud exalted voyce.

OYez, oyez, or oyez Seigneurs, Cheualiers, Escuyers, & toutes manie res de Gens, ce que nostre Sire, le bon Roy de France vous commande & deffend sur peine de perdre Corps, & Biens.

Que Nul ne soit arme, ne porte Espee, ne Dague, ne autre Harnois quel qu'il soit, fice ne sont les Gardes du Champs; & Ceux qui par le Roy, auront congie, & pounoir de ce faire.

Encores le Roy noſtre Sire vous commande, & deffend que Nul de quelque condition qu'il ſoit, durant la Bataille ne ſoit, à Cheual; & ce ſur peine aux Gentils hommes de perdre le Cheual; & aux Seruiteurs de perdre vne Oreille: Et Ceux qui conduiront les Combateurs, deſcenduz qu'ils ſeront à la porte du Champ, ſeront incontinent tenus d'enuoyer leurs Cheuaux, ſur la peine que dicte eſt.

Encores le Roy noſtre Sire vous commande, & enioinct à toute Perſonne de quelque condition qu'elle ſoit, qu'il s'aſsiſe ſur Banc, ou par Terre, à ce que Chacun, puiſſe voir les Parties combattre plus à ſon gre, ſur peine d'auoir le Poing coupe.

Encores le Roy noſtre Sire vous commande, & deffend que Nul ne parle; ne face Signe; ne Crache; ne Crie; ne face aucun ſemblant quel qu'il ſoit &, ce ſur peine de perdre Corps, & Biens.

Now heare you, now heare you, now heare Lords, Knights, Eſquires, and all manner of people, that which our Lord the good King of France commandeth and prohibiteth, vpon paine of looſing Body and goods.

None but Guards of the Field to be Armed.

That no man ſhall be Armed, neither weare any Sword or Dagger, or any other Herneſſe or Armour whatſoeuer it be: If they be not Guards of the Field, and ſuch as haue leaue granted by the King, and may doe it.

None to be on Horſebacke in the Field.

Moreouer, the King our Lord commandeth, and expreſly forbiddeth, that no man (of what condition ſoeuer he be) during the time of Battaile or Combat, ſhall dare to be on Horſebacke. And that vpon penaltie to Gentlemen, of looſing their Horſes; And to Seruingmen, of looſing an Eare: And that ſuch as are appointed Guides and Conducters to the Combattants, ſhall diſmount themſelues when they come to the Gate of the Field, and their Horſes to be ſent away immediately from them, vpon the penaltie before declared.

All to ſit downe on bankes or the ground.

Moreouer, the King our Lord commandeth, and enioyneth to all perſons, of what condition or degree ſoeuer they be; that they ſeate themſelues vpon banks, or downe on the ground; to the end, that euery one may behold the parties Combatting the more eaſily; vpon paine to haue a hand cut off.

No noyſe or ſpeaking.

Moreouer, the King our Lord commandeth and forbiddeth, that any man doe ſpeake, make ſigne, ſpie, crie, nor making any ſemblance whatſoeuer: And that vpon paine of looſing body and goods.

How the Appellant ought to come on Horſebacke to the Field, Armed withall his Armes.

Houres of appearing in the Field.

VII. AND becauſe that (according to the auncient Cuſtomes of this our Kingdome of France) the Appellant ought to preſent himſelfe firſt in the Field, and before the houre of Midday: And the Defendant before the houre of foure of the clocke in the after Noone, and whoſoeuer faileth of theſe houres, is held and adiudged for a Recreant and Conuict, except the mercie of the Iudge be therein extended, which Cuſtomes we willed and commanded, to be ſtill continued and ſtand in full force: Yet notwithſtanding, vpon ſome good reaſons vs mouing thereunto, we haue qualified thoſe Ordenances, and giue our conſent; that either we our ſelfe, or the competent Iudge, may prolong or elſe ſhorten thoſe houres, according to the diſpoſitions of the times, as to all Iudges ſhall ſeeme pleaſing. And taking the Parties into our power to agree them, and to order for the good and honor of them both what may be done: or giuing another day and houre, as well before the Battailes beginning, as in the time of Combatting for finiſhing the Battaile; by bringing them both to one and the ſame point: yet neither of them to excuſe himſelfe, complaine or vſe any proteſtations, but that the ſame was done by their competent Iudges, hauing power and authoritie to doe it.

Of delaying or ſhortning the time of the Combat.

Here enſue the Requeſts and Proteſtations, which both the Parties ſhould make, at their entring into the Field.

VIII. AND to the Conſtable, Marſhals or Marſhall, that attendeth there for the buſineſſe, the Appellant ſhall ſay, or procure to be ſaid by his Aduocate, and likewiſe to the Iudge, when he is mounted on Horſe backe for entring into the Field, theſe words which follow, but firſt at entring into the Field.

My Moſt-Honorable Lord, my Lord the Conſtable, or my Lord the Marſhall of the Field: I am ſuch a man (or elſe) Behold here ſuch a Man, who before you, as he that is appointed by our Lord the King, commeth to preſent himſelfe Armed, and mounted like a Gentleman, that muſt enter to Combat with ſuch a Gentleman, vpon ſuch a Quarrell, as with a falſe wicked Traitour or Murderer as he is. And hereof I take our Lord, our Lady, and my Lord Saint George the good Knight to witneſſe, on this day to vs aſſigned by our Lord the King, and for the doing and accompliſhing thereof am come hither. Here I preſent my ſelfe vnto you, to doe my deuoire, requiring you, that you will impart and deliuer to me my portion of the Field, Winde and Sunne, and of all elſe that is needefull for me, conuenable and profitable in ſuch a caſe. Which being by you performed, I will doe my duetie, by the helpe of God, of our Lady, and of my Lord Saint George the good Knight.

Moreouer he muſt proteſt, that he doth require it, and that it may be lawfull for him, to fight the Combat either on Horſebacke, or on foote; as to his Honor it ſhall ſeeme beſt, either Armed, or diſarmed: And to weare thoſe which ſhall like him, to offend or defend at his pleaſure to appoint, before, or in Combatting, if God will vouchſafe him the leaſure to doe it. His offers to the Marſhall.

Then he further requireth, that if the aduerſe Partie ſhall bring to the Field other Armes, then by the conſtitution of France he ought to bring; that they may be taken from him, and inſtead of them, he may haue no other, then ſuch as are and ought to be allowed.

Againſt Armes forge by wicked Arts and Charme.

Alſo, that if his enemie bring Armes, fordged by wicked Arts, Charmes, Sorceries or Incantations, by meanes whereof it may be manifeſtly knowne, that the truth and right of his cauſe was hindered before the Combat, or in the time of Combatting, or after he had perfformed his beſt endeauour, and ſo his right, iuſtice and honor hath bin impaired: That the proofe of ſuch wicked dealing appearing euidently, his Aduerſarie may be puniſhed, as an enemy to God, a Traitour and Murderer to him, and according to the condition of the caſe. But whether the Armes be charmed or no, his enemy ought to be ſolemnely ſworne therein.

For granting of another day, the firſt failing.

He is alſo to require and proteſt, that if the pleaſure of God be ſuch, as (before Sunne-ſetting) He hath not diſcomfited and ſlaine his enemie (which he purpoſed to haue done, if God had thereto bin ſo pleaſing) that a new day may be granted him, becauſe much time of this day was loſt, in paſſage of the Ceremonies before entring into Combat, according to the auncient Rites and Cuſtomes. For the ſpace of a whole day may thus be neceſſarily required: whereto we conſent, and freely grant it him.

For failing the due appointed houre.

Moreouer, that if his Aduerſarie be not come within the due houre, and aſſigned by our Lord the King: that his Aduerſarie may not afterward be accepted, but held as a Recreant and Conuicted. Yet this requeſt is to remaine within the compaſſe of our freedome and power. Neuertheleſſe, if he make delay without our will & command: it is then our pleaſure, that it ſhall be ſo, as aboue is ſaid.

Daies prouiſion for the Field.

He is further expreſly to demand and proteſt, that he may bring thither with him Bread, Wine and other Viandes, to eate and drinke for the ſpace of a day, if he ſhall be in any ſuch neede; with all things elſe conuenient and requiſite for him and his Horſe, in ſuch a caſe. Which proteſtations and requeſts, as well in generall, as in eſpeciall, he ought to require an Act and Inſtrument of. And the ſame requeſts and proteſtations of the Appellant, we will and ordaine that the Defendant may make likewiſe, and in the ſame forme of the Appellant: except the ſaid requeſts and proteſtations, ſhall be eſpecially and reſpectiuely forbidden by both the parties themſelues. We alſo will and ordaine, that they may Combat on Horſebacke, or on foote, with all Staues and Armours; except ſuch as are forged by wicked engine, Charmes, Enchantments, and Inuocations vpon Diuels, and all other ſuch like things, forbidden by God and his holy Church to all good Chriſtians:

In what manner the Scaffoldes and Liſts of the Field ought to bee ordered and prepared, with the Crucifix, Te Igitur, Tents and Pauillions of the Parties.

For length and breadth of the Liſts.

IX. FVrthermore we will and ordayne, that all Liſts for Gages of Battayle, ſhall containe Sixeſcore paces about, or in circuit, that is to ſay, Forty paces in wideneſſe, and Foureſcore in Length: which all our Iudges ſhall ſtand obliged to ſee done, and leaue them ſo to others, that ſhall come after them.

Placing of the Pauillions.

Wee alſo will and Commaund, that the Seate and Pauillion of the Appellant (whatſoeuer he be) ſhall be placed in the Field on our right hand, or of the Iudge: And that of the Defendant, is to be vpon the left hand.

And when both of the Combatants ſhall haue ſpoken, or cauſed to be ſpoken by their Aduocates, the Proteſtations and Requeſts before rehearſed, & before their entring into the Field; they muſt abaſe or ſlip downe the Viſers of their Helmets, and enter ſo with their Viſers abaſed, making the ſigne of the Croſſe, as already hath bin ſaid: And in that manner they ought to come before the Scaffoldes, where their Iudge may command them to raiſe vp their Viſers. If the King bee there preſent, they ought then to ſay. Moſt Excellent, and Moſt Mighty Prince, and our Soueraigne Lord: I am ſuch a Man, who in your preſence, as to our Iuſt Lord and Soueraigne Iudge. But if it be to any other then the King, he muſt then ſay. My Moſt-dreaded Lord, I am ſuch a Man, who in your preſence, as before our competent Iudge, am come this day, and at the Houre by you aſſigned to me, to doe my deuoire againſt ſuch a Man, by reaſon of the Murder, or Treaſon which he hath done. And heereof I take God on my part, and who therein ſhall be my helpe this day.

Speeches to the King or to the Iudge.

A writing giuen to the Marſhall.

When he hath ſpoken theſe words, or ſo neere as hee can to the ſame effect: by his Councellers a writing is to be giuen him, contayning all the former words which (with his owne hand) he muſt deliuer to the Marſhall, and he ought to receiue it. Which being done, we giue him leaue to diſmounte, and goe into his Pauillion. But if it ſhall appeare, that he hath not ſpoken the former words; then we will and commaund, that they muſt be done by the Office of his Aduocate.

The ſecond Cry.

When all the foreſaid things are doe, the King of Armes, or Herauld ought to mount vpon the Gate of the Liſts, and make his Second Crie, and the Fiue inhibitions, in ſuch manner and forme as formerly you haue heard.

Now follow the Oathes, which are to be taken by them, that will enter and Combate with Gage of Battayle.

In what manner the Appellant taketh his Oath.

X. FIrſt the Appellant is to come (with his Viſer exalted) departing from his Pauillion on foote, Armed with all his Armes, and his Temicle thereon. Then by the Guards of the Field, and them of his Councell, he muſt be brought before the Scaffold, erected before the midſt of the Liſts, where our Maieſty ſhall bee placed, or ſome other for vs in our abſence. There the Appellant falleth on his knees, before a Seate and a Table richly adorned, where ſtandeth the true figure of our Lord and Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, placed on a rich Pillow, with the Miſſale lying by it. On the right hand of this Altar is ſeated a Prieſt or Religious Fryer, who ſpeaketh to the Appellant in this manner following.

The Prieſts words to the Appellant.

Ariſe Knight (or Eſquire, or Lord of ſuch a place) Who art Appellant. You behold heere the moſt true remembrance, of our Lord and Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, who becauſe hee would dye, deliuered his moſt precious Body to Death, only to ſaue vs. Require you mercy of him, and earneſtly beſeech him, that this day he will aſſiſt you, according to the right you haue, for he is the only Soueraigne Iudge. Thinke on the Oathes which you are to take; for otherwiſe your Soule, your Honor and your ſelfe are in great perill.

When theſe words are finiſhed, the Marſhall taketh the Appellant by both the hands, with the Gauntlets on, and placing his right hand vpon the Crucifix, and his left vpon the Te Igitur: then he cauſeth him to ſpeake after him word by word, thus.

I Such a one, Appellant, doe ſweare vpon this Remembrance of our Lord and Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, and on the Holy Euangeliſts which are heere, and on the Faith of a true Chriſtian, and by the ſacred Baptiſme, which I hold of God: that I haue certainely a good, iuſt and Holy quarrell, and by good right haue in this Gage of Battayle appealed Such a one, a falſe and wicked Traytour, Murderer or Periured Villaine (according as the condition of the Crime is) and who hath a moſt falſe and wicked quarrell on his part to defend. This will I make good this Day, with my body againſt his, by the helpe of God, of our Lady, and of my Lord Saint George, that good and worthy Knight.

This Oath being thus made, the Appellant riſeth, and returneth into his Pauillion, with them of his Councell, and the Guards that conducted him.

The Oath taken by the Defendant, before the Iudge.

The defendants Oath before the Marſhall.

XI. AFterward, the Guards of the Field goe to the Pauillion of the Defendant, whom they conduct before the Altare, to take his Oath likewiſe in the forme aforeſaid with his Councellers, Armed with all his Armes, and the Tunicle or Coate Armour ouer all, as hath beene ſaid. After he hath beene admoniſhed by the Prieſt, the Marſhall taketh him by the hands, with the Gauntlets on, as before he did to the Appellant. And then he ſpeaketh thus. You, Such a one, or Lord of ſuch a place, ſay thus after me, and as I doe.

I Such a one, Defendant, ſweare vpon this Remembrance, of the Paſſion of our Lord and Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, and on the Sacred Euangeliſts which are heere, and on the Faith of a true Chriſtian, and by the bleſſed Baptiſme which I hold of God: That I haue, and thinke firmely to haue, a good, holy and iuſt quarrell, and good right to defend my ſelfe by this Gage of Battayle, againſt Such a one, who falſely and wickedly hath accuſed mee, falſe and wicked man as he is, ſo to appeale me, And this will I make good vpon him this day, with my body againſt his: So helpe me God, our Lady, and my Lord Saint George, that good and worthy Knight.

This Oath likewiſe being made, the defendant ariſeth, and returneth againe to his Pauillion, according as the Appellant did.

The Third Oath, which both the Parties make before the Iudge.

The bringing of them both together, to the third and laſt Oath.

XII. AT the Third Oath, the Guards deuide themſelues equally on either ſide, and comming to the two Parties, guide them accompanied with their Councellers, as hath bin ſaid; who comming ſtep by ſtep, and paired together, when they come before the Croſſe, and the Te Igitur: The Marſhall taketh their right hands, and pulling off their Gauntlets, which hee hangeth on the the two Armes of the Croſſe. Then muſt the Prieſt bee there preſent, to remember them of the Paſſion of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt; the perdition of him that ſhall haue the ſhame, both in ſoule and body; the great Oaths they haue taken, and are yet to take; the Sentence of God, who fauoureth nothing but the rightfull cauſe. Aduiſing them further, rather to truſt to the mercy of the King, then to endaunger the wrath of God, and power of the infernall enemy. And this Oath wee appoint to be the laſt of the Three: in regard of the mortall hatred betweene them; eſpecially, when they come to ſee each other, and to ſhake hands together at parting.

Of repentance before taking the laſt Oath.

Then the Marſhall is to demaund firſt of the Appellant, ſaying. You, Such a one, As Appellant will you Sweare? If he repent, and make conſcience of it, as becommeth a good Chriſtian to doe: we will receiue him into our mercy, or elſe the Iudge ſhall doe it, before whom he ſhould performe the Combate; to giue, or enioyne him penance, or further to appoint our pleaſure. If it fall out to bee ſo, then they are to be brought backe into their Pauillions, and not to depart thence without our commaund, or order from the Iudge before whom they came. But if the Appellant will conſtantly ſweare it to be true; then the Marſhall muſt demaund the like of the Defendant, and then returning to the Appellant, cauſe him to ſpeake thus after him.

The Appellants laſt Oath

I Such a one, Appellant, doe ſweare vpon this true figure of the Paſſion of our Lord and Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt; and on theſe Holy Euangeliſts heere; on the Faith of Baptiſme as a Chriſtian, which I hold of my true God; on the moſt-ſoueraigne Ioyes of Paradiſe, which I vtterly renounce for the moſt bitter paynes of Hell; vpon my Soule, my Life, and vpon mine mine Honor; That I haue a good, holy and iuſt Quarrell, to Combat with this falſe and wicked Traitour, Murderer, Periured Villaine: I meane this vile man here before me. And in this caſe I call God for my true Iudge, our Lady, and my Lord Saint George, that good and worthy Knight. And for this faithfully (by the Oathes which I haue taken) I intend not to beare vpon my ſelfe, nor vpon my Horſe, Words, Stones, Hearbes, Charmes, Sorceries, Drinkes, Carracters, Innocations or Spirits, or any other thing, wherein I might place the leaſt hope of helping me, and to hurt him. Nor haue I any other recourſe, but to God onely, and confidence in my right; by my Body, by my Horſe, and by mine Armes to preuaile. Whereupon, I kiſſe this figure of the Croſſe, and theſe Holy Euangeliſts, and ſo am ſilent.

After the Oath thus taken, the Marſhall goeth to the Defendant, whom he cauſeth to vſe the very ſame words, and in the ſame manner.

The ſpeeches vſed each Party holding the other by the hand.

When the Defendant hath kiſt the Crucifixe, and the Te Igitur, for more clearing the right of them both; he taketh the two parties by the right hands, which they giuing each to other; hee commandeth the Appellant to ſpeake thus to his enemie.

O thou, whom I hold by the right hand, by the Oathes that I haue taken, the cauſe for which I haue appealed thee; is a good cauſe, and lawfull for me to appeale thee, wherein this day I will Combat thee. Thou haſt a bad cauſe, and no iuſt quarrell to enter Combat, or to defend thy ſelfe againſt me, and that thou knoweſt full well. Whereupon, I call God, our Lady, and my Lord Saint George that good Knight, to be my true witneſſes: a falſe Traitour, Murderer, and periured Villaine as thou art.

The anſwere to the Oath of the Appellant, made by the Defendant.

XIII. After this, the Marſhall ſaith to the Defendant, that he muſt make the ſame proteſtation, as the Appellant did, taking him againe by the hand.

O thou, whom I hold by the right hand, by the Oathes that I haue taken, the Cauſe wherein thou haſt appealed me, is falſe and wicked. Wherefore, I haue good and lawfull reaſon to defend my ſelfe, and to Combat againſt thee this day. For thou haſt a naught ie cauſe, and no quarrell to appeale me, or fight againſt me, and that thou knoweſt full well. And that this is true, I call God, our Lady, and my Lord Saint George that good and worthy Knight, to be my true witneſſes: Falſe and wicked man as thou art.

The Prieſts departure out of the Liſts.

After theſe Oathes thus made, and the ſpeeches ſpoken by either of them; they kiſſe the Crucifixe together, and then (paired with their Councellours and friends) returne to their Pauillions to doe their deuoire. And the Prieſt then taketh the Croſſe and the Te Igitur, as alſo the Table whereon they ſtood, which he beareth away with him, and departeth thence. And the King of Armes, after all this is done, and in ſuch forme as hath bin ſaid; he maketh the laſt Crie of the Three.

The Laſt of the three Cries.

XIV. When the King of Armes or Herald is ready to Crie, all the people being ſeated, and ſilence made, not to ſpeake a word, the Parties being likewiſe ready to performe their dutie; then by command of the Marſhall, commeth the King of Armes or Herauld into the midſt of the Liſts, where he crieth three ſeuerall times; Gentlemen, doe your deuoire. After which words, the two Combattants leaue their Pauillions, Chaires or Stooles, comming forth to mount vpon their Horſes, which ſtand there readily prepared for them, their Staues and Lances by, wherewith they are to helpe themſelues, and their Councellors walking with them: when ſuddenly their Pauillions are beaten downe, and caſt forth of the Liſts.

The Combattants leauing their Pauillions.

How at the two Combattants iſſuing forth of their Pauillions, vpon the voyce and command of the Marſhall; he throweth downe the Gloue.

XV. After all is done, the Marſhall, who muſt be in the middeſt of the Field, by the Scaffold, carrying the Gloue in his hand; crieth three ſeuerall times; Let them goe together. At which words he caſteth downe the Gloue. Then he that will mounteth on Horſebacke, but he that will not, is left to his owne pleaſure. And then the Councellours to both the Parties, without any longer tarrying, depart, leauing each man his Bottell of Wine, and a Loafe of Bread in a Napkin: And then they doe what they can.

The Combattants left to their deuoire

In what manner the Gage of Battaile ſhould be granted: And how the Conqueror ſhould drag the Vanquiſhed out of the Field.

XVI. We will and command, that the Gage of Battaile ſhall not be granted but in one of theſe two manners, that is to ſay. When one of the two Parties confeſſeth the fault, and yeeldeth himſelfe. And the other: When the one ſhall bring the other forth of the Field, aliue or dead. And dead or aliue as he is, the body ſhall be deliuered by the Iudge to the Marſhall, to order or doe Iuſtice at our pleaſure. If he be liuing, we appoint, that he ſhall be deliuered to the Heraulds and King of Armes, by whom he ſhall be diſarmed, his Points cut, and his Armour caſt piecemeale in the Liſts, while he lies couched on the ground. But if he be dead, he ſhall be likewiſe diſarmed, and there left to our appointment, either to be pardoned, or ſent to more ſhamefull puniſhment, according as to vs ſhall ſeeme beſt. Neuertheleſſe, the Hoſtages of the vanquiſhed ſhall be arreſted, vntill they ſhall haue made full ſatisfaction to the Partie victorious. And the ouer-plus of the vanquiſheds goods, ſhall be confiſcate to the Prince.

Proceedings with the Parties aliue or dead.

How the Vanquiſher ought to depart out of the Liſts Honorably.

XVII. It is our further will and pleaſure, that the Vanquiſher ſhall depart honorably on Horſebacke out of the Liſts, in the ſame forme as he made his entrance; if he be not hindered by ſome Exoine, or harme happened to his body; carrying the weapon (wherewith he hath conquered his Aduerſarie) in his right hand, hauing his Pledges and Hoſtages freely deliuered to him. And concerning this quarrell, whatſoeuer information can come to the contrary; he is not to make any anſwere, neither ſhall any Iudge compell him thereunto, except himſelfe be ſo pleaſed.

Rights belonging to the Victor.

We alſo will and ordaine, that the Horſe as he is, and Armes of the Vanquiſhed, and all things vpon him, or brought thither for him; doe and ſhall appertaine to the Conſtable, Marſhals or Marſhall of the Field, who in this caſe haue the charge of all.

Rights belonging to the Marſhall.

And we direct our prayers to God, that he will maintaine the right to him that hath it, and that euery good Chriſtian, may keepe himſelfe from falling into ſuch a perill: for, among all other perils that are, this is moſt of all to be feared, none being worſe then the Gage of Battaile. Wherein, many a Noble man hath found himſelfe deceiued, whether right were on his ſide, or no, by being ouer confident in cunning, ſleights and ſtrength, or blinded with pride, Anger and ouer-weening; and ſometime by ſhames of the world giuen, for refuſing peace, in Parties but of equall qualitie; who many times afterward, For old ſinnes paſt, haue ſuſtained new penances, in contemning and not caring for the Iudgement of God. But whoſoeuer complaineth, and findeth not Iuſtice, let him referre his cauſe to God. If for his owne intereſt (without pride and deſpight) he requireth Battaile in caſe of true right: he needeth not to feare cunning nor force, becauſe our Lord Ieſus Chriſt is a iuſt Iudge for him, ſuch is the common ſaying of the world, whoſe aduiſe yet (in this caſe) is hard to be followed.

How dangerous a thing the Gage of Battaile is.

The Concluſion of the Ordenances for Duelloes and Combats.

These were the true tearmes of the Edict, concerning Duelloes and ſingle Combats, made by Phillip le Bel, Fourth of the name, King of France and of Nauarre; whereby whereby (at the beginning) he gaue permission to his Iudges, to grant the Field of Battaile. But in regard it was a right, which appertained to a Soueraigne Prince onely; he made a Proclamation in the yeare following, One thousand three hundred and seauen, Registred in the Parliament of Paris: whereby he reuoaked that power from all the Iudges of his Kingdome; Attributing it onely to his Court of France, the Court of Peeres, that is the Parliament of Paris.

The right of graunting Battaile belongeth to a Soueraign Prince onely.

And to them it belonged to Iudge, whether any Gage of Battaile might be granted, or not: If they did adiudge it, the execution thereof was to be at Paris ordenarily (if the absence of the King did not cause the contrary) for all the Prouinces vnder the homage of France, how farre off soeuer they were, holding there his Exchecquer, Soueraigne Iustice, extraordinarie Sessions, the Appeales of Duelloes and Gages of Battaile, should resort to the Parliament of Paris, honored with the title of Excellencie, and honor Of the Court of France.

The reading of these Ordenances, hath caused vs to call to remembrance, many Ceremonies held and obserued in these Fields of Battaile: some few things forgotten, or let sleepe in silence, to be the better knowne in these times, because then they were in full execution.

Ceremonies that were obserued in elder times.

The Rod or Warder.

ASsiuing to the King, the Constable or Marshall, that carrieth command in the Field of Battaile, A Rod or Wand Guilded: which (like to the Caduceus of Mercurie) being cast in the midst betweene the Combattants, causeth them to sunder each from other.

To obserue also, that the King of Armes, or the Herauld that maketh the Cries and prohibitions, had (for difference) A Rod, or Wand Siluered, as is obserued in the Romant of Raoul de Cambray.

With chearefull lookes the Herauld rideth on,
Holds in his hand a pilled Rod or Wand,
And crieth with a loud exalted voyce:
Barons and Gentlemen of France, Attend
The message, that is sent you from the King.
Let no man here make noyse, fight or affray:
On paine to haue his head smit off this day.

Dragging the dead body out of the Lists.

The manner and fashion, of dragging the dead Body out of the Lists, is here forgotten; which we will more at large obserue, in the Chapter concerning Militarie paines and punishments, following hereafter.

But among these Ordenances, may be remembred the auncient Custome, of cutting the Eares of lewd Seruants, refractary to the commands of their Maisters: for it was in France an ordenary paine and punishment for bad Seruants, to haue their Eares cut off.

Concerning the punishing of Seruants of the worst kinde.

In our Salique Law, at the Title de Adulteriis Ancillarum, and the fourth Paragraph; Seruus ipse castretur. For meanest faults, they would haue them stretched out vpon a Bench or Fourme, fast bound by the hands and Feete, their bodies naked, as ready for torture and rigour: And with Wands, containing the bignesse of a mans little Finger, Sixescore stripes (of good account and manuall distribution) was to be giuen with the Wand vpon the Bellie. And throughout the Salique Law, at the Title De Seruo qui de furto fuerit interpellatus, at the eight Paragraph.

Si autem Seruus de quolibet crimine inculpatus fuerit, & Dominus Serui ipsius præsens adfuit, ab eo qui repetit admoneatur, vt Seruum suum ad iusta supplicia dare non differat: & qui repetit, Virgas paratas habere debet, quæ in similitudinem minimi digiti grossitudinem habeant, & Scamnum paratum habere debet, vt Seruum ipsum tendere possit.

This was the least punishment then ordained, wherewith they chastised their Seruants. At the same Title, and last Paragraph. Si Ancilla in tali crimine inculpatur de quo quo Seruus castrari debuerat, CCXL. Denarios, qui faciunt solidos sex, si conuenit, Dominus reddat, aut Ducentos Quadraginta ictus accipiat.

When better fauour was to be showne to better Seruants, they were to be smitten on the head with Wands of fiue or sixe yeares growth, such as Fagots or Bauins are made of, which are daily growing in our Woods, and tearmed in our Salique Law Amortus; the Gascoigne calleth them Endortes, and the Law of the Baiorians, Gamachis. Sometimes they would belabour their shoulders with sixescore stripes of such a Wand or Cudgell; or fiftie at the least, which was accounted friendly. Rumpebatur dorsum eius Quinquaginta Gamachis.

Punishment of better Seruants.

In our Law, at the Title De furtis Seruorum. If a Seruant, from forth the House of his Maister, did steale the value of two Pence: he was to redeeme his shoulders with sixe score Pence, or else to endure so many stripes soundly laid on, and called d'Amorte. Si quis Seruus foris casa, quod valet duos Denarios furauerit, & inde conuictus fuerit, aut flagellis CXX. ictus accipiat, aut pro dorso suo CXX. Denariorum qui faciunt Solidos III. culpabilis iudicetur.

Punishment for Theft according to the value.

If he did steale the value of Fortie Pence: He was to redeeme his Testicles, as well by restitution of the Principall, whereof he had made the Theft, as also two hundred and fortie Pence, for a penalty; or else he was to be Castrated.

Si vero furauerit quod valet Quadraginta Denarios Aut castretur, aut Ducentos Quadraginta Denarios qui faciunt Solidos Sex reddat. Dominus autem Serui, qui furtum fecerit, capitale in locum restituat.

If he were like to the Seruant of Marot, that could remember nothing said vnto him; for the better quickning of his memorie, he had one Eare cut off, and this kinde of punishment was practised from the time of our first Kings, Saint Gregorie of Tours, in the first Booke of his Historie of France, and the fortie eight Chapter, speaking of Leudastes. Qui bis, aut tertio reductus à fugæ lapsis: Auris vnius incisione multatur. And the same Authour, in his fift Booke and eighteenth Chapter, informeth vs, that such as contradicted the Kings commands, had their hands smitten off.

A hard remedie for memorie.

But here is to be obserued, that it was not the right Eare which they vsed to cut off, but the left: because therein is a certaine veine, which answereth to the genitall parts, and which being cut away, maketh a man vncapable of the engendring power. And this was done, to the end, that such a race of people, should not leaue to the world any of their vile and vicious breeding, whereof no doubt there are too many. By this manner of cutting off the Eare, were formerly punished Cutpurses, and Domesticke or House-Theeues, in that small streete or quarter, which we see at the entrance of Pont-nostre Dame, la Macque, S. Iacques de la Boucherie, and La Greue, where, in former times, was an ascending, like to that of the Temple; which was called by cutting off Eares; Le Carrefour Guigne Oreille, and in corrupt language Guillory by the vulgar. And this cutting off Eares, hath euermore bin held for an ignominious and infamous Act: because such kinde of people (by the Law of the Medes and Persians) were neuer admitted to the Royaltie. Witnesse false Smerdis, obserued by Zonaras, in the second Booke of his Historie. Nor to the Priesthood among the Iewes, as is testified by Iosephus, in the foureteenth Booke, and fiue and twentieth Chapter of his Iewish Antiquities, speaking of the King, and of the High Priest Hyrcanus. Returne we now againe to our Duelloes, the Ordenances whereof (before remembred) were obserued in France, all the while as Duelloes continued.

Cutting off the Eare a mark of infamie.

Vnder the Reigne of Phillip de Valois, sixt and last of the name, King of France, there was a Suite in the Court of Parliament, to haue the Gage of Battaile, for the Castell and Vicountie of Touraine: betweene the Lord de Pons, Knight, and the Count of Commenge. The causes for the Gage of Battaile expresseth it selfe the more familiarly, by the Order and Decree of the said Court; which I haue here set downe verbatim, out of the true Record.

PHilippes par la Grace de Dieu Roy de France. A tous ceux qui ces presentes Lettres verront, Salut. Scauoir faisons que Comparant à nostre Cour de Parlement à Paris Regnaud naud de Pons Cheualier d'vne part, & Bernard Comte de Commenge d'autre part. Ledict Cheualier a proposé comme de long temps fust meue question & discord Entre Geoffroy de Pons Cheualier, iadis Pere dudict Regnaud, & duquel ledict Regnaud est fils, & heritier Vniuersel, seul, & en tous ses biens d'vne part. Et Marguerite iadis Comtesse de Commenge d'autre, pour raison du Chasteau, & Vicomte de Turaine, lesquels Chasteau, & Vicomte, chacun desdits Geofroy, & Comtesse disoit à soy appartenir. Neanmoins ledict Comte Bernard plein de mauuaise intention, & icelle mettant à effect faucement & malicieusement, a fin de fruistrer dudict Vicomte ledit Regnaud auquel il deuoit appartenir apres le decez de son dict Pere, considerant qu'apres la Mort de ladicte Comtesse, qui est decedee sans Hoirs descendants de son Corps, & qui n'auoit iamais este grosse, & n'auroit eu aucuns Enfants il n'auroit aucune couleur de retenir, & posseder ledict Vicomte qui appartenoit audit Regnaud, & auroit supposé, & faict supposer vn Part faucement, meschamment, & frauduleusement, ladicte Comtesse estant en tel estat qu'elle ne pouuoit euader la Mort, & qu'elle en seroit decedee. Que ledict Comte auoit publie, ou fait publier que le dict Part estoit de ladite Comtesse, combien que faucement il eust este supposé, & que iamais ladicte Comtesse n'eust eu Enfants. Lequel Part ainsi faucement supposé, seroit dedans trois iours apres la Mort de ladicte Comtesse, par enchantement disparu du lieu, & s'en seroit alle comme il estoit venu, à tout le moins en estoit incognue la maniere du departement, & par fiction auroit este dict qu'il estoit decede. Disoit ledict Regnaud que ledict Comte auoit faict faire, ou faict secrettement ladicte fauce supposition, & que par vne seule personne pouuoit estre faicte ladicte supposition. Et dauantage, proposoit contre ledict Comte, qu'il est notoire que ledict Comte estoit tenu, & oblige a raison de son dict Comte par serment de Fidelite, & d'Hommage au Roy, Royaume, & Coronne de France, & qu'apres le decez de deffunct nostre tres-cher Sieur, & Cousin le Roy Louis (Hutin) estoit demeuree grosse d'Enfant nostre tres-chere Dame la Royne Clemence, & que destors ledict Comte premeditant que sur le Regime, & Gouuernement du Royaume de France pourroit se mouuoir dissention entre nos tres-chers Sieurs & Cousins Philippes (le Long) & Charles (le Bel) Freres, peu apres Roys de France, ou Aultres, pour autant que lors estoit demeure sans Roy ledict Royaume : Preuoyant ainsi que si ladicte Royne Clemence auoit vne Fille, pourroit sourdre question, & querele sur la creation du Roy, ou qui deuoit estre Roy : Et que s'il y auoit vn Fils pourroit y auoir debat sur le Gouuernement d'icelu), considerant le commun Prouerbe par lequel communement on dit Qu'en Eaue trouble faict bon pescher. Combien que par son Serment il fust tenu de garder l'vtilite du Royaume de France, ayant la volonte diminuer les droicts de la Coronne de France, & vsurper le Domaine du Roy, l'acquerir, & applicquer à soy, & se eximer de la subiection, & obeissance en laquelle il est tenu, & par serment oblige au Roy, & à la Coronne de France, auroit faucement, & en trahison, venant contre son serment, & commettant Crime de leze Maieste faict, ou faict faire conspirations, & auroit parle, ou faict parler aux Barons, ou Nobles dudict Pays, & leur auroit tenu, ou faict tenir propos de faire confederation, & ligue auec luy, pour autant qu'ils pouuoient cognoistre l'Estat auquel estoit le Royaume de France, & par ce moyen auroit de Celuy qui seroit Roy tous les Priuileges, en si grand nombre qu'ils voudroient demander, & qu'entre autres Gentils hommes il auoit pacte, & fait remonstrance, ou faict faire audict Regnaud de Pons d'entrer auec luy en ladicte Ligue & Confideration. A quoy ledit Regnauld de Pons cognoissant le grand preiudice, & dommage qui en pourroit venir à la Coronne, & Royaume de France, de sa part comme bon & loyal Subiect ne se seroit voulu consentir. Disoit encores ledict Regnaud, comme bon, & loyal, & pour le serment, & la foy en laquelle il seroit tenu vers nous, que ledict Comte auroit faict & dit, ou faict faire, & dire contre son propre serment les choses susdictes faucement, & en trahison, commettant crime de leze Maieste, lequel Crime est de telle nature, que en Corps, & en Biens il doit estre puny, & encores qu'il fust decede, pourroit estre procede à la Confiscation de ses Biens. Disant outre que ledict Comte auroit faict, ou faict faire lesdictes choses, afin qu'il peust acquerir, & tirer à soy telle puissance que le Roy n'osast & ne peust contredire chose qu'il luy requist, & demandast; Requerant ledict Regnaud de Pons que ledict Comte fust pour les choses dessusdictes deument puny s'il les confessoit estre veritables, & s'il les denioit, offroit ledict Regnaud le prouuer suffisamment contre ledict Comte par Gage de Combat, baillant, & offrant à nostre dicte Cour son dict Gage contre ledict Comte. De l'autre part a proposé ledict Comte du Commenge pour ses deffences, & afin que ledict Gage de Combat ne fust receu, & fust ledict Gage annulle, que ledict Regnaud n'estoit receuable en sadicte demande; Et premierement, pour ce que ledit Regnaud en proposant les choses cy deuant dictes, auoit confesse que ledict Comte auoit faict les Conspirations susdictes apres la Mort dudict Roy Louis nostre Souuerain Seigneur, & les auoit celees iusques à present, & par ce moyen par ce qu'il estoit Homme Lige du Roy, & luy deuoit sa foy, & toutes fois auoit cele vn tel faict, il estoit periure, infidele, & infame, & à ceste raison n'estoit ledict Regnauld habile à faire ladicte demande, & ne pouuoit accuser le dict Comte. Auſſi a proposé ledict Comte, qu'autresfois ledict Regnauld l'auroit faict adiourner sur Gaige de Combat, & apres iceluy Regnauld auroit impetre conge d'accorder auecques ledict Comte, sans faire aucune mention desdictes conspirations, & ainsi nous auroit menty & failly de sa Foy, & consequemment estoit infame, & ne deuoit estre receu à Appeller ledict Comte. Requerant ledict Comte Droict luy estre faict, & rendu sur les dictes choses. Et dissant que si Droict estoit faict contre luy, il n'estoit possible de respondre à la demande dudict Regnauld, par ce qu'il falloit dire esdictes Accusations, & declarer l'An, le Mois, & le Iour, lesquels on dit les Crimes auoir este commis, que ledict Regnauld a proposez en sa demande. Dauantage a proposé ledict Comte, que ledit Regnauld auoit faict ſi demande alternatiue, disant que ledict Comte auroit supposé, ou faict supposer le Part, et l'Enfant d'un Aultre : Et auroit tenu propos, ou faict tenir audict Regnaud de faire Ligue auec luy, & que telles demandes alternatiues ne vallent pour raison, & ne doiuent estre admises; & supposé qu'elles vallussent, toutesfois ne deuoit ledict Regnaud estre receu par voye de Gage de Combat, alleguant ledict Comte les raisons qui s'ensuiuent. Scauoir est que par les Ordonnances Royaux faictes sur les Duels, & Combats : Nul ne peut appeller Autruy à Combat : sinon que l'Appele, & Pronoque fust ſuſpect des Crimes proposez contre luy; & que par Indices vrays semblables il apparust, & non cognuſt les Crimes auoir este faicts. Disoit ledict Comte qu'il estoit notoire qu'il n'auoit iamais este ſuſpect, ne d'affame des Crimes proposez contre luy, & n'estoit vray-semblable qu'il euſt commis telles choses, veu que touſiours il s'estoit bien, & fidelement, porte & faict deuoir enuers Nous, & Nos Predeceſſeurs Roys de France en leurs Conſeils & Guerres; & auoit este, & estoit de bonne renommee. Semblablement a proposé ledict Comte, que par les dictes Ordonnances, il falloit que les Crimes dont aucun estoit accuſé, fuſſent tels que la Mort s'en deuſt enſuiuir, & que ſelon Droict, Raiſon, & Couſtume les Crimes proposez par ledict Regnaud contre ledict Comte ne sont tels, que d'iceux il se doiue enſuiure peine Capitale, ſuppoſé que leſdits Crimes fuſſent vrays; Parce que Crime de ſuppoſition de faux Part n'eſt tel, que, qui en ſoit conuaincu, doiue pour cela eſtre condamne a la Mort naturelle; & auſſi que faire Conſpiration, ou Aſſemblee afin de demander libertez, ou franchiſes telles que ledict Regnaud a declare, n'eſt vn tel crime, que punition mortelle s'en doiue ſuiure, par ce que telles choſes ne ſont contre le Prince, ne contre la ſeurete de ſon Peuple, ne contre ſes Membres comme ſont les Conſeillers Royaux. Diſant ledict Comte que l'Intention & la Volonte de l'Appellant & Pronocquant, faiſoit beaucoup à conſiderer, par ce qu'il pouuoit apparoir que ledict Regnaud eſtoit meu non par Iuſtice, ou autre cauſe, mais ſeulement pour auoir ledict Vicomte de Turaine, & non pour autre raiſon. Parquoy diſoit qu'il ne deuoit eſtre admis par la Voye du Combat. Diſoit encores ledict Comte, que ſuppoſe ſans preiudice, que ledict Comte euſt eu volonte de parler audict Regnaud, ou Autre, d'auoir tels Priuileges, ou franchiſes, comme dict eſt, ce n'eſt cauſe raiſonnable par laquelle on puiſſe proſequer à Gage de Combat. Car combien que ledict Comte euſt volonte de requerir leſdicts Priuileges, & franchiſes; Toutesfois il eſtoit en la volonte, & au plaiſir du Roy de les luy concedder; & ne vaudroit la volonte de les requerir, & n'auroit aucun effect, ſinon que de l'Authorite du Roy elles fuſſent concedees, & qu'ainſi clairement pouuoit apparoir qu'en la volonte de requerir Priuileges, & Immunitez n'eſchet, & n'eſt deu Gage de Combat; Et que telle volonte, que ledict Comte n'auoit iamais eue, ainſi qu'il affirmoit, ne regarde, & ne touche cas de Crime, pour lequel il doiue y auoir Combat, meſmes à ce moyen que ledict Regnaud auroit mis en auant, que de telle volonte ſe ſeroit aucun mal enſuiuy. Et outre a dict ledict Comte, que par leſdictes Ordonnances il faut, que le faict ſoit tel que par Teſmoins ne puiſſe eſtre prouue : Mais que les faicts proposez par ledict Regnaud contre ledict Comte, peuuent eſtre verifiez par Teſmoins; parce que ledict Comte offroit faire preuue, que ſa Femme veritablement auoit eſte groſſe, & auoit eu vne Fille, que ledict Regnaud maintient auoir eſte faucement ſuppoſee, prouueroit qu'il auoit tenu ladicte Fille pour ſienne, & comme ſienne l'auoit nourrie, & en ſon Teſtament inſtituee ſon Heritiere; & qu'en cas qu'il peuſt peust prouuer lesdicts faicts, que ledict Gage de Combat deuoit cesser. Semblablement a dict que les Conspirations, & Assemblees mises en faict par ledict Regnaud contre ledict Comte, se pouuoient & se peuuent verifier, pour autant que Congregations presupposent multitude de Personnes; mesmement que ledict Regnaud en sa demande auroit exposé que ledict Comte auoit dict paroles semblables à plusieurs Personnes, parquoy combien que chacune desdictes Personnes en parlast par tesmoignage singulier, toutesfois seroit prouue suffisamment telle Conspiration, & Congregation: Et que pour ce, par Tesmoins en pouuoit estre faicte la preuue, & ne deuoit ledict Gage de Combat estre receu. Aussi auroit dict ledict Comte qu'il pouuoit faire clairement apparoir, que lesdictes choses par ledict Regnaud proposées, ne le touchoient aucunement, & n'en estoit charge, & que par Haine, ou Enuie ledict Regnaud auoit prouocque ledict Comte au Combat, & que supposé que ladicte Comtesse fust decedee sans Hoirs descendus de son Corps, ledict Vicomte de Turaine ne fust venu audict Regnaud, pour autant qu'il y auoit Seize autres Personnes, & dauantage, qui seroient plus proches à ladicte Comtesse, lesquelles, & non ledict Regnaud, pourroient heriter audict Vicomte; Et de rechef proposé par ledict Comte, que par lesdictes Ordondances Royaux, qu'il falloit que le Cas dont l'Accusateur accusoit fust aduenu euidemment; Mais qu'il n'apparroissoit point que les faits proposez contre luy par ledict Regnaud, qu'au moyen desdictes Conspirations par luy recitees, il s'en soit ensuiuy aucune fin, ou effect. Alleguant ledict Regnaud plusieurs autres raisons aux fins ausquelles il tendoit; Et disant en ce que touchoit lesdictes Conspirations, & Confederations que comme bon, & loyal vers son Seigneur, il les auroit reuelees à nostre Tres cher Sieur, & Cousin le Roy Philippes; Repliquant encores iceluy ledict Regnaud plusieurs autres raisons. Et ledict Comte au Contraire, Requerant que sur ses raisons, & deffences droict luy fust faict, & rendu par nostredicte Cour, & sans se departir d'icelles a offert ledict Comte se deffendre competamment, sur lesdictes choses proposees par ledict Regnaud à l'en contre de luy par le Gage de Combat, qu'il a baille à nostredicte Cour, contre ledict Regnaud, sauf lesdictes raisons, & deffences proposees, & alleguees, sur lesquelles, auant toute autre chose demandoit ledict Comte luy estre faict droict. Lesdictes Parties diligemment ouyes en nostre Cour, sur les choses dessusdictes, & autres que d'vne part, & d'autres ils ont voulu dire, & proposer, Et etc. ues lesdictes Ordonnances Royaux, par ledict Comte alleguees ne faisants aucune mention de Crime de leze Maieste, & considerees, & examinees toutes choses susdictes, & autres qui pouuoient, & deuoient mouuoir nostredicte Cour, eue sur icelles diligence, & meure deliberation. Par Arrest de nostredicte Cour a este dict que ledict Regnaud estoit habile à proposer contre ledict Comte les choses cy deuant dictes, & que a la demande par ledit Regnaud proposee contre ledict le Comte, se pouuoit, & deuoit respondre. Et quant à ladicte fauce Supposition de Part, & autres choses qui concernent icelle seulement, proposees par ledict Regnaud, contre ledict Comte, sur le dict Arrest a este dict, que ledict Regnaud sur ce qui touche ladicte fauce Supposition, ne seroit receu pour Gage de Combat, & a nostredicte Cour, quant à cela seulement, annulle ledict Gage. Et quant aux autres choses par ledict Regnaud proposees à l'encontre dudict Comte, concernant le Crime de leze Maieste, nostredicte Cour par sondict Arrest a receu ledict Gage de Combat, & iceux Gages adiugez, nonobstant choses proposees, & alleguees sur ce faict par ledict Comte. En tesmoin, &c. Donne a a Paris en nostre Parlement, le Vingt & vniesme Iour de Ianuier, l'An de grace Mille trois Cents Vingthuict. Signe Gien.

The Decree of the Court of Parliament at Paris, concerning the Gage of Battaile, for the Castell and Vicountie of Touraine.

PHillip, by the Grace of God, King of France; To all such as shall see and read these presents Letters, Greeting. We make knowne, that appearing at our Court of Parliament in Paris, Regnaud de Pons, Knight, on the one part, and Bernard, Count of Commenge, on the other part. The said Knight propounded, that long time since, was moued question and discord, betweene Geoffrey de Pons, Knight, formerly Father to the said Regnaud, and to whom the said Regnaud is Sonne, and vniuersall Heire alone, and in his goods on the one part: And Margaret, sometime Countesse of Commenge, on the other part; by reason of the Castell and Vicountie of Touraine, which Castell and Vicountie of Touraine, each of the said Geoffrey and Countesse said to belong to them.

Notwithstanding, the said Count Bernard, full of bad meaning, and bringing the same to effect falsely and maliciously; onely to frustrate the said Regnaud of the said Vicountie, which ought to belong to him after the decease of his said Father: considering, that after the death of the said Countesse (who is deceased without Heires descending of her body, for she neuer had bin great with childe, neither euer had any children) he had not any colour to retaine or possesse the said Vicountie, which appertained to the said Regnaud. But had supposed, and made to be supposed a false Birth, maliciously and fraudulently, the said Countesse being in such estate, as she could not shunne death, and was (indeede) dead. Yet the said Count had published, or caused to be published, that the said Birth was of the said Countesse, albeit he had falsely supposed it, and that the said Countesse neuer had any childe. Which Birth so falsely supposed, was within three dayes after the death of the said Countesse: By Enchantment vanished out of the place, and made to goe away as it came; at least, the manner of the departing could not be knowne, and then (by fiction) it was said to be deceased.

The said Regnaud said further, that the said Count had made, or secretly caused to be made, the said false supposition, and by one person onely (it might be) was made that supposition. Moreouer he propounded against the said Count, as a matter most notorious and well knowne, that the said Count was held and obliged, by reason of his said Countie, by Oath of Fidelitie and of Homage, to the King, Kingdome, and Crowne of France, and that after the death of our late most deare Lord and Cosine King Lewes (Hutin) our most deare Lady the Queene Clemencia, was then left great with childe. And from that time, the said Count premeditating, that on the Rule and Gouernment of the Kingdome of France, he might moue dissention betweene our most deare Lords and Cousines, Phillip le Long, and Charles le Bel, Bretheren, Soone after Kings of France, or others, because the Realme was then left without a King: Foreseeing also, that if the said Queene Clemencia should haue a Daughter, question and quarrell might arise, for creation of the King, or who should be the King. But if she should haue a Sonne; debate would then be moued, about the Gouernement of him: in regard of the common Prouerbe, whereby is vsually said; That in troubled Waters is alwayes the best Fishing.

And although he stood bound by his Oathe, to preserue the vtilitie and benefit of France: yet, hauing a will and desire, to diminish the Rights of the Crowne of France, and to vsurpe the Demeanes of the King; he got and applied them to himselfe, casting off the subiection and obedience, whereto he stood bound by his Oathe sworne to the King, and to the Crowne of France. For he had falsely, and by way of Treason gon against his Oathe, and committed an act of High Treason: causing to be held diuers conspiracies, and had talked, and caused talke to be held, with Barons and Noblemen of the said Countrey, their talke and conference tending, to the making of a confederacie and League with him, whereby they might attaine to know, to whom the Crowne of France should come. By which meanes, of him that should be King, they would obtaine all Priuiledges, to so great a number as they would request.

Among other Gentlemen, with whom he had thus dealt and compacted; he had made meanes to him the said Regnaud de Pons, to enter with him and them into this League and confederacie: whereto the said Regnaud de Pons, knowing the great damage and detriment, that thereby might come to the Crowne and Kingdome of France (being for his owne part a good and loyall Subiect) by no meanes would yeelde consent. And beside, the said Regnaud saith, as a good and loyall Subiect, and auoucheth by the Oathe and Faith wherein he standeth bounden to vs: that the said Count made and spake, and caused to be made and spoken (contrary to his Faith and Oathe) all the matters before alleadged, falsely, traiterously, and in the act of High-Treason: which offence is of such nature, that in body and goods he ought to be punished: And although he were dead, yet Law might proceede to the confiscation of his goods.

Moreouer he maintained, that the said Count had done, and caused the said things to be done, to the end, that he might draw and procure to himselfe such power, as the King should not dare to gaine say, or contradict whatsoeuer he did request or demand. Whereupon the said Regnaud de Pons required, that the said Count might for these offences be duely punished, if he confessed them to be true: but if he denied them, the said Regnaud offred to proue them sufficiently against the Count, by Gage of Battaile, offring and giuing to our Court his said Gage against the Count.

On the other side, the said Count of Commenge presented himselfe, and stood vpon his defences, and in regard that the Gage of Combat was not receiued, but rather vtterly to be disannulled; therefore the said Regnaud was not receiueable in his demand. And first of all, because he confessed, that the Count had made the foresaid conspiracies, after the death of the said King Lewes our Soueraigne Lord, and had concealed them to this present: in which respect, he being a Liedge man to the King, owing him faith and sealtie, was (neuertheless) periured, faithlesse and infamous, in the concealing of such a fact, and so (by iust reason) Regnaud disabled of making any such demand, and therefore could not accuse the Count.

Further the Count propounded, that Regnaud had formerly cited and summoned him, vpon Gage of Combat, and yet (afterward) the same Regnaud had entreated leaue, to make agreement with the Count, without making any mention of the said conspiracies, and so to vs He had lied, and failed in his faith, and consequently, was infamous, and not to be accepted to Appeale the Count; the said Count requesting right to be done him in the case, which being granted to him; he ought not to answere the demands of Regnaud, because he should haue set downe in his Accusations, The yeare, the Moneth, and the Day, whereon these crimes had bin committed, and them he should haue propounded in his demaund.

Moreouer the Count alleadged, that Regnaud had made his demand alternatiuely, saying, that the Count had imagined, or caused to be imagined The Birth, and the Infant of another, and had held conference, or caused it to be held with the said Regnaud, of making a League with him: when such alternatiue demands auaile not for reason, neither ought to be admitted. But suppose that they were valuable, yet notwithstanding, Regnaud ought not to be accepted by way of Gage of Combat; whereupon the Count alleadged these reasons following.

That by the Royall Ordenances made, concerning Duelloes and Combats, no man ought appeale another man to the Combat: except the appealed and prouoked were suspected of the crimes proposed against him, and that by very likely indices it appeared, and the crimes were knowne to haue bin committed. The Count alleadged it as a matter notorious, and very manifestly knowne, that he had neuer bin suspected, nor defamed with any such crimes as were proposed against him, neither could it be likely, that he had committed any such things: in regard hee had bin alwayes honest, and carried himselfe faithfully, in discharging his duetie to vs, and to our Predecessours, Kings of France, in their Councels and Warres, and had bin, and still was of good fame.

In like manner the Count propounded, that by the fore-recited Ordenances, the crimes wherewith any one was to be accused, must be such, as death ought to ensue thereon. But according to right, reason and custome, the crimes proposed by Regnaud against the Count, were not any such, as by them any capitall paine ought to follow, suppose that the said crimes were true. For, admit the crime of supposing a false Birth, yet it is not such, that (being conuinced thereof) a man should thereby be condemned to a naturall death. And likewise in making a meeting and conspiracie, to the end of demanding liberties and franchises, such as Regnaud had declared; yet is it not any such crime, that punishment of death should ensue thereon, because they are not done against the Prince, nor against the safetie of his people, nor against his members, such as are his Royall Councellours.

Moreouer the Count affirmed, that in such occasions as these, the intent and will of the Appellant or Prouokant ought to be well considered. Because it might easily appeare, that Regnaud was not hereto moued by Iustice, or any other cause: but onely to haue the Vicountie of Touraine, and not for any other reason, and therefore he ought not to be admitted by way of Combat. And let it be supposed (without preiudice) that the Count had wil will to conferre with Regnaud and others, to haue such Priuiledges and Franchises, as hath bin said: yet were it no reasonable case, that he should therefore be prouoked to the Gage of Combat. For, although he was willing to request those Priuiledges and Franchises: yet notwithstanding, it remained in the will and pleasure of the King to grant them; for the will to request is of no worth, or can sort to any effect; except the authority of the King be thereto consenting. Whereby plainely appeareth, that the wilt of requesting priuiledges and immunities, falleth not to the Gage of Combat. But such a will as the Count had, according as himselfe affirmed, aimed not at any such case of crime, whereby the Combat should be granted: especially in such sort as Regnaud had auouched; but rather such a will, as no harme could haue followed thereon.

And moreouer the Count added, that by the course of those Ordenances it was appointed, that the case must be such, as not to be approued by witnesses: but the facts propounded by the said Regnaud against the Count, might be verified by witnesses. For the Count offered to make proofe, that his wife was truely great with childe, and had a Daughter, which Regnaud maintained to be falsely imagined: yet would he approue the Daughter to be hers, as hers it had bin nourished, and instituted by her will to be her heire, which cases being sufficiently to be proued, the Gage of Combat ought to cease. Likewise he said, that the assemblies and conspiracies alleadged by Regnaud against the Count, might lawfully iustifie themselues; because congregations doe presuppose a multitude of persons, because Regnaud had exposed in his demand, that the Count had spoken the same words to many persons, whereby, though each of those persons might speake as a singular witnesse, yet notwithstanding, it would sufficiently approue such a congregation and conspiracie, which being by witnesses sufficiently to be proued, the Gage for Combat ought not therefore to be accepted.

Furthermore the Count auouched, that he could make it euidently appeare, that the matters propounded by Regnaud, did no way touch him, or was to be laid to his charge, but onely in hatred and mallice, Regnaud had prouoked the Count to the Combat. And let it be supposed, that the Counteſſe was deceased, without any heires descended of her body: yet the Vicountie of Touraine could not come to Regnaud, because there were sixeteene other persons and more, who were neerer heires to the Counteſſe, then Regnaud was or could be. Hereunto the Count added, how, by the Royall Ordenances, the Case wherewith an accuser charged another man, ought to haue happened euidently: but it no way appeared, that the facts proposed against him by Regnaud, concerning the conspiracies imputed, that thereon had followed any end or effect.

Many other reasons were alleadged by the said Regnaud, and to what end they tended, adding withall, that concerning the confederacies and conspiracies, as a good and loyall Subiect to his Lord, he had reuealed them to our most deare Lord and Cousine King Phillip, who receiued of him many other matters beside. As the Count did the like on the contrary side, requesting, that vpon the defences and answers by him made; Iustice might be rendred and done vnto him by our said Court, and before his departure thence, he offred to defend himselfe competently, vpon the matters proposed by the said Regnaud against him, by the Gage of Battaile: which he gaue to our Court against Regnaud; those reasons and defences by him propounded and alleadged, alwayes reserued, wherein (before any thing else) the Count required to haue right done him.

Both the said Parties being diligently heard in our Court, vpon the cases before named, and what either side could say or propose: the Royall Ordenances perused ouer, which were alleadged by the Count, without making any mention of the offence of High-Treason, all things being duely and considerately examined, with whatsoeuer else could be moued to the Court, vpon mature and diligent deliberation: By Decree of our said Court it was said, that Regnaud was able to propound against the Count the things before said, and that to the demands by Regnaud against the Count, hee might and ought to make answere. And concerning the supposition of a false Birth, and other things touching the same onely, propounded by Regnaud against the Count: by Decree of the same Court; it was said, that Regnaud (in the case concerning that false supposition onely) should not receiue the Gage of Combat from our Court, that case onely admitted no Gage. And for the other matters proposed by Regnaud against the Count, concerning the crime of High-Treason: our Court, by the same Decree, receiued the Gage of Combat, and the Gages were adiudged, notwithstanding the cases alleadged and propounded by the Count.

In witnesse, &c. Giuen at Paris in our Parliament, the One and twentieth day of Ianuarie, in the yeare of Grace One thousand three hundred twentie and eight.

Signed Gien.

A case proued by witnesses alloweth no Gage of Combat.

This Decree is very remarkeable. By the Ordenance of King Phillip le Bel, there is no mention made but of the fourth Case, wherein the Gage of Combat is permitted. There is nothing spoken, concerning the Supposition of a Birth, which must and ought to be proued and verified by witnesses. Hereupon it was that the Court (out of their wonted and approued wisdome) would not admit the Gage of Combat. But concerning the crime of high Treason, the proiects whereof are wrought by subtile and cunning meanes, and that the Lord of Pons, he alone might haue had communication of the Conspiracie with the Count of Commenge: the Court adiudged the Gage of Battaile, as an order for following times, that in the case of Treason, periurie, and breach of Faith against the Soueraigne, the Gage of Combat is not to be refused or denied.

Count Bernard Portoit de Commenge, qui est de Gueulles, à quatre Otelles, ou Amandes pelee, d'Argent en Saultoir.

And for Regnaud, Lord of Pons: Il portoit d'Argent, à la Face, Bandee d'Or, & de Gueulles de six Pieces.

Concerning Plea of the Sword.

There are memorable Arrests and Decrees, both before and after this, concerning Gages of Combat, which in France they then called Placitum Ensis, The Pleas of the Sword. Wherein they are deceiued, that haue written concerning the Countie of Eu, a Peeredome of France, that the said Countie should appeale in suite to the Parliament of Normandie, because they say, that in the said Countie of Eu, there was (sometimes) Plea of the Sword, where was neuer practised, but onely in the Prouince of Normandie. Among the most memorable decrees, is this, set downe in Latine, but by me turned into French, for the ease of them that doe not vnderstand Latine.

Another notable Decree, concerning the Gage of Battaile or Combat.

The Case of Estouleau & Rochefort, and Raymond de Buada.

A Certaine cause had bin attempted in suite, before the Seneschall of Tolosa, and by Appeale in our Court of Parliament, where Estouleau de Rouchefort, Esquire, did propound that Raymond de Buada, Knight, was assigned a certaine day, by meanes of kinde friends to both the Parties: to the end, that a louing agreement might be made, in a matter of difference depending betweene them, vpon which day it was concluded, that they should meete there without any Armes. Neuertheless, Buada had by treason concluded, that twenty men should be armed in his House, to the intent of murdring the said Estouleau and his vnarmed companie, shut vp in the Church of the place appointed for the meeting. And wickedly and proditoriously, the said Buada had procured a man to be slaine, named William de Bombot, one of the others household seruants, cloathed with his Liuerie, and had prepared diuers ambushes, to surprize him at his best aduantage. All which he offered to approue, by his Body against the Body of Buada, and thereupon threw downe his Gage of Battaile.

On the Knights part was propounded the contrarie, who offred to purge and cleare his innocencie, in the same manner by the Gage of Combat. Vpon both these offers, we caused an Enquest to be impannelled, to vnderstand, if in such cases thus propounded, there might be desert of Gage of Battaile, according to the Royall Ordenances of our Predecessours. The enquirie hauing bin dilligently made by command of the Court; it was found, that this William (whom Estouleau had intended to be slaine, was liuing in good health, and that by confession of the said Estouleau, Buada was innocent. And that it was he himselfe with his company, that that came Armed at the day and Rendeuous agreed on by the Parties, and that Buada, with all them of his company, were come thither without any Armes: whereby Estouleau was cast in Law, hauing prouided so many Ambushes, to betray and intrap the life of the partie accused.

The Enquest hauing bin thus carefully made, and considered on by the said Court: Iudgement was publiquely pronounced and giuen, that Buada was innocent of the crimes imposed vpon him, and that Estouleau had rashly and vnaduisedly throwne downe his Gage of Combat, for which the Court could not finde place or allowance. But condemned him to pay to Buada, for his dammages, interests, costs and expences, whereat he had bin in prosecution of Iustice, as well before the Seneschall of Tolosa, as in the said Court of Parliament. Which interests and expences were taxed to the summe of fiue hundred Pounds Tournois, for paiment whereof, Estouleau was to be committed to Prison in the Chastelet at Paris, or any other Prison where Buada would appoint. Inter Inquestus & Processus. Iudged by the Court of Parliament, in the Octaues of our Lords Natiuitie, the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred and eight.

The sentence giuen against Estouleau de Rochefort.

I haue seene the Armes of Buada in Gascoigne, which were De Synople, a Trois pieds de Griffon d'Argent, deux en Chef, & vne en Pointe.

And as for them belonging to Rochefort, there are many appearing at the Parliament of Tolosa, but indeede their Armes are diuers.

A Case of iniury betweene two Esquires, for Cage of Combat.

Another Decree Registred in Latine, betweene William de Bois-Boisseau, and Iohn Inguet de Piennendrin, Esquire, and Complainant to the Court, because a quarrel being moued betweene them, they had iniured one another, and vpon those iniuries; the Seculer Iudge to the Bishop of Saint Brieu had ordained, that these Squires should determine the cause by Gage of Combat. Contradicting directly the Ordenance of King Phillip le Bel (who then reigned) made for the Gages of Battaile, and published throughout all the Prouinces of the Kingdome. For assurance of this Gage of Battaile, the Bishop of Saint Brieu had possessed himselfe of the Armes, Horses and Goods of the Complainants, and kept them till such time as (by a Seriant Royall) he was commanded to deliuer them, vpon good and sufficient Caution.

Sentence giuen against the Bishop of Brieu.

The Enquest considering on this matter, referring it to the Court to be iudged, and the Parties heard: It was said, that the Bishop of Saint Brieu had adiudged the Gage of Battaile, against the Ordenance of the King; whereby his proceedings were frustrated, and disannulled. He was commanded to redeliuer the Armes, Horses and Goods to the Complainants, and their Cautions discharged. Beside, the Bishop was condemned in a fine to the King, and appointed to appeare in person, at the Parliament on the first Friday, being fifteene dayes after Pentecoast. Iudged in the Parliament, in the Octaues des Brandons, at Paris, the yeare of Grace One thousand three hundred and eleauen, &c.

In matter and case of iniuries, no Gage of Battaile is to be admitted.

The Case of Daniel de Blide, & Guy de Grignan.

Another Decree Registred in Latine, betweene Daniel de Blide, Knight, Demander on the one side, and Guy de Grignan, Knight, on the other side. Because the said Daniel alleadged, that Guy was a Thiefe and periured Traitour, against Lewes, Count of Flanders and Henault, his Liedge Lord, which he offered to approue against the same Guy, by Gage of Battaile, and which he threw into the Court. Guy made answere in his owne defence, and auouched to declare by Gage of Battaile (which he also offred to the Court) of that he was an honest man, his cause being equally and iudicially heard; maintaining constantly, that no Gage of Battaile could be granted against him. The Parties being heard, and the Case deliuered according to Law: Daniel proposed against Knight Guye, that he was a Liedge-man, an Houshold Seruant, and Chamberlaine to the Count of Flanders, whom he had robbed of great goods and wealth: Hauing likewise committed diuers Sorceries and wicked acts of Witchcraft, to hinder the Count his Maister, from hauing familiar acquaintance with his Wife the Countesse, neither could haue it. Whereupon Daniel required, that Guy might be punished, if he did auouch and confesse the crimes imposed on him: but if he denied them, he offred to the Court his Gage of Battaile, to maintaine it Body to Body.

Gage of Combat disallowed on either side.

Against this demand, Guy defended, that before Daniel had accused him of these crimes, he deliuered sufficient clearing of this case, by Parties appointed according to Law: and therefore persisted still in his proofe, that there was no place for Gage of Battaile, neither was Daniel receiueable in his new demand, already ordered and ruled in the Court. So the Court by deliberate determination gaue iudgement, that the Gages of Battaile were nothing worth, offered by the said Daniel and Guy.

Pronounced the seauenth day of May, One thousand three hundred twentie and sixe.

Sorcerie ought to approue it selfe by Witnesses, and not by Indices. And as for Theft, it is the same; neither of the crimes admitting Gage of Battaile, according to the Ordenance of Duelloes, which hath bin formerly related.

Another Decree in French Registred, the Court adiudging the Gage of Battaile, without telling the cause, which carried these tearmes.

Gage of Battaile without telling the cause.

In the cause of Gage of Combat, Durfort moued in the Court, betweene Arnaud de Montaigue Appellant on the one part, and Emery de Durfort, Appealed and prouoked on the other. The Court by Decree receiued and admitted the Gages giuen by the said Parties, and to them adiudged the Gages.

Done in Parliament fift the day of May, One thousand three hundred and thirtie.

The said Montaigu Portoit de Gueulles à Trois Testes de Leopards arrachees d'Or, Deux en Chef, & vne en Pointe.

And the said Durfort de Gueulles à vne Bande & Bordure d'Or.

The Case of Vidale and Asperraut.

Another Decree Registred in Latine, betweene Vidale de Ville-neufue, Esquire, Demander and Complainant before the Seneschall of Tolossa, against Iohn d'Asperraut, Esquire, for the death of his Vnckle, Olricke de Langlade, whom he auouched to haue bin slaine and murdred by the said Appellant, and for proofe thereof, demanded Gage of Battaile. The Defendant maintaining the contrary, the Seneschall said, that there was place for Gage of Battaile, for which he was Appealed. Vpon hearing the parties, the Court affirmed, that the case had bin ill iudged by the Seneschall of Tolossa, or his Lieutenant: who should haue called the Appellant to mends making, because there was no place or reason for Gage of Battaile. This Decree was Registred in the Court of Parliament, in the Octaues of our Sauiours Natiuitie, One thousand three hundred thirtie and eight.

The Parliament censureth on Combats.

It would rise to an huge Volume, if I should obserue all the Decrees giuen vpon Gage of Battaile: wherefore we will rest satisfied, with the report of these few in diuers occasions, according as they were offred and demanded: Which doe clearely iustifie, that in matter of Combat, in what place soeuer of France the Parties doe dwell: the Court of Parliament at Paris, it onely taketh knowledge thereof, without any other permission, for fighting in the Duell or Combat.

A Combat in Limosin.

The Lord of Belay, in the first and eight Bookes of his Memories, maketh mention of a Duell performed in Limosin, by the Barons of Mye, and of Leſtanges, against the Lord of Peschell, aged threescore and ten yeares, and full of the Gout, and his Son Pasiiat, Baron of Gimell, and Viscount de Chastillon, who were Conquerours, Mye and Loſtanges being slaine in the Field. But because he relateth not, whether the Duell was done by Decree of the Court, or of the King; I forbeare to speake of the perticularities, wherewith I was made acquainted at Bourdeaux.

Another famous Combat

I let slip also vnder silence (because the discourse is too common and vulgar) the last Combat, fought in the time of our Fathers at Saint Germaine in Laye, the tenth day of Iuly, One thousand fiue hundred fortie and seauen, before King Henry the second, and by his permission: Betweene Guy Chabot, Lord of Iarnac, and Frances de Vivonne, Lord of Chastaigneraye, Gentlemen of the Countrie of Angomois; whose Armes are obserued at the Title of Knights of the Order of the Holy-Ghost.

Of

Of Duelloes and Combates, in what manner they were ordered and managed among the Germaines.

Cities and places ordained for Combates

THe Allemaignes or Germaines, by example, and in imitation of the French, had places, Townes and Cities, destinated likewise for their Duelloes and Combates performed at the Sharpe and vtmost extremity of life (as also for their Iousts and Tourneyes, whereon, by Gods assistance, we will discourse in the Tracte next following.) As namely the Townes and Cities of Wirtzbourg, in Orientall France, Onolpach, in the Bunggrauiat of Nuremberg: And of Halleſſon in Saxonie.

The forme of demanding to haue Combate granted

Before the Senates of which places, such Noble men, as pretended their offences; presented themselues, and demaunded to haue Combate in an enclosed Field. The forme of Answere, made by the Senate to such a motion and demaund, carried these tearmes.

We haue receiued your Letters, and are very sorie to see, that your hearts are so moued with rancour and hatred, as it seemeth you beare to one another. In which regard, we pray you, that you would desist from Combate, if it may be; and that you would end your Quarrels by the way of gentleneſſe and gentleneſſe, without the aduenture of Liues, prouocation and without shedding humaine bloud. Consent to our request, and so much the rather, because we entreate you thereto most instantly.

The answere made by the Senate.

If they persiuered in their spleene, continuing still in claiming Combate, and the Field for Battayle: the Senate then vsed this forme of Iudgement.

The forme of iudgement giuen by the Senate.

Seeing that you shall persist in your hatred and challenge, and that the way of gentleneſſe, can haue no course of kindneſſe betweene you: wee doe order and appoynt, that you shall appeare in such a day before vs, to heare the ground and subiect of your Quarrell, wherein we meane to doe you Iuſtice.

The day of Battayle giuen.

At the day assigned, the Parties being hard, and no meanes might preuaile, to end the difference betweene them louingly: the Senate then appointed them a certaine, day for meeting together, and graunting them the Field of Battayle, taking the future Combatants into the protection and safeguard of the Senate.

The Parties being come to the Rendez-vous, or place appointed; the Senate caused them to take the Oathes, as in such cases is accustomed and required; the one not to bring with him any greater traine of attendants, then the other, conformable to the auncient Statutes of Combates, established by the Senate.

Prouision made for the Combattants.

Soone after, in the great Market place, or some other found out to be more commodious, is the Field for Combate ordained: which they engirt with Barres or Listes, and couer it with Sand all ouer.

For the two Combatants are erected two Tents or Pauillions, capable of receiuing the men and their traine. In each of them is placed a Biere and Coffin, Foure Candl sticks and Foure Tapers lighted, a Crosse, and Hearse Cloth for the dead, with all things else, fitting for Obsequies and Funerall of the dead. And each of them hath a Priest to be his Confessour, who commeth thither by the Parties owne appointment, with his Godfathers and Councell.

Equality of weapons and Armes.

Like Armes (without any difference) are giuen them to fight and defend themselues withall, as well on Horseback, as on Foote: such as the Parties had agreed on, and were specified at the time of requiring the Combate.

Especiall prohibitions.

The Herauld or King of Armes (on behalfe of the Senate) publisheth by Proclamation the prohibitions to all there present, for crying, speaking, coughing, spetting or making any signe to either of the Combatants: on payne to haue their right hand and left foot cut off, by the Maister of the high workes, that is the Hangman.

Afterward, the Citty Gates are fast lockt vp, the streets Chayned, and the Barres or Lists round enclosed.

Oathes in the Field.

The Combatants are brought before the Iudges of the Field, appointed by the Senate, with their Confessors and Godfathers, where they sweare the accustomed Oaths Oaths of not hauing or wearing about them, either Hearbes, Charmes or any Carracters. The Herauld proclaimeth three time: To let the Valiant Combattants goe to the performance of their duty. The Party Victorious winneth the Honour of the Combate, and the Vanquished Party remaineth infamous all the rest of his life time afterward: being neuer suffered to mount any more on Horsebacke, to carry Armes, or to be present in any publique assembly, but to haue his Beard close shauen. Imployed in Charges and Offices.

Disgraces of the Vanquished.

If he bee slaine in the Field: hee shall haue Honorable buriall; and his death cannot be preiudiciall to them, that are of his descent and Family.

The Third Tracte discourseth on Iusts, Tourneys and Tournaments: their Originall and Continuance from time to time.

CHAP. V.

The errour of some Historians.

SOme Authours haue written, that the inuention of Iousts and Tourneyes came out of Allemaigne or Germanie, and that they began in the time of Henry, Sirnamed the Birder, Duke of Saxonie and Emperour, First of the name: which is a populare errour, not hauing any subsistance, but only grounded on a meere false opinion and beleefe.

The Histories of Germanie doe report, that at returne from the voyage, which the same Emperour made into Hungarie against the Hunnes, who rauaged and spoyled the frontiers thereof; he sought the meanes, to moulde and harten the Germaines mindes, in matters of Military Discipline, and how to manage well a Horse for future seruices. Which vertuous and notable kinde of instruction, he propounded to such Lords and Princes of Germanie, as were vnder his obedience, for making themselues apte and ready to Iousts and Tourneyes. But this seemed a harlhe, vnpleasing and impossible proposition, yea, it exceeded the apprehension of the greatest men in his Court: because such Military kindes of exercises, had neuer bin seene, knowne, nor practised in Germanie.

The Emperours forwardnes, and his peoples vnaptnesse.

And because this was the ordenarie exercise of the French and English: Decreuit idem Imperator gratificaturus Hospitibus suis Morem Germanis adeum diem insolitum, sed nobilitati Galliæ, Britanniæque vtilatum inducere, solemnibus Legibus Equestri decursione certandi; inuitatis ad hoc ad certum Diem, per Edictum, Vicinis, Eternisque Principibus, Comitibus, Nobilibus, qui de Virtute propria tantum confiderent, vt in conspectu honoratissimo, alienam periclitari non pertimescerent.

The same Emperour decreed, to bring in a Custome of running at the Tilt by solemne ordynances, at that time vnknowne to the Germaines, but vsuall with the Nobility of France and England, inuiting thereunto (by Proclamation at a certaine day) those Princes, Earles, and Nobles both far and neere, who did so much stand vpon their owne valour, that they feared not in a most Honorable Assembly, to make triall of other mens.

The French and English skilfull in these Noble Exercises.

So speaketh Franciscus Modius of Bruges, in his Pandectes Triomphales, a Booke of singular good reading: Printed in Folio a Franeford on the Moein, by Sigismond Feyrabeno, in Anno One thousand, fiue hundred, fourescore and sixe.

For obtayning then a knowledge and light, in the Lawes and Ceremonies of these Noble Exercises: he attayned thereto by a Secretary of his commaundes, named Phillip, who had long time trauayled into farre distant Countreyes and Prouinces, and namely into the Kingdomes of France and England, where he had often times seene Running at the Ring by Noblemen, who were very skilfull in the first Exercise, of ryding and managing a Horse: And likewise Combatting at the Barriers, riers, with the other braue exercises of Tilting, Iousts and Tourneyes.

Vpon his relation made to the Emperour, he gaue charge to the Palatine of the Rhine, the Duke of Bauaria, and the Duke of Franconia (with whom he ioyned as an Assistant, Phillip the Secretary of his Commaunds) to set downe in writing such Articles, as were necessary for the establishing of so Noble an Exercise, and according as they were practised in the Kingdomes of England and France. Vpon their often meetings together, these Articles following were agreed on, and deliuered to Henry the Birder, and afterward published openly in his Court.

The Commissioners appointed with the Secretary.

The Articles agreed on, by the Commissioners, concerning the most Noble Exercises of Tilting, Iousts and Tourneyes.

The exercise appointed at euery three yeres.

I. FIrst, that in following time, a Custome should be obserued and kept in Germanie, and the Countreyes thereto belonging, from Three yeares to Three yeares, (at the least) to celebrate Iousts and Tourneyes for exercise, and to know the Nobility resorting to them. That all Princes, Lords, Barons, and Gentlemen of Noble extraction, being well Armed and Honourably accoustred, should be welcome to them. From these Tourneyes were to be excluded, all such as could be detected of blaspheming the Great and Sacred name of God, the most Holy Trinity, and Christian Catholique Religion. If any such persons, (standing vpon the Nobility of their extraction) durst be so bold, as to present themselues in this Assembly: We ordaine, Will, and it is Our pleasure; that they shall be dismounted, and depriued of their Horses and Launces. And, as a noate of infamy for euer after, so long as the Tourney shall endure: such a one must ride vpon the Barres or Rayles, as a man exposed to the scorne of the whole Assembly.

Wrong against the Emperour.

II. Whatsoeuer person of the Nobility, that shall (aduisedly and wilfully) speake euill of the Emperours person blame or contemne his Ordenances and Commandes, and resist against them in deed or word: he shall bee ignominiously expulsed from the Tourney, loose his Horse, and ride the Rayles.

Preseruation of Womens honor.

III. Any man of the Nobility, that shall outrage or abuse (by word or deed) the honor of a Wife, Maide or Widdow, and shall possesse himselfe (by force and violence) of their goods and possessions, or shall giue ayde and helpe, to such as shall so wrong and abuse them: he shall loose his Horse, and ride the Rayles.

Gentlemen conuicted of crimes.

IIII. From these Tourneyes are likewise excluded, all Gentlemen attainted and conuinced of Crimes, either of Falshood, Periurie, or breach of faith. Whosoeuer being such an offender, shall dare to present himselfe within the Lists: it is the losse of his Horse, and riding the Rayles.

For treachery perfidie and cowardise

V. Whosoeuer hath betrayed his Lord, and by fraude or craft hath forsaken him, either in going, being there, or returning from Warre, or else hath perswaded his Lords seruants to doe so: Whosoeuer hath not assisted and defended his fellow-Citizen, his Seruants or other persons, (that did put themselues into his safegard and protection) from all iniustice and violence, but hath counselled and procured the contrary, and by feare and cowardise, by intelligence and wicked practise, left and forsooke them, when hee ought and might haue protected and defended him or them: For euer he is to be excluded from Iousts and Tourneys. But if hee dare presume to present himselfe at any; as a manifest noate of shame and infamie, he must loose his Horse, and ride the Rayles.

For treason in a man to his Wife, and to his Soueraigne.

VI. Whosoeuer shall haue procured the death of his Wife, or practised and giuen consent thereto. Whosoeuer also hath fauoured, giuen councell, or lodged the murderers of his Soueraigne Lord, either before, or after his death: Hee shall (to all perpetuity) stand banished from these Tourneys, with the losse of his Horse, and riding the Rayles in sted thereof.

Against Sacriledge and robbing widowes and Orphanes

VII. Whosoeuer hath perpetrated or committed Sacriledge, and despoyled sanctified places of their goods and riches: Or hath vsurped by force and violence, those belonging to Widdowes and Orphanes, without making restitution (vices which

which ought to be reproued, and punished aboue any other, especially in a Gentleman of Honor) He is to be expulsed from these Iousts, after he hath lost his Horse, and ridden the Rayles.

Of vniust pursuing an enemie.

VIII. Whosoeuer shall surprize his enemy by treason, either before hee hath challenged him, or after, and shall pursue him in any other sort, then as is allowed by the lawes of Warre; burning his Houses and Grandges, tearing vp his Vines and Corne, by meanes whereof, dearth of these fruits of the earth, may bring hurt and damage to the Common-Wealth: Whosoeuer also, either by himselfe, or some other by his intelligence, shall lye theeuishly lurking, and waiting on the high-ways for him: Omnes hi, adempto equo, Septis pro eo, insidere cogantur.

Against oppression and extortion.

IX. Whosoeuer shall oppresse his Subiects or Seruants, with nouell imposi-ons, Taxes and Subsidies, either by Land or water (without the knowledge and permission of his chiefe Soueraine Lord) for augmenting and encreasing his owne priuate demeanes: And whosoeuer in the lands and Marches vnder his Gouernemen, shall impose any taxation vpon forraigne commodities, by meanes whereof, Strangers shall be robbed and ill entreated, and Traffick and Commerce hindered: Cum infamiæ nota, adempto, Septis imponatur.

Against adultrie and lewde life.

X. Whosoeuer (being maried) shall be conuicted of Adultery: If he be a Widdower, and shall maintaine a married Wife, a Religious Sister, or a deuout Woman: If he be shall be a Messenger to the Low-Countries of Women, or of deuoted Sisters, or Nunne s, or forcibly taketh them for his vse: Let him be banished for euer, from the Noble Assembly of Iousts and Tourneys, depriued of his Horse, and sent away in a Shirt of Maile, or set to ride on a Woodden Hobby-Horse.

Against base minded couetousnesse.

XI. If any one of Noble Extraction, being not satisfied with such goods, as came to him by birth, Kinred and Inheritance, or otherwise wonne and conquered, or by Wadges and Pensions from his Prince; but shall make himselfe a Farmer of goods, fruites or commodities of any other, vnder borrowed names, because he dare not himselfe auouch it: : He is (for euer) to bee banished from this Noble Assembly of Iousts and Tourneyes. But if his bouldnesse maketh him to presume thither, and is seene there: Equo Multatus, Septa cogatur inscendere.

Of made-Noblemens presuming.

XII. If any man shall present himselfe at a Iousts and Tourneye, vnder shadow and pretence, that he hath bin ennabled by his Prince, and therefore presumeth to Marche equall, and as a Peere with them of Aancient Nobility, and cannot be iustified by his owne Birth in the Fourth degree, by the Fathers Stock, or by the Mothers side at the least: Such a Gentleman of the first Edition ought to be beaten with Roddes and Swiches, his Horse taken from him, and he to ride the Rayles.

Quisquis recentioris sit notæ Nobilis, & non talis vt à stirpe Nobilitatem suam, & originem quatuor saltem generis Auctorum Proximorum Gentilitiis Insignibus, probare possit. Is quoque Ludis his & Decursionibus Equestribus existo. Aut si Vnus, Pluresue emendicatæ huiusmodi Nobilitatis, cum ijs, quibus iuris est decurrendi, sese permiscuerint, Hi talis verberibus multentur, ex hastiludiorum consuetudine plectentur, & vbi de Equo concurrerint, Septis, notae causa incequitare adigantur.

Whatsoeuer Nobleman being but of a late stampe, and not such a one, as can proue his Nobility and beginning, from the first foundation (at least) by foure customary Armes of the last Aduancers of his pedigree: Let him also bee exempted from these pastimes and Tournaments. Or if one or more of this begged-kind of Nobility, shall sort themselues with those, to whom the right of Tilting appertaineth; let such bee punished with stripes, bee kept from frequenting these Tournaments, and whereas they should haue Iousted together on Horseback, let them be forced to ride vpon a Staffe, or the Railes, that they may be noted from the rest.

The first appointed place of meeting at Magdebourg.

According to these Artices and Statutes, the first Assembly or meeting was resolued on, and appointed to be at Magdebourg, where the Lists and Barres for the Field were prepared; as well for Iousts at the Lance, man to man, and Running at the Ring, as the Barriers and Tournaments of Companies on Horseback. The Scaffoldes, (which our Romaines called Hourds) for the Emperour (defrayed at the cost of the Assembly) for the Princes and Princesses of the traine; for the Iudges of the Field, whom the Germaines named and called Kings of the Sportes; for the Se-natours

natours and Bourgo-Maisters, of the place where the meeting was made, fairely hung with Tapistries, and adorned with the Armes of the Emperour, the Iudges of the Field, and the assigned Citty; with the place and Scaffold for the Kings Heraulds and Pourseuants of Armes, Trompets, Dromes and Fises.

Appointment of the day and place.

The day for perfourmance of these Iousts and Tournaments, was proclaimed by the King of Armes, or Herauld of the Prouince; and the place of the meeting, as well without as within the said Prouince: And said to be in the safegard, protection and defence of the Emperour, or of the Prince that caused the Assembly. With Prohibition vpon paine of death, to all Heretiques, euill members against the Faith, with all Theeues, Banished persons, and such as haue bin detected by Iustice, to come neere be Round by the space of Tenne miles.

Publique Proclamation for committing offences.

Eight dayes before the beginning of the Iousts and Tournements, a generall Proclamation was made, which we tearme A publique Crye; whereby was forbidden to any man, of what quality or degree soeuer he were; to commit any trespasse and offence (either by word or deed) vpon the penalty of paying twenty Markes of Money, which pecuniarie punishment was applicable to the Iudges of the Tourney: with the confiscation of Armes and Horses, which appertained to the King, Heraulds and Pourseuants of Armes.

No man was to outrage and defame the Honour of Ladies, Gentlewomen and their Daughters: vpon paine of imprisonment, and Arbitrary amends.

That no Gentleman should presume to the Tourney, or to run at the Ring: if he were not a Gentleman of three descents at the least, as well by the Fathers side, as the Mothers.

Disgraces arising to Noble Gentlemen by bade marriages.

Euery, or any Gentleman of Noble extraction, presenting himselfe at the Tourney; that had maried for couetousnesse, or delight in a Woman of meane condition: was to be switched with wands, like to a Peazant and villaine, despoyled of his Armes and adornements, his Horse and Furniture taken from him, and he to ride the Barres or Rayles, so long as the Assembly lasted. At the ending whereof, he was to be proclaimed by the King or Herauld of Armes, incapable and vnworthy (for euer after) to appeare among Noble men: his Children and descendants borne, and to be borne, so farre as to the third degree; to be declared as Boores and infamous, excluded and prohibited from Noble Assemblies, vpon indicted penalties.

Duty to be done after admission.

That all such as were receiued and admitted into the Assembly, stood bound, to confesse their sinnes to such Priests, as were appointed by the Bishop of the place: After they had presented their Helmets, Armes and deuises to the Iudges of the Assembly: who caused their Admission to be faithfully Registred, with their Names, Armes and Seigneuries; as also the furnishment or Equipage, and traine.

Or presentation to the Iudges.

And to this effect, they which were admitted to be in the Tourney, stood likewise by Oathe obliged, to present themselues to the Iudges, and perticulerly to him of his Iurisdiction and Prouince: to the end, of being matriculated in the Registler of Noblemen of the same Prouince, in the presence & conduct of the King of Armes, or Heraulds thereunto belonging. By whom hee must be forbidden, to furnish himselfe with any vnfitting Horse, which may offend such as are, or shall be neere him: vpon paine of loosing him, as also his Armes and other furnishments.

For hurtfull or offensiue Armes, either for their sharpnesse, or the by standers.

Forbidding bringing into the said Assembly, any Armes offensiue, but only the Club and Sword, custommably vsed by a man on Horseback Aptata sua Arma habeat, vt Nemini nocere possint, aut extantibus acuminibus, præacutisque extremitatibus quemquam ledere valeant. Talis etiam non alijs vtantur, quam Clavi Equestri, & Gladio. Let him haue his Armes so fitted and prepared, that they may not be hurtfull to themselues, or to any other of the by-standers, in any manner whatsoeuer. Let him vse also no other Weapons, then a Knights Battaile Axe or Club, and a Sword. They may vse a Lance with a blunted head, to Iouste each against other, that it may not be dangerous or harmefull to either: but not with a sharpened head. And for running at the Ring, the pointe must be rebated.

As for the equipage or furnishment for the day, it is to be prescribed by the Kings of the Tourney, in such manner as it ought to be.

Allowance for presentation at the Tourney in their degrees.

A Count may presēt himselfe there with fiue men on Horsebacke, himselfe making the sixt man, but not to haue any more.
A Baron may haue foure Horses.
A Knight three: And An Esquire with two.

Except they will entertaine and pay an ouer-plus of Men & Horses at their owne coste and expences: but not to be defrayed by the Prince, that occasioneth the meeting, and by monies from the common Purse; excepting also the Nobilitie of such a Circle or compasse, at whose expences such an assembly is to be, and may be in like manner made.

The Oathe giuen vpon these occasions

Such were the Satutes of these disportfull meetings, where Oath was giuen to all such as came thither: but perticularly they were to depose, to forget and set apart all hatred and rancour, which formerly they had, or instantly bare to one another, vpon any subiect or occasion whatsoeuer. And hereupon it came, that offensiue Armes were prohibited, except the Sword, the ordenarie and vsuall Armes for a Knight and Souldiour.

Of the Knights Club or Battle-Axe.

Now, as concerning the Knights Club or Battaile-Axe, all them that haue written of Iousts and Tourneyes, haue let it sleepe in silence, and what the fashion of it was. We will therefore set downe such a one, as the French (from all Antiquitie) carried, according to the testimonie of the Monke of Saint Gall in Swetia, in the life of our King and Emperour Charlemaigne.

Erat Antiquorum ornatus, & paratura Francorum Claua, & Baculus de arbore Malo, nodis paribus admirabilis, rigidus, & terribilis, cuspide manuali ex Auro, vel Argento cum cælaturis insignibus præfixo portabatur in Dextera. Their Club or Battle-Axe was a Staffe of Crab-tree, heauie and very knottie, the haft or handle whereof was garnished with Gold or Siluer, Damasked with diuers Figures and Deuises.

So that although it was an ordenarie Armes of a French Knight; yet neuertheless, it was both to offend and defend; and euermore at these Tourneyes, there would be some one peeuish and froward humorist, with one of these Battle-Axes, as we shall speake of hereafter more at large.

Sport with the Battle-Axe called Changing of Cuffes.

After these Tournements were thus performed in grosse, by the Assistants armed at all points, with their Coates of Armes, worne vppermost of all: then each man might deale with his Companion at the blunted Lance. Or else they would challenge one another, two to two, or else a certaine number of one Circuit or Prouince, smiting at each other with blowes of the Battle-Axe, to lay one another vpon the ground; which in our Romancers was tearmed Changing of Cuffes. And namely in that of Merlin the Prophet, whom they feigne to be Enchanted in a goodly Garden, there to remaine till the worlds ending; by the Lady of Lauall in Bretaigne, she being his Loue-Mistresse: Qui portoit de Gueulles, à Cinq Coquilles d'Argent. 3. 2.

The manly Exercise of fighting at the Barriers.

These Barriers with Battle-Axes, were performed by troupes and multitudes within compasse of the Barres; each man being guided by foure Deputies, to keepe the Champions in their ranke and order. Foure other also beside, guarded the entrance into the Barriers, for directing the Champions to their Tourney, and winning the Barrier from his Contrary, according as they deale in the Bars. Which Barriers were not enclosed fast, but onely with strong Cords, which the Guards vsed to cut in sunder when it was due time, and made the signale of retreate to such, as had sped worst in this manly exercise: whom our Romancers tearmed Faire performers, but ill Speeders, that is to say; Faire goers on, but foule commers off; as being astonned with the blowes, or out of breath, some being smitten downe with the Battle-Axe, and others almost stifled in the crowdes. And oftentimes, by being not well mounted on their Horses, were ouer-borne by others better mounted, and trampled vnder-foote. Those to whom such ill successe happened in the Tourney, had their bummes well Sealed vpon the Barre, and afterward were compelled to ride it, bare headed, without Armes, onely his Coate of Armes excepted; to be knowne of all the Assembly, for such a Knight, or such an Esquire, vnskilfull in Armes, or sitting his Horse.

Disgraces happening in the Barriers.

After

After this Sport of Tourney and Barriers, the Germaines (for their last exercise in these Tournaments) came to manage the Sword, not for any offence to bloud; but to cut the Leather straps or thongs, and make the Armes of his Contrary fall from him in the Field, for aduauntage and benefit to the Heraulds. For it belonged to them and the Iudges, before the beginning of the Tourney (which ordenarily lasted Fifteene dayes) to visite and reuisite their Armes, and the furnishment of such as were admitted to the Tourney, and making the ignorant or ill Armed, to ride the Barre.

Managing of the Sword, but not to bloud.

This last Exercise being done, they went to Suppe at the generall Banquet, each man to that of his owne Circuite or Prouince: where the Ladies, as well married, as Widdowes, and yonger Gentlewomen, applauded the praises of them, whom the Iudges had commended for fairest performance; & deliuered the Prizes, which were ordained by the Prince that made the Tourney. An Act thereof is made, Signed then, one King of Armes, and two Heraulds (at the least) of euery Prouince.

Supper at the generall Banquet.

The thankfull gratitudes, and Dauncing.

Afterwards, thankes is giuen and returned on all sides, as well to the Prince, that defraied the charges of so solemne an Assembly; as to the Iudges of the Tourney, and them that carried away the Honour, by commendation of well deseruing. Then began the Dances, wherein the Ladies and Gentlewomen extended their gracefull fauours to the Champions: who led them in the Dance, to the end, that Feminine Nobilitie might pertake in the Exercise of Honour, as well as that of Men.

Who were diffenced with for presence at these Tourneys.

From being present in these Iousts and Tourneyes, dispensation was granted to Kings, Princes, Dukes and high Barons. Regiæ, Ducalis, & Principalis dignitatis persone ab his ludis Equestribus se abstinent, quoniam Reges sui Regni Corona, Principes, & Duces Serto caput adumbrare contenti, non solent, Perinde vt alij, in his Ludicris pugnis decertare, nec vlli Sodaletati se inserire debent. Persons bearing the Dignity of King, Duke, and Prince, may abstaine from these Tournaments; because Kings being content to adorne their heads with the Crownes of their Kingdomes, Princes and Dukes with a Garland or Wreath; are not wont (as others) to contend in these Tilting sports, nor ought to ioyne themselues to any society. They ought not expose themselues to such Exercises; but onely take pleasure in beholding them, and to giue presents to them, who are iudged to be best worthy of recompence.

What number of Iousts, Tourneys and Triumphall Tournaments, haue bin held and perfourmed in Germanie, vpon seuerall dayes and meetings.

CHAP. VI.

Meidenbourg in Germany.

THe First Assembly or meeting, for these Triumphall Exercises, was held (as we haue already said) by the Emperour Henry, Sirnamed the Birder, being First of the name, and Duke of Saxonie: On the first Sunday after the Feast of the Three Kings, in the yeare of Grace, Nine hundred thirtie eight, and in the Citie of Magdebourg.

The Armes of the Citie.

The said Emperour Henry, Portoit de l'Empire, that is to say, D'Or, à l'Aigle Esploye de Sable, Brize de Saxe, qui est de Gueulles, au Cheual gay tourne d'Argent.

Magdebourg, a Citie in the Dukedome of Saxonie, called in Latine Parthenopolis, and dedicated to Venus: Porte de Gueulles, au Portail d'vn Chasteau Tourele, & Crenele d'Argent, Massonne de Sable, la Porte Hersee de mesme. Whereon appeareth halfe a Maide or Damosell, cloathed with Azure, holding in her right hand a Chaplet of all kindes of Floures, and the other hand by her side.

We shall heere obserue, by a most exact search; and vnspeakable trauaile, the Armes, Blazons, Tymbres, Lambrequins and Creasts, belonging to the Kings of those Tourneys, and we will deliuer them according to trueth. Because Modius in his Triumphall Pandects, hath represented nothing but Shields, cut in Wood, and the most part of them wanting, supposing some by other: but without declaring the Blazons and Coullers, which is the matter only most necessary. The noble Reader may be beholding to me for it, and Modius corrected by this perfected Exemplaire: Deus nobis haec otia fecit.

Kings of the Tourney, Iudges of the Field.

The Foure Kings of this first Tourney, (speaking according to the manner of the Germaines, whom we in France tearme Iudges of the Field) were these Knights following.

Charles, Lord of Hohenhowen, of the Circle or Prouince of Suauba: Qui portoit d'Or, Couppe de Sable a vne Estoile d'Argent (the Germaines make all the Starres to haue Sixe Rayes or beames, and the French graunt but Fiue) Mezail, Tarre de front, Cimier vn Proboscide d'Elephant, d'Argent couppe de Sable, de l'vn en l'autre, lié d'vn lacs d'Amour de mesme. Lambrequins d'Or, & les replis de Sable.

Meinolphe, Lord of Erbach, of the Circle of the Rhine. Qui Portoit Couppe de Gueules, & d'Argent, a Trois Estoiles, Deux en Chef d'Argent, & celle de la pointe de Gueules, Escartele (correcting Modius, who nameth there no quartering at all) d'Argent a deux Faces de Gueules. Mezail, Tarre de fronts Cimier, Deux Trompes (which wee tearme the Creast of an Elephant, or Trunck of an Elephant) Couppe de Gueules, & d'Argent a deux Estendards de Gueules en Saultoir: les Lances d'Or, Lambrequins d'Or, & les replis de Gueules.

George, Lord of Wolmershausen (correcting Modius both in Sirname and Armes) of the Circle and Prouince of Bauaria: Qui portoit de Gueules, a deux Faces d'Argent, Mezail, Tarre de front, tourne, Cimier, Chappeau pointu a la Persienne, componne d'Argent & de Gueules. Six plumes a la pointe, le rebord du Chappeau de Gueules, Lambrequins d'Argent, doublez de Gueules.

In Germanie there is an Illustrious Familie, bearing the Sirname of Lauming d'Erbschenckn: Qui porte de Geueules, a vne Face de Sable, Bordee, ou Iumelee d'Argent; Escartele de Gueules, au Lyon d'Or, enserre dans vn Treillis d'Argent. Double Mesal Tarrez. Le Premier, a pour Cimier, vn Lyon tourne seant d'Argent, Coronne d'Or, au Pennache de trois plumes d'Argent, Gueules d'Argent. Lambrequins, Argent & Gueules. Le Deuxiesme Mesal Coronne a pour Cimier l'Escart de cest Escu, c'est adire le Lyon enserre, en figure Exagone, a Cinq plumes, trois d'Argent, & deux de Gueules. Lambrequins d'Argent, & de Gueules. Modius hath taken one Sirname for another.

That is to say, the Lyon wounded in a figure Sixcornered.

Ernestus de Grumbach, of the Circle and Dukedome of Franconia: Qui portoit d'Or, a vn Ethiopien tourne de Sable, tenant vne Banquet de mesme, Tymbre tourne, Cimier Vol tourne d'Or. Lambrequins d'Or, double de Sable.

The Second Tourney.

A countrey of Germanie, betweene Hassia and Sweuia.

WHich was celebrated by Conrad, Duke of Franconia (that is Orientall France) and at his costly expences; in the Citty of Rotenbourg, it being the chiefest in Franconia. On the Sunday after the Feasts of the two Saints Simon and Iude; in the yeare of Grace, Nine hundred, forty and two.

This Conrad (Sonne in Law to the King of Germanie, Henry, Sirnamed the Birder) Portoit de Franconia, qui est couppe, endenchee d'Argent, de Gueulés en Chef, Mesal Tarre, & Coronne d'vn Chappeau, Cimier deux Cornes d'Elephant, couppe d'Argent, & de Gueules. Lambrequins de mesme.

The Foure Kings of the said Tourney, were these Knights following.

Frederick, Count of Helfenstein, of the Circle of Suauba. Qui portoit Escartelé, le Premier de Gueules, a l'Elephant tourne d'Argent, sur vn Terasse d'Or. Le Quatriesme esme a l'Elephant demesme. Le second & Troisiesme d'Or, a vne Barre hochtee de Gueules. Deux Tymbres affrontez. Le Premier a pour Cimier, vne Teste d'Elephant, tournee d'Argent. Les Lambrequins d'Argent, & de Gueules remployez de l'vn en l'autre, selon l'Art. Le Second a pour Cimier vn Col naissant, tourné d'Or, le Col percé d'vne Virole d'Or a deux queues de Paon. Lambrequins d'Or & de Gueules, doublez de l'vn en l'autre. Heere correct Modius, who giueth no quartering at all.

Thibelt, Count of Andechs, of the Circle of Bauaria, Couppe du Coste du Chef, d'Argent au Lyon passant de Gueules. Et en pointe d'Azur, a l'Aigle tourné d'Or. Tymbre tiré tourné. Cimier Coronné, au Pennache de Cinq plumes. Lambrequins d'Or, & d'Azur.

Lewes, Count of Sarwerden, of the Circle of the Rhine. De Sable, a l'Aigle d'Argent, Armé de Gueules. Mesal Tarre, Cimier, Leurier naissant d'Argent. Lambrequins d'Argent & de Sable.

Lewes, Count of Eberstein, of the Circle of Franconia; d'Argent, a vne Rose de Gueules, Escartele d'Or, au Sanglier tourne de Sable, sur vne Terrasse de Sinople. Deux Mesals affrontez & Coronnez. Le Premier a pour Cimier deux Proboscides d'Argent, tenans de Quatre Lances de Bague chacun de mesme, a vne Rose de Gueules au Mitan. Lambrequins d'Argent & de Gueules. L'autre a pour Cimier vn Bus d'Euesque tourné, vestu de Gueules, a vne Rose d'Argent, mitré d'Argent, aux fanons de Gueules. Lambrequins d'Argent, & de Gueules.

Lawes Count of Sarwerden his Armes.

Lewes Count of Eberstein his Armes.

Now, concerning the Armes of the Citty of Rotenbourg, seated by Modius on the Ritter of Taubr, called in Latine Tuber, giuing it a Castell, or else the Porte and Hauen of a Citty: Correct that, for it is mistaken, setting downe the Armes of Rotenburg vpon the Neckre, for those of Rotenbourg vpon the Taubr. Which are d'Argent, a vn Aigle de Sable, Brisé d'Argent au Portail, ou Chasteau garny de deux Tours de Sable, Massonné d'Argent.

The true Armes of the Citty.

The Third Tourney.

WAs held at the charges of Ludolphe, Duke of Suauba, in the Citty of [b] Constance, on the First Sunday after the Feast of All-Saints; in the yeare of Grace, Nine hundred, forty and eight.

[b] A Citie in Germany by Austrige.

This Ludolphe Portoit de Suauba, qui est d'Or, a Trois Leopards de Sable. Mezal Tarre, Coronne de front. Cimier, vn Aigle de Sable, Lambrequins d'Or, & de Sable.

The Kings of this Tourney were these Knights.

Frederick de Hirnheim (correcting Modius in the Sirname) of the Circle of Suauba, D'Argent, au Massacre de Cerf de Gueules. Mezal Tarre (the Germaines doe hole the most part of their Helmets in the front, but others are turned on the right side, according to the Perspectiue of Armes) & Coronne. Cimier, Deux Proboscides d'Elephant. L'vne d'Argent, & l'autre de Gueules. Lambrequins. Idem.

Constans, a Citty seated on the Lake of Ackron; beareth D'Argent, a la Croix plaine de Sable.

The Armes of Constans.

The Fourth Tourney.

A Citty by Sibus in Germanie.

WAs celebrated by Ridack, Marqueſſe of * Miſnia, in the Citty of Mertſpourg: the Firſt Sunday after the day of Saint Andrew, in the yeare of Grace Nine hundred, threeſcore and nine.

This Marqueſſe, or Margraue of Miſnia; Porte d'Or, au Lyon de Sable. Meſal Tarre, & Coronne Cimier, Bus d'vn Sultan a longue Barbe, a la Campanelle Pallee d'Argent, & de Gueules. La Tyare Perſique renuerſee d'Argent finiſſant en queue de Paon. La doubleure, & Rebort d'Argent.

The Kings of this Tourney, were theſe Knights.

Volpert de Franckenſtein, of the Circle and County of the Palatinat of Rhine (alias Rhein) Porte d'Or, a vn Pied de Cordonnier, mis en Barre de Gueules. Heaume Tarre, tourne & Coronne; Cimier Vol Tourne d'Or, charge du Couteau a Pied de Gueules. Lambrequins d'Or, & de Gueules.

In Germanie there are many Illuſtrious Families, which beare the Sirname of Franckenſtein; but their Armes are different from them, of whom we ſhall haue occaſion to ſpeake, in their ſeuerall places and degrees.

Franckenſtein, who beareth D'Azur, a vne Face d'Or. Timbre, tarre de front, according as all the reſt. Cimier, Lozange Octogone de Queue de Paon, les Armes dans icelle. Lambrequins, Or, Azur.

The other Franckenſtein: He beareth De Gueules, a Deux Barres de Sable, a vne Cheure tournee d'Argent, monte ſur vne Terraſſe de meſme. Meſal, Tarre, Cimier. Vol eſployé. Vne Aile charge du Premier, l'autre Party, de Sable, & au Mitan la Cheure naiſſant tourne as in Armes. Lambrequins, d'Or, & de Sable.

The Armes of Mertſpourg.

Now, as concerning the Armes of the Citty of Mertſpourg, Modius is therein much miſtaken, becauſe he giueth it a Lyon. It beareth d'Or, a vn Chaſteau en Triangle de Sable, Maſſonne d'Argent. That of Martſpourg beareth d'Or au Fantaſſin Armé d'Argent, a vne Cornette & Banniere d'Azur, chargee d'vn Lyon d'Or. This is that which is at the Marquiſate of Miſnia, whereof there is now matter in queſtion, as ſaid to beare the name of Marcomir, King of the French, and Firſt of the name (caried Priſoner in to Tuſcanie, as we haue already ſhewne elſewhere) who had built it. That of Mersbourg, is in the dioceſſe of Conſtans, vpon the Lake Podamica, or of Acron: built by our King Dagobert, and face to face confronting Conſtans.

The Fifte Tourney.

THis was celebrated in the Citty of Brunſchweigh, by Ludolph, Marqueſſe of Saxonie, Lord of Brunſwick; the Firſt Sunday after the Feaſt of the Three Kings, in the yeare of Grace Nine hundred, foureſcore and ſixteene.

Modius his falſe Emblazon corrected.

Ludolphe beareth (contrary to Modius, whoſe falſe Emblazon is thus to be corrected) Au Premier de Saxe Ancienne, to witt, *de Gueules au Cheual Gay tourne d'Argent. Le Second eſt d'Azur a vn Aigle Coronne d'Or. Le Troiſieſme eſt d'Argent, a Trois bouts d'Eſpee de Gueules. 2. 1. Frederic Dalburgk, } All their Armes are before obſerued.

And this was the laſt Tourney: After which we haue ſeene (So ſpeaketh Sebaſtian Munſter, in the third Booke of his Coſmographie) the common degree of the Nobility, to plundge and ſinke themſelus in the puddle of all Vices, yea, in the eye of the whole world. And the ignominie which they receiued publiquely in theſe Tourneys; ſerued as a Cauſſon or headſtall for a Horſes noſe, or Bitt in a young Coltes mouth, to reſtraine our Gentlemen, among them, they became euen proſtituted to all vile abuſes, without obſeruing any pathe or way to goodneſſe. So farre goeth Munſter, ſpeaking nothing but the trueth.

The harme enſuing by want of Noble imployment.

Heere we could repreſent and Figure (euen to the life) the Armes and Blazons of all the Nobility of Germanie, both Lords and Ladies, Maried Wiues, Widdowes and Daughters, who (according as Modius writeth) haue bin preſent at theſe Tourneys; but the labour and paines would hould mee ouer-long. It ſhall ſatiſfie mee therefore, to expreſſe none but them only, which Modius hath declared to vs, and correcting them where they are wanting and defectiue, or ſo badly preſented, that they come very ſhort almoſt of any vnderſtanding. He might haue demonſtrated their Coullers and Mettals at the leaſt, which had bin eaſie enough for him to haue done: if he had knowne, or were skilfull in that admirable vnderſtanding, wherein the Germaines (ſo learned and curious in Armes as euer were any) are not meanely experienced, which knowledge our Grauers and Sculptures ought to purſue and imitate. The Germaines (I ſay) in preſenting the Armes of a Gentleman, make vſe of certaine Letters, which doe ſerue them as noates or markes, for figuring the Mettalls and Blazons in the Shield or Eſcutcheon, with the Creaſts, Mantles and Supporters.

The Authours ſupplying of Modius his great defects.

The Heraldry vſed among the Germaines whereby they make knowne their Mettalls and Coullers.

They make vſe of Two Mettalls, and Foure Coullers, as we doe.

Or, which in their Language they call Gelb, and they make it knowne by the Letter G.

Argent, tearmed in the Germaine tongue Weis, and they make it vnderſtood by a double W.

Azur, among vs is named Blew, and that Couller by them is figured with a B.

Gueules, which they tearme Roth, they vſe to preſent by the Letter R.

Synople, Which they call Grun in their Language, is denoated by a Leafe of Nenuphar, as if we meant to ſay by a Treffoile, or Three leaued Graſſe.

And Sable, which they tearme Schwartz, as much to ſay as Black, they expreſſe by the Letter S. Which by the following Table may be the more eaſily comprehended of euery one.

Vn Treffoile	G	Gelb.
	W	Weis.
	B	Blow.
	R	Roth:

In like manner, we that are French-men, can make repreſentation of our Armes by noates and markes, comming neere to the Language of our owne vnderſtanding: As we haue done in the Armes of Monſieur le Clerc, Councellor.

But for our better making knowne and diſcerned, the Coullers and Mettals of the Germaines Armes; we haue figured them fairely to you, in the Module or Piece that doeth expreſſe the Order of Saint Gall. There wee haue preſented the Armes of thoſe Foure Men, that were the Authors or founders of the Switzers Liberty. Wherunto ſhould haue bin added the deuiſe of Mantles, Helmes and Creaſts, which we could not expreſſe vpon their Armes, in regard of want of roome and ſpace, fitting and beſeeming ſuch a graceſull Ornament, and therefore we will heere ſpeake them in the due Order of Emblazon.

See the great Piece concerning the Switzers.

FOulque, Count of Aniou, Touraine and Duke Maine and afterward King of Ieruſalem, in regard of his Wife, who was Daughter to King Bauldwine, Second of the name (as we haue ſaid in the Precedent Booke) maried his Eldeſt Sonne Geoffery, Sirnamed Plantagenet, to the daughter of the King of England, and Duke of Normandie, Firſt of the name. This Princeſſe was named Mahauld,

The Mariage of Geoffrey Plantagenet to Maude the Empreſſe.

Mahauld, or Maude, Sirnamed the Empresse: becauſe before this Marriage with Plantagenet, ſhe had bin Widdow to the Emperour Henry, Fift of the name. After the deceaſe of Foulque in Ieruſalem, Geoffrey cauſed a Tourney to be made, on the ſandie ſhoare of Mount Saint Michael in Normandie, betweene the Engliſh and the Normans. At this Tournament was preſent on the Normans ſide the Count of Flanders Thibault, Count of Blois, and the Count of Mortaigne Stephen, all of them being Nepheewes to the King of England Henry, Firſt of the name.

A Tourney betweene the Engliſh and Normans.

The holders and maintainers of this Tourney, were the Normans againſt the Engliſh, who were farre fewer in number then the Normans: And this was the reaſon, that Count Geoffery, (with them that were his followers) tooke part with the weaker ſide, I meane the Engliſh.

After the Tourney was begun, either ſide entred Poſle-meſle together. The whole Campe and the Liſts reſounded with the clattering of Armes, noyſe of Trumpets, muttering of voyces, and neying of Horſes. Yea, the Mount Saint Michael ſeemed to ſparkle Fire, with the reuerberating and reflection of the Sunnes bright beames, tranſcending from an infinitie of Shields, Bucklers and Targets of the Aſſaylants and Defendants. The Tournement being well heated on both ſides, the Aſhtree-Launces flew in ſhiuers, and euery man being well warmed in their Armours: came to handy-ſtrokes with their Swords, the keene edges whereof (at euery blow) made deepe entrance into their Armes and Shields. Some of them diſmounting other of their oppoſites, when their Horſes (eſcaping from them, and being disburdened of their Maiſters) ran at free liberty about the field, hauing broken their Reines, and by no meanes were capable of ſtaying.

Such accidents men of Armes are ſubiect to.

Our braue Plantagenet, and Royall minded Geoffery, more furious then a Lyon, layd ſoundly vpon the Normans, without any diſſembling, but in meere honeſt earneſt, and where he eſpied any of his followers to be diſtreſſed: thither he ran ſpeedily, diſmounting many with his Launce, piercing quite through their bodies, and others feeling the ſlices of his Sword, were glad to leaue their rancks, falling downe on the ground without motion or life. So that the Normanes, making Retreat their beſt aduantage, were glad to get gon, and forſake the place.

The Normans enforced to the retreat.

Yet madly enraged, to be thus curſtly handled, and by ſuch an vnequall poore troupe: they challenged the Engliſh, to Combate at the vtmoſt extremity of life. Vpon the fame ſpread abroad of this Tourney, and to be perfourmed in Normandie; among many other that reſorted thither from the parts beyond the Seas, there came a Giant of immeaſurable corpulence, or hugeneſſe of Body, and thought as ſtrong as an other Sampſon. Hee appointed himſelfe to take part with the Normans, and they (ſecuring themſelues by ſuch an vnexpected ſuccour) ſet downe a ſetled reſolution, to beare away the victory from their Engliſh enemies.

A Combate challenged at the vtmoſt extremity.

The Giant ſtood proudely brauing, on an high aduaunced Hillock without the Normans Camp, and with a dreadfull aſtoniſhing voyce, dared the Engliſh to Combate againſt him: which much daunted and diſmayed the ſmall number of the Engliſh, and made them fully perſwaded, that they were no way able, to contend againſt this huge Coloſſus and mountaine of fleſh. But Count Geoffery perceiuing the Engliſhmens diſmay, whom (before) hee beleeued to bee of inuincible courage: forthwith mounted on his Horſe, tooke his Launce, and offered himſelfe ſingly to maintaine the Combate. But the Giant, hauing a Launce that equalled a Weauers beame in bigneſſe, encountred the Count with ſuch fury and Violence, as pierced quite thorow his Shield and Armour, ſo farre as to the effuſion of Bloud. Yet ſate the Count firme and vnſhaken on his Horſe, as a man no way to be dishartened, and welcommed the Giant with ſuch a ſound ſalutation; as made him meaſure his length on the Ground, ſo aſtoniſhed with the fall, that the Count lightly leaping from his Horſe, ſet his foote vpon him, and ſmote off his head: taking his Horſe by the Bridle, to ſerue as a ſpoyle & Triumph of his victory, to the great diſgrace of the Normans, thus bereft of the Conqueſt, whereof (before) they made full aſſurance.

The Engliſh diſmayed by the Giant.

The Giant ſlaine by Count Geoffery.

This Tourney and Duello, is worthily deſcribed at large by Joannes Monachus maioris Monaſterij, in his Firſt Booke, concerning the Life of the ſaid Geoffery Plantagenet, and in theſe words.

Taken out of Joannes Monachus maioris Monaſterii.

His Father Foulke being created King of Ieruſalem, the Conſull Geoffrey gaue himſelfe to the exerciſe of Armes, and purchaſing of renowne. In proceſſe of time, there was a day of Torneament appointed by the Brittons and Normanes, vpon the Sandy plaine of the Mount. There met for the aide of the Norman party the Lord Earle of Flanders, Theobald, Earle of Bloys, and his brother Stephen Lord of Mortaigne; theſe three were Nephewes to Henry King of England. And the ſaid Conſull likewiſe came thither with his followers, augmenting the number of their Company. Right againſt them ſtood the Engliſh Army, valiant both in armes and courage, but fewer in number. Therefore the Conſull Geoffrie of Angiers conſidering the vnequall coping of the Engliſh partie; withdrew himſelfe from the multitude, and ioyned himſelfe with the leſſer ſide, ready to giue them aide and aſsiſtance. The encounter is made, the Bands are ioyned together, great is the clattering of Armour, the Trumpets ſound, the diuers noyſes of the diſordered Companies doe thunder in the ayre, the coupled Horſes ſend forth confuſed neyings, the very Mount of Saint Michael did glitter with the golden Targets reflecting from the Sunne. The men are animated to the fight, their Aſhen Speares are knapped in peeces, Swords are broken in sunder, now one foote driues forward another, one Buckler repulseth another, Saddles are made empty, Horsemen cast on their backes, and the Horses (their Riders being dismounted) doe runne about neying with broken raines. Geoffrey, the onely terrour of the aduerse part, setteth vpon his Aduersaries, and running hither and thither, is carefully imployed to bring succours to his Souldiers, casting many downe with his Launce, and doubling blowes with his Sword, inforceth a great number to giue vp the Ghost. The English follow their Captaine, breaking way before them, being the very hope of their victory, giuing diuers kindes of death to their Aduersaries. Geoffrey of Angiers, more courageous then a Lyon, presseth vpon them, the Brittaine band rusheth after, presuming now of the victory. The Normans, tyred with the great conflict, turning their backes, betake themselues to flight, and the multitude, being wasted by a small number, were enforced to retyre to their Campe. But the Normans deiected with this vnlooked for confusion, propound to the English a single Combat.

There was come from the parts beyond the Seas a Sampson-like Souldiour, of a Gyant-like Stature, brought thither by the report of the Torneament, vpon whose strength and hardinesse they relying, did presume of the Victory. This man therefore (exceeding the ordenary condition of men) issuing out of the Norman Campe, stood in an eminent place, and vpbraiding the English troupes, challenged any one of them to cope with him in single Combat.

The countenances of all that heard him were pale, and the strength of the valiant men failed; for euery one feared to enter Combat hand to hand with a Monster of so great disproportion. But the Kings Sonne in Law beholding those men, who were by nature courageous, to be dishartned, euen as it were Cowards, and Recreants, at the hearing of such vnusuall speech, vttered in their despite; was moued in spirit, and not enduring this disgrace offered, mounted vpon his Horse, snatcheth his Armes, and entreth single fight with this Gyant-like Souldier, their troupes on euery side beholding them. The contention was rigorous. For that man, exceeding the measure of humaine strength, hauing a Speare as it were a Weauers Beame, assayleth Geoffrie of Angiers, and pierceth through his Shield, and Coate of Defence, not without effusion of bloud. Geoffrie stands immoueable, euen as it were fast rooted to his Horse, and striking his Assailant thorough with his Launce, bore him downe to the ground, and standing ouer him, smote off his head with his Sword. So hauing obtained the triumph, he led away in his victorious hand the Horse of the vanquished, and went thus away a glorious Conquexour, to the disgrace of the Normans, and the glory of his owne followers.

Count Geoffrey Duke of Normandy.

Thus you see what was written by this honest Monke, who deliuereth it in good tearmes, and liued vnder the Reigne of King Lewes, Seauenth of the name, called The Pious or Pittifull. And the same Authour informeth vs, that the same Count Geoffrey, who was by his wife Maude the Empresse Duke of Normandie, and his descent Kings of England: tooke great delight to visite strange Prouinces and Countries, to be present in person at Iousts and Tourneys.

In confinio Flandrensium, & in longe positis terris cœpit Torneamenta perquirere, & laudis cupitæ, & bene gestis rebus in dies emolumenta percipere.

He began to search after Torneaments in the frontiers of Flanders, and in other farre Countries, and (day by day) to receiue the benefit of desired honour by his noble exploites.

Iousts and Tourneis with losse of life.

By the narration of this learned Monke, you may vnderstand Gentlemen Readers, that these Iousts and Tournaments were neuer performed, without the losse and effusion of bloud, and some or other made but a sorrie reckoning, of being inuited to so costly a Feast, which extended oftentimes to the extremitie of life. Lancea multos deijcit, ense tellus ingeminans innumeros Vitâ expellit. Ouerthrew many with his Lance, and doubling blowes with his Sword, enforced a number to giue vp the Ghost.

And that they which tooke part with the Count of Anion, were the deathsmen of a great number of Normans: onely through the spleene and mallice, which the one Nation bare euen to the other, whereon ensued the Challenges of Combat, to the extremity of life. And this gaue subiect and occasion to the Princes, the Counts of Flanders, of Blois, and of Mortaigne, to make their complaint to the King their Soueraigne Lord, Lewes Seauenth of the name, and Sirnamed the Pittifull; against the the said Count Geoffery of Anion: that in pride and arrogancy, and because hee was Sonne in Law to the King of England Henry, First of the name, he ioyned himselfe in this Tourney on the Englishmens side, who were strangers, and in fauour of them, had ill entreated his vassayles and Subiects, with whose Bloud he had died Red the Lists of the same Tourney.

Complaints made to the King against the Count.

Vpon these Complaints, King Lewes the Seauenth tooke order for Iousts and Tourneyes, and by his Ordenance, set downe in the Register of the Court, in Iuly One thousand, one hundred, threescore and three, where it is expressely decreed: That the Barons may assist, and bee present at Iousts and Tourneys, which were held in the Kingdome: Only to see them, and to sit as Iudges. But if they were either Assaylants or defendants; then they should haue no other Armes then a Corslet and Helmet, a Shield without any bosse and pointe, a blunted Aslien Lance, and a Battle Axe in the same manner, without any head of Steele or of Iron.

The King's Decree for Iousts and Tourneys.

King Phillip Augustus, Sonne and Successour to Lewes the Seauenth, confirmed the same Ordenance, forbidding any offensiue Armes in Iousts and Tourneys; or the Princes of the Sacred Lillies of France, should make themselues any Chiefe men or Commaunders in them, to auoyde and preuent all such perills, as formerly had happened in those Sports and Pastimes, and ordenarily chaunced in such great Assemblyes. And it is recorded in the Court Regisiters, that the same Augustus, in the Moneth of May, the yeare of Grace One thousand, two hundred and nine, tooke Oath of the Lords Lewes, his eldest Sonne (who succeeded in the Kingdome after him, and was Eight of the name) and of Phillip of France, Count of Bologne, his youngest Sonne) in feare of such perills: that (not without his leaue) they should goe to any Tourneys, in hope of any prize of Honour. But when such Triumphes were held, on after an other; They might goe to see them, and wearing no other Armes then as Knights, only with a Corslet and Helmet.

All offensiue Armes prohibited in Iousts and Tourneys.

The King's charge to his Sonnes.

The Monke of Saint Denys in France, William de Nangis, in the Life of King Phillip the Hardy (Sonne and Successour to the King Saint Lewes) Third of the name, writeth in his fiue and twentieth Chapter: That for welcomming to the Court the Prince of Salerne, Charles of Anion, Sonne to the King of Sicilie Monsieur Charles of France, Duke of Anion, Brother to the same King Saint Lewes; King Phillip the Hardy suffered a Tourney to be held, whereat was present one of the prime Princes of the Bloud, who thorow the weightinesse of his Armes, and great number of blowes receiued by the Battle-Axe, expired the fortune of his life. This happened in the yeare One thousand, two hundred, threescore and nineteene.

A Tourney permitted by King Phillip the Hardy.

Mathew Paris, the Monke of Saint Albanes in England, writeth vnder the yeare, One thousand, one hundred, fourescore and foure [illegible], that the King of England Richard, First of the name, appointed certaine places in his Kingdome, for the holding and performing of Iousts and Tournaments, that his Subiects might be made ready to Horsemanship, and fit for Armes, when occasions required.

Iousts and Tourneys in England.

Eodem Anno Rex Ricardus in Angliam transiens, statuit per loca certa Torneamenta fieri, hac fortasse inductus ratione, vt Milites Regni vtrinque concurrentes, vires suas, flexis in gyrum frænis, experirentur: Vt si bellum aduersus Crucis inimicos, vel etiam finitimos mouere decreuerit, agiliores ad prælium, & exercitatiores redderentur.

The same yeare King Richard passing ouer into England, appointed Torneaments to be held in certaine places, being induced thereunto (peraduenture) for this cause: that the Souldiers of the Realme by iousting syde against syde, might proue their strengths, their raines turned into a carriere. That if he should decree, to make Warres against the enemies of the Crosse, or against the borderers: they might thereby be made more nimble, and better experienced for the warres.

And although these Iousts and Tourneys were performed without offensiue Armes, but only with rebated Lances, Canes and Reeds growing in Marishes, as I haue oftentimes seene in Spayne: yet notwithstanding, diuers occasions of disorder and confusion hath ensued thereby, and cost the carcking of some crownes, as wee vse by way of a Prouerbe in France, And heereupon the forenamed Monke Mathew Paris recordeth, that the Kings of France & England, Phillip Augustus & Richard the First, reposing themselues some few dayes at Messina in Sicilie, before their further crossing ouer the Seas: A Iouſt and Tourney was there held with Canes, betweene the French and Engliſh, where ſome felt themſelues a little too neere touch, and thence grew the beginning, of ſome grudge and diſcontentment betweene theſe two great Princes.

Hoc nimirum inter prædictos Principes diſcordiæ ſeminarium dignoſcitur extitiſſe: A ſauoir le quel de ces deux Princes eſtabliroit vn Roy de Hieruſalem, le Roy fauorit ſont le Marquis de Montferrat, & le Roy d'Angleterre Guy de Luzignan, auquel il vendit l'Iſle de Cypre, comme nous auons dict) cum tamen hæc diſcordia primo apud Meſſanam Siciliæ primitiua, ſed occulta pullulauerit, & poſtea per Cannarum Haſtiludium infœlix ſuſcepit paulatim incrementum.

This doubtleſſe is knowne to be the firſt beginning of diſcord betweene the aforeſaid Princes (as namely, which of theſe two Princes ſhould eſtabliſh a King of Ieruſalem: King Phillip fauouring the Marqueſſe of Montferrat, and the King of England, Guy of Luſignan, to whom he ſold the Iſle of Cyprus, as we haue elſewhere ſaid) When as notwithſtanding, this debate did firſt begin to bud at Meſſana, a Citie of Sicilia, firſt indeede, yet ſcarce perceiued, and after (by little and little) tooke increaſe through that vnfortunate Tilting with theſe Canes.

Such Coates were called Iacks of the Linnen Armorie.

The ſame Author, ſpeaking of the Tourney which was performed by the French in the Citie of London, before the Sonne to King Phillip Auguſtus Monſieur Lewes of France, was receiued thereinto, and Crowned King of England, the yeare of Grace One thouſand two hundred and ſixteene, ſaith. That a number of Engliſh Knights were diſmounted in the Field, and among other ſpeciall men of marke or noate, was the Count Geoffrey de Mandeuille.

Eodem tempore exierunt ab Vrbe Londinenſi Barones, cum Militibus qui de Regno Franciæ nuper adu nerant, ad Equeſtrem Ludum, quod Haſtiludium vel Torneamentum dicitur, cum haſtis tantum & lineis armaturis (Lances mornees, plaſtrons, & Gobeſons de toile bien piequee & cordelee, comme les Corps de cottes de femmes a l'Antique) Cumque Equos curſim agitantes, & ſe mutuo cum Haſtis ludendo percutientes (de faiſoient au Pauſiſace diſent nos Ancienc Romanciers) diem aliquantulum protraxiſſent, quidam ex Francigenis, Haſtam quam tenebat ludendo dirigens in Gaufridum de Mandeuille, Comitem ipſum letaliter vulnerauit. At idem Comes Mortem ſuam percuſſori, poſt dies paucos, in dolorem & querimoniam multorum, mouens condonauit.

The ſame time the Barons, with Knights who were lately come out of the Kingdome of France, went out of the Citie of London, to that Knightly ſport, which is called running at Tilt or Tourney, onely with Speares, and Linnen furniture (with rebated Lances, and Quilted Armours, well plated and thickned all ouer, like ſuch bodies as women vſed to weare in Auncient times.) And when thus pricking forward their Horſes, to run and ſtrike at one another, by way of paſtime with their Speares, they had ſpent ſome part of the day, a certaine Frenchman, leuelling the Speare which he held ſlightly againſt Geoffrie, Earle Mandeuill, gaue him a deadly wound. But the ſaid Earle (after a few dayes) departing out of this life, to the great griefe and lamentation of many, did freely pardon the partie that wounded him.

Exercises of the Round Table.

The principall care and prouidence, of ſuch as met at theſe Iouſts and Tourneys (which Mathew Paris calleth Haſtiludia Menſæ Rotundæ, Exerciſes of the Round Table) was to ſit well their Horſes, to keepe themſelues faſt in their Saddles and Stirrops. For, if any man fell, and his Horſe vpon him, at theſe encountrings with their Lances: ſlightly worſe did befall him, before he could any way get forth of the Preaſſe. But others came to heauier fortune, their liues expyring in the place, being trod and trampled on by others.

Statutes of the Iouſts and Tourneys.

And yet neuertheleſſe, it was the maine and principall charge of the Iudges, that they ſhould forbid all Noble men, from bringing vp any nouell faſhion or behauiour, exceeding the allowed and common rule: for containing themſelues the more firmely in their Saddles, and keeping their Stirrops. Here you may reade the Statutes of the Tourneys.

Statutes

Statutes made by Royall Authority, Concerning Iouſts and Tourneys.

NEmo vt Equo firmius hæreat, & maiore molimento eo deturbetur, extraordinaria, & inſolita adiumenta circumſpiciat; iiſque fretus in certamen deſcendat; ſed communi modo Sellæ Equeſtris, & Stapedum vſu contentus, per omnia, ſit dexteritate magiſtus, quam arte tutus.

Si quis contra hæc fecerit, is Omnium incurrat Ordinum odium, & contemptum; Armiſque. & equo, cum phaleris & ſtratis eius mulctetur. The ſame

Ne quis vt Equo hæreat facilius, inſolita & inuſitata auxilia circumſpiciat, ſed Sella Equeſtri communi contentus ſit, Stapedeſque habeat ex more aptatos. Qui ſecus fecerit Equo, Armiſque mulretur.

Let no man (that he may ſit more ſteadfaſtly on his Horſe, and be diſmounted with greater ſtrength) ſeeke for extraordinary and vnuſuall helps, and (relying vpon them) enter into Combate; but being content after the common cuſtome, with the vſe of an Horſemans Saddle and Stirrops; in all things let him defend himſelfe, rather by dexterity then by ſubtilty.

Whoſoeuer ſhall doe contrary to this, let him incurre the hatred and contempt of all the Orders, and be puniſhed with loſſe of Armes, and Horſe, with the Trappings and Furniture.

Let no man (that he may more eaſily keepe his Horſe) ſearch out for vnwonted and vnaccuſtomed helpes; but let him be content with a common Horſemans Saddle, and haue his Stirrops fitted to him according to the manner. Whoſoeuer doth otherwiſe, let him be fined to the loſſe of Horſe and Armour.

It was ſufficient to haue a Saddle and Stirrops for the Genet or Horſe, like to the Barbarian and Turkiſhe Horſes. The Auncient Romaines had not any ſuch vſe of Saddle and Stirrops for their Horſes, according as wee haue. For if wee would but peruſe the Antiquities of Rome, with other noates of the Emperours, and Romaine Captaines for Horſeback: we ſhall finde no vſe of Saddles at all, neither any to bee put in practiſe, vntill the time of the Emperour Conſtantine, Sonne to Conſtantine the Great: about the yeare of Grace, Three hundred, forty and one, which we learne of the Greeke Hiſtorian Zonaras, who (throughout his whole Hiſtorie) maketh not any mention of a Saddle for a Horſe; before ſuch time as Conſtans, ſeeking to bereaue his Brother Conſtantine of the Empire: made head againſt his Army, and entring into the Squadron where himſelfe was, caſt him beſide the Saddle of his Horſe.

The Romans had no Saddles or Stirrops for their Horſes.

Great Theodoſius the Emperour, who began to reigne in the yeare of Grace Three hundred, foureſcore and two, at the twelfth Booke of his Code, in the Law. Quoniam, de curſ. Public. C. ruleth the prices or expences for Saddles and Petreiles belonging to Horſes, rating them at a certaine ſumme: which if any man exceeded, his Saddle was broken in pieces and the Petrell, and ſurmounting the value of Threeſcore Pounds of Gold; were taken and confiſcated to the Emperour.

Prices and rates ordered for Saddles for Horſes not to be exceeded

The Poet telleth vs, that the Firſt men which tamed the Horſe (a generous Creature, and the Symbole of Warre) with Bitt and Bridle, were the Pelethronians, a People dwelling in Theſſalie.

Frena Pelethroni Lapitæ, gyroſque debere
Impoſiti Dorſo, atque Equitem docuere ſub Armis
Inſultare Solo, & greſſus glomerare ſuperbos.

The Lapithes, that firſt found the vſe of Bits and Bridles.

But of Saddles and Stirrops, for contayning a man faſt on horſeback, there is no other mention made then of the Margarians. So ſaith Plinie in the Seauenth Booke and Fifty Six Chapter of his Naturall Hiſtory. And they which interpret this verſe of Horace. Ep. 14. Lib. 1.

Optat Ephippia Bos piger, optat arare Caballus.

This word Ephippia is miſtaken Grammatically, as to vnderſtand therby a Saddle for the Horſe: becauſe the word (in the Greeke notion and meaning) implieth a man on Horſeback, and not a Saddle.

It was reputed a common and triuiall thing, to deck or adorne a goodly Horſe with a Pettrell (which the Emperour Theodoſius baptized with the name of Auerta) or ſome Scarlet Cloth, wrought with Gold and Siluer, and Fringed with ſmall Bels of the ſame brauerie, & about his eyes, the Bridle alſo beautified with Roſes of Gold, and Siluer, or Roundels made of the same mettall, as Mules fot pacing in the Streets are furnished, with flat Lingots of Brasle or Copper, for the seruice of Princes and great Lords: because the Poet sheweth their vse in his Seauenth Booke.

Instratos Ostro Alipedes, pictisque tapetis
Aurea pectoribus demissa monilia pendent.

And it was of those Pettrels and Harnesses for Horses, that the tearmes of the Law. Quoniam (before noated) were meant.

As for Stirrops, tearmed in Latine Stapedes, and Stapphiæ; the auncient Romans had neuer any knowledge of them. And such among them in Rome, as were called Knights, Noblemen by extraction, and other beside, that made vse of Horses seruice in actions of Warre: they neuer had any Stirrops, whereby to mount vpon their Beasts, but leapt vp lightly vpon their backes, without any helpe or other aduantage.

Stirrops vnknown to the auncient Romans.

Infrenant alij Currus, ac Corpora saltu
Subijciunt in Equos, & strictis Ensibus adsunt.

So speaketh the Poet in his twelfth Booke: And at the same place, discoursing of Turnus, he saith

Poscit Equos, atque Arma simul, saltaque superbus Emicat.

The first and last Alphabet of Exercises, whereunto the Romaine Esquires were called, was to mount and leape vp lightly (both on the right and left side) of a Horse, made for the same purpose of Wood: which they vsed to doe before they were made Knights, as we learne by the Captaine Vegetius, in his Art Militarie. When they had made themselues apt & ready, for mounting and leaping vp in their Doublets; then they made a further practise thereof, being Armed at all points, according as the courses of time should require, to gallop a liuing Horse with weapons in their hands, at all such aduantages as the enemy should assayle, in the fore, in the rere, on the right hand, or left. For to this purpose and effect, the Esquires and Maisters of Managements (being named Decursores, as their Schollers were) made apt their Horses in this exercise, and men to backe and sit them.

The Exercises of the Roman Esquires.

Now, concerning such persons as were well stept into yeares, or else disaduantaged by defect of health, who had neede of helde, and some meanes for mounting on Horsebacke, the Surueyars and Ouerseers for the High-wayes; had it as an especiall Article in their charge, in Pauing the Streetes and publique places; to set Stones vp on end, or to erect steps on either side the way, at the end of euery hundred paces, for the ease and aduantage of them as (by reason of their indisposition) could not mount on the Corde. An inuention found out (according to the saying of Plutarch) by Caius Gracchus, onely to winne the good opinion of the People, and make himselfe the Torch or Firebrand of a League, furiously enraged against his Faction.

For elder persons and such as were of feeble disposition.

For Shooing the feete of Horses, it is questionlesse an vndoubted maxime, that such men as could subiect and Maister the Beasts mouthes; would be as carefull and prouident for their feete, and haue them well Shod, vpon paine of being fellowes with him, ouer whom they ought to be Maisters, according to our auncient Prouerbe. Be Maister of thy Horse (and of thy Wife by priority, priuiledge, and without comparison) Companion with thy Dogge, and Seruant to thy Hauke. So (for common people) their Horses were shod with Iron; but those belonging to Emperours, Princes and Queenes, with Gold and Siluer, according to their prodigalitie: As did Poppæa, the wife to the Monster in Nature Nero; according to the testimony of Xiphilinus, and Plinie, in the three and thirtieth Booke, and eleauenth Chapter, of his at large described Naturall History. Hauing thus farre wandred out of the way, let vs returne againe to our Tourneys.

For Shooing the feete of Horses.

Horses shod with Gold and Siluer.

The same Mathew Paris (whose discourse we haue somewhat swerued from and broken, in regard of our Knight, to giue him a Cariere with his Horse) obserueth vnder the yeare One thousand two hundred forty and seauen, that about the Feast of Saint Martine, the King of England, Henry, third of the name, in fauour of his Brother by one and the same wombe, William of Lusignan Count of Valencia (whose Armes Armes are formerly obserued) newly created Knight by him: permitted Robert, Earle of Gloecester, to celebrate a Tourney at Northampton, against the said Count William of Valencia, and his Associates, newly made Knights. But King Henry fearing, least some bad distribution of blowes, would happen to the Poicteuins, by the English; forbad the effecting and execution.

A Tourney granted to be performed at Northampton.

And the same Author reporteth, that in the year following, the same King Henry the Third, suffered a Tourney to be performed at Nebridge, where the Knight of Valentia before named, would needes be seene in his best and manliest behauiour. But he was ouer-borne with blowes, and beaten to the ground, his Armour battered in pieces, and loosing the most part of it: And was very well bumbasted, according to the Law of Iousts and Tourneys.

Another Tourney at Nebridg

Willielmus viribus imperfectus, quum impetus Militum durorum, & Martiorum sustinere non præualeret, multa amisit postratus, Et egregie, vt introductiones militiæ initiales addisceret, baculatus est.

William, being not perfect in strength, when he was not able to beare the strokes of those sterne and warlike Assailants; being quite ouerthrowne, lost much, and was soundly basted, that he might learne the first introductions of Armes and warfare. If then they would make no spare of a Prince, what thinke you should be done to others?

These new Knight Nouices, were thus well beaten with blowes, to make them remember the rules and maximes of Iousts and Tourneys. As for them of elder standing, and auncients seene at such Exercises; if they sustained any spot or blemish in their renowne: they were dismounted from their Horses, and their Saddles set vpon the Railes or Barres, and there were they to ride, all the time as the Tourney lasted.

Punishments both for new learners and others of more experience

Si quis contra æstimationem suam, Officiumque fecisse conuictus fuerit, cum eo, non de laude, gloriaque, sed de Equo concurratur: eoque adempto, Ipse cum sella Equestri septis imponatur, in eisque ad finem vsque decursionum ita perdurare cogatur.

If any shall be conuicted of doing contrary to their estimation and datie, let not any Ioust with him for honour, and renowne, but for his Horse: which being taken from him, let him be placed vpon the Railes in his Horsemans Saddle, and be inforced to sit there, euen to the end of the Tilting.

Now, because infinite other sinister accidents happened in Iousts and Tourneys, it being a place, which bad disposed persons made as a Rende-vous, there to reuenge their particular quarrels (howbeit in the first Oathe taken by the Iudges of the Field, of them that entred into such Assemblies, they should leaue without the Lists all spleene and rancour) and euen as boldly in such Military pastimes, as in Duelloes and Combats: These sports were also iustly prohibited and forbidden, as well by Decrees of Fathers of the Church, as Ordenances of our Most Christian Kings.

Iousts and Tournements, prohibited.

William de Nangis, a Monke of Saint Denys in France, obserueth in the Life of the King Saint Lewes, the three and fiftieth Chapter, that vnder the yeare of Grace One thousand two hundred and threescore: this good King (the Mirrour of Princes) caused a meeting to be made at the Citie of Paris, on the Sunday after Easter day, of the Generall Estates of his Kingdome, composed of the Prelates and chiefe Barons thereof, concerning matters written to him by the Pope: That the Tartarres had intruded themselues into the Lands beyond the Seas, discomfiting the Sarrazins in a foughten Battaile, and conquered the Prouinces of Armenia, with the Cities of Antioch, Tripoly, Damas and Aleppo, threatning to besiedge the strong Citie of Acres, with the neighbouring Countries, and quite to expell the Christians out of the East.

A meeting of the Kingdomes Estates at Paris.

Hereupon it was ordained, that throughout all the Kingdome, prayers and generall Processions should be made, Blasphemers should be punished. And euery Estate were to reforme their Feasts and Banquetings, as also the excesse and superfluitie vsed in their attire and garments: And Iousts and Tourneys were prohibited for the space of two whole yeares. All men being enioyned (during that time) to recreate themselues with no other exercises, then shooting in the Long-Bow and Crosse-Bow, or Tillar.

Punishment of Swearers and blasphemers.

Inhibita etiam fuerunt vsque ad Biennium Torneamenta, & iniunctum est, quod non vnderetur luderetur alijs ludis, nisi quod Homines se exercerent in Arcubus, & Balistis.

Tourneaments also were inhibited for two yeares space: And it was enioyned, that none should play at any other sports, but that men should vse the exercise of Crosse-Bowes and Tellars.

The King of France slaine in a Tournament.

But now let vs see, what was ordained by our holy Mother the Church, in regard that Iousts and Tourneys were prosecuted with vnfortunate and Tragicall endings: as it happened at Paris, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand fiue hundred fiftie and nine.

Decree of the Church gainst Tournaments

WE forbid hereafter to keepe or hold, those detestable Fayres and Markets, which are called Tourneys, Exercises, wherein the Nobilitie are present in person at dayes appointed, to performe their ostentation of boldnesse, and vttermost meanes of strength, in all their best and richest brauery, assayling one another to their perill and danger, that men should loose both bodies and soules. It is therefore prouided, that if any man (in such Assemblies) shall runne the fortune and ieoperdie of life: howsoeuer he may be penitent for it, and desire to be absolued; yet notwithstanding, he shall be depriued of buriall in hallowed ground, and places of Christian enterment.

The renewing of the former Ordenance.

The Popes Innocentius and Eugenius made this holy Ordenance, and it was renewed in the Eleauenth Generall Counsell of Laterane, held at Rome by Pope Alexander the Third, the foureteenth of the Calends of Aprill, in the yeare of Grace One thousand one hundred threescore and nineteene, in these very words:

Detestabiles illas Nundinas, vel Ferias, quas vulgo Torneamenta vocant, in quibus Milites, ex condicto, conuenire solent, & ad ostentationem virium suarum, & audacia temere congredi, Vnde Mortes Hominum, & Animarum pericula sæpe proueniunt, fieri prohibemus. Quod si quis eorum, ibi mortuus fuerit, quamuis ei poscenti poenitentia non denegetur, Ecclesiastica tamen careat Sepultura.

We forbid those detestable Faires, and sporting dayes, which they commonly call Tournements to be kept, wherein Gallants (according to appointment made) are wont to meete, and skirmish desperately together, for the ostentation of their valour and hardinesse; from whence (many times) proceede both the death of men, and the danger of their soules. And if any of them shall dye there, although penance be not denied him, requiring it; yet he shall want Ecclesiasticall buriall.

The Counsell of Vienna in Daulphine.

At the Generall Counsell of Vienna in Daulphine, Celebrated by Pope Clement, fift of the name, in the yeare of Grace, One thousand three hundred & twelue; Iousts and Tournaments were againe prohibited; and in the very same tearmes, as were obserued in the former related Counsels.

Now you shall see one speciall Record, which I haue taken out of our great Chronicle, and inserted here.

Enuiron la feste de Monsieur Sainct Denys, le Cardinal Nicolas deffendy tous les Tournoyemens, & tant les Tournoyans, comme les Souffrans, & Aydans, & mesmement les Princes qui en leurs Terres les souffroient il ietta grand Sentence contre Eux, & apres ce, sousmettoit leurs Terres à l'Interdict de l'Eglise. Mais apres ce, le Pape a la Requeste des Fils du Roy, *& de plusieurs autres Nobles, dispensa auec Eux, parce qu'ils estoient nouueaux Cheualiers (*ils auoient este faicts Cheualiers par la Roy Philippes le Bel leur Pere en la grande Eglise de Paris, a la Feste de la Pentecoste, l'An Mille trois Cents & Treze, auecques les magnificences des Bourgeois, & Mestiers de Paris, descrites tout au long dans lesdictes Chroniques) pource que par trois Iours deuant Karesme, ils pensent ausdicts Ieux, iouer tant seulement, & non plus.

About the Feast of my Lord Saint Denys, the Cardinall Nicholas did prohibite and forbid all Tournaments, and as well the Tourneyers, as the Souereignes and Ayders, and specially those Princes, in whose Lands they were permitted, by Interdiction of the Church.

Prohibition of Tourneys and dispensation with them.

But after this, the Pope, at the request of the Kings Sonnes, *and of many other Noble Gentlemen; dispenced with them, because they were newly knighted (*They had bin made Knights by King Phillip le Bel their Father, in the great Church of Paris, at the Feast of Pentecoast, in the yeare One thousand three hundred and thirteene, with the magnificences of the Bourgesses and Tradesmen of Paris, described more at large in the the Chronicles.) Because that for three dayes space before Lent, they might then addict themselues to those sports and pastimes, but no longer.

We will content our selues, with so slender a flourish made vpon this discourse of Iousts and Tournaments, referring a further taske to be taken therein, by such as can better enlarge the Argument, then we haue now done. We will therefore enter into another discourse.

Of Militarie Penalties, Paines and Punishments: And likewise of the Degradation of Noble-Men.

CHAP. VIII.

Homer, the Father of Science and Vertue.

THE Greeke Poet Homer (whom diuine Plato calleth The Father of Science, and of all Vertue) feigneth with a comely and pleasing grace: that the Goddesse Thetis, being deliuered of her Sonne Achilles, did suddenly dip or plunge his naked body into the Riuer of Styx, thereby to make him inuulnerable, and not to be hurt by any wound. Afterward, she sollicited Iupiter, King of the Gods and Men, to auert and turne from her Son, those destenied harmes or euils, which might threaten death to him in any high enterpise.

The true module of a man for Armes.

Now, to speake more properly, this is the module and carracter of a Knight, or man that addicteth himselfe to Armes and Wars, who euen from his tender youth and yongest yeares, should custome and inure himselfe, to beare and endure all distempers and oppressions, whereto the seasons of the yeare are subiect and harden or make bold his body, to the exercises of paine and trauaile: In imitation of the auncient French and Gaules, whose naturall disposition is, described by the Latin Poet, in the ninth Booke of his Æneicds.

Durum à stirpe genus. Natos ad Flumina primum
Deferimus. sæuoque gelu duramus, & undis
Venatu inuigilant Pueri, Sylusque fatigant,
Fingere ludus Equos, & spicula tendere cursu.

Vertue the only aime of a Gentlemans actions.

And like as for entring into the Temple of Honor, a man ought first to passe thorow that of Vertue: euen so a yong Gentleman should make Vertue the onely obiect, bent and aime of all his actions, to the end, that by meanes thereof, he may attaine to the Temple of Honor, for the conseruation whereof, he ought to be a thousand times more carefull, then of his owne life.

Achilles slaine in the Temple by Paris Alexander.

When the Goddesse Thetis bathed her yong Paladine in the Riuer of Styx; shee plunged in all his body, onely the soales of his feete excepted, whereby she hee'd him. Onely by that part was he wounded and slaine, in the Temple of the Citie of Troy, by an Arrow sent from the Bowe of Alexander Paris (the most effeminate Coward, and idle Lazie yongster in all the Trojane Armie) as he was deuoutly kneeling vpon his knees, to espouse the faire Polixena: of whom he was in such sort enamoured, that (for her sake) he exposed himselfe to the rage and furie of his deadly enemies.

The soale of the foote, is the most tender and daintie part of a mans whole body. Adde hereunto Polixena, and dastardly Paris, which are the Symboles and the Idoines of voluptuous ease, and a sloathfull negligent eye, that misguide many braue Lords and Souldiours, euen to the height of all misfortunes, and then to a woful end of fatall endings. This is truly fertile as a good Lesson, to you that are braue and valorous French Noblemen, to turne your backes on the common high reade-

roade way of Vice, and to purſue the faire foote-ſteps of Vertue, by qualifying in your ſelues all vnruly paſſions, for your ſooner arriuing at the Theator of Honour. Whereunto you may be conducted, by that great Captaine Scipio Affricanus, who foundeth in your eares night and day, euening and morning, yea, and at all houres, this goodly Leſſon in fiue Latine words, more excellent and better then that of King Lewes the eleauenth of the name, which he cauſed to be taught to King Charles the eight, his Sonne and Succeſſour.

The noble Leſſon of Scipio the Affrican.

Maxima cunctarum Victoria, Victa Voluptas.

By this Victory ouer your ſelues, taming and tutoring your owne paſſions, you will ſoone come to honor. Whereas contrariwiſe, if you ſuffer your ſelues to be ſurmounted by wanton pleaſures, like to the Beaſt Matreas, that deuoureth her owne ſelfe; you will make a moſt lamentable and vnfortunate ending.

Now, as for the honoring of Noblemen, Kings inuented prizes and recompences of Honor and worth: ſo likewiſe, to bridle & reſtaine them, as breathing them in the wayes of Vertue, they deuiſed and made Militarie Ordenances, to take beginning from the time, when they were enroled for the managing of Armes, for ſeruice of the King, & Sacred Crown of the Lillies, euen to the ending of their liues, by a ciuill death in their own perſons, with ignominie, tranſmittable to their Sons, becauſe they were not onely depriued, of the memory and Honors of their Fathers, tranſcribed in the Red or Bloody Booke: but alſo by confiſcation of their Goods, if they were ſeated and dwelt in Countries ſubiect to confiſcation, in regard that there is a difference betweene thoſe that are ſubiect to confiſcation, and ſuch as are not ſubiect thereto.

The Red and Bloody Booke of Infamie.

Thoſe Countries and Prouinces, which ſtood ſubiected to Confiſcation, were properly them of the Kings demaine, and Lands belonging to the Sacred Crowne of France, as dependine thereon immediately, and returning thither againe (as to their head and ſpring) as well by the crime of Fealonie, as other caſes likewiſe, which deſerued an infamous kinde of death. In whatſoeuer part of the Kingdome, thoſe goods af demaine and Royall Patrimony were ſeated, conſiſting of the Crowne, or aduanced into a Peeredome and high Baronnie; if there were no ſubſtitution made, before the Prince had giuen the honor and title of Excellencie and honor, then they were liable thereto.

Countries ſubiected to Confiſcation.

In Prouinces, which neuer (before in times paſt) were immediately of the Royall demaine, as in the Dukedomes and Prouinces of Bretaigne, Aquitaine and the like, ruled and gouerned by perticular Dukes, and onely with charge and reſeruation of liedge Homage, and caſes thereupon depending. In thoſe Prouinces our moſt Sacred Monarches, by wiſe Counſell and admirable foreſight, admitted no place for confiſcation. Becauſe the Subiects and Seruants of theſe great Fiſes and Baronnies had bin conſtrained (at all times) to follow their Lords and Rulers in Warres, although the warre were made againſt the King, their Prince and Soueraigne Lord. And thence it came that the Court, in ſentences of condemnation of ciuile death, on them conuicted of the crime, be they Nobles, or Yeomen, the tearmes of confiſcation to the King is added thereto, of ſuch inheritances as are in the places of Confiſcation. Which neuertheleſſe might extend it ſelfe, throughout all Lands and Seigneuries vnder obedience to our Kings, if there were not a cuſtome to the contrary, which ought to be held as a certaine and infallible Law, and as a Law tollerated by the Prince, vntill ſuch time, as it ſhall be reformed by his Prerogatiue & Authority.

Prouinces not ſubiect to Confiſcations.

Concerning ſentences of condemnation

In France there are Royall Ordenances for the Eſtate Militarie, and preſcibed to the Nobility, whoſe principall function is to follow Armes.

Ordenances Royall for the Military condition.

He that is wanting at his faction, being of the Guard, and is to come ouer late, deſerueth Le Morrion de Dix en bas.

If he offend in the ſame againe; he is to be impriſoned three dayes, and perſiſting on ſtill, to be fined according to the exigence of the caſe.

The penalties extend to common Soldiors.

If he commit any Theft in the Corps du Guard: to be puniſhed with the Strappado, and caſheered from the Company, in the moſt eminent part whereof, he is to receiue this exemplary puniſhment.

If he commit Theft any where elſe, that deſerueth death; he is to be hanged and ſtrangled before the whole Company:

If

If he ſet Houſes on fire, force, or offer violence to any Maides or Women: he is to vndergoe the ſame puniſhment.

If he lay hand on his Sword in the Corps du Garde, againſt any Commander, or member of the Company: He is to haue the Strappado, and to be Baſtinadoed through the Campe, and afterward excluded. Theſe are the paines and penalties prouided for Souldiours.

Now, concerning Gouernours, and Captaines of Places and of Companies: If any of them doe ſuffer him elſe to be ſurprized by the enemie, or flye from the Battaile, or ſurrender the place of his Gouernement, by Cowardiſe and negligence of courage, or elſe by intelligence: The greateſt honor that he can hope for, is to looſe his head vpon a publique Scaffold. Or, a paine much more cruell, to let him goe with his life ſaued; after he hath bin degraded of Nobilitie, and proclaimed a Traitour, and he and his poſteritie Peazants.

Penalties appointed for Gouernours and Captains.

According as it forruned to Captaine Pranget, Gouernour of Fontarabie, which cowardly he ſurrendred to the enemy, in the time of King Frances the firſt, the yeare of Grace One theuſand fiue hundred and fourteſcore. Sentence and Iudgement was giuen by the Officers of the Crowne, the Conſtable and Marſhals of France in the Citie of Lyons. This Pranget being brought into the great Market place of the Citie, was mounted vpon a Scaffold, quite diſarmed, his Shield emblazoned with the heeles of the Armes vpward, and then broken by the King of Armes, he publiquely baptized with the name of Traitor, then dragged by the feete, and throwne quite downe from off the high Scaffold: his life ſaued, in regard of his many yeares. But degraded of Nobilitie, he and all his poſteritie publiſhed to be Villaines, and vncapable (for euer after) to beare Armes. Which was done vnto him vpon good and iuſt cauſe, for where negligence and cowardiſe in courage is ſo euident, that it ſtandeth cleare from all apparance of excuſe: it is proofe ſufficient of perfidie, treaſon and villainie, which rightly deſerueth paine and exemplarie puniſhment.

The puniſhment of Captaine Pranget for betraying of Fontarabie.

Our graue Auncients, the Gaules and French, exemplarly puniſhed their Souldiours, that by cowardiſe in Couruge, fled from before the enemy, inſtead of ſtanding manfully to the fight. To couer (for euer) their ſhame and turpitude, they drowned them in ſome ſtinking pit of pudled water, hurling clay and filth vpon them. Ignauos, Imbelles, & Torpore infames, Cœno, ac Palude, iniecta, deſuper Crate, mergunt. So ſpeaketh Tacitus in his Germania.

How the Gaules puniſhed their Cowards.

And as for them that (by intelligence and treaſon) had conference with the enemie, diſcouering the ſecrets of the Armie, and rancked themſelues with the contrary ſide: if they could be taken, they were branched aloft and below on Trees, ſaith the ſame Tacitus. Proditores, & Transfugas Arboribus ſuſpendunt.

For Traitours and Intelligencers with the enemy.

If any Captaine betrayed his Countrey, or troubled the peace and tranquilitie thereof, by Factions and Partialities: he was burned aliue, according to the teſtimony of Iulius Ceſar, in the firſt Booke of his Memories of the Gauliſh warres, ſpeaking of Orgetorix. Moribus ſuis Orgetorigem, ex vinculis cauſam dicere coegerunt, damnatum pœnam ſequi oportebat, Vt Igni Cremaretur Come we now to ſuch Militarie penalties, paines and puniſhments, as were in practiſe among the Romans.

For betraying his Countrey.

The rigour and ſeueritie vſed by them, euen for the ſmalleſt faults among their men of warre: made their State more mightie, and of longer continuance then all the other in the world. Such Souldiours as (by lacke of courage) had left their rancke, their Guard, or place of Sentinell, for feare of looking the enemy in the face: It was their meaneſt infliction (and yet neuertheleſſe full of ſhame and diſgrace) to be let bloud in diuers parts of their bodies, to take thence the crauen cowardly bloud, which had infected the whole maſſe of fleſh, ſo to make them the more courageous and full of ſpirit. And vntill by ſome act of noate and worth, they had redeemed this taxation of rowardiſe; they were left to themſelues in a Quarter a ſide, to be daily gazde on with ſhame and diſgrace. Which blemiſh, if they neuer recouered, and became eſtabliſhed in their ranke of reputation: they neuer had any part or portion whatſoeuer, in the ſpoyles which other Souldiours made on the enemy either in the ſurprizall of Townes and ſtrong places, or in the ranged Battaile.

Of Militarie puniſhments among the Romains.

In

The Generals' encouraging of his Souldiours

In which caſe, ſo ſoone as the Generall of the Army had animated his Souldiors, with this forme and manner of ſpeaking; Gloriæ, Pariterque Prædæ Conſulite: all was Pillage. Such as bare Armes, paſſed by the edge of the Sword: the common vulgar ſort were ſold as ſlaues (for euer) in open markets; and the reſt were left to the Souldiours diſcretion, Maides and Wiues, all paſt with their loſſe of honour. Sacra, Prophana ſimul (without any exception) Puberibus trucidatis, vmbelle Vulgus ſub Corona venum datum; reliqua præda Victoribus cedebat. Cowards and Crauens were fruſtrated of this Pilladge.

For ſuch as were ouer deſperate and Hare-brained.

The ſame puniſhment of Bloud-letting, was exerciſed on ſuch Souldiours as were raſh and deſperately light-headed in skirmiſhes, their bloud boyling ouer-hotly: to take away this wilde behauiour from them, it was thought fit to let them bleede; becauſe they did not onely expoſe themſelues to perils and dangers, without any reaſon or iudgement; but likewiſe were the ouer-throw of many other beſide.

Sometimes they had Barley-Bread giuen them, for their beſt prouiſion, like as to the Raſcalitie of Campe-following Boyes: As it is obſerued by Aulus Gellius, in the tenth Booke and ſecond Chapter of his Atticke-Nights. Or elſe they were commanded out of the Campe; to abide and lodge there, without any couertures or Tents whatſoeuer, but left to the iniuries of all weathers.

The puniſhing of raſh preſumption.

Cornelius Tacitus, in the thirteenth Booke of his Annales, ſpeaking of the Generall Corbulo, Gouernour of Syria, who had prohibited his Captaine of the Vantguard Pœtus Orphitus, to meddle with the enemy: yet notwithſtanding, he fought againſt him to his diſaduantage, againſt all hope or expectation; ſaith he. Congreſſus cum Hoſte ſunditur. Et damno eius exterriti qui ſubſidium ferre debuerunt, ſua quiſque in Caſtro trepida fuga redire. Quod grauiter Corbulo accepit. Increpitumque Pactium, & Præfectos, Militeſque Tendere omnes extra Vallum iuſſit. Inque ea contumelia detenti, nec niſi precibus Vniuerſi Exercitus exſoluti ſunt.

The penaltie of leauing the Colours and Campe.

Any Soldiour that forſooke the Campe; in going from his Enſigne or Colours, he was to be puniſhed with death, without all hope of mercie or pardon. Tacitus in the former obſerued paſſage, ſaith. Quia durritiam Cœli, Militiæque multi abnuebant, deſerebantque remedium ſeueritate quæſitum eſt. Nec enim, vt in alijs Exercitibus primum alterum-ve delictum venia proſequebatur: Sed Qui Signa Reliquerat, Statim Capite Pœnas Luebat. Although he lay frozen to the ground, yet it was not permitted to any Souldiour, to abandon or leaue the Campe: neither could he diſpence with himſelfe, to goe a forradging at his owne pleaſure, nor to fetch wood, though he were ready to die with cold. Annotatuſque Miles qui faſcem lignorum geſtabat, ita præriguiſſe Manus, vt oneri adhærentes, truncis Brachijs decciderent.

For running from the Field for ſafety of life.

He that for the ſpeedier ſauing himſelfe from the Warre, threw away any part of his Armes on the ground, or engaged or ſold them; was puniſhed with death; So doth the Ciuile Lawyer Modeſtinus enforme vs, vnder the Title De re Militari.

For theft in the Campe.

He that did ſteale any thing in the Campe or Armie, his right hand was cut off, that had bin the inſtrument in the action: but for the firſt time of offending that way, he had a Veine opened, to bleede. So ſaith Frontinus in his Stratagems of Warre, the fourth Booke. Marcus Cato memoriæ prodidit, in furto comprehenſis, inter Commilitones, Dextras eſſe Præciſas, aut ſilentius animaduertere voluiſſent, In principijs Sanguinem miſſum.

Theft puniſhed vnder the Emperours.

And afterward vnder the Romaine Emperours, ſuch Soldiours as were attainted and conuicted of Theft, were beaten naked with Roddes: Ita vt inter verbera, & fuſtes expirarent. So ſaith the Ciuile Lawyer Modeſtinus D. de re Militari.

The puniſhment of Adultrie.

Such Villaines as forced or violated the Wiues of their Hoſts, were puniſhed and chaſtiſed in a ſtrange manner, worthily anſwering to their wickedneſſe. Two Trees were cleft thorow the midſt, and their tops bended downe to the ground by maine ſtrength of men: then was the Malefactour faſtened thereto by the Feete, and ſo quartered by force and violence of the Trees, in returning vp to their height againe. Militem, qui Adulterium cum Hoſpitis vxore commiſſerat, ita puniuit, vt duarum Arborum capita inflecteret, quas ad Pedes Militis deligaret, eaſdemque ſubito dimitteret, vt ſciſſus alle, vtrique penderet. So ſpeaketh Flauius Vopiſcus, in the life of the Emperour Aurelianus. This puniſhment had bin long time put in practiſe by the Greekes, and Plutarch, in the life of Alexander the great, tearmeth this puniſhment by the name of Diaſphendon.

The puniſhments of the French in their Armies, by precedent examples.

The Ordenances of our Sacred Monarches, puniſhed all furious and violent acts with exemplarie paines and torments: prohibiting the haunt and reſort of Girles and Whoores into their Armies. Whereon followed the Militarie Lawes, which were made for ryding the Mal-Mouton (which at this preſent we tearme riding the Canon) as is obſerued by Nicetas, in the life of the Greeke Emperour Andronicus Poleologus, ſpeaking of a bold and ſhameleſſe Wench; Euphroſina Arieti mœnia percutienti, equitantis inſtar impoſita fuit. The Auncient French cauſed the Noſe to be ſlit, or cut off, and to be led ſtarke naked through all the quarters of the Armie, of all ſuch Souldiours as were found coupled with any of them. Liguriuus.

Non erit in noſtris nobiſcum Fœmina Caſtris,
Qui Reus extiterit Spolijs nudatus abibit
Turpiter; & Naſo mutilabitur illa reſecto.

Slitting of Noſes.

And by this ſlitting of their Noſes, they were made knowne to other for example. As much they did in former times to Whoores and Adulterers, being found and apprehended in the act.

Deiphobum vidit lacerum crudeliter ora:
Ora, manuſque ambas, populataque tempora raptis
Auribus, & Truncas, inhoneſto vulnere, Nares.

They vſed to cut off their Noſes and Eares, but perticularly the Noſe, which the Poet (very aptly tearmed Vulnus inhoneſtum, becauſe by this cutting away the Noſe, it made ſuch a deformity in the face, as it ſeemed no longer the face of a reaſonable creature.

Among the Romaines, thoſe that they called Filles & Femmes de ioye, preſented themſelues to the Pretor, before they declared, what eſtate and profeſſion of life they had made election of, and then withdrew themſelues to the Act: it being noated downe likewiſe in the Pretors Table. After this election made of ſuch a brutiſh and diſſolute kinde of life; they were expreſſely charged and forbidden, to be preſent or ſeene in any publique Aſſemblies, or to ranke themſelues among the Romaine Matrons. From whom thoſe Courtezans were diſtinguiſhed, by a Red Locke or dreſſing of a Cowes Haire, which thoſe Miſtreſſes of the common gender were bound to weare; whereas the Romaine Ladies ware their dreſſing Blacke.

Strumpets diſtinguiſhed from the Romaine Matrons

The honorable name of marriage ſlandered.

And ſo the Latine Poet, giuing this name of Strumpet to Dido the Queene of Carthage, who to couer her fault (hauing forfeited her honor) with the faire name of Marriage: Coniugij nomine culpam prætexerat; ſaith, that ſhee was Red-Haired.

Nondum illi Flauum Proſerpina Vertice Crinen Abſtulerat.

And Iuuenal, in his ſixt Satyre, deſcribing the goodly prankes of that impudent and immodeſt Empreſſe, the Mother to Britannicus, the Romaines delicate peece.

.. .. Titulum mentita Lyciſcæ
Oſtendit que tuum genero ſe Britannice ventrem:

Affirmeth, that ſhe attired her head with a Periwig of Red Haire, couering therewith her modeſt blacke attire, when (all the night long) ſhe wandred from Stewes to Stewes, to ſatisfie her luſtfull apperite.

Et Nigrum Flauo Crinem abſcondente Galero.

The Romans Campe was called Chaſte.

Very rarely was to be found in the Romaines Campe, any ſuch wanton darlings, as now we are ſpeaking of. Caſtra Romanorum ita dicebantur, quaſi Caſta: they were neuer ſoyled or polluted with any Villainie. But let vs leaue Venus, and come to Mars.

How the Perſians vſed Cowards.

When the Captaines would chaſtiſe gently ſuch Souldiours, as (thorow defect of courage) had plaid the Cowards, forſaking their Rankes and Files of Battaile; they vſed the faſhion of the Perſians, which was, to make them walke all the quarters of the Armie, carying a dead Cow on their Shoulders, and leading a Whore by the hand, naked in their Shirts and Smocks.

Or elſe they were attyred like women, and in that manner led through all the quarters of the Campe and Armie. This was put in practiſe by Iulian the Apoſtata, and (before him) by the Emperour Conſtantine, according to the teſtimony of the Hiſtorian Zozimus in his third Booke. Amictos veſte Muliebri per Caſtra duxit, ratus Militibus, qui Viri eſſent, eam Pœnam, morte grauiorem futuram.

The Greekes punishing their Cowards.

Which the Greekes alſo (before the Romaines) exerciſed, vpon ſuch Souldiours as wanted courage: for three ſeuerall dayes together, they would bring them into a publique market place, attired in the garments of Women.

The Law of the Lacedemonians.

Among the Lacedemonians, they were exiled and baniſhed out of all Companies, being reputed vncapable and vnworthy, to beare any publique charge or Office. And although they were of yeares fitting for mariage, yet through the rigour of the Law ordayned by Solon: there could not bee found a woman to marry with any of them, becauſe they hated to haue a Sonne, infected with the Cowardiſe of ſuch a Father.

In what manner they vſed Cowards.

Moreouer, permiſſion was graunted to all commers and goers, to ſmite and beate them as they met them on the wayes, and they not daring to make anſwere, to any iniurious ſpeeches vſed againſt them, or to complaine of any outrages done vnto them; all matter of ſuite & luſtice was vtterly denied them. They went in poore and greazie garment, their beards cloſe ſhauen, and without any Muſtachoe, which was the marke of a valiant Soldiour. This we learne of Plutarch in his Liues, and namely in that of Ageſilaus.

For leauing Armes and Colours.

Quintus Fabius Maximus, the moſt moderate man of all the Auncient Romaine Captaines and Commanders, cauſed the hands of his Souldiours to be cut off, that left their Armes and Colours: This we learne of Valerius Maximus, in his Antiquities; of Appianus Alexandrinus; and of Iulius Frontinus in his Stratagems of Warre, the firſt Chapter of his fourth Booke: Iulius Celſus, in the eight Booke of his Memories of the Gaules Wars, written by Iulius Cæſar, who exerciſed the ſame ſeuerity at the Siedge of Vxolen in Guienne.

Change or alteration of Military diſciplin

Sometimes change of Military diſcipline was vſed, to Soldiours failing in their Dutie. That is to ſay, Seruitours on Horſe backe, were reduced into the rancks of them that ſ rued on Foote; and the Fantaſſins retreated to the degree of Biſognians and ſimpleſt Souldiours, which were they that vſed to carry Stones and luggage in the Armies: As it is obſerued by the Lawyer Modeſtinus, throughout the title De re Militare. And Valerius Maximus reporteth an example in the ſecond Booke of his Antiquities, of certaine Romaine Soldiours, that ſuffred themſelues to be taken by Pyrrhus, King of the Epirotes. Decreuerunt Patres, vt ex ijs qui Equo meruerant, Peditum numero militarent; & qui Pedites fuerant, in Funditorum auxilia tranſcrerentur. They placed them with the baſe Groomes and Campe-Boyes, that guarded the Baggage, and tended on the Priſoners taken in Warre.

Rigorous Lawes of auncient Roman Diſcipline reuiued.

In like manner Iulian the Apoſtata (who in his time, would needes reeſtabliſh, and bring againe into practiſe, the rigorous Lawes of Military diſcipline of the Auncient Romaines, as well as their Idolatry) Equites Quartæ Sagittariorum Cohortis omnes contruſit in infimum Militiæ gradum. So ſpeaketh his Secretary Ammianus Marcellinus, in his nine and twentieth Booke. And in his fiue and twentieth Booke: Tertiarium Equeſtrem numerum, ademptis Signis, Haſtiſque diffractis, inter Impedimenta, & Sarcinas, & Captiuos agere iter impoſuit. The ſame Hiſtorian writeth, that this Iulian the Apoſtata condemned ten Soldiours (that inſted of firme fighting on foote, had turned their backes vpon the Parthians) to be firſt degraded, and afterward executed to death: According to the auncient Lawes.

For loſſe of an Enſigne to the enemy by negligence of chief Officers.

If the Enſigne or Banner of a Company or Legion, was wonne by the enemy, through the negligence and faint-heartedneſſe of the Chiefes, Sergeants and Corporals of the Squadron: thoſe Souldiours were preſently diſarmed, and puniſhed with death before the other Officers: Titus Liuius in his ſecond Booke, maketh the Conſull Appius to ſpeake in this manner. Vbi Arma, vbi Signa eſſent ſingulis regitans, inermes Milites, Signo amiſſo, Signiferos, Virgis cæſos, Securi percuſſit. He cauſed all all their Heads to be ſmitten off, after they had bin firſt well beaten and whipt naked with Roddes.

For tranſgreſſing the Generals command by a Captaine.

If a Captaine had tranſgreſſed, or contemned the Generals command; it valued his life, as being certaine to looſe his head. Tacitus, in the foureteenth Booke of his Annales, ſaith. Pœnius Poſthumus Præfectus Caſtrorum ſecundæ Legionis, cognitis Quartadecimanorum, Viceſimanorumque Proſperis rebus, quia pari gloriâ Legionem ſuam fraudauerat, admiſeratque contra ritum Militiæ Iuſſa Ducis, Seipſum gladio tranſegit. He killed himſelfe with his owne Sword, to auoide the ſhame of an exemplary death, moſt certaine and aſſured for Captaines of Bands, that were diſobedient to their Generall. So the Conſul Appius in Titus Liuius, at the paſſage before alleadged, Centuriones Duplicarioſque qui reliquerant Ordines, ad Palum deligatos, Virgiſque cæſos, Securi percuſſit.

The manner of beheading among the Romans

Before they were put to death, they had their bodies tornes with ſtripes; ſo we learne of Polybius in his Politickes. And for cutting off the Head, the cuſtome vſed among the Romans, was to make a pit in the ground, whereinto the guiltie offender deſcended, and there was his head ſmitten off, ſtanding vpright, and not kneeling on his knees: as Tacitus noateth in the fifteenth Booke of his Annales, ſpeaking concerning the death of the Tribune Seuerius Flauius.

For riot or ſedition in the Campe.

Such as were the Authours of any vproare, riot or ſedition in the Campe; were brought before the Generall of the Armie, his Lieutenant, or ſome one of the Tribunes, who aſcending vp on the Tribunall, ſummoned the Soldiours to an Oration; and after the accuſed perſons were heard to ſpeake in their own defences, and found to be faultie: the Tribune ſmote them with the end of his riding Wand, or with a Rod made of the Vine Swiches. Which being thus done, the whole multitude of the Souldiours fell furiouſly on thoſe Mutiners, whom they wounded and ſmote with Stones and Staues, vntill they left them ſtarke dead on the ground. This is auouched by the Roman, Cornelius Tacitus in his Annales. Stabant Legiones pro Concione, diſtrictis gladys. Reus in ſuggeſtu per Tribunum oſtendebatur. Si Nocentem adclamauerant, præceps datus trucidebatur; & gaudebat cædibus Miles, tanquam ſemet abſolueret.

Puniſhment of mutiners in the Campe.

Quintus Curtius, in the Life of Alexander the Great, the ſixt Booke; and Arrianus vpon the ſame ſubiect, writing of ſuch Mutiners, ſay, that they were beaten down with Staues and Stones. Omnes à Nichomachanominati, more patrio, datо ſigno, Saxis obruti ſunt. Such was the cuſtome among the Greekes, wherein the Macedonians alſo were partakers. And, with the ſame kinde of vengeance the Greekes puniſhed Traitours, that fell off, and tooke part with the enemy. Proditores, Signorumque Deſertores Saxis obruebantur, ſo ſay the ſame Hiſtorians.

Puniſhment of traiterous ſouldiers.

The Auncient Romaines drew them in pieces with foure Horſes, as Titus Liuius telleth vs in his Hiſtory, ſpeaking of Metius Suffetius; and the Amorous Poet.

Sic doluit Metius, tunc cum in contraria verſos,
Vltores habuit proditionis Equos,

Scipio the Affrican, called the Great, hauing ſubdued the Citie of Carthage; faſtened all the Romaine Soldiours found therein, to Croſſes with foure Nayles. And as for the Latine Auxiliaries, he commanded all their heads to be ſmitten off; becauſe both the one and other, had rancked themſelues with the contrary ſide.

How Scipio puniſhed ſuch offenders.

The other Scipio commanded ſuch offenders, to haue their bodies torne with Whippes in ſight of the people. And as an ordenary kinde of puniſhment, after they had bin whipt naked with Roddes; they were throwne downe from the Tarpeian Rocke. Which kinde of death, the wife Seneca gaue a proper name vnto, tearming it, Militare Supplicium; in his firſt Booke of Anger, and the ſixt Chapter.

Puniſhment of a cowardly Legion.

If any Cohort or Legion (through cowardiſe of courage) fled from before the enemy, or elſe grew into mutinie, to make it ſelfe a Band apart: the rigour obſerued by the auncient Romans was ſuch, that they all periſhed by the Sword. Legio vniuerſa quæ Rhegium occupauerat, obſeſſa, deditione facta, Securi percuſſa eſt, ſaith Titus Liuius in his fifteenth Booke.

Among the Romaines, Soldiours grew fit for enroulement, when they had attained to the Age of seauenteene yeares. Before, to gaine the faire title of Exempt, they were bound to make faction during sixteene yeares, and to remaine foure other yeares in the Campe, exempted from the labours of Warre, which extended to all extremity. So that at the end of twentie yeares, they then enioyed all exemptions: to be licensed, and recompenced with Lands and Seigneuries for them and their posterity: So saith Aulus Gellius, in the eighteenth Chapter of his Atticke Nights. These distributions of Lands and Seigneuries, giuen to the Veterans, that is to say, to the old Soldiours, exempted from the Souldiours Cassocke (as we say at Paris) were ordered and stiled by diuers names: as namely Parishes, decimated Fields, by the Noble Historian Tacitus called Agri Decumates, and Lands of Lot or deuision, as we haue formerly obserued in the discourse of our Salique Lawes. So the Poet noateth for the fruite of the Ciuill warre, that the grounds and Lands of Cremona, were distributed to the old Soldiours, who had warred for Augustus, against the Chiefe pertakers Antonius and Lepidus. And those Lands being not sufficient to recompence the Veteranes; Mantua (his owne Countrey) serued as a supplement of succour, and was annexed to Cremona by right of neighbourhood.

The enrouling of Roman Soldiors.

Mantua vae miseræ nimium Vicina Cremonæ.

Of Lands distributed to old Soldiours.

Now, these old Soldiours being Licentiats; all the rest of their life time enioyed Military Honors and Priuiledges, hauing (before their retreate) Letters Patents giuen them of Ennobling by the Emperor, to testifie what good Seruices they had done for the Common-wealth.

Of such old Soldiours as were ennobled by the Emperour.

The Infamous Mission, was when the Cassheere was giuen to Legions and Cohortes Ob male nauatam operam, for hauing carried themselues cowardly in the Warre. And to such Casheerde Companies command was giuen, to beare no more Armes vpon paine of death: And if they were Horsemen, neuer to mount on Horsebacke againe. The Emperour Galba comming to the Empire, by the death of the impious and wicked Nero: decimated the Prætorian Guards, casheered a part of them, and made Foote-Soldiours of Horsemen. The Horse belonging to one of those Knights, followed (step by step) after his dismounted Maister, and would not leaue him, to serue any other. The Maister gaue him a stroake with his Sword, and afterward wounded himselfe cruelly, so that the Horse and Maister dyed both together.

Concerning Casheered Captaines.

There was yet another punishment vnder the Romaine Emperours, ordained for Traitors; which was with Fire, burning them aliue: As we learne by the Law, Si quis aliquid, at the first Paragraph De Pœnis, at the Digest, and in the Law Proditores. D. de re Militari.

The bloody Law of Decimation.

And as for Decimation, it was two cruel and extreame a rigor, to cut the throates of a whole Legion, which consisted (as we haue said in the first Booke of Officers, belonging to the Crowne of France) of fiue thousand and sixe hundred Foote-Soldiours, and three hundred men on Horse-backe. And yet neuertheless, wee haue obserued the exemption thereof, in that Armie of Thebes, vnder the Order of Gall.

The mildest kinde of Decimation.

The very mildest course was that of Decimation, that is to say, when one Souldiour was taken out of ten (as it fell to his Lot) and so put to death: when oftentimes the Lot lighted on the innocent, who yet notwithstanding, passed the Pikes, as Tacitus affirmeth in his Annales, the foureteenth Booke. At quidem insontes peribunt? Nam ex fuso Exercitu, cum Decimus quisque Fuste feritur, etiam Strenui sortiuntur. Habet aliquid ex iniquo omne malum exemplum, quod contra singulos, utilitate publica rependitur. And so in Titus Liuius, the Consull Appius caused the heads to be cut off, of Captaines and principall members in the Romaine Armie, and Decimated the Companies of Soldiours. Cetera multitudo Sorte Decimus quisque ad Supplicium Lecti.

The two Gates of the Roman Armie.

Vulgar and common it was, that in the Campe of the Romaines there were two Gates or Doores, the one called Prætorian, and the other Decumane, which was that whereby the Souldiours came forth, after they had bin Decimated before the Prætor, in the Tent or Pauillion of the Generall of the Armie, Ante Principia, where were were kept the Military Banners and Ensignes. They were drawne violently out of the Campe, by this Gate Decumane, and on the bancke of a ditch had their heads smitten off. Polybius, in the sixt Booke of his Pollitickes, baptiseth this Decimation with the Greeke name Δεκα τλαν howbeit oftentimes by way of commiseration, they came to Decimate the twentieth Souldiour, and sometimes the hundred man.

The first executer of so bloudy a ordenance.

Appius Claudius, was the first Generall of the Romaine Armie, that did first put in execution so cruell and bloudy an Ordenation. For, as concerning the Greekes, it is very vncertaine who was the first Inuenter. We vnderstand indeede by Seneca, in the twentieth Chapter of his third Booke of Anger, that the King of the Persians Cambyses conducting an Armie, was brought to such extreamitie through want of Victuals: that he was enforced to Decimate the Soldiours, who should haue foode, and leaue the rest hunger-starued to the death.

This cruelty after vsed by the Romaine Emperours.

The Romaine Emperours haue made proofe too often of this cruell punishment: As did Augustus, by the report of Suetonius in his Life, the foure and twentieth Chapter: Cohortes, si quæ cessissent loco Decimatas Ordeo pauit. Centuriones statione deserta, itidem vt Manipulares Capitali animaduersione puniuit; pro cetero delictorum genere varijs ignominijs affecit; vt Stare per totum diem iuberet ante Prætorium, interdum Tunicatos, Distinctosque, &c.

By Caius, the Noble Historian Tacitus, in the first Booke of his Annales saith: Decimum quemque ignominiosa Cohortis Sorte Ductos fuste necat.

By Galba, the same Author in the first Booke of his Histories, saith. Horror animum subit, quoties recordor seralem interitum, & hanc solam Galbæ Victoriam cum in oculis Vrbis, Decumari deditos iuberet, quos deprecantes in Fidem acceperat.

Titus Maister of the Horse vnder Piso the Consull.

Valerius Maximus, in the second Booke and second Chapter of his Antiquities, obserueth the Historie of Titus, Maister of the Romaine Horsemen (vnder the Consull Piso) who suffering himselfe to be inuested, surprized, and shut vp in Sicilie by the Fugitiues, to whom he cowardly deliuered vp his Armes: was iustly sentenced with this punishment.

Thrust out of the Trench and Rampier.

Eum Consul Toga lacinijs abscisis amictum, Distinctaque Tunica indutum, Nudis pedibus à Mane Noctem vsque, Ad Principia per omne tempus Militiæ adesse iussit. It was not enough to haue his life saued, because it was couered with all shame and ignominie, farre worse to be endured then a thousand deaths: but he must be excluded out of the Trench and Rampier, without any Tent or Pauillion, exposed to the iniuries of all times, and haue for nourishment nothing else but Barley Bread onely.

To be left without Garment, and in a Cassocke onely, was (among the Romans) a noate of infamie, and the marke or Symbole, of being bereft both of goods and honor. Summum dedecus Toga priuari apud.

Romanos rerum Dominos, gentemque togatam.

The manner of pronouncing the sentence of death.

Because, before pronouncing the sentence of ciuill death, against a man accused of any crime: He that gouerned or presided in the Counsell, after he had balloted the Iudges opinions, and counted the most voyces concluding on death; if he were a Senatour, he was despoyled of his Scarlet Roabe, and the Sentence pronounced, In Laticlauio. If he were a Knight, or a Plebeian; then of his Cassocke. This Ceremonie of taking away the Roabe, or the Cloake or Cassocke by verdict of the Iudge, was the Preiudication or fore-iudgement, of losse of life and goods which fell to the Exchecker, if the partie accused died not before the sentence of death was pronounced. In which case, during the continuance of the Roman Common-wealth, Confiscation had no power, no more then vnder the State of the Emperors, for such as either by their command, or else in regard of feare, imposed death vpon themselues; saued their goods to their posteritie. Which Tacitus called Præmium festinandi. nata Mortis, and (by his custome and phrase) written Pretium festinandi.

Concerning the death of Caius Licinius Macer.

We learne further concerning this auncient obseruation, from the same Valerius Maximus, in the ninth Booke and twelfth Chapter of his Antiquities, speaking of the death of Caius Licinius Macer, a learned Roman Ciuill Lawyer, accused of concession

cussion or priuie extortion, in which action presided Cicero the Oratour, in these words.

Caius Licinius Macer vir Prætorius, Calui Pater, repetundarum reus, dum Sententia diriberentur, in Menianum conscendit: Siquidem cum Marcum Ciceronum, qui id Iudicium cogebat, Prætextam Ponentem vidisset, misit ad eum qui diceret, Se non Damnatum, sed reum perijsse, nec sua bona Hastæ subijcit posse. Ac protinus Sudario, quod forte in manu habebat, Ore, & Faucibus coartatis, incluso spiritu, Pœnam Morte præcurrit. Cognitare, Cicero de eo nihil pronontiauit.

The Office of Diribitorem among the Romaines.

The Romaines called Diribitorem, the man that in iudgements criminall, distributed to each Senatour three Ballots and Tablets of Iuorie. He threw into the Balloting Boxe, that which he pleased, and according to his owne iudgement. That of Absolution was marked with the Letter A. That of Condemnation, with the Letter C. And the third with these two Letters N.L. Non liquet, Shall be more amply informed. In auncient times, there was nothing giuen to the Iudges, but two Flint Stones, the one White, the marke or Symbole of Absolution, and the other Blacke, the noate of Condemnation.

Mos erat Antiquis, Atris, Niueisque lapillis
His damnare Reos, illis absoluere culpa.

A Custome of the Romaines deriued from the Greekes.

So speaketh Ouid in his Metamorphosis. A Custome deriued from the Greekes by the Romaines, as Plutarke witnesseth in his Liues, and elsewhere, saying, that in criminall matters, a man is not to trust his Mother, for feare least (thorow negligence or ouersight) she cast the blacke Beane instead of the White. And that which is reported by Valerius Maximus, in the Hiſtory of Titus and Piso, in these tearmes Discincta Tunica, Nudis Pedibus, is very well worth the obseruation, and fitly serueth to this subiect. Because in foure words was contained the auncient French Prouerbe: Of making Honorable Amends, Vnguirt, and without Hose or Shooes, that is to say, Nuds Pieds, & sans Ceinture, whereof here you may behold some Examples.

A French prouerbe of long obseruation.

The Aduocate for the Children of Monsieur Lewes of France, Duke of Orleans, wickedly murdred by Iohn, Duke of Bourgongne (as hath bin declared in the Order of Orleans) concluded, that for so execrable an assassinate, the said Iohn of Bourgongne stood bound, to appeare in person at Paris vpon a certaine day, in the Castell of the Louure, or some such other place as should please the King to appoint, and that vpon a Scaffold, prepared for the purpose: The people of Paris being present, the said Iohn of Bourgongne, being without Girdle, and bare headed, kneeling before Madam of Orleans and her Children, accompanied with such persons as they pleased. He did there declare and publiquely confesse with a loud voyce; that maliciously and treacherously, he had procured the said Lord of Orleans to be murdered, by hatred, enuie and couetousnesse, and not vpon any other occasion. This is thus reported by Enguerran de Monstrellet.

The publique confession of the Duke of Bourgongne.

It was a most ignominious thing to be without a Girdle, as being a manifest marke and noate of infamie, the vse and practise whereof was obserued, as well in matters Ciuile, as Criminall, for seizure and abandoning of goods, the repudiation of some hereditament, and likewise for making honorable amends.

The open submission of the Brugelins.

The same Monstrellet informeth vs, that the Brugelins, being brought into a very good order to the number of about foureteene hundred men, came and presented themselues before their Duke Phillip of Bourgongne, second of the name: All and euery one of them bare headed, bare footed, and without Girdles.

Likewise, that in the Moneth of September, the yeare of Grace, One thousand foure hundred threescore and fiue, a Norman, that had called the Parisians Bourgongnons; was condemned with an ignominious sentence, to be performed before the Hostell of the Citie, in the place called Le Greue, and before the Aduocate for the Merchants of the same Citie. His Head bare, vngirded, and holding a lighted Torch in his hand. To speake there openly, that he had falsely and maliciously lyed, in speaking those words, humbly entreating, that they would be pleased to pardon and forgiue him. Which being done, his tongue was boared through with an hot burning Iron, and he for euer banished out of the Kingdome.

The punishment of a Norman for abusing the Parisians.

For

For renuntiation and repudiation of Inheritances, the same Monstrellet furnisheth vs with a double example.

For renouncing inheritances.

Monsieur Phillip of France, tearmed the Hardie, the first of the foure last Dukes of Bourgongne, dyed at the beginning of the yeare One thousand foure hundred and foure. Margaret of Henault his Widdow, renounced the moueable goods of the deceased, laying vpon the Hearse-Cloth, that couered the dead body of her Husband; His Keyes, His Purse, and his Girdle, and required to haue an Act thereof from the Notaries, to stand and auaile in her defence, against the Creditours to the deceased Duke her Husband.

Leauing goods left by an indebted Husband.

As much auoucheth the same Author, concerning the Widdow to Waleran of Luxembourg, Count of S. Paul. And this is the interpretation of our auncient French Prouerbe; Hurling the Keyes vpon the Graue, so soone as it is couered. That is to say; Renouncing them to the Communaltie, and to Succession.

Three vertues in a worthy wife.

Declaring hereby, that like as the Husband, at bringing his wife into his House, giueth and deliuereth to her his Keyes, and by that action, acknowledgeth her as a Companion in his communitie (so long as she hath three things alwayes before her eyes; namely, the feare of God, loue of her Husband, and care of his Household charge; the infallible noates and markes of an honorable Wife) which our Salique Law calleth Partem Conlaborationis; So in the same manner, after the death of her Husband, ouer-charged with debts and payments; the Wife leauing all to the Communitie: She throweth her Keyes vpon the Graue, with her halfe Girdle.

Of leauing goods to Creditours.

To be without a Girdle, is at this present day among vs (according as it was in times past) the Symbole and marke of cession and forsaking goods, and for a man to leaue his Girdle to his Creditours; is a signe of cession, made by Letters granted from the Princes fauour, who protecteth the bodies of his Subiects from imprisonment, when they abandon and leaue their goods to their Creditours, whereof they make publique declaration. This Custome came from the auncient Gaules, as we are enstructed by Suidas; because in former dayes, the Girdle was the Symbole of Riches and abounding in goods. And from thence, in a quite contrary sense, forsaking and leauing the Girdle, declared neede and pouertie.

The manner of parting with goods at Rome.

At Rome, this cession and forsaking of goods, was done before the principall gate of the Capitall, vpon an exalted Stone, whereon was engrauen the figure of a Lyon. Vpon which Stone. The Cessionarie or parter from his goods, standeth bare headed, and without his Girdle, crying with a loud voyce, Cedo Bonis, to the end, that the Romaine people hauing heard it with vnderstanding; should be forewarned, of medling any more with men of the like weake condition. This publication of Cedo Bonis being thus made by the Cessionarie, he commeth downe from the Stone, and his breeches being put downe, his naked shame is there discouered, and openly whipt with Roddes.

The Stone of Scandale and Infamie.

Whereupon, this Theater of Marble was named The Stone of Scandale and infamie, and from thence forward, he that made this cession, was published intestable, vnworthy and vncapable of bearing any testimonie: the light whereof we receiue from the Oratour, in his second Philippicke. For this benefit of cession (which the Emperour Iustinian in the eight Law, calleth Auxilium miserabile. C. was introduced and put in vse by Iulius Cæsar, in the time of Cicero the Oratour.

Cruell and bloudy Creditours.

Before those dayes, and in the time of the Common-wealths springing, the Romaines had the libertie, to take their debtors that could not make payment, and to dismember them in pieces, each man taking a piece, and so paying himselfe with part of his flesh, according as it is written by Aulus Gellius. And the Law of the twelue Tables allowed and permitted this barbarous Custome, to keepe men from becomming debters, and make them carefull House-keepers. Afterward it was changed into another forme, more mercifull in outward appearance, by reducing such knowne vnpayable debtors into Slauerie and Seruitude; which wee see was put in practise euen among the Iewes, as we reade in the fourth Chapter of the fourth Booke of the Kings. Ecce Creditor venit, vt tollat duos Filios meos, ad seruiendum sibi. Behold, the Creditour is come, to take vnto him my two Sonnes, to be bond-men. A Custome likewise vsed by the French our Auncestours (according to the testimonie of Noble Tacitus in his Germania) who had among them a quite contrary forme for cession of goods, and repudiation of inheritances, then that of forsaking the Girdle, and casting the Keyes vpon the Graue.

Lands held by rent or ignoble seruices.

Because taking possession of Lands in Soccage, were made by tradition, and deliuery of a Switch, or Rodde of an Elle in length: and in want thereof, a Rush, or a Corne-Straw. From whence this forme of possession, was tearmed Infestucatio, deliuering of the Rush.

Inuesting and seizing a Seruant by gift of a Ring.

But if it were in Fiefe, or Free-hold, the Prince and Soueraigne Lord (vnder our first Monarches) inuested and seized his Seruant by a Ring, which he put vpon his Finger, the roundell whereof was marked with such an Armes, as hee would haue his Seruant to beare. And very oftentimes, this seizement was made by deliuery of a Rush or Straw, whereof the Romaines had deriued the practise, as taken from the Gaules, according to the obseruation of Aulus Gellius, in his last Booke and ninth Chapter, vpon the subiect De Ciuilibus, & Festucarijs Actionibus, whereof he discoursed very effectually, being of the Gaules Nation.

And as the taking of possession was noated with the word of Infestucation, Infestucationem Dominicam: so the same Cession of goods, and forsaking of inheritances, was branded with the tearme of Exfestucation, by breaking the Rush, or Corne-blade of Straw.

Publication of a mans insufficiency for paying his debts.

This course or forme was taken from our Salique Law, at the Title De Chrenethruda, that is to say, De la Cession. He which knew himselfe to be vnable of making payment; at the Law-day would present in the Court of Iustice twelue honest and sufficient men, free from scandale or reproach, to beare witnesse of his insufficiency and pouerty, with a faithfull declaration, of all his goods and faculties, in the presence of all his Creditours, and kinred that were to succeede him to the third generation, as well by Father and Mother, as Collaterall.

A mans electi- on of himselfe.

Hauing made his open publication, he entred into his House, and from the foure corners of the Planchers, gathered vp so much dust as filled his left hand, and setting his foote on the step or threshold of the doore (called in our Salique Law Durpellum) and holding the Ring thereof in his right hand, with his other hand that held the dust which he had gathered vp; he threw it vpon his owne shoulders, and likewise vpon the neerest kinsman he had. Then stripping himselfe into his Shirt, vngirt, bare legged, and by helpe of a Staffe, he lept vpon a hedge or dunghill; giuing his Creditours and kinred to vnderstand by this Ceremony, that now he was worth iust nothing, and when he made that leape, all his goods and liuelode lept away from him. In Camisia discinctus, & discalceatus, cum palo in manu supra sepem Salire debet. Such was the forme of Cession, and parting from goods in criminall matters, that is to say, in case of killing any one.

In criminall cases.

But in Ciuill matters, the case was otherwise gouerned. The debtor caused all his Creditours to be called together, and in their presence he declared; that he had abandoned and giuen ouer all his goods to them. In signe and assurance whereof, he layed a Hollie-wand, or else a Corne-straw vpon the Threshold of the doore. In case of such a resignation, it was called Chrenechruda per Durpillum, & Festucam; Cession by the Roade and Threshold. But this custome is abolished, and the former is retained in Ciuill occasions, in most parts of France: As in the Custome of Bourbunnois, the threescore and twelfth Article; Of Auuergne, the fourth Article; and De la March the threescore and fourth Article. In which places, the surrender or Cession is made, by being Vngirt, Bare-foote and bare legde. And hereof descended and came our auncient Prouerbes: Tender, and giue vp the Girdle; And leaue off Hose, Shooes and Bootes. But this last is ordenarily vnderstood, to signifie the death of some debter. So leauing this Argument, let vs come to the case of Degradations.

Proceeding in ciuil occasions.

Degradation vsed among the Romans.

Among the Romaines they began to degrade Souldiours and men of warre; by taking from them their Girdle and Sword. An Act which made them as Villaines and Peazants all the rest of their life: According as is said in the second Law, at the Paragraphe, Ignominia. Vers. Sed & si, de his qui not. inf. at the Digest. And this is the same same which we haue formerly obserued from Curopalates, in his Tract concerning the Offices of the Court of Constantinople.

How this Degradation is performed in France.

The Ciuill Lawyers call it Exauctorare, that is to say, Insignia Militaria detrahere, which by vsing but one word in French, we tearme Degrader. In regard that this Degradation is performed by seuerall degrees, taking away the Armes piece by piece, from them that they will haue to be degraded. Among vs, the auncient Ceremonies, vsed in the Degradation of a Knight or Gentleman, were as followeth.

The degrees of proceeding in the cause.

After that, by command from the King, enstruction was giuen for the Processe, against such a one as had committed a Fellonious act in his owne person; the case being censured before the auncient Knights of the Court; being there assembled to the number of fiue and twenty, or thirty: they condemned the partie accused to losse of life, according to the importance and consequence of the Crime, either Treason, Intelligence, or Fellonie. And before they proceeded to the execution of their sentence and Iudgement of death; the condemned person was to be degraded of his Nobilitie, and the same ought to be done in this manner.

The true Order and forme of Degration, according as it is performed in France.

Preparation of two Scaffolds.

FIrst of all, two Scaffolds were erected in some faire and conspicuous place, well engirt or defenced with Lists and Barres. The one was couered and adorned with goodly Tapistries, Chaires, and Seates, for the Knights, Iudges, and other their Officers.

The other was much more highly aduanced, as appointed for the condemned Knight, the Kings, Heralds, and Pursuiuants of Armes. At both the ends were placed two Formes or Benches, for twelue Priests to be seated on them.

In the middest of this Scaffold standeth the condemned Knight, armed at all points, and his Shield or Escutcheon of Armes (emblazoned according to Art) fastened before him, vpon some conuenient materiall belonging to the Scaffold.

After Proclamation made by one of the Kings, or Heraulds of Armes, with a loud intelligible voyce, concerning Sentence and Iudgement of death, pronounced on the condemned Knight standing there present; the Priests begin to sing aloud the Vigils and Prayers for the dead, so farre as to Placebo, and then proceede on to the end of Misere mei Deus.

Degradation of the condemned Knight.

At the ending of each Psalmes, after Requiem eternam, the Priests make a pause and silence, during which time, the Kings and Heraulds of Armes doe begin to degrade the condemned Knight, despoyling him of all his Armour, beginning with his Helmet, it being the Armour for his Head. And at euery Stanza, the Herauld that holdeth the part taken from the despoyled Knight, crieth with a loud voyce:

This is the Helmet and Bassinet of such a man (naming him by his name, Sirname, Seigneuries and qualitie) Knight, attainted, and conuicted of Fellonie, Intelligence, Treason, Incendie, &c. (according to the crime) and therefore condemned and sentenced to such and such punishment.

This is the Chaire of Gold, and Collar of his Order; this is the Gorget; the Coate of Armes, his Girdle and Sword, his guilt Spurres, his Gauntlets: And these are the seuerall parcels of his Armour, naming them piece by piece, as they are taken off from his body, which is not done, but at the ending of euery Psalme.

When they come to speake of his Shield, there fastened before him on the Scaffold, one of the Pursuiuants, turning it topsie turuie diuers times, at last proclaimeth with a loud voyce: This is the Shield and Blazon of Armes, of this Traytour tour and disloyall Knight here present; and then a Herauld breaketh it in three pieces with a Hammer.

After the last Psalme of Prayers for the dead, the Priests arise from their Seates, and circkling round the condemned Knight; lay their hands on his head, singing the hundred and nineteenth Psalme of Dauid, beginning with these words: Deus laudem meam ne tacueris. In which Psalme are contained the imprecations and maledictions, threatned against the execrable Traytour Iudas, and such as he was.

And like as the Squires, that would receiue the Order of Knighthood, in the Euening before the Ceremonie, were Bathed and washed, and spent the whole night in some Church, deuoutly on their knees in Prayer, that they might be the better prepared in soule and body, for worthy receiuing the Order of Knighthood.

So the Psalme of maledictions being ended, one of the Pursuiuants of Armes, holdeth a Siluer and Guilt Basin, full of luke-warme water, ouer the head of the Knight there present: And the King of Armes demandeth with a loud voyce three times, the name, Sirname and quality of the despoyled Knight; whereto the Pursuiuant hauing repeated his name three times, as thereby answering to the demand: the Herauld or King of Armes replieth; that he is deceiued, and that he whom he had so often named, was a Traytour, disloyall, periured, and a man of false faith. And to let the people perceiue that hee spake nothing but truth, he turneth himselfe to the Iudges, Knights; and then the Register of the Order causeth him to pronounce, that by plurality of voyces of the Knights there present, the man now in question, and whom the Pursuiuant had named three seuerall times, had bin already openly proclaimed, to be vtterly vnworthy of any more calling by the name of a Knight; but in regard of his vices and foule offences, was banished from their frequencie and company, degraded of Nobilitie, and condemned to punishment. Which being pronounced, the King or Herauld of Armes poureth the Basin of water, vpon the head of the despoyled Knight.

This last Act done, the Knights Iudges descended from their Scaffold, cloathed in Roabes and Hoods of mourning, and walke in that manner to the neerest Church.

The degraded person likewise descended from his Scaffold, but neither by Ladder or Stayres as he went vp: but is let downe by a Cord, fastened vnder his arme-pits, and laid vpon a durtie wheele-barrow, couered with a Cloath for semice of the dead, and so brought to the Church where the Knights attended for him. The Priests sing the Funerall Recommendums, with prayers appointed for the dead, ouer the miserable degraded Knight: who is afterward deliuered to the Iudge Royall, and then to the Hangman for execution to death, according to order of Law appointed: Except it shall please the King to grant grace, either by Banishment for a time, or else for euer out of the Kingdome.

After this execution, the King of Armes proclaimeth publiquely, and with a loud Voyce; that the Children and descendants of the degraded Knight, are Ignoble and Peazants, vnworthy and vncapable of bearing Armes; nor to be seene or appeare at Iousts, Tourneys, in Armes, Courts, or meetings of Kings, Princes, Lords and Gentlemen; on paine of being whipt and beaten naked with Rods, like infamous villaines and wretches as they were.

Vnder the flourishing State of the Romaines, the braue Knights and valiant Captaines that had carried themselues in faire dutie against the enemy; were honored with Triumph. It was lawfully permitted them, to decke and beautifie Temples and publique places with their Armes, and those which they had wonne from the enemy, in signes of Trophees.

So speaketh the Poet Virgil, in the seauenth Booke of his Eneidos: And Claudian in Eutropium.

Which they put in practise the rather, to serue as a memory of their boldnesse and courage, to their descent and posterity. An encouragement to following times

In like manner, the Armes of Cowards and crauenly minded Knights, were battered and broken by the hand of Iustice. And among the Romaines, the very last office of all other, was denied to them, which is buriall, in the Monument or Sepulcher of their Ancestours. Their bodies were throwne into a Ditch, in some filthy blinde by-place, without any Ceremony whatsoeuer: according to the testemonie of Polybius, in the first Booke of his Pollitickes. The reward of Cowards and Crauens.

Their Armes, Images, Standards and Statues, ran the very same fortune of infamy, as their bodies did, being trailing in the publique streetes, and cast into noysome sinkes and Laystals.

Descendunt Statuæ, Rastemque sequuntur.

So Iuuenall telleth vs.

The Noble Romaine Historian, in the third Booke of his Annales, speaking of them belonging to Piso, dragged along the Streetes to the [a] Gemonian Scala, by the basest kinde of people: their Armes and Statues were likewise bruised and beaten into small pieces. [a] A place in Rome, where condemned men were cast downe.

Frangenda miseram funestat imagine Gentem.

Obserued by Iuuenall.

Senatus Scalas adferri, Clypeosque, & Imagines eius coram detrahi, & affigi Solo iubet. So speaketh Suetonius, in the Life of Domitian.

Moreouer, it was a very capitall crime and offence, to keepe the portraits and Figures of Traitours and perfidious men; as we learne of the Oratour in his Action for Caius Rabirius, where he saith, that Sextus Titius was condemned to grieuous punishment, because he had kept by him, the Table and Portraiture of Lucius Saturninus. The Pictures of offenders not to be kept

We will conclude this Chapter, with a notable obseruation of our Auncient French, who kept it for a custome, that if a Gentleman were condemned to death, for hauing troubled the State, and the repose of his Prince; or robbing on the High-wayes; violation of Wiues or Virgins; thieuing on Passengers; vndoing an honest man, by burning his Grandges and Garners, with such like other actions, farre vnfit for a Noble or generous minde: As they conducted him to his doomed punishment, they would make him to carrie a Dogge on his shoulders, round about the neighbouring parts, where he had exercised his thefts and pilfferies. An ancient custome obserued by the old French.

Otho of Austria, Bishop of Frisinghen, writeth (much to this purpose) in the Life of the Emperour Fredericke Barbarossa, the eleauenth Booke and eight and twentieth Chapter, that the Count Palatine of the Rhine, Harman, being attainted and conuicted of Fellonie, with ten of his Complices: made honorable amends according to the Law. They were led and conducted a Germaine Mile, each of them carrying a Dogge vpon his shoulders. And obseruing this auncient Custome, he saith. Vetus consuetudo apud Francos & Suenos inoleuit, vt si quis Nobilis, Ministerialis, vel Colonus. Perduellionis, Prædæ, aut Incendij Reus inuentus fuerit, antequam Morte puniatur, ad confusionis suæ ignominiam, Nobilis Canem; Ministerialis Sellam; Rusticus Aratri rotam de Comitatu gestare cogatur. The History of Count Palatine of the Rhine.

The Gentleman was constrained to carrie a Dogge on his shoulders: The Officer, and Chamberlaine a Chayre or Stoole doubling: And the Countrey labouring man, a Wheele of his Plough or Cart, and so to walke from one Village to another; to the end, that the beholders should know their seuerall vocations in this punishment, before they suffered execution. Punishment of offenders for example.

The Poet Guntherus Ligurinus, in the life of the same Emperour Fredericke Barbarossa, the fift Booke, hath well remembred this auncient Custome.

Quippe vetus mos est, vt si quis Rege remoto,
Sanguine, vel Flamma, vel seditionis aperta.
Turbine, seu crebris Regnum vexare rapinis

Audeat, ante grauem quam fuso ſanguine pœnam.

Impoſitum Scapulis ad contigui Comitatus
Cogatur per rura Canem confinia ferre.

A Hiſtory alleadged out of Suggerus, Abbot of S. Denys.

Suggerus, Abbot of Saint Denys in France, in the Life of our King Lewes le Gros, ſixt of the name, ſpeaking of the Aſſaſſinate, committed on the perſon of the Count of Flanders (Sonne to Lewes, King of Denmarke, Heire to Bauldwine, Count of Flanders, Sonne to Robert of Ieruſalem) in the Church of Saint Donatus of Bruges, by one named Burchard, Nephew to the Prouoſt of the ſaid Church, and his Complices, ſpeaketh thus. King Lewes le Gros, being requeſted by his Barons, to aſſiſt them with his powerfull Arme, that Iuſtice might be done for ſuch a Fellonious fact, committed vpon the Count his Subiect and Liedge-man: gaue order to his Armies, which he had in the Field, againſt Henry King of England, and Thibault, Count of Champaigne.

Into Flanders they went with part of the Armie, which comming to Bruges, beſiedged Burchard and his Complices fortefied in the Church, the Tower and Caſtell of the Count, and of Saint Donatus. Long continuance of the Siedge, Peſtilence and Famine, conſtrained Burchard to ſhift for himſelfe in the night time. But being betrayed and taken, and cenſured with ſeuerity of iudgement; the King commanded, that he ſhould be bound and chained vpon an high Wheele, with his face vp towards Heauen, aliue, to be rent and torne by Rauens and rauenous Foules of the Ayre. And Soldiours marching on the ground vnderneath the Wheele, gaue a thouſand wounds to his body with their Pikes and Arrowes, whereby his life expired miſerably. Afterward, his body, being ſo maſſacred and mangled, with more holes then a ranging Siue; was throwne into a filthy ſtincking Layſtall.

The taking of Burchard and his death.

The Arch Achitophell, and prime Counceller of this horrid murder, named Berkolde, being likewiſe apprehended, was hanged by the Armes vpon a Croſſe Gallowes, and a Maſtiffe Dogge faſtened by him, which Dogge, as leiſurely they prickt with Darts; he ſnarled at the liuing man hanging by him, biting and tearing his face, and voyding (oftentimes) his loathſome excrements vpon it. Furcis cum Cane ſuſpenſus, quotiens Canis percutiebatur, in eum iram retorquens, totam faciem eius maſticando deuorabat: Aliquando etiam, quod horribile dictu eſt, ſtercorabat, ſicque miſeram Vitam miſerior miſerrimo, Morte perpetua terminauit.

The death of Berkold, chiefe cauſer of the murder.

Adde vnto this exemplary death, the miſerable end of Bauldwine, Count of Flanders, Emperour of Conſtantinople, at large declared in the precedent Booke, and thereby gather; that the auncient French, executing to death Traitours and Fellons, made them to ſuffer ſeuerity of the Law, carrying a Dogge vpon their necke and ſholders, for two reaſons.

The death of Bauldwine, Count of Flanders.

The firſt, as we haue ſet downe in the end of the ſecond Booke, concerning the principall Officers of the Houſe and Crowne of France; ſerued to make knowne to the people: that the condemned party, was of Free and Noble extraction, to whom it was permitted by the Law of his original and birth, to take his pleaſure and paſtime in hunting.

Two reaſons why the Dog was carried.

Canibus circundare Saltus.

The other reaſon was likewiſe to make manifeſt, that the Dogge being the Hieroglyphicke, Embleme and Symbole of faithfulneſſe towards his Maiſter; the Gentleman attainted and conuicted of Fellony, was expoſed to the view of all the people, as a man without Faith, and any loyaltie whatſoeuer, towards his Prince and Benefactour, and conſequently, as worthy of paine and puniſhment, as the Dogge (that now ſhamed him) deſerued to be affected.

The praiſe of the Dogge for loue to his Maiſter.

For among all creatures vnfurniſhed with reaſon, the Dogge hath not his like for loue and faithfulneſſe to his Maiſter. Infinite examples are to read, of Dogges that haue couragiouſly defended their Maiſters, or elſe haue reuenged their death, when they haue bin ſlaine or murdered in priuie places. As did the Dogge of Pyrrhus, and of others beſide: as is reported by Plutarke, and by Aelianus in his Naturall Hiſtorie

Titus

A very worthy and memorable Hiſtory.

Titus Sabinus, a Romaine Knight, being executed to the death, by the inſtigation, and to pacifie the furious rage of the bloudy Sejanus: his Dogge continued alwayes by to defend his body, ſo long as it was kept vpon the ground. And ſuch bread or other foode, as was giuen to the Dogge, he would bring it to the mouth of his Maiſter, as thinking thereby to feede and nouriſh him. And when the ſame dead body was throwne into Tyber, to ſerue as prey for the deuouring Fiſhes in that Riuer: the Dogge leapt into the water after his Maiſter, holding vp the body in his teeth, to keepe it from ſincking. And that braue Citie of the World perceiued by this act, more loue and faithfulneſſe to be in this poore creature: then appeared in men, who who vnder pretended and feigned friendſhip, had betrayed this honeſt worthy Knight.

Appio Iunio, & P. Silio Coſſ. cum animaduerteretur ex cauſa Neronis Grammatici filij in T. Inmatu t idem in Tyberim, cadauere abiecto ſuſtentare conatus, effuſa multitudine ad ſpectandam Animalis Fidem. So ſpeaketh Plinie in the eight Booke and fortieth Chapter of his Naturall Hiſtorie, where the Noble Reader may haue an infinite number of the like examples.

Noble Families bearing the Dogs Surname.

I haue ſeene many Noble Families in France, bearing the Sirname of Robin, and in Nauarre and Gaſcoigne the Sirname of Perron, of Peraux & Perrots (all theſe names ſignifying a Dogge) who beare for their Armes D'Azur de Sable, or de Synople, Au Robin, ou Perron, that is to ſay, A vne Chien gay d'Argent, tenant vne Eſpe nue de meſme. Wherein doe ſpeake properly, this is but a Deuiſe and Embleme, whereunto is ordenarily giuen for the Soule and Legand, theſe words. Viriliter age, & ſuſtine Domine, deriued from the laſt Verſe of the ſeauen and twentieth Pſalme of the Royall Prophet Dauid. And ſo it is neuertheleſſe, that the faithfulneſſe of this creature in the ſeruice of his Maiſter, hath giuen him the authority and priuiledge, to appeare in the Theater of Honor; next to Eagles, Lyons, and Leopards, Armes of high deſeruing.

How the Dog knoweth his Maiſter.

This creature beareth and ſheweth ſuch loue to his Maiſter, that he knoweth him by his voyce. Soli Dominum nouere. Ignotum quoque ſi repente veniat intelligunt: Soli nomina ſua, Soli vocem domeſticam agnoſcunt. Itinera quamuis longa meminere. Nec vlli, Præter Hominem, memoria maior. So ſaith Plinie in the fore-recited paſſage.

Of Vlyſſes and his Dogge.

And to knit vp this diſcourſe, with a well ſpunne thred from a worthy Authour, the Greeke Poet Homer writeth, that wiſe Vlyſſes returning into his Iſle and Realme of Ithaca, after the abſence of twenty yeares, imployed in Voyages to ſtrange Prouinces, and likewiſe at the Siedge of Troye: was knowne of none but by his Nurſe-Mother, and his Dogge. And vpon the ſame ſubiect, this creature (for his faithfulneſſe) is fixed at the feete of Marbles and Tombes of Kings and Knights.

The Ceremonies, vvhich are to be obser. in the Exequies and Funerals of the moſt Chriſtian Kings, the Kings of France.

CHAP. IX.

IF they haue departed this life, out of the royall Citie of Paris, the Capitall of the Realme of France, the body is brought into the Church, and Monaſtery of Hault Pas, in the Suburbs of Saint Iames, neere vnto Paris, or elſe to Saint Anthonie of the field, according to the ſolemnity of the man, and ſtate of the Prouince, whether or from whence they are brought; but if they dye in Paris, they ſtirre not out of the Louure their Pallace royall. But we will haue no other patterne, or modell, then the example of thoſe Ceremonies, and regardable ſtate, which were performed in the pompous funerals of Henry the Great, of famous memory, as they were and ought to be obſerued.

King Henry the great was laid vpon his bed in the Cabinet of the Louure on Friday, the fifteenth of May, in the yeare One thouſand ſixe hundred and tenne, ſome fiue houres after noone, whither Maiſter Henry Gondy, Biſhop of Paris, firſt Confeſſour of the King and his Court, repayred (For you muſt conſider, that whereſoeuer his Maieſty is, this Diuine Ceremory and office is daily celebrated, according to the cuſtome of Paris, and none other) and ſo the accuſtomed Prayers for the ſoule of the dead, were ſolemnely performed, and after him the reſt of the Cardinals and Prelats reſident in Paris continued the ſame.

About midnight the body, was diſrobed of all apparell, and the very Shirt, and taken from the bed of the Cabinet was brought into that of the Chamber, and there reueſted a new, with a faire white Shirt, a Doublet of blacke Sattin, a night Cap of crimſon Veluet embrodered with Gold, and ſo expoſed to the View, as a ſad ſpectacle of all the Pariſien. After this on Saturday morning, within foure houres of night, the foure Orders of Friers mendicants in Paris, ſung day and night round about the bed their Canonicall houres, and prayers for the ſoule departed.

On Saturday, the ſixteenth day of May, in the yeare, One thouſand ſixe hundred and tenne, foure houres after high noone, the body was opened, and the entrailes taken out, and ſo encloſed in a Casket of Lead, which was conueyed into a Caroſſe, to be enterred at Saint Denys of France, the ſolemne and ordinarie burying place for the Chriſtian Kings.

The Heart was reuerently put into a great ſiluer Baſin, by Monſier the Prince of Conde, Francis of Burbon, who kiſt it all bloody as it was, and ſo after him the Princes, Lords, Knights and Gentlemen of the Court performed the like: when this Ceremonie was finiſhed, the Heart was perfumd and encloſed within another hart, arteficially made of Siluer, all guilded, and ſo deliuered by the ſaid Prince of Conde to the Ieſuites, at their profeſſed Colledge of Saint Lewis, in Saint Anthonies Streete in Paris, and by them to be tranſported to the Colledge of Fleche in Anion.

The body being orderly embaulmed, wrapped vp in many folds of Sercecloth, and bound hard with wexed rowling bands, was put into a Coffin of Cipreſſe, which was alſo encloſed in a ſtrong ſquare Cheſt of thicke wood, bound about with Iron, hauing eight Rings, and as many Hookes for the better accommodating, it to be borne vpon mens ſhoulders in the Funerall pompe; which was the charge of the Scotch Guard with white ſleeues, who were not to abandon or forſake the ſame, till it was brought to Saint Denys, and there ſolemnely encloſed into the Ceremonious Vault for the Coffins of their Kings. Ouer all this was a ſumptuous Herſe-cloth, cloth, faſtned and nayled with many little blacke Nailes of blacke Veluet full of croſſes of white Sattin.

The great Chamber of the Louure was hung with rich tapſtry of Silke interwouen with Gold and Siluer threds, which the deceaſed King had prouided in his life time, and all the Chamber was couered vnderfoote with cloath for that purpoſe.

Afterward, the Princely body, or Beere was brought before the Chimney, and ſet vpon certaine Treſſels betweene two great croſſes; it was then couered with a large cloath of Purple Veluet ſemy flowry of Gold, ſo richly Embroidred that you could ſcarce ſee the ground-worke: and for the greater ſtate, it trayled three foote round about on the ground; ouer all was a ſumptuous Canopy, of the ſame ſeme flowry Gold fringed, ſpangled, criſpinde, and indented accordingly. In the head of the Canopy in the middle was a rich embroidery with the Armes of France and Nauarre crowned with Imperiall Diadems, and compaſſed or inuironed round about with the two Orders of Saint Michael, and the Holy Ghoſt: As for the ornaments of cloath of Gold at this time about the Hearſe, if it be done, it is doug out of ignorance.

Berry King of Armes, in the life of Charles the ſeauenth, talkes of a Herſe Canopy, and ornaments of Saint Denis Chancell with the Church of Paris, of Violet or Purple Veluet ſemy flowry with Floure de lis of Gold without number, or limitation: and in the manuſcript Chronicle of the Chancelor du Prat, hath it thus: The good King Lewes the twelfth, departed out of this life, at his lodging of the Tournelles, the firſt day of Ianuary, in the yeare One thouſand fiue hundred and foureteene, and after his body was ceremoniouſly embalmed, and ſeared: it was brought into the great Hall of the ſame lodging, and there encloſed in a Coffin of Cipreſſe, with a ſumptuons couering of Watchet or Blew Veluet ſemy flowry with Floure de lis of Gold.

On both ſides, where the body remained or was repoſed, there were two ſtately Altars ordained and adorned, very richly, as couered in the ſame manner with Purple Veluet embroidered with Gold, hauing Canopies of the ſame faſhion.

Before the body ſtood two little Stooles, couered with Cloath of Gold, and on them two holy Water-pots, one for the people, who had holy Water ſprinkled as they paſſed through the great Hall into the Chamber, and ſo went through the gallery of the pictures: the other for the Princes, Prelats, Lords, Knights and Gentlemen.

Behinde the body, was another Stoole couered and adorned in the ſame manner with cloath of Gold, but vpon that ſtood a Croſſe: At the foure corners of the Coffin, were placed foure great Candleſticks of Siluer gilded, wherein were as many great white Virgin Waxe Tapers, which burnt continually, and ſo did thoſe, that were on the Altars.

Both of the one ſide, and the other of this great Chamber, were placed diuers long Formes couered with Tapiſtry of Silke: behinde the body, on the left hand by the Gallery, there were two Chaires and a Bench couered with Cloath of Gold for the Cardinals, Archbiſhops, Counſellours of State, and Maſters of the requeſts; behinde them was another Bench for the Kings Almoners, and behinde them, two others for thoſe of the Order of the Religion.

On the other ſide, all along by the wall, there were likewiſe long Benches for the Pages of the Chamber, and before them for the Gentlemen in ordinary; and before them, as neere to the Hearſe as was conuenient, two other Chaires, and a forme couered with cloath of Gold, ſutable to that which the Cardinals had, for my Maſters the Princes of the bloud, the Officers of the Crowne, and Knights of the Orders.

The foure Mendicants, Capuchines, and other Monaſticall Orders, ſung day and night, not a Plaine ſong, or diuerſity of Tunes, but after the manner of the Friers Minims and Capuchins, who take the Cue one of another and anſwere by courſes.

On

On either ſide of the holy Water-pots, as neere the body as was conuenient, were alſo two little ſtooles couered with great Mantles of Cloath of Gold, on which two Heralds attended in their Coates of Armes, ouer Caſſocks of Veluet, with quoifes of their function, and gilded Scepters of Wood in their hands; theſe went vp and downe from one to another, or (if you had rather) ſtood ſtill to giue the Holy-water ſprinckled to the Princes, Prelats, and Lords, who paſſed by to receiue it ouer the body of the Defunct.

Within the Gallery of Pictures, there were eighteene Altars couered with blacke, on which were ſaid a hundred low Maſſes euery day, but within the Kings Chamber were ſixe of a higher note, the laſt of which, was alwayes the ordinary Maſſe for the Defunct, cellebrated in his life time by the Singing-men of his Chappell in the ſame manner as he himſelfe was wont to heare it. This Order was obſerued, as well in his owne Chamber, as in the great Hall, where appeared a ſolemnity of Mourning-cloth from Aſcenſion day, to Saint Peter and Saint Paul, the laſt ſaue one of Iune, when the body was tranſported into the great Church of Paris.

The Kings body remained in the Chamber full eighteene dayes, vntill Friday, the feaſt of Saint Barnaby, the eleauenth of Iune: The day after the Feaſt, the body was remoued from place to place, till it was laid on a bed of Honour prepared in the great Hall of the Swiſs, to whom it was preſented the ſeauenteenth of Iune, and ſo it came to the charge of the Archers of the Corps du Guard of Scotts: At euery one of theſe changes, and deſcents of the body, many Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Abbots in the beſt robes of their Prelacy, or if you will Pontificallibus, attended with the Officers of the Crowne, Knights of the two Orders, Lords and Gentlemen, Captains of the Guard, and Officers of the Kings Pallace.

This Hall of the Swiſſers was moſt richly prepared with the Kings beſt tapiſtry, the wals were hung, and the very roofe and ſeelings aboue were adorned, and as for the Pillars, or if you pleaſe, the Supporters of the hanging Vault, they were all couered with cloath of Gold, from the very toppe to the bottome of the pauement.

In the croſſe-windowes from one ſide to another were, erected thoſe Altars to ſay Maſſe on, which ſtood in the gallery of pictures.

At the top of this Hall, there was a halfe-pace of fiue ſteppes, or degrees, and before the Chimny a platforme of foure greeces or ſtaires higher, vpon which was raiſed a Bedſted of nine foote long, mounted on high and faſhioned in ſtate round about (except where the bolſters lay againſt the Chimney:) for the Chimney was on the backe of the beds head, you had alſo three more ſteps euery one a foote high and broad, as if you went vp by degrees.

The Bedſted was apparrelled in this manner; the Teſton and top had a great cloath of State full of Floure de Luces, with Vallens and all things accordingly: on the bolſters and bed it ſelfe, were fine large Sheetes of the cloath of Holland, both Cambricke and Lawne, which trailed a great way on the ground, and the ground it ſelfe was all couered with rich cloath vnder feete. Ouer this was a Couerlet or Quilt of freezed gold, full of croſſes of Siluer quartred and cantoned with the Armes of France and Nauarre, with a large border of purple Veluet ſemy flowry, or ful of Floure deliſes of Gold, a foote and a halfe broad; there was alſo another Border of Ermines, as large as that of the Veluet, which was done in ſuch a manner, as if there had been three Couerlets: the firſt, which for heighth and largeneſſe ſurpaſſed, was of Floure deliſes: the ſecond of Ermines: the laſt, of fine Cambricke or Lawne, which couered all to the bottome.

Now vpon this freeſed cloath of Gold, in the midſt of the bed (the true coffine elſewhere conueied away) was the portraiture of the King laied carued to the life, and apparrelled with robes of State, as he accuſtomed in magnificent ſolemnities. He had firſt on a very fine Shirt of Holland, with a ruffe, as he was wont to weare, when he was liuing: ouer his Shirt was a Waſtecoate of Crimſon Sattin, plaited or doubled with Carnation Taffety, laid ouer with gold lace, the ſleeues came no further then the elbowes, but the skirts within foure fingers of the knees. Ouer his Waſtecoate he wore a Dalmatique Gowne of Violet Sattin, full of Floure de Luces of of Gold, ſo richly embrodered, that you could ſcarſe diſcerne the ground-worke, beſides it was laced round about with a fine thinne plate of Lace of Gold and Siluer foure or fiue fingers broad: this came alſo to the elbow, and halfe way to the legge; the Buskins and Sandales, which were open Shooes, were of Purple Veluet embrodered with Floure de Luſes of Gold, yea the very ſoles of the ſhooes were made of Crimſen or Red Sattin.

Ouer this Dalmatique Gowne was a Mantell Royall of ſix Ells long of Purple Veluet, ſemy flory with Gold, with a facing and edging or border of Ermines. It was open on the right ſide, bound and made faſt vpon the right ſhoulder with great buttons of Violes like and Gold, frieſled and creſpinde with the ſame: the traile of this great Mande was laid vpon the left ſhoulder, inſomuch that you might eaſily diſcerne, how the Waſt-coate and Gowne came but to the elbowes, the reſt of the ſhirt to the tying about the wriſt to the hand: to the compaſſing of the necke, to the comming vp to the enclоſure before the breſt, was all delicately fruſſled, and wrought moſt curiouſly.

About the necke of this Mantell Royall, otherwiſe called the Manteiet, befides a doubling or tippet of the Furre of Ermines, there was caſt ouer him the great Coller of the Order of the holy Ghoſt, the King alſo wore a night Cap or Coife of Crimoſen Sattin, ouer which was an Imperiall Crowne ſet full of Diamonds, and pretious Stones: on both ſides of his head there were alſo two Pillobers of Violet Veluet, ſemy flowry of Gold, embrodered as the reſt: vpon which, on the right hand, was laid the Scepter Royall, and on the other ſide the Scepter and hand of Iuſtice: on the other ſide againe as neere to the bolſter of the Bed, as was conuenient, was the Royal Chaire couered with Purple Veluet, embrodered alſo with Floure de Luſes of Gold. In a word, the Altars, Chaires, Benches & Stooles from one ſide to another, were all of the ſame faſhion, as you heard before in the Kings Chamber.

Round about the Hall-doores, and winding Staires there hung vp diuers ſquare Tables, in which was ſet out in the beſt oylie colours, the Scutcheon with the Armes of France and Nauarre, crowned with Imperiall Crownes within, a border of the Orders of the King, and Supported by two Angels.

And the while this Image and Portrature of the King remained in this great Hall, there was ſolemne Seruice at Dinner, and Supper time in the ſame manner, as was accuſtomed the King liuing, that is to ſay: Benedicite: the Grace from the Prelate; the Muſicke to the Graces; the Seruice, and ſay of the Wine and Meate, as well by the Maiters of the Houſe, as by the Gentlemen, Seruants, and other Officers of the Mouth, and thus, was hee attended on in his Bed in open view with all ſolemnitie.

But when Wedneſday the twentie two of Iune approached, the great Hall made an exchange with his rich and magnificent furniture, putting on a maske of ſorrow, and ſhewing a face of mourning: For it was preſently hung with blacke both from the top to the bottome, yea round about the very Pillers: within, ouer the hangings of Serge there were two Borders, of black Veluet couered with the Armes of France and Nauarre, embrodred with Gold, in which manner the two great Porches, and the Staires were alſo dreſſed.

The Hall it ſelfe was in a manner made ſhorter by certaine diuiſions: For from the Chimney to the fiue degrees or ſteps, and all the ſpace where the bed of Honor ſtood, the Tapeſtry was preſently couered with Serge and blacke Veluet. Into the middle of the Hall the body of the King was brought, and ſet vpon three Treſtels of foure foote and a halfe high, whereon, was put the forenamed Cheſt in which was the Cipreſſe Coffin, which was couered with a large Hearſecloth of blacke Veluet, trailing on euery ſide vpon the ground, full of croſſes of white Sattin, with the Armes of France and Nauarre embrodered: It was alſo furniſhed with another couering of cloath of Gold, freeſed, croſſed, and tipped or dreſſed with the ſame, round about a border of Purple Veluet, with Floure de luces of Gold, embrodred to the full, with a welt and bordure of Ermines foure fingers broad.

Vpon the laſt named cloath or Couerlet of State, there were foure Pillowes and Cuſhions of cloath of Gold, freeſed & purled: vpon which, by the right ſide of his head was placed the Royall Diadem, and vpon the other three the Order of the holy Ghoſt, the Scepter of Maieſtie, and the hand of Iuſtice, and at his feete was a great Croſſe of Gold.

The Coffin had ouer all a Tilt or ſtately frame of wood, painted ouer with blacke, of ten foote long, and nine foote broad, vpon the railes and barres of the ſame, from the one ſide to the other, were foureteene great Waxe Tapers or Candels of white Virgins waxe, weighing ſixe pound a piece, which burnt day and night, and at the foure corners were alſo foure other Tapers of the ſame weight, and aboue toward the head of the Coffin (higher then the reſt) was a great Herſe or Canopy, altogether charged with twelue burning Candels of the ſame weight and faſhion.

Ouer the top of this Coffin and frame there was ſpred a great cloath of Eſtate, or Canopy of blacke Veluet, fringed with blacke Silke and Gold, interwouen and crespinde with knots of the ſame.

On both ſides of this ſumptuous frame were two Altars, in like manner couered with blacke for to ſay Maſſe at, as you heard before in other preparations.

Without the Liſts & Barriers, or Railes in a foote or thereabouts, was a little low Stoole couered with blacke Veluet, vpon which ſtood a Veſſell of holy Water, and on either ſide two other low Stooles, decked as the former, for two Heralds of Armes, who in this ſeruice wore Chapperons on their heads, their Martiall Robes, and ouer that their Coates of Armes, who gaue the holy Water ſprinckell.

From one ſide to another were alſo ſeuerall Formes and Benches, couered with blacke Serge for the Princes, Prelats, and Officers to ſit on, and others who were aſſiſtant in the Seruice, and attended the Sermons, that were made during the time, that the body remained there.

On Sunday the twentieth of Iune, after Euening Prayer, all the Churches of Paris, as wel Pariſhes, as Monaſteries rang their Bels in their accuſtomed tune for the dead, which laſted three dayes together, euen till Wedneſday night, wherein they prayed day & night for the ſoule of the defunct, and the Churches with the Monaſteries (during thoſe three dayes) were all hung with Blacke, bedecked with Veluet, hauing the Armes of France and Nauarre, their Chappels with continuall burning Candels, and their Chanteries expreſſing a great deale of ſorrow, the principall Marchants and Burgeſſes of Paris frequenting their Pariſh Churches all the three dayes, and hauing ſolemne Seruice for the dead, their Shops ſhut vp, and themſelues forbidden to ſell any thing.

On Thurſday being the firſt of Saint Iohn Baptiſt the Bels began againe, and laſted till Saturday following, euery Fraternity anſwering one another, continuing the accuſtomed Prayers and Dirges for the ſoule of the departed.

This ſolemnity of Seruice in Prayers and Oriſons for the dead, laſting full three dayes, as you haue heard, to the honour of the departed, and accompliſhment of the Funerall Ceremonies, was not onely celebrated in Paris, but in all the Villages and Townes adioyning, yea ouer the Country: ſo that in truth it was ſo generall a ſorrow, and ſeruice in burning of Candels, and mourning for this our Henry the great, in his Obſequies and Prayers for his ſoule; that the like was not performed for fiue precedent Kings, neuer ſince Lewes the twelfth, ſurnamed the Father of the People.

The body of the King was full fiue dayes in the Hall of ſorrow, during which time, the Comminaltie of Paris came flocking in to receiue the holy Water-ſprinckell: and the Friday after S. Iohn Baptiſt, the King hauing dined at the Hoſtell of Longeuile departed ſome foure houres after noone, to performe his ſolemne prayers ouer the Coffin of the deceaſed King his Father.

Before his Maieſty marched the great Maiſter, or Prouoſt of the Houſe, with his Lieutenants, apparrelled in long mourning Robes, and Chapperons on their Heads, followed with the Guard of Archers in their Caſſocks and mourning Roabes, with their Chapperons in forme and faſhion, that is to ſay, that all ſuch as were appointo mourn, had certaine Bonnets and Caps on their Heads, & ouer all a Hood, which they tearme a Chapperon.

The Kings Guard of Swiſſers marched after them, which belonged to the great Prouoſt, Prouoſt: After the Swiſſers marched the Fifes and Drommes, all couered ouer with Blacke Cipreſſe; then followed the two hundred Gentlemen of the Kings Houſe, their Pollaxes or Axes all couered with Cipreſſe, their points downeward: then came nine Heraulds in their Coates of Armes, marching two and two, with Monioy King of Armes all alone, and the laſt: Next vnto them, the Knights of the Order of the Holy Ghoſt, euery one with his Collar and ornaments of his Order, which came ouer their Roabes, with Hoods accordingly.

After them came his Maieſtie himſelfe, with the Cardinall Francis, Duke of Ioieuſe on the right hand, and the Cardinall of Sourdis on the other: his Maieſtie was reueſted with a long mourning Roabe, and large ſleeues of Scarlet dye, but Violet colour, with a cloſe Hood on his Head, without any Collar of his Order: the traile, or taile of this Garment of ſorrow, was full fiue Els long, and ſupported by fiue Princes, whereof two were of the blood royall, that is to ſay, on the right hand Monſier le Prince of Conde, Francis de Burbon, and Monſier the Count Soyſons, Charles of Burbon, and the three others were of the Houſe of Lorraine, the Duke of Guiſe on the right hand, the Prince Ionueile, or Iainuile, his brother, on the left; and at the end of the traine the Duke D'elbœuf their Coſin: Next after his Maieſtie, there was a diſtance of place, and then were carried in mens Armes, for their infancy or tender yeares, the Dukes of Orleans, and Anion, brothers to the King, in blacke Roabes with formall Hoods accordingly. For you muſt vnderſtand, that in ſuch a ſolemnity, it is lawfull for none, but the King himſelfe to weare Scarlet Violet, but if they had beene of age, then it belonged to them to carry vp the Kings traile, or the long taile of his Veſtement; and after them followed the other Princes of the blood, amongſt whom was no ſtranger Prince admitted.

The King paced on foote from the ſaid Hoſtell and Houſe of Longue-Ville, to the Pallace or Caſtell of the Louure, whoſe firſt Port or Gate was all hung with blacke Serge, bedecked with a Funerall Girdle, as it were, of blacke Veluet with the Armes of France and Nauarre, embrodered to the number of fiue, all of one faſhion, and in the ſame manner it was furniſhed within, as well as without.

At the Doore or entrance of the great ſtaircaſe his Maieſty was receiued by Monſier the Duke of Fronſac, Count of Saint Paul: the Prince ſirnamed of Orleans, and others of the Houſe of Longueuile, with diuers Marſhals of France and Knights of the order, which alwayes remained in the great Hall, before the body of the deceaſed King his Father, where they kneeled vpon Cuſhions of Purple Veluet, hauing afterwards on either ſide the Kings brothers, my Lords the Dukes of Anion and Orleans, who alſo kneeled vpon Cuſhions of blacke Veluet

There were alſo a great number of Archbiſhops and Biſhops ſolemnely reueſted with hoods, or bonets of blacke Veluet ouer their white Sattin Miters. The Kings Chappell ſung continually De Profundis, and other Muſicall Pſalmes, after whom the Cardinall de Perron, Archbiſhop of Sens, and great Almonor of France made the accuſtomed Oriſons, which being done, there was an aſperſion and ſprinkell of Holy Water vpon his Maieſtie, who alſo caſt the ſame vpon the body of the defunct; after him, my Lords the Enfans of France perform'd the like, onely thoſe two that were the Kings brothers, but none of thoſe, who did ſupport the traile of the Kings Robe, or long Gowne: this Garment with the Hood of Scarlet Violet, belongeth properly to the Heraulds.

The ſame day about fiue houres and a halfe within night, my Lord the Chancellour Sillery Brulart, and the Lords of the Counſell approached the Coffin, and beſprinkled the Body with Holy Water.

The day following being Saturday the ſix and twentie of Iune, about the eight houre in the morning, there was a Summons proclaimed for the enterment of the King. The Lord of Rhodes, Knight of both Orders, and great Maiſter of the Ceremonies in the Court of France, hauing receiued the ſtile and title of the deceaſed King at the hands of Monſier the Chancellour, and other the Lords of the Priuie Counſels, proceeded from place to place with foure and twenty Criers belonging to the body; certaine Diuines of Paris, and many other perſons adorned with mourning roabes and countenances of ſadneſſe. The firſt Summons was in the Court of Parliament, ment, from thence they went into the Chamber of Accounts, and ſo into the Court generall of the Kings aides, or Prerogatiue: from thence to the Mint, and ſo to the other Offices giuing warning of the Kings entertainment.

When theſe Ceremonies were diſpatched abroad, the Maiſter of the Ceremonies with his foure and twenty Criers and Proclaimers returne back againe to the Louure, and ſo came before the Marble Table in the great Hall of the Pallace, & after they haue ſounded certaine little Bels, Monſier Melon the principall amongſt them, publiſhed the Kings title, and with an audable voyce proclaimed the Superſcription, in this manner.

Noble and honorably deuoted perſons, pray for the ſoules of the moſt high, moſt puiſſant, and moſt excellent Prince Henry the great, by the grace of God, the renowned Chriſtian King of France and Nauarre, moſt happy, moſt victorious, and incomparable in all clemencie, mercy and magnanimitie, who is departed out of this world at the Pallace of the Louure: looke I ſay, that you doe pray religiouſly, that God may receiue his ſoule. For on Thurſday, ſome two houres after Noone the body of his Maieſtie ſhall be aduanced, and carried into the Cathedrall Church of Paris, where muſt be continuall Mattins, and Vigils ſaid for the dead; the day after, early in the morning, the Prayers and Seruice accuſtomed are for to be ſolemnely celebrated, and when all is done, the body to be tranſported to Saint Denis, and there to be inhumed and buried with all princely ſolemnitie; looke you pray then, that God receiue his ſoule.

This was the manner and Tenour of that Cry and Proclamation made firſt in the Pallace, and afterward in the foure quarters of the great Citie of Paris, beginning at the Hoſtell or before the Towne Houſe: the great Gates during the three dayes of the interment all couered with Blacke Serge, bedecked with quarters, or Scutcheons of blacke Veluet, with the Armes of France and Nauarre.

The ſame day of the Summons, at the tenth houre or there abouts, or at tenne a Clocke, the Court in their Pallace Robes, went ſolemnely to giue the Holy Water to the deceaſed body. At one of the Clocke came the Chamber of accounts: at two the Court of Aides or Prerogatiues: at three, the Officers of the Mint, & ſo followed the Vniuerſity: the Ciuilians, and the whole body of the Burgeſſes of Paris.

On Tueſday, being Saint Peters day, about Noone, all the Pariſhes with the Collegiate and Monaſtery Churches of Paris, did goe to giue the Holy water ſprinckle, and ſo to ſay the accuſtomed Prayers in the Church ouer the body of the Defunct: they entred by the doore by the great Staires, and departed by that of the Hall of ſorrow, and went out marching in order with meaſured diſtance, and ſo continued in Saint Germans Church, called the Church of Pickaxes, from whence they departed within two houres by the Principall Gate, and tooke the Streete of the Louure, otherwiſe named Auſtruch, for to get into the great Streete of Saint Honore, and ſo they turned by the Croſſe of Trayor, all along the ditch of Saint Germaines, otherwiſe called the Streete of dry Trees, and ſo paſſed ouer the new Bridge, turning by the Key or Wharfe of the Auguſtines, marching by Saint Michaels Bridge to the new quarter and Streete of our Ladies Church, where all the Companies of his Maieſties Guard were ranged in order, euen to the doores of the Church: but for the better vnderſtanding of this Solemnitie, they were thus Marſhalled.

Firſt came the Captaine Marchand, Colonell of the Archers of the Citie of Paris, and his Lieutenants in their habilliments of mourning, followed by the three Companies of the Guard of the Citie, in their Iackets or Caſſockes with mourning Hoods ouer their Heads. The one ſort or company abaſed their Halberds, their points almoſt touching the ground: the ſecond company carried their Bowes and Quiuers reuerſed: the third Company had their Harquebuſſes in the bought of their Armes, ſuſtained by one hand, and in the other a burning Torch of two pound weight with the Scutcheon and Armes of the Citie, which is, A Field Gueulles, a Ship vnder ſaile Argent well rigged, and in good Equipage, on a Cheef of France.

After theſe companies came the new ſect of the Franciſian Friers, of the ſuburbs of S. Martins, & thoſe called de Picque-puce: the Capuchins and Minorites, carrying their great Croſs of wood; the poore Schollers of Mont Aigu Colledg in Paris; the Cordeliers, Friers Friers Iacobins, Auguſtines, and Carmelites, the Fuellants in a browne habit, with all the other Orders, as well in the Pariſhes, as Monaſteries, hauing euery one foure Torches of yellow Wax of two pounds a peece, with the double Armes of the King.

After them followed more then fiue hundred poore men in long mourning gownes from the top to the toe, with hoods ouer their heads. After them, followed the lame Souldiers, maintained by the charity of Chriſtian people; in the ſame abillements as the poore men were: euery one carrying a burning Torch, with the double Armes of the King. Next them, the 24. ſworne Criers of Paris.

Then came the Knight de Gueſt, with his Lieutenants and Souldiers, as wel on foot as on horſeback, trayling their blacke Enſignes on the ground. A little after, on the right hand, marched the Sergeants of the Verge of the Guildhall in Paris, in a blacke Veſtment, or ſhort cloake, with their ſwords by their ſides, and Truncheons in their hands, blacked at the two ends: and then followed the Sergeants of Horſe on foote, as the reſt. On the left hand, were the Sergeants of the State-houſe (or Guildhall) in their Liueries. After theſe, came the publike Notaries of the Courts of Iuſtice, in garments and hoods of Mourning: and next them, the Commiſſaries of the ſame Courts.

The Preuoſt of Paris, was mounted on horſeback, with a Truncheon in his hand couered with blacke Veluet. He was apparrelled in a long Robe of the Serge of Florence; it had a traile or traine of two Elles, ſupported with three of his owne name, with a hood ouer his head: before him, marched ſixe Sergeants of the twelue, with their Caſſockes, and hoods ouer their heads, their Halberds and Partiſans downward to the ground. He was attended on with Vſhers, Audiencers, and Regiſters, with the three Lieutenants, Ciuill, Criminall, and Particular, with Councellers, Aduocates, & Proctors, belonging both to the King, and the Iudicatures.

After theſe, on the right hand, followed the Sergeants on Horſeback, who ordered the ſquadrons of the Caſtles; and on the left, after the Sergeants of the Towne-houſe, followed the Commanders of Wards, with their Deputies. Wee may reſemble them to Aldermens Deputies, or Captaines of Fifties, Squadrons, and Tenns. Then came thoſe who had beene Shrieues, with the foure and twenty Councellours of the City.

Heere was another diuiſion: and ſo there marched after them diuers Religious Orders. Such as were of the Holy Croſſe of Bretonnery, the Billeres, the white Cloakes: thoſe of Saint Catherine du Val, the Schollers, and the Mathurins. Then followed in order all the Pariſhes: Saint Paul, S. Coſme, S. Eſtien of the Mount, S. Medard, S. Euſtace, S Croſſe of the Citty, S. Sauiour, S. James of the Shambles, S. Innocent, S. Ioſſe, S. Germain the old, S. Landry, S. Leu, S. Gilles, S. Geruais, S. Nicholas of the Field, S. Laurence, S. Peter among the Beeues, S Andrew de Laas, S. Hellary, S Geneuiefue of Ardents, S. Peter of Arcis, S. Chriſtopher, S. Martiall, S Iohn in the Greue, S. Nicholas of Chardonet, S. Bartholmew, S. Seuerin, S. Iames of the Hoſpitall, S. Magdalen, S. Lenis de la Chartre, S. Sulpice, and S. Marcel.

Now you muſt conſider, that in this ſolemnity of Marching, the moſt ancient Pariſhes of Paris are thoſe which are laſt named, and ſo muſt take precedency of the firſt, and the like is to be obſerued in the other Orders of Religion, and the Churches Collegiates.

After the Pariſhes, marched the Religious Orders of Bernardine, S. Maglory, S. Victor, S. Martin in the Field, S. German the neeter, and S. Geneuieue of the Mount, all which tooke the right hand. Then on the left hand, followed the Churches called the Daughters of our Lady, that is to ſay, S. Eſtienne of the Greekes, the Sepulcher, S. Opportune, S. Honore, S. Benoit the conuerted, S. Mederic, and S. Germaine of the Auxerrois.

Then on the left hand followed the holy Chappell of the Pallace, and on the right, our Lady of Paris, and theſe onely ſung through the Towne.

After the holy Chappel, marched the whole body of the Vniuerſity; before whom came their Beadles in mourning veſtments, ouer which were certaine coats of Armes of Violet Taffata, fringed with ſilke of the ſame colour painted all ouer, euen from the necke or Collar, with an artificiall Cloud, out of which iſſued a hand, holding a booke of of Gueules, filletted with Gold, vpon three Flower de Lizes of the ſame, which is the Armes of the Vniuerſity: the Maſters and Gouernors of the Colledges, marched along in their furred Cappes: and the Rector or Vice-Chancellour came face to face with the Deane of our Ladies Church.

Betweene the Canons of the Church of Paris, and the profeſſors of Phyſicke, and other Sciences marched the Kings Muſitians, euery one in a Surpleſſe, and a Hoode on the left ſhoulder.

After the Clergy and Vniuerſity of Paris, marched along the Harbengers, Meſſengers, Poſtes for the packets, Courtiers, Maſters ouer the Poſtes, with their Mourning Robes, Hoods on their heads, and the Scutcheon of France vppon their breſts on the left ſide: they were conducted by the Lord de Varenne, Comptroller generall of the Poſtes.

Then followed the Officers of the great and ſmaller Stables.

After them, marched the Hoboyes, Trumpets, Fifes, and Drummes, not ſounding at all, but all turn'd topſie-turuie, the mouths of their Inſtruments downward, their Bannerols wound vp, their hoods or hats very low carried, and their head bare.

Then came Monſieur de Crequy, Maſter of the Campe, with the Captaines, Lieutenants, and Enſignes of the regiments of the Guards, who were all on the right hand: and on the other, Signeur de la Curee, with the Captains and Cornets of the ſquadrons of Light-horſe.

After them, marched the great Prouoſt of the Hoſtel Belangreuille on Horſe-backe; followed of his Lieutenants and Archers on foote, hauing their Mourning Robes, without their Hoods, and beneath their Caſſockes carrying their Halberds very low.

Next, came the Captaine of the Porters Lodge of the Louure, with all his Attendants. Then the Captaine of the Switz on horſebacke, followed with an hundred Switz on foot of the Corps du Guard, their Enſigne halfe rowled vp, carried on their ſhoulder, and couered with blacke Cypers, all their Armes turned backward.

Then followed two hundred Gentlemen of the Kings Pallace, in mourning habits, Hoods on their heads, their Halberds or Axes couered with black Cypres, with their points downward. Then came the Officers of the Kings houſe on the right hand, with the Gentlemen ſeruitors, and the Maſters of the Hoſtell, their Truncheons couered with blacke Cypers, the end pointing to the ground. On the left hand marched the Officers of the Mint, the Court of Aydes, and the Chamber of Accompts, with ſuch as appertained vnto them.

Preſently followed twelue Pages of Honor, apparrelled in blacke Veluet, bare headed, the hats carried very low, booted, ſpurr'd, and mounted on horſebacke, couered with blacke Veluet, croſſed with white Sattin, without Armes; euery horſe led by a Footman all in blacke, bare-headed, and their hats carried very lowe.

Then marched the Squires and Querries, with twelue Armourers and ſumpter horſes with Armes; after whom came du Vidame du Mans, Captain of the hundred Gentlemen of the Kings Chamber.

Next vnto him followed the Biſhop, firſt Confeſſor to the deceaſed King, inſtead of the Biſhop of Paris, who was wont to go next before the Corpes or Coffin, after the faſhion of Curates or pariſh Parſons, who follow the domeſticke ſeruants of the Defunct, and are immediately betweene the body, and them: but after the Pourtraitures of the Kings were diuided from their true bodies, the Biſhoppe of Paris being the firſt Curate, and Ordinary of the King in euery place where he ſhall remaine, ought to follow the body in his Dioceſſe, to deliuer it to thoſe of S. Denis in France. For, in regard that Paris is the cheefe City of the ſacred Realme of France, the Biſhop thereof hath the chiefe cure and care of the true body, till it be diſpoſed of into the ground: and this is the reaſon, why the Diuine Seruice is celebrated at all times in the Kings Chappell, after the manner of Paris, and therefore the Biſhop of Paris attending now the true corpes of the Defunct to Saint Denis, another Biſhop the firſt Confeſſor of the King, went immediatly before the portraiture, as it was now in the Chariot, with a croſſe borne before him, and two Almoners following after.

Now came the Chariot of Eſtate, in which lay the Effigies of the deceaſed King. It was all couered ouer downe to the ground with black Veluet, croſſed vvith croſſes of of white Sattin, cantonned or quartered with ſixe great Scocheons with the Armes of France and Nauarre, with the two Orders of the King with rich Imbroidery. It was drawne along with ſix horſes, two and two, couered with blacke Veluet, croſſed with croſſes of white Sattin: on the left ſide, vpon the firſt and laſt horſes, were two coachmen in blacke Veluet, bare-headed, and Hoods hanging full lowe.

Round about the Chariot of Armes, marched the Archers of the Scotch Guard in a mourning habite ouer their white Caſſockes, with their Hoods on their ſhoulders; their Halberds and Partizans couered with blacke Cypres, their points caried downward, as you heard before.

In the Front before, were the Lords Vitry, Praſlin, and Monteſpan, Captains of the Kings Guard, in their Mourning Robes, and Hoods on their heads.

There followed them, the Kings Almoners, Preachers, and Confeſſors, and then ſixteene Biſhops, two and two, with the Archbiſhop of Lions, all on foot, reueſted as the firſt Confeſſor of the King, with caps of black Veluet ouer their Miters of White Sattin.

After them, marched the Biſhops of Chalons, Noyon, and Beauuais, reputed Earles: the Biſhop of Laon, a Duke (the Biſhop and Duke of Langres, was at this time exempted by reaſon of ſickneſſe,) and the Archbiſhop and Duke of Reimes, Peeres of France: and theſe were mounted on their Mules.

After them, marched Myron, Biſhoppe of Angiers; repreſenting the perſon of the great Almoner of France Iames Duny, Cardinall du Peron, excuſed by his Gout.

After whom followed the Lord of Bon-Oeil, being on horſeback alone, in his robes of Mourning, and the Hood vpon his head, which we call due forme. And after him came the Ambaſſadors of Sauoye, of Venice, and of Spaine, mounted on Horſebacke, attyred in their Mourning Garments, and without Hoods. Each of them was conducted by a Biſhop, mounted vpon his Mule.

Then followed after, the two Nuntio's to the Pope, mounted on their Mules, with their Conducters.

The Ordinary, conducted by the Archbiſhop of Embrun.

The Extraordinary, by the Archbiſhop of Aix in Prouence, both the one & other, as well as the Biſhops, Peeres of France: and they which conducted the Ambaſſadors, were cloathed with their Violet Saplers and Rochets, and likewiſe their great Copes.

After the Nuntios marched

The Car. De Ioyeuſe, Archbiſhop of Rouen. And, dinalles De Sourdis, Archbiſhop of Burdeaux, with their Violet Coapes, and Mules adorned with the ſame.

So finiſhed the ſolemne Funerall Pompe: after which, were carried the Honors of the deceaſed King: but before his Picture or Effigie, which ſeemed as if it had beene liuing. And yet notwithſtanding, all they which carried it, were cloathed in Mourning, with Hoods on their ſhoulders, and ſquare Caps on their heads.

Firſt of all,

Three Heralds of Armes of France marched equally together, hauing their Coates of Armes ouer their Mourning Gownes, their Hoods vpon their ſhoulders, black Veluet Caps (of the old faſhion) on their heads, and their Scepters in their hands, couered with blacke Cobweb Lawne all ouer.

The Lord of Rhodes, Great Maſter of the Ceremonies of France, Knight, and high Prouoſt of both the Kings Orders, Prime Eſquire, Caruer, and Bugle-bearer vnto the King, riding alone on horſebacke, in his Mourning habit, and Hoode vpon his head; bearing a Lance pointed with Blew, and headed with Golde, which was the Phanon Carre, that is to ſay, The Cornet of France, made of violet Veluet, ſemed with Flower de Luces d'Or de Cypre, in rich Embroidery, more full then wanting any, Frindged verie largely with Gold.

It was followed by the Cornets of the Marches and Prouinces of France, appertaining to the Sacred Domaine of the King. To wit, the Viſcounties, Counties, Dukedomes, Peeredomes, and other Seigneuries on the Frontiers of the Kingdome; and of them which (by right) belonged to the Crowne of France.

his bed of State, or Chariot of honor, with an Imperiall Crowne on his head, the Order of the Holy Ghoſt about his Coller or neck, the Scepter Royal in his right hand, and a hand of Iuſtice in the other, with a border of Ermines.

The couer or Canopy of this bed of State or Chariot of honor, vnder which (as you haue heard the portrature lay was ſupported or carried by the ſixe Preſidents of the great Chamber (Monſier the firſt Preſident de Harlay, abſent by reaſon of ſickneſſe) apparrelled in their Mantels, Hoods, and Caps of maintenance on their head, a Veſtment of honor vſed of auncient Monarkes and Potentates, the firſt two, who went before, were the Preſident Mole on the right hand, and Iambeuile Camys on the other; in the middle were the Preſident Thou and Sequire; behinde, came the Preſident of Blanc meſnil Potier, and Forget.

Round about the Lords of the Parliament, marched ſome of the Scotch Guard.

After them followed the Prouoſt of Marchants Lury Sanguin, Counſellor of the great Chamber, with the foure Sheriffes of Paris in the Roabes of their Liuerie, without mourning, carrying another Canopy or cloath of eſtate, after the body. This Canopy was of Cloath of Siluer, damaſked with great red branching worke, to the bottome of the ſame, croſſed with white Sattin round, without any Coates of Armes, the Staues which vpheld it, couered with white Veluet. It was receiued of them or from them, by the Religious or Clergy of Saint Denis in France, at the bowing of a Croſſe in the Village of the Chappell, and then carried by them after the portrature vnto their Church, where the ſaid Canopy remained euer after.

Next to the Sheriffes and the Prouoſt of the Merchants, marched in front, and on Horſeback couered with blacke Veluet, croſſed with white Sattin, the Duke of Fronſacke, Earle of Saint Paul, by the ſirname of Orleans, repreſenting the great Maiſter of the Hoſtell of France, and he carried in his right hand a Staffe, couered with blacke Veluet. In the middle came the Duke of Guiſe, carrying the great Banner of France of Violet Veluet, powdred with Floure de Luces of Gold of Cipreſſe, with a rich embrodery fringed with the ſame, he repreſented the great Chamberlaine of France; and the Baron de Thermes on the left hand, repreſented the firſt Gentleman of the Chamber.

After them marched the Lords, that were principall mourners, that is to ſay, my Lords: The Prince of Conde and Count Soiſons, Princes of the bloud, Knights of the Order of the Holy Ghoſt, with their Orders aboue their necks, or Collers.

The Duke of Guiſe, Prince Iamuile, and Duke of Elbeuf; Princes of the Houſe of Lorraine, but not Knights of the Order.

The Dukes of Eſpernon, And Of Montbaſon. } Knights of the ſaid Order.

All riding on Horſebacke, one after another, with Chapperons on their Heads, and Collars of the Order vpon their mourning Roabes, hauing long traines, containing about fiue Ells in length, and carried vp by their Gentlemen.

After the great mourners, Marched in front

The Vſher and Herauld of Armes, Of the Order of the Holy Ghoſt, being followed

By the High Treaſurer, and the Regiſter of the ſaid Order: And they were followed

By nine Knights of the Order, being mourners on foot, according as all the reſt of the Funerall Pompe were, which was compoſed of Foure and twenty Pages, belonging to the Kings Stable, wearing Coates and Night-Caps of blacke Veluet.

An hundred Gentlemen of the Kings Houſe.

Foure Trompets, couered with blacke Cypreſſe, bearing their Trompets Boccales downeward.

Foure Banners, of foure Companies of Archers of the Kings Guard, conſiſting of foure different Cullers, as namely Red, Green, Blew and Aſh-Culler, couered likewiſe with black Cypreſſe, the Cullers trailing on the ground, and the Guard the heads of their Halberds in like manner.

Such

Such was the traine of this enterment, wherein were counted ten thouſand perſons cloathed in mourning, and teares trickling downe their cheekes, for the moſt part of them.

The Streetes of Paris, where the Conuoye paſſed for the two firſt dayes, were hung all with blacke, the moſt part of them being blacke Veluet, with the Armes of the deceaſed King, and of the Citie.

At euery ſixt Houſe, all along the ſaid Streetes, ſtood men in mourning, each one holding a lighted Torch in his hand, bearing the Armes of the Citie: the principall Gate whereof was hung with blacke Serge, and thereon blacke Veluet alſo, with the Armes of the dead King, during the three dayes of the Obſequies and Funerall.

The Churches of our Lady in Paris, and of Saint Denis in France, were hung with Serge, and blacke Veluet vpon it, with Armes of the deceaſed King. The bodies of thoſe Churches, the Quires, the Wings, Croſſings, Trauerſings, Pillers and Vaults, both aboue and below, were full of burning Waxe Lights, each of them containing a pound weight, and ſtanding (not aboue a foote in diſtance) one from another.

In the Quire of the Church of Paris (as alſo in that of Saint Denys, according to the length and wideneſſe of them) was fixed a frame, called Vne Chappelle Ardente, of Carpenters worke, the nether-part whereof was ſixteene foote in largeneſſe, and the toppe ſupported by foure great Pillars ſquare, of twentie foote in height, which ſuſtained three Friezes, and thirteene Piramids, with their degrees, all full of Croſſe-Croſſelets and pins of Wood, which carried aboue three thouſand burning Waxe-Candles, each of them containing a pound in weight. Theſe Piramides (and eſpecially the thirteenth in the midſt of all) were ſo highly raiſed, that they ſeemed to touch the roofe of the Church. Theſe Chappelles Ardentes were within the plaine grounds painted with Aſhe colour, and Floure de Luces of Orpine Siluer, according as the foure great Pillars were, the Balleſtars and Pillars round about, but beneath they were painted blacke.

Vpon the third Frieze aloft, were rancked the Armes of the Duchies, Counties and Seigneuries, belonging to the Crowne of France, all repreſented in Funerall Pompe.

That in the midſt, was engirt with a folding of Violet Veluet, very thickly powdred with Floure de Luces of fine Gold, in richeſt embrodery.

The laſt, but the firſt in order, was engirt with a wrapping of Blacke Veluet, and couered with the dead Kings Armes, in rich Embroderie.

The great Piramid in the midſt, was entoured with three gilded Crownes, in manner of Garlands with great Fleurons, repreſenting the Kingdomes of Sicile, Ieruſalem and Nauarre, and (aboue them) the great Imperiall Crowne of France, which couered the three other, and on the top thereof, a great double Croſſe, charged with burning Waxe-lights.

Vndernea th this Chapelle Ardente, engirt with great Tapers, of ſixe pounds a piece, lay the Body and Effigie of the deceaſed King, in his Bedde of Honour.

The firſt day of Funerall Pompe, was ſung in the Church of Paris (where the Body reſted for that night) Vigils, and other Prayers for the dead. On the morrow the Maſſes, the laſt whereof was ſaid by the Biſhop of Paris, the Funerall Oration deliuered by Coſpeau, Biſhop of Aire in Guienne; the Dinner performed at the Biſhops Pallace. After which was done, the Funerall Pompe began to March (according as the day before) ſo farre as to Saint Denys.

On the Thurſday, being the firſt day of Iuly, the Portrature or Effigies of the King, was carried to the Treaſurie of the Church, and the Body placed vnder the Chappelle Ardente; the Maſſes Celebrated, and the laſt ſaid by the Cardinall de Ioyeuſe, and the Funerall Oration deliuered by the Biſhop of Angiers, Myron.

The laſt Maſſe being ended, the Great Maiſter of the Ceremonies of France, De Rhodes, tooke from off the Hearſe the Crowne, the Scepter, the Hand of Iuſtice, and the other Honors, which he diſtributed according to the ancient cuſtome; and after the State, Cloathes of cloth of Gold, and of Veluet.

The Gentlemen of the Chamber, and the Scottes Guard, tooke the Coffin, and brought it to the entrance of the caue or Vault of Ceremonies, which is at the entring into the Quire, on the Epiſtle ſide at the South doore, which euery day is hung with Blacke, where reſt the bodies, entoured with foure burning Tapers, day and night, vntill ſuch time as the Bodies are taken thence, and put into the place deſtinied and appointed at their Buriall.

At entering into the Vault, the Cardinall de Ioyeuſe (ouer the body of the deceaſed King) ſaid the accuſtomed Prayers. Which being ended, the ſaid Cardinall was ſeated at one ſide of the Vault, and the Duke of Fronſack (in quality of Great Maiſter) at the other ſide, hauing by them the Great Maſter of the Ceremonies.

Within the Vault, vpon the very firſt ſtep thereof, ſtood one of the Kings of Armes of France, who acording as he was commanded by the Great Maſter of the Ceremonies, called all them which carried the Honors. As namely, the Cornet, the Guidon, the Pennon, the great Standard, and the Banner Royall: the Spurres, the Helmet, the Coate of Armes, the Sword, the Crowne, the Scepter, the hand of Iuſtice, the Collar of the Order, and others; which ſuch as carried them, deliuered to this firſt King of Armes, who gaue them to the other Kings of his Companions, to rank them in their due Order. And then the Great Maiſter of the Houſhold, laſt of all deliuered vp his Staffe.

All theſe Honors being laide on the Bicre of the deceaſed King in the vault of Ceremonies; the Duke of Fronſack aroſe, ſaying in a ſoft and low voice, The King is dead. And immediately Mon Ioye, King of Armes, going on into the middeſt of the Quire, went to the high Altar, and to the Chapelle Ardente, ſpeaking out aloud three times together: The King is dead, pray all to God for his Soule. Then euery one falling on their knees, ſo long as while the De profundis may be ſaide, the ſame Duke of Fronſacke returning from the Vault, with his Staffe of Great Maiſter, ſaith; Vine le Roy, God ſaue the King. Then Mon Ioye King of Armes, going againe into the midſt of the Quire, before the high Altar, cryeth aloud three ſeuerall times; God ſaue King Lewes, Thirteenth of the name, by the Grace of God, the Moſt-Chriſtian King of France, and of Nauarre, to whom God giue a moſt happy and long life. Which was no ſooner ſaide, but the Church eechoed with ſounds of Drummes, Fifes, Trumpets, Cornets, Hoboyes, and all other kindes of Muſicke, their Cypreſſe Veyles being taken off, in ſigne of ioy, to finiſh this Funerall pompe, with the Maxime of State belonging to this Monarchie: That the King of France neuer dyeth. And for this reaſon, the Court of Parliament marched in his Funerals, not in habits of Mourning, but in Robes of Scarlet.

The parcels of Honour receiued againe, by them that had the carriage of them; the Princes were conducted into the Great Hall of the Abbey, there to haue their dinner: and after them the Soueraigne Courts, the Vniuerſitie, and other Aſſiſtants in the Funerall Pompe. In another Hall, dined the Duke of Fronſack: They which caried the Honors; And the Officers for the mouth.

After dinner, the Duke of Fronſack returning into the great Hall, made a ſummary Diſcourſe to the whole Aſſembly, concerning the death of the late King, and made offer of his ſeruice to the Officers of his houſe: promiſing, to recommend them to the King reigning, to the end that they might be ſtill maintained in their eſtates, Offices, and Dignities, deliuering theſe words: We haue loſt our late Maſter, and therefore do hold no more authority in his Houſe. Which being ſpoken, hee brake the Staffe, belonging to his Office of Great Maiſter.

The Queene (who neuer had beene ſeene in publique, ſince the Act of her Regencie;) came vpon the Saterday following, being the third day of Iuly, to the Byſhops Palace of Paris, to aſſiſt in the ſeruice which ſhe cauſed to be performed for her deceaſed Lord. The Church of Paris was hung with Blacke, according as it had beene before: except the Chapelle Ardente, which was taken away. Inſted thereof, and in the place of the Eagle (which they called vulgarly Ad Aquilam, where poſſeſſion is taken of the Benefices belonging to the ſaid Church) was erected an Oratory Pew, couered with a large great Canopie, made all of blacke Serge.

Shee

She came to the ſaid Church, betweene the houres of eleuen and twelue at noone, entering in at the South doore. Before her, went the Princes, Lords, and Knightes of the Court: my Lords the Princes of Blood, De Conty, and de Soiſſons led her. The Traine of her Mourning Garment, was about ſix Elles in length, being carried by the Ladies and Princeſſes Dowagers, of Conde, of Conty, of Soiſſons, and of Montpenſier.

Followed by Madam the Eldeſt daughter, Elizabeth of France; And ſhe followed By Queene Margaret, cloathed in Mourning.

And after them, the other Princeſſes and Ladies of the Court; attyred likewiſe in Mourning; that is to ſay, Serge and Blacke Cypreſſe.

Du Tillet, in the Tract of the later dayes Exequies and Enterrements of the Kings and Queenes of France, ſayth; That Scarletted Violet is the Mourning for Kings, and for Queenes, ſad Tawny. Hee ſhould there haue added, that this was in the life time of their Husbands, but not after their death. For, I do well remember, that I ſaw King Henry, Third of the name, of bleſſed memorie, to be cloathed in a Violet Robe, when he went and ſprinkled Holy-water, on the Body of the deceaſed Monſieur, Duke of Alanſon and of Valois his Brother, in the Hall of Saint Iames du Hault Pas, the Sunday before the Feaſt of Saint Iohn Baptiſt, Anno one thouſand, fiue hundred, foureſcore, and foure. After his Maieſtie followed the Queen, Louiſa of Lorrain and Vaudemont, his Wife, cloathed in a Garment of the Stuffe called Tamine, and of Hayre-colour, hir Litter whollie open, and lined with the ſame Stuffe.

But concerning Widdowed Queenes, their Mourning was (in former times) of White. And the ſame faſhion is to be ſeene at the Gray-Friers of Paris, in a Glaſſe-Window of the Chappell, for the deceaſed Lord, the firſt Preſident Meſſire Gilles le Maiſtre, the Wife or Mother of the ſayde Lord Maiſtre, ware White Mourning. And from thence, Widdowed Queenes ſeeme to bee ſtyled by the name of white Queenes.

Afterward, this Mourning habite became wholly Blacke, as is to bee ſeene at the ſame Grey-Friars, in the Quire on the right hand, in the glaſſe Windowe of deceaſed Queene Elizabeth, Widdow to King Charles the Ninth. And the very ſame haue we ſeene for the Queenes Louiſa, and Mary, Widdowes to the King Henries, the Third and Fourth of famous Memorie, to weare Blacke in Mourning, and not White, or Tawnie.

CHAP. X. & VLT.

NOW we will finiſh theſe our famous Recherches, with the Funerals of Knights of Order, and Lords of note: as being the very laſt Acte of their Life, and finall ſhutting vp of our Theater of Honor and Knighthood.

The Great and worthie Captain Bertrand du Gleſquin, Conſtable of France; the Thunder-bolt and dreadfull terror of the Engliſh; the prop and ſupport of the Caſtillians, laid Siege before Caſtel-Nau-de-Rondon in Geuaudan, the laſt place which the Engliſh held in the Countrey of Auuergne, and ſware by his ordinarie Oath (I vow to God) that he would vn-neſt the Engliſh thence. Otherwiſe called Du Gueſclin.

The death of the Valiant Constable.

On the fifteenth day of the Siedge, the good Constable dyed by sickenesse, and his death being concealed some certaine dayes; the English were constrained to yeeld, & themselues brought the keyes of the place, and layde them on the Coffin of the great Constable: whose body being enbalmed, was carried by the Count de Forests, to Moulins in Burbonnois, where the good Duke of Bourbon performed for him a very solemn Obsequie, in the Church of Nostre Dame de Moulins, and where newly the Duke had founded a perpetuall Colledge. But before, the saide Duke of Bourbon had sent word to King Charles the Fift, concerning the death of his Noble Constable, which his Highnesse tooke exceeding greeuously.

It is an honor to Princes, to remember passed good Seruices.

And, because the King wel remembred, the many acceptable Seruices of his Constable Messire Bertrand du Guesclin (Count of Longueuille, whose Armes we haue noted in the Tract, concerning the Orders of Spaine, and of them of his Descent & Linage:) he being so forward for him during his life, hee would not now seeme backeward, in honouring so braue a Soldiour after death. For the King ordained, that (after his death) the saide Constable should be buried honourably at his feete: At S. Denys, where the Kings of France haue their Royall Enterment. And likewise the good Marshal of Sancerre, who had serued him faithfully: As accordingly it was done, and there they lye.

Out of the Chronicle of the Duke of Bourbon.

Not long was it after, but (the next yeare following) departed out of this World, King Charles of France, Fift of the name, that had so valiantly and wisely gouerned his Kingdome, and finished his dayes in the yeare of our Lord, one thousand, three hundred, fourescore, and eight. Now behold what is said in the Chronicle of Lewes, the good Duke of Bourbon. And for the faithfull seruices, performed by Guesclin, Constable of France, to King Charles the Fift: his Monument is to be seene at the feete of the saide King Charles, in his Chappel at S. Denis in France, without the Quire, on the South side. And before that of Messire Bertrand du Guesclin, hath (a very long time) hung a Lampe, well maintained with Oyle, which burneth continually day and night.

Out of Iuuenaldes Vrsins his Chronicle

Messire Iuuenal des Vrsins obserueth in his Chronicle, vnder the yeare of Grace, one thousand, three hundred, fourescore, and nine, That King Charles, Sixt of the name, being desirous to honor the person of the Constable Guesclin: caused to be sung in the said Church of Saint Denis, a very solemne Seruice for the dead, with a most goodly Luminarie of wax Tapers and Torches lighted.

Mourners at the Funerall.

For Mourners, were appointed Messire Oliuer de Cliffon, who is well knowne to beare De Gueules, au Lyon d'Argent, Arme, Lampasse, & Coronné d'Or.

The Marshall of Sancerre, whom Perron hath let passe in silence, and ranked another vnder the name of Iohn de Bueill, which is the Ancient sirname of this Family, holding the Countie of Sancerre, Admirall of France, and Knight of the Order of S. Michael, vnder King Lewes the Eleuenth: wherein he is much mistaken, confounding the one, with the other.

And ten other Knights, whose Sirnames and Armes I haue long desired, to giue them place (equall to desert) in this Theater of Honor: because it is a matter most certaine, that for Honour and Valiancie, they were the very worthiest men of their time. These ten great personages, were all attyred in Robes of Mourning.

The Bishop of Auxerre sung the Masse. And when they came to the Offring The Bishop and the King came and entred into the Quire.

And first of all came foure men of Armes, Armed at all points, mounted on Coursers well appointed and adorned, Representing the person of the dead man, when hee liued.

Secondly, after them came Foure men, hauing the Coates of Armes of the deceased when he liued, bearing Banners of his Armes. And wee haue heeretofore obserued, that Messire Bertrand du Guesclin, Count of Longue Ville, Portoit d'Argent, a l'Aigle esploye de Sable, membre, & becque de Gueules, au Baston de mesme brochant sur le Tout.

This being done, the Bishop returned to the Altar, and then the Mourners came to the Offring, each one holding a Shield, with the deceaseds Armes; and a naked Sword with the point vpward.

After these, the Offring was seconded by them of the Blood, and Kindred to the King. And

And then came Eight Gentlemen Armed in Coates of Maile, who cartied the Helmets, and foure Banners of the dead mans Armes, and placed them on the Altar.

When these things were done, a Learned Sermon was delliuered by a Doctour in Diuinity: declaring the Vertues, Valiance, and Wisedome of the party deceased; and after the Masse was ended, they went all to dinner.

Then was giuen a generall Almes to the poore, and all that would come.

And great gifts were giuen by the King, to the Lords and eminent persons there present, in honour of so worthy a Knight and Noble Gentleman, as was the late deceased Constable.

So in like manner, at the Obsequies and Funerals of Princes and great Lords, as also of Knights, Captaines, and Gentlemen, are carried their Banner and Coronet, their Pennons and great Standard of Black colour, and their deuises training to the ground. Their Sword, Spurres, Helmet and Shield of their Armes.

Diuers sorts of Funeral pompe.

If they be Knights, the Collar of their Order must lye vpon the Pal of black Veluet:

If they be Dukes or Counts, the Crowne or Chappeau, with the Coate of Armes, and the Mantle Ducall, or the Countes, according to the Dignities which they helde in their life time.

But before these Honors, are led their Horses of Battell, trapped in Blacke; Trumpets likewise couered with Blacke, and sounding softly; Drummes answering them in the same manner, and retorting sad sighings (as it were) each to other, as sorrowfully lamenting. And according as men haue finished the last Act of their life, so they ought to haue their buriall.

Dying in w

If he dyed in Warre, which is the Bed of Honor, and of true Nobility: His Effigie formed after the life, ought to be vpon his Tombe; but presented vppon his knees, the Helmet on his head, Sword by his side, Spurres on his heeles, Gauntlets on his hands, and Armed at all points, hauing aboue all the Coate of his Armes. And ouer the Monument, the Banner, Standard, Pennon and Shield of his Armes, aptly placed.

Dying of s nes, or wo ded in thefi

If he dyed of Sickenesse, or wounded, being in action of warre: his Effigie ought to be armed with a Cuirats and Coate of Armes, and a side by him his Helmet; but not vpon his head, his Gauntlet also neere it. He may be allowed to haue his Sword by his side, Spurres on his heeles: but aboue his Tombe or Monument, hee ought to haue but a Cornet, and the Pennon at the most, but not the great Standard.

Dying peac ably in the House.

If he dyed peaceably, that is to say, of some sickenesse in his house: his figure ought not to be vpon his knees, but onely lying along, with his Coate of Armes, Armed for fashion sake, the Helmet and Spurres placed at his feete, and his feete lying or vnderpropped with two little Dogges.

A Caueat to Caruers and Sculptures.

These circumstances ought to be very carefully obserued by Caruers & Engrauers, who (too often thorow their grosse ignorance) do confound the Order of these Authentick Ceremonies, which (in former times) haue beene kept most exactly.

In many places haue bin seen Effigies armed & on horseback, as in the chapel of our Lady at Rouen, the burial on horseback of le Sieur de Breese, great Seneschal of Normandy.

A history concerning King Philip le Bel.

In the body of the Church at Paris, the Figure of Phillip le Bel, King of France, and of Nauarre, who hauing vanquished the rebellious Flemmings at Ments in Puelle, the moneth of August, Anno one thousand, three hundred and foure, at his returning to Paris, entred into the Church of our Lady, euen as he is there to be seene on Horseback, and Armed. There he offered his Horse and Armes, according to the Vow he had formerly made, at such time as he was surprized by the Flemmings vnarmed, and saw slaine before him, Messire Hugues de Bonuille, a Knight, and two Brethren, Burgesses of Paris, Peter and Iames Gentiens. Wherefore, it is to be considered, that such Effigies on Horseback, and Armed in Churches, doe serue for Enquirie, concerning some extraordinary and excellent acte of Armes, done farre off from the common rule.

Concerning great Seales.

In the like manner, Princes, Soueraignes, and Barons of high Birth, are figured in their great Seales Armed, and mounted on Horse-backe, holding a naked Sword in the right hand, and a Shield of their Armes in the other. Their Wiues also are represented on Horseback, holding with the left hand their Palfraies Bridle, and a Hawke on the right fist. Which declareth the note of an high Baronie, that is to say, a Duchy, or County at the least. The Funerall pomp in Churches.

The last testimony of Honor in Nobility and Knighthood, is Lights in Chappels, hanging Churches with Blacke, & Funerall Girdles, as well within as without Churches, where such buriall is performed. Funerall Girdles are charged with the Armes of the Lord deceased, and (in some respect) with them of their Wiues. The Armes of Lords are depicted with their Mettall and Colour, their Helmets Tarrez de Front, Charged with their Deuice on the Crest, wauing with Lambrequins, and sustayned by their Supporters. The Armes of the said Lords, are in Banner after the Anticke manner, and most commonly in the Shield, engirt with the Order of the Knight.

Those of widdowed Ladies, ought likewise to be in the Shield, but not otherwise, with the Armes, or at the least the moity of her Husbands on the right side, parted with the said Ladies on the left, and the Shields or Escocheons entoured with Girdles of Cordelieres, which we terme white Cordelieres, for reasons before alledged in this great Labour.

Eldest Sonnes deceasing vnmarried, carry their Armes in the Shield, the Helmet siluer, not open: the said Shield bearing the Fathers Armes, and ordinarily parted with the Mothers.

And as for Daughters, they beare but the Paternall Armes; yet not in Shield, as Widowed Ladies do, and the Cordeliers about; but onely in Lozenge, as wee haue related in the Tract of Shields, and elsewhere.

Soli Deo Laus, Honor, & Gloria.
